Mrs O'Neill: I thank the Member for his question. He is right. In October 2015, we committed to welcoming, by December of that year, between 50 and 100 refugees under the Syrian vulnerable persons resettlement scheme, with the expectation that further groups would arrive on a phased basis. The twenty-fifth group of refugees arrived on 6 February, this year. That brings the total number to 1,815. A further group of 93 individuals was due to arrive on 16 April, but, obviously, that was postponed because of the current situation. The scheme was due to come to an end following the arrival of the twenty-sixth group and has been consolidated into a new global resettlement scheme that was announced by the British Home Secretary on 17 June, last year. It was also agreed that we would continue to participate in the new scheme for the next year, even though the current crisis places constraints on it, but it is important that we continue to do what we can. Our officials continue to liaise with the Home Office and the strategic migration partnership on the implications of the current crisis, and we will consider the potential for continued participation in due course. I am happy to keep the Member updated on all of that.

Mr Allister: How can the Minister talk about equality, racial or otherwise, when, just this day last week, she was demonstrating that she and her friends think that they are more equal than others and that they have the capacity and the right to break the laws that they themselves make? Would it not be a good start to equality to subject yourself equally under the law?

Mrs O'Neill: I breathe equality, every day. I believe in equality. I practise equality. I bring it into every aspect of my work, every day. Thank you.

COVID-19: Executive Response

14. Mr G Kelly asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Executive's response to COVID-19. (AQO 533/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Since early March, the management of the response to the COVID-19 pandemic has been the Executive's number-one priority. Our objective has been to help keep people safe and to support those who have faced real hardship as a result of the pandemic. The extraordinary measures that we have had to put in place have worked well and, whilst we must not be complacent, we are now at a key point where attention can begin to shift from purely controlling the public health response towards planning for recovery.

Over recent weeks, it has been possible to ease many restrictions and, with the publication of an indicative timeline for further easements, people and businesses can begin to plan ahead. The Executive have started the process of developing a recovery framework that will have a particular focus on achieving effective health, economic and societal recovery. We expect to announce more details about that shortly.

Mr G Kelly: I presume that we are in a good place — we are going into the recovery phase — but has the possibility of a second wave been factored into the Executive's plans?

Mrs O'Neill: The risk from COVID-19 remains and none of us wants to see a second wave of this deadly virus or to be in a position in which restrictions have to be reinstated, as has been the case in Leicester, Galicia and Catalonia. We will be monitoring the impact of the relaxations closely, and we will be prepared to reintroduce restrictions if that is considered necessary to control the virus. A key tool in preventing a second wave is the test, trace and protect strategy. That will play a key role in containing transmission as more relaxations are introduced. If anyone is contacted by that service, they must act on the information provided and self-isolate or get tested as appropriate.

From 18 March, TEO established a COVID-19 operations room, or hub, to provide information and analysis, and to raise issues relating to public health services across the North. The hub coordinates activities across Departments and reports to the Executive. It is important that the hub remains in readiness to deal with any potential further waves and any concurrent civil contingency emergencies that may arise. The COVID-19 hub has been scaled down since 15 June. A small number of volunteers have been retained to operate in a maintain-readiness mode.

Work will continue in the coming weeks to ensure preparedness for any future necessary stand-up, with full stand-up test runs provisionally scheduled for the autumn. The Chief Medical Officer has also commissioned a rapid review of the first phase of the COVID-19 pandemic to provide a clear understanding of the effectiveness of the initial and ongoing response, and to capture the lessons learned to improve our response to any future resurgence of the virus.

Mr T Buchanan: I have listened to you, deputy First Minister. How do you expect the public to have any confidence in the Executive's response to COVID-19 in the future, following the developments of last Tuesday when you and a number of your MLAs blatantly broke the legislation that you were involved in making? Is it time to do the honourable thing: apologise to the people for the wrongdoing and step aside until a full investigation is carried out?

Mrs O'Neill: I assure the Member that I take my responsibilities very seriously. I will continue to lead us into the recovery phase of the pandemic. We need to make sure that we are preparing for whatever comes at us and doing all that we can to make our recovery good for all our people.

Mr Muir: After the initial response to the COVID-19 pandemic, there is a risk of a resurgence and spikes in different parts of Northern Ireland. What preparations are being made to assist businesses in areas where localised lockdowns might be needed to ensure that they can continue throughout that period?

Mrs O'Neill: That is something that we have been looking at, considering and planning for, whether it is a second wave or a cluster effect, which we have witnessed in many areas across the world. Even today in County Down, there is a report of a cluster. The crucial element to us being able to deal with that is our having the test, trace and isolate policy in place. That is crucial to being able to quickly identify things. One of the things that the Chief Scientific Adviser said to us was that, as we lift all the restrictions and free-up people to move around a lot more, the ability to be able to detect cases very quickly will be a tool to combat them as quickly as they happen.

The Member is right: when it came to lockdown in the first instance, supports were put in place to help businesses. We have to consider, as an Executive, how we can support businesses if they are in an area where there is a cluster and where closures need to be put in place. That is something that we need to continue to consider, and it will be part of our planning for what could come next.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I remind Members to continue rising in their place to indicate that they still wish to ask a supplementary question.

Dr Aiken: The deputy First Minister reads fairly widely and has taken a lot of advice and guidance, particularly on COVID. She has looked quite closely at the World Health Organization, which recently revised its guidance on gatherings and crowds. Would she care to reflect on that and give us some answers on what she did last week?

Mrs O'Neill: I do not see how that is relevant to the question that I have been asked, but I am happy to say that we have to do all that we can to lead ourselves through this period of recovery. We have lifted so many restrictions each day over the last number of weeks, and we have done so at breakneck speed, as I keep saying to people. We need to get normality back for people and give them freedom; we said that we would not keep any restriction in place for one day longer than necessary. I am very sure in my responsibilities and in what I need to do, and I am very sure that I will continue to lead us through this crisis.

COVID-19: Economic Recovery

15. Mr Sheehan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Executive's plans for economic recovery following the COVID-19 crisis. (AQO 534/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: We have reached an important point in the COVID-19 pandemic, where we are beginning to look beyond the response phase towards the actions that will be needed to effect a robust and sustainable recovery, rebuild public services and restore more normal ways of living.

Our approach will be to build on sectoral plans, such as the economic recovery strategy, which was published recently by the Economy Minister, and to bring forward an inclusive Programme for Government, which is based on collaboration and joined-up thinking to deliver good outcomes in the things that matter most to people.

We will continue to develop strong cross-sectoral working partnerships, such as that provided through the engagement forum, which is chaired by the LRA, and maintain a dialogue with stakeholders as a basis for strengthening and enhancing societal well-being, with our immediate priorities being to get our economy working again, strengthen our health and social care services and mitigate the immediate societal impacts of the crisis.

Mr Sheehan: Does the Minister agree that, as a society and an economy, we cannot go back to what was there before COVID-19? We must have a society that is just, equal, people-centred and inclusive.

Mrs O'Neill: It is clear that the COVID-19 pandemic will have lasting and profound impacts on society and the economy. An immediate priority for the Executive will be to help our local businesses get through the crisis and get the economy working again. However, that does not simply mean returning to the way that things were. The crisis has allowed us to view things in a different light, and it has shown us new ways of working and given us opportunities to explore different technologies and experiment with alternative working patterns. There is no doubt that the world that emerges out of the pandemic will be significantly different to what has gone before. We need to be ready to grasp emerging good practice and be able to learn quickly from others so that we can make this a good place to live, to work and to do business. We need to achieve economic growth in a balanced and sustainable way that puts social justice, workers' rights and equality at its centre. We need to be prepared to look forward rather than back when it comes to societal recovery. We must, however, acknowledge and help with the trauma that people have suffered, particularly those who have lost loved ones. Those are issues that will need to be explored with key stakeholders across all sectors as we start to plan for the recovery and as we bring forward our new Programme for Government.

Mr O'Toole: One of the most vital aspects of the economic recovery from COVID-19 will be dealing with the effects of Brexit later this year. The deputy First Minister said earlier that the Executive Office is doing all that it can to protect Northern Ireland from the effects of Brexit. With respect, there is culture of silence from the Executive Office. Since the Assembly reformed, we have had no formal updates from the Executive Office on the delivery of the protocol or on the broader issues relating to Brexit. It is not enough, deputy First Minister —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): May we have a question, please?

Mr O'Toole: — to defer to the ideologues in Whitehall. Can we have before recess a specific update on legislation that the Assembly will have to pass before the end of the year and also a plan for engaging with local businesses on what they need to do to deal with the effects of Brexit? First Ministers, we need that urgently.

Mrs O'Neill: I absolutely agree that Brexit is one of the biggest challenges that we face. As we rebuild the economy, what our businesses and our people are craving is certainty, and we need to get that certainty. As we move towards the end of the year, I would be very fearful if we were still in a space where we could have a crash-out Brexit, which would be catastrophic.

We have the protocol. That protocol must be implemented. It was hard-fought. The Executive continue to discuss all those things. As I said, the implementation of the protocol is the role and responsibility of the British Government, but the agri-food role falls to DAERA here, so a lot more work needs to be done to give our local ports, for example, the required clarity. We need to continue to engage with the sector to make sure that we answer questions, of which people have many, and that we give that clarity. We will continue to engage with the Assembly on all of that and, indeed, with our own TEO Committee.

The Executive themselves have now had a number of dedicated sessions on Brexit, because, over the past number of months, a lot of the focus was on COVID-19. We have been very conscious for some time now, however, that we had to get back to dealing head-on with the issue of Brexit.

Ms Bradshaw: I am just wondering what role our universities will play in the economic recovery and whether the Executive will support the lifting of the cap on student numbers.

Mrs O'Neill: I will say first that, just as it did to fight COVID-19, it is going to take all our effort to recover. That means working with all our stakeholders. If I could point to one of the positives in how we have dealt with the COVID-19 crisis, I would point to the work that has been done with business organisations, with the trade union movement and right across the piece. That work has been crucial. I want us to continue with that partnership approach. A collaborative approach with society is one of the things that was written into the NDNA deal. If we are going to build, that means working with the universities, the further education colleges and all the other stakeholders, because we have a huge battle on our hands in the time ahead to build our economy, to make sure that there are employment prospects and to make sure that we tackle all the issues that need to be tackled.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That was the last of the questions —

Mr K Buchanan: On a point of order Mr Deputy Speaker.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): — to the Executive Office. I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments. We will return at a quarter to three with questions to the Minister of Health.

Points of order are not normally taken during Question Time, so if someone has a point of order to raise, we will wait until after Question Time to take it. Members, take your ease for a few moments.

2.45 pm

Health

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members. Question Time has resumed. It is now time for questions to the Minister of Health.

COVID-19: Test, Trace and Isolate Policy

1. Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health what action he has taken to ensure that a robust policy of test, trace and isolate can be implemented fully in the event of a second wave of COVID-19. (AQO 535/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): My Department continues to take forward our test, trace and protect strategy, which was published on 27 May. It adopts a robust public health approach to minimise COVID-19 transmission in the community in Northern Ireland. It contains four key elements to test, trace and protect, which are: early identification and isolation of possible cases, clusters and outbreaks; rapid testing of possible cases; tracing of close contacts of cases; and the early effective and supported isolation of close contacts to prevent onward transmission of infection.

Test, trace and protect is being led by the Public Health Agency (PHA) in conjunction with other key partners in Northern Ireland. The health protection team at the Public Health Agency has specialist skills and experience of communicable disease control. The development and implementation of our contact tracing service has been a priority for me over recent months. Test, trace and protect has a vital role to play in helping us move forward into recovery. This, along with other key public health measures, such as the maintenance of physical distancing and ensuring good hand and respiratory hygiene, will help us to reduce community transmission of COVID-19.

For test, trace and protect to work, each citizen of Northern Ireland has a very important role to play. We must all prepare for the possibility of having to self-isolate and be tested to protect ourselves, our families and our communities. I recognise that, in some cases, there may be financial disincentives to self-isolation, and further work is required to address those barriers. The approach that I have outlined is likely to become part of everyday life for the foreseeable future for the people of Northern Ireland until an effective vaccine is developed and a vaccination programme for COVID-19 has been delivered.

Ms Anderson: I thank the Minister for his answer. Minister, given the mass resignation of the RQIA board, because care home inspections were arbitrarily reduced by you or your Department, do you accept that that feeds into a genuine concern that care homes were abandoned and the most vulnerable and elderly were left exposed to this deadly virus? If the tracking and tracing system had been in place, might we be in a different place than we, unfortunately, are today?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her follow-up question. There are two points there about the support that we gave to care homes. We have been proactive in the approach that we have taken to our care homes, and that has been reciprocated and acknowledged by care home providers across the piece. Given what we know now, are there things that we would do differently, looking in hindsight at how the support was implemented and the speed at which it was implemented? With what we know now about the virus and how it interacts, I think that we would do things very differently.

On test, trace and track, it is not a system that is highly advantageous in the care home sector because care homes are closed isolated units. There is a piece of work to do about how to support care home staff if there is an outbreak, or a continuation of infection, coming from a care home into a staff member's home, or if staff are working across care homes, which is what we identified in the past. It is about learning from what we know now, compared with what we knew three or four months ago when we were working without a guide or a rule book on how to combat COVID-19 in the general population, but specifically in care homes.

Antenatal Scans

2. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health when restrictions will be eased to allow partners to attend antenatal scans. (AQO 536/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for the question. On 30 June 2020, my Department published updated guidance, which applies from 6 July in all health and social care settings for the duration of the COVID-19 response. The revised guidance sets out the current position for pregnant women: so long as the surge level in the Northern Ireland Executive's five-step approach permits, when aligned with the pandemic surge levels and the R value, and based on the best scientific advice available at a given time, birth partners will be facilitated to accompany pregnant women to dating scans, early pregnancy clinics, anomaly scans, the foetal medicine department and for the induction of labour and the duration of labour and birth. They will also be permitted to visit antenatal and postnatal wards as appropriate. The full guidance is available on my Department's website at health-ni.gov.uk/covid-visiting-guidance.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his answer and for all the work that he done to date in the situation in which we find ourselves.

Constituents of mine were seeking clarification about the 34-week scan. They thought that it was not included in the new guidelines. The Minister might want to take that point away and find out the answer.

Mr Swann: I am prepared to look at that. Under definitions and scope, the guidance outlines the situations in which a woman can be accompanied by her partner or nominated other. The revised guidance is applicable to women for 12-week dating scans, early pregnancy clinics, anomaly scans, attendance at the foetal medicine department and the duration of labour and birth. Under the key principles, it is stated that there may be occasions in individual trusts when visiting, for specific reasons, may be limited further than is outlined in the guidance. That will most likely be to reduce the number of people in any one area to comply with social-distancing rules. In that scenario, clear explanations will be given to women and their partners or nominated others.

I will take the question about the 34-week scan away and look at that for the Member.

Influenza Immunisation Programme

3. Mr Harvey asked the Minister of Health whether eligibility for the forthcoming influenza immunisation programme will be impacted by COVID-19 restrictions. (AQO 537/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. Eligibility for the flu vaccine programme will not be adversely impacted by any of the COVID-19 restrictions. Indeed, I am extending eligibility this year to include all children in year 8 of secondary school. However, delivery of the programme may need to be adapted to accommodate any restrictions that apply at the time. Discussions are ongoing between my Department, the Public Health Agency, trusts, general practice, the Department of Education and the Education Authority to ensure that the programme is fully delivered while abiding by COVID-19 restrictions.

This year, the flu vaccination programme will be more important than ever in order to try to reduce the risk of the concurrent circulation of influenza and COVID-19. Early evidence suggests that co-infection is associated with increased mortality of over twofold compared with those with COVID-19 alone. It is important that we do all that we can to help to reduce flu-related pressures on the health service, and I encourage all who are eligible to receive the flu vaccine to take up the offer of vaccination when invited to do so.

Mr Harvey: Are sufficient vaccinations available for 2020-21 and will the programme start on time?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. I assure him that sufficient vaccine has been ordered to ensure that those eligible for vaccination will receive it, based on uptake rates in 2019-2020. However, I expect greater demand for the flu vaccine this year, and I am keen to increase the uptake rates. To that end, I have approved the purchase of additional vaccine for children, and I am considering purchasing additional vaccine for those aged 65 and over, given that my Department has been informed that additional supplies for that age group may be available. We are trying to establish how much additional vaccine is available and how best it could be used, should we decide to purchase it.

For the 2020-21 flu programme, the Public Health Agency has procured the following vaccine doses: 260,000 doses for use in those aged 65 and over; 265,000 doses for use in the under-65s in any at-risk group; 198,000 doses of the nasal spray vaccine for children; and 10,000 doses of an injectable vaccine for children who cannot, for medical reasons, receive the nasal spray. Therefore, over 800,000 flu vaccines have already been ordered for use this winter in Northern Ireland. Based on previous uptake rates, that should be more than sufficient, but, given the need to try to maximise uptake rates and reduce the impact of flu on the health service, we are considering whether more is still required.

The flu programme is complicated in that different types of vaccine are recommended and licensed for different age groups. Therefore, it is not simply a matter of buying any flu vaccine. Ideally, we want to ensure that we purchase the best vaccine for any particular age group. I encourage anyone who is eligible to take up the flu vaccine to make sure that we can start on schedule and complete it in time for the winter flu season.

COVID Centres

4. Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health what steps have been taken to review the need for, and operation of, COVID centres. (AQO 538/17-22)

Mr Swann: The COVID-19 pandemic created a challenge for primary care that is without parallel in our lifetime. The establishment of primary care COVID-19 centres was an urgent and immediate response to that challenge, ensuring that primary care services could be maintained throughout the first wave of infections by enabling patients with COVID-19 symptoms to be treated separately from those who had conditions requiring assessment or treatment in primary care.

The speed at which centres were established was exceptional and a testament to the commitment, professionalism and skill of all involved. I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to colleagues across the service for their work. A regional project board was established to oversee the development and operation of COVID-19 centres. It is chaired by the Health and Social Care Board and includes representation from the GP federations, the out-of-hours providers, the Royal College of General Practitioners, and the British Medical Association. I make that point to emphasise that the work in this area has been done with GPs and not to GPs, as some would suggest.

The regional project board has continually reviewed the number, location and staffing of COVID-19 centres. Staffing levels for the centres are at 50% of what they were at the peak of the surge. As the number of cases continues to reduce, work is under way to review and, if appropriate, rationalise the service while retaining a capacity for re-escalation if necessary. The project board is also working with colleagues in the PHA to consider whether it is possible to put in place measures that can enable COVID-19 centres to be delivered from GP practices. We need to be very clear, however, that we cannot take risks with people's safety. This would not be considered a simplistic opportunity to scale back COVID-19 centres in order to save money. They are an innovation designed to save lives, and staffing has been safely reduced in response to demand. Although the current wave of infections appears to be subsiding, health and social care services need to remain vigilant and be prepared to respond rapidly to further surges, should a new wave arise during the winter flu season. We need to be prepared, and closing COVID-19 centres prematurely would significantly undermine that preparedness.

Mr Allister: Whatever their use at the peak of the pandemic, and even that, I do not think, was huge, they are characterised at the moment by gross underuse. I have GPs telling me of doing four-hour shifts and seeing no patients, yet they are paid, out of hours, £100 an hour. Moreover, support staff have to be paid as well. Where is the medical and financial sense now in continuing with that?

Would the Minister care to comment on the fact that one GP reported to me that a representative of the BMA said to those GPs that the centres are being kept open purely for political reasons. Is there any truth in that?

Mr Swann: There is absolutely no truth in that last statement. I can assure the Member of that. There is no political advantage for me in keeping COVID-19 centres open. However, there is a significant health benefit to the people whom we have been supporting through them. The health service needs to be able to react flexibly should there be another upsurge or outbreak of COVID-19. Until 17 June, 7,526 people had been seen through the COVID-19 centres.

The Member referred to a number of shifts during which no patients were seen. That is correct, and we are fortunate to be in that position in a number of areas. I can give the Member the details. From 9 April to 17 June, the COVID centre at the South West Acute Hospital recorded nine days when no patients were seen; three days were recorded in Dungannon; five days in Lisburn; nine days at Downe; one day in Newtownards; and three days in Coleraine. As I said in the initial answer to the Member, that is why we are scaling back the service of GPs, their attendance and the contracts that ask them to be in those centres and to be available.

Although COVID-19 is in retreat, we have not yet defeated it. I would be negligent in my duty if I did not make sure that we have the ability to respond should there be another outbreak in certain areas where the COVID-19 centres have proven to be beneficial. The centres have been supported by the BMA, the Royal College of General Practitioners, and the GP federations.

Contact Tracing Programme: Update

5. Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health for an update on the contact tracing programme. (AQO 539/17-22)

Mr Swann: Contact tracing is the central tenet of the test, trace and protect strategy that I launched on 27 May 2020. It is an established method of identifying and breaking the chains of infection and clusters of communicable disease. While the Public Health Agency and our colleagues in environmental health are well versed in the use of such an approach, there is a clear difference in the operation required to help the management of COVID-19, both in the scale of the pandemic and the fact that it is an unknown disease. Contact tracing works by testing people potentially infected with the disease, speaking to them to advise on isolation, identifying their close contacts, who may be at risk of contracting the disease, and then speaking to those contacts to give guidance on isolation and what to do if symptoms develop. Contact tracing, in itself, will not eradicate COVID-19. It can only work as part of an overall strategy of testing, adherence and support for the advice to isolate, as well as maintaining measures such as hand hygiene and the appropriate social distancing.

On 27 April, the PHA began a pilot to test its capacity to respond, at scale, to the requirements for contact tracing during the pandemic. That involved tracing the contacts of a sample of cases who had tested positive. On 18 May, the agency began the transition to a programme of tracing contacts of all positive cases, and, on 25 May, that transition was completed. Northern Ireland was the first part of the United Kingdom to have that service operational. My Department is overseeing the scaling of the operation, which is likely to be required for the next two years until a vaccine is available and a mass vaccination programme is in place.

The service operates at a number of levels. There is a manual contact-tracing centre, where skilled clinical contact tracers will call all positive cases and their contacts to advise and guide on next steps. A cohort of public health consultants provide medical advice and clinical leadership to the centre, as well as dealing with complex cases and managing outbreaks or clusters of diseases. Other staff will be recruited to support the analysis of the information and intelligence gathered, in order to advise on the progression and management of the disease, along with administrative and managerial support for the centre. A call centre will provide Northern Ireland-centric advice on various aspects of checking symptoms, booking tests and providing signposts to sources of social and community support. There will be a suite of digital products that will support the progress of citizens who have the means and preference to work that way.

I can update the Member on the period from 25 May to 24 June. There have been 481 cases added to the contact-tracing database, and successful telephone encounters with the cases have resulted in 82% contacts, with 733 contacts identified.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I am conscious, Minister, that there was a lot of important information there. Answers should take two minutes, and you can request an additional minute, should you require it.

Mr Allen: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive answer. Minister, you have outlined that contact tracing is one important resource at the disposal of your Department, alongside others that include the wider Executive guidance and regulations. Recently, we have seen examples of mass gatherings that are perceived to have exceeded the limits set out. Will the Minister outline whether he is confident that contact tracing will have the resources at its disposal, should an outbreak occur as a result of one of those mass gatherings?

Mr Swann: We have 92 contact tracers in place who work over a seven-day week rotation. The more contacts and positive cases we have, the more pressure they come under. On average, each contact tracer can trace five contacts in a day. Any mass gathering that breaches the guidance or the regulations where we have the potential for a mass outbreak puts that contact tracing system under pressure. I ask everyone to follow the advice, guidance and regulations that are clearly laid out and supported by the Executive to prevent any further contact or spread of COVID-19 that could put our contact-tracing system under further pressure.

COVID-19: Second Wave

6. Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister of Health what plans he has in place to address a second wave of COVID-19. (AQO 540/17-22)

Mr Swann: While the timing and scale are clearly unpredictable, it is expected that there will be a second wave of COVID-19 later in the year. That will depend on a range of factors, including the Executive's future approach to minimising the spread of the virus and the public's adherence to those measures. While plans for the initial surge were carried out at a time when limited data was available, much learning has been drawn from the first wave, and work by my Department has made it possible to track and monitor the trajectory of the pandemic much more effectively. I will monitor closely the reproductive rate of infection and other key metrics and will provide regular advice to the Executive to ensure that we introduce the right measures at the right time. I have asked my officials to develop comprehensive surge plans for critical care, hospital beds and care homes for future waves of COVID-19.

With those plans taking account of the potential for the next surge to coincide with colder weather and the usual winter pressures, the work includes exploring whether the development of a further Nightingale facility will be necessary to help to lift pressures from the system. Belfast City Hospital's tower block was designated as Northern Ireland's Nightingale for the first wave, and it will maintain additional ICU capacity for future phases. However, we know that additional pressures may also need to be lifted from the system, and we are considering that carefully.

Mr K Buchanan: Obviously, with any risk, probability and likelihood are a multiplication to give that risk rating. Have the actions of others in the past week or two increased the likelihood of that happening? I hope that the people who have been involved in that have something on their conscience if that is the case.

Mr Swann: I have been saying for the past number of months that our biggest risk now is complacency and disregarding the rules, regulations and recommendations that have been laid down by the entirety of the Executive. By following that joint lead and joint messaging that we had, we were able to get Northern Ireland into a very good place with the infection and the spread of COVID-19. I am concerned that any blatant breach or the outworkings of not following those rules and regulations will have an impact on the spread of COVID-19. All that I can say is that I ask the people of Northern Ireland to follow the guidance and regulations that have been laid down and supported by the entirety of the Northern Ireland Executive to maintain the place that we have in managing the spread of COVID-19 in Northern Ireland.

RQIA: Board Vacancies

7. Ms C Kelly asked the Minister of Health to outline how he plans to fill the vacancies on the board of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA), including a time frame for new appointments. (AQO 541/17-22)

Mr Swann: On 18 June, I appointed Christine Collins as the interim non-executive chair of the RQIA board. That interim appointment is intended to start the process of reconstructing the RQIA's board in order to ensure that it can continue to exercise effective oversight of the RQIA's work and statutory responsibilities. I fully recognise the need for permanent appointments to be made to the RQIA board as soon as it is possible to do so. I have instructed my officials to immediately put in place arrangements to initiate a public appointments competition that will seek to appoint a permanent non-executive chair and 10 permanent non-executive members. My Department values and promotes diversity and is committed to equality of opportunity for all, with appointments made on merit. In keeping with my Department's commitment to co-production and partnership working, I am keen to ensure that the permanent appointments made to the RQIA board will further strengthen the voice of those who use the services in the field of regulation, quality and improvement.

To attract as much interest as possible, the RQIA board vacancies will be widely publicised. The Department's planned communications for the competition will encourage all individuals who wish to participate in public service and make a difference to the way in which health and social care services are delivered in Northern Ireland. I encourage them to submit an application form. The forthcoming public appointments competition will comply fully with the provisions outlined in the commissioner's 'Code of Practice for Ministerial Appointments in Northern Ireland'. It can take approximately nine months for a Department to administer a public appointments competition in line with the provisions set out in the code of practice. Therefore, in view of that timescale and until such times as it is possible to make the permanent appointments, I am proceeding to urgently appoint a number of interim non-executive members. Those interim non-executive member appointments are considered necessary to ensure that the RQIA's board is quorate without further delay. Given the unprecedented situation in RQIA, the interim non-executive member appointments will be made under the emergency procedure in line with the commissioner's code of practice. My officials are developing a plan that will set out a proportionate recruitment process to secure the interim appointments to the RQIA board. My officials will engage with the commissioner to obtain her approval of the content of the recruitment plan prior to its implementation.

Ms C Kelly: Minister, how do you intend to broaden the recruitment process to ensure a representative, inclusive and diverse RQIA board membership?

Mr Swann: I touched on that towards the end of my initial response. That is important. The RQIA board has to have representation that can speak on behalf of the service users. It must have experience of the care home sector as well as all the other sectors that it quality-inspects but also from the insurance point of view as well as progression in the delivery of the service, to make sure that those facilities deliver for the people who use them and the residents in them.

I will conduct the initial process of appointing the interim non-executive members under the commissioner's code of practice, but, as I said, in regard to the public advertisements, I encourage as many people as possible who have an interest in improving the quality and the inspection side of our care home sector and all the other sectors that RQIA inspects and regulates to please apply for the full-time posts that will be advertised.

Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services

8. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Health for an update on the management board for Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services' most recent interaction with the Transformation Advisory Board and health trade unions regarding the Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services strategic framework. (AQO 542/17-22)

Mr Swann: My approach to rebuilding has been informed by engagement with trade unions at the development stage of the 'Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services' strategic framework. My officials sought views from a range of stakeholders, including trade unions, on the checklist, which outlines the key factors that should be considered in the development of service-rebuilding plans. I have also sought the view of trade unions on temporary amendments to the HSC framework, which provides a basis for the role of the Rebuilding HSC Services management board. I am giving consideration to those views, which will inform my approach to public consultation, going forward. I can confirm that it will be a 12-week consultation, providing ample opportunity for trade unions and other stakeholders to respond. In addition, my officials regularly meet trade unions, providing an opportunity for ongoing engagement. Furthermore, on 1 July, I chaired a very useful meeting of the strategic health and social care partnership forum. That group brings together senior executives across the system with trade union colleagues.

The Transformation Advisory Board was originally established to advise on the transformation programme, but, clearly, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, work on that front has been limited in recent months, and it has not been possible for the Transformation Advisory Board to meet on a formal basis. Meetings that were scheduled for 7 April and 1 June had to be postponed. The future role of the Transformation Advisory Board will be kept under review in the context of the governance changes, and I plan to consult on that later in the summer. I have directed my officials to have a meeting of the Transformation Advisory Board, as it currently stands, as soon as possible, and I am confident that, through the forthcoming period of consultation on temporary amendments to the HSC framework and local engagement in the development and implementation of rebuilding plans, there are sufficient mechanisms to support meaningful and constructive engagement in the rebuilding programme.

Mr McAleer: Can the Minister give an indicative timescale for the reopening of the public consultation that he referred to?

Mr Swann: We are working at this minute in time on what that will look like over the 12-week period, because there was the 12-week consultation on the establishment of the management board and further to that is the step process of the rebuilding structure. We have already completed one for the month of June, and we are now looking at the plans for the next three months — July, August and September — and there will be a further three months after that. As soon as we have the detail of that consultation, it will be published and made available.

Belfast City Hospital: Outpatient Services

9. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health when all outpatient services will reopen fully at Belfast City Hospital. (AQO 543/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Member will be aware that, on 9 June 2020, I published a strategic framework for rebuilding health and social care services, along with phase 1 rebuilding plans for each of the six health and social care trusts. They aim to incrementally increase HSC service capacity as quickly as possible across all programmes of care, including outpatient clinics, in the prevailing COVID-19 conditions. Subsequent phases will see those services' activity plans and targets updated in three-monthly cycles. Phase 2 — July to September — rebuilding plans will be published shortly.

It is important to emphasise that, as trusts work to deliver services for those most in need, the priority remains to keep patients, service users and staff safe, all of which requires the careful balancing of safety requirements, including the maintenance of social-distancing guidelines and the impact that that has on physical space, workforce availability and personal protective equipment (PPE) availability.

3.15 pm

Throughout the pandemic, Belfast City Hospital continued to deliver vital outpatient services, and the trust has indicated that those will continue on the basis of clinical priority through telephone and video calls and only where required with face-to-face attendance at other Belfast Trust sites. Plans are in place to open Belfast City Hospital for outpatients in a phased approach. The priority clinics expected to return in the first instance are dermatology, gynaecology, ear, nose and throat (ENT), and breast and mammography.

It is critically important to emphasise that it will be neither possible nor desirable to return to business as usual. We must seek to improve services through the rebuilding process, but that will not happen overnight and will require a response that is both agile and adaptable to ensure that the system can respond to further potential COVID-19 surges.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for all his efforts in the COVID crisis.

In early June, Minister, you highlighted that outpatient activity had dropped 40% to 50%. Will you give us an assurance today that red flag cancer referrals at the City Hospital and other services, including dermatology, will be fully restored across all our trusts?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his supportive comments.

The Belfast Trust recently submitted its stage 2 rebuilding plan for July, August and September, which has involved enhanced local system working, strong clinical leadership, flexible and remote working, where appropriate, and rapid scaling of technology-enabled service delivery. The trust engaged with front-line staff to reflect on lessons learned, and further work on that is crucial to inform plans. The phase 2 plan will be published by the Department of Health in due course, and, as I said, the priority clinics returning will be dermatology, gynaecology, ear, nose and throat (ENT), and breast and mammography, which is scheduled to return on 20 July.

The ongoing plan is that Belfast City Hospital outpatients will open in a phased approach from the week beginning 14 July onwards. Red flag and urgent cases are being prioritised because the trust is working on relocating administrative and medical staff who were placed in the City Hospital outpatients department in order to maintain services and social distance as a result of the opening of the Nightingale services.

Urgent and Emergency Care: Partnership Working

10. Ms Ennis asked the Minister of Health what assurance he can give that partnership working with those who use and deliver urgent and emergency care will be central in any reconfiguration of services. (AQO 544/17-22)

Mr Swann: The principles of partnership working and co-production are at the heart of the ongoing review of urgent and emergency care and will remain so as we emerge from the first wave of COVID-19 to contemplate the long-term model that can best meet the needs of all citizens. The challenges facing our urgent and emergency services are complex, and the root causes are system-wide. Whilst the issues often manifest in the form of busy emergency departments and long delays in admitting patients to hospital, the solutions require a coordinated approach across all of Health and Social Care, one that is led by clinicians and informed by the experiences of those who use the services and their families and carers. That is why my Department initiated a clinical-led review of urgent and emergency care in November 2018 with a remit to examine all the areas that are crucial to the coordinated delivery of unscheduled care, including the care of older people, children and those requiring better and quicker access to mental health services, the role of the Ambulance Service and better coordination across primary, secondary and community care pathways, to ensure that people get the right care in the right place as soon as they need it. Service users and carers have had an important role in shaping the review to date through a co-production work stream that has undertaken research, designed surveys and made valuable recommendations to improve patient pathways and experiences. The work of the review was at an advanced stage prior to the outbreak of COVID-19, and I intend to complete the work and publish the review report later this summer.

In the context of the ongoing pandemic there may also be immediate actions that we require to ensure that our emergency departments (EDs) and hospitals do not reach the levels of overcrowding that we have seen in previous years. In the meantime, I assure the Member that the partnership and co-production approach has been at the core of what has been a transparent and inclusive review to date and will continue to play a central role as we move forward.

Ms Ennis: Is the Minister aware that, over the past weekend, the entire south Down, Newry and south Armagh area was without any ambulance cover? What does the Minister have to say to my constituents, who are rightly aggrieved by that? Will he urgently address the issue?

Mr Swann: That was brought to my attention. I think that her party colleague highlighted it in the media. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has issued a statement on that, in which it says:

"The normal level of cover in Newry station for Saturday dayshifts is two crews. However, on this occasion, NIAS had arranged an additional crew and the planned cover was enhanced by 50%, with three crews on duty. At the time of this call all three crews were engaged on other emergency calls and the nearest available Emergency Ambulance crew was despatched to the call, arriving at 17:45."

The Ambulance Service apologised for the delay in responding to the call and wants to point that, no matter what was reported on social media about the response time being nearly an hour, it was actually 28 minutes.

NIAS staff are highly committed healthcare professionals who always give of their best, and it is demoralising for them to see inaccurate reports relating to response times and misleading references and inferences about patient conditions on social media. We respectfully ask that anyone, particularly public representatives, contact the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service in the first instance to ascertain the accuracy of response times. While being mindful of maintaining patient confidentiality, NIAS will be happy to engage in a manner that benefits patients and improves our services to local communities. Northern Ireland Ambulance Service is grateful to the staff on the front line and in ambulance control who continue to work tirelessly to ensure that an ambulance response is provided to those who have an immediate and life-threatening need. I place on record my full support for the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service. It is working in challenging and critical times, and I ask Members to be supportive of it rather than critical of it.

Mental Well-being: Rural Communities

11. Ms Hunter asked the Minister of Health, given the complex nature of COVID-19 and the limited access to mental health facilities in rural areas, what consideration

he has given to a pilot scheme employing mobile vans to support mental well-being in isolated rural communities. (AQO 545/17-22)

Mr Swann: There are no current plans to implement mobile vans in rural communities to support well-being. The focus has been on online provision to ensure equitable provision for all. The current support in place to support mental well-being in isolated rural communities is the COVIDWellbeingNorthern Ireland online hub and psychological first aid for all of those working or volunteering with local communities. Health and social care organisations have partnered with the organisation for the review of care and health apps to create a library of health and well-being apps for everyone who has been reviewed, and it has been rated as helpful, safe and secure. Helplines Northern Ireland is available to rural communities. The stress control programme that is normally delivered by the five health and social care trusts has been adapted to be delivered online since COVID, and rural supports are commissioned by the Public Health Agency to support rural communities.

Ms Hunter: Given the complexity of COVID-19 and the rural barriers to access, does the Minister have any strategies for tackling elderly loneliness specifically?

Mr Swann: In regard to older people specifically, there is nothing that I am aware of. I have worked with Community Pharmacy and spoken to them about their delivery services. They said that, when they were out delivering medicines, they were finding that that engagement with the older people who had been self-isolating and shielding was vital. There is a piece of work, and I think that we have been working with our community and voluntary sectors in supporting older people who have been self-isolating and shielding at this time. There have been a number of projects, and one that, I think, is worth mentioning, especially for rural areas, is that of Rural Support. We have seen that the number of calls to the Rural Support helpline has increased as a result of COVID-19. However, the ability to deliver one-to-one, face-to-face mentoring is limited due to social-distancing measures. Preparations are ongoing for the recruitment of additional mentors, even through Rural Support, who will be needed post-COVID-19 due to the increased demands for services.

Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services

12. Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, given its lack of trade union or allied health professional representation, how he will ensure the new management board engages with front-line workers in the rebuilding of health and social care services. (AQO 546/17-22)

Mr Swann: The interests of all Health and Social Care colleagues are represented through the current membership of the management board. In taking forward their ambitious work programme, the management board will take account of and represent all relevant expert advice. Regarding allied health profession representation, the Chief Nursing Officer represents the views of nurses, midwives and the allied health professionals on the management board and will be advised by the Chief Allied Health Professions Officer in my Department. In addition, the Chief Allied Health Professions Officer will attend meetings of the management board as necessary.

My approach to rebuilding has been informed by ongoing engagement with trade unions both in relation to the development of the checklist to be considered in the development of service rebuilding plans and on the temporary changes to the HSC framework. My officials regularly meet the trade unions, and I chaired a useful meeting with the strategic health and social care partnership forum on 1 July.

On engagement with front-line workers, the checklist outlined in the rebuilding strategic framework clearly states that service providers must ensure that there is a consistent approach to the meaningful involvement of staff in developing solutions and in the decisions that affect their working life. I expect the rebuilding management board to monitor that closely as plans are developed and to advise me accordingly.

Ms McLaughlin: Does the Minister agree that one of the things that COVID-19 has taught us is that working together brings better outcomes and that more expertise, integration, co-operation and cross-departmental working has led to better outcomes for our patients and our management? If that is true, the management board must reflect that. I ask the Minister to give greater consideration to having more expertise on that management board, particularly across the allied health experts.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her support and the acknowledgement that the board is made up of highly skilled professionals and is not the "cabal" that was referred to recently in the Health Committee.

In regard to representation on the management board, as I said in my earlier answer, the Chief Allied Health Professions Officer works through the Chief Nursing Officer; that is the line of reporting. The Chief Dental Officer reports through the Chief Medical Officer. They are represented on the management board. When their input and expert advice is needed and required, they can attend the board. It is not that they are excluded from it. They are not permanent members of it, but there are avenues where their expert advice can be sought and engaged.

Western Trust Reset Plan

13. Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Health for an update on the implementation of the Western Trust reset plan. (AQO 547/17-22)

Mr Swann: As the Member will be aware, on 9 June the Western Trust published its plan for the month of June along with the rebuilding strategic framework that I announced on the same day. Along with other trusts, the Western Trust will shortly publish its rebuilding plan for the period of July to September, setting out planned activity for the next three months. The management board will monitor progress on the implementation of the plan.

Mr Middleton: The Minister will be aware that today the Western Trust has again issued guidance around Altnagelvin Hospital and its emergency department and an increase in numbers. At one point it was up to 60 in the emergency department. What advice can the Minister give to people coming to emergency departments? Can he give an update on when GP surgeries can reopen to take the pressure off emergency departments?

Mr Swann: The advice given was covered in the guidance, where we asked those who were visiting an emergency department to attend on their own, if possible, but, if they needed support from another, due to medical or support needs, to bring somebody with them. If they could, it would be preferable that they attended on their own to reduce the numbers coming into the emergency departments. It follows on from an answer to an earlier question about the ongoing review of emergency and urgent care services that we need to complete across Northern Ireland. We need to look seriously at how we manage how people approach our emergency departments and where else they can go to seek medical assistance and advice.

The Member's point on GP services and surgeries opening up for more face-to-face engagement is something that we are working on with the GP federations, so that we can move to that normalisation. There are changes that have been made over the last 14 to 15 weeks in regard to telephone triage and telephone consultations that GPs have had to introduce that have been beneficial.

However, I always say that, if anybody does need to see a medical professional face-to-face, that avenue and opportunity is always there for them.

3.30 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That is the end of questions to the Minister of Health. I ask Members to take their ease for a few minutes.

Mr K Buchanan: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. In relation to other languages used in the Chamber, during Question Time, we heard languages in the Chamber that were not English. It leaves some Ministers and Members not understanding what the answers actually are. I pass to you, Mr Deputy Speaker, to ensure that answers are given in a language that the majority of people in the Chamber can understand.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has raised a valid point, and his point is on the record. My understanding is that Members should provide a translation to ensure that everybody understands what is being said. I ask Members to take their ease now.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Stalford] in the Chair)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask those Members who are exiting the Chamber to do so, to allow other Members to take their place.

Committee Business

COVID-19 Guidance and Financial Support to Industry Sectors

Debate resumed on amendment to motion:

That this Assembly recognises the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the taxi, haulage, driving instruction and private hire bus and coach sectors; acknowledges that these industries have not been prioritised in terms of guidance and support packages; and calls on the Minister for Infrastructure to bring forward proposals for the formulation of guidance and financial support for these sectors as a matter of urgency. — [Miss McIlveen (The Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure).]

Which amendment was:

Leave out from "these industries" to "Minister for Infrastructure" and insert:

"the powers of the Minister for Infrastructure are limited to regulation of the transport and transit sectors; welcomes the work undertaken by sectoral bodies and the Minister for Infrastructure to ease burdensome regulation during the emergency period; further recognises that these industries have not been included in specific Executive support packages for private businesses; and calls on the Executive". — [Mrs D Kelly.]

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-Leas-Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom labhairt i bhfabhar an rúin seo agus tá mé i gcoinne an leasaithe. I am in favour of the motion and against the amendment.

It has been three months since we went into lockdown, and now that we are, hopefully, coming out of the other end of this phase and towards economic recovery, our taxi industry is on its knees. Not a single penny has been put aside for a dedicated scheme that could offer financial support to taxi drivers, who have fallen through the gaps of nearly every scheme on offer. Although some taxi drivers have been able to avail themselves of the self-support and self-employment scheme, many have been unable to do so. Those who have accessed some support have been burdened by heavy operational costs.

The Minister for Infrastructure, whose Department is responsible for transport policy in the North, states that her responsibility is only for the regulation of the sector. However, I believe that she has a wider responsibility to represent the interests of the transport sector during these unprecedented times and should not just leave these massive issues at the door of other Departments. Nichola says that it is Diane's responsibility; Diane says that it is Nichola's responsibility. The transport industry sees a bickering game of ministerial ping-pong. All the while, our taxi drivers — hard-working individuals — struggle to pay their bills, put food on the table and support their families. This is akin to firefighters arguing about who should operate the hose whilst the fire burns on and the building burns behind them.

I am proud to support the motion and, if Mrs Kelly is in the room, I am proud to support the taxi drivers in Derry. Despite what she said, it is not just about north and west Belfast and, even if it was, they deserve support. Taxi drivers across the North are looking for support. Other Departments have worked together to put financial support in place such as, for instance, the £12 million package for the emergency childcare providers that came from the Health and Education Ministers. Education has the policy, but Health has the legal authority.

The taxi sector feels left behind during this darkest of times. Their issues have been kicked from pillar to post, and the Minister with responsibility has not advanced a cross-departmental scheme. She has not taken ownership, she has not championed the sector and she has not given a lead. That is what the taxi industry and many others are calling for. Behind the words of the motion, there is a reality that our taxi drivers face every morning when they wake up and every night, when many of them lie awake unable to sleep because of the extreme stress and anxiety that is caused by having absolutely no support. They have been pushed into a precarious financial position during a period of extreme uncertainty, which has severe repercussions for their mental and physical health. Taxi drivers are crying out for help. They came to Stormont last week to make their voice heard after months of frustration and passing the parcel. It is time that you, Minister, showed leadership.

I also support the motion because, since the beginning of May, I have been doing my utmost to fight for one of my constituents in Derry — a recently self-employed taxi driver — who has not had a single penny of support. I lobbied HMRC on the self-employment income support scheme, but it was unwilling to help. In May, I asked Minister Nichola Mallon to put a scheme in place for all taxi drivers but she said that it was not her responsibility. At the Infrastructure and TEO Committees, we discussed whether Minister Dodds should extend the hardship fund to those who were recently self-employed, such as my constituent but, as of yet, there is no clarity on that.

The Minister for Infrastructure, as the person who is responsible for transport policy, needs to take the lead. She needs to work on a cross-departmental basis, as other Ministers have done and have demonstrated. She needs to bring forward a costed proposal for the formation of guidance and financial support. She needs to roll up her sleeves, get active and seek the support and guidance that the taxi drivers, haulage companies, driving instructors and bus operators so desperately need and deserve.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The next person on my list is Mr Daniel McCrossan, who will have four minutes because of the amount of time that is left. It might be an idea not to take an intervention.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I was lining up for the interventions for this.

First, I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate, which is an important one. I agree with the substance of the motion, which is that there are substantial gaps in support for taxi drivers, driving instructors and bus companies. I want to put on record that the transport sectors have been very important in getting us through the pandemic. Many people who work in transport have been key workers in every sense in ensuring that vital medical supplies were delivered to vulnerable people, that supermarkets were appropriately stocked and that many elderly and sick people were able to attend appointments, scans and other medical procedures. They should be recognised in the Chamber for the vital work that they have done and continue to do. They should not be subject to a political point-scoring exercise, where the issue is clearly a cross-cutting one that needs to be dealt with by the Executive. There should be no pointing the finger at my colleague Minister Mallon, saying, “You must do this”, when people in the Chamber and, in particular, on the Infrastructure Committee, rightly know that it is not her responsibility to address the issue of grant funding to bail out taxi drivers, haulage companies or others.

I am not sure why two parties in particular are perched up like two hummingbirds singing from the same hymn sheet —.

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCrossan: No, I will not.

Singing from the same hymn sheet about who is responsible for the grants being rolled out.

I note that although Mr Boylan jumped to his feet today to acknowledge that it is a cross-cutting exercise, in the same breath he said that he was not going to support the amendment — an amendment that provides a resolution to the issue and ensures that there is some delivery. I am, at least, pleased that his colleague Ms Anderson acknowledges that it is a cross-cutting issue and that it has to be resolved by the Executive.

Mr Frew, I have often listened to your interventions in debates, but, today, I am somewhat worried — actually, I am alarmed — about the intervention that you made because you said that there is plenty of money in the coffers; they have not dried up. Well, I am sure that I and other Members and those watching would like to think that, given RHI, that is a bit of a loose statement to make. It would give Sam McBride much to write about when he looks at how money has been spent beyond COVID-19, if that is the attitude of certain parties as to how public money is to be rolled out. I would hope that lessons have been learned.

A Member: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr McCrossan: I will not.

DUP and Sinn Féin logic would almost suggest that, because councils are responsible for granting licences for pubs, for example, we should expect councils to pay the grants for bailing out pubs and businesses.

We need to get to the facts, and the facts are that the Department for Infrastructure’s statutory functions do not include the power to create grant support for hardship or loss of income to those sectors. You know that. So why are we standing in the House today pointing the finger and saying, “You need to resolve this, Minister Mallon. Your Department needs to resolve this”, when, in actual fact, this could and should be resolved by the Executive, given that a significant amount of money has been returned because businesses have not availed themselves of the grants that were put out over the past months.

If we are serious about delivering for those in the haulage industry, taxi drivers and driving instructors, let us work together to do it, instead of pointing the finger across the Chamber at Ministers who have worked very hard to ensure that the voices of those who fell between the stools have been heard clearly throughout the entire pandemic.

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): I thank Members for their contribution to today's debate. This is an extremely important issue, and while there has been much confusion, today's debate has given me a welcomed opportunity to clarify my role, remit and powers and the actions that I have taken to date, within my responsibilities, to provide assistance to the industries highlighted in the motion. I hope that, in setting out the facts, those who have accused me and my Department of abandonment, of not stepping up or coming up with ideas, of a lack of leadership, of having a can't-do attitude will reflect and see it as unfair.

As the Committee Chair pointed out, I have introduced a number of measures to ease the regulatory burden on hauliers and taxi drivers to assist them during the crisis. I will turn to those before addressing the issue of guidance and financial support. As regulator of the taxi industry, a priority for me during the current public health emergency has been two-way communication with the industry on regulatory issues that need to be addressed. My officials and I have been in regular and ongoing contact with the industry, including individual drivers and operators and through open letters to the industry to ensure maximum reach. I recently met with a delegation of drivers outside this Building, and I listened to their concerns.

I have put in place a number of measures to support the industry during the pandemic. I have brought forward coronavirus regulations to ensure the issue of a six-month taxi vehicle licence, automatically and free of charge, to vehicles for which the previous licence expired between 10 March 2020 and 9 October 2020. All licences have now been issued. Drivers' certificate of professional competence (CPC) training providers are also now authorised to deliver taxi periodic training remotely, via online video platforms. That enables drivers to continue to undertake some training online.

With regard to medicals, following discussions with the Department of Health and the British Medical Association, the BMA and GPs have agreed to support and prioritise the processing of medical forms for key workers who need them to renew their licences. In addition, and with effect from 26 May 2020, taxi drivers who do not have a medical condition to declare will have their taxi driver's licence renewed without a medical report.

3.45 pm

For the haulage industry, throughout the crisis, I have pressed for recognition that maintaining our transport network is essential to safeguarding food security and ensuring that critical goods continue to be delivered. I have put in place a range of measures to support the freight sector. This includes introducing a range of regulatory measures, suspension of all MOT tests for commercial vehicles and relaxation of other requirements in areas such as the CPC, tachographs, medical assessments and planning restrictions. An EU regulation came into effect on 4 June 2020 enabling the extension of the validity of certificates and licences to support those transport operators and individuals that, owing to the coronavirus restrictions, are having difficulties fulfilling certain administrative formalities before the expiry of the relevant deadlines. These measures supplement or supersede announcements that I have already made in relation to Driver CPC, driving licences, tachographs and road transport operator financial standing. On 25 June 2020, the UK Government announced that they will suspend the heavy goods vehicle levy for a year, with effect from 1 August 2020, as it is recognised that the haulage industry is critical to restarting the economy as the pandemic begins to subside. That suspension applies here and will provide further much-needed assistance.

A number of Members, including Jim Allister and Cathal Boylan, referred to the financial package secured for ferry operators.

Mr McNulty: Will the Minister take an intervention?

Ms Mallon: In a second.

It is important to be aware of the facts as they are very relevant to the motion proposed by some of the Committee today. My Department did not devise or administer this package. I worked alongside ministerial colleagues to make the case to the Department for Transport and the UK Treasury. They devised the financial scheme that the Executive agreed to jointly fund. This is a pertinent point that I will return to.

To support private coach operators, my officials have held weekly meetings with industry representatives, while all permit holders were issued with a letter reassuring them that their permits would be safe in the event that their services were withdrawn temporarily. I have also met industry representatives and recognise the huge financial difficulties that they face as a result of the COVID crisis. Given their key role, not least to our tourism sector, it is right that private tour operators are a key work stream of focus in the Department for the Economy's COVID recovery work; I very much support that.

As Members have also highlighted, my Department is responsible for regulating the approved driving instructor (ADI) and approved motorcycle instructor (AMI) industry through the DVA. It does not, however, employ driving instructors or motorcycle instructors in the capacity of delivering driving instruction and, therefore, has no remit to suspend their services for public health reasons or determine when they might return to work.

Mr Buchanan highlighted that he felt that an email circulated by the DVA a few Saturdays ago had caused confusion among the sector. That email was important because, that weekend, a number of elected representatives had indicated to driving instructors that they could recommence and resume services in line with close-contact services. I felt that it was important that I communicated the case with them clearly. The Executive Office confirmed that the regulations do not currently prevent driving lessons from taking place. If it is safe to do so for both instructors and their customers, they should; that is what the DVA communicated to the driving instructors whose data we held.

Throughout the crisis, the registrar for ADIs and AMIs in the DVA has provided regular updates to the industry and signposted them to the latest public health advice on social distancing and safe working practices and advice on financial support. I accept the point if Members feel that communication could have been better. I will always seek to improve things where I can, and I will take that back and feed it to my officials. On 23 June, however, the registrar met industry stakeholders and the Northern Ireland approved instructor council group to provide further updates, address their queries in relation to the planned reinstatement of services and listen to their concerns, including on dates for resumption of driving and vehicle tests, extension of theory test pass certificates and safe working practices. I understand that that meeting was welcomed by the industry. I appreciate the frustrations felt by our ADIs and AMIs in these uncertain times. The DVA will continue to provide regular updates to the industry to inform it of any relevant changes to service safety that may have an impact on their business. I assure them that my officials are working to resume car and lorry driving tests as quickly as possible because we recognise the importance of that to their industry and custom.

I will turn to the issue of financial support to the taxi, haulage, private bus, coach and driving instructor sectors. As with many Members in the House, regardless of our party political background, we are all very aware of the hardship and challenges that are facing these sectors. There are financial assistance schemes on offer but I, like you, remain concerned for those who fall outside their scope. In fact, since this crisis hit, more than any other Minister, I have been raising the issue of the impact of COVID-19 on these sectors with Executive colleagues. I have shared a number of my correspondences to Executive colleagues with the Committee. It has also been made clear that my statutory functions do not include the power to create grant support for hardship or loss of income for these sectors. DFI carries regulatory responsibility for these businesses and it could only make grants available in relation to regulatory matters. This is defined in statute.

As I stated at the Committee meeting on 29 April 2020, existing taxi legislation — I am referring to section 51 of the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 — does not extend to providing general financial support grants to the taxi industry in times of hardship and to cover lost income.

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Ms Mallon: In one minute.

That is not simply my opinion, as one Member put it. I sought legal advice from my officials to check this, and it has confirmed my limited vires in that regard.

However, the help push the issue of financial support for the taxi industry forward, I contacted Minister Murphy and Minister Dodds on 20 March 2020 to seek information and advice as to whether there was specific support and financial assistance that the industry could access. In my emails, I indicated that I was keen to discuss the issue with them. Follow-up emails to Minister Dodds on 14 April and 12 May sought an update to guidance on social distancing for the industry. I advise that in his response, which is dated 30 March, Minister Murphy indicated some of the measures that would directly assist the taxi industry, whether self-employed individuals or those who run taxi operations. These included the measures that were announced by the UK Chancellor to support the self-employed who were impacted by coronavirus through the coronavirus self-employment income support scheme. That scheme provides for a taxable grant being paid to the self-employed, or their partners, who have suffered a loss of income, with 80% of their profits up to a cap of £2,500 per month. For taxi operators, he advised of help that is available through zero rates bills for April, May and June, and the opportunity for small businesses to avail themselves of a grant under the small business rate relief scheme.

Furthermore, I wrote to the Executive on 26 March, and then again on 28 March, to stress that there was a need to ascertain what financial support could be made to the industry. In both memos, I also suggested that options should be explored as to how the industry could be repurposed during the COVID-19 crisis to help the vulnerable who were staying at home. In addition, in an email to the Executive Office on 28 March, I stated that I had been contacted by many in the industry and stressed the need to TEO for urgent redeployment and assistance for the sector. I have also written to the Minister for Communities to explore the idea of how taxi drivers can play their part in taking the pressure off our vital services by helping the most vulnerable in our communities by, for example, delivering groceries, food parcels, medicines and other critical supplies to those who are shielding and vulnerable.

On financial support for the haulage industry, the Department for Transport has had regular engagement with the Road Haulage Association and the Freight Transport Association to understand the up-to-date picture for road hauliers at a local and UK-wide level. Work along these lines is being led by DAERA. Given its role in food security, it is the lead in identifying the evidential basis for specific financial interventions to the haulage industry. My officials continue to work with DAERA and other colleagues to support that work.

I understand that, at a time of stress, people need to know where to go for help, and it is very important that they are pointed to the right place. I have set out the steps that I have taken in my remit as a regulator, but also how I have reached out to Executive colleagues, given their roles and responsibilities, to provide support to the industries that we are very much focused on today. I was therefore very pleased to see the Minister for the Economy bring forward a paper to the Executive that included options to enhance support to the very industries that we are talking about today. The Economy Minister's paper outlines options to extend the hardship funds to include self-employed businesses with no employees. Her paper acknowledges that this would encompass the taxi industry and, possibly, the haulage, driving instruction and private bus and coach sectors. I have written to Minister Dodds to confirm that I am very supportive of this option because I recognise the hardship being felt by those who have not been able to avail themselves of the hardship schemes currently on offer.

A number of Members highlighted the fact that, as regulator, I hold data and information. Prior to and since this recent paper, I have reiterated my offer to provide whatever information or data I hold, as regulator, to ensure that we can communicate with those who need assistance. Surely, all of us in the House can support this.

As Mr Boylan, Mr Muir and Martina Anderson highlighted in their contributions — I thank them for that — this is a cross-cutting issue. As Minister for Infrastructure, I do not have the vires to provide financial hardship and assistance schemes, but I have been determined to do what I can within my remit and by working with others.

Today, we have all been united on the need for a proposal to come before the Executive. That costed proposal was brought to the Executive recently by the Minister for the Economy, and it is in line with the other hardship schemes that her Department, the Department of Finance and the UK Treasury have announced to date. As Mr Beggs and Andrew Muir highlighted, to avoid double accounting — Mr Muir urged caution on this — careful work is required to ensure that any scheme that is devised provides assistance to those who have been unable to avail themselves of any such scheme to date.

There is no ping-pong here. I can speak for myself, and I have continuously tried to reach out because I want to ensure that all those who have fallen through the cracks can get the support that they deserve. An Executive effort is what is required: an Executive effort that is highlighted in the amendment. The best way, in my humble opinion, for the Assembly to show its support for these sectors is to show its support for the amendment ahead of the Executive's consideration of future hardship schemes. That is what I remain committed to doing.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Ms Sinéad Bradley has five minutes to wind on the amendment.

Ms S Bradley: Dolores Kelly, in moving the amendment, repeated the fact that the Minister for Infrastructure does not have the legal vires to provide the financial assistance that the motion calls for. Roy Beggs and Andrew Muir referred, correctly, to another fact: across many sectors, many sole traders and self-employed people with no employees have, to date, remained outside the Executive's support schemes. It is, I believe, obvious to all Members that a body of work needs to be done to close the gap created by the schemes led by the Department for the Economy. Rightly, Mr Beggs warned of the need for such work to continue to be channelled through the Executive as an assurance that double accounting cannot happen as the funds are rolled out.

It is important to note, however, that this work does not rest exclusively with the Minister for the Economy; it will require a cross-cutting effort by all Ministers at the Executive table to ensure that all those sole traders and individuals who have yet to be supported by the Executive are included. This must, and I have no doubt will, include the taxi, haulage, driving instruction and private hire bus and coach sectors, which are in urgent need of help. I say that I have no doubt because I know, as does every member of the Committee for Infrastructure, that Minister Mallon has ensured that their plight was heard by all her Executive colleagues. Mrs Kelly listed a catalogue of communications, which was repeated by the Minister, showing that all Executive Ministers are aware not only of the plight of transport workers but of the fact that the Department for Infrastructure does not have the legal vires to provide financial assistance.

Mr Boylan: Will the Member give way?

Ms S Bradley: I apologise that I will not have time for an intervention.

I feel compelled to repeat that fact because it seems to be lost on some in the House. Sinn Féin contributors tied themselves in knots. In front of my eyes, they shredded the motion when Mr Boylan placed on record that he agreed with the limitations of the Department's vires. The Member for Newry and Armagh went on record to state that she recognises that the Executive have a role to play in reaching a solution. Yet, Sinn Féin then goes on to state that it cannot support the very amendment that recognises these two facts.

Mr Boylan: Will the Member take an intervention?

4.00 pm

Ms S Bradley: I will not. We set the tone earlier on that.

The amendment, as outlined by Daniel McCrossan, moves the debate closer to a resolution. It cuts through the "He said, she said" arguments. The amendment sets a course for a swifter resolution, but Sinn Féin cannot support it. The DUP has gone on record today to say that it wants to see a swift solution, and it does not want to play party politics, yet it fails to support the amendment.

Mr McNulty: Will the Member give way?

Ms S Bradley: I will give you one moment. I know that you have been trying.

Mr McNulty: I thank the Member for allowing me to intervene. I apologise to Mr Boylan and Miss McIlveen for interrupting their team huddle in the canteen below earlier.

Will the Member take the opportunity to comment on Mr Boylan's apparent complete U-turn on this issue? For weeks now, he has been tabling questions for written answer to the Economy Minister on what her Department was doing for the coach and taxi sector. Just when did he decide that that was the responsibility of the Infrastructure Minister? Maybe someone told him to lay off the Economy Minister and turn his attention elsewhere. Is this just an example of the DUP/Sinn Féin ruling elite class absolving themselves of responsibility as usual? [Interruption.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr McNulty, you are consuming all of your colleague's time. [Interruption.]

Ms S Bradley: Thank you for that informative intervention. [Interruption.] The DUP has gone on record —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Ms Bradley.

Ms S Bradley: Apologies.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We will not have shouting up the Benches. I enjoy a good heckle as much as the next person. Do not get me wrong on that. Mr McNulty, interventions should be brief. You consumed —.

Mr McNulty: That was brief.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It might be brief in Armagh, but it is not brief here. You consumed an awful lot of your colleague's time. I call Ms Bradley. You have about a minute and a half left.

Ms S Bradley: The DUP will not support the amendment, which defuses the political point-scoring and offers a real solution. Let us be clear: the amendment sets out a clear course of finding a quicker solution. The DUP apparently has a pre-prepared position that it has declared and will continue to align with Sinn Féin on that regardless of the facts.

The DUP wants the Minister for Infrastructure to make a bid for funding that it knows she cannot spend. How would that make those who are in need feel today? It is a ridiculous proposal, which reveals a lot about the consideration that went behind the motion put before us today. Can you just imagine the prolonged kerfuffle and the process that would be required if such a bid was made, and it was not made in a cross-cutting way? Mr Muir, we might have time to watch that fish learn to climb a tree. [Laughter.] A cheap political point-score. That is what the motion was. If anybody was sincere in doing anything else, they should have no problem supporting the amendment to the motion. In fact, I will go further. If you supported the need to bring the motion to the House today, there is a moral duty on you to support the amendment, which sets clarity on how to move this matter to a final resolution. If you are sincere —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Ms S Bradley: I will just make a closing comment. I ask those to just step up and represent the people they claim to be representing today and support the amendment.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure, Mr David Hilditch, to conclude and make a winding-up speech on the motion.

Mr Hilditch (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure): I support the motion and thank the Members who took part in the debate for their contributions on what is, no doubt, a very important matter. This is an issue that has had a massive impact on the lives of individuals and businesses severely impacted by COVID-19. The Chair of the Committee and my party colleague Michelle McIlveen gave an overview of the Committee's consideration of the issues facing taxi, bus and coach hire, haulage and the driving instructor sectors. I will speak on a number of the issues that have come out of the debate before I summarise the views of other contributors.

The first thing to acknowledge is that, despite an amendment being laid to the Committee motion, it is clear that there is no disagreement about the dire situation facing these sectors. Everyone here today recognises the concerns of the individuals and organisations involved and the impact on their lives, their families and the businesses that they have invested time, money and effort into building. Therefore, it is a good starting point that we all recognise the problems, and we know that support is needed. That is a good place to be. I thank all contributors to the debate for their words to that effect.

Dolores Kelly, who tabled the amendment, outlined that the Department for Infrastructure has, indeed, brought in a number of measures to assist those who are suffering from the economic fallout of the pandemic. She added that we all owe a debt of gratitude to the workers in those sectors, who have worked throughout the worst of the past few months. Mrs Kelly outlined that she believed that the impetus for the motion came from the taxi industry in north and west Belfast, a point that I do not recognise as, indeed, I have been lobbied by local taxi drivers in my constituency.

She outlined that schemes are available, some industries have availed themselves of them, and that those schemes have been made available by the Department for the Economy and the Department of Finance. She supports the view of her party colleague, the Minister for Infrastructure, that the Department has no support or power to provide that financial package. She cast blame on the ferry companies for not sharing their support down to the hauliers — again, that should be looked at — and directed taxi drivers and driving instructors to the Department for the Economy's website if they need help. Dolores Kelly noted that the Minister wrote to the Minister of Finance and the Minister for the Economy, and wrote to the Executive to ask that financial support be made available. She finished by urging the Executive to fill the obvious gap in funding, and accepted Jim Allister's point that it is a problem for the Executive in their totality.

Andrew Muir supported the amendment. He noted that there were disparities across those industries and cited hauliers as a sector in which some have remained busy during the crisis. He asked for better coordination across Departments. Andrew noted that there is concern about the furlough scheme coming to an end, and that something needs to be done in that regard. He said that the situation is stark and that the Department for Infrastructure and HMT need to provide support. He said that coach operators, often, rely on tourism, and that there needs to be coordinated help for the tourism sector. Hopefully, that is coming. He said that the motion would raise false hopes among those sectors. We do not see eye to eye on that. Mr Storey, in his intervention, made the observation that local coach operators to whom he has spoken are looking to DFI for regulation and, indeed, financial assistance.

Keith Buchanan supported the motion. He noted that the COVID-19 crisis has impacted massively on the activities of all those sectors. He said that there had been no clear guidance on PPE for taxi drivers, and that they had, very much, been left to their own devices. He said that it is difficult for taxi drivers to socially distance, they are self-employed and they need to work. He made the point that the Minister of Finance had not yet received any bids for support for the taxi industry from the Department for Infrastructure. He highlighted that the cancellation of coach holidays would mean that it would be difficult for some operators to survive, that operators are investing heavily in their operations, and that costs still need to be covered. He said that some driving instructors have six to eight hours of instruction booked without knowing when testing will recommence. He also said that the haulage industry is suffering totally.

Liz Kimmins, in support of the motion, asked the Minister for Infrastructure to lead on those issues and provide clear guidance. She said that it was unfair to say that the complaints had come from taxi companies in north and west Belfast, a point that I have already made. She said that haulage is haemorrhaging money when hundreds of vehicles are parked up each week, and that not all hauliers are in the same position. Indeed, it is costing some hauliers tens of thousands of pounds weekly for lorries to be parked up. She said that it is important to realise that it is not just up to the Minister for the Economy but the Minister for Infrastructure, too, to champion the cause.

Paul Frew said that he supports any Committee that identifies a problem and brings it to the Chamber. North Antrim haulage companies that he has spoken to have been left out. He asked where we would get food and medical supplies if it were not for the few drivers who are still working. Mr Frew said that, in the middle of the crisis, Ministers just cannot have a "can't-do" attitude; that was his catchline. He said that the Finance Minister had £59 million for transport, which was now £29 million, that he could not unlock, and that he was waiting for a bid. He asked why a bid had not come. Mr Allister questioned the £29 million and asked whether it had already been earmarked for something else.

Cathal Boylan made the point that, at the Committee meeting when the motion was agreed, there was a unanimous decision, in the absence of Mrs Kelly, and that Mr Beggs had voted in support of the motion. Mr Boylan noted that the industries mentioned look to the Infrastructure Minister as their Minister. They look to her for answers and to bring forward proposals, and he said that the Committee for Infrastructure supports them in not just regulations. He called on the Minister to draw up proposals that might be discussed with the Executive and get the support of the Minister of Finance and the Minister for the Economy. He said that the Minister for Infrastructure had found time to work with airports. He noted that she had stated that her powers in respect of airports were limited but that she had managed to secure funding by working with the DFT.

Roy Beggs supported the amendment. He made the point that some sectors had been affected to varying degrees and that, to avoid duplicating schemes, the Executive should introduce a well-coordinated scheme that will get the support of the Economy Minister and will be regulated correctly as it will impact on other parts of the economy.

Martina Anderson supported the motion. She pointed out that no scheme had been put in place for taxi drivers and that many had fallen through the cracks in the other schemes. She said that the Minister had a wider responsibility and that the Department for the Economy and the Department for Infrastructure were blaming each other. She also said that taxi drivers needed someone to take control and give leadership and that they were suffering, mentally and physically, due to the not knowing. She talked about a constituent who has not been able to get any support or work during this difficult time. She stated that the Minister needs to take the lead and bring forward costed proposals.

Daniel McCrossan agreed with the substance of the motion that the sectors need help. He said that they should not be subjected to a point-scoring exercise. Most of us believe that that is not what this is. He said that this is a matter for the Executive and pointed out that it is not the role of the DFI to develop grants. He said that money had been returned from grants and not been taken up.

The Minister wanted to clarify her powers, and some facts. She said that she had met with the sectors and had brought forward schemes. She outlined a range of schemes and mentioned those during her speech. They included the medical licences and the suspension of MOTs etc. She spoke of the financial challenges facing the sectors mentioned in the motion, but outlined that she can make grants only on a regulatory basis. She outlined her communications with the Executive and individual Ministers.

Members, it is time for the Government to show leadership, when actions of certain Ministers and Members have undermined the authority of the Executive. We must lead and recognise that each and every industry will need tailored help, support and guidance.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Hilditch: A one-size-fits-all approach is not suitable for moving forward. We have to do everything in our power to support these industries.

Question put, That the amendment be made.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Clear the Lobbies. The Question will be put in three minutes. I remind Members that they should continue to uphold social distancing and that Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place must not come to the Chamber.

4.15 pm

Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that, if possible, it would be preferable to avoid a Division.

Question, that the amendment be made, put a second time.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the Assembly divides, I remind Members that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. It is important that, during any Division, social distancing in the Chamber continue to be observed. In order to facilitate that, I ask Members to do the following: any Members in the Chamber who are not due to vote in person should consider leaving the Chamber until the Division has concluded. Those Members who wish to vote in the Lobbies on the opposite side of the Chamber to which they are sitting should leave the Chamber via the nearest door and enter the relevant Lobby via the Rotunda. Those remaining Members who are sitting closest to the Lobby doors should enter the Lobbies first, and any Member who has voted may then wish to leave the Chamber until the Division has concluded. If a Member needs to vote in both Lobbies, however, he or she should not leave the Chamber.

I remind Members of the need to be patient at all times, to follow the instructions of the Lobby Clerks and to respect the need for social distancing.

Ayes 30; Noes 53.

AYES

Dr Aiken, Mr Allen, Mr Allister, Ms Armstrong, Ms Bailey, Mrs Barton, Mr Beggs, Mr Blair, Ms S Bradley, Ms Bradshaw, Mr Butler, Mr Catney, Mr Chambers, Mr Dickson, Mr Durkan, Ms Hunter, Mrs D Kelly, Mrs Long, Mr Lunn, Mr Lyttle, Mr McCrossan, Mr McGlone, Mr McGrath, Ms McLaughlin, Mr McNulty, Ms Mallon, Mr Muir, Mr O'Toole, Mr Stewart, Miss Woods.

Tellers for the Ayes: Ms S Bradley and Mr McCrossan.

NOES

Ms Anderson, Dr Archibald, Mr Boylan, Mr M Bradley, Ms P Bradley, Mr K Buchanan, Mr T Buchanan, Mr Buckley, Ms Bunting, Mrs Cameron, Mr Clarke, Ms Dillon, Mrs Dodds, Ms Dolan, Mr Dunne, Mr Easton, Ms Ennis, Ms Flynn, Mrs Foster, Mr Frew, Mr Gildernew, Mr Givan, Ms Hargey, Mr Harvey, Mr Hilditch, Mr Humphrey, Mr Irwin, Mr Kearney, Ms C Kelly, Mr G Kelly, Ms Kimmins, Mr Lynch, Mr Lyons, Mr McAleer, Mr McCann, Mr McGuigan, Mr McHugh, Miss McIlveen, Mr Middleton, Ms Mullan, Mr Murphy, Mr Newton, Ms Ni Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mr Poots,

Ms Mullan, Mr Murphy, Ms Ní Chuilín, Mrs O'Neill, Ms Rogan, Mr Sheehan and Ms Sheerin.

Miss Woods voted for Ms Bailey.

Question accordingly negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly recognises the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the taxi, haulage, driving instruction and private hire bus and coach sectors; acknowledges that these industries have not been prioritised in terms of guidance and support packages; and calls on the Minister for Infrastructure to bring forward proposals for the formulation of guidance and financial support for these sectors as a matter of urgency.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mrs Kelly aside, the Ayes have it.

I ask Members to take their ease for a moment while we change the top Table.

Private Members' Business

Disability Services and Family Carer Support

Ms Armstrong: I beg to move

That this Assembly recognises the significant impact of COVID-19 on children and adults with a disability and the exceptional contribution of family carers further to the cessation of many statutory and non-statutory services; and calls on the Minister of Health to produce a detailed plan for the resumption of services.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer, Ms Armstrong, will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to wind. All other Members will have five minutes.

Ms Armstrong: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I promise that I will not take my full 10 minutes, as I know that a lot of Members will want to speak on the motion.

I propose the motion not just on behalf of the Alliance Party but on behalf of a cross-party group of MLAs. I thank all those who signed the motion. I also recognise the work of the many volunteers and carers who contributed to it. I recognise the work of Chris Lyttle MLA, who is not speaking on the motion today, in negotiating with quite a few Members in the background.

We have come together to recognise the significant impact that COVID-19 has had on children and adults with a disability and the exceptional, amazing contribution of family carers throughout lockdown. From the outset, I want to confirm that the motion has been created with Families Involved Northern Ireland (FINI), which represents a regional network of carers and family members who provide substantial unpaid care for disabled adults and children. Those carers are part of the rainbow of heroes who have protected and looked after some of our most vulnerable family members, who, thankfully, have not come into contact with COVID-19. They have kept their loved ones safe, irrespective of the exhaustion and ongoing anxiety throughout the past 16 weeks.

One of the key issues with lockdown was the almost immediate withdrawal of many statutory and non-statutory services. That showed how quickly COVID-19 forced changes on us. So many people with disabilities and their families rely on those services. In most cases, services were removed without warning or consultation with families. The services included day care, respite care, day opportunities and other social care support. Carers took over immediately, providing full-time care and support. When I say "full-time", I do not just mean full-time working hours; I mean 24 hours a day, seven days a week. How do I know that? I know it because my amazing brother needs such care. My dad, who is in his mid-70s — he will not like me saying that — has provided full-time care for my brother with only short periods of respite provided by me and other family members. I know exactly what it is like to live with the fear that carers have. What if their loved one catches COVID? How would they cope in hospital on their own, without us? What would happen if I or my dad got COVID? Who would look after the person then?

For many carers, having to deal with the fallout of services being removed so quickly has caused many problems. Breaking routine throws a carer's world into chaos. It is difficult to explain to a loved one why they are not allowed to go to work, day opportunities or day care, watch them become more insular, almost retreating into themselves, or see their independence reduce, while providing all their care. Every day, that means that — I will explain what carers do — they wash the person, dress them, help them with their toileting, prepare their food and help to feed them. They are their entertainment; they protect the person; they do all the cleaning; and they wash all the clothes. They try to maintain good hand hygiene, but that is not easy when the person does not want you to touch their hands. That goes on day after day. The only thing that keeps the person going is that there is no one else to do it. The person whom you are looking after is your loved one. You will do anything to help, support and care for them, even if you are physically exhausted, emotionally drained and have not, perhaps, slept in days.

We also had school support provided, such as physiotherapy, occupational therapy and speech and language therapy. All that ceased to be available for children with special educational needs, which had a severe impact on the health and well-being of families. Not only had parents and carers to take over full-time care, they also had to act as teachers and provide the interventions that had to disappear. Families need to know when services will resume. They need to be part of that process. They will need to reintroduce their loved ones to a routine that once was and prepare them for the necessary changes, such as face masks, handwashing and social distancing. Some of their much-loved support staff will have gone, reallocated to other necessary services or, unfortunately, made unemployed. Minister, I am sure that you agree that carers and families should be recognised for their extraordinary efforts throughout the crisis. They have worked as hard as any of your medical staff for four months without a break.

There is a solution. I am not just saying how terrible everything is, and I hope that I can express the families' wishes in a way that honours their input to the motion. Carers need a detailed plan for the reintroduction of services for the person they care for. They need to be a part of creating that plan, and the planning needs to start now. Indications are that external services will not be restored to meet assessed need for a long time, and that needs to be clarified and shared with family carers. Carers need clarity, not rumours or suggestions. It would be really helpful if trusts could assess the long-term, night and day care and the impact that that has had on our carers. If carers go down, if they get sick, our health service cannot cope with taking over caring duties for the people with disabilities who are cared for and look after those carers. Carers need emotional support, and, while organisations like FINI have enabled carers to talk to each other, many other carers have not been able to speak to anyone and remain in isolation. Just before I came in this evening, I spoke to the Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB), who recognise the social isolation and terrible loneliness that is happening. The isolation and the sometimes overbearing responsibility that carers feel needs to be recognised and supported. We need to care for our carers and ensure investment and local support for them.

Family carers have asked for and must be given discretion to use individual budgets immediately for family or for managing a family member's support needs in a way that gives flexibility, choice and control. I appreciate that that may be for the Department for Communities or the Department of Health, but, to be honest, a lot of the red tape — the barriers — is in place through the trusts. It is time for us to trust our carers and enable them to purchase support until Health is in a position to provide it for them or with them.

Carers who work outside the home also need to be protected. A partnership between Health, Economy and Communities could create employment and benefit protections to allow carers to continue to care for their loved ones and not face being sacked, made unemployed or pushed into poverty because the statutory and non-statutory services are not in place. It is not just all about Health; it is a partnership.

Indeed, when considering partnerships, Health and Education must cooperate to deliver school services and support for children and young people with physical and learning disabilities.

4.45 pm

We are here today to talk about our carers and with our Health Minister. Let us not leave carers behind. Let us not leave adults and children with disabilities behind. Being a carer is not all doom and gloom. It is a privilege to look after my family. There are days when there is a lot of laughter and you can see that the person you care for is happy and coping, and life is good. However, there are days when it is exhausting, frustrating and intolerable. Family carers have remained quietly behind closed doors in fear, desperation and despair. They have always called on their reserves of resilience to survive the most extreme circumstances, driven by the need to stay strong so that they can care for those who need them the most. After all, who else can they depend on? Mr Principal Deputy Speaker and Minister, I hope that today we can say that they can depend on us.

Mrs Cameron: I welcome the motion. There is no doubt that COVID-19 has had a huge impact on those with disabilities and their family. During the pandemic, many services that are normally accessed by adults and children with disabilities have been either suspended or disrupted as part of the public health response or health protection regulations. Some examples include the suspension of Disability Action's transport scheme; Shopmobility; charitable initiatives carried out in physical proximity, including counselling, overnight stays and group activities; restrictions on visiting learning disability units; the suspension of off-site visits to family or friends by those in supported living accommodation; and the closure of schools has had an impact on the social and educational outcomes for those with particular needs. I know that in my office we have been contacted by many families who are looking to us for help. These are very real concerns. To give one very brief example, if care has to be stopped for some reason and the family is able to manage in the very short term, will there be guarantees that the care will resume in the future? That is a big worry.

The nature of the COVID threat saw parents having to make emergency care plans for their disabled children in case they became incapacitated. Those are steps that no parent or guardian should ever have to take. This has obviously had a massive impact on mental health. Mental illness is the largest single cause of disability in Northern Ireland. Better awareness and acceptance of it is needed as a society as we chart the COVID-19 recovery. The measures that are proposed in the mental health action plan are a solid foundation. Some 70% of respondents to the Carers UK April survey in Northern Ireland said that they are providing more emotional support to those they care for, including keeping an eye on them and trying to motivate them. Those with disabilities should not be left behind in discussions on how to tackle the legacy of COVID-19 on mental health resilience. The recovery must be fair and equitable to everyone.

The pandemic has also put into sharp focus the disproportionate risk of mental ill health among unpaid carers. Eighty-one per cent of carers have experienced loneliness as a result of caring, and carers are up to seven times more likely to be lonely than the general population. We need to look differently at how we can better address the risk moving forward.

It is vital that COVID-19 recovery has a safe and central place for adults and children with disabilities, as well as those with caring responsibilities. The phased, or incremental, basis on which health and social care, community services, leisure facilities or businesses reopen should not unfairly disadvantage those with existing health conditions or impairments. There should be impact assessments, whether they are done formally or indirectly, for those with disabilities when making onward decisions. Equal access must be at the heart of this process. That means proactive and substantive consultation with service users, carers and their advocates. It also means regular evaluation of adherence to the wider rights of those with disabilities. Many young people with disabilities are seizing education and training opportunities, some of which have been suspended for the duration of the crisis. Those opportunities must not be lost, and those young people's prospects should be prioritised.

Another key requirement as we look ahead is maybe something that goes without saying, but is often not the case. This is about valuing carers. Unpaid carers played an integral role in the first wave of COVID-19 in preventing our health service from being overwhelmed. That contribution may not have been public-facing, but it is as significant and deserves the same recognition and appreciation as other roles. We believe that there is merit in considering a plan to review and potentially raise the level of carer's allowance or to provide an alternative discretionary payment to take account of the additional care provided by family members during the pandemic. Advocates like Carers NI and Families Involved NI have been pressing for that, and we urge Ministers to examine the potential for a proportionate and fair system of compensation. We are also conscious that the sacrifice of many carers in assuming additional responsibilities during the crisis may have had implications for their employment status. Government need to look at more effective means of allowing people to stay in paid work, if they want to. Many charities have called for a plan for long-term social reform and for investment in care and support services to give unpaid carers respite.

In conclusion, even amidst the upheaval of COVID-19, there are opportunities to be identified and harnessed to improve outcomes moving forward. We want to see Executive Ministers commissioning thorough research into and evaluation of the experiences of carers and those with disabilities during this crisis, as well as the impact of suspended services on their standard of life. This is about effective risk mapping and informed learning for the future. I commend the motion to the House.

Ms Sheerin: No one in the Chamber would argue against an equal standard of living for those in society who live with a disability. However, it is not enough to simply state that we want to see people with disabilities treated equally; we have to act and we have to put in place the measures that will allow disabled people to live equally.

During lockdown, life changed for everyone, but the needs of those who require care remained the same, meaning that it was the carers, in most instances, who had to adapt. Caring for someone, particularly for a loved one with whom you share a home, is not a job that can be shrugged off and left at the back door in the evening; it is a vocation and something that not all of us are cut out to do.

It is worth remembering that care within the home is disproportionately the responsibility of women, and a study carried out by Carers UK in 2019 told us that 69% of female carers in the North of Ireland were unpaid. Of those claiming carer's allowance in the North in 2017, 68% were female. The same study demonstrated the financial and emotional impacts of the role, with respondents acknowledging what they miss out on and saying that they had suffered stress, anxiety and poor mental health as a result of their responsibilities, which are often in addition to work and relationship commitments.

Of course, there are also many challenges with direct payment care packages. Families are responsible for an employee, someone who is carrying out the care of their loved one, and so the usual stress of ensuring that their relative is being looked after appropriately can be compounded by worries about sick days or payslips. That has been magnified in recent times with concerns about the procurement of PPE or the securing of a COVID-19 test. I know from my experience of working with constituents on these matters that no two cases are ever identical, but the crux of the issue is the same: everyone wants the best for their loved one.

A recent report estimated that some 310,000 people in the North are caring for someone and that over 98,000 people became carers during lockdown. Those people are at the heart of today's debate. This pandemic, the consequent lockdown and everything that has gone with it are causes of significant anxiety for us all. For anyone suffering from an illness or living with a disability, the threat of COVID-19 is particularly sinister.

As the North went into lockdown, the impact of the sudden closure and the withdrawal of services on those who depend upon them was extremely hard to imagine. So, too, must be the decision to ask a care provider not to come into the home or to decline parts of a care package because of concerns around COVID-19. I know of constituents for whom carers became part of the family. Relationships build between the carer and the individual, and, when the arrangement is successful, it becomes an organic, natural, supportive situation; a friendship as opposed to a work arrangement.

I know families that avoided submitting a request for a care package because of their fears around coronavirus, with furloughed sons, daughters and siblings stepping into the breach during lockdown. These people have not had a break. They were not logging on in their pyjamas to work from home or spending furloughed days catching up on Netflix but were providing a service that they, in most instances, have had no training for. As well as that, the change in routine for those with disabilities is often unsettling and upsetting. The loss of respite services during COVID-19 has been significant. Without respite, families are providing 24-hour, seven-days-a-week care, which is obviously a massive commitment that ultimately can have a hugely negative impact on a person's physical and mental health. Put simply, we all need a break.

From a departmental point of view, allowing people to cope unaided for sustained periods of time will lead to a greater draw on resources in the long term. It is vital that as the rebuilding plans for health and social care services are developed further, the trusts and Department do not follow the same bias that occurred with the onset of the lockdown, where social care and carers became second or third in the list of priorities. The plans for resumption need to add value to the lives of our disabled population and to consider the concerns of carers. Carers need certainty on the resumption of statutory and non-statutory services. I know that it has been asked of the Minister before, but it is important that the issue is given serious consideration. The current arrangements and restrictions on what is considered care need to be revisited.

Given the lockdown, family home carers should be given some space to be employed, and what is considered acceptable for care should be relaxed in order to meet the exceptional needs. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr McGrath: I rise to speak today, just two days on from Sunday, when we celebrated the 72nd birthday of the NHS, and I acknowledge the phenomenal work that goes on every day right across the health service. I also pay tribute to the many individuals with a disability and their families across the North, who have made such sacrifices during the pandemic and, indeed, will have helped to save lives. I pay tribute to the many family carers, who have given tremendous support and assistance, and I pay tribute to all our healthcare staff, who have given up their time, energy and even, at times, their lives to ensure that the pandemic did not have the biblical impact that was predicted. We need, and needed, our carers. In the midst of the worst days of the pandemic, what was the response of those local heroes? They gave comfort, they lived and breathed compassion and they helped to save lives.

In March, we saw the pulling of the handbrake on social services for adults and children with disabilities. With little warning and no consultation or engagement with those who would be most affected, it was gone in the blink of an eye. Essential daycare facilities and respite services were shut. Support staff and daycare staff were repurposed and transferred along or furloughed. All the while, family carers stepped into the breach and not only ensured that those with a disability were supported and cared for, but that the further risk of infection of family members was prevented.

here we stand, on Tuesday 7 July, with the worst of the pandemic behind us, getting ready for a summer ahead, and what position have those local heroes been left in? In the worst days of the pandemic, we let them step up to the plate and protect some of the most vulnerable in our society, and what is their reward? Those heroes who worked unflinchingly, with no conditions attached, and regardless of the impact on their physical, mental and emotional health, who oftentimes had to leave their own families behind so that they could care for others. How are they being repaid for that? Well, they are not. We are now being told that the indications are such that these services will not be restored to meet assessed need for a very long time, and no information is being given directly or being shared with the families.

Forgive me, I know that sometimes we in south Down feel very isolated and alone when we see moves to repurpose our beloved Downe Hospital. It looks, though, that we are not alone in this, when we see the same tough, difficult treatment being handed out to family carers. In some ways, I fear for the aftermath of the COVID crisis. Lots of people are talking about a new normal. I hope that there is a new one, because we cannot go back to the old normal. If the old normal meant that you could pull essential staff from a local emergency department, send them to a hospital where they were not needed and then tell them to go home and use their leave, I do want to see that normal. If the old normal meant that you can pull the handbrake on essential social services for adults and children with disabilities, it is not what we want to see. If the old normal meant that family carers had to put their physical, mental and emotional health on the line to care for others in the worst days of the crisis, and not be consulted on the future operation of the service, we do not want to be part of that new normal.

I know that our Health Minister likes to use the term "repurposing" and it has found a way into our new language, but, in this instance, I maybe actually agree with the Health Minister, although he may not believe it.

We need to repurpose our health service and find a new normal. What is the purpose of our health service? It is about the physical, emotional and mental well-being of everyone, whether you are a patient, a family member or a staff member.

5.00 pm

As part of the repurposing, I urge the Health Minister to do three things that are entirely within his gift and to do so as quickly as we can. The first is to put in place flexible funding to be made available to family carers so that they can begin to plan alternative arrangements for care and support for the foreseeable future and so that they can get a break themselves and not be burnt out. Secondly, the Department must ensure that family carers are given the discretion to use individual budgets immediately for managing their family members' support needs in a way that gives flexibility, choice and control. Thirdly, family carers must be fully involved in any and all of the future long-term solutions. I do not think that that is asking too much, and, in case there is any ambiguity or confusion, I absolutely support the motion today and urge all Members to do so.

Mr Butler: I welcome the first cross-party motion since the resumption of the Assembly earlier this year, and I recognise the work of Chris Lyttle, the chair of the all-party group on learning disability, and the work that has gone into bringing the motion to the Floor of the House. It is good to be able to talk about a motion about some of the most vulnerable people in our communities and the people who provide the care for them, often in a hidden form. I also recognise the work of the all-party groups on learning disability and disability, which have, in my time over this past four years, been relentless in trying to give a voice to those who are often unseen and unheard. In those two all-party groups, we have the advocates, the carers, the community and voluntary sector, the statutory sector and the service users represented, and it is one of the most refreshing platforms to be working on as a politician in these days.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, if you do not mind, I will read out the motion. It is a powerful motion, and it seeks:

“That this Assembly recognises the significant impact of COVID-19”.

When we assess the impact of COVID-19 across our society, those who are most vulnerable must be at the top of our list, not at the bottom. The motion recognises the impact:

“on children and adults with a disability and the exceptional contribution of family carers”.

I think that “exceptional” is an important word there, because it is often unseen and unheard what family members and close friends do in the provision of care in the unpaid sector. The motion goes on to talk about the temporary withdrawal of:

“statutory and non-statutory services; and calls on the Minister of Health to produce a detailed plan for the resumption of services.”

I support the sentiment of the motion.

It is important that we recognise what a carer is. It would be a disservice to not peel it back a little. A carer today, in 2020, we now know, can be a child. It can be adult; it can be a family member; it can be a friend who gives care to somebody because of their frailty, their disability, their addiction or some other issue because that person cannot cope. That person provides the lifeline for the individual. The thing about being a carer is that, many times, they do not see themselves as carers; they see themselves as having to fulfil that function because there is no one else. Carers are champions, and we should not be afraid to put them on the pedestal where they deserve to be. Whether they fall into that role due to being a parent or a child or a sibling, we need to recognise what they do and the value of that for the person who needs that care. It is very likely that most of us may perform that function, as my colleague Kellie Armstrong has eloquently said today and so many times. That brings a real level of reality to what we are talking about.

I looked at a report about the four top things that carers have been exposed to over the COVID pandemic. Some of them existed before, but they have been compounded and magnified by COVID. One of them is visibility. The doors have been closed, and, perhaps, it has been even harder to get out and to interact with other people and certainly to avail themselves of services. The next was isolation, and there has been isolation across all facets of our society. For those who were already isolated, perhaps, it is even worse. Access is what we are talking about today, because, for the protection of the carer and those who needed the care, some of those services have been restricted or stopped, to prevent them from an even more insidious danger. Then, there is grief and loss. If you are a carer, especially for someone with complex needs, the fear of the loss of that person is a constant, dark companion. It is a burden that is hard to bear and has been exacerbated by COVID. I wrote to the Health Minister on 24 May on that topic and asked several questions in respect of the impact of COVID and the impact on carers. I was delighted to hear that the Department was committed to working closely with the carer representative bodies and was cognisant of the Carers UK report ‘Caring Behind Closed Doors: Forgotten families in the Coronavirus Outbreak’ and that guidance was published on 10 April and 22 May. It was also good to note that mental health got a significant mention and that there was information provided on that.

As I come to the end of my five minutes, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, it is with delight that I speak on the subject and support the motion.

Mr Easton: It is estimated that up to 310,000 people in Northern Ireland may be providing unpaid care to a family member or loved one. Over 30% of those — 98,000 — have become carers since the COVID-19 outbreak began. Many of those carers will be supporting loved ones who have an incurable health condition or are at the end of their life. Because of COVID-19, social services for adults and children with disabilities were withdrawn in late March due to lockdown without warning or consultation with family carers. Paid support staff, including day-care workers, were reallocated to other services or furloughed. Facilities for day care, respite and other services were shut down. Family carers stepped in 16 weeks ago to provide all support and care and have kept family members free from infection.

Sadly, some terminally ill people have died since the COVID-19 outbreak began. The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) has recorded 716 excess deaths in the year to 19 June. That means that there have been an estimated 3,580 more people affected by bereavement than at the same point in 2019, many of whom are likely to have been providing care to loved ones before they died. Before the outbreak began, capacity issues meant that demand for bereavement support was significantly outstripping supply. That pressure is only likely to have grown as a result of the increase in deaths and disruption in services due to social distancing and other lockdown measures. Providing care for a dying loved one can be an all-consuming role. It leaves carers with little or no time to recharge their batteries, spend time with friends and family or even to do the basic things that most take for granted, like getting a proper night’s sleep or enjoying a meal. More than ever, in the context of COVID-19, access to respite and other support services provide a lifeline for carers of terminally ill people.

The reduction and closure of care and support services and the disruption to services from paid care workers will only have exacerbated these issues. Survey data shows that 44% of carers in Northern Ireland are providing more care than before the outbreak began because of the reduction or closure of support services. For many carers, the outbreak will be an even lonelier and more isolating experience, as they are cut off from wider social support networks and relevant services. Access to regular respite is critical in allowing carers to take a break from their caring roles, recharge their batteries and look after their own health and well-being.

It must be recognised that, while COVID-19 has served to intensify the burden on local carers, the pressures on the services that support them long predate the outbreak. For instance, the widely acknowledged financial pressures facing adult social care have often meant a reduction in the services available to patients and the carers who support them. A significant increase in funding will be needed to allow health and social care trusts to rebuild after the crisis as well as bringing forward plans for the long-term reform of adult social care. Identifying carers as a priority group requires emotional support services and the development of an agreed pathway for them to access interventions such as psychological talking therapies; work in partnership with third-sector organisations; and providing advocacy and other key support services to carers. Family carers need flexible funding made available to them urgently so that they can begin to plan alternative arrangements for care and support for the foreseeable future and get a break themselves. Carers must be given the discretion to use individual budgets immediately for managing their family member's support needs in a way that gives flexibility, choice and control. Indications are that external services will not be restored to meet excess need for a very long time, although no information about that is being directly shared with family carers. Family carers must also be fully involved in all future long-term solutions.

The Minister has published the strategic framework for rebuilding health and social care services, which I welcome and support. As part of the rebuilding programme, trusts have also produced and published plans for scaling up services. Those plans are now essential. They must be escalated, and we must ramp up service delivery, especially for children and adults with a disability, and fully recognise and support the exceptional contribution of family carers into the future. We owe them a debt of gratitude that must be paid by supporting them now.

Ms Bradshaw: I fully support the motion and welcome the opportunity to speak. I hope that the cross-party nature of the motion will send a strong message to the parents and family members watching or hearing reports of our discussion today so that they know how much we care about the subject matter.

I start off by acknowledging how difficult the lockdown has been for families where one of their loved ones lives with a learning difficulty or physical disability. I have said many times in the Chamber that the lockdown measures introduced to minimise the spread of coronavirus have been and continue to be felt disproportionately by certain sections of society, not least this one. We have all been contacted over the last four months by people raising concerns about aspects of accessing healthcare, social care and education. One of the earliest contacts I received was from a worker in a day-care centre for adults in Belfast who was very concerned about the close proximity of attendees on the buses and in the activity rooms, as well as the lack of hygiene control measures and, probably from this person's perspective, the apparent lack of urgency to close operations and stop the spread of infection. Very quickly thereafter, they were all closed. However, we all need to recognise now that that decision, like many others at the very start, was not taken lightly and was reached with consideration of the full ramifications of ceasing such services. Let us not forget that, back in February and March, we were facing into the unknown. Figures for potential projected deaths were in the thousands, and none of us had a crystal ball to know how the virus would spread. From the start, one group of people who were acutely focused on the news and the latest information about the virus were the parents and partners of people who live with health vulnerabilities.

Their principal job in life is to care for their loved ones and protect them from harm. Therefore, when the non-statutory services were closed, it was done without much dispute but with a sense of apprehension about how life would be for them as 24-hour carers without outside help and without the interventions of allied health professionals and other support staff who play such a vital role in working with people on mental and physical health and development.

At this point, I pick up on the huge efforts of the teaching staff in the special needs schools and the physiotherapists, speech and language therapists, classroom assistants and so on who have come up with inventive ways of continuing contact with the children and adults to encourage them to keep doing their activities, their exercises and their learning at home during these periods of isolation. I am sure that the parents and carers have really appreciated their ongoing support. However, I express some disappointment that it took so long for the guidance for social workers working with such families to be reviewed and updated by the Department of Health. I think it was about 12 weeks into the pandemic when that updated guidance came out. I had been contacted by parents who were acutely aware that, because outside carers were no longer coming into homes due to their legitimate fears about bringing in the infection, they were becoming reliant on their other children for support, essentially making them unpaid carers. Many told me of their acute stress and guilt at that, especially as the children were also feeling the pressure of their own absence from school and homework coming through, as well as their isolation from their friends and outside activities. I raised that issue on two occasions with the Minister at the Health Committee, and he came back to me with the answers I was looking for.

5.15 pm

I was asking him principally about the potential for parents to use their direct payments flexibly, as is the case in England. When the long-awaited guidance came out, there was provision in it that social workers could work with families on a case-by-case basis. The guidance also required that the recipient of the money would have to pay tax and insurance and become, effectively, their parents' employee. All of that smacks of extra work and stress at a time when there was already a bucketload of both for the parent and the social worker.

In preparation for the debate, I had a quick look at the comments on posts that I created on my Facebook page during the pandemic to provide updates for carers. One comment jumped out at me, because it said:

"No shock there, we are always at the bottom of the agenda".

Ministers and fellow MLAs have talked much over the last few weeks about resetting our health and social care sector and better recognising the unnamed yet diligent members of our society who played a vital role in holding the country together during the lockdown. We owe it to the carers and their loved ones that disability services are better resourced and better meet the needs of children and adults. In so doing, we have to ensure that we listen, engage and do better, going forward.

Miss Woods: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to sign and speak on the motion.

As other Members have said, it is estimated that up to 310,000 people in Northern Ireland may be providing unpaid care to a family member or loved one and a significant number of people have become carers since the outbreak of COVID. Because of COVID, many families have had to make hard decisions about whether they wish to continue with some of the care that they had coming into the house. They have had to consider their safety and keep family members free from infection and face the closure of community, domiciliary and statutory support services. The effect on children and adults with a disability and the impact on family carers should not, therefore, be underestimated. The Assembly must recognise that and do something to help ease the pressure and burden that exists.

Local care and support services were closed, and health regulations have meant that key supports that some were able to access have been removed, including day opportunities and short breaks for respite, which are crucial for health and well-being. Members will have received briefings from FINI, the RNIB and the Coalition of Carers Organisations in response to the motion, giving their support for it and further recommendations. I hope that the Health Minister and other Ministers will take their points on board and commit to meeting all the groups that have come forward with ideas. I also implore the Minister to continue to engage with the sector, commit to co-design, truly listen to the voices of those who are supporting our most vulnerable and build back a better system that is supportive of our carers and those whom they care for.

The organisations that have contacted us are clear: they wish to be fully involved in long-term future solutions and to work in actual partnership and not just as part of a tick-box consultation. Additional funding and flexible finances must also be looked at in the short term for those who need to plan alternative arrangements for care and support to alleviate the pressures that are faced and for trusts to rebuild and deal with the long-term issues that face the social care sector and that predate COVID. I spoke to FINI yesterday and heard the stories and experiences of those women from before COVID and during this time. It was an emotional conversation, in which the realities of their lives were discussed. I thank them for their honesty and openness in engaging with me. What was loud and clear is that they need to be heard. They have ideas and solutions to problems, but many feel that they are not being listened to. They need support, but it must meet the needs of their family members and their needs as carers. They talked about the support that they have received through this time. Some said that they had had none — one or maybe two phone calls in 14 weeks from the statutory bodies. That is not good enough. They tell of day centres being used as storage units, with no firm reopening date, and of the day-care hours that they need being reassessed and reduced. They talk of inconsistencies between trusts and the inflexibility of individual budgets. They talk of the reassessment process for day care being redone and not on a needs basis. I want the Minister to confirm how assessment for future access to day centres and day care is being done and how the people who need it most and who need more care will be able to avail themselves of it. Any future detailed plan should include investing in advancing plans for the upgrade of day centres, for example, to ensure that our buildings are suitable, such as at Ravara Training and Resource Centre in Bangor in my constituency, where parents and carers have been lobbying for years for upgrades and a new centre. Despite business cases being submitted as far back as 2012, they still wait.

Unpaid carers are vital to keeping vulnerable people safe, yet many fear that continuing 24/7 care will lead them to burnout. Many people in Northern Ireland were performing a caring role in difficult circumstances during and before COVID-19, alongside trying to hold down full-time jobs, take care of family responsibilities and look after their own mental and physical health. We know that, before the outbreak of COVID-19, social care services were already in short supply and families with support met a high threshold to get any sort of care outside the home. Now, some of those services have disappeared, and unpaid carers have to cope alone, which adds to the burden and pressure. The Minister recently rightly stated that Northern Ireland faces a massive challenge in rebuilding health and social care in the wake of the first COVID-19 wave. We had a challenge before COVID, and we face an even bigger one now. Part of that is facing and dealing with the issues that existed, but we have an opportunity to build back better, to refocus and to do things differently, better than we did before. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Members for tabling the motion. I am happy to have signed it and supported it. I thank all the carers in my constituency and across the North who have been working extra hard throughout the pandemic. I thank the organisations — a lot of them — that contacted me and other Members ahead of the debate.

The necessity to implement lockdown exposed how reliant we are on care workers, those who work in a broad range of environments to support people with disabilities and care needs and those who provide care in general, including family members. It was obviously not just that trust services were withdrawn; a broad range of community settings and services were no longer open due to lockdown. The current arrangement highlights the need for respite care, as we have heard, for the families of loved ones with care needs. The truth is that unpaid carers took up the mantle. Family members stepped in and stepped up to provide care when it was required. We should recognise that fact and the fact that, as we have heard, it is mostly women who carry out that work. They deserve not only praise and thanks but some sort of financial assistance or payment in recognition of that. There is a call for a family carers grant, which is something that, in my view, should be welcomed broadly by the House.

Family carers must be given the discretion to use individual budgets immediately for managing family members' support needs in a way that gives flexibility, choice and control. While it is, no doubt, the case that care workers employed by the trusts or whomever work hard and provide essential support, there was a gap in care before the crisis. The unpaid carers whom we are talking and thinking about today were often the ones who stepped in. Families Involved NI mentioned that, in a week of 168 hours, the state provides only 30 hours of support. That is far too low. We have also heard that more than 310,000 people provide unpaid care. That is a staggeringly massive figure that needs to be tackled. People need support.

The mantra of "No return to normal" has echoed loud and clear throughout the pandemic. We cannot return to a situation where the state fails to provide enough hours to families of people with care needs. We have heard in our correspondence about carers in their 70s and 80s who have had to provide round-the-clock care. I can only imagine how difficult and tough it has been for them to provide care for the people they love on a consistent, 24/7 basis, often without any respite at all. We have to recognise the role played by such people. They were integral in providing care when services were withdrawn. Family carers stepped in 16 weeks ago to provide support and care, and they have done essential work throughout that period.

We also have to recognise that people with disabilities have generally been overlooked by society when decisions were being made. One group in particular that is often overlooked is people who are blind or have visual impairment, and there are an estimated 55,600 of them in our society today. Obviously, social distancing is difficult for them to do, so, when we make plans for moving forward, we need to bear in mind those people. People who are blind or partially sighted have been shouted at on the street because they are not abiding by social-distancing measures. We need to bear that in mind.

We have to remember that many family carers face burnout. We need to act accordingly to support them. Many people have clapped for the NHS in the last few weeks. As we face economic ruin and recession, what better way to pre-empt that than by starting to employ and recruit more carers? That would, obviously, provide jobs, but it would also provide extra hours, as needed, to carers throughout the crisis and afterwards.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister of Health, Mr Robin Swann, to respond to the comments that have been made. The Minister will have 15 minutes.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): I thank everyone who commented and those who tabled the motion. The motion provides an opportunity to highlight and debate an important subject: the impact that the COVID-19 pandemic has had on our children and adults who have a disability, as well as those who care for them. I will begin with a simple but heartfelt "Thank you". It would be remiss of me to do anything other than express my sincere gratitude to the many families who have played such a significant part in keeping their loved ones safe during these difficult last few months. It would be difficult to overstate the debt that we owe to them.

Controlling the spread of the virus has, rightly, been our collective top priority and will remain so as we continue the process of easing restrictions. However, I am aware of the real challenges and difficulties that lockdown has presented for the families and carers of those with disabilities and complex medical conditions, many of which have been echoed here today. I publicly thank every one of those families and assure them that they and their loved ones have not been forgotten.

There is, however, much that we need to consider, as is evident from our debate. As I have said on many occasions, the pandemic has changed all our lives. That is particularly so for families including those with disabilities. I am acutely aware that many have faced either long separation from loved ones who are being cared for in a setting outside the family home or the taking on of caring duties on a full-time basis because of the scaling back of services or the closure of schools. According to a recent report that a number of Members have mentioned, nearly 100,000 new carers were added to the list in Northern Ireland as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. That means that there are potentially well in excess of 300,000 carers in Northern Ireland now. That is a significant number of people whom we rely on to help the people whom they care for to live at home. In turn, carers rely on our health sector to support them in their caring roles. As some have said, it is a partnership. One of many lessons of the pandemic, however, is that we, as an Executive, need to work on strengthening that partnership. My Department, the board and the HSC trusts have worked tirelessly to provide what help and support they can in extreme circumstances, and I thank them for their efforts.

Recently, during Carers Week, we all had the opportunity to celebrate the role that carers undertake. This year's theme was making care visible. Mr Butler referred to that as one of the four main challenges. A report on the state of caring was launched by Carers Week, and it makes for sobering reading. The challenges and anxieties faced by carers are very real. They impact on their relationships and finances and create feelings of isolation and being overwhelmed and undervalued. I have asked my officials to reflect on the findings in the report and report to me. There is no doubt that the toll that the pandemic has taken on our carers is tangible, going by what has come across my desk and the desks of other Members and what has been articulated today by Members advocating on behalf of those families and themselves. In particular, I have been struck by the real sense of what can only be described as fear that is being experienced by some of the families as they struggle to cope with the circumstances that they have found themselves in. They feel deep anxiety about their own health and well-being and that of their children at this difficult time and into the future.

I know that there is a deep concern among Assembly Member colleagues about this, and I share it and I am fully committed to addressing it by building on the detailed work that is well under way around the resumption of services.

5.30 pm

On the closure of HSC day centres and schools, as many of you have already said, we saw the early standing down of most of our centre-based day services, along with some short break facilities across all trusts, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. While we are cognisant of the degree to which many families rely on those supports on a daily basis, it is important to note that the action was considered necessary at that time to minimise the transmission of the virus among adults with learning disabilities and to ensure adherence to public health guidelines. We also saw the closure of schools, including our special schools.

In response to those closures, Members will be aware that, across Northern Ireland, as anxiety increased among families and carers who were struggling to cope at home, all the trusts put in place measures to redeploy their day-centre staff to provide alternative day, short break supports to families on a risk-assessed basis, and in accordance with COVID-19 guidelines. In many cases, that involved bespoke arrangements being put in place to meet the individual needs of those families, with some very laudable effort made to reach out to service users and their families and to provide in-reach services in day centres on an exceptional basis, while adhering to public health guidance. I know that that support provided much-needed respite for some families and it is worth acknowledging.

I will also take this opportunity to commend those working in the voluntary and community sector for the huge efforts that they made, and continue to make, to support their clients and families. The work that is being done at the grassroots by many organisations that have gone the extra mile and beyond is truly humbling. Organisations such as the Compass Advocacy Network in my constituency reached out to give us an update as to the steps that it had taken to support its service users. It also provides hope for us all that many organisations stood up and supported those families when they needed it. It also provides hope for us all that some good might come out of the pandemic through learning that can be applied as we plan for and seek to rebuild services for the future.

Many Members referred to the importance of cross-departmental, inter-agency working, and I believe that that is particularly true for our disability sector. I say that because one of the positive things to have emerged from the many challenges that the pandemic has presented has been the even closer working that we are witnessing between Health, Education and Communities. That can only be a good thing, and it has come about through the establishment of a joint Health and Education oversight group and local multi-disciplinary panels in trusts to help deliver an integrated support group programme for children with complex needs and the families who are in the greatest need.

Through Health and Education working together, children who rely on the routine and familiarity of school as a vital coping mechanism have been identified and placed in our special schools during this period. That was as a result of guidance that was developed and training that was provided by our health professionals. The collaborative working between Health and Education is continuing, and it will inform the planning of the Education Restart programme, including the health supports that are required for children in line with their statement of special educational needs.

Collaboration with colleagues in the Department for Communities and the Housing Executive has increased to ensure that supported living services can continue to reach the most vulnerable in our society during the pandemic.

During the pandemic, we have collated and produced a range of guidance products in formats that are accessible to those with sensory and learning disabilities. These resources include material from a variety of sources, targeted at helping people with learning disabilities and autism, and their family, express how they have coped with lockdown. The guidance products are available on the PHA website.

I have made additional funding available to Carers NI so that it can extend the operating hours of its advice line service, and, in response to a request from carers, a carers ID card has been developed and distributed to assist them with their in-store supermarket shopping. Officials are working with carers in the health and social care sector to develop guidance that will bring much-needed clarity to the complex subject of direct payments, which Members mentioned today. The trusts have been contacting carers and, where possible, offering additional support. Online stress management classes, carer support groups and health and well-being sessions have been organised to support carers through these difficult times.

My Department co-produced advice for unpaid and family carers, including young carers. That was published initially on 10 April and has been updated regularly since. This advice brings together a breadth of help and advice from across government, health and social care and other verified sources, making it an essential one-stop shop for busy carers. My Department has amended and produced updated guidance on other issues, including the course of the pandemic, to reflect the specific needs of people with disabilities and their families as our awareness of the impacts of the restrictions has increased. Travel for exercise and visiting guidance are two examples of this. Many organisations contacted us seeking clarification of the rules around exercise where there is an agreed need, perhaps requiring travel to a particular place outside a person's local area more than once a day. We looked into this immediately, and updated guidance was subsequently published and implemented across all trusts.

Following direct engagement with carers from a range of trusts, facilitated by Families Involved NI, we were able to ensure that their concerns about being able to accompany their loved ones into hospital were addressed in the latest regional visiting guidance, which I published last week. I very much hope that, moving forward, this example of co-production in action can be built upon.

Members referred to the recovery and reset plans. This is a good point at which to address the second part of the motion, which is the call for me:

"to produce a detailed plan for the resumption of services."

I am pleased to report to Members that detailed planning is under way across Northern Ireland for the resumption of services. Let me make it clear: I have made it clear that I want services to be recommenced as quickly as it is safe to do so. At the beginning of June, I published an overarching strategic framework for the mammoth task that we now face: the task of rebuilding our health and social care services as we emerge from this initial peak of the first COVID-19 surge. In doing so, I have made clear that we cannot look too far ahead or ignore the huge strategic challenges that faced the system pre-COVID and which have been further compounded by the pandemic.

As I said previously, the process of rebuilding will be incremental. In this context, under the auspices of the strategic framework, plans have been developed for a regionally consistent approach to the resetting and recovery of the disability services that, across Northern Ireland, were scaled back during the first surge. All trusts, in partnership with the independent sector providers, are developing detailed service-specific action plans informed by a range of factors. These include COVID-19-related staff absences; the ability to implement social-distancing measures in current facilities; the ability to return staff from redeployment; and local variation in infection rates and practicalities. Engagement with carers and independent sector providers on these plans is under way across all trusts. It is important to recognise that there have been practical barriers to consultation with service users during the pandemic. However, we must ensure that their views shape how services are reset and scaled up.

Initial feedback suggests that flexibility will be essential as we enter the recovery phase. Reflecting the demand for increased creativity in the approach to service delivery, and in the light of experiences during the first surge, incorporating the learning and new approaches developed in response to the pandemic will be central to our approach to restarting services and, indeed, to the future shape of learning disability services in Northern Ireland. To that end, the lessons learned from COVID-19 must inform the ongoing development of the learning disability service model for Northern Ireland.

In conclusion, it is important to emphasise that our understanding of the impact of COVID-19 on our population is a developing picture. Although the anecdotal evidence is clear and backed up by much of what has been said here today, we still have a lot to learn, particularly about its impact on various groups here in Northern Ireland, including those with a disability and their families and carers.

While I am confident that the detailed planning already under way reflects what we currently know, I am also fully committed to increasing our understanding of the impacts on children and adults with a disability and their families in order to inform our plans for rebuilding as they continue to evolve in line with the strategic framework that I have already published on the principles of co-production, which I am fully committed to as we move forward.

We will also continue to work in partnership with our partners across all Departments to ensure that the holistic needs of those with a disability and their families are met. On that basis, I support the motion today and thank the Members once again for bringing this important issue to the Assembly.

The last word must go to families: I assure you that your contribution to our response to the pandemic to date is much valued by me and my Department. I salute your resilience and your incredible efforts to advocate on behalf of your loved ones.

While we must recognise that the road ahead will be challenging and the service capacity will likely continue to be significantly impacted, it should not have to be a struggle for those who play such an important role in our system. We must keep striving to improve how we do things. As a system, I know that we will rise to that challenge, and I look forward to doing that with everyone who has a stake in making it better for all. I support the motion.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister. The Minister went a minute over, but, given the content of that minute, I think that I did the right thing in not interrupting him.

I call Mr Colm Gildernew to conclude and wind up the debate on the motion.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): I am very pleased to be associated with the motion today. I also acknowledge the work that Chris Lyttle has done in bringing us all together on such an important issue.

Members across the board have largely recognised many of the groups who have engaged in the debate outside this Chamber, and families involved, who I did a significant Zoom meeting with a number of weeks ago, have been instrumental, as have a range of other groups. In the run-up to the debate, there was an issue raised in relation to whether or not this would be tokenistic. I recognised that concern from that group of people.

We all know that, in the best of times, carers are faced with very difficult situations and that the COVID-19 crisis has indeed accelerated many of those issues. It has left them further isolated and left them with further difficulties in relation to holding down a job and trying to manage their caring role at the same time. That is something that we need to be very conscious of.

I would also have been delighted had this motion included an element of financial recognition for the additional costs that carers have had because of PPE and having to pick up extra care. That is something that we need to look at very realistically, and I acknowledge the Minister's remarks about looking at that issue very specifically. It is important that we address that as a priority in the time ahead.

Members here today also indicated the unfair, if you like, impact of caring on particular groups. Women obviously are the first group that come to mind in relation to that, but I have concerns about carers of children who have had to deal with the issue of their schools being closed and all those additional supports or respite disappearing from them.

When I first came into the Assembly, I became Sinn Féin spokesperson for carers and well-being. I asked for that role to be created because I think that there is a wide recognition that, too often, we treat carers as an afterthought in many ways. We cannot see that continue because, as has been acknowledged by the Minister and by other Members who spoke today, there is a huge amount of people who are providing care in our society, and the entire health and social care system relies heavily on the input of those carers.

As Kellie Armstrong said, if we do not support them and they get burnt out, we are in serious trouble. There is absolutely no question about that. We need to engage with them in a realistic way. I acknowledge the Minister's point that there have been additional difficulties with COVID-19. However, additional opportunities have opened up. Many of us have seen all-party group meetings. I attended one Zoom meeting, in particular, at which there were 80 people. Therefore, other ways of engagement are being opened up that should be explored proactively.

5.45 pm

I also want to address the issue of trusts' responsibility, which is central. In the first instance, they have a responsibility to identify carers. A number of months ago, I did a piece of work with the trusts on their register of carers. It is patchy and incomplete. They understand that they do not know fully who is providing care in the community. The Minister has acknowledged the additional carers who have come forward at this time. That is a significant and welcome piece of work, but there is much more to be done in that respect. We need to find out who out there is providing care and what we need to do to support them.

Almost every Member who has spoken in the debate has acknowledged the fact that caring, in itself and before COVID-19, has a huge impact on physical and mental health. Everyone has also acknowledged the impact of loneliness on carers across the board and the further difficulties with that at this time. There are also significant issues around poverty and the impact that being a carer has on career progression. In the longer term, we need to reinforce the rights of carers in legislation. At this time, the only legal right that a carer has is the right to an assessment. They do not even have the right to have any needs identified in that assessment met. At least, it is a start that unmet need is being captured. We also need to look at that issue.

Many Members mentioned the need to provide flexibility around direct payments and individual budgets where that suits a particular situation. We cannot overlook the essential need for the core services that have been stopped, including schooling, day care and respite services. Carers have been stressed out for weeks now, as was mentioned by a number of Members. In many cases, they are truly at the end of their tether. We need to reflect on that. I believe that the Minister understands that, and I welcome the moves that he has taken. However, as a matter of urgency, we need to see what practical steps we can take for the rebuilding of services. The Minister has mentioned difficulties with that. We need to engage with those difficulties robustly in order to try to prioritise that. It is one of the key issues that we are looking at now.

I commend Members for the debate. It is an important message to send out. While I recognise that people out there will be concerned that the motion is somehow tokenistic, it is important that we, at least, start to have that debate and move the practical situation forward. I commend the motion to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

That this Assembly recognises the significant impact of COVID-19 on children and adults with a disability and the exceptional contribution of family carers further to the cessation of many statutory and non-statutory services; and calls on the Minister of Health to produce a detailed plan for the resumption of services.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members, as I am moving the next motion, I am, obviously, unable to chair the debate on it, although some might think that I would maybe try. I have been advised that Deputy Speaker Beggs is unavailable and is, therefore, also unable to chair the debate. Standing Order 9A(1) provides for those circumstances by requiring the sitting to be chaired by a temporary Speaker. The temporary Speaker is defined as:

“the member, present at the sitting, who has served the Assembly the longest number of days, and in the case of a tie, the oldest”.

In accordance with Standing Order 9A(1), I have, therefore, asked Mr Jim Wells to take the Chair.

I invite Members to take their ease. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting — [Interruption.] Members, one moment. I propose to suspend the sitting until 6.00 pm in order to allow for change at the top Table. The next motion will be on ministerial breaches of the COVID-19 guidelines.

The sitting was suspended at 5.50 pm and resumed at 6.00 pm.

(The Temporary Speaker [Mr Wells] in the Chair)

Ministerial Breaches of COVID-19 Regulations and Guidelines and the Associated Damage to Executive Messaging on COVID-19

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I ask Members to take their seats. As the Principal Deputy Speaker has outlined, it falls to me, as temporary Speaker, to chair the debate. I remind all Members that, in my role of temporary Speaker, I will, of course, discharge my duties during the debate impartially.

Mr O’Dowd: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. Can you clarify something for the House? The motion is titled “Ministerial Breaches of COVID-19 Regulations and Guidelines”, yet in the text of the motion there is no mention of a ministerial breach of the COVID-19 regulations. I just want clarity on what Members are debating today and what they will be voting on.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I thank the honourable Member for Upper Bann for his intervention. The titles of motions are determined by Members when they table their motion. There are admissibility criteria for motions, but the wording of the motion is a separate matter. You have a concern about the title. The issue has been considered, however, and the title and the motion are in order under Standing Orders.

Mr Stalford: I beg to move

That this Assembly acknowledges the immense sacrifices that people, families and communities have made during the COVID-19 emergency; pays tribute to those who selflessly prioritised the need to keep each other safe above their own personal needs, particularly during times of trauma, loss and grief; expresses disappointment in the actions of those in ministerial office who breached public guidance and failed to share in the sacrifice that we have asked of others; implores members of the public to stay with us and to continue acting in accordance with the regulations in order to keep each other safe and prevent further deaths; recommit to upholding the spirit and the letter of the COVID-19 regulations and the related public health guidance; and calls on the deputy First Minister and the Minister of Finance to apologise for their actions, which have caused immense hurt.

Over recent days, Members of the House have been asked by senior Government Ministers not only to suspend their critical faculties but to suspend their physical senses. In a fashion that would shame Kellyanne Conway, the deputy First Minister asks us —

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Order, Mr Stalford. I am sorry. I should have given Members an indication of the timing for the debate. You will have your full 10 minutes.

Mr Stalford: That was a good line too [Laughter.]

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Business Committee has allowed up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will indeed have his full 10 minutes in which to propose and 10 minutes in which to wind. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Tuesday 7 July 2020

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. Does it follow that there is no ministerial response in the debate, as you have indicated that all other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I understand that Mrs O'Neill is responding in her capacity as deputy First Minister. In that role, she is entitled to 15 minutes rather than the normal five minutes allocated to Members.

Mr Allister: Further to that point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker, how can it be that Mrs O'Neill is responding as deputy First Minister, speaking on behalf of the Executive Office? Should we infer from that that the First Minister has assented to that and that, when she rises, Mrs O'Neill is speaking on behalf of the Executive Office, which means that she is also speaking on behalf of the First Minister?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): That is a valid point of order, Mr Allister. I am simply relaying the information received by the Business Office and the Clerk. It will be up to the deputy First Minister, Mrs O'Neill, to address that point during her 15-minute address to the Assembly.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: With respect, it is not for Mrs O'Neill to address that point. If Mrs O'Neill is appearing in the House on behalf of the Executive Office, custom and practice dictate that she can appear in that role only with the assent of the First Minister. Is she appearing on behalf of the Executive Office to speak for 15 minutes on behalf of that office? If she is speaking only on her own behalf, she should be restricted to 5 minutes and speak from the Back Benches, I would have thought.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Member has been around this Building almost as long as I have, and he knows the protocol that, when someone responds in their capacity as an Executive Minister, they have 15 minutes. I have no doubt that, when Mrs O'Neill is speaking, you will be quick to your feet to ask her about that very point, and I am sure that she will address it. However, at the moment, I am simply relaying the information that has been received by the Business Office. It is not for the Business Office or me to decide anything beyond that, and I can confirm that she is addressing the Assembly at the end of the debate in her capacity as deputy First Minister.

Mr Lyons: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Lyons.

Mr Lyons: I will just make it clear on behalf of the First Minister that this is not a joint statement on behalf of the Executive Office.

Mr Allister: On a further point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: Given the joint nature of the office, how can Mrs O'Neill address the House as deputy First Minister, on behalf of that office, if she does not have the consent of the First Minister? Mrs O'Neill, in the House, has no power as deputy First Minister. Any power she has is solely the power of the joint office. If the joint office is not consenting to her speaking as deputy First Minister, she cannot speak as deputy First Minister. Is that not correct?

Mrs O'Neill: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mrs O'Neill.

Mrs O'Neill: I confirm that I intend to speak as an MLA this evening and respond to the debate. I do not know where the confusion has come from, but it is certainly not of my making.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Well, that raises an interesting point. Normally, a Minister is automatically entitled to 15 minutes in their capacity as a member of the Executive, if they are responding to a debate. Individual Members, even if they are Ministers, who are speaking as private individuals are allocated only five minutes. The difficulty is that the Business Office was informed that Mrs O'Neill was responding to the debate in that capacity. Therefore, we allocated her 15 minutes, and that is quite normal and the right thing to do. The difficulty is that we have allocated the time accordingly. Mrs O'Neill is telling us that she is speaking as an ordinary MLA, so she would be restricted to five minutes rather than 15.

Mr Allister: I respectfully suggest that there is no difficulty: if she is speaking as an MLA, she has five minutes. End of.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Yes, your interpretation is right, Mr Allister. I am grateful to Mrs O'Neill for confirming her status for the debate and to Mr Lyons for his intervention. I do not know whether you have prepared a 15-minute speech or a five-minute speech, Mrs O'Neill. I have no doubt that there will be references to you during the debate and you may have an opportunity to intervene. I am, therefore, ruling that, on this occasion, it is five minutes for the speech. That still means there are 10 minutes for either Mr Stalford or his nominee at the end of his contribution.

Sorry, Mr Stalford: you still have ten minutes.

Mr Stalford: Thank you, Mr Temporary Speaker. In a fashion that would shame the Trump Administration, the deputy First Minister asks us to shut our eyes to what we all can see and stuff our ears to drown out what we all can hear. We are urged to rely on alternative facts. Her assertion that she abided by the guidelines that she wrote and imposed on every other citizen in this country has been repeated ad nauseam. That pretence cannot be sustained unless we close off all reason and judgement.

Let us examine the facts. What do the regulations that the deputy First Minister had a hand in drafting say? They are very clear:

"These Regulations further amend the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 in order to allow for gatherings of up to 30 people in public places and outdoors."

Thus far, the lamentable defence of her actions that the deputy First Minister has provided hinges on a spurious premise: that the crowd following the cortège at Mr Storey's funeral constitutes the funeral, whilst the parade walking behind does not. We are asked to divorce one from the other. However, we cannot. Our eyes will not allow us to do that, for we can see, leaving aside the fact that there were clearly more than 30 people walking in the cortège, there were hundreds more walking behind them and in close proximity and there were thousands in Milltown cemetery. I will come to Milltown later. That clearly and openly constitutes a breach of the regulations.

Furthermore, given the images that have emerged showing a mass procession, I would be grateful if the deputy First Minister could confirm whether Sinn Féin, who, I am given to understand, organised the event, submitted the requisite 11/1 form to the Parades Commission. If not, that constitutes a further breach of the law, one that, I suspect, the deputy First Minister's party would be quick to seize on if others were guilty of it.

There are other reasons. The other reason why the defence of 30 in the cortège constituting the funeral breaks down is what happened in Milltown. Regulations state that gatherings should be up to 30. The deputy First Minister wrote them. She knows both the letter and the spirit of those regulations. Why, then, was a public address system set up in Milltown cemetery? You do not need a public address system, if you intend to address 30 people. Is the deputy First Minister seriously contending that what occurred in Milltown cemetery was separate from Mr Storey's funeral? If it was, it did not constitute part of his funeral; it constituted a Sinn Féin rally in a cemetery. If you are abiding by the letter and spirit of the regulations, you do not advertise public gatherings. Yet that is precisely what Sinn Féin did. Republican activists were recruited from all over the country to attend the event; indeed, some enjoyed the occasion so much that they were posing for selfies with the deputy First Minister in yet another breach of the regulations that she authored.

There you have it, sir: more than 30 in attendance; hundreds more behind them in a procession; widespread advertising of an event; installing a public address system in a cemetery; a mass rally in a cemetery; and posing for selfies. Yet the deputy First Minister continues to insist that her actions were within the regulations. That is for the birds.

All this is most regrettable, because the Northern Ireland Executive had been doing well in dealing with the pandemic that we are in the middle of. After a period of three years without devolution and these institutions and those of us who occupy them being held in contempt by the wider community, we were making progress in how people feel about the Assembly. I regret to say that the deputy First Minister's credibility is now shot to bits. I do not say that to be cruel or unpleasant; it is simply a statement of fact. What credibility there was is now gone.

At the recent meeting of the Executive Office Committee, the deputy First Minister told me that it was not for me to adjudicate on what funerals she could or could not attend.

Yet, sir, that is precisely the power that she has assumed for herself, which we gave her, over the last four months. Not only did the deputy First Minister take on those powers but she was zealous in telling us all how necessary they were. As a consequence, many people in this country lost out on giving their loved ones the funeral that they would like. Seemingly, those rules do not apply if a senior member of Sinn Féin is the person who is being buried. That is what really sticks in people's craw. That is what is at the core of this issue: "Do as I say, not as I do".

I have no doubt that an attempt will be made to brazen it out in the hope that, once we have all had our say, that will be the end of the matter. That is not my intention. I am asking the Executive Office Committee Chairman, Mr McGrath, to consider initiating a Committee-led inquiry into these events in order to establish on the record of the House the scale of the breaches that occurred. We cannot have a situation where a senior Government Minister, week after week, fronts up a press conference, urging our people to sacrifice, sacrifice, sacrifice, only to then apply different standards when the person who is being buried is a colleague. No matter how much Mr Storey may have meant to the deputy First Minister — I accept what she said at the Executive Office Committee, which was that he meant a great deal to her — there are others who did not have the chance to give a send-off to people who meant a great deal to them.

On 4 June, the deputy First Minister said:

"We have to send a message very clearly that by gathering in such a big crowds we're actually spreading the virus, and ultimately that's killing people".

That was on 4 June, and it was said about the Black Lives Matter protests that occurred at the front of Belfast City Hall and other places. The events at Milltown made those look tiny by comparison, so why does the principle apply to people taking part in a Black Lives Matter event but does not apply to the people participating in a republican event?

In conclusion, I am sad that we have come to this juncture, but, like many other people in this country, I am outraged and disgusted at the persistent denial of that which we can see for ourselves. The longer that that persistent denial goes on, the more the credibility of the deputy First Minister melts away like snow off a ditch.

Ms Flynn: Tonight I will oppose the motion. With the entire Sinn Féin team, I recognise how difficult and challenging these past few months have been for everyone but particularly for those who lost loved ones to COVID-19 or those who had to endure the heartache of losing someone during the pandemic. I recognise those Members who lost close relatives during this time, and I recognise their heartbreak. I take this opportunity to offer my sincere condolences to every single family that has lost a loved one at this time and to every family out there that is going through the difficult and heart-wrenching process of grief. That includes the family and friends of Bobby Storey.

Bobby Storey, who tragically passed away on 21 June, was a very dear friend of mine. He was a person of huge influence and inspiration not just to me but to many hundreds of thousands of republicans across this island and further afield. Bobby was a mentor, a champion, always in my corner, and he did his very best to support me and many other younger republicans in our party. He was loved by so many from the constituency of West Belfast. He earned the respect of the community of West Belfast, republican or otherwise, and it will always be with a smile that I will think of Bobby, including here tonight.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Ms Flynn: I would rather not, thank you.

In discussing the motion, I am mindful of the grief and the sorrow that his family is experiencing, and my heart is sore for my friend and my colleague, Bobby's heartbroken partner, Teresa. My heart is sore for their children, some of them my very good friends. My heart is sore for their young grandchildren, some of them still trying to make sense of what has happened and some who still do not understand what has happened at all. My heart is sore for Bobby's nearest and dearest lifelong friends.

In two days of discussion in the Chamber, there has been little consideration of the pain being experienced by the family of Bobby Storey. There has been very little or no expression of sympathy and no condolences. How many Members here, in the midst of this week's incessant media coverage, the tweets, the Facebook statuses and the interviews, have genuinely given any thought to the grieving family of Bobby Storey? It seems that, for many in the Chamber, the family of a republican activist is worthy of less respect and less consideration. I have thought constantly about the family of Bobby Storey, the Pickering family, the Storey family and about his young grandchildren, who have lost their Granda Bobby, and Teresa, who has lost her partner and the love of her life. Every day since Bobby has passed, their pain has been real and heartfelt.

We can all have our own very different perspectives on the life and contribution of Bobby Storey and also on the events of his funeral, but I urge Members who rise to speak on the motion tonight to please also accept and remember that his family are grieving and that their grief is as deep and as difficult as the pain of anyone else. Whatever issues we are discussing here tonight, we should all recognise that diminishing the dead diminishes us all.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Thank you, Ms Flynn. Members, this is an issue that I am sure everyone has a strong opinion on, but I thank Mr Stalford and Ms Flynn for the tone of their contribution in the two opening speeches. I am absolutely certain that that will be perpetuated by Mr Daniel McCrossan.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you, Mr Temporary Speaker. I absolutely acknowledge that there is a grieving family, but I also acknowledge that there are many grieving families whose grief has been compounded by their inability to have a traditional wake and funeral, which are so important to the fabric of our society. The SDLP recognises the grief of the Storey family and we do extend our thoughts and prayers to them at this time, but this debate is not about the Storey family. It is about us, as an institution, practising what we preach to ensure confidence in the House, in our Executive and in those who lead our Executive.

The lockdown restrictions have not been easy for many people, but the vast majority of people across the North have heeded the advice that we, as an institution, gave. Only this week, the US special envoy Mick Mulvaney praised our efforts in curtailing the deadly virus on these shores. I am proud, as an MLA for West Tyrone, of that fact that the actions taken by the Executive and in the Chamber have had, and continue to have, life-saving consequences for the public and have saved countless lives.

We have made a massive impact on stopping COVID-19 here, and that is due to the many sacrifices that people have made during lockdown, as instructed by our Executive continually, week in and week out. Those personal sacrifices will continue to have a massive toll on people, and that is especially the case with funerals. Many families have had to say goodbye to loved ones, with no wake, no physical mass and no funeral burial at all. We have all become accustomed to that during COVID-19. The sacrifices that those families have had to make are immeasurable and will stay with them for the rest of their life. I have seen this at first hand across my constituency in West Tyrone, where grandsons, granddaughters, nieces, nephews, cousins, sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, neighbours and friends were unable to attend the funerals of loved ones and friends. They are doing that on the advice given to them by our Executive every week.

The motion is about recognising the immense pain and hurt that has been caused to people in all our communities, who were asked to make significant sacrifices in the interests of protecting friends and families. I think that we should reflect on the scale of the sacrifice that every single Member present here today has asked the people in our respective communities and constituencies to make on a daily basis.

I think today of my colleagues in the SDLP who were lifelong friends of our dear friend John Dallat, a former Deputy Speaker of this House. We were denied the opportunity to say goodbye and honour his contribution to our island, to our peace and to his people in East Derry. We made the decision that our pain, our needs and our grief had to come second to the public health advice that we have all committed to, and asked others to do the same.

I think of colleagues in other parties in this Chamber, such as Edwin, who have experienced the loss of a loved one and were not able to share their pain with family members in the way that we normally would, and the sacrifice that he and his party colleagues have also made, in terms of attending the funeral of his late father.

It is a matter of profound regret that, having asked so many to selflessly put their personal paid aside and to act to keep each other safe, members of our Executive, including the joint head of Government, could not share in that sacrifice, and that is what is at the heart of today's issue. It just seems to many out there that there is a hierarchy of pain that Ministers in Sinn Féin have created.

For a party that claims ownership of the idea of republicanism, the principle that all citizens are equal and that everyone be afforded the same opportunities and treatment under the law, the actions of those Ministers are a great betrayal of that ideology. That is what has annoyed so many. There cannot be one rule for those who govern, and another for the rest of us.

The motion is an opportunity for those who breached the public health advice to acknowledge the additional hurt and pain that has been caused to those who have already endured hardship throughout the COVID crisis. It is a further opportunity to apologise for the actions that have damaged the credibility of the Executive's public health messaging. I am not sure that the deputy First Minister or her party fully understand the depth of damage that has been caused to the credibility of these institutions.

I appeal to the vast majority of people who have abided by the regulations to please continue doing so to ensure that each of us is kept safe. Do not allow this to derail your commitment to fighting the virus and looking out for each other. In spite of the breach of trust that has taken place, please stay with us.

I ask the deputy First Minister, and I know and acknowledge that she and her party colleagues have had a great loss as well, to please acknowledge the loss that the rest of us have also endured and suffered, and that we could not attend those funerals, and please apologise.

Tuesday 7 July 2020

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Would the Member —

Mr McCrossan: When a wrong has been made, the best way to make that wrong right is to apologise and admit that a mistake has been made.

Dr Aiken: Members of the Assembly, I rise in regret to bring the motion to the Assembly and to the people of Northern Ireland. As I said directly to the deputy First Minister, this is not a matter of orange and green. This is a matter that goes to the core of how we deal with this crisis. It is a regret that, despite the biggest health challenge that our citizens have faced in decades, two Ministers who purport to show leadership in the Executive have flagrantly chosen to flout the rules and guidelines that they themselves set and imposed.

Until last Tuesday, our Executive's decisions had the hard-won acceptance and support of the people of Northern Ireland. Thanks to the abject failure of the deputy First Minister, the Finance Minister and some MLAs to abide by the very rules that we set, that support is now gone. It is you who made the rules, sold those rules and now have indisputably broken those rules. In any other democracy, both of you would have done the decent thing and resigned, but this is Northern Ireland: we do not have a normal democracy. We do, however, have a Pledge of Office. In affirming the Pledge of Office, you both stated that you will:

"uphold the rule of law based as it is on the fundamental principles of fairness, impartiality and democratic accountability"

and

"support the rule of law unequivocally in word and deed and to support all efforts to uphold it".

Demonstrably, you did not do that. Instead you have come to the House, in a degree of arrogance unmatched except by special advisers needing eye tests, in the twisting of truth, a truth that is self-evident to everyone bar the Ministers.

The failure to address the issue head-on has shown that, whether on the streets of Belfast or in our very cemeteries and crematoriums, there are different sets of rules, rules in which you believe that even the rules of mathematics do not apply and when the numbers of 10 or 30 are magically transposed to hundreds and 61. However, somehow in the Orwellian Adams world, your interpretation of the rules means that, somehow, you are more equal than the others

Deputy First Minister, do not take my word for it. A member of the clergy in my constituency put it much better than I ever could when he said:

"I have stood in my empty church and sat in my car following a brief impersonal funeral with only nine other people present, and I have more than once wept about what I was not able to provide. Then, I turn on the news and see a funeral in west Belfast, with a multitude attending in close formation. What an insult. Clearly, because I have eyes and a brain, I could see that this was breaking what I thought were restrictions."

The deputy First Minister and the Finance Minister have both failed. You have failed to uphold your own rules and guidance, and you have failed to uphold your own pledge of office, but, unforgivably, you have put your own narrow party interests above those of your constituents. It beggars belief why neither of you can see that and why you still feel that you deserve to be given any respect or credibility by not just this Assembly but especially by the family and relatives, particularly of those 554 people who are deceased and the many thousands who have suffered from COVID. Your arrogance and the way that you have spoken to the people of Northern Ireland and this Assembly is insulting. It has undermined the very health and safety of our nation, which is, indeed, the primary responsibility of leadership. You have failed. Both you and the Finance Minister should have done the decent thing and resigned.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): As a result of the earlier intervention, I have been able to reallocate the 10 extra minutes that Mrs O'Neill would have had if she had been speaking as deputy First Minister. That will allow me to bring in extra Members to speak. I will be able to bring in at least two Members from the minor parties to make a contribution towards the end of the debate. I thank those who have not used their full allocation. Again, that has helped me.

Ms Armstrong: I will be the only Member to speak on behalf of the Alliance Party. We wish our message to be clear and concise. First, I want to pass on my condolences to Mr Storey's family. Grieving is, at any time, difficult, but to have your loved one's funeral be the subject of such intense public and political scrutiny must be very difficult for the family.

Many of us have made sacrifices throughout lockdown. Rules stopped us from attending wakes and funerals and from comforting family at the saddest of times. The rules stop us from visiting seriously ill family members in hospitals. The rules are difficult, but the public took on board those regulations and guidelines, keeping the R number down and the spread of COVID-19 limited. To everyone who complied with and upheld those rules: thank you. It has been really hard. Your actions have helped to save lives.

Sadly, we are not free from this awful virus yet, and, having recognised the public sacrifices, I come to my second point. Alliance recognises and understands why there has been such public outrage and anger expressed as a result of what took place on 30 June. The Alliance Party contends that Sinn Féin did not act in accordance with the health regulations, but I am not going to pick over the details of what took place. It is sufficient to say that others are able to wait until it is safe to come together to remember a member of their family who died during the pandemic. They are not risking having gatherings now.

While I accept that the deputy First Minister has apologised for hurt that families may have felt, both she and Sinn Féin need to go further. We have been through so much over the past number of years. Unlike RHI, COVID-19 has touched every single person and family across this place. This crisis is personal. When anyone breaks the rules, it is personal and it hits everyone, and everyone was looking to government here to lead us out of this crisis. Until 30 June, as others have said, the Executive's messaging was working. It was collegiate. It was finally providing the public with confidence that the First Minister and deputy First Minister were working together, and the Executive were working together. However, following the actions of 30 June, that collegiate approach appears to have fallen apart.

I really do not know how the afternoon podium announcements will be accepted or believed again. How many times have each of us heard the words, "Why should I? Why should I stick to the rules now?"? We need to rebuild the public's trust and to do all that we can to bring the public with us as we all work through this crisis and the difficulties that we are yet to face. Those difficulties include the end of the furlough scheme. We will see more businesses struggle and people will lose their jobs. As discussed in the previous motion, we have carers at breaking point, and who need services reinstated, before they collapse. We have Brexit and the impacts that that will bring. We could face a second spike as has happened elsewhere; Leicester, Melbourne and across Spain. While the public are tired of lockdown and making sacrifices, the virus is not tired. It is still a threat to every person and that is why we need the public to get back to believing the message of social distancing, washing hands and keeping safe. It is still as important now as it was in March.

Before this crisis, many in the Chamber were involved in the New Decade, New Approach negotiations and agreed to enter the Executive on the basis of a better way of working together. I am glad to hear today that there has been an announcement of the nomination of Mr Paul Kennedy to the Standards Commissioner role that will come into place and that we will be talking about that here on 21 July. That is one of the mechanisms that we needed to come out of New Decade, New Approach. Our way of governing relies on trust and confidence. Our Government is all or nothing. It is either pull the place down or get on with it. Sadly, there is no intermediate process to work through the issue created by the actions on 30 June. There is only one viable option available here. While some want to see the end of the Assembly, the rest of us are here to serve the public, to take difficult decisions and to work together to get out of this crisis. To do so, we ask Sinn Féin to reflect on the damage done, and in the best interests of all citizens, to recognise and own the issue that they created and to apologise.

Mr Storey: Thank you Mr Temporary Speaker. As I rise to speak in the debate, I do so ever conscious that there is a family who grieve the passing of a loved one. I also do it in the light of what the scriptures tell us in those words that are often repeated:

"It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment."

Members, we will all one day, when we pass this scene of time, not be held accountable to this Assembly, but to the judge of all the earth.

As we come to the debate, as Mr McCrossan adequately put it, the issue is not the passing of Mr Storey. The issue is what happened and the actions of the deputy First Minister and others. I wonder, in the House and among the people who are watching, should anybody be surprised? Did it come as a shock that we had, in the deputy First Minister and others, such a display that really said to the people of Northern Ireland and further afield that their republicanism, its ideology and all that it is to them is more important than the law? It is more important than doing what we said must be done for many weeks. We should not be surprised by double standards and doublespeak from the party opposite. We, and I, have suffered as a result of coming to this House. I have lost good friends who, still to this day, are opposed to our coming into Government with Sinn Féin.

The scripture says, ultimately:

"by their fruits ye shall know them."

What is in a person's heart will ultimately be displayed in their actions and in what they do. Let us remember that the former leader of the republican party denied that he was even in the IRA. How insulting to the intelligence of the people of Northern Ireland can you be? What can we say of the families of the Disappeared? What can we say of the litany of families who have grieved for many, many years because of the actions of republicans? They have never once said where those people are, with the exception of Jean McConville, and that forever will hang over the head of republicanism as a shame and a disgrace.

The motion refers to

"the immense sacrifices that people, families and communities have made".

Mr Stalford: I appreciate the Member's giving way. On 23 May, the deputy First Minister said:

"The role of every member of society is still crucial on the journey towards recovery. The better we all follow the advice" —

all follow the advice —

"and regulations that are in place, the sooner we can come out the other side of this together."

Does the Member agree that one party decided to come out of the other side of it quicker than the rest of us?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Storey: Yes, and I thank you for that. We have many quotes from the deputy First Minister. I noticed a quote in the 'Belfast Telegraph' prior to Mother's Day. She rightly, on that occasion, determined that, because of the circumstances, Mother's Day would be different for those who had the joy of being able to celebrate with their mother. However, I want to take you to a family in my constituency — a neighbour of mine — who wrote to me on the following day. This is what he said:

"As I said earlier, this whole saga has been made quite personal to me and my family. I buried my father at Toberkeigh Presbyterian Church on Monday 15 June. He'd been suffering from dementia for a number of years. In his final three weeks, we had to admit him to Causeway Hospital as he had taken an infection. We couldn't see him for over two weeks. When we finally got him home, unfortunately he passed away within two days. We were all well aware of the circumstances surrounding COVID-19 and the issues it was creating for families of the bereaved. We adhered to every single element of the legislation as described by the undertakers. Yes, we were disappointed dad couldn't be given the send-off he richly deserved. It hurt. However" —

I want the Members opposite to listen to this; not only to hear, but to listen:

"It hurt. However, it hasn't hurt anything like the pain we have felt when watching what unfolded at yesterday's republican funeral. It's an absolute outrage, and I'm livid as I write this to you, Mervyn. For there to be one rule for one and not the other is an absolute disgrace."

Mr Temporary Speaker, there are questions for the PSNI, and, tomorrow morning, I, along with the First Minister, will meet the police in relation to those questions.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Can the Member bring his remarks to a close, please.

Mr Storey: There are questions for the Church authorities. There are questions for Belfast City Council. I say to the deputy First Minister in the House tonight: there are questions that you must answer, and the best way that you will answer them is by your actions. I think that those actions are to leave the office that you currently hold.

Mr Sheehan: I want first of all to declare an interest. Ba chara de mo chuid é Bobby Storey, agus tá me iontach, iontach bródúil é sin a rá anseo anocht. Bobby Storey was a good friend of mine. I am very, very proud to say that here tonight, and I am conscious that there is a grieving family out there — in fact, two families, the Storeys and the Pickerings. I am also conscious that many people who have lost loved ones during the pandemic are also grieving. Bobby was the third friend of mine to die since COVID-19 arrived on our shores, and, on each occasion, the regulations were completely different.

Sometimes, I think that people are trying to compare apples with pears, and that is not fair. I wonder, sometimes, whether some representatives are exploiting some people's emotions.

6.45 pm

I knew Bobby Storey for almost 45 years. I was with him in the army, in prison and in Sinn Féin. Bobby Storey did not go out to seek conflict; conflict came to him as a young teenage boy, when his family were driven from their home in north Belfast. That is something that Bobby Sands and I shared with him. The three of us grew up in unionist areas with unionist friends and were driven from our homes because of the sectarian nature of the state. That is something that unionists should take cognisance of.

Mr Stalford: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

Mr Sheehan: Whatever —.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I am sorry, Mr Sheehan. Mr Stalford has a point of order.

Mr Stalford: You will be aware of the content of the motion, which relates to breaches by Ministers. It does not relate to anything that Mr Sheehan has said thus far. Could you instruct him to direct his comments to the content of the motion?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I was listening carefully to Mr Sheehan to see whether he was going to come back to the motion, which, of course, is about the funeral and the activities surrounding it. I urge him to do so.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a Leas-Cheann Comhairle Sealadach. Of course, this is about the funeral. It is entirely about the funeral, even though Daniel McCrossan and Mervyn Storey have both said that it is not about the funeral. It is about Bobby Storey. Bobby Storey was a man who did not do anything half-heartedly. When he set his mind to something, he went and did it and he gave it his full commitment, whether that was as an IRA volunteer, as a prisoner trying to escape or as someone who was heavily involved in the peace process. What debates such as this do is that they overshadow the contribution that Bobby Storey made to peace in this country. I was with him in the H-blocks in the early '90s when we discussed every twist and turn of the peace process. When Bobby was released, in May 1994, he immediately joined the leadership and began selling the prospect of peace to IRA volunteers not as an enforcer but as a convincer, someone who debated and argued with IRA volunteers and convinced them that there was an alternative to armed struggle. The reason he was able to do that was that he was someone who led from the front. He was meticulous in his planning, and he was fearless. That is why he got the support of IRA volunteers.

Unfortunately, republican funerals have been the subject of attack on many occasions. I remember that Francis Hughes's body was hijacked by the RUC when the family wanted to process along the Falls Road. I was at Larry Marley's funeral when it was attacked and mourners batoned by the RUC and when plastic bullets were fired at mourners at Finbarr McKenna's funeral. I was also in Milltown when Michael Stone attacked the cortège.

Mr Lyons: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker.

Mr Sheehan: I want to come to —.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Sheehan, you will not lose any time. Mr Lyons has a point of order.

Mr Lyons: I have already listened to Mr Sheehan in the Executive Office Committee glorifying terrorism. We have it again today in the Chamber. Surely it is wrong of us to come out with comments like that, which are clearly the glorification of terrorism.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Sheehan, I reminded you earlier that the motion is about the events of last week. I have given you a fair degree of latitude to deal with the motion. I have been very lenient, and I think that you should now move on to the subject that is under debate.

Mr Sheehan: OK. Go raibh maith agat.

In the closing moments, I want to respond to Mr Aiken, who talked in dulcet tones about the concern that he has for grieving families. Yet, he was happy to retweet a vile and despicable tweet the other night that said of Bobby Storey's death that it was one of his rare propaganda mistakes. Has he been underwater for so long that he has lost all his human decency? He has forgotten the age-old tradition of not speaking ill of the dead. I wonder whether Mr Aiken will retract that and apologise to the Storey family.

Mr Buckley: "The rules are there for a reason. Everybody needs to follow the rules. No one is exempt from the rules. We are all being asked to do difficult things right now, but we are being asked to do them to save lives."

That was deputy First Minister Michelle O'Neill on 9 April 2020.

"We have to send a message very clearly that by gathering in such big crowds we are actually spreading the virus, and, ultimately, that's killing people".

Deputy First Minister Michelle O'Neill, 4 June. The public rightly ask and I ask today, "What deputy First Minister O'Neill do we have in the House today?". What Sinn Féin do we have with us in the House today? Do we have the one who rubber-stamped the coronavirus regulations? Is it the one who stood upstairs preaching the message previously outlined to the Northern Irish public? Is it the one who called on businesses — named and shamed them — saying that she would close them down if they did not follow or dared to breach the regulations that she had put in place? Or is it the one who, last Tuesday, allowed the mask of respect, integrity and equality to slip from her face as she blatantly breached the regulations that she helped to set? Throughout COVID-19, we have asked people to make life-altering sacrifices, and yet Sinn Féin believe that the standards that apply to ordinary people in this country should not apply to them. In a truly free and fair society, everybody must be equal under the law and equally subject to the law, and that point goes to the heart of the huge anger that we see at this time throughout this country.

Northern Ireland's success in combating COVID-19 has been centred on the foundation of public and household support for the laws and guidance introduced —.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Buckley: Absolutely.

Mr Stalford: The Member will be aware of the Members' code of conduct. We all signed up to it when we became Members here. It says:

"Members shall base their conduct on a consideration of the public interest, avoid conflict between personal interest and the public interest and resolve any conflict between the two, at once, and in favour of the public interest."

Those are the rules by which our people have been abiding. Seemingly, drawn from the Members' code of conduct, the deputy First Minister and her party do not think that they apply to them.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): You have an extra minute, Mr Buckley.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member, and I put firmly on the record, as I have done before, that Sinn Féin Ministers and Members are in breach of both ministerial and Members' codes of conduct. You have rightly outlined that point. However, it is clear that members of Sinn Féin consider themselves to be above the shared effort and sacrifice made by the country throughout this difficult period.

Grieving is universal. We are all human, and we will all be capable of making mistakes. No one, inside or outside the House, is infallible. However, let me be clear: this was no mistake. It was a premeditated, concerted effort by the Sinn Féin officials and hierarchy to bypass the law and place a hierarchy of grieving. Last week, I raised the conduct of five MLAs who were in attendance to the attention of an incoming commissioner — I am glad that someone will be appointed soon — but I am afraid that I will have to correct the record because it has now been brought to my attention and become apparent that some 10-plus MLAs were in attendance at the funeral of Bobby Storey. The deputy First Minister may not be able to bring herself to apologise, but she cannot escape the reality. The reality is that there is widespread outrage towards her and her party colleagues.

There are many questions following the Bobby Storey funeral to which the Northern Ireland public rightly deserve answers. What prior contact was made between Sinn Féin personnel and the PSNI in the facilitation of Mr Storey's funeral? What made Bobby Storey's funeral any different to Belfast City Council from every other funeral or cremation within its jurisdiction throughout the COVID-19 period?

This is more than error of judgement. You have acquiesced to a hierarchy of mourning and robbed families of the opportunity to say goodbye to loved ones. The entire episode has undoubtedly brought into question the credibility of the deputy First Minister. That has been summed up by her failure to take responsibility for her actions and apologise for the hurt caused. If the deputy First Minister wants to restore any sense of credibility, she should consider her position and resign. This question has been asked time and time again: if the author of the rules does not feel bound to uphold them, why should anyone else?

In closing, I assert that two wrongs do not make a right. I appeal to all those who may feel that an appropriate reaction to this blatant breach is to disregard the regulations themselves. Please do not. Keep the attention where it deserves to be. The lives of your loved ones could depend on it.

Mr O'Dowd: I, too, add my sympathies to Teresa and the Pickering and Storey families. I welcome the belated acceptance of some in the House that there is grief in this story, though it has been a long time coming.

It is worth noting that, when the MLAs who signed the motion drafted it, none of them thought, "Will we speak to Sinn Féin to see if we can come forward with a motion that will give confidence to the public that we claim to be speaking on behalf of? Will we try to bring forward motion" —

Dr Aiken: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Dowd: Maybe later on.

"Will we speak to that party and try to put forward a voice that confirms the COVID-19 message as it is today?". None of that happened. I accept that the 37 MLAs who signed the motion are perfectly entitled to do so, but there is no attempt here to move forward. There is, perhaps, an attempt by some to score political points. There is an attempt to use the old battleground between republicanism and unionism. For the record, Mr Storey, it is as difficult for republicans to share power with your party as it is for you to share power with us. We accept that.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No. I will not give way this time.

We have all made sacrifices to advance the peace process, and I acknowledge all sides in that.

I do not judge anybody on this point, but, when I look down the list of the 37 MLAs who signed the motion and look around the Chamber at those who are present and those who are not present, I know that there are Members who attended large funerals. I know that there are Members who, as neighbours, friends and constituency representatives, stepped out and offered sympathy to families whom they know at very difficult times. I know that. I do not pass any judgement on them for that. They are human. They did what they had to do at that time. I know that a Member who has called for the resignation of the joint First Minister today joined with a large crowd because he thought that that was the right thing to do. If I had been in his constituency at that time, I probably would have done the same thing. What I do judge is the blatant hypocrisy of those who have signed the motion. Some of those who have spoken and some of those —

Mr Buckley: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. It is being insinuated that some Members are not present in the Chamber because they are potentially in breach of regulations themselves. Would you not make a ruling? Because of COVID regulations, not every Member can be in the Chamber right now, so it is unfair for them to be criticised.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I do not think that that is a point of order, Mr Buckley, but you have made your point.

Mr O'Dowd: I am conscious of the time that he used up, Mr Temporary Speaker.

I judge them on the blatant hypocrisy of their position. I have not suggested that people are not here because they may have breached the regulations. It is worth pointing out, folks, that the motion does not refer to the breach of regulations.

The motion does not refer to the breach of regulations, so be aware of what you are voting for. The public will make up their minds on these things and the public will not be fooled by those who are presenting themselves as the defenders of right or wrong, because the public will also have seen you at these large gatherings, funerals etc. I am sure that the public appreciated that you were there offering your sympathy and that human connection that we, as elected representatives, often have to do.

I also want to reflect on some of the messages from the opposite Benches, which are that the joint First Minister should resign. The motion that Members have signed does not call for a resignation. There is a motion floating about the Building that does call for her resignation, but the Members opposite have not signed it, so they should stop sending out false messages to their base. There is no motion before the Assembly in relation to the breach of regulations. There is no motion before the Assembly calling for the joint First Minister to resign. I know that those make good sound pops for the media, or whatever it may be, but, again, the public — your constituents — will know exactly what you tabled today.

I will return to the issue of respect. I welcome the fact that there has been belated acknowledgement of Bobby's passing, but I put on record my disbelief at the commentary of the leader of the SDLP about comments from my colleague Martina Anderson at the Committee for the Executive Office when she was talking about the death of her friend. The leader of the SDLP referred to them as "sycophantic drive!". How on earth can anyone refer to someone's comments about their friends, in a moment of grief, as "sycophantic drive!"? I ask for that to be withdrawn.

Mr Aiken, could you look Teresa in the eye or look Bobby's grandchildren —

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member bring his comments to a close, please?

Mr O'Dowd: — in the eye and gloat over his death in the way that you did in your tweets? I ask Mr Aiken to take the opportunity today to express his regret for retweeting the tweet that has caused great offence.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): As I said earlier, Members have kept to time, and I indicated that there are slots for two Members of the minor parties, so I will ask Mr Carroll to speak.

Mr Carroll: We should remember that the Storey family is grieving and we should be considerate of that.

Yesterday, we learned that the deputy First Minister, Michelle O'Neill, has not so much as been contacted by the PSNI. Yet, on the other hand, Black Lives Matter protesters have been fined, cautioned and are being aggressively pursued for prosecution for taking part in socially distanced gatherings on 6 June, and some have had a number of calls and police interviews. This contrast sums up the hypocrisy of the state here, its abuse of power and its discriminatory implementation of the coronavirus regulations.

Just weeks ago, when challenging Black Lives Matter protesters, Michelle O'Neill stated:

"We have to send a message very clearly that by gathering in such a big crowds we're actually spreading the virus, and ultimately that's killing people. So we're asking people to protest in a different way."

As it turned out, those protests, which her party criticised, were safe and did not spread the virus and certainly did not harm anyone, nor did they contribute to an increase in transmission. However, the main point is this: does the deputy First Minister assume that one rule exists for her and another for Black Lives Matter protesters? The hypocrisy is shocking.

From the beginning of the crisis, People Before Profit has insisted that social distancing requires social organising, and any efforts to organise gatherings must be made with the utmost aim of ensuring safety. We urged everyone to follow that approach, even in emotive and difficult circumstances, such as funerals. It is unfortunate that that was not the approach of Michelle O'Neill, as selfies that were released last week proved.

Nonetheless, I avoided jumping on board the chorus of condemnation from the DUP and others as they called on Michelle O'Neill to resign over the funeral attendance last week. In fact, I was dismayed that the parties that refused to call for cautions and fines for Black Lives Matter protesters to be dropped were the same parties that did not bat an eyelid when it came to powerful companies like Bombardier risking workers' health and breaking social-distancing rules by forcing staff back to work before it was safe. They are the same parties that would not do what was necessary when workers were speaking out about unsafe conditions in Moy Park or when care home bosses were telling staff to work without PPE. These are the same parties that have made the argument, time and time again, in the Chamber for kick-starting the economy, without even the semblance of a real test-and-trace system, in their quest to restore the primacy of profits and the market, regardless of the cost to life. The same parties that implemented without question regulations giving the state the apparatus and ability to police ordinary people and workers but not bosses or Ministers. The same parties that hypocritically whitewashed the RHI racket.

I want to be very clear: People Before Profit will not play any role in this farce — this hypocrisy — and I believe that that is what our voters expect of us. However, I will say that, clearly, at least eight families —.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Carroll: No, thanks.

At least eight families were treated differently from those who attended the cremation at Roselawn last week. Clearly, and understandably, that compounded their grief. It should never have happened, and it was right for Belfast City Council to apologise. An apology from the deputy First Minister for that would, I believe, go some way to easing the hurt that those families are feeling. However, I also suggest that an apology to Black Lives Matter protesters is needed, not just from the deputy First Minister but from the whole Executive.

It is not surprising to me that this hurt comes off the back of a last-minute regulation change that was hastily and, in my view, undemocratically, pushed through Stormont to change the number of attendees allowed at funerals at the eleventh hour. That is exactly the method that was used to target the Black Lives Matter protesters, who are feeling a sense of injustice. We are told that these last-minute changes are coincidences, but they seem to happen very regularly.

There cannot be one rule for politicians and those in power and another rule for BAME protesters. The fines and threats against Black Lives Matter protesters must be dropped immediately. It is time for the deputy First Minister, and all Executive Ministers, to support this call. It is greatly disappointing that my amendment, which would have refocused the motion to that end, was not selected for debate, because the truth is that the entire Executive owe an apology to the BAME community for its disgraceful treatment in recent weeks.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I should have explained that the motion relates to an incident in Mr Carroll's constituency, which is why he got that particular speaking slot.

Mr Chambers: The leader of Sinn Féin, Mary Lou McDonald, was clear when she said that the funeral of Bobby Storey was meticulously organised. It is against that backdrop and in the context of those words that we must couch all our remarks on that funeral. The responsibility for the clear, deliberate breaches of the regulations and guidance issued by the Executive, as well as the attendance and behaviour of Sinn Féin Ministers and MLAs, sits with the deputy First Minister. Her actions and words have damaged the credibility of the Executive, underlined her clear lack of integrity and undermined her moral authority and that of the whole Executive Office.

This funeral and the grief of the Storey family, which I acknowledge, are centre stage only because some people, who should have known better, were not prepared to make the same sacrifices as have been made by hundreds of families throughout Northern Ireland in how they buried loved ones. On 10 May, the deputy First Minister said during a daily update:

"We also know that recovery will only happen one step at a time, to do otherwise risks undermining the sacrifices people have already made and increases the risk of a second spike in the future."

However, even before the funeral, there were significant breaches of the guidelines, which stated that wakes should not be held. There was a wake for Mr Storey, and Sinn Féin MLAs attended. Did the deputy First Minister attend? Sinn Féin MLAs were involved in large-scale gatherings some days before the funeral, when Mr Storey's remains were brought home to his family. At the daily update on 11 June, the deputy First Minister said:

"However, with this freedom comes a serious responsibility for us all to follow the public health advice and guidelines to the letter."

Before the funeral, there was a breach of the advice that funeral arrangements should not be advertised, in order to curtail the numbers attending. Sinn Féin's official Facebook page, the MP Paul Maskey, the Assembly Speaker, Mr Alex Maskey, and multiple other party figures were among those openly publishing the funeral timings and route on social media. At the time, the Executive were telling the public that only 10 people could attend a funeral, and the Church authorities involved have confirmed that that was the latest Stormont guidance that they had. That night, the advice on the Executive website upped that number to 30, but that was after the funeral.

The guidance also said that there should be no gatherings after funerals, yet there are images of several such gatherings, some of them involving prominent Sinn Féin politicians. The guidance also states that coffin lifts should not take place unless the pall-bearers all reside in the same house, yet Mr Storey's coffin was carried by several individuals, including Gerry Adams.

On 29 June, the day before the funeral, the deputy First Minister said:

"The social distancing guidance has not been reduced to one metre. Two metres is still the optimum distance that everyone should try to adhere to in terms of social distancing."

Published selfies that Mr Stalford referred to suggest that social distancing went out the window, and the fact that a sound system was in place in Milltown cemetery suggests that the organisers expected large numbers to turn up.

Perhaps the most telling statement from the deputy First Minister was made before the Black Lives Matter protest. Mr Stalford quoted it, and I will quote it again. She was reported as saying:

"We have to send a message very clearly that by gathering in such a big crowds we're actually spreading the virus, and ultimately that's killing people".

How can the deputy First Minister reconcile saying those words in the light of what we all witnessed last week? It is an undisputable example of "Don't do as I do but do as I tell you". I have to put on record that I have not heard anything in the House tonight that justifies the deliberate breaches of the regulations that are designed to save lives.

Tuesday 7 July 2020

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Butler has very kindly agreed to delete his name from the list to allow others in, and we are extremely grateful for that.

Mr Easton: I am ashamed to be part of the Assembly today, having to debate what is the biggest scandal involving multiple Members of the Assembly. We are not here today because it is an orange or green issue — and it is not. It is to do with breaking the law and the rules of the Assembly. We are here today because we need to get to the bottom of why the deputy First Minister, the Finance Minister and at least five other MLAs that we know of, although that seems to be going up by the minute, felt the need to abandon the public health measures that they insisted every other citizen must adopt to help save lives in our collective partnership to beat the COVID-19 pandemic.

Let us look at the facts and the evidence. I will mention some comments that have been made. Even before the funeral, there was a significant breach of the guidelines, which state that wakes should not be held. The guidelines state that no remains should be taken home to rest. However, Sinn Féin MLAs Martina Anderson and Gerry Kelly were involved in large-scale gatherings days before the funeral. There was a breach of the advice that, in order to curtail numbers, funeral arrangements should not be advertised. Sinn Féin's official Belfast Facebook page quoted MP Paul Maskey, Assembly Speaker, Alex Maskey MLA, and multiple other party figures amongst those giving funeral timings and routes.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Easton: Yes.

Mr Buckley: The Members' code of conduct states:

"Members shall at all times conduct themselves in a manner which will tend to maintain and strengthen the public's trust and confidence in the integrity of the Assembly and never undertake any action which would bring the Assembly into disrepute."

Does he believe that that action brought the Assembly into disrepute?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): You have an extra minute, Mr Easton.

Mr Easton: Thank you. I totally believe that the Assembly has been brought into disrepute.

Video footage and photographic evidence shows mass breaching of social distancing amongst crowds. At least 1,800 uniformed republicans stood along the side of the road in expectation of a crowd and set up a public address system in the cemetery, something demonstrably unnecessary when 30 people are meant to attend a funeral.

Mrs O'Neill specifically breached social distancing by standing to get a selfie. However, that was the fault of a blink of an eye. How many blinks of eyes did she have that day? The guidance says that there should be no gatherings after funerals, yet there are images of several such gatherings, some of them involving prominent Sinn Féin politicians, such as Seán Lynch MLA having a selfie with 40 individuals at the Felons Club.

The guidance states that it is also recommended that coffin lifts should not take place unless pall-bearers all reside in the same house, yet the coffin was carried by several individuals. Even at the service, over 100 people attended the mass when only 30 are allowed to attend.

7.15 pm

Mr Stalford: I appreciate the Member's giving way. Does he recall a story in the 'Belfast Telegraph' on 27 March, in which the deputy First Minister told Ulster Carpets that it should close to protect employees during the coronavirus outbreak? Why should profitable businesses be forced to close if those rules do not apply when it comes to republican funerals?

Mr Easton: I thank the Member for his comments. We all must abide by the law. We all must stick to the law. There can be no differences, whether you are member of Sinn Féin or anybody else.

The rule of law has been broken, and the PSNI must investigate. The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020 have been broken, as has the code of conduct for Members. In addition, the deputy First Minister has broken the ministerial code and her Pledge of Office. That must be investigated by the incoming Assembly Commissioner for Standards. However, despite the clear evidence, the deputy First Minister has not accepted that she or her party have broken any rules, disregarding her own message. I quote her:

"We are in difficult times but none of us are exempt from these regulations."

Just you, deputy First Minister, and your party, Sinn Féin.

During a Black Lives Matter protest, protesters were given fines by the PSNI. Mrs O'Neill admonished the protesters, saying that they were:

"spreading the virus and actually that's killing people".

I put it to you, deputy First Minister, that, by attending that funeral, you and your colleagues did exactly the same thing; spreading the virus, and "actually that's killing people", by facilitating and encouraging crowds.

Does the deputy First Minister realise how she has made a mockery of the Assembly? Why would anyone outside the Assembly even begin to take us seriously after her and her party's actions? Does she realise or even care that 826 people have died so far because of the coronavirus pandemic? The families and friends of those 826 people have not been able to go to the funerals of their loved ones. They have made that sacrifice for the health and well-being of the people of Northern Ireland. They are all hurting.

Mr Butler: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he recognise that that is not just the case in respect of those who have died from coronavirus? There were, perhaps, 4,500 or 5,000 deaths between the beginning of April and the end of June, and all the bereaved deserved the right to have a funeral and pay their respects.

Mr Easton: I thank the Member for his comments. I agree totally. Many people have suffered due to the actions of the deputy First Minister and her party.

This week has shown that ordinary members of the public have been treated by a different standard from Sinn Féin, and that anger stretches far beyond those who disagree with Sinn Féin's politics. The funeral points to the remarkable hold that old IRA veterans have on Sinn Féin, even forcing its current leadership, who have no IRA background, into actions that, they must have known, would not only be politically indefensible but a danger to public life.

Then, we have the debacle of what happened at Roselawn. I do not have time to go into it, but it is clear that Belfast City Council and the PSNI have questions to answer about what they knew in advance of the funeral taking place and why it was allowed to go ahead in the fashion that it did.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Easton: Why were families denied access and the right to have their loved ones cremated? I want to make it clear that no family or person should be treated differently.

In conclusion —.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I ask the Member to conclude, please.

Mr Easton: Sorry. I ask the deputy First Minister to consider her position and resign until all investigations are concluded.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I call Mr Jim Allister. I hope that we will have time for Ms Sugden as well. We will see how things go.

Mr Allister: Sinn Féin, by their actions, never mind their words, have been laughing in the faces of grieving families across the Province, whether they were Protestant, Catholic, unionist or nationalist. Sinn Féin, in the office that they hold, decreed what the regulations would contain. They were very clear. Regulation 5(2)(g), which was in full operation in all its parts last Tuesday, is abundantly clear: you could not attend the funerals of your friends. The deputy First Minister told us, of course, that there were no exemptions to the regulations, yet she proceeded to tell us that she would never apologise for attending the funeral of a friend.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: She made the regulations that said you could not attend the funeral of a friend. I will give way.

Mr Stalford: The Member will recall that, when the deputy First Minister appeared in front of the Executive Office Committee, I asked her whether it was really so important for her to attend the funeral. One of the reasons that was given was that she was a political leader. Does the Member agree that that is a perfect example of politicians putting themselves above the people?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): You have one extra minute, Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: Thank you. Yes, it is beyond doubt that Sinn Féin think that they are above the law. They give some weasel-word apology, some carefully crafted words in Connolly House that convey no apology whatever. Of course, we have experience of that. One of the Members listed in the motion is Minister Murphy. We all know the cruelty with which he treated Paul Quinn's family by refusing to utter the words. Why is that? It is for the reason that every member of Sinn Féin has refused to back off this issue. It is because the loyalty of the deputy First Minister and all the rest of them is not to these institutions; it is not to this place. Their loyalty is a fidelity to the republican movement. That is their first call of loyalty. Indeed, the Sinn Féin ideology is that they are a direct lineal succession of the provisional Government of 1916 and the 1918 Dáil. They say, in fact, that the IRA is the lawful authority.

Mr Sheehan: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. I am not sure where that comes into the motion. I did not hear any mention of the first Dáil.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Allister will come back to the motion very quickly.

Mr Allister: I have made it abundantly clear that we are here because of Sinn Féin's arrogance and refusal to face up to and apologise for putting themselves in a position where they declared to all that they were above the law. I have just recited the reason why Sinn Féin — Mr Sheehan included — think that they are beyond the law. Their loyalty is to a different law: that of the republican movement.

The people who made the law are the people whom we now find in breach. They say, "Oh, we have apologised". No, they have not. They are weasel words. At best, Ms O'Neill said that she was sorry that families across the country had been subjected to the difficulties of the regulations. She was sorry if they were hurt by that, but she was not sorry for doing what she did. She underscored that by saying, "I do not apologise. I will never apologise for attending the funeral of a friend". It is like the apology that we got about the Troubles: "We are sorry so many people died, but the IRA's campaign was justified". That is not an apology. It is the same weasel words here.

I said that they were laughing in the face of grieving families, but they are also laughing in the face of the Assembly, because they know that the Assembly has not got the will to do anything about it.

Miss Woods: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: In a moment.

Look at the motion: the Assembly "expresses disappointment". I am disappointed that it was raining this morning. There is no censure in disappointment. Of course, that gives Sinn Féin more reason to laugh at the Assembly, because they know that the absurdity of the arrangements mean that they can. Three quarters of the Executive are disappointed in them, but they know that they can cling to office. Why? Because of the absurd situation of mandatory coalition, which robs the House of the right of true sanction and proper control and proper respect to all of those at whom Sinn Féin are laughing.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member bring his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Allister: That is the reality of it. The challenge to the House is this: is this debate just about "sound and fury, signifying nothing", or will Members do something about it? That is the challenge.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Further to the point of order raised by Mr Allister at the start of this item of business, I can confirm that the private office confirmed this morning that she would be responding in her capacity as deputy First Minister. However, as Mrs O'Neill has clarified that she is responding to the debate as an MLA, she has five minutes in which to do so.

Tuesday 7 July 2020

Mrs O'Neill: I confirm again that I am speaking as an MLA. First, a lot has been said over the past week since the untimely death of Bobby Storey and my attendance at his funeral. Unfortunately, there has been considerable controversy over my decision to attend the funeral. As a Member of the legislative Assembly, I have taken every opportunity to set out my position: at the scrutiny Committee last week, at the Executive Committee, at the party leaders' forum on Friday past and in the Chamber yesterday and earlier today.

At the forefront of my mind are all the families who are grieving and all those who have lost loved ones over the course of the COVID-19 pandemic, of whom there are many. I have listened carefully to the voices of those who have lost loved ones. Every one of those situations is a tragedy in its own right. The untimely loss of a loved one is always very difficult, and there are no words that can relate to the scale of the human tragedy of all of those who have lost someone. All grief is the same.

I am particularly concerned that grieving families who have lost a loved one during the pandemic have had their heartache compounded by the necessary restrictions that were in place at points in time over the past few months. They were not able to have their family and friends there to support them and help them through their mourning, and their grief has been hugely difficult. I realise that grieving families have experienced more hurt over the past week; indeed, many MLAs have spoken this evening about different families. We heard about Mervyn's neighbour and John Dallat's family. Órlaithí talked about Bobby's family. All of those families have been really hurt, and I am sorry that that is the case. With hand on heart, I can say that I would always apologise for any unintended hurt that was caused. It was not and would never be my intention to hurt anybody in society.

I was invited, in my capacity as deputy leader of Sinn Féin, to attend the requiem mass, join the immediate family in the funeral cortège and attend the ceremony at Milltown. The personal responsibility on me was to ensure that my actions were in compliance with the regulations and the guidance, which I take very seriously. I am satisfied that I acted responsibly in the church, as part of a limited group of no more than 30 people as part of the cortège and at the ceremony in Milltown, where I paid my respects. At no stage did I seek to give offence to anyone, including the Chamber, nor would I ever seek to do so.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mrs O'Neill: I will make my statement, thank you.

I take very seriously my responsibilities as a public office holder and as deputy First Minister and joint head of government. I assure Members that I have acted in accordance with those responsibilities. While the legislator is responsible for the regulations during this emergency period, it is the PSNI that is responsible for their enforcement. I understand that the PSNI will review the events of that day and consider any suspected breaches of the health regulations.

It is unfortunate that this matter has divided the Executive and Assembly that many of us worked so hard to restore in order to get on with delivering public services to the public whom we serve. We have huge challenges before us and important work to do, and I firmly believe that all parties of the Executive are committed to that and to ensuring that we have stable power-sharing after three years without a functioning Government. We have made good progress on all of that despite all of the difficulties. My commitment is to continue that work.

Since the middle of March, the management of the response to the COVID-19 pandemic has been the Executive's number-one priority, and our objective throughout has been to help keep people safe and support those who have faced real hardship as a result of the pandemic. That has involved a huge effort from all involved, including our health and social care workers, teachers, essential retail staff, those who provide key local government services, industry and employee representatives, church leaders and many more. There are people in every sector — public, private and community and voluntary — who had to abruptly stop their normal work and practices to join the fight against COVID-19 and help manage the risks and mitigate the impact of the pandemic.

The progress that has been achieved is entirely due to the support and concerted effort of everyone. As a result, we have now reached a key turning point in the management of the crisis, where the Executive's attention is able to move from purely controlling the public health response towards planning for economic health and societal recovery instead.

7.30 pm

We have come a long way in a very short time. The fact that we are now able to reverse our way carefully out of the restrictions represents huge progress. COVID-19 is still with us, and I will continue to lead us through this and into the recovery, where we are looking beyond the response phase towards the actions that will be needed to effect robust and sustainable recovery, rebuild public services and restore more ways of living. There are many challenges facing us, and, in moving forward, we also need to pick up on the urgent priorities and plans in other important areas unconnected to COVID-19 —

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I ask the Member to bring her remarks to a close, please.

Mrs O'Neill: — including the key issues contained in New Decade, New Approach, on the basis of which these institutions of the Good Friday Agreement were restored back in January.

Mr Allister: Resign.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I have no intention of resigning, Mr Allister, I can assure you. [Laughter.]

Mr McGrath: None of us would want to see you resigning from your role, Mr Temporary Speaker.

I thank Members for their contribution to today's debate. The issue is incredibly sensitive, and I recognise the passion with which Members have spoken about their experience of loss and the experiences of their constituents. We have asked people to make immense sacrifices over the past few months, particularly during periods of trauma and grief, and that has been reflected in the testimony that we have heard today.

The motion is not, as some may have characterised it, about political point-scoring. Nor is it about the character or actions of the man whose funeral members of our Executive attended last week, and we should acknowledge the pain of that grieving family. It is about the serious breach of trust that has taken place between Ministers and members of the public, who were told that their ability to mourn had to be constrained to protect others. It is about the failure to acknowledge that, by breaching the public health guidelines that the Executive issued, their Ministers have critically undermined their own authority. It is about the basic failure to acknowledge that what they did was wrong and that they should apologise.

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for giving way. A Commissioner for Standards is due to be appointed soon. Does the Member agree with me that the First Minister and the deputy First Minister will surely have to move swiftly to appoint the other members of the panel for ministerial standards? Without that happening, there is no prospect of accountability in this Assembly, and we will continue to move from one political crisis to another.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for her contribution. Yes, it is important that we have all the apparatus of the Executive and the Assembly in place so that they can fulfil all their responsibilities.

We have not come to the Chamber today seeking to tear down the institutions. We have not sought to exclude Ministers from office. What we are asking for is an acknowledgment of the pain that their actions have caused and an apology for carrying out those actions, because, to date, the denials and the doubling-down has sapped more and more authority from the deputy First Minister. This is about restoring the credibility of our public health advice and allowing us to keep the public with us as we seek to keep them safe.

Ms Sugden: I appreciate the Member's giving way. I ask those who put their name to the motion this: if the deputy First Minister does not apologise as asked, what are the next steps? What do those parties intend to do?

Mr McGrath: We will give that consideration after we have concluded the debate this evening.

It is simply no longer credible for the deputy First Minister to come in here and deny that she breached the public health guidance. That is beyond doubt. A half-apology that expresses regret "if" people were hurt is no longer acceptable. There is no "if". People in every community, from every background, were hurt seeing hundreds of people, led by our joint First Minister, at that funeral, when so many were laid to rest without their close family present.

Since it has not come from the deputy First Minister so far, let me apologise, on behalf of the Assembly and on behalf of politics here, to those who have been hurt. You have been badly let down by the people who asked you to make unimaginable difficult sacrifices, by people who have since shown themselves incapable of sharing that sacrifice. I am sorry about that.

When the moment came to show solidarity, the message sent out from our joint head of Government is that her movement, her people and her pain is more important than yours, and it is more important than the public health advice that we have issued to keep everyone safe. Coronavirus has ripped the heart out of many families. There have been many direct deaths as a result of the virus — over 550 in the North — and many other untimely deaths or excess deaths that have not been classed as due to coronavirus but are probably due to it in some way.

In total, with the other natural deaths, over 5,000 people have lost their life in the North since the pandemic began and the introduction of the restrictions in March.

Mr Temporary Speaker, those are 5,000 families who are suffering the pain and emotion of a family death, often older people and the lead generation of a family but not always so, and they were told in no uncertain terms that they must stick to the rules. They must abide by the regulations. No deviating from them. All in the interest of public safety. They did the right thing. They stuck by the rules and did it for one reason and one reason only: for the greater good of our community, to stop the spread of the virus and to save lives.

It was not just about the funeral, it was about the whole grieving process for those families because they did what they were told. They had no wakes. They had no visitors to the houses, and they told people that, if they must line the route, they should do it with social distancing in mind. They stuck to the rules for chapels, with significantly smaller numbers than in this case. They took their time slots and followed staff guidelines at the crematorium, and they did not organise after services. Nor did they organise and invite people to the funeral, organise dress codes and set up PA systems so that the obviously expected crowds could hear.

Regulation after regulation was broken. Advice after advice was flouted. Rule after rule was ignored, and then the party wonders what all the worry and concern is about.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes.

Mr Storey: Is it not also the case that we need to put on record that this was not the first republican funeral —.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Can the Member speak into the microphone?

Mr Storey: Apologies, Mr Temporary Speaker.

This was not the first republican funeral at which something like this happened. On four other occasions, there have been clear breaches of the regulations.

Mr McGrath: I am here today to talk about this issue, and I do not want to stray from that.

The decision by Sinn Féin and the wider republican movement has sent a message to the community of the North that they are different, that they are special and that they are the elite. Sinn Féin have lauded themselves as being the anti-establishment party, yet they forget one thing: they are the establishment. They are the elite. They are on high as the joint leaders of Government and have been for 13 years. They have made it to the lofty heights and have chosen to look down on others and say, "Do as we say not as we do", which is more reminiscent of 1990's Tories than any freedom fighter or socialist that I know.

I want to talk about a few of the comments that have been made. In starting, Mr Stalford said that people had stuck to "the letter and spirit" of the guidelines. I have outlined how that has been done, and it is the difference and straying from that that has caused much of the pain. He also correctly highlighted how many people felt that the Executive were working well, pulling in the one direction and reaching out and helping the community. I hope that, if there is an appropriate apology, we can get back to that stage.

Órlaithí Flynn mentioned and detailed how important Mr Storey was to members of Sinn Féin, and I acknowledge that. She also mentioned that when people pass, it is an important loss, and I acknowledge that as well, but I go back to my comment about the 5,000 families who have lost loved ones in the North since the restrictions were introduced. However, there was a difference, and it is the difference here in what happened afterwards that we are referring to and not the loss of the person. Of course, we want to send our condolences to the family.

Daniel McCrossan highlighted how we managed to contain the spread of the disease by sticking to the rules. That was a difficulty, because we feel that when people break the rules, we will see an increase in the spread of coronavirus.

He also mentioned John Dallat and Edwin Poots's father, and we appreciate that those families had to go through difficult times as well.

Mr Sheehan: I thank the Member for giving way. When you talk about "we", do you include Mr Aiken in that, after the re-tweeting of the vile and disgusting tweet that was so hurtful to the Storey and Pickering families? Is he included in that "we", who send out our condolences?

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. I will never support any re-tweet that has been done in a hurtful or harmful way, but I leave it to those individuals to account for their behaviour.

Dr Aiken: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes.

Dr Aiken: Just to clarify for the House, I was re-tweeting something by a Mr Austin Stack. We all, in the House, know Mr Stack's relationship with the republican movement.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. I was going to move on to his intervention and suggest that he had used the word "regret". It was in a different context. However, he mentioned that it is not an issue that is orange and green; this is indeed about right and wrong.

Mr Temporary Speaker, do I get the extra minute that others may have —?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Order. When you sum up, you do not get an extra minute. It is only —.

Mr McGrath: I was chancing [Laughter.]

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I have been around the Building too long to fall for that one [Laughter.] The Member has been very generous, I accept, with interventions, but, unfortunately, he pays the penalty for that. He has lost the opportunity to conclude his speech. No doubt, I will read it in next week's "Down Recorder" anyhow.

I apologise to Claire Sugden and Miss Woods. I tried to make certain that all who wished to speak got a chance to do so. Unfortunately, some Members were very liberal with interventions and we ran out of time. I know how frustrating that can be.

I thank all Members for the tenor and moderation that was shown this afternoon. This could have been a bloodletting session. It could have stoked up difficult emotions, leading up to the period ahead of us. However, in my opinion, everyone put their views forcefully but in a way that, I thought, was responsible. I am extremely grateful to you all for the way in which that occurred.

I suspect that, as I move to the next point, that is where the agreement will end. I will put the Question.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly acknowledges the immense sacrifices that people, families and communities have made during the COVID-19 emergency; pays tribute to those who selflessly prioritised the need to keep each other safe above their own personal needs, particularly during times of trauma, loss and grief; expresses disappointment in the actions of those in ministerial office who breached public guidance and failed to share in the sacrifice that we have asked of others; implores members of the public to stay with us and to continue acting in accordance with the regulations in order to keep each other safe and prevent further deaths; re-commits to upholding the spirit and the letter of the COVID-19 regulations and the related public health guidance; and calls on the deputy First Minister and the Minister of Finance to apologise for their actions, which have caused immense hurt.

Mr Lyons: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. Before any of us came into the House or could take our seats, we had to sign the undertaking that requires us:

"to support the rule of law ... in word and deed and to support all efforts to uphold it".

I do not believe that the glorification of terrorism is in keeping with that undertaking or that trying to justify membership of a proscribed organisation, as Mr Sheehan has done, is in keeping with that. It would be appropriate if a ruling were made on that, so that we do not find ourselves in a position in future where Members of the House can get up and justify membership of a terrorist organisation.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I have no doubt that the honourable Member feels strongly about that point, but it is not, technically, a point of order about the organisation of the debate. However, his views are now on record and perhaps could be referred to another body.

Mr Lyons: Further to that point of order, I would like the Speaker to rule on that. It is a serious issue. I do not just want to put it on the record; I want a ruling. This is very serious.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I will indeed refer it to the Speaker, who, no doubt, is watching this online as we speak. No doubt, he will consider that issue.

Mr Buckley: Further to that point of order, if the Speaker's Office is making a ruling, can we also put it on record that it be forwarded to the incoming Commissioner for Standards of the House?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): It is not the role of the Speaker to refer anything to the Commissioner for Standards, but any individual Member or private individual may refer a matter to the incoming commissioner.

No doubt, Members are aware of what has been said and can take the decisions that, they feel, are appropriate.

There are no other points of order, and the next item on the Order Paper is the Adjournment. I remind Members that there is a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response on Thursday in the Chamber. I believe that the Minister for Communities will be presenting. The next plenary meeting will be on Tuesday 21 July.

Adjourned at 7.45 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 21 July 2020

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before the first item of business, I remind Members that, as the Business Committee is not meeting today, there will be no lunchtime suspension of the Assembly and we will continue on through.

Standing Order 20(1): Suspension

Mr Butler: I beg to move

That Standing Order 20(1) be suspended for 21 July 2020.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Order 20(1) be suspended for 21 July 2020.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards: Appointment

The following motion stood in the Order Paper:

That this Assembly, in accordance with Section 19(1) of the Assembly Members (Independent Financial Review and Standards) Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, appoints Mr Paul Kennedy as the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards. — [Mr Butler.]

Motion not moved.

Executive Committee Business

Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 9) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The next two motions are to approve statutory rules relating to the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations. There will be a single debate on both motions. I will ask the Clerk to read the first motion, and I will then call on the Minister to move it. The Minister will then commence the debate on both motions. When all who wish to speak have done so, I shall put the Question on the first motion. The second motion will then be read into the record, and I will call on the Minister to move it. The Question on that motion will then be put. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Mr Kearney (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): Éirím leis an rún a chur chun cinn. I beg to move

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 9) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate. I call the Minister to open the debate on the motion.

Mr Kearney: There are two motions before the Assembly today, and with your permission I will address both of those in my remarks. I will begin by outlining the changes brought about by these regulations and the reasons behind the Executive's decisions.

First, amendment No 9 contained only one substantive amendment. Regulations 6, 6(a) and 6(b), which place restrictions on gatherings, are amended to allow for gatherings of up to 30 people in public places and outdoors. Allowing up to 30 people who are not members of the same household to meet together outdoors is consistent with step 3 of Executive's approach to decision-making. The Executive considered that this relaxation would offer benefits in terms of personal well-being, the promotion of responsible social interaction and a sense of a gradual return to normality. I am sure that we would all welcome that. It means that, for the first time in many months, our citizens have the opportunity to meet with their friends and family and share time together.

Secondly, amendment No 10 contained a set of substantive amendments that reflect decisions taken by the Executive on 2 July. Those decisions were taken after careful consideration of the available scientific and medical advice, and they are in line with the timetable of indicative dates previously published by the Executive in order to facilitate the reopening of businesses and other services. The amendments include that regulation 5 on restrictions on movements and regulations 6(a) and 6(b) on restrictions on gatherings are amended to permit the reopening of museums, galleries and betting shops from 3 July.

Regulations 5, 6(a) and 6(b) are also amended to permit the reopening of massage, tattooing and piercing businesses from 6 July, and to permit the reopening of spas from 6 July, but not insofar as they provide services relating to water or steam.

Regulations 5, 6(a) and 6(b) are further amended to permit the restricted opening of restaurants and bars in registered clubs from 3 July.

Some changes have also been made for reasons of consistency and clarity. First, the reference in regulation 5 to who might attend a funeral has been removed, now that the number of people permitted to gather outside has been increased. Secondly, a change has been made to regulation 6 to clarify that summer schools and schemes can operate. Thirdly, technical amendments have been made to regulations 3 and 6 to correct the numbering of sub-paragraphs and to clarify that beer gardens can sell and serve alcohol without food.

These relaxations are aimed at boosting well-being and allowing our citizens to re-engage with our tourism, cultural and service infrastructure. They will assist in the restart of the economy by helping to protect the jobs of those who work in those sectors and their wider supply chains, and, importantly, will contribute towards an increased sense of normality.

As I explained before, the Executive will not be rushed into making decisions simply as a result of artificial deadlines or to match decisions taking place in other jurisdictions. As we have discussed in the past, we have come a long way from when the coronavirus restriction regulations were first laid. We have seen great progress as a result of everyone's concerted efforts in the intervening period. Regrettably, other places have not experienced our relative progress to date.

D'éirigh leis na rialacha agus le cur chuige an Fheidmeannais maidir leis na srianta a mhaolú agus tá siad ag obair de réir a chéile. The regulations and the Executive's approach to easing restrictions have worked and are continuing to work. Sábháladh beatha. Lives have been saved. Our health and social care systems have not been overwhelmed. Businesses are beginning to reopen and services are returning. Our citizens for the first time in a long time are beginning to enjoy being able to do more, but it is important to acknowledge that the battle against COVID-19 is far from over. We cannot afford to drop our guard for a moment when it comes to keeping people safe.

All those relaxations were agreed on the basis of the most up to date medical and scientific advice. Crucially, they were adopted with the stipulation that all relevant public guidance and mitigating measures be implemented in advance of those sectors reopening.

I will now take the opportunity to note some of the other changes that have been agreed since the amendment regulations being debated today were laid. On Thursday 9 July, the Executive agreed a range of other measures. Those included the reopening of cinemas, bingo halls, amusement arcades, indoor fitness suites, indoor and outdoor gyms, and playgrounds from 10 July; a return to competitive sporting events without spectators, both at grassroots and professional level, which extends to include horse racing and equestrian competitions, from 11 July; the reopening of libraries from 16 July; the reopening of indoor leisure centres or facilities but not swimming pools from 17 July; and the resumption of indoor wedding, baptism and civil partnership ceremonies, with numbers to be determined by the venue on a risk-assessed basis. The Executive also agreed that the wearing of face coverings on public transport would become mandatory from 10 July, except for people for whom an exemption applies.

Those changes were given effect in the amendment (No. 11) regulations, which were made on 9 July. Members will have an opportunity to debate those measures in due course. We are now at an important point in the course of the COVID-19 pandemic. We are beginning to look beyond the response phase towards the actions that will be needed to secure a robust and sustainable recovery, to rebuild public services and for us to seek to restore more normal ways of living.

Is é dúshlán atá romhainn anois ná teacht ar na bealaí agus na modhanna chun é sin a bhaint amach le go mbeadh muid ábalta ruaig eile den aicid mharfach seo a bhainistiú más gá. The challenge facing us now is to find the ways and means to achieve that whilst managing the risk of a second wave of this deadly virus, were that to transpire. The Executive will therefore be monitoring the impact of all the relaxations very carefully. We are prepared to reintroduce restrictions if that is considered necessary in order to control the virus, but our focus needs to be on ensuring that that does not happen. Vigilance and caution will continue to be essential as we move through the coming weeks. All the practical advice continues to apply. Fanaigí ar shiúl ó chéile. Ní gá bhur lámha. Keep your distance, and wash your hands well and often. A Leas-Cheann Comhairle, molaim an rún agus na rialacha don Tionól. I commend the regulations to the Assembly.

Mr McGrath (The Chairperson of the Committee for The Executive Office): I am speaking on behalf of the Committee for the Executive Office. There has been much debate in the Assembly and its Committees, and, indeed, in the media, about recent amendment regulations. Although the Committee for the Executive Office has discussed issues around the outworkings and alleged breaches of the regulations, it does not have responsibility for scrutinising the legislation. The statutory responsibility for that lies with the Health Committee, and I am sure that its Chair will provide a detailed commentary. The Committee for the Executive Office welcomes, however, the timely lifting of all the restrictions that are mentioned and encourages continued discipline and compliance with them.

10.45 am

I will now make a few remarks as an SDLP representative and highlight the fact that this continues to be a worrying time with a number of spikes in community transmission. People have been very worried about the outbreaks in places such as Limavady. That scares people, and we need to continue to do all that we can to manage our behaviours and approaches to everyday life so that they are done in a safe manner.

Today's restrictions that are eased include the allowing of gatherings of up to 30 people outdoors and permit the reopening of key businesses and high street venues to allow a greater sense of normality to return. Now we can go to museums, beauty parlours, spas, bars and restaurants and see summer schools take place, but always underpinning the relaxations is the need to remember to keep to social distancing guidelines and to wash our hands.

Businesses across these islands have been impacted the most, yet some have had to bear the brunt more than others. Our hospitality sector has felt the full whack of the pandemic and for it to be permitted to reopen, in even a small way, is a move in the right direction for it.

The regulations continue to cause confusion. I worry about an Executive who cannot relay messages to people and then get upset when people do not stick to the guidelines. Well, if you do not even stick to the guidelines yourselves, what hope is there that people in our communities will stick to them? People are angry at the "One rule for us and one rule for them" that some have displayed. Ministers, please go back to Stormont Castle today and shout "Clarity" at the top of your voice. Let simple, clear and effective messages be the mantra from here on. Stop the confusion. Stop the double standards. Let people know exactly what they can and cannot do in a way that is easy to understand. As my Committee has heard, you have 45 or more press officers, the cream of the crop. They should be able to help you to spread the message clearly.

Let us not fall into the trap, which is easy to fall into, of trying to make the pandemic a green-and-orange issue, an us-and-them battle a day. I ask the Executive Office and its Ministers to pull together and to do what is in the best interests of people here on the basis of the scientific advice that is available to you. The restrictions impact all of us, be it where you can go, whom you can be with and even if and when you can go on holiday. Most of us have stuck by the rules and have ensured that we lead by example. Some Members have felt the heat of that more than others in recent days. I think of my close family members overseas, whom I have not been able to see since last year, but rules are rules.

The anomalies of the guidelines continue. If we examine what is being cleared today and introduced a few weeks ago, we see that we now permit 30 people to gather outdoors in a socially distanced manner but not if they choose to watch a sporting event. It is an oddity that people can gather in large numbers to eat and drink indoors yet cannot gather outdoors to watch a sport, even with proper social-distancing and safety measures in place. I hope, for the immediate future of the GAA, soccer and other sports, that that rule is revisited tomorrow at the Executive meeting and that the Minister can give us his view on it today. Many of those sports need the gate fees from attendees to survive. They can do it safely. They can do it properly. They just need the Executive to be on their side. I hope that that is possible and that we see the change tomorrow. I wrote to the First Minister and deputy First Minister to ask for that change, and I hope that it will be reflected in what we hear being proposed tomorrow. I hope, too, that other Members here today will support me in their contributions in order to help our sporting community to allow spectators back safely to sporting events.

I welcome the further easements detailed today. I believe that all of us should support them, and I encourage clarity at all times.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): Ba mhaith liom cúpla focal a rá ar leasú uimhir a naoi agus ar leasú uimhir a deich. I will speak about the amendment (No. 9) and amendment (No. 10) regulations, which the Health Committee was briefing about on 9 July. The Chief Environmental Health Officer (CEHO) advised us of the main easements for each, as outlined by the junior Minister this morning, and reminded the Committee of the 21-day period and the process for bringing proposed easements to the Executive for consideration. Once again, the Committee enquired about the commencement dates applying to different easements and was reminded that changes are made as quickly as possible since, under the original regulations, restrictions must be withdrawn as soon as they are considered unnecessary.

A number of members raised concerns about notice and preparation time for those affected. It was noted, for example, that the amendment that increased from 10 to 30 the maximum number of people who could gather outdoors came into effect on the same evening as the regulations were laid. Members enquired whether advance notice was given to, for example, the PSNI ahead of changes to regulations. The Chief Environmental Health Officer had no knowledge of advance notice being given to enforcement authorities at that time.

The Committee again enquired about the scientific evidence underpinning decision-making and noted that a written request for further detail remains pending. Again, assurances were sought in relation to the health and safety of workers in light of the recent outbreaks in Leicester and in Germany. We were advised that the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser monitor situations elsewhere and keep regulations under constant review.

The CEHO also confirmed that work was under way to restructure the regulations to improve clarity and coherence, given that there have been so many sets of amendments. It is clear that we have moved from a list of reasons to leave home, which has grown so lengthy that it would now make more sense to state what is not permissible.

Further to a question on guidance, the CEHO advised that the Department that sponsors a particular change is responsible for producing any guidance required on it.

The Examiner of Statutory Rules had not had a chance to report on the regulations prior to the Committee's consideration, since they had been laid only a few days earlier. The Committee, therefore, agreed to support both statutory regulations, subject to the Examiner's report. The Examiner has since reported and has raised no issues with the regulations.

I want to make a few remarks in my role as Sinn Féin health spokesperson. It is important that we consider the reality that clusters may become all-too-frequent occurrences here. It is vital that testing, contact tracing, self-isolation and supports are in place to meet the needs of those who are tested and test positive. We saw a recent example of that in the Limavady area. It is welcome that the system was able to respond to that cluster, but we need to ensure that vigilance remains to monitor and manage such situations as and when they arise.

I am concerned at reports that some testing kits produced by Randox do not meet safety standards. I urge the Minister to come forward with information and provide answers on how that affects the North. I sincerely hope that there is no risk to citizens and it does not put anyone off or deter them from being tested. Undoubtedly, testing remains an important part of the public health response, but so does the issue of personal protective equipment (PPE). I also worry that the Randox issue could negatively impact on the capacity for testing that is required, and I would like to hear further information about that.

As restrictions are lifted, it is important that we remember that many key workers still need access to vital PPE to do their job. This week, dentists have been allowed to open up, but they are doing aerosol-generating procedures, and concerns remain about their access to vital PPE and who is expected to provide and source it. The issue should be resolved as a matter of urgency.

Mrs Cameron: I felt somewhat deflated as I thought about this speech. The unity of purpose that typified the response of the Assembly and Executive is now sadly so damaged. I have often referred to the importance of a united approach in dealing with COVID-19, but we now see more and more that one party and its selfish objectives trump all else. That is very disappointing. The public share my sense of disappointment, anger and disillusionment with those for whom public health and adherence to our own rules were cast aside. We still have had no apology.

I turn to the specifics of the amendments. I welcome the fact that we now have an increase in the numbers allowed at outdoor gatherings to 30. Socially, we have some way to go, whether that is to reinvigorate the community or attend family or other events.

It is also worth remembering that the figure of 30 is the total for the gathering, not an element. For some, I think, that clarity is needed.

Obviously, alongside the public health considerations, the priority in all these decisions is the economic well-being of our people. Jobs must be protected. It is good that more services, including contact industries, have reopened, but I urge the Executive to do more to signpost employers and business owners who are already stressed to relevant guidance on how to operate safely.

We will have much more to do in the journey back to normality. A walk down the high street in Northern Ireland shows us the challenges that we face. Shutters are down, some permanently, and each business gone represents jobs lost and households that have been plunged into uncertainty. As we look ahead, we must ensure that we look at the most effective ways to sustain those businesses. Sticking-plaster solutions do not work. An opportunity to do things differently is before us and we should have everything on the table to ignite our economy.

In the last day or two, we have heard much about whether it is right or wrong to travel on holiday and whether quarantine is necessary. Further clarity is needed, and I welcome the First Minister's comments that there needs to be a further tidying up of the regulations and the subject of essential travel. I urge the Executive to concentrate on actual science-based evidence and, perhaps, the junior Minister can furnish the House with the relevant R rates, not just in Northern Ireland but across England, Scotland and Wales and, indeed, those of our neighbours in the Republic of Ireland.

As an Assembly, we need to give clear guidance and the general public want to know what they can do and how they can do that with as little risk as possible.

Test, track, trace and isolate is now in place, so let us keep reminding people to be tested if any of the symptoms of COVID-19 are present. Let us keep a distance from others and wash our hands. Let us volunteer to wear face coverings in shops. Let us look after ourselves and each other.

From a health perspective, I again make a plea for the urgent reopening of services. I also highlight the plight of dental practices and urge the Minister to engage with the sector to ensure that it is protected throughout this difficult period. The wider issues have been well highlighted and the rationales are clear. Just this morning, we heard from a consultant orthopaedic surgeon, Mr Gavan McAlinden, who aired his fears and frustrations about the pace of reopening surgeries. Mr McAlinden said that their advocacy for their suffering patients was falling on deaf ears. That concerns me and I am worried that we are not even listening to our clinicians now.

Many people, including my husband, are waiting for general surgery. Many are suffering and are in great pain and that is due to the lack of our health services at this time. Waiting lists, which were already at an all-time high before the pandemic, are growing. The Department is quite rightly trying to suppress the virus and we are all eternally grateful to all the Department of Health staff and all our amazing health workers, who go far beyond the call of duty to look after others. If this is an opportunity to transform services so that they can work more efficiently and safely, then let us do that, but let us do that with haste and recognition that the people of Northern Ireland are suffering and deserve to have services resumed as a matter of urgency. Of course, that all adds to mental health issues, and I urge the Assembly to back the Minister in reopening health services with the utmost urgency. How many will lose their lives or become incapacitated because of the lack of action to resume healthcare?

In conclusion, I welcome that visitor attractions, museums, galleries and bookmaking offices have been able to resume business. I thank the public and appeal for continued compliance with the guidance and adherence to the regulations. Let us remember what this is about: it is about saving lives. I am also very proud of those who organised very safe, lawful Twelfth celebrations this year. That is something to be proud of. I support the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 9) Regulations (NI) 2020 and the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 10) Regulations (NI) 2020.

Ms Armstrong: I rise without a prepared speech because I am so angry that I could bite something. While the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 9) Regulations (NI) 2020 allow people to go and stay in overnight accommodation, even though we had a cross-party motion in the House that recognised the pressure on carers, we still cannot have overnight respite care for people with disabilities or older people. I appreciate that the rules and regulations are being laid in a specific way that adheres to legislation, but our carers' needs are falling on deaf ears.

11.00 am

I say to both junior Ministers this morning, "Go back to the Executive and ask the Executive to sort things out for carers". We heard, over the past few days, that some respite services may be available and that daycare centres may be open for 10% of the people with learning disabilities and older people. Honestly. We have carers who have been working 24 hours a day, seven days a week, for 16 weeks. They are at breaking point. How many times do we have to ask in this place for their needs to be recognised? Fantastic: we can all go and stay in a B & B, we can go to the bookies, but we cannot give a carer a break.

I am so angry about this. We worked so hard together as parties to recognise the needs of carers and of those with disabilities, who, to be quite honest, are sick looking at their family because they still cannot go out through the door. We are not looking after them. I reiterate what Pam Cameron said: we need to look after ourselves and one another. I ask the junior Ministers please to put carers at the front of the queue. They have been part of the rainbow of heroes throughout the pandemic; they have worked quietly in the background, and, as has been recognised in the motion, they have been scared, they have been alone, they have been isolated, and they have done all that without much thanks or any recognition.

I push for the next regulations, the ones that have not yet been written — we already know what they are; they have been talked about today — to have the needs of carers in them. We need the junior Ministers to tell the trusts that there has to be fair and equitable treatment of all people with disabilities and of older people and their carers across Northern Ireland. I make this plea: while amendments Nos 9 and 10 to the regulations are absolutely welcome, it is the people who are doing the work on the ground in looking after the most vulnerable in society who need our help now. I am asking — I am pleading with — the Assembly and the Executive please to put carers first in their next considerations.

Mr Sheehan: I welcome amendment Nos 9 and 10 as further relaxation of the draconian restrictions imposed since the start of the pandemic. Of course, under normal circumstances, none of us would have supported such restrictions, but, given the circumstances, they were absolutely necessary.

The amendments give effect to the previously announced indicative timings for the opening of, among other things, museums, galleries, bookies, spas, tattoo and piercing businesses, restaurants, bars and clubs. Funerals are no longer restricted to close family and friends, beer gardens can reopen, and so on. I welcome the easing of the restrictions, as it indicates that, to an extent, we are getting on top of the virus. However, the situation remains extremely dangerous, and we need to listen to the experts, particularly in the field of public health.

I heard Pam Cameron mention the R number. That was the third time that I heard it mentioned today. The leader of the Ulster Unionist Party mentioned it on the radio this morning. I also heard Gabriel Scally, who is pre-eminent in the field of public health — one of the most renowned experts in these islands on public health — saying that when the transmission rate is as low as it is, particularly here, the R rate is not in itself a useful measurement. What is more important is the number of people being infected.

We need to listen to the experts. We also need to look at the countries that have done best in suppressing the virus. Many of them have done particularly well: New Zealand, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Germany, and so on. We should listen to the advice that we are getting from people such as Gabriel Scally and Devi Sridhar, who advises the Scottish Parliament, and that advice is that, for the purpose of public health, we should treat the island of Ireland as one unit. We should coordinate, North and South, all the moves that we take in relation to the virus.

It is welcome that there was a memorandum of understanding (MOU) a few months back, but that in itself is not enough. There needs to be constant contact between the Executive, the Dublin Government and both Chief Medical Officers and Chief Scientific Advisers.

That is what we need to do. We need to continue to find, test, trace, isolate and support. That is what will keep the virus suppressed. That is the message that needs to go out.

Mr Chambers: It is important that we and the public recognise that the Executive are trying to do a job of work. The Executive are trying to strike a balance between getting the economy back on its feet, getting people back to work and getting basic services available, all whilst trying to protect the public's health the best they can. We have to recognise that any relaxation of the regulations is not an invitation to the public to let their guard down or to relax their personal measures to prevent the spread of the virus. Social distancing and personal hygiene are still paramount in controlling the virus. As civic leaders, in a way, we have to set an example, and we have to continue to adhere to the guidance as best as we can.

The virus has not gone away, and it has not relaxed its efforts to spread. We have heard that the guidance is confusing. Yes, there could be clarity in some elements of the guidance, but we have to recognise that they are emergency regulations and have maybe not been put together with the same scrutiny as the law would normally attract. We have to accept that clarity will be needed in certain sections of the regulations. A lot of the confusion has been created not by the wording of the regulations but by the selfish actions of parties and civic leaders in the House. We have a responsibility to adhere to the regulations. How can we expect the public to adhere to the regulations if we cannot?

I heard Gabriel Scally on the radio this morning, and I hear he is an extremely prominent professor. To me, he is just a voice with an opinion. I do not put any more weight on what he has to say than what I hear from our own experts whom we have employed to advise us. Only weeks ago, the R number was considered to be of paramount importance. We were all hanging on it, waiting for the Executive to announce the latest R figure. It became the habit that it was announced every Thursday. We all waited with bated breath to hear what it was, because it was considered to be a very important indicator of how we were controlling the disease. I do not think that we can now simply discard the R number. It is still a scientific figure to be looked at, and I hope that the Executive will continue to consider it.

We have heard that amendment (No. 9) was discussed by the Executive on 29 June. It was signed off at 9.30 that Monday evening and became law at 11.00 pm. At the Health Committee, I raised with the chief environmental officer the point that it is not good housekeeping to have laws change in the middle of a day. They should be changed and come into law on a date, as opposed to a time. I pointed out to the chief environmental officer the sort of confusion that was caused on 29 June, when it became law at 11.00 pm, making it legal for 30 people, as opposed to 10, to gather. That was not really fair to the enforcement agency, which, in that case, was the PSNI. They might have been out on patrol and, at 10.55 pm, come across a gathering in excess of 10 and would have taken whatever they considered to be the appropriate action, be it advice or, if necessary, the issue of fixed penalty tickets. Yet the police could have come up the same road at 11.05 pm and encountered a crowd of people in excess of 10 who were not respecting social distancing or anything else, and they would have spoken to them, totally unaware that, at 11.00 pm, the law had changed and that, now, a gathering of 15, 16 or 18 was legal and complied with the regulations. That has the potential to create embarrassment for the enforcement agency.

When I asked the chief environmental officer whether they had had any conversations with the police during that Monday to give them a heads-up that the regulations in respect of gatherings were going to change at 11.00 that night or whatever was deemed to be the time, he said that, no, they had not done so. He said that the normal practice was to inform local authorities and the PSNI the following day of any regulations that had changed. I do not think that, from a housekeeping perspective, that is really satisfactory. I know that the Executive, when they decide that they can relax a regulation, have a duty to do so quickly and give the public the benefit of it, but, as I say, from a housekeeping perspective, it would be much better if the change kicked in from midnight on a date, as opposed to a time during the day. As I say, it is unfair to the enforcement agencies.

Mr Beattie: I will be rather brief. The slow drip-feed in the easing of COVID restrictions is welcome, and it is absolutely the right way to do things. We have to look at what is ahead of us and then change to meet that. It is important that we do that and that we try to analyse and listen to the advice when we do it.

The opening of museums and galleries is incredibly important so that people can go to view our history, understand our culture and see our art. If we do not have that, if we do not allow people to get out there and enjoy it and if we do not remember what we are doing this all for, what is the point? It is incredibly important, and I welcome that release of restrictions. In the same way, I welcome the release of restrictions on the opening of restaurants and bars, although with certain caveats, because it kick-starts the pulse of our society. Our society needs to have something to look forward to. Restrictions, restrictions, restrictions will not help us or help the mental health of our society.

I absolutely agree with the Chair of the Committee for the Executive Office: clarity is what is really important. That is about digging down to the absolute detail of everything that we put out there so that people know exactly what they can and cannot do. I guess that that is where the confusion is at the moment. People are confused because we are giving confused messages. We are giving confused messages in our guidance. We are giving confused messages in our legislation. We are giving confused messages when we make statements. It is important that we have clarity.

11.15 am

I also agree that the integrity and the credibility of the Executive Office have been seriously damaged. They have been seriously damaged by Sinn Féin, who seem to have selective amnesia because they never talk about their deliberate breach of the guidelines that they told everybody to adhere to. Groups of 30 being allowed to gather came out at 11 pm on 29 June, yet they managed to get their little cabal of 30 ready for a funeral the next day, not to mention the hundreds who followed behind it, who must have been organised well in advance. They certainly were not given the heads-up at 11 o'clock that night to be there.

When you talk about this selective amnesia, we now have a society that seems to have brushed that under the carpet because what that did abused our society. What they did at that funeral abused our society. There were not 30 people there, there were hundreds, and that abused our society. Many in our society are now suffering from Stockholm syndrome because they have just forgotten about it and it does not matter; they are allowed to do it. Nobody else is allowed to do it, but they can. It is absolutely shocking.

Then, to stand up and say, "Don't worry about the R number, it is not important any more because it does not fit our narrative". Yet we have just had four months of people banging on about the R number and saying that we have to get the R number down and that we have to save lives. Then, somebody says, "Ach never worry about that because we want to stop the English from coming to Northern Ireland". That is what it is all about. It is bias and bigotry, and they need to own up to it.

I will finish and say again that, in all of these amendments, clarity in everything we do and everything that we say is the most important thing.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call on Junior Minister Gordon Lyons to conclude and make his winding-up speech on the motion.

Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): As we have said previously during the debates on the amendment regulations, we all want to see a return to a more normal way of living. None of us wants to have to legislate on how people and businesses go about, what we consider to be, normal and routine activities. We all look forward to a time — hopefully soon — when we no longer have to do that. However, that time is not here yet. Yes, we are winning the fight against COVID-19 and, yes, we have come a long way and made great strides towards a return to something approaching normality, but the job is not finished.

It is very clear that managing a response to the COVID-19 pandemic, keeping people safe and supporting those who have faced real hardship as a result of the pandemic is going to be a top priority for us all for some time to come. The 'Executive Approach to Decision-Making' document remains our blueprint for the review process and the incremental structure for assessing progress, contained within the document, will continue to help decision-making in key areas in the weeks ahead, as we ease our way further on the pathway towards recovery.

We have learnt a great deal and come a long way in a short period and there is much to be optimistic about. We all look forward to moving forward, responding to COVID and recovering from its impact. Progress has been good and we have made significant strides in easing the restrictions that have been in place. As a result, and provided that we keep our guard, we can look forward to further positive changes very soon.

I will turn to some of the points that Members made during the debate. We began, as always, with the Chair of the Committee for The Executive Office. I thank him and welcome his support for the progressive, but cautious, direction of travel set out in the regulations. He, rightly, emphasised the need for caution. The burden of the regulations on our citizens is being reduced, but the need for responsible behaviour remains. Indeed, it is even more important as we relax these restrictions.

I agree with him about clear messaging and it is a point that has been raised elsewhere. It has always been something that I have tried to do in the Chamber and when replying to individual requests from Members. Trying to get guidance out, and listening to interested parties from across Northern Ireland, has certainly been to the fore of what I have been trying to do.

I agree with him completely when he says that it is not a green or orange issue; it is definitely not. There is nothing that is less green or orange because nothing is more important than human life. I want to make it clear that that has always been my approach. Indeed, the First Minister has made it very clear that her focus, and that of the Executive, needs to be on the health, lives and livelihoods of people in Northern Ireland. That is what has directed us during the pandemic.

Another issue that he raised was sporting events. I assure the Member that that is being looked at. We understand the need for people to be able to go back to those events and that sporting organisations require the income that comes from them. Obviously, there are other issues to consider around that, but we will progress it, as we will all other measures, as soon as we can. I thank him for raising that issue.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Health set out the Committee's position. I note the points that he raised about testing kits and PPE. I will ask the Minister and the Department of Health to send a written response to the Member on those specific points.

I welcome Mrs Cameron's support for larger gatherings to facilitate social events. I certainly agree with her on the need for cautious and responsible behaviour at such gatherings. She, rightly, emphasises the importance of guidance to help businesses to operate safely. I assure her that my colleague the Minister for the Economy will continue to give that high priority. We have to recognise and understand that there has been an economic impact and that the regulations and restrictions that we have had to bring in are causing economic uncertainty. She is right to mention that.

Of course, it is not only an economic crisis but a health crisis; a non-COVID health crisis as well. She articulated that in her comments when she referred particularly to the reopening of services. I thank her for mentioning dentists in particular. I am sure that Members across the House have received representations from members of the dental profession. They should not be forgotten. They need our help and support at this time because they are there when we need them.

A strategic framework for rebuilding health and social care services has been published. Northern Ireland's trusts have published plans that set out the immediate work that is being done in their areas. That rebuilding process can secure better ways in which to deliver services, but will require innovation, sustained investment and society-wide support. However, keeping the public and staff safe is an absolute priority. I agree with the Member's comments in that regard.

She also raised another couple of issues, one of which related to the R number. The latest figures that we have show that, last week, the R number in Northern Ireland was between 0.5 and 1. The R number in the Republic of Ireland was between 1.2 and 1.8 last week, and below 1 in England, Scotland and Wales. I hope that that provides clarity for the Member. On that point, I agree with what Mr Beattie said: yes, obviously, there is lots of data and evidence that we have to take into consideration, but the R number remains an important tool for us as we move forward.

Finally, Mrs Cameron mentioned the Twelfth of July celebrations. I want to take this opportunity to commend everyone involved for the exceptionally high level of adherence to the regulations over that period. We understand how important the date is in our calendar and how people want to celebrate. Obviously, this year was different. It is important that we place on record and recognise that people found alternative ways in which to celebrate and did so in a largely safe way, with very high levels of compliance. I want to put on record our thanks to the leadership of the loyal orders, which demonstrated that leadership in its advice and encouragement. I am delighted that tens of thousands of people threw themselves into the spirit of the regulations and ensured that they were adhered to. They are to be commended for that.

I acknowledge Pat Sheehan's support for the direction of travel and the gradual restoration of normal life, with access to facilities such as museums. He mentioned the importance of following the evidence. I completely agree with him, which is why we have to recognise and follow the advice of our advisers. He mentioned Professor Scally, who is not a member of SAGE; our medical advisers are members of SAGE. In relation to travel, the Department of Health, advised by its advisers, has been clear that very few travel-associated cases have been identified, and the possibility of a traveller from England bringing the virus to Northern Ireland is very low in terms of absolute risk. It is important that we acknowledge that when we make decisions. As always, our decisions need to be based on evidence and nothing else.

I acknowledge Kellie Armstrong's comments about our carers, with which I agree wholeheartedly. Carers support the most vulnerable in society. I know how difficult it has been for people not to have had carers come in and not to have respite care in place. Nobody wants this situation to last one minute longer than necessary. We need to ensure that, as we reopen our services and our society, we do so in a safe manner that ensures that we do not overload the capacity of our health service. However, we also need to make sure that we do not put vulnerable people at risk. The regulations undergo frequent revision, and the issues that the Member raised form part of the discussions and considerations that take place at the Executive. The Member very firmly placed the matter on the record today, for which we thank her.

Mr Chambers, like other Members, rightly emphasised the ongoing threat of the virus and the balance that we need to maintain as we relax the regulations. There must be more emphasis on guidance and responsible behaviour.

(The Temporary Speaker [Mr Wells] in the Chair)

A number of Members referred to scientific debate in the media. Let me again reassure Members that Executive decisions are informed by advice from the CMO and the CSA, who in turn have direct access to the most comprehensive expert advice.

The Member referred to the timing of the regulations and acknowledged that they are changed as quickly as possible after the Executive's decision to do so, in keeping with the requirement that we relax restrictions as soon as we can. It has always been the case that regulations are laid before the Assembly and then brought into force very close together, normally later on the same evening. There is no conspiracy and no other reason behind that. I take the Member's point that it may seem strange that, at 11.00 pm, there is one rule in place, and, at 11.30 pm, there could be another rule. The regulations have to change at some point, and we bring them in as soon as we can. That is what guides us. I hope that that provides clarity to the Member.

I certainly agree with Doug Beattie's comments on the significance of the amendment regulations. They are not merely technical changes but make further progress towards the gradual restoration of the normal daily activities that we all hold dear and that are so important to the economy and the health and well-being of our people.

Mr Temporary Speaker, I hope that that answers most of the questions and comments that Members raised. If I have missed anything, we will of course write to Members in due course. In the meantime, I commend the amendment regulations to the Assembly.

11.30 am

Question put and agreed to.

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 9) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 10) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Resolved:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Amendment No. 10) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Kearney (Junior Minister, The Executive Office).]

Executive Committee (Functions) Bill: Consideration Stage

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I call the junior Minister Mr Declan Kearney to move the Consideration Stage of the Executive Committee (Functions) Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Kearney (Junior Minister, the Executive Office).]

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Beattie.

Mr Beattie: Sorry for the late notice on this, but it is important because it will help to make decisions. I hope that the junior Minister can answer this question. Paragraphs 8 and 9 at clause 1(4) include the term “a Minister”. Can the junior Minister confirm that, where it says “a Minister”, it refers only to the Minister for Infrastructure and does not extend to any Minister in the Executive?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Kearney, will you reply to that question?

Mr Kearney (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): Thank you, Mr Temporary Speaker. It is necessary to clarify the circumstances in which a Minister is required to refer a matter to the Executive, where that matter may be cross-cutting, significant or controversial. However, I must add that that does not affect the integrity of the planning process or the nature or quality of the decisions that would be taken under it. It is about who takes the decisions.

In response to the Member’s point, clause 1(4) inserts a new provision at section 20(7) of the NI Act. That permits:

“the Department for Infrastructure or the Minister in charge of that Department” to take certain decisions under the Planning Act:

“without recourse to the Executive Committee.”

However, there is a caveat to be entered under clause 1(8), which qualifies section 20(3) of the Act in respect of cross-cutting matters to provide that a Minister is not required to have recourse to the Executive Committee unless a matter affects the exercise of one or more other Ministers “more than incidentally”. I hope that that provides some clarification to the Member.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Is Mr Beattie content with that explanation?

Mr Beattie: I thank the junior Minister for —.

Mr O’Dowd: On a point of order, Mr Temporary Speaker. Will the Temporary Speaker clarify what is happening? Is it a debate? Is it a statement? I am not sure what process I am involved in at the moment.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Mr Beattie indicated in a point of order that he had concerns about the procedures. Mr Kearney has given a very full and detailed response to the point. I understand that Mr Beattie is content with that explanation. That being the case, can we move on?

Mr Kearney has formally moved the motion. There are no amendments tabled to the Bill. The Questions on stand part will be put on each clause, followed by the Question on the long title.

Clause 1 (Amendment of section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998)

Question put, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I think that the Ayes have it.

Some Members: No.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Question will be put again in three minutes. I remind Members that we should continue to uphold the social-distancing measures and that Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come into the Chamber.

Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that, if possible, it would be preferable to avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Some Members: Aye.

Mr Carroll: No.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Ayes have it.

Clause 1 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 2 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 3 (Short title)

Question put, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

Some Members: Aye.

Mr Carroll: No.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I think that the Ayes have it. Mr Carroll, do you accept that? Yes. The Ayes have it.

Clause 3 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Long Title

Question put, That the long title be agreed.

Some Members: Aye.

Mr Carroll: No.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I think that the Ayes have it.

Long title agreed to.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): That concludes the Consideration Stage of the Executive Committee (Functions) Bill. The Bill now stands referred to the Speaker. I remind Members that the deadline for tabling amendments for Further Consideration Stage is 9:30 am tomorrow.

Committee Business

Climate Change and the Introduction of a Climate Change Act

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The next item of business is a motion from the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs on climate change and the introduction of a climate change Act.

I will suspend proceedings temporarily while we rearrange the top Table and give Members an opportunity to get into the Chamber.

The House took its ease from 11.41 am to 11.42 am.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): I remind Members that the next item of business is a motion from the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs on climate change and the introduction of a climate change Act.

Mr McGuigan (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): I beg to move

That this Assembly acknowledges the ongoing climate and biodiversity emergency and calls by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change for rapid decarbonisation; reiterates the Assembly's declaration of a climate and biodiversity emergency, the Assembly's demands for the urgent introduction of a climate change Act, the all-party New Decade, New Approach commitment to delivering a climate change Act, and the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs' commitment to a green growth strategy; recognises climate change as a human rights issue that risks deepening existing inequalities; further recognises the need for a stimulus-led, just and green recovery to restart economic activity following the economic disruption arising from COVID-19; calls on the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to introduce a climate change Act with legally binding and ambitious sectoral emission reduction targets, and to ensure that any economic recovery strategy is underpinned by rapid decarbonisation and a just transition to protect jobs through upskilling people in carbon-intensive sectors; and further calls on the Minister to introduce this Act in the Assembly within three months.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): The Business Committee has allowed an hour and a half for the debate. Mr McGuigan will be allowed 10 minutes to propose the motion and a Member will be allowed 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and published on the Marshalled List.

Mr McGuigan: Climate change has been identified as an immediate strategic priority in the New Decade, New Approach (NDNA) deal. Over recent weeks and months, the Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs Committee has received a number of briefings, which included matters relating to climate change. Speaking today as Deputy Chair of the Committee, I will now outline its work in relation to that.

11.45 am

In February 2020, the Committee took oral evidence from DAERA on its proposals for the 2020-21 Budget. The Committee noted interest in the funding associated with the development of climate change legislation. Since then, the COVID crisis has had a significant impact on those plans. In June, the Committee scrutinised funding earmarked for climate change but handed back in the June monitoring round. In terms of capital, the Committee raised concerns that £1 million earmarked for ICT to help to support climate change plans was handed back. A further £500,000 for the collaborative all-Ireland hub in research and development was also handed back. In addition, the Committee was informed that a further £1.6 million on the resource side earmarked for climate change was handed back.

Departmental officials indicated that, whilst some work on climate change is ongoing, progress is now less than originally planned. In written submissions to the Committee in response to the legislative consent motion on the Environment Bill, stakeholders raised concerns about climate change, such as the need for legislation. As part of that work, Members discussed with stakeholders issues such as biodiversity.

In June, the Committee received a departmental briefing on DAERA's draft business plan. The Committee heard that it was quite different from previous plans for a number of reasons, including the pandemic; the fact that we were approaching the end of the transition period following exit from the EU; the huge growth in public awareness on the environment; and the Minister's wish to have sustainability at the heart of the Department's plans.

The Committee heard that climate change was identified as a common theme in the development of key strategic priorities for the Department. Departmental officials highlighted the importance of this opportunity to help to address many of the long-term environmental and climate change challenges that we face.

The concept of "green growth", announced by the Minister in June, whereby sustainability is at the heart of our economic recovery, was welcomed by officials. They outlined the cost and savings for the environment of people working from home.

This month, the Committee received a briefing on the draft NIEA business plan. It heard that the NIEA will play a key role in helping to deliver the DAERA plan, including the green growth strategy. The Committee discussed the links between the environment and the economy. NIEA officials indicated that they would work with Tourism NI and the Department for the Economy on the matter. The Committee was informed of prosperity agreements that promote greater resource efficiency; for example, companies changing their fuel to reduce carbon emissions.

In an evidence session on 1 July, the Minister provided more information on the green growth strategy and plans to tackle environmental and climate change challenges. Recognising the importance of tackling climate change, the Committee agreed at that meeting to have a Committee debate on the issue. A draft motion was considered, and eight amendments were proposed. Of those, five were made and three voted down. The wording of the motion that we are debating was agreed on 2 July.

The amendment calls for consultation. However, the Committee's position is that a climate change Act with legally binding and ambitious sectoral emission reduction targets is needed and that a Bill should be introduced within the next three months. I hope that the House can support the motion.

I now speak on behalf of Sinn Féin.

"Our demands most moderate are we only want the Earth."

So said James Connolly over 100 years ago. Those were modest demands, then and now, but I am sure that he could never have imagined that, 100 years on, we would have to add "saving the Earth" to his request. Every week, a different report or study alerts us to the real and catastrophic dangers of global warming. Yesterday, we were told that polar bears will become extinct by the end of the century if more is not done to tackle climate change. Four days ago, we were told that, in a short time from now, millions of people around the world will be exposed to dangerous levels of heat stress, with many places experiencing summers too hot to work or even live in. Last week, the World Meteorological Organization predicted that, over the next five years, global temperatures would likely break the 1.5° increase threshold compared with pre-industrial temperature levels. We know that keeping below 1.5 is vital to avoid the worst climate impacts on our planet. That was the figure agreed in 2015 in the Paris climate accord. Yet, despite the weekly warnings of dire consequences, here in the North we still do not have a climate Act or any legislation to ensure that we do our bit to fight back. That lack of urgency is, quite frankly, alarming. If we are to learn any lessons from the current health crisis it is that swift and early action based on science is key.

Perhaps there are still some climate deniers among us who think that our contribution is not needed, it will cost us too much and maybe we could care less about the polar bears of the Arctic because that is pretty far away from Ireland. Maybe some think that we will not have to face any of the consequences of climate change or that we can live with the consequences that we do face. I really hope that we are beyond all those arguments. Global warming is a startling fact. It is not something that will happen: it is something that is happening. Ten of the warmest years on record have occurred since 2005, and the decade just ended was the hottest ever. Increasing global temperatures mean rising sea levels, which affect weather patterns that cause increased flooding, droughts, storms, fires and species dying across the globe. Those things are not happening just in faraway places. Over recent years, our farms, towns, communities and infrastructure on this island have all been severely impacted on and damaged by storms, flooding and other forms of extreme weather. Our species habitats have been affected too. All of that is set to continue; in fact, all of it is set to increase at the cost of much more damage on this island and of many more lives elsewhere, if we do not address the issue.

Global warming is happening as a result of human behaviour, so we need to change human behaviour. That is the view of the majority of MLAs, and it is supported by the majority of citizens living in the North, particularly our young citizens. When the Assembly was restored in January, 'New Decade, New Approach' (NDNA) gave new promise of immediate and far-reaching climate action that has been so absent from previous Environment Ministers. It promised commitments to a green new deal and a just transition away from an unequal society dependent on dirty, destructive and obsolete fossil fuels. Crucially, it promised a climate change Act: legislation to put in place world-leading carbon reduction targets to compel and guide decarbonisation and hold Ministers accountable in the face of the climate emergency. 'New Decade, New Approach' was seven months ago. A month later, on 3 February, in one of the first items of business in the Chamber, MLAs endorsed and reinforced the sentiments of NDNA, proclaimed a climate emergency and called for a just transition and a climate change Act. That was over six months ago, and still we wait.

When questioned about the lack of progress on the matter over the last seven months, the Minister responsible has given answers with variations of, "We cannot move too fast", "I am looking at it", "I am consulting", "I have sought advice", "We need more information", "I am committed to considering", "I am still considering" etc, etc. I hope that it is clear when today's debate is over, Minister, that the time for considering and waiting has long since passed; in fact, the time for action has long since passed. Embarrassingly, we are the only region of these islands without climate change legislation. We need leadership and ambition now, Minister.

When I tabled the motion to the AERA Committee, I did so to signal the urgency with which we in Sinn Féin view the climate emergency. We are debating a motion because Sinn Féin and the majority of parties represented on the AERA Committee feel that the same urgency has been sorely lacking from the Minister. We need legislation that puts us on a path to carbon neutrality by 2045 at the latest. We need carbon budgets to guide us and hold us all accountable on this path. By doing so, we will not only contribute to tackling climate breakdown but unlock the vast economic potential of a just transition to a thriving green economy with high-quality and well-paid employment, using the vast renewable energy sources that we have on this island and, for all of us, lower costs, warmer homes, better transport, cleaner air and healthier lives. For that reason, Sinn Féin has also repeatedly called for the establishment of a just transition commission to bring together all the stakeholders in society to map out and agree on the future.

Legislation must have substance and must be based on science. We have 10 to 20 years to make a far-reaching impact. I am sure that most of us got involved in politics to effect positive change. The most important change and legacy that politicians in this mandate can leave is one that helps to shape the future for our children and our grandchildren by taking positive steps to save and protect our environment and their future prosperity.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Thank you, Mr McGuigan. We have nine Members who wish to contribute plus the summation. I understand that there was a significant debate on the issue in the AERA Committee. Therefore, I intend to give priority to members of that Committee, including Ms Clare Bailey. Ms Bailey, you will be called to speak after the main parties have had a chance to contribute. There is an amendment in the name of Mrs Barton and Mr Stewart. I call Mrs Barton to move the amendment: you have 10 minutes.

Mrs Barton: I beg to move the following amendment:

Leave out all after “delivering a climate change Act” and insert:

“; recognises the all-party commitment to a green growth strategy and the calls for this to be at the centre of the Northern Ireland COVID-19 recovery plan; and calls on the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to introduce a consultation on plans for a climate change Act.”

I welcome the opportunity to reiterate support for a renewed commitment to deliver a climate change Act. With the recovery from COVID-19 and the introduction of the green growth strategy, this is an ideal time for all Departments to take the opportunity, through a consultation, to work together to bring forward plans for a climate change Act.

Climate change is nothing new. Fifty million years ago, there was no ice at either the North or South Poles. Eighteen thousand years ago, most of Britain was covered in ice and glaciers. The Earth’s climate has seen many changes in its 4.5 billion years. Today, however, meteorologists, through the data collected, suggest that the current changes are the result of increasing human populations and activities that cause a build-up of man-made gases in the atmosphere that trap the sun’s heat and cause changes in weather patterns around the world. That is the concern that we are addressing.

We all value the environment, and that has been particularly evident in recent months, when so many people longed to get a walk in the countryside to escape the confines imposed by the COVID lockdown. In these most challenging times, a sustainable and affordable way forward must be explored to curb and reduce our unnecessary emissions for the benefit of the generations to come and to preserve the environment that we enjoy so much. At no time has it been more important for all Departments to work together in a combined effort to reduce emissions and move towards a zero-carbon society for the benefit of our climate and biodiversity and, ultimately, our environment.

While a mix of European, United Kingdom and Northern Ireland Executive legislation currently governs greenhouse gas emissions, including the Climate Change Act 2008 in England, which has set targets to cut emissions by 80% by 2050, it is clear that Northern Ireland needs its own climate change Act, through the green growth strategy, to work towards a number of Northern Ireland-set targets. While we have broad national climate change legislation, Northern Ireland-specific climate change concerns need to be addressed. We need a consultation period to establish what best meets the requirements of made-in-Northern-Ireland legislation, which will include its own unique local circumstances.

The consultation should cover areas like what is good in other climate change Acts, whether it is the UK Act or others, and whether we can put it into our Act. It should also identify gaps and ensure that they are addressed in any new Northern Ireland legislation. That would allow the Northern Ireland Executive to undertake the appropriate degree of research, have greater autonomy over planning for home-grown climate change initiatives and set appropriate targets. For example, the UK legislation and the action towards 2050 means that reduction in emissions is regularised and controlled and ensures that there is not an overly rapid movement towards, for example, the scrapping of vehicles before their time, which could lead to expensive and more costly solutions that may be less expensive as time progresses towards 2050. A common strategic approach is a necessity in reducing emissions, but it must be informed by data and consultation to enable the right decisions to be taken and to allow the proper strategic approach to be implemented with the use of evidence.

Look at the situation at present. Our grid cannot cope with the amount of wind energy that is being supplied, yet our electricity prices increase, as producers have to receive fair payment for their investment. There is no joined-up strategic approach to that attempt at supporting green energy.

12.00 noon

The DOE discussion paper from 2015-16 is a good base for preparing the consultation. That was more of an overview, but we require more specific targets that are backed by proper research and analysis to enable a planned way forward for our Act in Northern Ireland.

I appeal for people to stop knocking the agricultural and farming industry over climate change. There is a much bigger picture that needs to be considered with regard to making a difference to climate change issues. Those are the issues that need detailed consideration in this consultation.

In his statement to the House last month on the green growth approach and strategy, Minister Poots said that he had set out a road map and would consult across the entire waste, agriculture, energy, environment and public and private sectors to get a well-rounded view as soon as possible. That is similar to what should happen in the development of a climate change Act. Some groundwork has been done with the 2015 discussion paper, and now we need to put some details and specifics behind it.

I do not want the consultation to act as a barrier to further progress; I want it to better inform the creation of legislation and produce an Act that will serve the people of Northern Ireland for this and future generations.

Mr Irwin: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate. As a farmer, I am keenly interested in the protection of the environment. As I have said many times in the House, farmers play one of the most active roles in protecting and enhancing the environment by farming the land. It is also a fact that farmers are acutely impacted by climate change, given their reliance on the land and their vulnerability to extreme weather events.

The motion is laden with an unquantifiable level of commitment that is matched by a unquantifiable associated cost. Those are two very important issues that must be measured if we are to realistically address concerns around climate change whilst ensuring that we have sustainable and profitable industries in Northern Ireland.

While the COVID-19 pandemic has taken a harsh and regrettable toll on the health of the UK population, and indeed that of many other countries across the world, it has also taken a very harsh toll on the economic health of the United Kingdom. The predictions make for sobering reading, and when the impacts of the pandemic are taken into account along with the changes in consumer habits over a period of months, there are justifiable and serious concerns over the length of time that the economic recovery will take.

I note with interest that the renowned firm KPMG believes that it is possible that Northern Ireland will be the most sheltered in that regard, due in no small part to the strong food manufacturing base here, which has continued at speed throughout the pandemic. Again, that shows the importance of our agri-food sector to our Northern Ireland economy. Indeed, agri-food accounts for somewhere in the region of 100,000 jobs, and the food manufacturing sector accounts for 32% of manufacturing sales in Northern Ireland. This is an important industry, and it must be protected, especially in these most challenging and unprecedented times.

There is a new focus for the Assembly and its associated Departments. That focus is, and must continue to be, the recovery of Northern Ireland's people and its economy in line with the current health and scientific advice. With the recovery will come opportunities to do things differently, and in line with the focus today on climate change and the environment, there are opportunities that should be taken to make preparations and allow Northern Ireland to continue on the right track.

I have listened intently in the AERA Committee to our Minister, the departmental officials and industry representatives on the importance of us playing our part in addressing climate change. Indeed, I welcome Minister Poots's very pragmatic and common-sense approach to these issues. One only has to read his contributions in the Chamber to see that he has a strong affiliation with the agri-food industry and, critically, an understanding of the environment. The green growth strategy is a case in point, and the opportunities for improvement in meeting our targets are many. It was enlightening to learn at a recent AERA Committee meeting that DAERA, a Department with hundreds of employees, has saved around 55,000 miles per day due to staff working from home in these new circumstances. In an era when carbon footprints are a concern, that is a staggering amount of mileage. When it is considered that that happened in the first 35 days of lockdown, one sees that it equates to 2 million miles saved, which is a very significant way of working. The positive impact of that on the environment is obvious. However, huge importance is attached to ensuring that all elements of government continue to function as required to aid our recovery whilst pursuing new ways of working.

That is only a single example, but it shows what is possible in our own government structures. Whilst those types of savings are more straightforward to make in the Civil Service, in the world of industry, efficiencies are made as a matter of course simply to ensure that businesses can remain operational and survive. There is no money to waste in wider industry, especially at this most difficult time. That is why I believe that in the green growth strategy and many of the other actions and programmes that we may seek to roll out, the onus that is placed on industry must be workable.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member bring his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Irwin: Pardon?

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will you bring your remarks to a close, please?

Mr Irwin: OK. Take, for instance, our dairy industry, which has worked extremely hard to reduce its carbon intensity by 34% between 1990 and 2017. That is a commendable achievement that must be recognised and built upon. The sustainability of our industry in Northern Ireland is vital.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member please finish?

Mr Irwin: I do not support the motion, but I will support the amendment.

Ms Hunter: I am delighted to speak here today on a very important topic. Climate change is a real and unprecedented challenge for us all. We hold in our hands the responsibility for the future of the planet. The culture of how we view and care for our land must change. The SDLP will support the motion, and I welcome that the Committee tabled it. Unfortunately, we will not support the amendment because although we have no doubt that it is well-intentioned, we feel that it removes the urgency of the motion. We cannot wait any longer. We must act now.

Climate change is the biggest threat that we face not only to the environment but to our health, economic prosperity and global security. The overwhelming scientific consensus is that the impacts of climate change are accelerating and are largely driven by greenhouse gas emissions as a result of human activity. If we are to combat the devastating environmental, health, economic and societal impact of climate change, we have a responsibility to act responsibly as individuals. From beach clean-ups to climate strikes, we have seen the peace, positivity and passion shown by young people right across this island, who have taught us that it is time to listen, stand up and be the change. We can no longer go on with business as usual. We must act now.

Climate change is no longer a theory but an irrefutable fact. Young people across the world are leading the fight for action, and I stand with them. They will be here long after us, and they have a real opportunity to do something that no other generation in history has done, which is to leave the world in a better condition than that in which they got it. Having spoken with young activists directly, it is evident that our education on environmentalism must change to reflect the crisis that we are in. Climate education must be included more often in our curriculum. Given the right leadership and supported by the right legislation, we, too, can deliver change in a manner that will not just help to address the environmental challenges but that has the potential to bring about significant economic and societal benefit for all.

Climate breakdown is the seismic global challenge facing this generation. Failure to take action now will result in significant changes to our global climate and weather patterns. That will devastate developed and developing economies right across the world, leaving millions destitute and poverty-stricken. Global warming is happening at a much faster rate than anticipated. Extraordinary action is required now to keep global temperature increases below 1.5°C and to avert irreversible damage to our climate.

Over the past few years, millions of citizens right across Europe and the world have called on governments and the political establishment to take action on the climate emergency, for this generation and the next. The expressions of this crisis through protests in European capitals and school strikes on the streets across the North have their roots in social, economic, ecological and political upheaval. We know that this crisis will disproportionately affect those least able to bear the burden. Interventions designed to tackle the climate emergency must be robust, equitable and contribute to social justice more broadly. We cannot create a society that offers tax cuts to the wealthy while introducing new levies that disproportionately target the poor. We cannot decarbonise our economy without ensuring that clean energy is more affordable. We cannot deliver income equality without a green economy that creates high-quality jobs. We know that the ecological transition and economic equality must go hand in hand. Accepting and addressing the causes of the climate crisis is critical to avoid irreversible damage to ecosystems and economies.

The SDLP believes that protecting the environment is not an expensive political hobby horse. It is a moral, economic and health imperative that, if planned and implemented correctly, can benefit us all: people, communities and businesses. The future is in our hands. We owe it to our children and future generations, and we must act now.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Weir): I call Mr John Blair, and following that, Ms Bailey.

Mr Blair: On behalf of the Alliance Party, I support the need for a specific climate change Act for Northern Ireland. I stress the urgency of that commitment, a commitment that was made in the New Decade, New Approach agreement six months ago. I therefore support the motion as tabled by the Committee.

The urgency and importance of the issue and the required commitment mean that I am not in a position where I can support the amendment, and neither can my colleagues. The amendment, for those of us in Alliance at least, falls short on detailing the desired outcome and, whether intentional or not, dilutes the motion's intention of urgent action. The world is facing a climate emergency, with potentially disastrous consequences. The impacts of climate change are already being felt by some of the most vulnerable regions in our world. Locally, we are experiencing changing and variable weather and climate patterns, increases in flooding and changes in the natural environment, habitats and biodiversity in these islands, and these will only increase in magnitude if action is not taken urgently to reduce carbon emissions.

As the only region in the UK and Ireland without a specific net-zero emissions target, and despite laudable attempts, we have not reduced our greenhouse gas emissions in line with scientific advice. Since the introduction of the UK Climate Change Act 2008, greenhouse gas emissions have fallen across the UK by 27%, but, in Northern Ireland, by only 9%. If we have not reduced the UK's net greenhouse gas emissions to zero by 2030 — the position of the Alliance Party — we will not be able to pay our full part in avoiding devastating tipping points that would shatter the global economy and pose existential human threats.

This is the most critical decade for Northern Ireland. There is urgent need for new policies that will protect the environment. We must embrace the challenge and legislate for ambitious net-zero outcomes, with interim and sectoral targets, and we must invest in zero-carbon infrastructure and technologies.

The climate change Act, which is, as I said, incredibly delayed, must deliver meaningful improvement and implement mechanisms for ensuring that future environmental improvement plans are sufficiently ambitious and are relevant specifically to Northern Ireland. I have today, quite deliberately, levelled no criticism directly at the Department. There have been, as we all know, competing demands and periods without devolution, and there is remaining uncertainty about post-EU arrangements. It must be recognised as well, though, that the recent green growth strategy from the Department was a welcome step forward in environmental awareness and protection.

The motion is in the spirit of such protection, addressing our climate challenge and safeguarding our future. This is an interdepartmental issue requiring interdepartmental and cross-cutting solutions. I am pleased that the Committee tabled the motion and I am pleased to support it.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Thank you, Mr Blair, for such a succinct putting of your case. I also thank Ms Hunter and Mrs Barton for taking a similar approach.

12.15 pm

Ms Bailey: I am happy to support the motion, which, my party and I believe, is long overdue. I thank my Committee colleague Mr McGuigan for moving it.

I am pleased to see the acknowledgement of climate change as a human rights issue in the motion. For many, climate change may seem like a distant possibility — something far into the future — but that misconception is destructive. It is a falsehood, and it is our responsibility to face it head-on. Communities in the global south already experience the effects of climate change in the form of floods, droughts, hurricanes and other extreme weather events. Climate change causes death and destruction, threatens peace and security, increases social inequality on a global scale and threatens economic stability and our way of life. Climate change exacerbates chronic and contagious diseases, worsens food and water shortages, increases the risk of pandemics and aggravates mass displacement. The UN forecasts that there could be anywhere between 25 million and one billion environmental migrants by 2050. Think about that.

We see the social implications of climate change in Northern Ireland. In agriculture, for example, more and more small farmers are unable to withstand the extreme weather events that we now see occurring year-on-year, forcing them to leave the land. If we look at projected levels of flooding by 2050, we will know that we are likely looking at a housing crisis of epic proportions, as much of Belfast, among other areas, will end up under water.

The reality of climate change is that those who are least responsible for causing the problem are those who will feel its effects most acutely and are least well equipped to respond to it. Climate change will not be a great leveller. It will not affect us all equally. For all our declarations of a climate breakdown and an ecological and biodiversity crisis, the COVID-19 pandemic has shown us what an emergency looks like and how to respond to it. Climate change, like COVID-19, requires a global to local response and long-term thinking guided by science and the need to protect the most vulnerable. It requires the political will to make that fundamental change to the way in which we live our lives in order to respond to what is an existential threat to humanity and all life on Earth.

We need to start thinking about what a post-pandemic economy looks like. We all want to get back to normal, but normal is not working. As professor of green political economy John Barry has said:

“The coronavirus has cancelled the future. But that’s OK. It wasn’t a very good one to begin with.”

We have a unique chance here to change the course that we are on to irreversible climate catastrophe and to build back better. We need to rebuild with a transformative green new deal. Our COVID-19 recovery plan must decarbonise the economy in a way that tackles inequality and enhances the lives of ordinary people, our workers and our communities. The transition to a green economy must be underpinned by values of social justice and the principle that no one gets left behind.

Legislation is long overdue. Scotland and Wales have their own legislation, and both countries are set to meet and outperform their climate targets by 2020. In Northern Ireland, our emissions are not falling at anywhere near the same rate. We have increased our share of the total UK emissions. The New Decade, New Approach agreement includes new commitments to introduce legislation and targets for reducing emissions that are in line with the Paris agreement. We have seen little to no movement so far, however. We are already behind the rest of the UK. Work on the legislation needs to begin immediately, and it must be underpinned by ambitious, time-bound and legally binding sectoral targets. While there will be huge wins from the decarbonisation of the energy sector, that must be accompanied by reductions in others sectors, such as transport and agriculture, in order to meet long-term emissions reduction targets. We need to front-load those interim targets to ensure that we reach 80% reduction in emissions by 2030 and net zero by 2045 at least.

We must also recognise that solutions will not always be technological. While innovation has a part to play, nature-based solutions are best placed to tackle both the climate and biodiversity crises by restoring, protecting and managing carbon sinks and restoring native woodlands.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr Wells): Will the Member bring her remarks to a close, please?

Ms Bailey: Certainly. A climate change Act is well overdue. We are on the brink of disaster. The predicted temperature rise of 4° will be catastrophic for Northern Ireland. We have been given a rare opportunity: let us not lose it.

Dr Archibald: I support the motion; I do not support the amendment.

On 3 February, the Assembly declared a climate emergency. We also called for the Executive to fulfil the climate action and environmental commitments agreed in ‘New Decade, New Approach’ and for the commencement, as a matter of urgency, of a review of the Executive’s strategies to reduce carbon emissions in respect of the Paris Accord and the climate crisis. On 17 June, in response to my question for written answer that asked for an update on the New Decade, New Approach commitment to reviewing the Executive’s strategies to reduce carbon emissions, the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs said:

“I am still considering plans to meet climate change commitments and approaches outlined in ‘New Decade, New Approach’. I believe it is imperative that we build the evidence base and ensure government policy making has climate and environment at its core and that future policies and strategies can demonstrably deliver the outcomes people expect. The introduction of any new cross cutting approaches on climate change will of course require the support of the NI Executive.”

It is fair to say that the evidence base clearly exists already. It has done so for the past three decades; in fact, the evidence simply grows on the scale of the disaster of not acting. Frankly, I do not really know what “the outcomes people expect” means. Certainly, the Paris Accord commits to limiting global warming to 1.5° by the end of this century, and in NDNA, in January, parties here committed to implementing policies to meet that target. The Assembly has declared a climate emergency and called for the implementation of those commitments, so it is fair to say that people expect action that will achieve that and not simply rhetoric and can-kicking. People expect a climate change Act with the type of binding sectoral targets and strategies to achieve them that will meet our obligations on limiting global warming and preventing the catastrophic consequences of missing those targets.

On 1 June, the Assembly called for a fair, just and green economic recovery that demonstrates that we value our key workers, protects the most vulnerable, protects workers’ rights and our public services and commits to tackling economic challenges by a just transition to a more high-skilled, regionally balanced and sustainable economy. In planning for an economic and societal recovery from COVID-19 that will also be able to deal with the challenges of the climate crisis now and into the future, a recovery that is jobs-led and is fair and just would be hugely benefited by the introduction of a climate change Act with legally binding and ambitious sectoral targets.

I pick up on Mrs Barton’s point when I say that the reports are there, including the Committee on Climate Change’s report from last year. The evidence is there. There will of course be a consultation on any legislation that is brought forward, and that will be shaped by best practice. Certainly, when I talk to stakeholders and delivery partners, including those from business, energy, industry and academia, they are keen to make progress on decarbonisation but, to some extent, are working without a guide. They are planning loosely on the basis of the British targets, and that is not the localised, all-island approach that we need to protect our local economy and to ensure a just transition for our citizens.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Dr Archibald: No, I have quite a lot to get through, sorry.

It is vital that we have a genuine partnership approach that brings together representatives of all those who will be impacted; in reality, who is not? Here we mean representatives of workers, business, academia and, of course, agriculture and the agri-food industry, energy, the community and voluntary sector and government to plan for the just transition and economic recovery that will deliver jobs, prosperity and a better quality of life and outcomes for people that cannot simply be measured by GDP. Climate action must be based on social justice and must not disadvantage those who are least able to pay. That is why I have called for the setting up of a just transition commission to plan for the decarbonisation of our economy and society. We need to see real investment in skills development and infrastructure and in the sectors that will deliver this: the green economy, the creative economy, the digital economy, research and innovation and academia. We have huge potential on this island and should seek to build on that in a real, joined-up way through an all-island approach, because climate recognises no borders. The resilient economy and society that we want to create will be better enabled by supporting the development of secure local supply chains.

This is too crucial a time to dither and delay. The evidence for action is overwhelming, and there is a real need for the regulatory framework, through climate change legislation, to ensure our strategies on building a better and fairer economy and society work for all citizens and protect and enhance the environment and the planet for generations to come.

Mr Harvey: The issues addressed by the motion affect us all: the environment around us, the economy within which we do business and the energy that we all consume. The experience of lockdown afforded many of us the opportunity to enjoy Creation and benefit from an altogether less polluted environment. Northern Ireland has an incredibly natural and diverse environment. A recent research paper from academics at Queen's and Napier universities noted that there are 308 different soil types across Northern Ireland, compared with around 700 in the whole of England and Wales. That statistic alone testifies to the wealth of our natural resources.

I do not believe that any benefit is to be had from whipping up a frenzy of panic on climate change. Rather, we must approach the issues with positive action to ensure a cleaner environment and a sustainable future in the years ahead. For such a goal to be achieved, it will require the collective will not just of the House but of society as a whole. I am glad that positive action has already been taken by my party colleagues in the Executive to formulate a coordinated and strategic approach to tackling the challenge of climate change. It is incumbent on us all that we take our responsibilities seriously. It is worth reflecting on the achievements that have already been made in tackling carbon emissions and waste outputs. For instance, 47% of our electricity mix already comes from renewable energy forms, and that is a solid statistic on which to build.

Mr McGuigan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Harvey: Yes, I will.

Mr McGuigan: The Member talks about the reduction. Will he express disappointment, as I do, that, in the North, since 2008, our emissions have reduced by only 8%, when, on the island of Britain, they have fallen by 27%?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Harvey: I thank the Member for his comment.

I commend the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (DAERA) for the work currently under way, particularly in relation to the green growth strategy within the delivery framework and the Forests for our Future initiative, which aims to plant 18 million trees by 2030. That is the sort of positive action that is required. Similarly, the efforts to tackle plastic pollution, through the deposit return scheme, thereby ensuring that the plastic remains in the economy, will be of great benefit and quality to our environment. Prosperity agreements already encourage business to rethink how they can do business, creating greener and more sustainable solutions. As the Agriculture Minister has stated, sustainability must be our guiding light in all that we do.

Sadly, the effects of COVID-19 are already being felt, with job losses and economic uncertainty. We must ensure that our efforts around climate issues benefit people on the ground. Exciting opportunities lie ahead, as we work to transform the economy from high- to low-carbon, with the potential for sustainable job creation as a result. As we focus on emerging technologies, it is great to know that we can build on firm foundations such as our manufacturing sector, as we look forward towards carbon alternatives, such as hydrogen, in the energy strategy.

Mr Givan: I appreciate that the Member gives way and note that he does while others choose not to. That is their prerogative.

Does the Member agree that, in having a sustainable way forward on the issue, we should not take the lead of the Republic of Ireland, which has spent in excess of €100 million buying credits to farm out its responsibilities to others while continuing to fail to meet its international obligations? We are best placed to tackle the issue, and we should not engage in virtue signalling, which is what we hear from quite a number of Members. We need real, tangible, sustainable ways forward to make sure that we have a green and pleasant land in this country.

Mr Harvey: I thank the Member for his comments.

Northern Ireland undoubtedly has the innovation, skills and motivation across all sectors and industries to play a leading role in the development of green energy for the benefit not only of our environment but of our economy for the future.

The new energy strategy will likely set ambitious targets and actions for a fair and just transition to a zero-carbon society as we move towards the UK's 2050 commitment date.

There is much to be done, but the work has already commenced. Sustainability will lead to economic growth and, hopefully, future prosperity for everyone. We must use the resources that we have been blessed with wisely.

12.30 pm

Mr Durkan: Climate change is one of the most serious threats that we face, not just to the environment but to our health, economic prosperity and global security. As has been said, the overwhelming scientific consensus is that the impacts of climate change are accelerating and that they are largely driven by greenhouse gas emissions as a result of human activity. If we are to combat the devastating environmental, health, economic and societal impacts of climate change, we have a responsibility to act globally, locally and as individuals.

Given the right leadership and supported by the right legislation, we can deliver change in a manner that will not just help address the environmental challenges but that has the potential to bring about significant economic and societal benefits. That is not the first time that I have said those words. That is almost verbatim what I said in 2015, when, as the Environment Minister, I issued a discussion document that clearly set out the rationale for climate change legislation. At that time, there was a clear idea of how that legislation should look. It was our view that the Northern Ireland climate change Bill should:

“Make provisions for a long term target to reduce greenhouse gas emissions ... Make provisions for interim targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions ... Place a duty to set limits in carbon budgets on the total amount of greenhouse gas emissions that can be emitted ... Provide powers to request specified public bodies to report on their transition towards a low carbon economy and their plans to adapt to the effects of climate change [and] Contain provisions to establish a Northern Ireland Committee on Climate Change or to designate an existing body to exercise advisory functions should it be decided that this is appropriate”.

Finally, our climate change Bill must:

“Contain a requirement for Northern Ireland to obtain an independent assessment for progress made towards implementing the objectives, proposals and policies set out in the Northern Ireland Climate Change Adaptation Programme.”

That needed to be done as a matter of urgency five years ago. It needs to be done as a matter of emergency now.

The vast majority of responses to that discussion document were positive, with people and groups recognising the need for us to act. Support was not unanimous, though, with reservations and, in some cases, outright opposition, coming, not unexpectedly, from certain quarters in industry and agriculture. The commercial concerns expressed have perennially been reflected in political opposition or, in today's case, resistance to a climate change Act from some quarters in the House. That is OK. It is natural to have different views and healthy to hear those views.

As Mr Hamilton said, some good work has been done with industry, through prosperity agreements as one vehicle, to demonstrate the economic benefits and opportunities that going green can create. We have moved, or at least are moving, beyond the old-world view that environmental regulation must constrain economic performance and productivity. It is possible to create a better environment and a stronger economy. Standing still will deliver neither. We certainly stood still with no Government here for three years. It is time that we got moving.

I was going to say that things here happen at a glacial pace, but thanks to global warming the glaciers are probably moving quicker than we are. Having said that, I must acknowledge Minister Poots's green growth plans, the visionary work of Nichola Mallon as Minister for Infrastructure and the great work that has been done by many of our councils, including Derry City and Strabane District Council.

Mr Stewart: Will the Member support our amendment?

Mr Durkan: We will not support the amendment. We believe that it kicks the can further down the road.

The Department has, I believe, done enough work to know what needs to be done. As a Bill makes its way through a robust legislative process, there will be ample opportunity for engagement, evidence gathering, amendments and improvement.

Commitment to advancing this legislation is a cornerstone of the New Decade, New Approach agreement —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask the Member to draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Durkan: — an agreement that has brought us all back here. Let us honour that commitment. We need an Act, and we need to act.

Mr Muir: In my maiden speech I fully supported the Assembly's declaration of a climate emergency and of the climate commitments in the 'New Decade, New Approach' document and said that they should be acted upon as the bare minimum. In some respects, everything has changed six months later as a result of COVID-19. The need for us to act urgently in response to the climate emergency has not, however, changed one bit. I fully support the motion, including the timetable for the Minister to introduce a climate change Act.

I will focus my comments today in my role as the Alliance Party's finance and infrastructure spokesperson. At this point, I should declare that I was previously an employee of Translink and a councillor on Ards and North Down Borough Council.

Rapid decarbonisation, green growth and a green recovery will not happen unless we significantly increase our investment in the relevant infrastructure. It is of real importance that we have a fit-for-purpose planning system that enables plans such as the North/South interconnector to proceed and to avoid having wind farms being stuck in the planning system for years awaiting approval, as that will enable more renewable electricity to flow into our grid. Investing in our broadband network, particularly in rural areas, is essential to enable more people to work remotely and to avoid lengthy commutes. Bringing forward a scheme to incentivise home insulation, as the Chancellor announced for England and Wales two weeks ago, could play a significant role in reducing household energy consumption. Those are just a few steps that we could take immediately to deliver the green infrastructure and investment that we need.

First, however, we must better utilise our existing borrowing powers. This year, we have not drawn down a penny of the available borrowing from the National Loans Fund, and we have handed back millions of pounds in financial transactions capital. That is inexcusable at a time when we should be investing in our future. It only serves to make the case for a national infrastructure commission even stronger. Such a body could advise the Executive on, and oversee the delivery of, a green infrastructure strategy and could identify the projects best suited to deliver green growth — projects that are shovel-worthy as well as shovel-ready.

The second aspect of our response to the climate emergency that I want to touch on today is how we travel. Transport accounts for 20% of Northern Ireland's CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. It will be key to achieving future targets in any climate change Act, should one ever be brought before the Assembly. Translink's current financial predicament as a result of the slump in passenger numbers is no reason to give up on public transport. We should, instead, be seeking to build back better, rivalling other parts of Europe in their investment in sustainable transport, rather than continuing the chronic underinvestment that has bedevilled Northern Ireland for years.

The new Government in the South have committed to investing in new public transport in a ratio of two to one to new roads. We in Northern Ireland must adopt something similar in our response to the climate emergency. We have the tools right here to make our public transport system as green as anywhere in the world. Wrightbus is already delivering cutting-edge hydrogen and electric buses that, with the right support, could be as cheap as their fossil-fuel counterparts in the very near future. By working with firms such as Wrightbus we can tackle the climate emergency, ensure better air quality, and support economic recovery all at the same time.

As well as investing in public transport, we must also rapidly increase our commitment to active travel. The increased provision for pedestrians and cyclists that was brought in during COVID-19 should be made permanent. It should also be built upon to catalyse the shift in how we travel.

In closing, I fully endorse the motion and the onus that it places upon the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to act quickly. However, responding to climate emergency is the obligation of every Minister and every Member. Financing green infrastructure investment and decarbonising how we travel must be essential components of our collective response.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call Matthew O'Toole. The Member will have the remaining three minutes of the debate.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I will try to be concise. I echo the sentiments of my colleagues Cara Hunter and Mark Durkan and those of the many others who have supported the motion.

A few weeks ago, in the Assembly, the Minister for Agriculture set out his vision for a green growth strategy. The Minister told us that the data and evidence for the increase in carbon emissions is irrefutable and that Northern Ireland needs to do much more to meet the UK Government's target of reaching zero net carbon by 2050. Who could refute that data?

Going back to some of the points that have been made, the Member for Strangford said that Northern Ireland had done well. Philip McGuigan gave a bit of the context relating to the reduction in our emissions since 2008. Between 1990 and 2017, in comparison with other parts of the UK, Northern Ireland emissions fell by 18%, Wales by 25%, England by 45% and Scotland fell by 48%. Paul Givan was drawing contrasts with the Republic of Ireland. It may well be the case that they need to be more ambitious in their climate reduction targets, but, as others have said; they are doing that and have an ambitious series of targets in their Programme for Government.

I welcome the sentiments expressed by the Minister a few weeks ago. We do have much more work to do, and that needs to start now. The sentiments were strongly backed up by the Committee on Climate Change progress report to the UK Parliament that said that the devolved Administrations need to step up to the plate. We know that this proposed legislation was specifically mentioned within the 'New Decade, New Approach' document, and it is right that we need to step up to the plate. The Assembly has recognised the gravity of the climate emergency. In one of our first sittings this year, we passed a motion describing the situation as a "climate emergency". That puts an onus on us to deliver this legislation.

It is critical that we now move on from those declarations, to the specific action of delivering a climate change Act. The impact of having no binding climate change legislation in Northern Ireland is already apparent. There is considerable disparity in emissions reductions progress between Northern Ireland and other parts of the UK. Legally binding targets will move us beyond the status quo of vague aspirations with minimal practical implementation, and towards serious long-term and interim targets. We are the worst performing UK region for emissions reductions and we cannot wait any longer.

I am coming to the end of my three minutes. In closing, and to keep my remarks brief, we have been a backwater on climate action for far too long. If six months is a short enough deadline to crash out of the EU without preparing our businesses for it, then I am afraid that three months is more than long enough for the Minister to bring —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member's time is up.

Mr O'Toole: — forth climate change legislation. As my colleague has said, we do support the motion. We do not support the amendment because —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member's time is up.

Mr O'Toole: — we have waited long enough for specific legislation. I commend this motion, and those colleagues who have brought this to the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I now call the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, Edwin Poots, to respond to the debate.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond.

A three-month time frame is impossible to achieve, and it is ridiculous to ask for it. The Member who has just spoken says that it is adequate time, yet his Party had five years in this office to bring forward a climate change Act and did not do it. It is quite ridiculous, Mr O'Toole, that the party of which you are a member, want me to do that in three months.

Northern Ireland has reduced its carbon footprint by 20% since 1990. Do we believe that more needs to be done? Of course more needs to be done. Transport, energy and agriculture are the big players and account for 65% of greenhouse gasses. What are we going to do? Are we going to pass motions which basically replicate what others have done and have not successfully challenged the greenhouse gas problem, or are we going to take actions? I am not a politician who gets too hung up on motions and regulations. I want to see actions and things that will make tangible differences in Northern Ireland and beyond.

When I was previously Minister —

Mr Carroll: I thank the Minister for giving way. I agree with him that motions are important, but that actions are essential.

He may or may not be aware, that there is an application on the Minister for the Economy's desk to allow for the extraction of petroleum across the North. Would he agree with me that rejecting that application would put those actions into words?

Mr Poots: That is entirely a matter for the people who are looking at it. Importing gas from Russia or importing oil from the Middle East does not necessarily strike me as being more environmentally friendly than doing it here. Nonetheless, that is for those people. I have no idea whatsoever about that application, and I will not comment on it. It may come across my desk, with factual information that I can analyse then.

We need to do more when it comes to these issues. The last time that I was Environment Minister, the issue of recycling and waste was brought to me. At that point, our recycling rate was around 25%; it was in the low 20s, actually. They said, "We could aim for a target of 40% by 2020", but I said, "No. We're not doing that. We're going for 50%". They said, "It won't be achieved". It was achieved. When I became Minister, we were getting nowhere on renewable energy because of the planning legislation that existed, so we brought in the appropriate planning legislation. As a consequence of that, Northern Ireland is now producing over 40% of its energy from renewable sources. Mrs Barton quite rightly raised the issue of the utilisation of that, and a course of work needs to be done to address that. Nonetheless, we believe in actions, not words. What I hear from a lot of the Members who have come forward today are words. Having delayed the Assembly doing anything for three years, they want me to do something in three months. I want to ensure that we get those actions.

Mr McGuigan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Poots: Your colleague will have an opportunity to speak later, and you had 10 minutes.

Lord Deben produced a report for Westminster in which he set out a series of actions. He is looking for the following: investments in low-carbon and climate-resilient infrastructure; support for reskilling, retraining, innovation and research for a net-zero, well-adapted economy; upgrades to our homes and the building of new homes, ensuring that they are fit for the future; action to make it easy for people to walk, cycle and work remotely; tree planting, peatland restoration, green spaces and other green infrastructure. That cuts across not just my Department but all Departments. I want to know what the ministerial colleagues of the individuals who have been speaking in this debate are doing in their Departments, because this issue is not solely for DAERA. Every Department has a role. Every Department has a responsibility.

Already in DAERA, in spite of COVID and in spite of all the problems, delays and distractions as a consequence, in the first six months, we have been able to bring forward the Forests for our Future strategy. We have also been able to bring forward our green growth strategy. I can tell you that we are working on programmes that will make real, significant change. Members of my staff are working extremely hard on developing ideas that will drive real reductions in greenhouse gases in my Department and, I trust, elsewhere.

Ms Bailey: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Poots: We will see how time goes.

You will not find this Minister wanting when it comes to dealing with these issues. We will see who steps up to the plate. We will see what other Ministers will do in support of what I want to achieve when it comes to environmental issues. It will be extremely challenging. I will not go forward with a very limited proposal. I want to see a programme that will deliver real, tangible changes to the environment.

I have to say that the quality of scientific work has been challenged on the back of COVID-19. We have been told for years that cows make a dreadful contribution to greenhouse gases. Interestingly enough, during the COVID period, the number of cows did not go down, but greenhouse gases certainly did so. Subsequently, other scientists are indicating that the methane produced by cows has had relatively little impact on the environment. So, on that, we need qualitative science. I am thankful that organisations like Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) exist in Northern Ireland. We need qualitative science to demonstrate, in a very unequivocal way, the real contribution of agriculture. It is very easy to say that a cow produces so much methane but no one is saying what a cow does with regard to sequestration of carbon. She eats that lovely green grass; that green grass has roots that goes down into the soil and that green grass captures carbon and takes it down into the soil. The cow actually tramples grass down into the soil along with it, particularly cows that are grazed in the extensive systems in Northern Ireland.

I am conscious that Sinn Féin are bringing forward motions that would introduce legislation in a rushed way, and that would, inevitably, damage farming and make hill farming unsustainable in Northern Ireland. Mr McAleer and Mr McGuigan are talking out of both sides of their mouths. Mr McAleer is constantly protesting for hill farmers and Mr McGuigan is constantly protesting on something that would damage hill farmers. We need to be very clear about it; the legislation that has been introduced in other places would be damaging to Northern Ireland's agriculture and, consequently, damaging to the hill farmers who Mr McAleer likes to talk about a lot. I will not be having it; it will not happen on my watch that we damage the people who are trying to make a living on the hills, because those people are making a positive contribution. I want to ensure that we have the scientific evidence to demonstrate that they are making a positive contribution. Carbon capture exists in our trees, our hedges and our grasslands. The sequestration that takes place is significant, and we need the science to back us up and to demonstrate that we are doing some things that are real and are truly beneficial.

Mr Muir mentioned the North/South interconnector. The parties that he is going to go through the Lobbies with are the parties that have been most opposed to the North/South interconnector. I agree that we need to have an electricity system that is fit for purpose. People need energy and there needs to be a greater utilisation of that green energy, through the North/South interconnector, than is currently the case, but the parties that he will vote with are opposed to it.

I welcome Translink's recent recognition that there are quality buses available in Northern Ireland. It took them a long time to identify that there are buses manufactured here, and I welcome the fact that they are now acquiring them. Translink have their own pieces of work to step up to. Running empty buses or trains is not good for the environment. I recognise that public transport is critical, going forward, but it is critical that they make the right decisions with the limited funding that is available to all Departments, including Health and Education, to provide for the needs of the people of Northern Ireland.

Speaking of education, Ms Hunter raised an issue around the environment. If she checks the facts, she will find that Northern Ireland is leading when it comes to education on environmental issues. All our Eco-Schools are registered and have innovative programmes and activities delivering on issues, such as Rethink Waste, which I introduced. There are strong conditions for the Government to reinforce climate positive behaviours that have emerged during the lockdown, including increased remote working, cycling and walking. I believe that our leadership will play a key role in forming new social norms and expectations. I assure Members that my focus, as AERA Minister, is to find ways where we can all work together and achieve those positive outcomes, for nature and for business, and tackle the challenges of climate change.

Therefore, I do not support the motion. I cannot support it. We should not use language such as “emergency” or “crisis”. Northern Ireland climate change legislation should not be rushed through and forced upon the Assembly without its being properly informed and considered. We need greater clarity and evidence on what should go into legislation and what that can deliver for Northern Ireland. Without that, there is a real risk of rushing through something that we would later find out has a detrimental effect and puts up barriers for businesses and industry, debilitating Northern Ireland’s realisation of a just transition to a low-carbon, green economy.

I should say that we are leaving the European Union. Over the period in which we were in the European Union, it produced 2,800 regulations and laws for agriculture alone. What I hear from people on the other side of the Chamber is that there should be more regulation. I do not want more regulation; I want more action. One achieves much more by giving people leadership than by bullying them. We can give them that leadership. We can demonstrate to the public, unequivocally, that the actions that we take will actually be of real benefit to the environment. Bringing in regulations such as that which requires a farmer to request permission from DAERA to clean out what we refer to in the country as a “sheugh” did not do one bit of good for the environment — not one bit of good. It was just another regulation. I am not interested in waste-of-time regulations, which are a burden to individuals and to the Government to have to implement. I am interested in taking real action and actually reducing the greenhouse gases and carbon that we produce, looking at how we can sequester it better, looking at how we can do things better with regard to working from home, and all those issues. That is something that all Ministers, in all our Departments, need to work on together. I am happy to give leadership on that.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call John Stewart to make a winding-up speech on the amendment. You will have up to five minutes.

Mr Stewart: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker, for allowing me to make a winding-up speech on the amendment. I want to say at the outset that I certainly acknowledge the spirit and intent of the motion. Our amendment was not designed to impede its intentions in any way but rather to inform what would, ultimately, form the climate change Act, which we, as a party, support.

Having watched the Committee, I believe that there was no real insight or justification for what seems like an arbitrary figure of three months. It is a figure that was plucked from the air. Equally, it could be asked, then, why it was not three weeks. I do not see where that figure has come from. Many of those who argue most adamantly that it needs to be done quickly seem to forget the fact that they prevented the House from sitting for three years, during which time the emergency has moved on.

Mr O’Toole: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stewart: I am happy to if I will get an extra minute.

Mr O’Toole: I will be brief. I appreciate what the Member is saying about the three months, and what the Minister said, too. I have two issues, however. One is whether he has a different timescale in mind, and, two, whether he accepts that a consultation process could be brought forward on the legislation, draft legislation could be brought forward that would be debated in the House, and stakeholders could give their views on that?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Stewart: I thank the Member for his intervention. Yes, I do have a time frame in mind. Given the conditions that we are in — in the middle the biggest health crisis that we have ever seen — and that the Executive have a lot of work going on, a consultation could be launched right now to be finished by the end of the year, and a climate change Act enacted in 2021 to celebrate and mark the centenary of Northern Ireland and acknowledge the work that we need to do to cherish and promote our green and pleasant land. Therefore, yes, while I do support that, I do not think that an arbitrary figure of three months, which has been plucked from the air, is one that should, in any way, be binding at this stage.

Climate change is a global crisis. Record-breaking temperatures across the globe, including 38°C in Siberia this year, with high temperatures and drought affecting food production, have impacts everywhere. Northern Ireland is not exempt. We have seen rising emissions here and poorer air quality, with higher pollution levels in Belfast than in other cities around the UK. Thankfully, those levels have gone down with the reduction in traffic during the COVID-19 lockdown. It would, however, be worrying to see them go back up again. We also have the impact of coastal erosion and rising tides here. Northern Ireland will be affected by climate change.

Equally, changes that will be brought about by Brexit mean that Northern Ireland will also be in a unique situation when it comes to the repatriation of EU powers on climate change and the environment.

Regardless of legislation in London or Brussels, we need to act. We have the opportunity to bring about real change in transforming our economy and our environment to help to mitigate many of the worst aspects of increasing greenhouse gas emissions and make a valid contribution to dealing with climate change.

1.00 pm

As the party’s spokesperson on climate change, I support Northern Ireland-specific legislation in the form of an all-encompassing climate change Act on Northern Ireland targets and emissions, on the need for an independent environmental protection agency, and the inclusion of our party commitment to see and deliver zero net carbon by 2035.

As a result of the previous Stormont Executive, we are the only Administration in the UK and Ireland not to produce its own laws to cut carbon and to improve and protect our environment. As a result of the hiatus of three years of absolutely nothing here, we are even further down the line. I find it somewhat ironic that some people bang a drum about the emergency when we could have been dealing with the issue in 2017, 2018 and 2019.

I am not saying, Mr Deputy Speaker, that legislation is the panacea to all problems. There is undoubtedly an awful lot of virtue signalling on the issue. The impression, sadly, for too long has been given that Northern Ireland does not take the issue seriously, which is unfortunate, to say the least.

In my maiden speech two or three months ago, I said that what we can do here can be summed up in two words: mitigation and adaptation. We need to mitigate and address the causes of climate change, and adapt, making the necessary changes to reduce and negate the effects of climate change, such as protecting our sea walls and improving our coastal communities against the vulnerable impacts of climate change. Neither of those can be done in a silo mentality in one Department in our Executive or without a link to local government, numerous NGOs, our businesses and every level of society. That sort of work will require a full, in-depth, up-to-date public consultation, which could be carried out now, ahead of getting this work done, and a climate change Act implemented in 2021 to mark the centenary of Northern Ireland and to preserve our green and pleasant land for many years to come.

The time has come to act. As I said, the amendment is not intended in any way, shape or form to take away from the intent of the motion. I agree with many Members' comments. We are all on the same page about identifying the importance of the issue. However, the introduction of an Act within three months, as the Minister said, is far too obtuse. That does not give us an opportunity to consult fully. Consultation could be done this year, with legislation enacted next year.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call on the Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, Declan McAleer, to conclude and make a winding-up speech on the motion.

Mr McAleer (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): I welcome the wide-ranging and robust debate. Before I go to some of the contributions, I want to pick up on a couple of things. I am glad to hear that the Minister has noted that I have been pushing the case for hill farmers, because he certainly has not been doing that. Since he became Minister, some of his decisions have been to the detriment of hill farmers: he did not return the ANC payments; he blocked the transition towards the flat rate; and not a penny of the £25 million that he allocated recently will go to the hills. At least my party and I are here to advocate for hill farmers because it is becoming increasingly clear that the Minister of Agriculture is certainly not the Minister of hill farmers. I am glad that he is reading the farming press, where he will read that I am advocating the case for hill farmers.

Mr McGuigan: I thank the Member for giving way. I congratulate him for sticking up for hill farmers. The Minister made a number of accusations and assertions on issues that were not even included in my contribution. He does not need to take my word for it. He can take the word of the Ulster Farmers' Union, which, in a briefing paper, said that climate change is "impacting" on farmers and needs to be addressed. It has also said that farmers in the North need to be part of the solution, they have signed up to tackling emissions within the greenhouse gas implementation partnership, and they are impacted by climate change and are therefore directly aware of the challenges. Research and new technologies are needed to help industry towards zero net carbon.

Mr McAleer: Thank you for that intervention. I agree with one thing that the Minister said: farmers play a huge role. They are environmental custodians. I agree with what he said about the sequestration of cattle and the important role that they have for the environment and the climate. They are not separate; they are the same.

Climate has a huge impact. As a representative of the Sperrins, I know of the impact suffered in the Glenelly area, three years ago, when a huge landslide devastated farming in that area. Farmers are still dealing with that loss, and the Minister has yet to deal with it by way of compensation or support for those farmers. I have seen how the climate has impacted on those farmers who suffered that devastation. On top of that has come the COVID crisis, the loss of the ANC payment, and the fact that many of them will be getting nothing out of the £25 million COVID scheme for which the Minister recently set the criteria. I hope that he will consider hill farmers in a tranche of the £7 million that he has retained.

I turn now to the debate. Philip McGuigan highlighted concerns regarding the dangers of global warming and said that the lack of action was alarming. He called for leadership and ambition and said that action needed to be taken now.

Rosemary Barton welcomed the opportunity for renewed support for a climate change Act. She called for a sustainable way of moving forward and said that there must be a combined effort to reduce emissions in an effort to move towards a zero carbon society. She also said that we need to have a consultation period for our legislation to identify the needs and the gaps that exist.

William Irwin said that this was an unquantifiable issue and that there was an unquantifiable cost. He referred to the important role of farming in relation to the motion. He does not support the motion. He also spoke of the need to ensure that the agri-industry remains profitable.

The SDLP's Cara Hunter said that we cannot wait any longer and that we must act now. She talked of the growing evidence of the impact of climate change and of the important role of young people in the area. She said that issues relating to climate change should be incorporated into the curriculum and that young people were leading campaigns on climate change. She said that failure to take action now will have a devastating impact and that that impact is felt across the world. She also stated that we must ensure that disadvantaged people are not disadvantaged even more so.

John Blair talked about the importance of the motion and its spirit of protection. He asked for support for the motion and said that we now needed to act here. He supports the motion and welcomes the green growth strategy.

Claire Bailey said that this was long overdue and that it was a human rights and health issue which threatens our way of life. She said that all people would not be affected equally. She also said that this was a rare opportunity and that we must not lose it. She spoke of the need to think about how things will look, post-pandemic, and of the need to be guided by science and political will. She said that this is a unique chance.

Caoimhe Archibald said that climate is at the core of new policies. She said that evidence exists, and is growing, and that we need an Act that contains targets. The House calls for a fair, just and green economic recovery, and Caoimhe Archibald stressed that the evidence exists to achieve that. She also made the point that there would be a consultation period before any new legislation came in. It would help shape the final Act that is agreed. She said that climate action must be based on social justice. She also said that there was overwhelming evidence that action is required. She spoke of the huge potential that exists on the island and said that climate change does not recognise boundaries or borders.

Harry Harvey made reference to the diverse environment and said that we have a wealth of natural resources. He does not see the need to whip ourselves up into a frenzy over the environment but called for positive actions on climate change. He commended DAERA and made reference to prosperity agreements which encourage business sustainability. He said that the North has innovative skills for green energy and new energy strategy and targets, and that much more must be done.

Mark Durkan said that we have a responsibility to act to combat the impact of climate change. He said that, in 2015, when he was Minister, there was a clear idea of how legislation should look. He said that we have a responsibility to act and that, if we did, it would bring benefit to all. He also made reference to the green growth strategy. Furthermore, he said that there is ample opportunity to engage and plenty of evidence to move ahead with a climate change Act.

Andrew Muir said that rapid decarbonisation and green growth would not happen without investment in infrastructure. He also mentioned the importance of broadband and the funding of it. He spoke of the importance of investing in sustainable transport and active travel.

Matthew O'Toole of the SDLP said that, between 1990 and 2007, emissions here fell by 18% but that there was a greater drop in other regions. He said that the South of Ireland's Programme for Government contains ambitious targets and legally binding targets to move them in the right direction. He said that we cannot wait any longer and that this has been a backwater for too long. He supports the motion, but not the amendment.

Mr Poots said that the time frame is impossible to achieve and that it was a ridiculous time frame. He said that we have a reduced carbon footprint but more needs to be done, and he wants to see things that will make a tangible difference. He said that he is a person of actions and he wants to do things that will make a change.

Ms Bailey: I thank the Member for giving way. It is interesting that you focus on that and it was good to hear the Minister point out that the time frame was unachievable. He went on to explain that, when we set deadlines, come up with strategies and put them out, we actually exceed the targets that are set in them.

Mr McAleer: Thank you for the intervention, Clare. He questioned the science regarding the impact of farming on greenhouse gas emissions, and he said that rushed legislation could damage farming so we should not be rushed. He does not want to get tangled up in a whole web of EU regulations.

Mr Givan: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he recognise the tangible effort that could be made with regard to procurement, for example, which his party has responsibility for in the Department of Finance, by reducing transportation costs by sourcing things locally and by not sourcing things from countries that are some of the biggest emitters of carbon? Is that not an action that his party could take now?

Mr McAleer: Yes. The Minister said that any actions with regard to climate change would be cross-cutting across Departments, so absolutely. Again, in going back to the Minister, he drew it across all of the Departments — which is quite right — but it is his Department that must take the initiative of bringing in a climate Act in the first place.

There are a few more points. With regard to the — where was I now? You have knocked me off course, Mr Givan. [Laughter.] Was it was a plan?

Mr Stewart wound on the amendment and he questioned why the three-month time frame was picked. He supports an Act for here —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr McAleer: — and the intentions of the motion, but he queried the time frame.

In conclusion, I thank you all and I commend the motion.

Question put, That the amendment be made.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Clear the Lobbies. The Question will be put again in three minutes. I remind Members that they should continue to uphold social distancing and that Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come into the Chamber.

1.15 pm

Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that, if possible, it would be preferable if we could avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before the Assembly divides I remind Members that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly currently has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. It is important that social distancing continues to be observed in the Chamber during any Division. In order to facilitate that, I ask that any Members in the Chamber who are not due to vote in person should consider leaving the Chamber until the Division has concluded. Members who wish to vote in the Lobby on the opposite side of the Chamber from where they are sitting should leave the Chamber via the nearest door and enter the relevant Lobby via the Rotunda. The remaining Members who are sitting closest to the Lobby Door should enter the Lobby first. Any Member who has voted may then wish to leave the Chamber until the Division has concluded. However, any Member who needs to vote in both Lobbies should not leave the Chamber. I remind Members of the need to be patient at all times, to follow the instructions of the Lobby Clerks and to respect the need for social distancing while voting.

Ayes 36; Noes 47.

AYES

Dr Aiken, Mr Allen, Mrs Barton, Mr Beattie, Mr M Bradley, Ms P Bradley, Mr K Buchanan, Mr T Buchanan, Mr Buckley, Ms Bunting, Mr Butler, Mrs Cameron, Mr Chambers, Mr Clarke, Mrs Dodds, Mr Dunne, Mr Easton, Mrs Foster, Mr Frew, Mr Givan, Mr Harvey, Mr Hilditch, Mr Humphrey, Mr Irwin, Mr Lyons, Miss McIlveen, Mr Middleton, Mr Nesbitt, Mr Newton, Mr Poots, Mr Robinson, Mr Stalford, Mr Stewart, Mr Storey, Mr Swann, Mr Weir.

Tellers for the Ayes: Mrs Barton and Mr Stewart.

NOES

Ms Anderson, Dr Archibald, Ms Armstrong, Ms Bailey, Mr Blair, Mr Boylan, Ms S Bradley, Mr Carroll, Mr Catney, Mr Dickson, Ms Dillon, Ms Dolan, Mr Durkan, Ms Ennis, Ms Flynn, Mr Gildernew, Ms Hargey, Ms Hunter, Mr Kearney, Ms C Kelly, Mrs D Kelly, Mr G Kelly, Ms Kimmins, Mrs Long, Mr Lynch, Mr Lyttle, Mr McAleer, Mr McCann, Mr McCrossan, Mr McGlone, Mr McGrath, Mr McGuigan, Mr McHugh, Ms McLaughlin, Mr McNulty, Ms Mallon, Mr Muir, Ms Mullan, Mr Murphy, Ms Ni Chuilin, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mr O'Toole, Ms Rogan, Mr Sheehan, Ms Sheerin, Miss Woods.

Tellers for the Noes: Mr McAleer and Mr McGuigan.

The following Members' votes were cast by their notified proxy in this Division:

Ms Armstrong voted for Mr Blair, Mr Dickson, Mrs Long, Mr Lyttle and Mr Muir.

Mr K Buchanan voted for Mr M Bradley, Ms P Bradley, Mr T Buchanan, Mr Buckley, Ms Bunting, Mr Clarke, Mrs Dodds, Mr Dunne, Mr Easton, Mrs Foster, Mr Frew, Mr Givan, Mr Harvey, Mr Hilditch, Mr Humphrey, Mr Irwin, Mr Lyons, Miss McIlveen, Mr Newton, Mr Poots, Mr Robinson, Mr Stalford, Mr Storey and Mr Weir.

Mr Butler voted for Mr Allen and Mr Swann.

Mr McGrath voted for Ms S Bradley, Mr Catney, Mr Durkan, Ms Hunter, Mrs D Kelly, Ms Mallon, Mr McCrossan, Mr McGlone, Ms McLaughlin, Mr McNulty and Mr O'Toole.

Mr O'Dowd voted for Ms Anderson, Dr Archibald, Mr Boylan, Ms Dillon, Ms Dolan, Ms Ennis, Ms Flynn, Mr Gildernew, Ms Hargey, Mr Kearney, Ms C Kelly, Mr G Kelly, Ms Kimmins, Mr Lynch, Mr McAleer [Teller, Noes], Mr McCann, Mr McGuigan [Teller, Noes],

Mr McHugh, Ms Mullan, Mr Murphy, Ms Ni Chuilin, Mrs O'Neill, Ms Rogan, Mr Sheehan and Ms Sheerin.

Miss Woods voted for Ms Bailey.

Question accordingly negatived.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): We will take a brief pause because other Members may wish to come into the Chamber again.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly acknowledges the ongoing climate and biodiversity emergency and calls by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change for rapid decarbonisation; reiterates the Assembly's declaration of a climate and biodiversity emergency, the Assembly's demands for the urgent introduction of a climate change Act, the all-party New Decade, New Approach commitment to delivering a climate change Act, and the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs' commitment to a green growth strategy; recognises climate change as a human rights issue that risks deepening existing inequalities; further recognises the need for a stimulus-led, just and green recovery to restart economic activity following the economic disruption arising from COVID-19; calls on the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to introduce a climate change Act with legally binding and ambitious sectoral emission reduction targets, and to ensure that any economic recovery strategy is underpinned by rapid decarbonisation and a just transition to protect jobs through upskilling people in carbon-intensive sectors; and further calls on the Minister to introduce this Act in the Assembly within three months.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): An urgent oral question has been accepted by the Speaker. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting for about 15 minutes in order for the Minister to take a break. The sitting will resume at 1.50 pm, when the next item of business will be an urgent oral question to the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs on waste storage at the Edenderry Industrial Estate.

The sitting was suspended at 1.35 pm and resumed at 1.50 pm.

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Waste Storage at Edenderry Industrial Estate

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): William Humphrey has given notice of a question for urgent oral answer to the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. I remind Members that, if they wish to ask a supplementary question, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary question.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, given the health and safety issues arising from waste storage at Edenderry Industrial Estate, what action his Department and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) are taking to ensure that the offending material is removed urgently.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): My Department has actively engaged with the site operator and representatives of the landowners and directed that the waste materials deposited at the site be removed as a matter of urgency. Subsequently, the landowner has engaged a legitimate waste management company, and works to remove waste from the Edenderry site have commenced today. My Department is present at the site and will continue to monitor progress daily. A full and thorough investigation is under way, and my Department will ensure that those responsible for the activity are vigorously pursued and face the maximum criminal sanction.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the House for allowing the question to be asked today.

Minister, the communities in Woodvale and mid-Shankill have been plagued by rats and infested with flies and have had to endure dreadful smells over the past number of weeks. Belfast City Council and the Northern Environment Agency were far too slow to react. Assurances were given that clearance would start before the Twelfth holidays, yet attempts were made on Saturday to dump more material in the area. I ask the Minister whether his investigation will be robust and provide reassurance to the people living in the area.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for the question and for alerting me to the situation on Saturday afternoon. I can assure him that there will be a robust response. What has happened is unacceptable. It is not a registered site. Consequently, it is an illegal site, so NIEA's enforcement branch will be tasked with carrying out all the investigations and, on the basis of the information that it finds, with bringing forward a recommendation to the Public Prosecution Service (PPS) to take the matter to court. It is a matter for NIEA enforcement branch, but I assure the Member that it will be robustly investigated. If the appropriate information comes forward, the matter will be taken further.

Ms P Bradley: I praise my colleagues William Humphrey, Councillor Kingston and Councillor Verner for the proactive and timely work that they have done.

To follow on from your answer to Mr Humphrey, Minister, do we need to look at having stricter laws and higher fines throughout Northern Ireland when it comes to illegal dumping, which has been extremely prevalent during the COVID-19 period?

Mr Poots: Fines are a matter for the courts. Those fines can be high if the courts decide to make them high, and we encourage the courts to fine heavily. We have a principle that "the polluter pays", and, consequently, NIEA will always seek to get back all the expenditure that it has involved in a case so that there is no public expenditure as a result of someone's criminal activity. It is for the courts to identify the level of fine over and above that, and we will encourage them to fine quite heavily individuals who engage in illegal activity.

There are people who engage in waste activity who are registered and carry out those activities legally; there are others who appear to be doing it who are not registered and consequently are doing it illegally. I am happy to look again at the work that was done in developing the regulation and the legislation around this to see whether it needs to be refreshed or whether there are inadequacies. I do not believe that this will be a one-off case. I believe there to be other cases. Therefore, if we need to, we will have to take further steps to ensure that we clamp down heavily on this activity.

Mr McGuigan: I concur with the Minister and the Members who spoke about the absolute disgrace of illegal waste being dumped on that site. What engagement has the Minister had with the local authorities, businesses and residents to urgently address the vermin problem associated with the illegal waste?

Mr Poots: The vermin problem is one for Belfast City Council. As I understand it, Belfast City Council is putting down full baiting for the vermin problem. I say to the people who resisted the opening of household waste recycling centres that a lot of this waste is waste that would normally have ended up there. That is why I pressed, some time ago, for household waste recycling centres to open. It was evident that waste that was being collected in people's backyards and gardens was causing problems, and some people have turned to an illegal sector that has gained financially from that. I believe that, in various council areas, there are household waste recycling centres that have still not opened. I say this to councils where that is the case: "Would you please get your act together, get those recycling centres opened and provide the service that you are being paid to provide?"

Mr O'Toole: I thank the Member for tabling the question. As has been said, it is completely unacceptable that residents in that part of north Belfast have had to put up with this appalling spectacle and illegal dumping.

In his previous answer, the Minister said that he suspected that this was illegal dumping by people who had paid to dump that stuff there. Is he aware of that happening on a more widespread basis across Northern Ireland? Have there been reports to his Department of it happening in a systematic way? He seems to have an indication that this has been paid for by a specific organisation. Is he aware of it happening on a more widespread basis?

Mr Poots: The evidence is anecdotal as opposed to empirical at this stage. There is a bit of the “white van man” scenario, where he has been doing a bit of tidying up round people’s homes, and they have asked, “Could you get rid of that for us?”. Bits and pieces of that have been involved with fly-tipping, and we are aware of that. Some people may have set themselves up to handle waste when they are not registered waste-handlers. That may be going on. We need to be cautious in all of this to identify exactly what the situation is in this and any other case that is brought forward and to follow due process. Due process will bring results in taking those people to court and having them appropriately fined and the costs charged to them for the disposal of any materials.

Mr Blair: I thank Mr Humphrey for asking the original question.

Given that we know that one of the sites is on the same piece of ground as a block of private apartments and immediately abuts other properties, is it clear whether costs incurred by residents thus far can be refunded to them through action taken against the illegal operator?

Mr Poots: I am not sure whether that is or can be the case. Certainly, we are happy to look at that. Our primary focus, since I became aware of this on Saturday afternoon and worked with NIEA over the weekend and on Monday morning, was to get the material removed pronto.

Yesterday afternoon, we got agreement from the owners of the Edenderry site that they would pick up the bill for removing it. That agreement was signed off later in the evening, and operators are clearing it as we speak. That was our initial target. We can look at the issue raised by Mr Blair.

2.00 pm

Miss Woods: Given the track record of illegal dumping in Northern Ireland, not to mention Mobuoy and now this ongoing in Belfast city centre, will the Minister commit to strengthening laws on illegal dumping and practices across the region?

Mr Poots: I am certainly happy to look at how we can strengthen laws and ensure that we can have the appropriate responses. For example, we still have waste that was dumped here that needs to be repatriated to the Republic of Ireland. When I was previously Minister, we got an agreement from the then Republic of Ireland Minister that waste would be removed from 20 sites. I was somewhat surprised, when I came back into office, to discover that waste from only nine or 10 of those sites had been repatriated. That is a matter that I will raise with the new Minister, now that I finally have a Minister to deal with in the Republic of Ireland. There was an absence of that for a period of time. They had a Government who were carrying on but, clearly, were not going to be the eventual Government. I will raise the issue of having that repatriation completed with my ministerial colleague.

There are issues around waste. Money can be made from it. Individuals engage in the waste business inappropriately because of that. A lot of good operators out there want to see the laws strengthened, because they are doing the job right. On a regular basis, NIEA calls with them to check that they are doing the thing right, and then these other people pop up and do things entirely illegally. We need to ensure that we can clamp down on illegal operators quickly, effectively and efficiently.

Mr Muir: I thank the Member for his question, and the Minister for his responses. Most Members are very concerned to hear, yet again, about another illegal dump in Northern Ireland and the environmental consequences arising from that. I have concerns about whether the lessons have been learnt from the Mobuoy dump and the Mills report recommendations fully implemented. I do not feel that they have. I would be interested to understand from the Minister what his view is. Have the lessons been learnt and the recommendations implemented?

Mr Poots: It appears that, in this particular instance, the material first gathered was cardboard, mattresses, pallets and things like that, but it then developed into other materials more associated with landfill. That got out of control very quickly. Once that material is dumped inappropriately, particularly with mattresses and so forth, rats and flies very quickly take up residence and cause all sorts of problems.

We need to be on the ball with illegal activity. I will be looking at this further, on the back of what has happened. Ultimately, it is absolutely essential that waste is dealt with appropriately. In Northern Ireland, we have reached our 50% target for recycling and we are going to push that up further. It is critically important that we ensure that the problem we create is managed appropriately. Consequently, we cannot have this fly-tipping, illegal dumping and all that taking place. The result of that is damage to the environment and other people’s lives. We are considerably better than we used to be. However, there are still gaps. How best we fill them needs to be addressed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Are there any further questions? I call William Humphrey.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his answers. Some folk have had to leave their homes, and people are complaining of being ill. This has caused major anxiety and stress in the local community, all in the middle of the COVID-19 pandemic. Therefore, I thank the Minister for his intervention. Can he assure me, and more importantly, assure the House and my constituents, that the nightmare that they have had to endure over the last number of weeks will end this week? Work has started today, and we welcome that, but will the matter be put to bed this week?

Mr Poots: I believe and have been given assurances that all the material that is attracting rats and flies will be removed by the end of the week. Some of the material, which is not of that type, may take a bit longer to be removed, but all the residual waste will be removed by the end of the week. In fact, I hope that it will be removed a lot quicker. I know that the companies that have been brought in are very professional and are good at handling that sort of thing. I believe that they will respond very quickly to the problem that exists. Hopefully, it will be done well before the end of the week.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That concludes that item of business.

Before I put the Question, I remind Members that the next sitting of the Assembly is currently scheduled for Tuesday 28 July. However, if it becomes apparent that an additional sitting may be required on Monday 27 July, the Business Committee will meet remotely tomorrow to agree an Order Paper, and Members will be duly notified. The Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response will continue to be available to meet and to allow Ministers to make statements to the Assembly during the summer. There is no meeting scheduled at present. As soon as the Speaker's Office receives details from Ministers that they wish to provide an update, Members will be notified in the usual way.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 27 July 2020

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Standing Order 20(1): Suspension

Mr O'Dowd: I beg to move

That Standing Order 20(1) be suspended for 27 July 2020.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Order 20(1) be suspended for 27 July 2020.

Executive Committee Business

Executive Committee (Functions) Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call the junior Minister Gordon Lyons to formally move the Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office).]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There is a single group of amendments, amendment Nos 1 to 3, which deal with ministerial decisions, and we will debate the amendments in that group. Once the debate on the group is completed, any further amendments will be formally moved. If that is clear, we will proceed.

Clause 1 (Amendment of section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998)

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): We now come to the single group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 1, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 2 and 3. Members should note that amendment No 1 is a paving amendment to amendment Nos 2 and 3. In the interests of clarity, as this type of amendment is not often encountered, I remind Members that this means that amendment No 1 is consequential to the other two amendments, but the Question on it will be put before we consider the other two amendments. Members will wish to take that into consideration when deciding on whether amendment No 1 is made or not. Members will note that amendment No 3 is consequential to amendment No 2.

Mr Beattie: I beg to move amendment No 1: In page 1, line 11, leave out "subsections (6) to (9)" and insert "subsections (6) and (7)".

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:
[Mr Beattie.]

No 3: In page 2, leave out lines 3 to 5.—
[Mr Beattie.]

Mr Beattie: The Executive Committee (Functions) Bill is a very short but extremely complex Bill. Its main aim and tenet is to address what came out of the Buick judgement in regards to the Department for Infrastructure, yet the Bill also covers far-reaching issues. I am no lawyer and I do not have a team of lawyers standing behind me to give me advice. In fact, I left school at 16 and have no educational qualifications whatsoever. The reality is that the Bill needs more scrutiny because it so complex and so far-reaching and delves into how we govern Northern Ireland. If, at the end of the debate, we are thinking, "Well, that is wrong. I believe in this bit but not in that. Maybe this works", there is confusion in the Assembly and, therefore, it is fair to ask for that scrutiny.

I say this: we, as an Assembly, got it wrong when we gave the Bill accelerated passage. It could well be that the Bill is fine and that it would go through all the scrutiny mechanisms and come out with us all satisfied. However, because it has accelerated passage, we do not have the ability to do that. It is important that we scrutinise major changes to how we govern in Northern Ireland.

At the time of the Bill's introduction, we were all focused elsewhere. It was brought before the Committee for the Executive Office on 1 July. I was not there. I was laying a wreath at Belfast City Council's Somme remembrance. I was not there to question. However, I am not even sure whether I would have seen the issues that were in front of me then, because our eyes were turned elsewhere. On 1 July, our eyes were turned to Bobby Storey's funeral; an issue that we are still dealing with. We were focused on COVID-19. I genuinely believe that, because of that, many of us, including me, missed this. I admit fault. I made a mistake. I will be absolutely clear: there are others who did not make mistakes. The Green Party certainly raised the issue, as did People Before Profit.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I remind the Member that the debate is not about accelerated passage. It is about his amendments.

Mr Beattie: Absolutely, Mr Deputy Speaker. I am just trying to give the context. I stood there and did not vote against accelerated passage. I am laying out where we are in regards to that.

Let me be clear: to be really honest with you all and with the Assembly now, I think that the Bill should have been paused. I think that it should be paused, and we should put it back into the system and go through the full scrutiny process. That is what, I think, we should do. However, it has been moved, and we are moving forward. I do not want to see my amendments as being a wrecker to the Bill, because I think that there are things in the Bill that we need to deal with. The issues around the Department for Infrastructure are fair wind. I think that there is enough within the planning system that will give us scrutiny of the Department for Infrastructure. My proposed amendments therefore do not touch on those issues in any shape or form. They would allow the particular issues that address the Buick judgement for the Department for Infrastructure to go through, and that would then give MLAs time and space to look at the other aspects of the Bill: the other aspects that I am attempting to amend.

There are three amendments in total. The first amendment is a paving amendment. I am not going to address that, because it is purely about numbering in the Bill. Amendment No 3, which is about subsection (9), is consequential to amendment No 2, which is about subsection (8). I will read out subsection (8) to you:

"Nothing in subsection (3) requires a Minister to have recourse to the Executive Committee in relation to any matter unless that matter affects the exercise of the statutory responsibilities of one or more other Ministers more than incidentally."

"Subsection (3)" is a reference to section 20(3) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

Paragraph 19 of strand one of the Belfast Agreement clearly states, however:

"The Executive Committee will provide a forum for the discussion of, and agreement on, issues which cut across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers, for prioritising executive and legislative proposals and for recommending a common position where necessary".

This is about cross-cutting issues, not necessarily immediately but that may arise in future: six months on, a year on, two years on, five years on. In my mind, subsection (8) is therefore absolutely in conflict with sections 19 and 20 of strand one of the Belfast Agreement and subsection (3) of section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. You need only read the explanatory and financial memorandum to see that. I apologise to Members for shuffling papers, but there is an awful lot of complexity in the Bill. The tenet of what I am saying here today is that the Bill is so complex that we need time to scrutinise it.

Paragraph 10(i) of the explanatory and financial memorandum states:

"referral to the Executive Committee must take place where a matter is significant and controversial and (i) outside the scope of the Programme for Government approved by the Assembly and in force; and (ii) where no such Programme has been approved by the Assembly and in force."

Paragraph 10(iii) then states:

"a Minister is not required to have recourse to the Executive Committee in relation to any matter unless the matter affects the statutory responsibilities of one or more than one Ministers more than incidentally."

That is straight from the Bill itself.

If subsection (8) conflicts with the Belfast Agreement and the Northern Ireland Act, it certainly conflicts with the ministerial code. As I said, subsection (8) states:

"Nothing in subsection (3) requires a Minister to have recourse to the Executive Committee in relation to any matter unless that matter affects the exercise of the statutory responsibilities of one or more other Ministers more than incidentally", yet the ministerial code sets out a whole list of things that must be looked at. Some of them are not cross-cutting. Some of them are pretty bland:

"(ii) requires agreement on prioritisation;

(iii) requires the adoption of a common position;

(iv) has implications for the Programme for Government;

(v) is significant or controversial and is clearly outside the scope of the agreed programme referred to in paragraph 20 of Strand One" —.

Mr Stalford: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. He mentioned the ministerial code, which obviously apply to Ministers. Given that this is Executive business, how does he feel that he is supporting his own Minister on the Executive by moving these amendments today, because his Minister would have had to give his assent in order for this business to be in front of us?

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for his intervention. If he wants to play the man instead of the ball, he is more than welcome to do so, and I am happy to accept it. The reality is this, however: did he agree it? Did he agree to this legislation or did he agree that there should be legislation? That is a question for you, and you can raise it up the line. Did Ministers agree that there should be legislation or did they agree that it was to be this legislation?

We can contend one way or another, but it still takes me back to the start of what I said: if we, as an Assembly, cannot stop and reanalyse a decision that we have made, we are lame ducks.

12.15 pm

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: Just a minute.

I have gone through my life looking at decisions that I have made, and, as the situation changed, I have had to change my decisions. It is the right thing to do. It is the morally courageous thing to do. It is what I am having to do here today.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. I accept the point that he made with regard to his colleague, the Minister of Health. Are we to take it that his comments in the Chamber today are the stated and agreed comments of the Ulster Unionist Party and that they have been discussed with the Health Minister? Therefore, the Health Minister and the Ulster Unionist Party are in agreement with the comments that you are making?

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for his intervention. It is a pointed question in the way that you have put it across. The answer is, very pointedly, yes. We are in agreement, because we have analysed it and have decided that we have gone in the wrong direction with regard to subsections (8) and (9). As a member of the Committee for the Executive Office, the fault lies with me for not making sure that my Members understood what is going on. To me, subsection (8) conflicts with section 28A of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which outlines what the ministerial code should be. At the end of this, the ministerial code will have to be changed to meet this Bill, because they conflict. Some of the issues that have to be discussed at the Executive may not be cross-cutting today but might be in a year. They may not be controversial now but may be a little while down the road.

I am opening myself up to criticism. I do not mind, because we did not support all elements of the St Andrews Agreement, but this is a good element that we are now about to overturn. It is the main plank of the St Andrews Agreement, which was to stop Ministers, deliberately or not, going on solo runs and deciding for themselves what they would do. It has been well documented that the late Martin McGuinness got rid of the 11-plus, pretty much on the last day before the Assembly collapsed: that could be viewed as going on a solo run. This part of the St Andrews Agreement brokered by the DUP and Sinn Féin was a good piece of legislation, and we are looking for it to stay.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: Yes.

Mr Stalford: I am grateful to the Member for praising the content of the St Andrews Agreement. He is absolutely right. How does that square with what his leader has consistently said about returning to the factory settings of 1998?

Mr Beattie: I have made it clear that I am opening myself up to criticisms, but everybody knows that the issue that we have with the St Andrews Agreement is how we elect our First and deputy First Ministers. That is the main issue. We can look at things and say, "That's good" or "That's not bad". It would be pretty awful of us or any political party to just say that every thing is bad. We all have the ability to look at things and say, "I could take that and that, but I don't want that". We do it when we are buying a car; I am sure that we can do it with legislation.

The Bill, we believe, dilutes the safeguards that we got in St Andrews. Others can disagree, and I get that. We will hear from others saying that they disagree, but I think that it dilutes it. Since 2007, there have been few solo runs. I think that there have been two. Both ended up in court, and both were brought back again because of what was agreed at St Andrews and is in legislation. It is awful thing that one Minister has to bring another Minister to court in order to get them to row back on a decision. If we put the Bill through, we will see more of that. What Minister would not look for any loophole to push forward what they need for their Ministry? It is natural to us all. However, what was agreed at St Andrews holds them back on that. It holds us all back on that. It is as much a safeguard for our society as it is for the Minister himself. Ministers are not infallible; they can make wrong decisions. However, if their decisions are scrutinised in the Executive, they can have a sanity check on their decisions. That is a positive. That is why we should get rid of subsections (8) and (9), which change that. They do change it, no matter which way you look at it.

There is also the question of collective responsibility. There are many contentious issues on which Ministers will have to take decisions. What has been really important is that our Executive have all stood together in making those decisions: collective responsibility. Now, however, we could go down a road where a Minister will be left on his own to make a decision. Even if he brings it to the Executive for discussion, other Ministers could say, "Yes, that is fine, but it has nothing to do with me. I don't support it. I can step out of this office and attack you every time you say something".

The Bill has raised the bar for cross-cutting issues. At a time when we need more scrutiny, it gives us less scrutiny. We are allowing the Bill through without proper scrutiny and with no idea of its effects in the next five years. At a time when the Executive need more scrutiny, we are putting a Bill through that reduces scrutiny. Scrutiny is a good thing. Some people say that, because of the system that we have now, our legislation is slow. That is a fair argument. We want to speed up legislation, but it has to be good legislation. There is no point in having speedy legislation if it is no good. If it is not future-proofed, it is not good legislation. Scrutiny helps to produce good legislation. The system that we have now is a good system to scrutinise Ministers and to prevent them going on solo runs.

Ministers have already been reported to the Commissioner for Standards over their behaviour. The Executive Office Committee has asked for legal advice about holding an inquiry into the behaviour of Ministers. People make mistakes, yet the Bill intends to give Ministers more power. That can be abused. I do not want to see it abused. I am not talking about one party or the other; I am talking about all Ministers. I do not want to see any Minister abusing their power, and the way to stop them abusing their power, either deliberately or accidentally, is to have a scrutiny mechanism that is already in the Executive and can be found in the St Andrews Agreement. It is utter madness.

What if I am wrong? As I stand here, I see people whose eyes might be glazing over because this is all very technical and pretty boring and they have already made their mind up anyway. That is fine, because maybe I am wrong. However, if I am wrong, what is the rush?

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: Yes, of course.

Mr Wells: The Member has made a very important point. I assure you that many Members in here do not have glazed eyes because they are bored with what you are saying —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I ask the Member to get closer to a microphone in order that we all can clearly hear him and that it can be recorded in Hansard.

Mr Wells: Former DUP men do not need loudspeakers, Mr Deputy Speaker; I assure you [Laughter.] The reason that Back-Benchers are rolling their eyes this afternoon is not that they cannot understand your speech or do not agree with it; it is because they have been whipped to within an inch of their life to vote for something that many of them are extremely unhappy with but have been told they have to vote for.

Does the Member agree that nowhere in the debate has there been the slightest justification for the rush? Nowhere have we been told that this must be agreed at the fag end of an Assembly term. No one has explained why it cannot wait until October to allow greater scrutiny, and no one has explained why I had to sit in the Chair last Tuesday as Temporary Speaker and advise Members that they had less than 24 hours to submit amendments. No one has explained any of that. You have raised a valid point, and it is incumbent on other Members — the ruthlessly whipped Members — to explain why there is a rush.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for his intervention. You have articulated very well the point that I was aiming to make. What is the rush? We have time to look at it. We have been dealing with the issue since January, and nobody felt the need to rush it through quickly in February, for example. We have let it go. All of a sudden, it is being rushed through, right in the middle of a pandemic and right in the middle of a crisis where our First Minister and deputy First Minister will not even give an interview together at the minute. We are rushing it through. I implore all Members of the Assembly — I look at Members and think that, when they do their business here, they act absolutely honourably — that you must have moral courage on the issue. Moral courage: the hardest piece of courage that you can have. Physical courage is easy; moral courage is extremely difficult. It is what you apply. It is about yourself. Apply moral courage. If, after all those Members have spoken, you have a doubt in the back of your mind, that doubt in the back of your mind should be saying to you, “Let’s delay for more scrutiny”.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. I just wish that he would be more consistent in his application of moral courage, given that he has supported in the House legislation that is immoral. I refer to the issue of the protection of the unborn child. We do not need lectures in the House about moral courage.

We have an issue, and that issue is simple. It is that we have, not for the first time, a dilemma amongst lawyers who, I have to say, are paid considerably more than Members of the House. We could fill the Chamber with lawyers who have been to the High Court and the Supreme Court and have had judgements made and judgements overturned. Now we have a litany of legislation that has been pored over by legal counsel, and laypeople, like most of us in the House, wonder on which side of the legal argument are the practical outworkings of the legislation. It is not a moral dilemma for me; it is more an issue of looking at the legal advice that gives me and members of my party the protection that no Minister will run rogue and do things that none of us wants. Of course, the party opposite is good at doing what it has done in the past, with its mischievous activities. I, for one, want to ensure that all Members in the House and all parties in the House abide and play by the rules, not only in the Executive. We saw their antics a few weeks ago, when they could not even behave themselves at a funeral, so why would you expect them to behave —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I remind the Member that interventions should be brief. He may wish to make a speech at some point.

Mr Storey: I apologise, Mr Deputy Speaker. I will conclude with this: will the Member consider the dilemma over the legal arguments about the Bill?

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: Yes. I would be happy to give way.

Mr Wells: Mr Storey raises a valid point. There is a conflicting legal advice on this, but the crucial legal advice comes from one of the architects of the St Andrews Agreement: Richard Bullick.

If there is doubt, and there clearly is, between those who think that this will stop solo runs and those who think that it will facilitate them, the obvious thing to do is to postpone the Further Consideration Stage of the Bill to allow us all time to sit down with the conflicting legal advice to come to a conclusion. It is not to try to railroad through something as important as this at the end of an Assembly term and with 24 hours’ notice to table amendments.

12.30 pm

Mr Beattie: I thank both Members. I accept a lot of what you are saying, Mr Storey, and the debate about abortion is, I guess, for another day, but I accept your point wholeheartedly, and I hold no malice about that. You are right: there is conflicting legal advice, and that is why I am saying that we need to delay this process so that we can scrutinise that conflicting legal advice. MLAs would have the ability to speak to experts and would get legal advice. They could question not just the intentions of Bill but its repercussions. We can all write a Bill that has a wonderful aim, but it may not necessarily always end up with that aim.

That is why it is so important that this Bill is given the extra scrutiny. I will say this again: I am not trying to wreck the Bill. My amendments aim to take away those parts of it that give unfettered powers, which could be, at times, unfettered powers, to individual Ministers. I said earlier that I can accept that some people want to speed up legislation. That is absolutely worthy, and I agree with that, but those people who want to speed up legislation normally want to speed up legislation that they support, and the legislation that they do not support, they are happy to keep in the long grass. Scrutiny stops that. Scrutiny allows legislation to be viewed and to be put out, and when it is put out, it is done so with collective responsibility from an Executive — our Executive. Our Executive, which make rules.

Trust is important in government. At times, we do not have trust. I sense and feel it here. I have trust issues with many of the political parties here. I know that people look at me and have trust issues with me. Again, I accept that. Yet, these safeguards in the Northern Ireland Act 1998, as amended at St Andrews, help to create safeguards where trust was not there. Therefore, it is pretty simple. The substantive part of the Bill that deals with the Department for Infrastructure and the Minister for Infrastructure so that she can make decisions can go through. Although it has problems, planning has safeguards. All that I am saying is that the proposed new paragraph 8, which allows Ministers to make decisions without bringing them to the Executive, should not go through. It should be taken out, revisited and, if necessary, brought forward at a later stage when it can be given full scrutiny. It is a simple amendment. It cannot be a difficult amendment to support, unless there is an ulterior motive to force this through at short notice. I hope that there is not.

I apologise for rambling a bit and for the paper shuffling. This is a complex issue, and I do not have all the answers. I am not a lawyer, but I would like to look at this in far more detail than we have been able to so far. That is a fair ask. It is fair to ask the Assembly to scrutinise this further.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way before he —?

Mr Beattie: Sits down?

Mr Storey: Yes. I want to follow on from the point that the honourable Member Mr Wells made. The difficulty that I have with Richard Bullick's intervention — he is someone who I hold in the highest regard — is that he has been out of this place for some considerable time now. There are issues with where the gaps may be, given what has happened in that intervening period.

My other point is that the Assembly still has the 30-name petition for a recall, and three Ministers can still call any cross-cutting or controversial issue to the Executive. Therefore, I think that there is a sequence of events that still gives us protection, and I think that the junior Ministers will be able to either confirm or deny that that is the case, knowing that I am not always across the detail on some of these things. That is my understanding, and I do think that we need to take that. That is not a criticism of Mr Bullick, who I hold in the highest regard, but I think that he falls into that category of lawyers and people of a legal mind. When you have a group of lawyers in a room, you do not have agreement. In most cases, you probably have disagreement and a very large invoice.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for his intervention. You caught me just as I was finishing, but I will make a couple of points. I do not know and have never met Mr Bullick, but, if he is bringing up something that makes us look and stop and take check, it is worthwhile looking and stopping and taking check, regardless of whether he was here before or will be here after. In the same way, if Peter Robinson were to come out and say something, we would say that he is a man who knows the system and would listen to him. Let us not just discount people.

As for the three-person block, there is not one. That three-person mechanism is to force a vote in the Executive. That is what it does. It forces a vote in the Executive, but let us future-proof that. In five years, when unionists or the DUP do not have a majority, what happens? We have set in motion a chain of events that could be worse for us all. Let us not think one step or two steps ahead. We need to think three and four steps ahead. Let us not think that this is about one party abusing the system or about another party abusing the system. Let us not even say that it is a deliberate abuse of the system; sometimes it can be absolutely accidental where somebody brings in legislation or something that they do not know the repercussions of in the years to come. So, let us future-proof. For me, right now as I stand here, the St Andrews Agreement future-proofs how we operate in the Executive, and, if we are going to change that, we need to change that with more scrutiny than we have given it now. I commend my amendments.

Mr Stalford: Before I turn to my remarks, I thank those Members who were in touch because I was not well last week. That was very much appreciated.

I say to Mr Beattie that I hold him in no malice. I will always afford to any person who serves our country in uniform the highest respect and honour, but I have to politely disagree with about 95% of what he has just said. [Laughter.] As I said, there is no particular malice. I think that it was big of the Member who is moving these amendments to say that he got it wrong. I think that he went too far when he said that the Executive Office Committee got it wrong. Mr Beattie, from his perspective, might have missed the pass, but, as a member of that Committee, I am satisfied that I exercised my scrutiny function of this legislation to the best of my ability, and I think that other members of that Committee would say likewise, including the Chairman.

It is important that we all try to provide as much clarity as possible, particularly and regrettably, due to some confusion in the discussion of this Bill on social media and in newspapers over the past few days. I think that we should examine the timeline of events, because it is not particularly difficult to join the dots and see how we got to this point. To be fair to Ms Woods, Mr Allister and People Before Profit, they opposed accelerated passage and voted against it. That is fine. I have no problem with that. I think that that is principled and consistent. What happened was that we had the Committee consideration, where the First Minister and deputy First Minister came in and briefed us and answered questions on the content of the Bill.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for giving way. Can we make sure that it is on the record that that scrutiny at the Committee lasted 11 minutes?

Mr Stalford: It is a three-clause Bill, I think one of which is the title. So we had the Committee meeting. Then, I think, we had the vote in the House. Then an article appeared in a newspaper. Then, suddenly, this had grave constitutional implications and we should all be panicking about it. Something appears on Twitter, and suddenly the Assembly is debating amendments to a Bill. I think that people can join the dots.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: Yes, I will be happy to.

Mr Wells: First of all, it was an in-depth article in a leading newspaper, which was then followed up by another in-depth article in a leading newspaper. The question is not the fact that it appeared on Twitter; it is the name of the person whose account it appeared on. Does the Member accept that Richard Bullick was absolutely instrumental in the St Andrews Agreement discussions? He was a leading adviser to the DUP for something like 17 years. He has one of the finest legal minds in Northern Ireland. Also, it was not just his legal opinion; Tughans solicitors also have grave concerns about this. All I think any reasonable person is saying is that there is a degree of doubt about this. Even the Member has seemed to indicate that he has some doubt. If there is any degree of doubt, surely the sensible thing to do — he has not addressed this issue — is to park this for several months. Where is the rush?

Mr Stalford: I know Richard Bullick. He is a dear friend of mine and was a guest at my wedding. I am never going to be tempted into publicly criticising a friend, and Richard is my friend. The Member is in danger of turning what is a legal argument into something of a psychodrama, and I do not think that that is helpful. My understanding is that the Executive Office has received legal advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office, the former Attorney General and another source. I cannot recall the third source of legal advice. The Member knows himself that, wherever you get one or two lawyers together, they can argue that a black crow is white until the day is done. There is conflicting legal advice. As I say, Richard is my friend, and the Member will not tempt me into saying anything that could be construed in any way as criticism of a friend.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: Yes.

Mr Wells: I would never want that. I am sure that nobody who has worked with Richard Bullick would say anything against his professional advice or legal integrity, but he has made the crucial comment. He has told the House that there is conflicting legal advice. Is the Member prepared to accept Back-Benchers being whipped to vote for something when there is that confusion, given the important of the issues involved? He still has not answered my question: why do we need to make a final decision on this today? Why can we not reflect on that conflicting advice and come back in October?

Mr Stalford: To be fair to the Member, I am about 50 words into my prepared comments, and I have given way to him, I think, three times — certainly twice. If the Member bears with me and is a bit more patient, I may persuade him of the benefits of this Bill, although, having known him since I was about 14, I doubt that I will persuade him when he has his mind made up on an issue. It is a value that he has passed on to me, and obviously I respect him for that.

The St Andrews Agreement marked a very significant achievement in addressing many of the deficiencies in the Belfast Agreement, particularly around the issues of accountability and the operation of the Executive Committee. Our party is proud of what we achieved in the St Andrews Agreement and the outworking of that agreement in enforcing an enhanced sense of collective responsibility within the Executive. Reference was made by Mr Beattie to the previous solo runs by Ministers before St Andrews, particularly the decision of the then Education Minister, the late Mr Martin McGuinness, in relation to the transfer test, widely known as the 11-plus. Let me be very clear: under St Andrews and under this Bill, such a decision could not be made by a Minister on a solo run. It is simply not true to say that it could. We pushed hard to have this issue addressed at St Andrews, and we will fully maintain the protections that prevent Ministers from doing such things without the agreement of Executive colleagues.

Any suggestion that the Bill would diminish that is a fundamental misunderstanding of the Bill that we are considering. It is inaccurate of those who have attempted to suggest otherwise.

12.45 pm

There is a certain irony that the amendments have been brought forward by a member of the Ulster Unionist Party, whose leader has stated numerous times that the party position is to reset to the factory settings of the Belfast Agreement. Does the Member realise that to do so would remove all the protections of St Andrews and would, in fact, facilitate precisely the type of solo runs, such as happened with the 11-plus? That is ironic and it demonstrates a remarkable lack of awareness by the Ulster Unionist Party.

The amendment today focuses on the cross-cutting test. All Ministers are required to bring matters that are significant, controversial or cross-cutting to the Executive Committee for consideration and agreement. That remains the case with this Bill. It was reported in the newspaper that the amendments before the Assembly today would remove the clause that would mean that significant or controversial matters would only be required to come to the Executive if they satisfy a test of being more than incidentally cross-cutting. That is an error and a misunderstanding of the Bill. The clause referenced in the amendments is nothing to do with the requirement to bring cross-cutting or significant matters to the Executive. Indeed, that test is strong and stands alone as a requirement upon Ministers.

Not only is that requirement maintained, it is enhanced by clarifying, in the legislation, that if there is no Programme for Government in place, all matters that are significant or controversial must still be referred to the Executive Committee. That definitively settles a matter that has been the subject of back and forth in the courts for many years. That supports and enhances the concept of collective Executive responsibility.

That brings me to the detail of the specific amendments that aim to remove the clarification in law as to what the term “cross-cutting” means. I find this, again, to be a rather bizarre move for a party that is part of the Executive. We heard previously that the clear and unambiguous advice from legal advisers to the Executive is that the implications arising from the Buick judgement would mean a fundamental change in relation to the range of issues required to come in front of the Executive Committee as cross-cutting issues. That would mean that the vast majority of departmental decisions, including in the Department of Health, would now need to come before the Executive. Any issues simply touching on a ministerial or departmental interest, even if they are just incidental, would now need to come before the Executive, rather than allowing a Minister to make the decision. Why bother appointing Ministers if we expect them to operate in that way? The only answer to this appears to be that Ministers individually, and the Executive collectively, should accept a very wide interpretation of the requirement, but just continue to ignore it, by custom and practice. What a bizarre legal principle that would be. One, in fact, that does not exist, Mr Deputy Speaker. This is nonsensical.

I refer Mr Beattie to the original Hansard exchanges during the passage of the Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act 2006. It specifically referred to the exchanges, and they were pre-notified by the then Member of Parliament for East Belfast, Mr Peter Robinson. What do those pre-notified questions and answers, delivered in the House of Commons, tell us? Well, first they tell us that the term “interests” is not referenced nor, by the way, is it the Belfast Agreement or the St Andrews Agreement. Rather, it is clear that, at all times, the reference is to responsibilities of Departments, rather than interests. It is made absolutely clear that if a matter is cross-cutting, significant or controversial, that the Minister does not have the authority to make such a decision. It must come to the Executive Committee for a decision. Therefore, the proposal to continue and just ignore the requirements —.

Mr Wells: I think that that is what the aim would always be.

Mr Stalford: Thanks very much. Therefore, the proposal to continue and just ignore the requirements to bring the matter to the Executive by custom and practice has no legal basis and would subject all such decisions to successful legal challenge.

Thirdly, it is recognised that there are matters that are de minimis or incidental on cross-cutting grounds that would not need to come to the Executive for consideration or agreement.

How do we find ourselves at this point today? There are a number of reasons. The response seeking clarity on what would be considered de minimis or incidental was not forthcoming, either in the ministerial response in the House of Commons or definitively in the ministerial code. That is, on the one hand, understandable. Any attempt to be overly prescriptive could well give rise to greater issues. We must still face that challenge in amending the ministerial code. However, the biggest challenge came from the language used in the original drafting. The terms were lifted from a negotiated political document. However, the word “cross-cutting” is not legislative language, which has given rise to the debate on this matter in the courts over the past 14 years since the St Andrews Agreement. What has happened, though, up to the point of Buick, is that the practical application of this test has been applied by the Executive and by Ministers. That balance aims to find a sensible solution to ensure that all important decisions come in front of the Executive Committee, without meaning that all departmental decisions must also be brought before the Executive. That will always be a judgement call, but we have heard clearly during the passage of the Bill that this amendment reflects, as best as possible, the approach consistently taken to this requirement.

Mr Wells: I thank the Member for giving way. I know that he is about to finish the text that he was given to read to the Assembly today by one of the special advisers. What he has not addressed, as he comes to the conclusion of his remarks, is why we have to make a final decision on this today and tomorrow. Why, given the doubt that he accepts exists, can we not set aside a bit of time for cool reflection and come back to this in October? If I am wrong and Mr Beattie is wrong, we will say so when we have had an opportunity to consider the Member’s views, the legal opinion that he has received, which, of course, we will not see because it is private to the Executive, and the views of all others who are concerned. Why the haste? The Member has not given a reason why, on 27 July, we have to rush this through.

Mr Stalford: The House voted to give the Bill accelerated passage; that is how accelerated passage works.

To be clear, all those types of matters that were deemed to be required to go to the Executive prior to the Buick case will continue to be required to do so. That means no change at all. Rather, it prevents the situation from changing to bring in many more issues.

It is also important to note that, even with this amendment, read in conjunction with the Buick case, it is still likely that not only will at least as many matters go to the Executive but additional matters will also be required to go when applying the test. These matters will need to be set out in the revised ministerial code.

In conclusion, I am saddened by the confusion caused and by the commentary around the issue. The Bill is short, but it deals with a very specific area of the law. One thing that we know is that lawyers will always disagree with one another. However, the duty then falls on us to interrogate the matter, to be informed and to come to a reasonable conclusion. If others elected not to do so at the various junctures that were available to them, that is a matter for them. I will vote against the amendments, supporting a sensible way forward that fully respects and enhances the principle and intention of St Andrews.

Mr Sheehan: Prior to the Buick judgement, all Members believed that, if an issue was significant, controversial or genuinely cross-cutting, it would be called into the Executive for decision-making. The Buick judgement, of course, changed all that and any issue in which another Minister had even an incidental or peripheral interest had to be called into the Executive. The rationale behind the Bill is to ensure that the legislation is recalibrated back to where we all believed it was, prior to the Buick judgement.

For example, if we moved ahead in the context of Buick, practically every decision made by a Minister would have to go to the Executive. The argument has been made, previously, that the Finance Minister has an interest in practically every decision because he is the one who resources it. That is not genuinely cross-cutting, as we all know. However, if, for example, the Health Minister decided to bring forward legislation in regard to mental health in prisons, it is inconceivable that that would not be cross-cutting with the Justice Department. That is an example of an issue that is genuinely cross-cutting.

The crux of the discussion is the issue of accelerated passage, and why we have rushed the Bill through. Consider that, since the Assembly got back up and running, we have dealt with numerous pieces of legislation that received no scrutiny whatsoever, as a result of the pandemic, the crisis, the emergency in which we find ourselves at present. Under normal circumstances, none of us would support that type of draconian legislation, but we all understand that it is necessary and, for those reasons, we acquiesced in that type of legislation passing through the Assembly.

We are still in a crisis, a health crisis. There is also an economic crisis and emergency. We need to deal with that as well. It is not just a matter of the health crisis. We need to get our economy back up and running. We do that by, first of all, dealing with the health crisis, by eliminating coronavirus from society, and ensuring that our economy can open up again and move ahead.

One of the most important cornerstones of our economy is infrastructure, particularly major infrastructure projects. The Infrastructure Minister's in tray is probably overflowing with a number of major infrastructure projects that need approval. The planning process is already a two-tiered system. We have the councils and the Department. To add another layer of bureaucracy to planning would, in my view, only increase that bureaucracy, slow down the process and make it much more difficult, at a time when we want to —.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. I am intrigued by Members opposite, who seem to be trying to hit some public opinion. They have come into the House wearing masks. The same Members were not that good at wearing masks when they attended the funeral of Bobby Storey. A fair degree of populism goes on on that side of the Chamber.

The Member talks about slowing up the economy. The Member's party had no difficulty in slowing up the interconnector that would give us all-Ireland electricity provision. They still do not accept that that is the way forward, yet it is all-Ireland, and they were quite happy to go to the courts about that process. When will we have an end to double standards and a bit of honesty about what the party opposite wants?

1.00 pm

Mr Sheehan: I thank the Member for his intervention. I am always amazed when the Member opposite intervenes on issues of propriety in government. Given his party's long record of being in government here, the words "neck" and "brass" come to mind, but we will leave that for another time.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Certainly. Go ahead.

Mr Storey: I have always been big enough to stand in a position where I will defend my party. I am very proud of being a member of this party and have been since I was 15. When I was —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members. May I bring you back to the Bill and the amendments rather than the private discussion that is going on?

Mr Storey: On issues of cross-cutting importance, can the Member give any example of me, when I was the Minister responsible, doing any of the things that he makes allegations about?

Mr Sheehan: Again, I thank the Member for his intervention. I am not sure what relevance it has to the debate. I did not keep a note of all the decisions that the Member made when he was a Minister. I am not sure how that relates to this particular debate, but we can discuss that outside the Chamber, if the Member wishes.

In any event, as I was saying, we need to get the economy up and running. We need to get people in the construction industry back at work again. One of the best ways to do that is to get big infrastructure projects moving along. We do not want any further delays. Under normal circumstances, accelerated passage is not the best idea. However, in the circumstances that we find ourselves in, in the current emergency, there is a crisis there, and we need to deal with it. We need to deal with the health crisis and the crisis in the economy. This is a sensible and pragmatic way forward, and, for that reason, I will support the Bill and oppose the amendments.

Mr McGrath: The SDLP has supported the Bill after its journey through the Executive, where we are quite confident that it received all-party support, including that of the party that offers amendments today. That journey will have involved substantial legal scrutiny, legal opinion and interrogation before the recommendations that are in the Bill were made. Internally, we sought opinions on the Bill from our party membership far and wide, which includes many who were the architects of key agreements and policy documents.

Our imperfect system of government is a legacy of the Troubles and the division that our community has faced over generations. The system of numerous parties coming together to make decisions has often led to paralysis in decision-making. It can allow one larger party in the Executive to block decisions that everyone else wants to be made. At times, that paralysis has severely impacted on the ability of Ministers to take decisions. As a representative of a smaller party in the Executive, I have found it somewhat frustrating that there was an expectation that every decision would go to the Executive in order to receive approval; otherwise, it was open to judicial review. The Bill rectifies that and goes some way to codifying what needs and what does not need to go to the Executive. I acknowledge that it is not a perfect Bill and is going through under accelerated package, which no one likes, but the speed is being used to unlock many of the key planning decisions that will get our economy working again.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: If I must, yes.

Mr Wells: Thank you for that very generous offer.

What Mr Beattie proposes does not stop those projects going ahead. It does not stop major infrastructure being implemented. What it does is that it closes a loophole that could lead to solo runs on many more significant issues.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. I know that he wants longer to debate the Bill, and I think that he is using interventions to get that time. However, like the Member for South Belfast opposite, if Mr Wells gives me more time to make my remarks, he will see that I address the concerns that he has raised.

Mr Wells: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Maybe it has not been made clear that there is no time limit when one is dealing with legislation.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has made his point, and it is on the record. I suspect that the Member who was speaking was simply making a point about the timing of the discussion. I will let him explain. The Member's point is on the record.

Mr McGrath: As I said, I acknowledge that, while the Bill is not perfect and is being done by accelerated passage, which no one likes, the speed is being used to unlock many key planning decisions that will get the economy working again. The Bill will speed up the delivery of jobs and decisions, and will prevent the paralysis that we have seen previously. People want action and delivery from Stormont and the Executive, not a Government who constantly block the decisions that are needed to get the North working again.

The Buick ruling cast a shadow over the Executive's capacity to make decisions. It has left unanswered questions about what Ministers can and cannot do. My party seeks a number of assurances that would reduce the necessity for the amendments. I ask for the junior Minister's understanding of what constitutes "significant or controversial", as the provision for such matters to be referred to the Executive remains unchanged. While I appreciate that those matters are not codified in law, there are conventions that apply. I would appreciate the junior Minister's view of how those matters can continue to be brought to the Executive table.

One issue that concerns me is Brexit, which, we know, is significant and controversial. I hope that the junior Minister agrees that any decision that a Minister takes in relation to Brexit should be brought to the Executive for consensus.

Mr O'Toole: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes.

Mr O'Toole: Does the Member agree that implementation of the Ireland protocol is a legal obligation on the whole Northern Ireland Executive, and that, therefore, the implementation and delivery of that protocol is inherently cross-cutting?

Mr McGrath: Absolutely; I agree with that. I would like to see all decisions that are taken in the light of that to be brought to the full Executive for discussion. There was an Executive subcommittee on Brexit. It remains, now, a standing agenda item. That only underscores that it is a significant and controversial issue.

The proposed removal of subsections 8 and 9 would not be helpful. Those sections provide the legal surety that Ministers need to be able to take decisions. While people might disagree with a decision, the content or outworkings of it, those subsections merely provide certainty for the Minister that the decision can be taken. There remain many avenues by which to challenge ministerial decisions; not least this place, which is, quite often, overlooked when it comes to decisions. We have plenary meetings, ministerial questions, ministerial statements, scrutiny Committees, private Member's business, and other methods by which to challenge the decisions that a Minister takes.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes, of course.

Mr Stalford: The Member is touching on a point that I raised in my comments. Does he agree that it is, frankly, insulting to the other members of the Committee for the Executive Office, and to Members of the House, to suggest that because we were all too busy looking at COVID, or too busy with the furore over the funeral recently, we just ignored the Bill or let it slip? We are paid to ensure that it does not slip. It is insulting when a Member stands up and says that other Members, from other parties, were simply asleep and let that go through unnoticed?

Mr McGrath: I accept the point that the Member makes. Of course, I would say that a scrutiny Committee provides the opportunity not to scrutinise for the sake of it, but to ask questions. If you are satisfied with a decision that is being presented, you do not need to ask questions. Maybe you have already had conversations with party members. You may have had other conversations to determine whether you are happy with the decision that is being presented, and that, therefore, you do not need to scrutinise for the sake of it.

As I said, we have this place. This place is critical, for example, to members of the Green Party, People Before Profit, Jim Allister and, indeed, more increasingly, Mr Wells. They are not at the Executive table, and they do a fine job of holding Ministers to account for the decisions that they take. We also have the Human Rights Commission, the Equality Commission and commissioners for young people and older people to provide appropriate oversight of decisions that are taken by the Executive. Matters that attract significant spend or hefty changes to internal departmental budget lines are required to be brought to the Executive as well. Then, there is the ultimate decision-making body, the electorate, which will get to judge whether a Minister's decision was right or wrong. Constantly being able —

Mr Butler: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes.

Mr Butler: Will the Member agree that, although the electorate will get the opportunity, at a very late stage, to express their displeasure with a decision that is made in the Chamber, if the Bill passes, we cannot undo the damage that may be caused and that, by backing the amendments today, we will give ourselves a short window of time to ensure that we get it right first time? We have three parties in the Chamber that sit on the Executive but cannot agree on the purpose of the debate. They may vote the same way, but that lack of confidence, which led to a three-year hiatus of the Assembly, is the risk that is being fought out today in this discussion.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. Again, it comes back to the fact that, as a party, we are happy with the Bill. We do not need any further consideration of it. That is a viewpoint that we are perfectly entitled to hold.

Constantly being able to threaten to use the judicial review mechanism if a matter is not brought to the Executive, even if it is not significant or controversial, is wrong, and clauses 8 and 9 close down that vexatious process.

I believe that the proposed amendments are well intentioned and were tabled as a helpful measure to ensure accountability. However, it is our belief that there remains an acceptable number of methods to appropriately challenge decision-making at the Executive, and we support the Bill as it is presented.

Mr Muir: My party does not support the amendments, and I will outline why. I understand that the rationale given for the amendments is that the provisions proposed in the legislation that these amendments seek to remove would give too much power to a Minister to act individually on what have previously been described as “solo runs”. I will address those issues before coming to a final point on how the clauses in question will interact with the requirements of the ministerial code.

The Northern Ireland Executive are, rightly, criticised by Assembly Members and by the general public at large for not getting things done quickly enough. The Alliance Party wants Ministers to be able to take decisions that are clearly within their sole statutory responsibilities. However, we must also recognise that, in a post-conflict society such as ours, collective decision-making on difficult issues is important. An Executive that do not come together to collaboratively and genuinely resolve significant and controversial issues will not last long. Under the current system, Ministers have a duty to work through those matters together. The alternative is bitter recrimination, a breakdown of relationships and trust, and, ultimately, the fall of our democratic institutions.

The requirement to bring significant or controversial matters to the Executive Committee sets a high bar, The language was inserted into the legislation following the St Andrews Agreement, and the provisions in question in this legislation do not change that. Introducing the “more than incidentally” provision into statute does not in any way remove the requirement to bring significant or controversial matters before the Executive Committee. On that basis, claims that the amendments are necessary to prevent solo runs are, in my opinion, overplayed.

Concerns over legal challenges are more substantive. I fully accept that whether a decision is more than incidentally cross-cutting is difficult to define precisely.

Mr Stalford: I thank the Member for giving way. Will he accept that, if a decision is deemed to be significant, controversial or cross-cutting, in law that decision cannot be validly made by a Minister? If a Minister were to announce such a decision, that decision would have no force, because it has to be brought to the Executive by virtue of the fact that it is deemed to be significant or cross-cutting.

Mr Muir: I thank the Member for his intervention. The issue is that we have had a number of cases on which a judge has ruled on that. Mr Allister, during Second Stage, outlined that the “incidentally” thing is something that will potentially be tested in the courts. These issues have been tested before.

Reference has been made to the St Andrews Agreement and the provisions and protections in that. The Act that implemented the St Andrews Agreement makes it clear that it is around “significant and controversial” matters that are clearly outside the scope of the agreed programme referred to in paragraph 20 of strand one of the Belfast Agreement.

1.15 pm

The cross-cutting elements, which other Members referred to, are not in the St Andrews Agreement; they are in the basis of the Belfast Agreement. Under strand one, on democratic institutions, clause 19 states:

“The Executive Committee will provide a forum for the discussion of, and agreement on, issues which cut across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers, for prioritising executive and legislative proposals and for recommending a common position where necessary”.

It is in the Belfast Agreement or what other people call the Good Friday Agreement. The Bill would give clarity on what “cross-cutting” is in light of the Buick judgement. The “significant or controversial” elements in the St Andrews Agreement remain.

Additionally, the question before us today is whether the situation would be better if we were to remove the proposed subsections, as the amendment proposes. I do not believe that it would be, for the simple reason that, following the Court of Appeal’s ruling on Buick, many decisions by a Minister not brought before the Executive Committee could be challenged on the grounds that it was cross-cutting. That could make it difficult for Ministers to get anything done, even on matters that are not considered significant or controversial. On that basis, I cannot support the amendments. We have to resolve the issues arising from Buick and not run away from them.

For the last week, I have read over Buick and the judgments given around that, and I encourage other Members to read it. We have to act on the outcome of Buick. Saying that we will put it off and leave it until October or beyond is irresponsible. We have to have a system of government in Northern Ireland where Ministers can make decisions and, where matters are significant and controversial, they are then referred to the Executive and clarity is given on what “cross-cutting” is.

One highly significant point that we do, however, need clarity on from the Executive Office is how the proposed legislation will interact with the requirements of the ministerial code. The ministerial code also includes a requirement for Ministers to bring cross-cutting matters to the Executive Committee, but there are no caveats regarding what is considered incidental as proposed in the legislation. On that basis, unless the provisions of the Northern Ireland Act are considered to be senior to the text of the ministerial code, clarity needs to be given on whether the ministerial code needs to be updated and legislation brought before this place. I ask the junior Minister to clarify that.

In essence, the amendments would remove the clauses on cross-cutting issues on the basis that legislation is brought forward at a later date and not through accelerated passage as it is likely to produce better law on the issue. It is not clear to me that that is likely to be the case. Furthermore, it would come at the cost of curtailing the power of Ministers to take decisions for the additional months that it would take to pass the legislation. On that basis, I oppose the amendments.

Mr Wells: I have listened with interest to the comments made by Mr Stalford, and, no doubt, Mr Lyons will read from a script given to him by an adviser. I know that there is deep concern on the DUP Back Benches about the Bill. I am aware of the concerns of many, but I am also aware of the system and how it works. Those who think outside the box and those who have concerns will be brought in and educated, and they will be drilled, frogmarched or stampeded through the Lobbies to vote for something that, they know, in their heart of hearts they cannot support.

No one has told me why we are in this position. It is 27 July, and the Buick judgement has been with us for a long period. There was ample opportunity to address the issue, and it was not taken. The legislation was expedited through the Chamber. I asked Mr Stalford, "Why the rush?", and he said, "Because we adopted emergency procedures". That is not the answer. Why did you adopt the emergency procedures? Why did you have to rush this through? The Chairman of the OFMDFM Committee said that it is important that we get major planning applications processed as quickly as possible. Will any of those applications be processed between now and October? Absolutely not, for various reasons. First of all, try getting a planner on the phone at the moment during coronavirus. Try getting anything decided at the moment with coronavirus. There is no huge stack of applications waiting to be processed.

There is one, however, and I have received many emails from people from west Tyrone, many of whom would vote for Mr McGrath's party, who are deeply concerned that the legislation will be used to force through the Dalradian Gold mining application. There is huge opposition to that in west Tyrone. I understand that it has been referred to a public inquiry, but, after that reports, it will still be the Minister's decision whether it will go ahead. Many people in west Tyrone are concerned about that and concerned that the Bill has suddenly emerged out of nowhere. There have been 24 days between the publication of the Bill and today's debate. That is insufficient time to deal with such controversial legislation.

I in the Speaker's Chair last Tuesday, and my duties required me to be totally impartial, I was asked to inform Members that amendments to this crucial legislation had to be in by 9:30 the following morning. That is a very unusual procedure. At least Mr Beattie was wide awake and was able to dash to the Business Office and table his amendments. You do not give less than 24 hours' notice for this type of legislation. The question that I have to ask is this: why the rush? Why is the debate being held at the very end of an Assembly term? Is there an attempt to push it quietly through without public scrutiny?

In the middle of all that, Mr Bullick made his comments. They were not Twitter messages, Mr Stalford; they were not. They were well-thought-out, well-argued pieces in a leading local newspaper, the 'News Letter'. He went through the Bill forensically and line by line and made what, I thought, was a very well-argued case that the Bill should be put on hold temporarily. He also raised the point that, in his opinion, the idea that three Ministers in the Executive can stop anything is a fallacy; it does not exist. He made that argument. The response from the First Minister was, "Well, we are going ahead anyhow". She did not deal with his concerns. Then, there were the comments from Tughans solicitors, who also raised important points about it. Mr Allister QC, who, unfortunately, cannot be with us today, raised very valid concerns about it, and I noted that a former leading Member for South Belfast was in the newspapers at the end of last week raising his concerns. Many people have said, "Hold on a minute. This legislation is not all that it seems".

What are we asking for? Are we asking for the Bill to be ditched? No. Are we asking for it to be shredded? No. What we are asking for is what, I know, many DUP Back-Benchers want to happen. Many of them want it set aside for a few weeks to allow for an in-depth analysis of the critiques of the Bill that have been made by people who are much better educated than I am and even better educated than Mr Stalford, which is saying something. They have all looked at it with a forensic legal mind and have all come back to say, "Hold on, here. There is something amiss".

Remember this: if the Bill becomes legislation, we will be stuck with it for ever. There will be no turning back. After tomorrow, we will have it for the rest of our political careers. One thing is certain: those who have stood up this afternoon with such great enthusiasm and read the scripts that their spads have given them and said that they are in support of it will never allow it to be amended or changed. We are going over a cliff, and there is no way back.

There is a point that has not been raised. It does not matter what Mr Bullick thinks or what well-educated people like Mr Stalford or Mr Lyons think; it is what a judge will think when he — or she; I am glad to say — is ruling or what he or she will make of it when the issue is challenged.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Certainly. Yes, I will.

Mr Stalford: I would never impugn the Member's integrity, and I am sure that, when he was a Minister, he would never have read a prepared script from anyone. I am sure that that would never have happened. Does he accept that it is entirely because we have had a legal judgement that the measures are necessary? It arises out of a legal judgement.

Mr Wells: I accept that. What I can say is that, as Mr Stalford admitted, there is confusion, debate and a lack of clarity on the implications of the Bill.

Does he accept from me that, once we go past tomorrow, it does not matter how much confusion or vagueness there is? It is a done deal. It will get the Queen's assent, and we will be stuck with the implications of the Bill. If it turns out, as I and others expect, that it allows Ministers from that side of the House to go on solo runs on projects that would never have the support of my community, those who march through the Lobbies today in support of it will have a difficult question to answer to their electorate. That is the point that I am making.

To go back to the earlier point, it does not matter what Mr Bullick, Mr Stalford, Mr Allister or anybody thinks. The question is how will a judge interpret the powers of Ministers if this is sent to a judicial review. If there is the slightest doubt in my mind that a judge could rule on a Minister doing a solo run, my advice to the House is to pull back quickly, because we could be going over this cliff and into a situation from which we can never recover. We are not giving the junior Minister, Mr Lyons, a ladder to climb down on. We are not asking him to eat humble pie and to seek forgiveness, we are just saying, "Give us a bit more time on this. Give us the two or three months that we all need".

Mr Beattie is right: I slept in on this. I am the first to accept that until I read the critiques of the Bill, I was not aware of its implications. I sat meekly and allowed expedited passage to go through. I did not raise any concerns, but when a large body of very professional legal advice says, "Hold on here, there is a doubt", it is incumbent upon us, when there is absolutely no need for the Bill to be rushed through, to sit down with cool heads and examine it. If, when we have all has a chance to do that, it transpires that our concerns are wrong and misplaced, I will be the first to stand up and say, "Yes, I was wrong". At the moment, I am not in a place and a position to say whether it is right to go ahead with the Bill or it is not. It is too important. It is not like a dog-fighting or litter-picking Bill. It is too important, when there is that doubt in our minds, to let it go through to a situation that can never be redeemed. Mr Stalford has admitted that there is that level of doubt.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr Stalford: If the Member reflects on what I said, it was that because of certain media outlets and social media doubt had been sown in people's minds. That is a different matter altogether.

Mr Wells: I can tell the Member that doubt has been sown in this obscure Back-Bencher's mind. I can assure him of that. I am extremely worried, and, going by the phone calls that I have had over the past two or three days, a lot of people in his party have the same concerns. As I sit here, I am getting texts and emails that say, "We are desperately concerned as to what the party is doing on this subject".

Let us go back to the St Andrews Agreement. I chaired the Programme for Government Committee that led to the St Andrews Agreement. It was a long period of discussions with the parties. The then Speaker, Mrs Bell, decided not to chair them, so myself and Mr Donnelly chaired those discussions for months and months. Our reward was that we did not get invited to St Andrews. I am not bitter. [Laughter.] That was our reward for all our hard work. As a result of those discussions, the St Andrews Agreement occurred.

I then attended a series of public meetings. The main issue that sold the St Andrews Agreement to the vast majority of the unionist electorate was that we would always have the ace card up our sleeves to block anything that a Sinn Féin Minister — they never mentioned the SDLP, I do not know why — would do that would be to the detriment of our community. That agreement would never have had the support of unionism had it not been for that crucial undertaking. There was also an undertaking that mandatory coalition would last only for eight years. Unfortunately, we are still stuck with a totally unworkable system.

If we had been told that there was any doubt about that "lock", as it were, or block on the activities of Sinn Féin Ministers, I do not think that it would ever have got through and I do not think that we would have had devolution in 2007. We accepted the commitment that was given. So far, it has worked and legal action has shown that we were right.

1.30 pm

Now, let us move to Mr Bullick. To younger Members, the name "Richard Bullick" does not mean very much. I accept that, but I had the privilege of working alongside Richard for 20 years. In the DUP, when some Back-Bencher decided to look at all the facts and make up his own mind, he was taken in for a quiet bit of re-education. It was a good cop, bad cop situation. I will not name the bad cop — people may know who he is — but I will name the good cop: it was Richard. Whilst one would take the Schwarzenegger approach to re-education and make it clear that one's life would not be worth living unless one changed one's mind, Richard was a diplomat and a gentleman. The reason that so many Back-Benchers respected the views of Richard Bullick was that they knew that he had a legal brain that was second to none in Northern Ireland and knew that he could be trusted in his understanding of complex and detailed legislation.

Mr McGrath: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker, is this a debate on amendments to the Bill, or is it a discussion about Richard Bullick? I am losing track. The majority of the conversation today has been about Richard Bullick rather than the Bill or the amendments.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I encourage the Member to connect the two if he wishes to make that link and bring his remarks back to the amendments and his views on them.

Mr Wells: On this occasion, we can connect Mr Bullick's integrity and knowledge with the debate, because we would not be having this debate without his intervention and that of other legal experts.

Mr Storey: I appreciate the Member's integrity. He and I go back a long, long way. There is an eminent Member who normally sits in the seat beside him and has two letters after his name. He is not here today. That Member has made comments on legal issues, but they are opinions. Let us remember: no one judge or member of the legal profession has divine knowledge. We always need to caveat that we are talking about an opinion held by three people — two solicitors and Richard — and that, equally, there are other legal opinions that say, "No, the outworking of this is not that envisaged by the other three or four". I caution my colleague and friend to take that into account. Richard is someone of immense ability, but what he is saying is an opinion.

There are other decisions that were made in the past 17 years that, as a humble Back-Bencher, I did not agree with and the consequences of which were not in the best interests of the House or the community; for example, the decision on the number of Members. We all can point to issues that show that no one is infallible. We have all made our mistakes, and we all can get it wrong. If he can caveat his comments in that way, some of us would accept some of his other arguments with a more ready hand.

Mr Wells: The difficulty, Mr Storey, is that, if you are wrong and we go past the point of no return tomorrow, it could be calamitous for the future governance of Northern Ireland. If we have the temerity to ask for and receive a two-month delay to a final decision to enable further scrutiny and it transpires that Mr Bullick and the other legal opinions are wrong, what is there to lose? What would another eight or 12 weeks do to destroy or undermine the Bill? It would mean that, at the end of that period, we could all say, "We have considered the issue carefully, and we can give the Bill our total support". At the minute, there is still a doubt in my mind, and the Bill is too important to vote for if there is that shred of doubt, because the implications are absolutely enormous as far as the future of Northern Ireland is concerned.

Take Casement Park for instance, which is a planning decision. Say Sinn Féin decided to spend a vast amount of money, as it could, holding the Department for Communities, on making Casement Park even grander, that would cause huge concern amongst the unionist community, given the sectarian and republican nature of the GAA. Could we do anything to stop that? No, we could not, if Richard Bullick, I and Jim Allister etc are right. What will be the reaction of —?

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Certainly.

Mr Stalford: The Member appears to think that you simply submit an application for planning and it goes directly to the Minister. The reason that the Casement Park project has not advanced is that local residents, having been badly treated by the applicants, used the existing planning processes to prevent it advancing.

Mr Wells: The point I was making was not —.

Ms Ennis: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I appreciate you letting me in to make a point of order. It is on the comments by Jim Wells about the GAA being a sectarian organisation. I urge him to immediately retract those comments, because the GAA could not be further from that. It is sad that he would label any sporting organisation, particularly one that is so rooted and relevant in the community as the GAA, as a sectarian organisation.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask Members to use temperate language in all that they say in the Chamber. The Member has made her point, and it is on the record.

Mr Wells: This is the organisation that holds “Great Escape” events in South Down — events eulogising Bobby Sands — and one of its leading lights was hurling sectarian abuse at a loyalist parade in Newcastle last September.

Mr Sheehan: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. It is that kind of intemperate language that, in the past, has led to the killing of members of the GAA. I ask you to insist that the Member desist from that type of intemperate language.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Members, we are here today to discuss an important Bill and the amendments to it. I urge everyone to return to that subject, rather than raising other issues that cause discontent. I ask everyone to use temperate language in the points that they make and to return to the Bill and the amendments.

Mr Wells: I will make no further comments about the GAA, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Let us give another example: a proposal to move university departments from Coleraine to Magee. That would cause huge concern to the community in Coleraine. A Sinn Féin Minister, should he happen to hold the portfolio, could do that. My interpretation of the legislation is that there is nothing that can be done, if the Bill goes through, to stop that, because it clearly is within his or her power and does not meet the criteria to be stopped under the legislation.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Certainly.

Mr Storey: The Member needs to be careful of hyping an issue that is not relevant. The powers in relation to the governance and courses in a university do not rest with any Minister; they rest with the university. The Member needs to be aware of what the powers are, because, if that were the case, I would be knocking on the door of the Economy Minister in relation to certain courses that have disappeared. The responsibility rests with the university, not with the Minister.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member is very long-standing, and I have known him for about 50 years. The honourable Member misses my point. You could have a situation where Magee campus is very pleased to have courses transferred from Coleraine, and you could have a compliant Minister who would allocate the appropriate funding. There could be huge concern in the East Londonderry and North Antrim constituencies about that, and my reading of the legislation before us is that it could not be stopped. It is a totally hypothetical example. I was going down the route of the GAA, and that obviously caused offence to the Members to my right, so I am plucking that out of the air as another example. It could be pensions for those who have been involved in terrorist activity. It could be anything.

What we know is that, when the late Martin McGuinness was about to leave his post as Education Minister, he unilaterally abolished the 11-plus, and the reason why we adopted St Andrews was to make it absolutely certain that that did not happen again. People might say, “But it hasn’t happened since”. Well, it has not happened because, although there are many obnoxious proposals emanating from the Members to my right that, if they had half a chance, they would implement, but they do not bother because they know that, under the present arrangements, it is not worth their while and they will be blocked. Anything that weakens that worries me intensely. I ask Mr Lyons to explain — this is the Achilles heel of the argument — what would be wrong if today we agreed not to move the Bill any further and to bring it back in October. You could be in favour of the legislation, or you could be against the legislation: there is nothing that requires the urgency with which this is being pushed through. And the more that Members stand up —.

Mr McGrath: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Certainly.

Mr McGrath: If the Member is suggesting delaying a decision on the grounds of not having the full information and not understanding how it will impact on people across Northern Ireland, can he remind me how he voted on our motion for an extension to the Brexit process?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members. I do not want to have a debate about Brexit. This is not a Chamber for debating Brexit or previous decisions; this is a debate about the Bill that is before us and the amendments that have been proposed. Can we concentrate on that, please?

Mr Wells: The fundamental difference is that there had been months and months of debate on Brexit. Every jot and tittle and the minutiae of every piece of legislation and policy had been debated. The difference here is that we have had 24 days and less than two hours’ scrutiny in its entirety. That is the crucial difference.

I get more and more suspicious about this legislation when Back-Benchers are ordered to stand up and support its rapid passage through the Chamber. That makes me more worried, because I have to wonder whether there is a hidden agenda to get it through on the nod. There is also the fact that they decided to table it when they knew that people's attention was on coronavirus, when many Members had holidays planned and when we had the issue with Mr Storey's funeral. Maybe it was an interesting time to get bad legislation passed without public scrutiny. I am worried about it, and I know that my view is held by many unionists throughout Northern Ireland. Therefore, I appeal to Mr Lyons to simply agree to an extension of the period for scrutiny of the Bill so that we can all agree with it or otherwise with a clear conscience knowing that we have done everything to check and double-check that what we are being told is correct.

Miss Woods: I suppose that I will have to mention Mr Bullick, like every other Member has, but with the caveat that neither I nor the Green Party has spoken to him or engaged with him on the matter. However, I am glad that his comments, on whatever platform they were made, have encouraged other Members to realise the issues in the Bill, that the Bill is not just about planning and that there are wider implications included here.

Junior Minister Lyons, in introducing the Bill to the House on 6 July, stated that the Bill was intended to address the implications for ministerial and Executive decision-making of the judgement in what is known as the Buick case, which was brought against the Department for Infrastructure's grant of planning permission for a waste incinerator during the time that the Assembly was suspended. It is supposed to limit the grounds on which legal challenge can be taken against a decision made by the Executive or individual Ministers and outline the processes by which planning decisions can be taken by the Minister for Infrastructure. It is also to amend the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to deal with any significant or controversial matters that are clearly outside the scope of the Programme for Government — that is, of course, if we ever have one. It leads to scenarios where any Minister can decide matters without recourse to the Executive unless it affects the statutory responsibilities of another Department more than incidentally.

The amendments today are supposed to limit the proposed changes to purely planning matters by removing the reference to other Ministers, but do they do that? We have had no time to consider the full implications of the Bill or, indeed, the amendments, and the Executive Office Committee spent only minutes discussing this on 1 July, which is hardly enough given the implications and the reality that this is a change to the Northern Ireland Act and the St Andrews Agreement. The Bill was and is being sold as a minor technical Bill to regularise an anomaly identified by the Buick case and to stop the Executive becoming a de facto decision-making body for planning applications. Why, then, was the Bill not limited to planning? The fact that the amendments have been tabled shows that the Bill appears to be much more significant than we were told by the Executive Office, and we need time to properly consider it. There is absolutely no justification for accelerated passage.

Whilst I understand the rationale behind the amendments — to try to remove the reference to other Ministers — it still, for me, opens up the same question of what this means for the exercising of power and decisions by the Executive, going forward. The amendments seem to remove some of the main problems identified but leave the specifics to do with planning, so does that mean that the Department for Infrastructure and the Minister for Infrastructure will be exempt and will enjoy the increased power and authority? Would the amendments mean that the Infrastructure Minister may take decisions on their own on those matters but nobody else can? How would that fit in with the collective responsibility of the Executive, even if the Bill were amended?

1.45 pm

How will it fit in with our wider responsibilities for the environment? That is not confined to one Department. Planning decisions will, of course, have more than one incidental, significant or controversial impact on other Departments and Ministers' responsibilities. You could and can make the argument that every such planning decision will have an impact on the environment.

Where does this leave us? We should be encouraging better collective and collaborative working, not giving Departments cover to plough ahead with working in silos or isolating one through these amendments, recognising that there are issues with the way in which the Bill is written and the powers that it confers on our Ministers and Departments. This is not the time to be passing powers in this Bill. We need a full and informed, comprehensive debate with Assembly scrutiny. I have heard no reasons given by any Members from both sides of the Chamber and in the House today for accelerated passage being required for this. If it were needed, it would have been introduced in February. This is an example of a bad Government, and bad policy will flow from it.

Mr Carroll: It is not an overstatement to say that the majority of the public questions already the level of transparency, scrutiny and oversight in the Assembly. When I first spoke about the Bill, I outlined my disgust at the cavalier way in which the Executive circumvented basic tests of scrutiny and accountability around decision-making that most reasonable people should expect from political leaders. I add to that my disappointment at how Ministers brush off the concerns that I raise about the lack of accountability, presuming that they are unlikely to face any consequences. If the Bill were passed, it would undoubtedly further dilute the levels of transparency and accountability that are already low.

I think that it is reasonable to consider, at this time, the ways in which this Executive and previous Executives, made up from the same big parties, have flouted transparency and accountability, in order that we know exactly the well-trodden path that the Bill walks. The RHI scheme cost us over £550 million, and, years on, we find ourselves asking, "Where is the accountability? Where are the emergency oversight measures that would guarantee that it would never happen again?". The Bill would do the exact opposite.

Decisions and statements made in the middle of a global health pandemic, at best, misled the public on PPE, an issue of unmatched importance for thousands of front-line staff. Where are the new beefed-up oversight measures to guarantee that that will not happen again? The Bill seeks to remove the limited oversight measures that we have.

A massive decision was taken about an incinerator, one that would have an impact on communities and the environment, without the Assembly or a Minister in place and without the necessary oversight. A Court of Appeal rightly upheld the court's verdict that that flouts basic scrutiny. What is the Executive's reaction? It is to take what most people would see as the sensible response to prevent permanent secretaries being allowed to make similar decisions in future but use it as a vehicle to remove the same scrutiny measures from Ministers so that they can ram home similar decisions whenever they want, without facing the scrutiny and questioning of the Executive Committee. I feel that sense of disgust again here today.

An issue in my constituency that I cannot help but think about is Casement Park and those who must be rubbing their hands together at the prospect of pushing ahead with that project, more or less unchanged, despite serious safety concerns raised by residents, because they will have, in effect, fewer loopholes to jump through and less reason to hear the valid concerns of residents in the area.

It is, of course, the case that occasionally a Minister could choose to apply the same level of scrutiny for what are deemed to be controversial cases. Given the record of this and previous Executives, who can truly say that they would trust them to do so?

Despite the various platitudes about learning the lessons from RHI, the Bill does the complete opposite and draws the incorrect conclusions. The RHI scheme was world-famous for all the wrong reasons. What Minister here wants to face a similar situation in the future? If they can justify it, what do they have to hide from scrutiny that is worth this attack on oversight measures?

Ministers' decisions should not be questioned only behind closed doors or by those who walk the corridors of Stormont. A public hearing, public scrutiny and those who vote MLAs to the Chamber should not be held in such contempt. In the past few months that we have sat in this seemingly reformed Assembly, only a handful of times have the Executive parties openly voted against one another, so who can really have confidence in a behind-closed-doors approach to decision-making from those same parties? Despite the well-trodden charade for the cameras on either side of the communal divide in the Chamber, this is one of many issues on which both of the big parties have each other's backs. This is not an issue, as it is being presented by some in the media, that divides the main nationalist and unionist blocs. They are both seemingly here to vote for it today, and it is not difficult to see how they could both benefit from the legislation in the future.

We in People Before Profit do not care about the political ideology or communal identity of the Minister involved. All Ministers should be subject to maximum scrutiny and accountability, but this Bill seeks to do the exact opposite. Let me be frank: we can never rule out an "I'll scratch your back if you scratch my back" approach to decision-making in this place. Any Ministers worth their salt would recognise the public's distrust because of the history of this place and be more than happy to face the necessary scrutiny measures in order to quell it. This Bill does the opposite, at breakneck and accelerated speed, and through the use of accelerated passage. It speaks volumes about what we can expect in the outworkings of the Bill. Where was the accelerated action to ensure that our healthcare workers were paid the strike pay that they lost out on earlier this year? They have been promised that it is coming, but I am afraid that they are still waiting for it after months.

In summary, the Belfast Agreement states that the Executive Committee should, for significant and controversial decisions, provide:

"a forum for the discussion of, and agreement on, issues which cut across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers".

Who could truly argue against that? In fact, I argue that we should go further. I will therefore not support the Bill. Although I recognise the efforts of Mr Beattie to amend aspects of it and to address some of the concerns raised, I am not convinced that the amendments before us go far enough to address fundamentally those concerns, so, unfortunately, I cannot support them today.

In conclusion, because the accelerated passage approach was taken and because the Bill has been rammed through very quickly, it is important to read into the record some concerns raised by others. Mr Bullick has been mentioned in detail, but some groups have raised concerns about this, including Cooperate Against Mining in Omagh (CAMIO). It has said:

"It is clearly evident that the NI Executive intends to imminently push through a selection of unsavoury and toxic projects, hence the justification for proposing this legislation at an unprecedented speed. This is the antithesis of democracy, essentially creating ministerial dictatorships."

Many would probably agree with that.

It also states:

"The purpose of this legislation seems to be to stifle debate, prevent any form of information relating to any proposed 'controversial' project be discussed in a public forum, while suppressing all documentation relating to same."

There are therefore many concerns, not just raised by me and others in the Chamber but by groups outside. I will leave my comments there.

Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): We wish to oppose the amendments tabled by the Member for Upper Bann. Mr Beattie's amendments reflect the concerns aired recently on social media and in the media about the perceived implications of the Bill for safeguards in the decision-making process and for the authority of the Executive. We believe that those concerns are unfounded. I can assure Members that we have been rigorous in our consideration of these matters and have received legal support and advice from our senior legal advisers to the Executive and to Departments. We have rigorously examined the Bill against our intended policy and also to avoid any unintended consequences.

In doing so, we have looked fully at the intention behind the proposals in the St Andrews Agreement and at the debate that clearly outlined the intentions behind the clauses in a series of pre-notified questions by the then MP for East Belfast, the Rt Hon Peter Robinson, to the Minister who was responsible for bringing the Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act 2006 through the House of Commons, the Rt Hon David Hanson, the then Minister of State for Northern Ireland. We are fully satisfied that the amendments on clarifying the cross-cutting test are fully in line with those intentions as set out. Indeed, it is clear that the intention was a wide one, but it was one that cut across responsibilities rather than interests and did so in a way that was more than de minimis. The language that we have used in the Bill enshrines this test to ensure that all matters that are more than merely incidental are required to be brought to the Executive Committee. The Belfast Agreement states in paragraph 19:

“The Executive Committee will provide a forum for the discussion of, and agreement on, issues which cut across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers”

That was given statutory force by section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The agreement also states:

“Ministers will have full executive authority in their respective areas of responsibility”

within the Programme for Government.

Mr O’Toole: I am grateful to the junior Minister for giving way. On the point about cross-cutting, will he clarify that, presumably, it would be his and the Executive Office’s understanding that the implementation of the Ireland protocol, which is binding on the entire Executive, would be seen as such a fundamental cross-cutting matter that implementation and decisions around that would, if necessary, be brought to the full Executive?

Mr Lyons: That is an issue that is being brought to the Executive, and we have our Brexit subcommittee that is dealing with all Brexit-related matters.

On a very important point, it should be noted that the responsibilities and authorities of Ministers are entirely based on statute. The St Andrews Agreement and Act subsequently further codified these respective roles through the 2007 statutory ministerial code that placed specific obligations on Ministers to bring cross-cutting and significant or controversial matters to the Executive Committee for decision. It did not, however, redefine or offer any interpretation of what constituted a cross-cutting matter. This, and the need for referral to the Executive, was always left in the first instance to the judgement of individual Ministers, based on advice on how, and to what extent, their proposals impacted on the responsibilities of other Ministers. It has always been the case, therefore, that Ministers have been able to take a wide variety of decisions without reference to the Executive. Before the Buick judgements, for example, planning application decisions were not brought to the Executive for consideration. The Executive, therefore, is not now abandoning a control that it has never sought to exercise, despite what is being claimed.

Mr Muir: Will the junior Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: I will give way.

Mr Muir: Does he accept that the Buick judgement references that no previous Environment Minister or Infrastructure Minister has ever referred an individual planning application to the Executive Committee for agreement prior to its determination?

Mr Lyons: I thank Mr Muir for his intervention. That is certainly my understanding. This was never a common practice.

Here we are, 14 years on from St Andrews. We believe that the Buick judgements, in their interpretation of cross-cutting, including matters that another Minister may have an interest in, rather than one that cuts across his or her responsibilities, has shifted the balance too far in the direction of the Executive by merging the concepts of ministerial responsibilities and ministerial interests. The threat of legal action against ministerial decisions because a link, however tenuous, could be identified with the interests of another Minister would, potentially, make their exercise of authority uncertain and the work of the Executive unsustainable, by forcing everything on to their agenda. In this regard, I wonder what consultation the Member has carried out, in moving the amendments, with his party colleague who is currently the Minister for Health.

He was asked earlier to state whether the Minister of Health actually supported this legislation or simply supported the idea of having some legislation. That would be a fairly ridiculous position for the Minister of Health to put himself in and to say, “Right, go ahead. I am happy enough with the idea that we are going to have some legislation, but do not bring it back for me to see.” Of course, the Minister has seen the legislation and has agreed to it. Every Minister must accept the decisions of the Executive Committee under the Pledge of Office.

What consultation has the Member carried out with the Minister of Health? Removing the clause would mean that he would have to bring almost every departmental health decision to the Executive on the basis of the very broad interpretation that all matters merely touching —

2.00 pm

Mr Wells: Will the Minister take an intervention?

Mr Lyons: In a second — the very broad interpretation that matters merely touching on another Department ought to be brought to the Executive, as per the Buick judgement.

Mr Wells: The junior Minister is tilting at windmills: we are not asking for any of that. The Minister has not addressed the issue of “Why the rush?”. He has not quoted any outstanding legal challenges based on the Buick judgement. He has not indicated any crucial infrastructure project that we must get a decision on quickly if we do not pass the Bill. Will the Minister address the fundamental point — the one thing, I think, that the House can agree on today — that we need a few extra weeks to consider the Bill to dot all the i’s and cross all the t’s and so avert potential disaster?

Mr Lyons: There seems to be confusion. I think that what Mr Beattie is saying is that we pass his amendment today, pass the Bill tomorrow, and then we can look at these issues at another time. However, Mr Wells seems to be saying that we need to pause everything for a few months. I do not think that there is agreement even among the Members who support the amendments about the route that they want to go down.

To go back to the point that I was making, it is difficult to think of a —

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: I will give way, of course.

Mr Wells: More windmills, Mr Lyons. You have not answered this question: what would be wrong with giving two more months’ consideration of the Bill to iron out all the uncertainties that are so obviously inherent in it?

Mr Lyons: First of all, timing. The Member has raised before the notice period for amendments. That matter is out of our hands at the moment. The Bill's next stage is tomorrow. I understand the uncertainty that some Members have about the Bill, but we have gone through accelerated passage, and I am convinced, on the basis of the legal advice that we have received from numerous legal sources, that the Bill does exactly what we want it to do.

Mr Beattie: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: I understand and fully accept that other Members may not believe that that is the case. They do not have the assurance that the Bill will do what it is intended to do, but we have that confidence. The House has decided to proceed with accelerated passage, and that is what we will do. On that point, I give way to Mr Beattie.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Minister for giving way. The Minister mentioned the legal advice that he has received that makes it absolutely clear: will he release the legal advice, so that I and everyone else can see it and be absolutely clear? That would help. If the Minister had done that earlier, maybe we would not even be having this debate. My question to the Minister is this: will he release the legal advice?

Mr Lyons: The Member should know that it is not in my gift to release legal advice that is given to the Executive. The smile on Mr Beattie's face shows that he knows that that is the case and that it is not something that I can do.

Mr Stalford: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: I am being generous with interventions. I will give way to Christopher, although I note that, in his earlier comments, he said that people who were good friends of his went to his wedding. That is how close he was [Interruption.] I put on record that I was not at Mr Stalford's wedding; however, I will, of course, give way to him.

Mr Stalford: I am tempted to say, "Maybe the next one" [Laughter] but I do not think I will.

The Member asks about seeking legal advice. Can the Minister confirm that there is absolutely nothing to prevent the leader or members of the Ulster Unionist Party from making an appointment with the Departmental Solicitor's Office and asking for advice?

Mr Lyons: I certainly would not tell Members what to do. However, if that is the path that they would like to go down, I am sure that that path is open to them.

Let us go back to the Department of Health. It is hard to think of a single issue in the Department of Health that would not meet the very low bar that has been brought about as a result of Buick. Some Members have argued that the very wide and expansionist interpretation that follows from Buick should remain, as it would if the amendments were to be made. They argue that Ministers individually or the Executive collectively should ignore the requirement that it come to the Executive. That is just not sustainable; that cannot continue.

Mr Butler: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: Of course I will.

Mr Butler: I will not detain the junior Minister long. Would the junior Minister agree that making the change as proposed is to forget the political reality that we operate in?

This is not the politics of unicorns and fairies. We have had a very disruptive and very disrupted term of politics, never less than in the last four to five years. Work needs to be done that is underpinned by 'New Decade, New Approach'. This may be just a step too far, given the confidence and the relationships that need to be built.

Mr Lyons: What is the Member saying? The Member is saying that we should do one of two things. We should either bring all these issues — everything, however tenuous, that touches on the interests of other Ministers — to the Executive. The other thing that, the Member says, we should do is, "Let's just ignore that and use the power only whenever we want to". We cannot do that. That is not sustainable. That is not a position that we can remain in. If something is required to be brought to the Executive, the Minister cannot make that decision by himself or herself. It must come to the Executive, and then you are leaving yourself open to all sorts of legal challenges. That is why we are trying to bring in the legislation that is before us today.

What changes as a result of the Bill becoming law? First, what does not change? A Minister must still bring to the Executive a significant or controversial matter where it is outside the scope of the Programme for Government. Secondly, cross-cutting matters must still be brought to the Executive. What changes is that, first, the Minister for Infrastructure does not have to bring specified planning decisions to the Executive, nor can those decisions be called in by the First Minister and deputy First Minister. Secondly, the intention of the St Andrews Agreement is enshrined: significant and controversial matters are required to come to the Executive — this is the key point — regardless of whether a Programme for Government is in place. That addresses a long-standing issue in the original drafting. In relation to the requirements under the Programme for Government, the intention was that matters previously agreed by the Executive would not need to come again to the Executive. However, that would apply only to the matters or aspects of a matter explicitly specified and included in the Programme for Government. To reassure, any policy or matter not specified but which would or could support outcomes in the PFG will still require full consultation and will be subject to the requirement to come to the Executive, if it is either significant or controversial or if it is cross-cutting. Thirdly and most relevant to today's debate, the test for a matter being cross-cutting has been given a statutory definition so as to reduce the uncertainty about what might constitute the interests of another Minister by providing that a Minister does not have to bring a matter to the Executive unless it affects the exercise of the statutory responsibilities of another Minister or Ministers more than incidentally.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyons: I will make some progress. I will come back to the Member later on.

That definition is also consistent with the language of paragraph 19 of the Belfast Agreement and, importantly, the St Andrews Agreement and subsequent Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act 2006, which refers to "responsibilities" and not to "interests".

It is important that an appropriate balance between authority and the efficient functioning of our system is struck. This will not open the floodgates of unfettered decision-making by Ministers on matters that they would normally have brought to the Executive; indeed, I can be clear that the Executive's policy intention is for the Bill to enshrine in law the practice that was in place before the case of Buick and after the St Andrews Agreement. The objective of the Executive is that all matters that were deemed to be required to come to the Executive prior to the Buick case and this Bill and all the types of matters brought to the Executive would continue to be brought under these requirements. The amendment is not to diminish that Executive role in any way, with the exception of planning matters as specified in the amendment.

The Bill is intended to prevent a wide range of additional matters not hitherto considered matters required to come to the Executive now having to be brought. However, it should be noted that the amendment relating to cross-cutting requirements, read in conjunction with the Buick case, still supports wide-ranging responsibilities for Ministers on matters that cut across the responsibilities of more than one Minister; indeed, that may still require additional matters to come to the Executive than would have been the previous practice. Further guidance on that will be given in the ministerial code. Therefore, it is not that what we bring to the Assembly today diminishes Executive collective decision-making; rather, it protects and enhances it in all matters, with the exception of the planning-related issue. In that regard, it is important to reference that cross-cutting powers remain wide. As outlined clearly by legal advice, once a matter is required to come to the Executive, the relevant Minister does not have the authority to make that decision. In terms of the courts' interpretation of that test and the practice of the Executive Committee, if a Minister is in any doubt about whether a matter should be brought to the Executive Committee, it needs to come. That is the best way to ensure that legal risk is minimised. Those matters will be made clear in the ministerial code.

I turn for a moment to the specific planning aspects of the Bill. Some commentary has raised the issue of multiple related consents that may rest in other Departments. It is important to note that those matters were not previously brought to the Executive and that there is no intention to now require them to be brought. The ministerial code will require amendment, and that issue will be dealt with in a more detailed way in the code to make it clear. If any problems persist with this planning matter, further action will be taken to address it.

Let me address this issue, because there has been some confusion about call-in powers and how they relate to the planning section. The call-in on these matters will still apply under section 28B of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 through the power of 30 Members to request that a matter be referred to the Executive. We should also bear in mind that the call-in power for the First Minister and the deputy First Minister in respect of significant or controversial matters is unaffected, other than those in respect of those specified planning decisions.

The amendment would remove an important provision and would leave Ministers in a position of considerable uncertainty about the exercise of authority in their Department and expose them to a much greater risk of a legal challenge based on the interpretation of what is or is not a cross-cutting matter. Therefore, we ask Members to reject the amendment.

Dr Aiken: I thank everybody who came in for the debate. It will come as no surprise to find that I am coming to support the amendments. Let us quickly go slightly further back into the history of this. I will bring in a few of the catch-alls that everybody has been commenting on. I declare an interest as an MLA for South Antrim, and I do not want to see the Arc21 Ponzi scheme being built on top of a cliff face in that constituency.

I do not believe that any of the decisions on Arc21 have been correct. The Buick case was a long-running process that exposed the problems that were based on the planning decisions that were made going forward. I fully understand the Infrastructure Minister's frustrations about trying to get decisions going. I fully understand the views of everybody else here that we want to get the Northern Ireland economy going. I fully understand that the planning processes in Northern Ireland are, to put it mildly, archaic and are really counterproductive to trying to get Northern Ireland going. The legislation needed to enable the Infrastructure Minister to make those decisions is something that we as a party and, indeed, all the parties here want to see. This Bill, if it is not amended, is not that legislation. Mr Wells asked this question, as did Mr Stalford and others in oblique ways: what is the legislation supposedly trying to do?

What is the rush to bring the legislation through, where it is quite clear that there is a degree of doubt in the process as we are coming through? We have heard Member after Member talk about the fact that we should take more time to consider it.

2.15 pm

We have heard quite clearly from the junior Minister — thank you very much indeed for your comments — about the importance of the legal position and the fact that you have had the best legal advice, but, Members of the Assembly, they had the best legal advice when we were dealing with RHI, and where did that come to? So, when somebody says to me that they have the best legal advice and that, in some way, we, as Members of the Assembly, should accept that because the Bill is some form of good legislation, I say that the reason why we have tabled the amendments is because it is not good legislation. It does not seek to set out what we are trying to right, which are the problems with planning, infrastructure and Buick. It does something fundamentally different, and many Members have referred to that in their comments today.

I want to talk about some of the specific points. The question is this: is the Bill good legislation? The mere fact that a party that is part of the Executive is challenging the legislative process shows that it is not good legislation. Why do we think that this is not good legislation? One of the biggest problems that we have in Northern Ireland is responsibility and accountability and openness and transparency. I welcome the talk about the ministerial code, which has not been updated yet. I welcome the fact that we are going to have definitions of significant and controversial. We do not know what those are and what those are likely to be. We are being asked specifically to take the Bill on the basis that the ministerial code, which we have not seen to be amended, will be amended. We are being asked to accept the Bill on the fact that we need to put some balance and trust on the words "significant" and "controversial". We see the word "cross-cutting", and cross-cutting is good, but when will we see the rest of the detail?

The Ulster Unionist Party tabled the amendments because we want the legislation that goes through to be specifically based on dealing with the Buick issues on planning. The Bill, as it is being put through at the moment, does not do that. It is about making sure that we have the appropriate checks, balances and controls.

We have heard a lot about St Andrews, and we have heard about the Belfast Agreement, but one of the reasons why Northern Ireland, to use the words of the soon-to-be-leaving head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service, is seen to be unique is that the normal checks, balances and controls do not work. We have to make sure that, when we are doing the legislative process, we have good legislation that comes through that addresses the specific issue. The specific issue, Mr Deputy Speaker and Members of the Assembly, is how can we ensure that proper planning decisions are made in an appropriate time, not moving away from the position that we are in at the moment and not taking away checks, balances and controls.

I could speak for much longer, and you are probably glad that I am not going to. I could talk about the Democratic Unionist Party's history lesson, which, I must admit, I really enjoyed. Thank you very much indeed for that. It will be used in the future for people to look at this, but this is not an issue about people from outside of here. This is about making sure that we have good legislation, openness and transparency. Members of this House, I commend the amendments to you.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Members, before putting the Question on amendment No 1, I remind Members that amendment No 1 is a paving amendment for amendment Nos 2 and 3.

Question put, That amendment No 1 be made.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Clear the Lobbies. The Question will be put again in three minutes. I remind Members that we should continue to uphold social-distancing measures and that Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come into the Chamber. Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that it would be preferable to avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before the Assembly divides, I remind Members that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. It is important that, during any Division, social distancing in the Chamber continues to be observed. To facilitate that, I ask the following: any Members in the Chamber who are not due to vote in person should consider leaving the Chamber until the Division has concluded. Those Members who wish to vote in the Lobby on the opposite side of the Chamber to which they are sitting should leave the Chamber via the nearest door and enter the relevant Lobby via the Rotunda. Those remaining Members who are sitting closest to the Lobby doors should enter the Lobbies first. Any Member who has voted may then wish to leave the Chamber until the Division has concluded. However, any Member who needs to vote in both Lobbies should remain in the Chamber.

I remind Members of the need to be patient at all times, to follow the instructions of the Lobby Clerks and to respect the need for social distancing.

I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments before the next item of business, which is the question for urgent oral answer to the Minister of Health.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Stafford] in the Chair)

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Health

Restrictions on Travel from Spain

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Colm Gildernew has given notice of an urgent oral answer to the Minister of Health. I remind Members that, if they wish to ask a supplementary question, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary question.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to outline the reasons for the change to restrictions in respect of travel from Spain, introduced on 26 July 2020.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): I thank the Member for the question.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, International Travel) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 came into operation on 8 June. On July 10, a list of exempt countries was inserted, allowing those who had been in those countries to be exempted from the self-isolation period of 14 days when they arrived in Northern Ireland. On Saturday 25 July, I made an urgent amendment to remove Spain from the list of exempted countries, meaning that, from Sunday 26 July, those arriving in Northern Ireland from Spain are again required to self-isolate for the full 14-day period.

My decision, which has now been supported by the Executive, was based on detailed scientific information that was shared with me on Saturday. The key points to note are that, since last week, the weekly case rate for Spain has broadly doubled; Spain is following the same trajectory as Serbia, which was removed from the regulations following the same process on 11 July; Spain now conducts fewer tests than the UK, so the true prevalence, compared with the UK, could be higher than this data represents.

Areas of Spain have been reintroducing lockdown restrictions, particularly in the Barcelona region. The weekly case count in Spain has doubled from circa 4,489 to circa 9,575 this week. That rise in the disease has been seen in 15 of the 19 regions and autonomous cities of Spain. The total number of tests performed has increased, as I said, but the proportion of those that are positive has also increased from 1.4% to 4.3% during July, with the greatest increase in the last week.

I discussed that advice with the Ministers from the other three UK regions, and the decision was taken to remove Spain from the list of exempt countries from midnight on Saturday night. I recognise that the timing of the change would have had a significant impact on travellers who arrived early on Sunday morning. However, the evidence was considered to be so strong that a delay was not feasible. The risk to the Northern Ireland population was too great to delay another day.

I will continue to make decisions based on scientific information to determine which countries may be removed or added to the exemption list and will move quickly to remove any country when the evidence supports doing so. The health and safety of the people of Northern Ireland is my main priority.

Mr Gildernew: I will remove my mask to ask the question as not doing so can cause people with hearing difficulties additional problems in picking up what is being said.

Considering the ongoing confusion around travel advice and restrictions, does the Minister agree that it is important to convene a British-Irish Council meeting to agree a consistent approach to travel into and across these islands?

Mr Swann: As the Chair of the Committee will be aware, there will be a North/South Ministerial Council meeting on Friday, at which that will be the main topic of discussion. So, I am sure that the incidence in Spain and other countries, and how we manage that on an all-island basis, will be up for discussion at that point.

Mr Gildernew: Will the British-Irish Council meet to consider the east-west dimension?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Now, this is not a Committee.

Mr Gildernew: My question was not answered.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: This is not the Committee, and the Minister has given an answer.

Mr Swann: If any directions come from the North/South Ministerial Council in regard to the British-Irish Council, the First Minister and the deputy First Minister will take them.

Mr Easton: What is the process when somebody comes back from Spain and lands at the airport? What happens at that stage? You have to go and isolate for two weeks, but is there some sort of process at the airports to make sure that holidaymakers and residents who are coming back know exactly what they have to do?

Mr Swann: There are information points at the airports. There will also be announcements made on aeroplanes as people arrive as to the steps that they should be taking. There is an international travel locator form, which is mandatory for anybody who lands in Northern Ireland from one of the red countries. That must be completed, and there is a penalty of £60 for anybody who fails to do so. So, the test, trace and protect system should work if it is necessary to follow them up and make sure that they are observing the 14 days of isolation that is required should somebody come in from a quarantine country.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call Mr Pat Sheehan, I remind Members to rise in their places if they wish to ask a question.

Mr Sheehan: How is the Minister going to address the confusion about, and differences in, the travel advice? I am not just talking about North/South but also east-west, where there seem to be a lot of anomalies in the advice that is being given out.

Mr Swann: That is a valid point, and it is one that I raised with the Secretary of State for Health and Social Care, Matt Hancock, on Saturday night, because there seems to be inconsistency between the advice that is coming from the Health Departments across the four nations and the advice that is being given by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. I wrote today to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office asking for clarity and for it to consider the guidance that it is giving in regard to travel from the islands specifically, because it seems to contradict what was agreed by the four Health Ministers.

I have raised the matter with the Health Minister and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and I hope to receive clarity on the specifics of it, because it is causing some confusion for people who are travelling or who still intend to travel to the islands. At this point, I encourage them not to.

3.15 pm

Mr McGrath: I thank the Minister for coming to answer questions on this important issue, which is causing great concern to people. I appreciate, from his advice, that the incubation period could be up to seven days, but is there a method of prioritising testing for those individuals on that seventh day? If results could come back within 48 hours, that could shave five days off the quarantine period for them, which would enable many of them to get back to work. Many of those who are off at this period are teachers, and they need to get back into school and back to work as quickly as possible.

Mr Swann: The Member raised with me yesterday by text message the ability of someone who is currently in Spain to book a test and take it on their return. Our testing system is not set up to do that. At this minute in time, it is set up for people who are symptomatic. We are looking at whether it should be necessary or whether there could be an advantage in that, but I would not want testing to be a reassurance or a second line for somebody who wants to book a holiday to a country that is in the red zone and then rely on testing when they come home to allow them to get back to the workplace earlier. As I said to the Member when he asked me yesterday, the issue is the incubation period of COVID-19. The initial test, when somebody lands, might be negative, but there is an incubation period of, we reckon, up to about seven days where a second test may be necessary. We are looking at that, but we need to be consistent across all nations.

Mr Blair: Can the Minister give any clarification or information on how or if there is a joined-up Executive approach to this? For example, is the Department for the Economy working with employers? Is the Department of Finance working with holiday insurance companies? Are both or either working with the Department of Health?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. He makes a valid point. He may not be aware that there was an Executive meeting prior to the urgent oral question, and the only item on the agenda was what supports other Departments could put in place. The Department for the Economy and the Minister for the Economy are now engaging with employers to request that there is flexible support for those who have been in Spain and now face 14 days of quarantine. The Department for the Economy will also engage with travel insurers, as the Member suggested. The Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance will engage with their counterparts in Westminster in regard to furlough to see if anybody who had been furloughed could re-engage with furlough when they return from Spain.

There are as many support mechanisms in place as possible, and, again, the Department for Communities and the Minister for Communities will see what additional support packages are within the remit of the Northern Ireland Executive. The Executive Office will look at updating information on nidirect so that anyone who is currently in Spain or intends to go to Spain can get all the information in one central location rather than having to source it elsewhere. Currently, nidirect gives information to people who may be looking to go on holiday, but we need it updated for those who are in Spain and are caught in that situation so that they have the information on what to do when they return.

Mr O'Dowd: I want to return to the British-Irish Council meeting and the need for a British-Irish Council meeting. The Minister has taken a decision on Spain because the evidence suggests that we should restrict travel. There are parts of these islands where infection rates may be as high as if not higher than those in Spain. Does the Minister agree that the British-Irish Council meeting will be an opportunity for all the Administrations to share advice and to give reassurance to the public that the best advice is being used?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member, and I realise the political point that he is trying to make in regard to engagement at the British-Irish Council. I will attend any meeting that develops positive health advice for the people of Northern Ireland. Whether it is North/South or British-Irish, I would be supportive of any meeting that provides a consistent approach and consistent guidance to the people of Northern Ireland across these islands.

Mr Chambers: Minister, given that this is a fast-changing situation, what advice would you give to anyone who is considering overseas travel that is not essential?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. I will read him the current advice, which is on nidirect. It states:

"You should carefully consider your holiday and travel options, in light of the continuing COVID-19 threat. A 'staycation' is one way of mitigating the risks - while also supporting the local economy. If you're holidaying abroad, you may have to self-isolate for a period of 14 days on your return home - depending on which country you have visited."

I ask people to take great cognisance of that in regards to the ever-changing situation and coronavirus in other countries and places. As we have seen with Spain, it can change at a very rapid pace. The guidance on nidirect is fully supported by the entire Northern Ireland Executive, and I encourage people from Northern Ireland to read it when planning their holiday.

Mr O'Toole: Does the Health Minister have any specific guidance for family members or people who share a household with someone who has just come back from Spain? For example, if a young person comes back from holiday and returns to his or her parent's house, what is the guidance for other people who share that household? Should the person who is returning be self-isolating in a separate part of the house? How does that work? Will specific guidance be given to family members and householders?

Mr Swann: The Member almost answered his question. The guidance on self-isolation and how that is managed has been there from the early days of our managing coronavirus. That information on self-isolation stands. It is about isolating in rooms that are separate, if possible, using different bathrooms and bedrooms and making sure that you are not in the kitchen at the same time. That advice and guidance is well documented and is available on nidirect and the Department of Health's website. We will reiterate it for anybody returning from Spain, so that the entire package of information is there to support them.

Mr Muir: Dublin Airport is a popular airport for people from Northern Ireland. What arrangements are in place for data sharing in terms of people who are travelling back from countries that are on the red list? Without that data sharing, what do you consider to be the risk of people who are travelling through Dublin Airport not self-isolating in Northern Ireland?

Mr Swann: The Member raises a point that, I think, I am on public record about, thanks to another leaked letter. I have raised concerns about data sharing with my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland. We have information points at all airports across these islands that indicate that the completion of the travel locator form is for your place of residence or final travel. Anybody landing in Dublin and coming to Northern Ireland must complete that travel locator form. We have information points at all the airports and places of landing. However, I have raised concerns with my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland that we do not have a process whereby the information on people completing the form is being shared openly with us. It is on the agenda for discussion at the North/South Ministerial Council meeting on Friday. It is important that we have that information to make sure that we can reinforce the 14-day self-isolation that we are requiring for people returning from countries that are on the red list.

Mr Givan: Minister, people have been caught up in the change, at the eleventh hour, on returning from Spain. A number of them will have gone there in good faith that they would be able to come home and return to work; for some of them, that is to work in your Department. However, the policy there is that they need to self-isolate and the time comes off their leave. Will a sympathetic approach be taken to employees who face circumstances in which they could be forced to use their holiday leave because of the decision taken?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for making that point. As I said in a previous answer, his party colleague the Minister for the Economy is speaking with the representative bodies of major employers to ask them to be as flexible as possible, so that people can be supported through working at home or by additional or reintroduced furlough payments, in order that they do not have to use sick leave to take the fortnight of self-isolation. I encourage my ministerial colleagues, where possible, to avoid anyone being penalised. If they can be supported by them working at home for the fortnight, they should be.

Dr Archibald: I am glad to hear about the Executive's approach that the Minister outlined to Mr Blair. Are there any exemptions to the quarantine period, for example, for essential or key workers?

Mr Swann: Unfortunately, because we are looking at Spain as a country that is on the red list, the list of exemptions is minimal, if not non-existent, because of the level of prevalence of COVID-19 in that country.

We have been asked whether health workers could be exempted, but, if they were to prove to be positive on the seventh day or the tenth day or if they were to have been asymptomatic during that time, there would be a risk to the people whom they have been working with and to the patients with whom they have come into contact. There are very limited exemptions for anybody coming in from a red country, but I will get exact details for the Member, if that is helpful.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister. No other Members have indicated to me that they wish to ask a question.

I remind Members that the Assembly is scheduled to sit again tomorrow.

Adjourned at 3.25 pm.

Ministerial Statements

Appointment of an Expert Panel to Examine Links between Persistent Educational Underachievement and Socio-economic Background

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Speaker has received notice from the Minister of Education that he wishes to make a statement. Before I call the Minister, I remind Members that, in the light of social distancing being observed, the Speaker's ruling that Members must be in the Chamber to hear a statement if they wish to ask a question has been relaxed. Members still have to make sure that their name is on the speaking list if they wish to be called. They can also do this by rising in their place, notifying the Business Office or the Speaker's Table. I remind Members to be concise in asking their questions to the Minister and the Minister to be concise in his answers. This is not an opportunity for debate and long introductions.

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): I am glad that, given your ruling, there will be Members, not in the Chamber, who will be hanging on every word of the statement.

I would like to make a statement to the Assembly on the establishment of an expert panel to examine the links between persistent educational underachievement and socio-economic background.

I have been aware of and involved in the issue of educational underachievement, particularly the demographic of free-school-meal Protestant boys, since 2012 and have been passionate about addressing this persistent problem ever since. From birth, some children will face significantly greater obstacles, which need to be met and overcome, before they are in a position to realise their full potential. Currently, some manage to overcome these barriers and others do not.

As you are no doubt aware, there is a view in wider society that although valuable work has been done in this area, politically, the can is continually kicked down the road, and the issue is never given the time, effort or resources needed to make fundamental change.

There are also some who consider that, in the past, Government did not fully grasp the urgency of the issue. I believe that that is a misconception and that that misconception is deeply damaging to all in the education sector, not least to the work of the Department and to mine as Minister. Since taking office at the start of the year, I have been committed to getting an expert panel established and working as soon as possible. It is my considered opinion that the issue is simply too important either to ignore or to pay lip service to.

The New Decade, New Approach (NDNA) agreement includes a requirement that:

“The Executive will establish an expert group to examine and propose an action plan to address links between persistent educational underachievement and socio-economic background, including the long-standing issues facing working-class, Protestant boys”.

That is not just a commitment in the New Decade, New Approach agreement but a priority action area for 2019-2020, and I am aware that we are now over halfway through 2020. Although some progress has been made in the Department on the issue, the necessary reprioritisation of work and staff to deal with the public health emergency surrounding COVID-19 has affected our ability to progress it as quickly as I would have liked. I am therefore delighted to make this announcement today.

Effectively, because of the COVID-19 emergency, we have lost four months in our goal to get the expert panel established and working. Without swift action, we will lose an opportunity to complete work on the project by the end of the 2020-21 school year and an opportunity to progress the implementation of the recommendations in this Northern Ireland Assembly term.

It is my clear belief that every child in Northern Ireland, regardless of their community background, deserves a real chance in life. They deserve a chance to realise their hopes and dreams for the future, and whether that career is as a plumber, doctor, journalist, florist, or even, if they are particularly unfortunate, a politician, they should be encouraged, nurtured and developed towards it.

A child will spend approximately 13% of their waking hours at school up to the age of 18, which means that 87% of their time will be spent out of school at home. Schools are largely responsible for children’s academic learning, but, alongside the vital support of the community, children learn some of their most important lessons at home — lessons that families teach best. What they learn at home provides an essential foundation for schools to build upon. The panel will no doubt consider the support mechanisms that can be put in place to help families that are struggling with life in general and whose children’s education is suffering as a consequence.

Educational underachievement and the impact of COVID-19 have, rightly, been consistently raised with me by MLAs and the Education Committee. They have also been highlighted consistently by wider society as we emerge from the health crisis. Now, more than ever, there is an overriding impetus to get the expert panel established and to allow it to commence its work with all haste.

It is worth remembering that, in 2005-06, only 26.4% of free school meal (FSME) school-leavers achieved the benchmark of five or more GCSEs, A* to C, including equivalents, including English and maths. By 2017-18, it was 48.6% of FSME school-leavers. That represents a 22.2% increase in 12 years. By contrast, the equivalent for non-FSME school-leavers was an increase from 58.5% to 78.1%, representing a 19.6% increase over the same period.

So, although progress has been positive, the gap in attainment between those with FSME and those without remained broadly consistent at around 33% each year, rising to around 35% in 2013-14 and falling to 29.5% in 2017-18. It is also widely accepted that Protestant boys with free school meals entitlement have consistently had one of the lowest percentage attainment levels of all pupils.

We also know that many Catholic boys and girls are struggling with attainment. In 2017-18, 1,586 pupils from that community background did not achieve five or more GCSEs, A* to C, including equivalents, including English and maths.

I am committed to doing all that I can to improve those results for everyone. This is not an area that should divide us in any sense but, rather, one that unites us, regardless of our political affiliation or constitutional preference.

There is a general recognition that the interruption to school-based learning caused by COVID-19 could disproportionately impact on the most disadvantaged pupils. For that reason, I have instigated a number of initiatives to help alleviate the impact of COVID-19 on children’s learning. There is a supported summer scheme in July and August in all primary schools that volunteered to deliver it; support for virtual learning over the next 12 months that all year 6 pupils going into year 7 will be able to access; and a new Engage programme that will help all pupils but particularly those from socially disadvantaged backgrounds, who would most benefit from additional support, to engage with learning following the COVID-19 lockdown period. That programme will broadly focus on supporting engagement with learning through the development of knowledge, understanding and skills in literacy and numeracy, which are at the core of our curriculum. With the agreement of the Northern Ireland Executive, the total budget made available for those three initiatives for the remainder of this financial year is £12 million.

We need to go further, strive harder, work faster and build a more certain future for all our children and young people. Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, I have remained committed to establishing the review panel and enabling it to start its work. Now I have set an ambitious timetable of nine months for the work. The panel that I am announcing today will commence work in September, and I have asked it to produce a final report by the end of May 2021. Consistent with my desire to see this crucial project established as soon as is practicable, I have appointed panel members who are:

“Considered to be experts in their field and have demonstrated an understanding of both educational underachievement and its links to socio-economic background.”

I have also ensured that the panel is balanced in its practical experience and research. In going down the route of ministerial appointments, my intention is to ensure that we do not lose significantly more time going through a public appointment process. I have considered the potential members with a view to satisfying myself that each of them is suitably qualified in the field and that the community background of our society is clearly reflected, alongside an appropriate gender balance. I am content with the diversity and breadth of experience represented by the panel members, and I am confident they will do their utmost to produce a regional strategy that will turn around young lives.

Dr Noel Purdy will chair the panel. He is currently director of research and scholarship at Stranmillis University College, where he is also director of the Centre for Research in Educational Underachievement (CREU). Serving alongside Noel will be Mary Montgomery, who is the principal of Belfast Boys' Model School, which has one of the highest levels of attainment for Protestant FSM boys coming from an area of economic deprivation. She has established a culture of aspiration and success with the boys at her school. Kathleen O'Hare is the recently retired principal of Hazelwood Integrated College and was formerly principal of St Cecilia's College. She is very well aware of the concurrent issues of educational underachievement and socio-economic background. Joyce Logue is the principal of Long Tower Primary School in Londonderry, which predominantly serves a pupil population in areas of significant economic and social deprivation such as the Brandywell and the Bogside. The school, under her leadership, has established a track record in tackling underachievement particularly among children from disadvantaged backgrounds. Jackie Redpath is the chief executive of the Greater Shankill Partnership. He has significant and long-standing experience addressing the issue of educational underachievement particularly among FSM Protestant boys in a community setting. Finally, Professor Feyisa Demie, who is an honorary professor at the school of education at Durham University and head of research for school self-evaluation at Lambeth Council in London. He has worked extensively in government Departments for over 25 years in the use of data and research to raise educational achievement.

In making the appointments, I have satisfied myself that each panel member has an established and verifiable track record on the issue of educational underachievement; recognisable knowledge and understanding of the challenges that socio-economic factors present when dealing with the issue; the ability to work with others in a professional, honest and open manner; transparent methodology; and the ability to listen to and take into account a wide range of views and opinions. Further, each panel member has the capacity to think strategically and creatively and has made a significant contribution to addressing educational underachievement in a local or regional context. They are also capable of developing and maintaining cooperative working relationships to establish successful results. Furthermore, those from academia are considered experts in their field through their research into educational underachievement. They have published significantly and widely on the issue. Those from the education and community sectors have a proven track record not only of addressing educational underachievement but of doing so in the specific context of the challenging socio-economic backgrounds of their pupils.

10.45 am

Given the wide range of issues that impact on educational underachievement, the expert panel will seek the views of schools, parents, children and young people, thereby giving voices to those stakeholders and highlighting the important role played by families, parents and communities. The expert panel will also invite submissions from all interested parties who have experience of the issues associated with educational underachievement linked to socio-economic disadvantage. That will include all education sectors, government Departments, local government, the voluntary and community sector, business representative organisations, the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) and the Equality Commission NI.

Educational underachievement is an area of policy that many have endeavoured over recent years to change, yet, despite numerous policy interventions and significant financial investment, it has remained stubbornly entrenched. That is due, at least in part, to its link with disadvantage, which, in turn, links to poverty, and that is a much wider societal issue than education alone. Addressing poverty should be everyone's priority. In doing so, we all stand to benefit. Whether public sector, private sector, third sector, communities, families or parents, we all have a role to play in addressing that critical issue.

This focused and time-bound review has the capacity to change thousands of children's lives for the better. We cannot and should not delay any further in expediting this incredibly important work. Put frankly, no child should suffer the burden of circumstance in determining his or her outcomes. When the expert panel's work has been completed and an action plan produced, it will include an estimate of costs for taking forward the recommendations, which will require funding. I will update Executive colleagues accordingly with the expectation that a bespoke budget will be considered and agreed by the Executive.

The panel has the potential to significantly improve the outcomes for thousands of children and young people in Northern Ireland. As the late President Ronald Reagan once said:

"There are no easy answers, but there are simple answers. We must have the courage to do what we know is morally right."

I hope Members will join me in supporting this important work as it unfolds.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As this is a ministerial statement, there will be an hour for questions. Members will be allowed to ask one question only of the Minister. However, if the full hour has not been used up, I will use — I will keep him here — I will use discretion and try to allow Members to ask further questions if they wish.

Mr Humphrey: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Like you, I come from a working-class Protestant background, so I commend the Minister for his announcement today. This issue has been a running sore in our community for some time and is one that my party has wanted to deal with effectively. I commend the Minister, having spoken to him in January on his appointment, for this process. I also welcome the panel, some of whom I know. Mary Montgomery is the principal of the Boys' Model School. She is very committed to the community in North Belfast. Kathleen was an excellent leader and principal in Hazelwood Integrated College, and Jackie Redpath is an institution in these issues. I commend those three people in particular for their work.

Minister, the work will start in September, and, if I heard you correctly, you said that it would complete in May 2021. This is obviously hugely important work, and I commend the panel and wish them well with it. We have had reports before, so can you assure the House and, more importantly, the young people in the community that the proposals that will come from the panel will be implemented and will make a difference on the ground?

Mr Weir: It is important that we do not have another report that is simply left sitting on the shelf. No research goes wasted, and a number of studies have been done on educational underachievement. To be fair, previous Ministers have done a good lot of work on the matter.

One of the key advantages is that we are not starting from a blank page, not simply because of the depth of experience on the panel but because the panel, in the oral submissions and any meetings that take place, will particularly want to have a level of focus on the body of research that has been done on the subject and will want to draw from that.

The critical point in this is not simply to produce a report with nice-sounding aspirations but to produce an action plan and have practical measures. The focus will be on what needs to be done and how that can be implemented, which is why it is particularly important that, as part of that, the panel looks realistically at issues around cost. I have already indicated in my statement and have put down a marker for the future with the Executive that no change will come in a cost-free environment. While some of the changes may be things that can be done without the need for particular levels of expenditure, there will be a level of cost, so I anticipate and hope that, in line with the NDNA commitments, the Executive, once the report is produced, will give careful consideration and support to the financial support that we need to improve the situation regarding educational underachievement.

Ms Mullan: Minister, I welcome the fact that you and your Department have worked speedily to deliver on the commitments made in 'New Decade, New Approach' regarding tackling underachievement. I remind you of the other commitment in the document, which includes all children and young people, regardless of their background, as educational underachievement does not recognise any religious divide. Like the Member who spoke before me, I look forward to meeting the panel and wish them well in their work. I know some of them well, particularly Joyce Logue, principal of a school in my area, who is well aware of the issues facing children coming from disadvantage.

Minister, in the document, you focus on GCSE as an indicator for measuring attainment. Why, then, do the intervention programmes listed in the document seem to be targeted mostly at primary-school children and primary 7 pupils?

Mr Weir: I will bring further information once we have scoped out all of the details, for instance, on the principal engagement, which is the Engage programme. The Engage programme is likely to cover all ages throughout schools and have some role in all schools, whether primary, post-primary or whatever. Without prejudging any views that emerge on interventions, it is probably the case that the best interventions are done at an early stage in education and, indeed, potentially before the child even goes through the front door of a school.

On the measurements that I used, there is obviously very robust data on GCSE, and that has tended to be used as a benchmark, particularly that of five or more GCSEs at A* to C, including English and mathematics. To that extent, I suppose, it is a shorthand to have in a concrete way a measurement of the overall and overarching academic achievement that has been made. Also, that can be directly differentiated into free school meals and non-free school meals that can then be used as a marker, if you like, for what impact on those who have come from more socially deprived backgrounds can be put in place. The fact that, in one sense, it is the most usable statistic should not blind us to the fact there is a need for interventions across the full spectrum. That was to illustrate that, despite a lot of the good work that has gone on for many years, there is still considerable work to be done.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind Members again that, if they are not on the list, they should please rise.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for his statement. Educational underachievement has been a huge issue here for a long number of years and one of great concern. The issue will clearly have been compounded by the huge interruption to education during COVID-19, and that will add to considerable concern for schools. There is concern, and the Southern Government and the Minister for Education there have taken action to make €370 million available to fund 1,000 teachers, 125 new additional educational psychologists, new buildings, enhanced cleaning regimes, hand-sanitising and personal protective equipment (PPE). Has the Minister considered a similar scheme for here or funding for schools here to ensure minimal disruption to schools, to ensure that we minimise the risk to our children and our staff and to ensure that schools will not have to close again if these actions are taken?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. I think that that is tangential to the statement that the Minister gave, and, in saying "tangential" I am being quite kind. If the Minister wishes to respond to that —.

Mr Weir: I am just glad that the Member did not work West Tyrone into the question.

I am very aware of that, and that is why there have been some initial degrees or steps in terms of catch-up that I referred to in the statement, just to bring it back to that. That is why there has been, for instance, principal support for the Engage programme, which is particularly focused on learning recovery. That is why, as part of this Budget, which predated COVID, there has been additional support for mental health, for instance, that will go into schools.

The Member makes a valid point. The news that the devolved institutions will receive additional money is welcome, and I am sure that the Member will agree with me that that is an added bonus of being part of the United Kingdom. An additional £600 million has been allocated. Obviously, as part of that, there is a process that is ongoing, and, within that, the Finance Minister has started to seek Departments' views on where, they believe, there are additional pressures as a result of COVID. Undoubtedly, the restart of education will be one of those, and we will supply the Department of Finance with estimated figures. In that sense, our approach may be slightly different from that of the Republic of Ireland. However, it is undoubtedly the case, as with the Republic's announcement, that, if additional money is to be put in, it needs to be supplied centrally by the Executive. Certainly, if there is anything in the ballpark of what has happened in other jurisdictions, that will need to be done. I am committed to arguing that case, albeit that there will be many competing demands, I suspect, on whatever budgets are available to the Executive.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for the statement. I think that he referred to the fact that this has been an issue for many years, but young people today are at a disadvantage that we were not faced with. Like the Member for North Belfast, I am from a socially disadvantaged background. I did not get my GCSEs and did not do well in the transfer test, but I was able to succeed. However, children today do not have that opportunity, because it is more competitive to get jobs in the Fire and Rescue Service or the Prison Service, where I spent time. That puts extra emphasis on this welcome piece of work. However, for a really transformative project, it is important that we recognise the correlation between social deprivation and mental health and well-being. Can the Minister tell us of any import that he has given or will give to the panel with regard to looking at that issue and that correlation?

Mr Weir: Broadly speaking, I think, terms of reference will be issued to the panel. There are no artificial boundaries. Obviously, this will feed into the wider review of education. There are certain aspects that will be more applicable to that side of it. It is a panel made up of considerable expertise, particularly of direct involvement with young people. It will be able to use those experiences. Let me put it this way: it is undoubtedly the case that there is a growing awareness of the impact of mental health issues on our young people and has been for a number of years. While at times that reveals a very difficult picture, it is an important picture to reveal. This week, for instance, I had the opportunity to meet via Zoom representatives of the Youth Forum, and it was noticeable that the issues that they raised, particularly during lockdown, while concern over how their education was impacted directly was important, were around boredom, stress, mental anxiety and the damage that was done by lockdown to social interaction with other young people. All of those issues are inextricably linked, and the panel will want to consider that seriously as it moves forward with whatever recommendations it ultimately issues.

Mr Lyttle: In my capacity as an MLA, I say that it is slightly disappointing that the matter has not been brought to the Education Committee, which established an inquiry into educational underachievement and post-primary transfer in 2016 that, regrettably, was stopped by the collapse of the Executive in 2017. I recognise that this is an important New Decade, New Approach commitment, but the fundamental independent review of education is also an important New Decade, New Approach commitment. Why has the Minister not yet brought forward terms of reference for an independent review of education, and why do 50 children remain without a special school place for September 2020?

Mr Weir: It is perhaps a little disappointing that the Chair of the Education Committee has chosen to ask a question as an MLA and not in his capacity as Chair of the Committee. I would have thought that on such an important subject that that would be the case. I am more than happy to follow up on the details if there is a meeting of the Education Committee, but the first duty when making a policy statement is to make it directly to the Assembly and then to follow up the normal processes in connection with that.

With regard to the important issue of special educational needs (SEN) children, considerable work has gone on. I appreciate that it is outside the direct remit of the statement, so I speak with the indulgence of the Chair. We have moved from a situation in which there were nearly 300 unplaced children. That has now been got down to 50, but we must ensure that that is brought down to zero in terms of placements. There has been ongoing work, and, even in the last week, the number has nearly halved. I think that there will be further progress by the end of this week, and that is important.

This is part of the overall jigsaw of actions that can be taken. I hope to move fairly swiftly in September on the independent wider review. We are coming out of a focus purely on COVID into wider issues, be it in this Department or others. That has clearly delayed things. This is the first of many pieces of the jigsaw that will be put in place, and, because it was established on the basis of NDNA as an expert panel, that allowed a particular route of direct appointments that would not necessarily be available to the wider educational group on it. I take all these things seriously, and we are trying to move ahead with them in as constructive and timely a manner as is possible.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members, this is not Question Time to the Minister of Education. The Minister has made a ministerial statement, and the questions must relate to that statement. There are probably another 15 Members who want to ask questions, and it is a very limited time, so it is not fair that the Minister should be using his time to answer questions that do not relate directly to the statement that he has given to the House.

Mr Harvey: Given the COVID situation, what current support is available to pupils from socially disadvantaged backgrounds, particularly to enable educational catch-up?

Mr Weir: As I mentioned in relation to that, there is a range of ongoing support, some of which has been there for many years. For example, schools that have levels of social deprivation will get additional funding through extended schools. That remains in place, and there is flexibility in that spend, for example if they want to go beyond the support provided and provide additional support to their pupils for catch-up.

As I indicated, we have moved with some interventions this summer, and, consequently, 50 schools, on a voluntary basis, are doing summer learning schemes, to which we have been able to provide some funding. We felt that it was important that, where schemes were volunteering to do that, they were given support. That is one intervention. Principally, the Engage programme, which is due to start this autumn and run throughout the next academic year, will give support and will have a particular focus on areas with social deprivation, but there will be help across the board to schools so that their pupils can catch up.

Ms C Kelly: Minister, whatever one's religion or none, the reality is that children are being let down by an education system designed to brand them as failures at the age of 10 or 11. What assurances can you give us that all P6 and P7 children's education will be supported in September, not just those sitting a transfer test?

Mr Weir: That question perhaps veers a little beyond the subject matter. All children will be supported, and the curriculum will be the same for all of them. The Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) will look to see whether adjustments to the curriculum are required. In any class in any school, whether or not individuals are doing the transfer test or are in P7, they will all receive that support. The principal intervention is through the Department of Education, which is being supported by the Executive, with the Engage programme. There will be flexibility in that to provide such support, which will be applied to primary and post-primary schools, so that they can work out where, they feel, it can be best used, whether for materials, finance or additional human resource, because I think that additional teachers will be required. That support will be available across the age spectrum and will apply throughout all communities. It will enable schools to have the flexibility to apply those resources where they see the biggest problems.

Remote learning and the level of disruption mean that it has not been as good as it would have been, had schools simply been able to carry on. None of us can say with absolute certainty what the impact has been on pupils; we will establish that only when we see a fuller return to schools in the autumn. However, it is important that that provision and support be given to all pupils. It is targeted through the Engage programme, and that support will be there for all schools.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his statement, which I welcome. It is very important, and people have been pushing for it for a long time.

The Minister indicated that the aim was for the report to be completed by May 2021. Is it the intention to implement any relevant recommendations by September 2021? Is the Minister confident that funding can be secured to implement those changes?

Mr Weir: The panel will produce an action plan and areas for implementation that will need to be supported by the Executive. Without in any way prejudging what is likely to emerge from the panel, I anticipate that the recommendations will cover a range of areas. I suspect that some actions could be brought about very quickly and others will be longer-term. Some changes may require funding, some may simply be done at an administrative level, and some recommendations may require legislative change. It will be a mixed bag. Implementation will ultimately depend on the support that the Executive as a whole can produce. Even with recommendations in May 2021, it is unlikely that we would see many of them in place by September 2021. However, it will give a clear direction of travel to this Executive and, indeed, to future Executives, which hopefully should honour the recommendations. It will at least allow implementation work to begin in this Assembly term, with further action in the following term.

Mr O'Dowd: I think that the Minister would be awarded an A* for creative writing for his speech, but I suspect his scores may fall for maths, percentages and facts. I have a serious concern. The urban myth that Protestant working-class boys do worse in education than their Catholic working-class equivalents is in danger of being embellished by the statement. The reality is this: a greater number of Catholic working-class boys leave school without proper qualifications. Yes, a greater percentage of Protestant working-class boys leave school without proper qualifications, but, if the statement results in the wrong direction of support, we are in trouble.

Will the Minister, as has been the case in every other report on educational underachievement, allow the panel to examine the implications of academic selection for educational underachievement?

Mr Weir: It is good to see that the Member still rides the same hobby horse throughout. I am reminded of the words of Churchill that, after all the devastation of the First World War:

“the dreary steeples of Fermanagh and Tyrone”

emerged once again. He meant that nothing in this part of the world had changed. To be fair, it would not be an education statement without the Member asking something about academic selection.

The Member makes a right point. He reinforces what is in the statement. In his own words, he indicates that a higher percentage of working-class Protestant boys leave without qualifications than do boys on the other side of the community, but this should not be something on which we take a tit-for-tat attitude. Educational underachievement, as indicated in the statement, affects all of us. The issue of Protestant FSME boys is directly referenced in NDNA, and we will have to fulfil that. Actions will need to be looked at for the educational underachievement panel and for the wider review of education. Issues of transfer probably more neatly fit into that wider review.

Let us be honest about this. The obsession with transfer as the critical point for underachievement massively misses the point. It creates a distraction and focuses, largely speaking, on the wrong issue. Whereas we need that effort and support for all our children at all ages, if we have not made the right interventions at primary level or even before, we have largely missed the boat. That is why the focus needs to be on ensuring that we have all the measures that can be put in place to help tackle underachievement for all pupils, irrespective of their community background.

Mr McNulty: I thank the Minister for his statement. I agree with him that we need to tackle educational underachievement in young people, no matter what their background. I welcome the appointment of an expert panel.

Does the Minister agree that the impact of COVID-19 in education will hit hardest the young people from disadvantaged backgrounds? You mentioned catch-up in relation to those young people. What specific measures will be adopted? What resources will be apportioned to ensure that no children or young people are left too far behind as an outcome of the pandemic?

Mr Weir: There are two aspects to this. There is an ambitious time frame, and the panel will report in May 2021. It will look at the medium- and long-term actions that can be taken. However, the Member is right in certain regards: we cannot wait until May 2021 before we make interventions. That is why we will come back when all the meat has been put on the bones of the Engage programme. The principal intervention, in terms of catch-up in the 2020-21 period, will be the Engage programme. That will enable some intervention throughout all schools, but there will be particular support and emphasis on schools that serve areas where, the indicators suggest, there are higher than average levels of social deprivation. That will be the greatest level of intervention.

It is undoubtedly the case, it seems to me, that there will have been some disruption and impact. We will not know the absolute scale of that until we see children back in classrooms and in front of desks. That will allow an assessment to take place. It also seems logical that it is more likely to make a disproportionate impact on those who come from socially deprived backgrounds. That is why there will be greater emphasis in the Engage programme on those coming from socially deprived areas. There will be the greatest support for schools that look after pupils from those backgrounds.

Mrs Barton: Minister, I welcome your statement on the formation of the panel. Representing the west of Northern Ireland, I note that, on your panel, there is a distinct lack of expertise from the west of the Province. Often, children in rural areas also have issues of underachievement.

Many of the issues in relation to underachievement in rural areas are very different from those in urban areas. Will the Minister consider making an additional appointment to his panel, perhaps someone from a rural area or someone who was previously a principal of a rural school?

11.15 am

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for her question and comments. People are drawn to this on the basis of their individual background and expertise. As such, I want to ensure that we have a panel that is of an appropriate size, and I think that the six-member panel is appropriate. The panel members have wide experience from throughout Northern Ireland. Take, for instance, the chair, who is the director of the Centre for Research in Educational Underachievement, which will have involved working with pupils throughout Northern Ireland. If we are looking for something that covers all aspects, I think that we have a reasonable spread.

It is also the case that, from the point of the view of the west of the Province — I do not have the detailed biography of all six members — one is the principal of a primary school in Londonderry, which is very much in the west of the Province. I appreciate that it is not quite as far as the extreme ends of Fermanagh. Additionally, one of the other members was involved for many years with St Cecilia's College, which is also in the west of the Province and will be familiar to a number of Members here. There is, I think, a direct level of balance. Can we do something that covers every conceivable aspect? Ultimately, we would end up with a very large panel. The panel will be cognisant of urban and rural issues of underachievement, which is why it will also use this as an exercise to gather evidence from a wide range of sources.

I am sure that the Member may well want to make a submission that is based on her experience. She has many years of educational experience, particularly in rural backgrounds. I am sure that any contribution that she made would be invaluable. I do not know whether, if she were to resign as an MLA, we could arrange something. I suggest that we could do a deal: if she were to take a place on the panel for educational underachievement, we could appoint Lord Morrow in her place. We could probably come to some form of arrangement.

Mr G Kelly: I thank the Minister for his statement. Given that is clear from what the Minister and others say that young people from disadvantaged backgrounds are underachieving, does he agree that an approach based on objective need is required? He touched on this in an earlier answer.

Mr Weir: I agree that that is what we need to do. The terms of reference and, indeed, the NDNA talk about particular links between a socio-economic background of poverty and educational underachievement. There is an inextricable linkage. The panel, in addressing some of the issues, will be able to take things only so far. If we are to tackle the broader issues of social deprivation and poverty in communities, it will require a much wider response. Clearly, there are implications for the Department of Education, but it is wider challenge to the Executive as a whole, and we need to ensure that that is tackled. I do not disagree with the Member's remarks.

Ms Armstrong: Thank you, Minister. I am delighted to see the appointment of the panel, which was an important part of the New Decade, New Approach negotiation. The Minister mentioned the money that he will bid for to support its report. Why did he prioritise this panel as opposed to the panel for the independent review of education? Will he bid for money to support a report by that panel as well?

Mr Weir: We need to ensure that we do not conflate two or three different issues. There is the separate overall bid, which, in terms of the COVID situation, will be for the broader element of restarting schools. Mr McCrossan raised that in an earlier question. I indicated that financial implications will arise from the panel. We are talking about seeking commitments. Probably, it will be the middle of next year before those arise. We will not know what bids will need to be made for the actions that arise from this. With regard to the bid for the panel itself and, similarly, for the independent review panel, money was allocated in the budget in-year to finance both those panels, albeit that there was a realisation that, because of COVID, the time frame for the establishment of those panels was likely to be a little bit later. Consequently, that had a knock-on effect. As I indicated, I hope to move early in the autumn on the wider independent review panel.

I suppose that you were asking what the differences are. One difference is that the panel is referred to as an "expert group" in NDNA. That enabled us, by a particular route, which was then supported by DOF through Central Procurement Directorate, to move quicker to make direct appointments. The independent review panel is not referenced in that way. Therefore, its appointment process will probably be different and will take a little bit longer. That is why the panel was able to be established at a quicker pace. Both will be established very soon. I would hope to be able to come back to the Chamber, probably in September, to make an announcement on the route for establishment of the independent review panel. Both panels are important.

To be fair, both panels would have been progressed at an earlier stage had it not been for the fact that all of us have had to direct all our attention, and, indeed, largely focused all the internal resources of Departments, to COVID. We are starting to emerge out of that and are able now to consider a range of other critical issues. Clearly, COVID, rightly, had our focus at the very start. It cannot simply cripple everything into the future. That is why we have to move on those issues.

Mr McHugh: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-Leas-Cheann Comhairle, agus gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire fosta. I thank [Inaudible] and to the Minister as well for his statement. Like others —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr McHugh, I am sorry to interrupt you. Can you move closer to the microphone so that Hansard can pick up your comments? Thank you.

Mr McHugh: Fadhb ar bith. Like others, I come from a social-security class, Catholic background in west Tyrone. We never realised that we had nothing until, as someone said before, we had something. Many of the people who lived in my community were of the same background. Whilst we would have rung all the bells with regard to socio-economic deprivation, our spirit did not match that in the slightest. Having attended grammar school in Omagh, I then, in later years, had the opportunity to deal with people who had gone through the education system and were branded as failures in every respect. I am only too well aware of many of the difficulties and problems that they faced. In later years, I also dealt with adult numeracy and literacy. Whilst the Minister has described it as a “hobby horse”, I know from all the feedback that I got as a member of the Western Education and Library Board —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr McHugh, I try to be indulgent with Members, but we are getting into speech territory here.

Mr McHugh: I will be as quick as possible.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Just get to the question.

Mr McHugh: Even Protestant schools would tell me that, rather than being a hobby horse, the transfer test was the elephant in the room. I would hope that when the report comes back, the Minister says to himself that the answer is easy: it is about having the courage to actually grasp that easy answer. In fact, if it happens to reflect, too, that the transfer test has contributed, in many respects, to disadvantage for many of those people —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: OK. Sorry —.

Mr McHugh: There has been a disadvantage of spirit as a result of the transfer test.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am sorry. The Member will have to resume his seat.

Mr Weir: I was not quite sure whether you were going to ask Mr McHugh to move away from the microphone because you could still hear him. [Laughter.] I take on board the Member’s point. I should say that, when I talk about a hobby horse, it is a point on which I clash with the Member for Upper Bann. Quite often, we have exchanged opinions on the broader issue of post-primary transfer. I certainly take on board what the Member has said.

His own experience, as he has indicated, shows part of the complexity of the problem, which is that people can come from more or less exactly the same background, be born in the same street and go to the same school, but, sometimes, react differently to the system. Some may overcome difficulties, but others be held back by them. It is about trying to reach those people. I am making the general point that, clearly, the wider issue of post-primary transfer will be, principally, for the wider independent review.

One concern of mine is that I and others have, at times, been interviewed after a particular report has come out about issues such as deprivation and education, and there is a tendency for the media to have a nice, half-hour debate and get a few phone-ins on the issue of transfer because they know that there are very strong opinions in the community. My concern in relation to that is that, in many ways, it misses an opportunity. Any education expert will tell you that the principal intervention, the critical intervention, that will change young people’s lives has to be early intervention. It is a fact that we are seeing many children who, when they first walk through the primary-school gates, are already behind many of their peers. It is about how we tackle that, particularly by having early intervention.

To take an example that, despite our differences, I and the former Minister would agree on, we have seen the success of the nurture programme, which is targeted at young children in primary schools. My point in relation to that, without prejudging the outcome of any panel, is that the best interventions are those that are made at the earliest stages in children’s education. That is why I am conscious that we should not get sidetracked. It would be very easy, across the Chamber or in a TV studio, to have a lengthy debate on the issue of post-primary transfer. To some extent that would also have the negative impact that some of the most critical issues tend to get ignored.

Mrs D Kelly: I commend the Minister on his choice of the expert panel, but it strikes me that he already knows a lot of the answers and findings that it is going to publish. He, quite rightly and more than once, pointed out the link between underachievement and poverty and socio-economic background. Therefore, as regards the terms of reference for the expert panel, the cooperation and collaboration of other Departments — this will run across Health and Justice because of young offenders and looked-after children in particular — and the boarder links with the anti-poverty strategy, what comfort can he give the House about flexibility and cooperation across ministerial portfolios?

Mr Weir: Certainly, we can make the terms of reference available to Members. Broadly speaking, I think that there will be buy-in across Departments on this. Probably the principal role will be for the evidence that is submitted, and there is certainly no bar on that. The panel, to some extent, will have free reign to decide who it wants to hear from. I suspect everybody will submit evidence, but the panel will choose who it invites to its hearings. It is not really my role to interfere with that. I think that, across the board, there is a realisation that a level of cross-cutting is required to make an impact on educational achievement in the same way as education, itself, drives a range of other issues. What happens in education will have an impact on the justice system and health further down the line, and Education has a very strong relationship with the Economy Department. There are linkages, and I think that they have been recognised throughout the system. One area that I presume we will look at, as part of this, is where we might have a more joined-up approach between Departments.

Mr Beggs: I, too, welcome the Minister’s statement and the appointment of the expert panel, because the importance of education in creating opportunities has to be recognised. Minister, in answer to a question that I asked in February, you highlighted absenteeism as a major contributory factor to education issues, in particular, in Ballyloran ward, where 43% of post-primary school pupils had less than 85% attendance. In Antiville, that figure was 25%, and, in Craigy Hill, it was 27%. Can you assure me that the panel will have full access to all your departmental officials and the support and cooperation of other relevant Departments so that we can get to the bottom of the wide range of issues that contribute to educational under-attainment — weak community infrastructure and the need for long-term community support; limited numbers of educational welfare officers and their limited powers; and limited early years provision — and thereby address educational underachievement in communities?

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for his question. The Member raises a very useful wider point, which is one of the reasons why, for balance, those from a community background are included. It is not simply about what happens in the classroom and at home. It is about creating a wider culture of a desire for education and support for education. That is critical.

The panel will have complete access to anything within Education. Within my remit, there will be no closed doors, and, indeed, there will be support from the secretariat side, which will not require a large amount of people. I think that three members of departmental staff will be working directly on it to provide any administrative backup. If there are any questions that they want to ask, they will be free to look in any door in the Department. I cannot give the assurance for any government agencies beyond the Department of Education, but I cannot see any reason why there would be any obfuscation or blocking from any other government body, Department or agency to the work of the panel.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for his statement and for his engagement with the youth representatives from the Northern Ireland Youth Forum yesterday. The Minister will know that without enough food or the right food, children's educational underachievement will continue. Hunger and malnutrition affect a child's ability to concentrate, to take in and retain new information and make progress in their learning, and we know that that is happening across Northern Ireland. Will the terms of reference and scope of the panel include food insecurity, food poverty and the impact of austerity, as well as the continuation and expansion of free school meal payments to ensure that children have at least one good meal per day?

Mr Weir: A wider piece will need to be done on that. From memory, I do not think that there is a direct reference to food in the terms of reference, but the wider context around socio-economic status and poverty is well made. The panel is completely free to make its own recommendations. As the Member will know, there has been support from the Executive for the continuation of payments over the summer. The Education Authority's Youth Service Eat Well, Live Well programme is critical and has directly supported some of the most vulnerable children.

Obviously, free school meals will continue. A wider issue has to be looked at on a cross-departmental basis. We provided a quick, one-off fix, if you like, for summer 2020. The lead Department, which is the Department for Communities, has the principal responsibility for vulnerable families. One of the areas that will need to be looked at on a cross-departmental basis is what level of support we can give, particularly to families, as we move ahead to summer 2021 and beyond. We produced short-term fixes for COVID. We need to look now at longer-term fixes. Although my Department does not have principal responsibility for that, we will be very happy to cooperate and work with the relevant Department on that.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Minister for his statement. The truth is that working-class pupils have been failed for far too long: Protestants, Catholics and neither. What correlation does the Minister believe exists between poverty, deprivation and educational underachievement? What measures does he support to tackle that? How does the Minister believe that those underachievers will be safe when returning to school if he does not believe that they should be wearing a mask in school in the middle of a health pandemic?

Mr Weir: I commend the Member. At least, he did not suggest the elimination of the Kulak class as one of the potential solutions to underachievement. There is undoubtedly a link between socio-economic issues, which is highlighted front and centre in the terms of reference and in NDNA. That is one of the areas that will be tackled.

On the specifics of what the exact arrangements for the return to school will be, none of this is particularly new. In any guidance that was issued, particularly around health issues, the position of the Chief Medical Officer, the Department of Health and the Public Health Agency was taken into account. That was directly reflected. Indeed, the advice on what children need to do and do not need to do and what preparations they need to make follow absolutely consistently the position of the Public Health Agency and, indeed, are supported by the Public Health Agency.

I am not a doctor, and I suspect that the honourable Member is not one either, so I would I tend to bow —.

Mr Carroll: [Inaudible] why not in school?

Mr Weir: What? Sorry?

Mr Carroll: If people have to wear masks on a bus, why not in schools?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Weir: Well, with the greatest —.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister should resume his seat.

Mr Weir: Sorry.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: All Members will be treated equally and are allowed to ask one question. They are not permitted to ask further questions from a sedentary position. Some time remains. If Members have other questions, we may get to them.

Mr Weir: I appreciate that it goes a bit beyond the statement, but, from a sedentary position, the Member raised the difference between a classroom and a bus. It is noticeable, for example, that, in the arrangements for public transport that have been put in place by the Executive, in line with, again, the health considerations, anybody under the age of 13 is exempt from wearing a mask. It is also the case that school transport is not included in the requirement to wear a mask. Neither I nor the Member have a direct public health background, particularly not to the same expertise of the Public Health Agency. The guidance is, in part, driven by the fact the vulnerability of children, particularly younger children, is much lower than adults. There is also an expectation that it is not realistic to expect young children, particularly primary-school children, to sit with a mask on all day. That it is not particularly controllable. Any advice that we have given has been entirely compatible with the advice of the Public Health Agency, and we have worked alongside it. If the Public Health Agency of the Department of Health said, "There is emerging evidence, and we insist that a particular measure is taken", there would be no problem from our point of view in taking that measure. What we cannot do is to go off and make judgements on health issues through solo runs. We will be guided by the science and the medicine. That is why there is a distinction in that.

As I said, we have worked closely with the Public Health Agency to develop and put out the guidance that has been issued to date. The safety of our pupils and staff is paramount.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We have roughly 11 and a half minutes remaining of the hour. If Members would like to ask further questions, they should please rise in their place. OK. I think that I have most of those.

Mr Lyttle: The Minister's statement refers to "greater obstacles" and barriers that some children must overcome to achieve their potential. I daresay that not having a school place four weeks prior to the start of term is a fairly significant obstacle and barrier. Will the Minister tell us how the expert panel will look particularly into the systemic failings for pupils with special educational needs?

Mr Weir: This is about taking a wider strategic view rather than simply reacting to the issues of the day. It is important that a report has been done in the Education Authority on the systemic failures. Some of the implementation of the measures in that report was, in many ways, delayed by COVID, but it is being acted on. Indeed, the Member will know, because it has been said, that there will be an oversight committee in which the permanent secretary of the Department will work directly with the Education Authority.

While the operational responsibility for placements lies with the Education Authority, we have been working with it. From a starting position of roughly a month ago, when there were nearly 300 unplaced children, those numbers have been brought down to 50. That is 50 too many, but we continue to work on that, and I hope that those figures will be better and, indeed, will have further improved by the end of this week.

Ms Mullan: Minister, given that only half the number of young people on free school meals went to university compared to those who are not entitled to free school meals, will you commit to prioritising that issue in the ongoing review of the 14- to 19-year-old strategy, in partnership with the Minister for the Economy?

Mr Weir: Certainly, I think that we need to see where social deprivation is impacting on university places. There is a need to ensure that we have a 14- to 19-year-old strategy that is fit for purpose. With university places and the commitments that the Executive will be looking at about restarting the economy after COVID, one of the things that should worry us all is not just the general employment situation but, particularly, the impact on youth unemployment and, indeed, the job opportunities that are likely to be there for young people in the very near future. Consequently, that will be a driver in what support is given to universities and apprenticeships, and that has to be born in mind. We should not kid ourselves that this problem is unique to Northern Ireland. We can see distinctions in different jurisdictions. A key focus of the panel is to try to tackle that underachievement and improve things.

Mr McNulty: When will principals, teachers, classroom assistants, school staff, parents and pupils get clear guidance on the numbers that can attend school and the specifics of the restart programme?

Mr Weir: Clear guidance has already been given, and irrespective of how things move on from here, the vast bulk of that guidance will remain relevant in any circumstance. Arrangements for meals, hygiene and movement around schools will all apply. I have referred to the trajectory of travel. It is undoubtedly the case that we are on a trajectory to achieve a position in which we can have a full resumption, five days a week. That will be subject to the views of the Executive and will require their approval, and I hope to move on that fairly soon. It is important that we get movement on that before the resumption of the school term.

Mr Beggs: My grandfather was orphaned, aged nine, due to a flu pandemic. His kids grew up in poverty. At 15, he began work in the local bleach green, and he worked there until he was 70. He valued education. Minister, in appointing the panel, do you recognise the importance of education to address poverty, create opportunities for our people and improve our economy?

Mr Weir: Very much so. Education can be a great life changer and life enabler. It is the case that we need education structures that enable the progression for those opportunities to be realised. The Member referred to his grandfather. My grandparents' generation, and even my parents' generation, despite their background, their ability and their intelligence, did not have the same opportunities as my generation. The Member and I are of a similar vintage, and the opportunities that were available for our generation were greater than those offered to preceding generations. Opportunities that are available now are probably greater than they were for our generation.

We have to make sure that that constant opportunity for improvement is there. Education can be a great life changer. There are many things that can intervene in people's lives but education is the one thing that can make a big difference to and change the direction of somebody's life. I am very cognisant of that.

Mr Humphrey: Thank you, Principal Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to ask a further question. I am disappointed by some of the questioning from some of the parties. It indicates to me that there is either no understanding, a lack of understanding or they simply do not take the issue as being important. The issue is hugely important to the wider working-class and hard-to-reach communities, and we should remember that. As the Minister set out, educational attainment is a key issue that is hugely important for our young people.

Given that not every child wants to or has the ability to continue on to third-level education and university, we need to consider effective training that leads to meaningful employment. Will this piece of work lead to a joined-up strategy with the Department for the Economy and the local centres for training and employment to ensure that those young people get meaningful and long-lasting employment?

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for his comments and the remarks that he made. I cannot pre-judge the panel's recommendations. There has to be a cognisance that this has to be looked at in a wider spectrum than simply the statistics of academic achievement.

The Member makes a good point on the opportunities that are there, both in and outside universities. That is why it is critical — I think that I referred to it in an earlier point — that, as we see a recovery of the economy, there is a level of focus on the practical support being given to young people, particularly, for example, around issues around apprenticeships. There has got to be an investment in our young people. If we are being slightly cynical with regard to what I mentioned around career pathways, often the best and most lucrative career pathways do not have a university or academic-based view. To some extent, there has got to be a level of cultural shift with regard to that.

With regard to trying to scope things, because it probably crosses the two Departments' positions, I will be very keen and will work with my colleague at Economy. That is particularly as we focus on 14 to 19 and as we focus in on issues such as digital skills and how we can ensure that young people, with regard to the careers advice they receive and their readiness for work, are taken into account, particularly in the preparation that they do through their schooling.

Mr Butler: Minister, you mentioned the work with the Children's Commissioner in the report, but there is no doubt that it will work only if we have the buy-in from parents and support at home that has been referenced here. There are good organisations, like Parenting NI, that are involved. Have you any thoughts on who would provide the voice of parents for this?

Mr Weir: There has been good work done, and I have tried to make things available. I did, for instance, a Zoom call as Parentkind NI had organised some representatives to speak to me, so I think that there will be a level of openness. There are established parent groups that need, probably, to have a level of direct input. However, what can be the best submission will not necessarily come from an organisation but could come from an individual. With regard to the approach that would be made, I would hope that the panel would be open to looking at any evidence that they receive from whatever source. However, it is critical that, as I mentioned, I think, in the statement, while a child is in school, on average, 13% of the time, the rest of the time is outside the school and most of that is in the home. Therefore, we are trying to get holistic solutions that involve the direct school education, home and the support of the wider community. It is critical that we get a symbiosis between those.

Ms Armstrong: It is timely that I come in at this time, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. The Minister has mentioned that time out of school can be difficult, so can the Minister confirm if it was him or his office that sent an email to a teacher that confirmed that you plan to restart school full-time from September?

Mr Weir: What has been said is that I believe that we are on a trajectory to do that. I responded that my hope would be that there could be proposals put to the Executive that would enable that to happen. That would still be my aim with regard to that. In response to, I think, Mr McNulty's question, I indicated that this will be about some of the conditions that will apply. Also, where there is a cross-cutting issue, as there will be on the issue of school transport, I will speak to ministerial colleagues and will bring forward, potentially, proposals with regard to all of those aspects. That will be done in a manner that will be able to be actioned before the start of the new term. That is certainly my aim.

One of the levels of hesitancy that was there for all of us was in not knowing close to the term what the prevailing conditions would be, for instance, with regard to community transmission. I think that we have seen, because of the measures that have been taken across all Departments, that Northern Ireland, while we can never be complacent, is in a very good place. We have now gone quite a number of days without deaths from COVID-19. That enables us to move forward, but, in doing so, I will speak to the Executive as a whole and get their approval but will also speak to individual Ministers and seek that direct medical advice to enable that to happen. The full-time return of education has to be the aim for all of us, because that is in the best interests of everyone.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr O'Dowd, that was a valiant effort at one hour and 25 seconds in [Laughter.] That concludes questions on the statement. I apologise to Miss Woods and Mr Carroll, but, unfortunately, this is not a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee and it is set in stone that it is one hour and that is your lot.

If Members could take their ease for a few moments for a change at the top Table, the next item will be a statement from the Minister of Health. Thank you.

(The Temporary Speaker [Mr G Kelly] in the Chair)

COVID-19 and Service Rebuilding

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): I wish to give Members an update on recent local developments in relation to COVID-19 and the rebuilding of services.

Members will be aware that, yesterday, for the fourteenth consecutive day, Northern Ireland recorded no COVID-related deaths by the Department of Health measure. Whilst that is hugely reassuring, we must never forget that the virus is still here and still presents a serious threat to public safety. As always, we must keep the families who have lost loved ones to the virus at the forefront of our thoughts.

I thank the people of Northern Ireland for continuing to adhere to social-distancing measures and current regulations. However, nobody can be complacent. We must continue to do our bit in helping to reduce the spread of COVID-19 by keeping our distance, washing our hands and not touching our faces. I once again emphasise this to all those listening: if you develop any of the symptoms, please do not leave your home and, instead, go to the Public Health Agency (PHA) website or ring 119 to book a free test.

I know that a lot of Members and their constituents were taken by surprise at the weekend by the reintroduction of the 14-day quarantine period for people arriving from Spain. That decision was not taken lightly, and I fully understand that the announcement will have caused concern, particularly to those currently holidaying in Spain. As I have said previously, the international quarantine regulations and the countries that they cover are kept under continual review and are liable to change. As Members can appreciate, there is no ideal time to make such a decision. A phased introduction would not have made sense, and public health considerations must take priority. The decision was taken after consideration of the latest data. COVID-19 cases in Spain had increased in recent weeks, a trend that accelerated rapidly in the latter half of the past week.

I appreciate that people returning from Spain and its islands will now face an unexpected period of quarantining. The Executive and I met yesterday to consider what support or advice measures for employees, employers and the self-employed and other actions may be needed. The advice from the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser is that a negative COVID-19 test immediately on return from Spain would not exclude infection, so a period of self-isolation would still be required. I reiterate that Saturday night's decision was not taken lightly. Experience has shown how COVID-19 can be spread by international travel, and the quarantining arrangements have been introduced to help keep people safe.

Testing in care homes has been an issue that we have dealt with and worked through. The Department has continued to actively monitor and assess the current and emerging science and evidence related to COVID-19 to further inform our approach to testing in care homes. As a COVID-19 test will confirm whether someone has COVID-19 only at the time the test takes place, the introduction of a regular programme of testing in care homes is necessary and will play a significant role in helping to minimise the risk of COVID-19 in care homes and ensure the continued safety of residents and staff. I am pleased to be able to announce a planned programme of regular COVID-19 testing for all residents and staff in "green homes", which do not have a confirmed outbreak of COVID-19. It will commence on Monday 3 August. It will involve the testing of all staff on a fortnightly basis and all residents on a monthly basis. The position on the frequency of testing for both staff and residents will continue to be kept under close review and will need to remain flexible, depending on emerging evidence and on the community transmission rates of the virus in Northern Ireland in the coming months.

The establishment of an effective contact tracing service has been a key priority for me over recent months as part of the wider Test, Trace, Protect strategy that you will all now be familiar with. We have in place an excellent cohort of professional contact tracers with a wide range of experience, including health professionals and staff from an environmental health background. Contact tracing will also help us to understand the transmission of COVID-19 in Northern Ireland and to reduce transmission in tandem with all our other measures. There is a strong international consensus that the work is a critical measure for bringing down the value of R and thereby preventing or minimising further waves whilst allowing restrictions to be lifted.

The recent cluster in the Limavady area was an early test for the service, and I have been reassured by how quickly the service was able to respond by making contact with all those concerned and offering appropriate advice. The workforce planning model is based on the ability to flex staff numbers up and down to deal with emergency situations as they occur, and that incident has highlighted the benefits of that approach.

The virus has the potential to make its presence felt in any district and at any time. Everyone should act on the basis that it might be in their street or on their road right now. That is why following the public health advice on maintaining social distance and ensuring the highest standards of hand and respiratory hygiene remains vital. Whilst I absolutely recognise that the issue of face coverings divides opinion in wider society, I repeat the point that the medical and scientific advice is clear: wearing face coverings in retail settings will help to protect our fellow citizens.

I am pleased to say that Northern Ireland citizens will soon have access to a smartphone app that will further enhance our ability to break transmission chains and reduce the reproduction rate of the virus. The StopCOVID NI app is due to go live imminently, but the date that it will be released for download will be subject to the review process undertaken by the App Store and Google Play. The app was designed using the Information Commissioner's Office's (ICO) "privacy by design" principles and, therefore, uses only anonymised information in its operation. I appeal to all Members to encourage their constituents to download the app. If we can get significant numbers to download it, it will play an important part in augmenting the existing contact tracing processes in our efforts to stop the spread of COVID-19.

I am also pleased to say that the app will be interoperable with the one already in use in the Republic of Ireland. It is also highly likely to be compatible with apps introduced in future across the UK and Europe. It will be the first instance of such a solution worldwide and the first example of such apps operating in an interoperable manner.

12.00 noon

When I published 'Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services: Strategic Framework' on 9 June, I was clear that increasing activity would be a significant challenge. COVID-19 continues to be with us and will continue to impact on the extent to which and how we deliver health and social care services. I have been clear that we need to increase service activity as quickly as possible in the prevailing COVID-19 context.

As we try to increase capacity, patient and staff safety will remain at the very centre of everything that we do. Our Health and Social Care (HSC) staff have put in a tremendous effort and continue to do so as we now seek to rebuild our services. To the many citizens who may be waiting for a procedure or a diagnosis, I say this: we will, as a system, do all that we can to make sure that you get an appointment and treatment as soon as possible. There is, however, a need to prioritise services, given the significant constraints that our health and social care services continue to face. Social distancing, the use of personal protective equipment (PPE), staff availability and the need to plan for future potential COVID-19 surges are just some of the issues that continue to weigh on our ability to diagnose and treat patients. It is in that context that our health and social care trusts published their first three-month rebuilding plans on 10 July, covering the three months until the end of September. My intention is that those plans will be followed by further successive three-month plans in due course. In addition to the trust plans, work is under way to develop regional approaches to service delivery across a range of areas. All of that work is clinically led and developed using co-production principles. The rebuilding management board continues to meet and will continue to oversee all of that activity, reporting directly to me.

Today I announce the way forward for two important services: day procedure centres and orthopaedic surgery. I believe that it is in the public interest to move forward with the implementation of the service changes as quickly as possible to address the adverse impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on elective care waiting times and to enable HSC to have in place dedicated treatment centres ahead of potential further waves of the pandemic. That will allow us to maintain robust infection control preventative measures at those dedicated sites to enable procedures to continue during any future outbreaks of COVID-19. While we cannot guarantee that that can be achieved in all circumstances, it should give us a high level of confidence in our ability to continue to deliver those services while other hospitals treat COVID-19 patients.

I turn to the details of those important service changes, which I have published in a policy statement for elective care day procedures and in a blueprint for orthopaedic care. Our waiting times for elective care are the worst in the United Kingdom. Even prior to the pandemic, waiting times for hospital surgery were totally unacceptable. The impact of COVID-19 on HSC has been profound and will undoubtedly be long-lasting. I recognise that addressing the backlog of patients on waiting lists will be challenging, given the reduced operational capacity across health and social care. The establishment of day procedure centres has been central to our plans to eradicate that scourge on our service. Day procedure centres are designed to provide a dedicated resource for less complex planned day surgery and procedures. Crucially, they operate separately from urgent and emergency hospital care, meaning that they will not compete for operating rooms, staff and other resources, and that will lead to fewer cancellations of operations.

The 'Health and Wellbeing 2026 - Delivering Together' document provides the overall blueprint for transforming health and social care services in Northern Ireland so that they better meet the needs of our population. A key commitment in the associated action plan was to bring forward proposals to establish elective care centres to provide a dedicated resource for less complex planned surgery and other procedures. Evidence from elsewhere shows that such centres can reduce waiting times for planned care and provide a better experience for patients and staff.

Since 2017, my officials have been working with doctors, nurses, allied health professionals, service managers and other health professionals from across the health and social care sector to consider the evidence base, to establish two prototype centres and to develop proposals for a regional model for day procedure centres. I thank everyone from across the system whose combined efforts have helped to bring us to this point and who continue to work tirelessly to improve the quality and timeliness of the care that we provide.

Day procedure centres are equally important or even more important in the context of the ongoing pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic has further demonstrated the vulnerability of having elective care and unscheduled care co-located on multiple sites. For infection control purposes, there are clear benefits in separating elective care from the more unpredictable unscheduled care. The environment in which elective care services are delivered has changed significantly in the past few months. Day procedures must now be taken forward in the context of the continued need for social distancing and personal protective equipment at volumes that were not required prior to the pandemic. Consideration must also be given to the latest emerging professional guidelines and the impact of testing and isolation.

Given the urgent need to begin rebuilding day case procedures to avoid further detriment to patient health and in recognition that that will need to be taken forward on an incremental and prioritised basis, I plan to initially concentrate delivery in one hub day procedure centre. The hub site is Lagan Valley Hospital in the South Eastern Trust, and it will interact with several hospital sites — the spokes — around Northern Ireland. Lagan Valley Hospital has a day procedure unit and has demonstrated its ability to successfully deliver a range of day case and endoscopy procedures. As one of the locations on which the varicose veins prototype was delivered, it proved popular with staff and patients in terms of accessibility and patient experience. Furthermore, throughout all of the engagement with the clinicians involved in developing proposals for day procedure centres, Lagan Valley Hospital was consistently recognised as a suitable site for a day procedure centre due to its accessibility for patients and staff.

Drive-time statistics show that almost 73% of the population are within a one-hour drive from Lagan Valley Hospital. In relation to the emergency department (ED) at Lagan Valley Hospital, the layout of the site means that there are different entrances for patients using the ED and those using the day procedure centre. Importantly, the two services can, therefore, be managed separately without impacting on each other. For the vast majority of patients, attendance at a day procedure centre will be a rare occurrence. The additional travel will be an isolated event and will not form part of a long-term passage of care that requires multiple visits. Service users are experiencing unacceptably long delays in accessing day case elective care procedures, so the clear trade-off for the additional travel will be shorter waiting times for treatment. Lagan Valley Hospital sits within the South Eastern Trust and will take forward the establishment and management of the regional day procedure centre model in the first instance. I will keep that arrangement under review as the model develops.

I will also establish a clinically led regional network to oversee the development of the day procedure centre hub and spoke model based in Lagan Valley Hospital in the first instance. The regional network will be tasked with driving forward a whole-system, integrated approach to the delivery of day procedure centres to achieve benefits for patients through reduced waiting times and improved quality and outcomes. I expect that the development or reconfiguration of Lagan Valley as a regional day procedure centre will be carried out in a phased way to minimise the impact on existing service users.

Before I set out my plans for orthopaedics, I want to take a moment to express my condolences to the family of Kyle McDonald. Kyle was a consultant spinal surgeon in the Belfast Trust and, tragically, passed away suddenly on Sunday. He was a dedicated and successful surgeon and a credit to his family and profession. My thoughts are very much with his wife, his children and the entire family, his patients and his colleagues in the health service. I know that I speak for the entire House in extending our deepest sympathies.

With regard to orthopaedics, as with day procedures, unfortunately, waiting times for orthopaedic surgery are among the worst in the UK, with patients waiting an appalling four or five years for operations such as hip replacements. There is also considerable variation in practice regionally, which means that patients in some trust areas are subject to much longer waiting lists than others. In a country the size of Northern Ireland, such a postcode lottery is indefensible. A new approach is needed to ensure that patients can access high-quality services when they need them.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, most elective orthopaedic procedures have been deemed to be non-essential and have, therefore, been halted to ensure the availability of resources and patient safety for those affected by COVID-19. While those measures will have had an immediate positive effect on COVID-19 patients at that time, they also mean that, unfortunately, other patients in the healthcare system have become deprioritised. In particular, it will have a significant impact on the patients who were already waiting the longest. It is now critical to focus efforts on the regional rebuilding of the service. The reintroduction of elective orthopaedic services provides an unparalleled opportunity for positive change.

It is important to understand that COVID-19 has drastically changed the landscape of the health and social care service and rebuilding will, therefore, require careful consideration of that landscape to ensure that services can be re-established as safely as possible. For that reason, I plan to focus elective orthopaedics initially on two hub sites. The hub sites that I propose are Musgrave Park Hospital and Altnagelvin Area Hospital, both of which are well placed to increase regional orthopaedic services immediately, utilising COVID-light facilities. Both sites provide good geographical coverage for the population of Northern Ireland with regard to accessibility for patients and staff. They each have well established orthopaedic units that could be easily ring-fenced and protected from unforeseen and predictable increases in pressures on the health service as a whole. That will be particularly important in this phase of rebuilding. Focusing on those sites initially will allow patients of lowest risk and highest priority to undergo orthopaedic surgery.

It is important to note that this is not a plan to centralise services or remove existing services from where they are currently being delivered; on the contrary, I plan to utilise existing services in the best way possible at a regional level, to increase activity and to ensure that resources are used most effectively. My ultimate aim is to work towards introducing a region-wide network of orthopaedic practice based on an alliance of the existing orthopaedic units to produce a standardised and equitable practice of orthopaedic medicine for all patients in the region, removing geographical variations in waiting times and practice. To oversee the development of the model, I will establish a clinically led regional network that will be tasked with the regional planning and commissioning of the service across Northern Ireland. My key aim is to move towards a system where patients have the opportunity to move around the region as they wish to avail of the quickest and highest-quality service that can be provided, delivering benefits for patients on equality of access to the same level of care, reduce waiting times and improve quality and outcomes.

12.15 pm

For governance, the Belfast Trust will host the regional network, providing governance and oversight of the administrative management of the service on behalf of the region. I will keep that arrangement under review as the model develops.

I believe that it is in the public interest to move forward with these changes as quickly as possible in order to address the adverse impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on elective care waiting times and to enable the HSC to have in place dedicated treatment centres ahead of potential further waves of the pandemic. That will allow us to maintain robust infection-control preventative measures at the dedicated sites to enable procedures to continue during any future outbreaks of COVID-19. While we cannot guarantee that this can be achieved under all circumstances, it should, however, give us a high level of confidence in our ability to continue to deliver those services while other hospitals are treating COVID-19 patients, should that occur.

The need to get the new centres up and running as quickly as we can means that the public consultation and engagement with trades unions and professional bodies on the service changes will take place during the implementation planning stage, which starts today. This engagement will be led by the HSC trusts, which have lead responsibility for implementing the changes. I hope that all stakeholders will understand that because of the untenable position facing elective care services, in the wake of the first wave of COVID-19, my Department is taking this approach because we believe that the public interest is best served by it.

Having published today my Department's plans for rebuilding day case elective procedures and orthopaedic care, I wish to bring to the attention of the House that I am finalising a further service rebuilding plan for cancer services. My aim is to ensure that we provide as much capacity as we can to deliver oncology and radiotherapy services while preparing for a potential second wave of COVID-19. The need to maintain high levels of infection control means that it will be important to further develop the new ways of working for cancer services that emerged during the first wave of the pandemic and to provide additional investment to embed them.

Similarly, I am considering a plan to reshape the delivery of urgent and emergency care, along with a plan for preparing the HSC for potential further surges of COVID-19. I am sure that all of us in the Chamber can agree that it is vital that we ensure that the available capacity in the system for urgency and urgent care is fully utilised in anticipation of a further wave of COVID-19 and to prepare for the annual winter pressures.

I am grateful to those stakeholders who responded to my Department's invitation to comment on the recent temporary changes that I made to the health and social care framework document and the establishment of the management board. Having considered the responses, my Department will, during August, launch a full 12-week public consultation on the changes.

It should be noted that the management board, in the short period since it was established, has proved its worth by progressing three-monthly rebuilding plans for each HSC trust area, as well as the policy statement and blueprint for rebuilding elective day case procedures and orthopaedic care that I launched today, with further regional plans at an advanced stage. While I acknowledge the concern of some stakeholders, I stress again that the decision to move forward quickly with these temporary changes was taken to address the grave situation that health and social care is facing and the need, therefore, to move swiftly to begin the rebuilding of services.

As I have stated to the House previously, it is important to emphasise that it will not be possible to return to business as usual. The rebuilding of services will not happen overnight. It will require an agile and adaptable response to ensure that we can respond to further potential COVID-19 surges.

In conclusion, I am conscious that I have taken some time to provide this update and have covered a wide range of areas. However, I hope that it has been useful and has, hopefully, covered a number of points that Members intend to raise.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health):

I will remove my mask, as I did yesterday, to assist those who may have hearing difficulties in making out what I am saying.

I thank the Minister for his statement. I note that there is a lot in the statement, and I have no doubt that the Health Committee will want to look at and scrutinise all of it in more detail.

I congratulate the Minister on bringing forward the app, which, I believe he said, is the first one that is interoperable across the entire country. That is a welcome step and is of huge importance as we work to maintain control over the spread of the virus in the future.

The Minister has announced some considerable changes here today, many of which look a lot like health transformation. He mentioned 'Delivering Together'. That document, he will know, refers to "co-design" and "co-production". I am concerned that these changes have been announced with no engagement or co-production with service users and staff. What level of engagement did he feel was necessary?

I know that the Minister recognises that all types of carers have been hugely impacted by the initial withdrawal of services. Indeed, the difficulties in reopening some of the day centres and respite services are placing additional and ongoing pressures on carers. Will he consider a one-off cash payment for carers to help with changes to their circumstances and additional carer needs?

Mr Swann: I thank the Committee Chairperson for his support. He rightly indicates the extent and the depth of what is being proposed here today. He acknowledges the building blocks of 'Delivering Together' and all the previous work that has been done. When I announced that there would be a transformation board, I was asked, "Is this going to be another piece of paper that sits on a shelf?" We have seen enough of those in Health over time. This work is about bringing together the building blocks that have been put there by previous Ministers in 'Transforming Your Care' and 'Power to People', and all the work that has already been done.

As regards the co-production piece for both those initiatives, as I said in some of my commentary in the statement, which I had to shorten because I could still have been speaking about a lot of the detail on these issues, it has been done in consultation with clinicians and the development of the hub-and-spoke model has been led by clinicians. I am due to meet the transformation advisory board (TAB) later today about the timing of the announcement. This morning, we wrote to the unions to advise them of that. The engagement to get to this stage has been very much clinician-led for both models, using the building blocks that are already there. We will now have serious engagement with our trade union colleagues, with the professions and with stakeholders to move the programmes forward. As I made clear in the statement, we need to do this now. We need to make the changes. When you look at the numbers of people on orthopaedic waiting lists and elective care waiting lists, you see that we need to move now. Those lists got longer during the COVID shutdown.

In regard to the specific ask for carers, I know that there is an ongoing conversation between Carers NI, Families Involved Northern Ireland (FINI) and officials in my Department about what additional packages and support measures can be looked at. A one-off payment has been part of those discussions. I cannot give the Member a commitment at this point in time, but I know that that is part of their discussions. Two weeks ago, an all-party motion raised those concerns. The feeling of helplessness that many carers feel was brought to the Chamber. I committed to ensuring that there was engagement. That engagement has commenced. It is about making sure that we get carers the provisions and the support mechanisms that they need.

As trusts start to move on their three-monthly phased rebuilding plans, they are looking at re-establishing day care provision as appropriate, depending on space and staff to ensure that social distancing is in place. That piece of work continues to support the carers in our community at this time.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive statement. What measures are being put in place for those who have to quarantine for 14 days after travelling and have to face the consequences of their employer maybe not being too happy? The app for contact tracing is great, so can the Minister tell us how many people are involved in contact tracing? Is there scope to have more people involved in it? Also, for those who have to isolate from —

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): Excuse me. We are dealing with one question to the Minister, so he has a choice of which one to answer.

Mr Easton: I will leave it there.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his questions. I will answer both. In regard to the support measures, which I talked about when answering the question for urgent oral answer yesterday, the Executive met yesterday afternoon to see what reassurances or support we could give to people who are returning from Spain. The Minister of Finance, Conor Murphy, confirmed this morning, I think to the Executive, that anybody who had been furloughed can furlough again, so engagement is going on there, and the Minister for the Economy is engaging with the major employer representatives.

We have 92 full-time staff working on contact tracing in a shift pattern. As I said, one of the differences between us and other regions is that we have not just call centre staff working on it. The staff are professionals, so there are nurses and consultant public health professionals on call so that any advice and guidance that we can give when we are working through that test, trace and protect system is appropriate and specific, and it can be personal medical advice in order to make sure that people are getting the support that they need.

When we saw the recent outbreak in the Limavady area, we were able to scale up very quickly and bring in additional contact tracers to make sure that we got all those contacts covered as quickly as possible. As indicated, we were able to get to a fourth-level contact from the initial point of infection. It is a system that, when we had to step it up very quickly, reacted well, and that initial Limavady incident was a good test of whether everything that we had put in place actually worked.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): Just before I call on the next Member, in fairness to all Members, I should say that we have an hour for questions. There may be time at the end to have some supplementary questions, so I ask Members to allow for those coming in after them.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Minister for his statement and for his commitment to rebuilding health services, especially in the south-eastern area. I know that there has been an announcement of dozens of additional beds for the Ulster

Hospital, and now there is today's announcement about all the additional services for the Lagan Valley. I am going to go for the hat-trick to see whether we can get some commitment for the Downe Hospital, which is the furthest away from other services. Does the Minister agree that facilities such as the Downe Hospital are ideally placed to deliver services in the future? There is a willing staff, excellent facilities and the capacity to deliver. All that we need is the Department and the trust to give us those services.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. Funnily enough, I have a page all about the Downe because I do not think that there is a statement that I have made or a question that has been asked where the Minister — sorry; I am maybe pre-empting stuff — the Member has not raised it. As we look to expand the hub-and-spoke model in a number of procedures, whether they are in orthopaedics or elective day care centres, I will say that, at this minute in time, we will struggle to have capacity in our current footprint, because, with social distancing, we are looking at wards that had 20 beds now holding 12 beds. It is about looking at capacity and at how we can utilise our entire footprint, and the Downe is one of those facilities. The Member did not ask a question that I thought he would, but I am sure that he is fully aware that Monday 19 October 2020 is the planned opening date for the emergency department in the Downe Hospital.

Mr Chambers: Minister, it is important that the House recognises the achievements that your team at every level of health and social care has delivered in extremely challenging circumstances. It is also important to place on record the appreciation not only of the House but of the people of Northern Ireland for the leadership that you have shown in your six months in office. Mountains have been moved from the standing start that saw our valued nursing staff standing on picket lines.

It would be easy for you now to stand back and catch your breath, but you are moving forward through this statement with a compassionate and urgent approach to attend to members of society who are currently experiencing pain, particularly in the field of orthopaedic procedures, by not delaying movement with pre-action public consultation but, rather, getting things up and running urgently in the interests of public health. Will the current postcode lottery be removed, and will your plans offer those in pain some hope that their issues will be resolved in a timely and structured fashion?

12.30 pm

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question, and I really thank him for his kind words. They are appreciated, and, as I have said many times in here, it is not about what I have done; it is about what the departmental officials have done, what our carers have done, what our nurses have done, what our cleaners have done and what everybody across the health and social care service has done, from Community Pharmacy to GPs. Everybody acting as a team over the past six months has brought Northern Ireland to the place where we are.

The Member highlights the crucial point and the underlying point on the development of the two models, where we look not to a centralised service but to a regional service so that we can remove the postcode lotteries for people on waiting lists where even the side of the village that you live on can determine a six-month differential on a waiting list. In a place the size of Northern Ireland, that should not be, so, with the development of both the models, my intention is that we remove the postcode lottery that so long has dogged many people waiting on waiting lists where, because of where they live, they have to wait longer. The models should address that, and it is my intention that they do.

Ms Armstrong: I thank the Minister and again pay tribute to him. I do this all the time, Robin. I pay tribute to him and to all of his staff and the staff of the trusts, who have performed amazingly throughout the pandemic. I am delighted to hear about the day care and the respite care coming forward. We all agreed with that.

I agree with the Chair of the Health Committee, Colm Gildernew. I thank him about his mask. I hate those masks with a passion, as I have said plenty of times, but we need to wear them to keep ourselves, our families and others safe. The UK Government have recognised the Action on Hearing Loss recognition of clear masks. Can the Minister confirm, when he is rebuilding our health system or building it back better, whether a proportion of those clear masks is coming to Northern Ireland? Can he give us any update on those?

Mr Swann: I have been aware of those since health professionals started to wear masks on a full-time basis. We had interactions with Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB) on how we communicate with people with disabilities, should that be hearing loss, sight loss or speech difficulties. I do not have the detail on the specific delivery of see-through masks or clear masks with me today, but I will get that for the Member because I know that she has campaigned for that and has raised it with my Department and with me on a number of occasions. I will get her the specifics on that.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his statement. In late 2018, the Department announced two prototype day procedure centres: one in Lagan Valley and another in Omagh, giving a good geographical spread. Minister, in your statement today, you refer to one day procedure centre hub in Lagan Valley. Minister, can you outline specifically what that will mean for day procedures in the Western Trust, and will there be a reduction in services in Omagh?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his point. I could not expand on that in the time that I had for my statement, but it will be contained in the further updates. For elective day-care procedures, Lagan Valley will be the hub for the spokes, so the provision that we already have in Omagh and the primary care complex centre at Lagan Valley Hospital for varicose veins will continue. The cataract team will continue at the Mid-Ulster Hospital, the Downe Hospital and the South Tyrone Hospital, so we have proven that those elective day-care centres work, and it is about keeping them there, utilising them and developing the model and the learnings that we got from them and expanding them.

Mr Sheehan: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a ráitis. I thank the Minister for his statement. The foundation stone of any changes to our health and social care system must be co-production and co-design. Anyone who has a stake in our health service must have a voice in it. I acknowledge that the Minister has said that the rebuilding plans are based on co-production principles, yet we hear from many stakeholders, including trade unions and patient advocates, that they are being marginalised and excluded from the process and are being consulted only after decisions have been made. Can the Minister explain that anomaly? Also, can he explain why he did not mention a review of urgent and emergency care in his statement?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his points; they are well made with regard to the engagement process that we have had and the speed with which we have had to move. As I said, we are meeting TAB this afternoon, and I have further engagement with the health unions on Thursday with regard to this. We have had weekly meetings with the health unions with regard to other points. With regard to the details here, they have mostly been developed through co-production and have been clinician-led, both in orthopaedics and elective day care. This is wide-ranging work, but we need to move on with it, with the buy-in of as many people as possible. The engagement on how the blueprint and the policy look on the ground starts now, to make sure that we have buy-in. We cannot afford to have people spending longer on waiting lists while we go out to a 12-week consultation. It is about taking the action now and moving forward with the change.

The Member said that I did not mention emergency and urgent care in my statement: I did. I said, if I can find it, that:

“I am considering a plan to reshape the delivery of urgent and emergency care, along with a plan for preparing the HSC for potential further surges”.

That work is already ongoing. I know that it was a lengthy statement; maybe the Member just missed that part of it. That work is ongoing. We are in a place where we can bring the two models forward today, so I thought that it was important that, before the House rises, I give Members as much detail and as much opportunity to question as possible on where we are. The work on urgent and emergency care is ongoing.

Mr Harvey: Thank you, Minister, for your statement and for your great work to date. Have you the necessary funding and available kits to carry out tests in the care homes for as long as the need exists?

Mr Swann: That is a good point that the Member raises. Look at the frequency with which we now undertake testing in care homes: residents once a month and staff members every fortnight. It is a considerable testing programme, because we have access to the national testing programme. It is the mobile units that are supplied as part of that national testing programme that will be mostly utilised for testing in the homes that are green — the COVID-free homes that we have at this minute in time.

Just as an update, out of our entire care home sector, we are managing and supporting only 15 homes at this minute in time that have either a confirmed or a suspected outbreak of COVID. We have closed out outbreaks in 167 care homes to date. The work that we are doing with care home providers, staff, residents and families is proving efficient. That is where the testing programme will become beneficial in making sure that we maintain those green homes in the situation where they currently are, so that we can even expand visiting access, which is something that, we are conscious, has been sadly missed by many care home residents and their families.

Ms Flynn: I thank the Minister for the statement. As the Minister said, obviously, the decision regarding Spain was made at the weekend, and it was the right decision.

Recently, at the Health Committee, we heard that the Chief Scientific Adviser (CSA) was the person responsible for looking at and assessing the data. What is the data based on? Is it a local rate for the North, a combined rate for the island or a rate across Britain and the North? Finally, can the Minister confirm whether there are other areas that are currently being considered as a potential risk?

Mr Swann: There is nowhere that we are looking at, as far as I am aware at this minute in time, where we see the incidence and prevalence that we saw across Spain. That is not to say that something may not move as quickly as we saw in Spain. As I said yesterday, when we saw the change in positive cases — going from 4,400 up to around 9,800 in the space of a week, I think — we had to move. The advice and guidance we got in regard to Spain was from the Joint Biological Centre, which is all four Chief Medical Officers (CMOs) and CSAs working across the United Kingdom. The decision to remove Spain was taken by all four Health Ministers at the same time: the SNP in Scotland, the Labour Party in Wales and us in Northern Ireland. It was a joint decision. Any differential could have left a back door somewhere that could have been opened or accessed, so we made that decision on a UK-wide basis.

Mr McNulty: I begin by offering my condolences to the family, friends, colleagues, patients and community of Kyle McDonald, an esteemed orthopaedic surgeon and consultant and a past pupil of my old school, the Abbey in Newry. Kyle's sudden passing will have sent shock waves through all the people who knew him. My sympathies are with them all. I measc na naomh go raibh sé. Today also marks a year since the passing of another Abbey student, Brian Conlon, and my thoughts are with Julie and Brian's family, colleagues and community.

Minister, you mentioned the reopening plan and the plan to reshape the delivery of urgent and emergency care, but you have not referred to the Daisy Hill emergency department. I note and applaud the exceptional work of the trust and all the staff of Daisy Hill and Craigavon Area Hospital in dealing with the pandemic and the work of the pathfinder group in ensuring that there is a plan to restart Daisy Hill emergency department. They have included that in the first reopening and rebuilding plan, and that is scheduled to happen before the end of September. I know that nurses, doctors and other hospital staff have been displaced in the pandemic, and I know that there will not be a return to business as usual, but can you give a firm date for when Daisy Hill emergency department will reopen and give the people of Newry and Mourne, south Armagh and south Down some comfort?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his initial comments in regard to Kyle's family.

The Southern Trust is working to reopen emergency medicine in Daisy Hill Hospital by the end of September, and, as the Member has rightly profiled, the Daisy Hill pathfinder group is working in partnership with the trust to develop new models of care in line with other emergency departments in Northern Ireland to ensure that services are safe. As with all of the restart programme, the new models of care will require considerable engagement with the community to ensure their success. That work goes on in regard to the rebuilding projects that each trust is bringing forward on the three-month staged process. The engagement has been there, and emergency medicine will reopen in Daisy Hill Hospital by the end of September.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for his lengthy statement and for his service. He rightly pointed out the good work not just of his Department but of those who have served on the front line. It is good, as an MLA from Lagan Valley, to note that the Lagan Valley Hospital has been recognised today for its capacity, its reputation for excellence and its central location to provide the hub for the elective procedures, moving forward. Will the Minister join me in thanking the staff of the critical care unit, who changed their unit into a COVID response ward and, at great cost to themselves, performed heroically? I put on the record my thanks to them and to those like them throughout the health service in Northern Ireland who have stepped up to the plate at this challenging time.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his comments, and I add to the Member's my personal thanks to those he mentioned. As I said, we are where we are today in Northern Ireland in respect of COVID and the response to COVID because of the dedication of so many health professionals at all levels across our service who really stepped up to the mark and really delivered and really proved the benefits of a National Health Service and what it actually means to the people of Northern Ireland. To every individual who stepped up I say "Thank you", and it is a personal "Thank you" as the Minister of Health that I give to each of them for the dedication and commitment they gave, while always remembering the sacrifice that their families made as well in allowing their loved ones to go out to work, which was always in difficult, trying and challenging times.

12.45 pm

Mr O'Dowd: We are approaching 31 July, and the Minister will be acutely aware that the advice to members of the public who are shielding will now change, and they will be able to go out and about more. One reason that people have been advocating the wearing of face masks in shops and other places is to help to protect those who are shielding. What advice about the future is being given to those who are coming out of shielding, particularly their concerns that they may have to shield again?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member. For those who have been shielding over the past four to five months, 31 July will be a joyous day for some but a challenging day for many. That challenge will be seen when people come out their front door and enter a society that looks different from the time when they started to shield. A letter providing guidance went out from the Chief Medical Officer that there should still be social distancing, good hand hygiene and respiratory awareness. The greatest guidance is not for people who have been shielding but for those who have not been shielding. I make a request not only on my behalf as Health Minister but on behalf of family members, friends and everybody who has been shielding — the 98,000 to whom we sent letters: please respect them, please give them space, and please allow them to re-enter society at their speed, giving them space in retail shops, on public transport and on footpaths to allow them to come back into the general population, because it will be challenging.

The Patient and Client Council undertook some work and engaged with all those who are shielding, whose biggest concern was stepping outside the front door again. There are also mental health implications for people who have had the assurance of staying inside their homes. Our guidance has been very clear: 31 July is a pause to shielding. That language was used deliberately because we have to be aware that we may have to ask a section of that 98,000 to go back to shielding should there be a second spike or an outbreak of COVID-19 in certain areas. The advice may revert to advising and guiding people to stay in their homes for another period of time.

Mr Blair: I begin by associating myself with the thanks given by my colleague Kellie Armstrong to the Minister's departmental staff and healthcare providers everywhere. We truly are grateful. The Minister is to be commended for the way in which he shared his thanks with those front-line staff.

We are all mindful of the autonomy of GP practices, and the Minister will be aware of the struggles that the public face in trying to get GP appointments. Is it likely that face-to-face appointments will resume, bearing in mind the difficulties faced by those, particularly many of our elderly population, who cannot easily access online or telephone services?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his initial comments. He will be aware that GP practices are independent operators. We have been able to give them guidance and support, but, at the end of the day, the provision of services, and how GPs deliver that, remains within the management of each practice. We have always been assured that, if people need a face-to-face consultation, they should be able to get one. Changes have been made to telemedicine and telephone consultations, and those should be utilised where possible. However, if someone needs to go in through the door and see a GP, that facility should always be available. It is not always about the initial reason that somebody goes to see a GP. It is often at the point when patients are about to go out the door, with their hand on the handle, that they say, "By the way, I meant to ask you about —". That is when the real reason for the GP appointment comes to light. Face-to-face consultations are always important. There will be changes in practice with telemedicine, telephone consultations, ordering repeat prescriptions and things like that. Good practices have come about in our GP services, but face-to-face interaction should always be available if necessary.

Mrs D Kelly: Minister, like others, I thank you, and the staff throughout the health and social care system, for their hard work throughout the pandemic. I will ask about cancer services. I spoke yesterday to a young mother, who had a routine smear test last December, and has been told, within the last two weeks, that she has cancer. No date has yet been set for her surgery. You talked about restarting. What are the time lags between the routine diagnostic test, informing a person of the diagnosis and surgery? What measures, or confidence, can you give to people like this young mother, who faces such dreadful news?

Mr Swann: If the Member writes to my office with specific details of that case, I will have it looked into. As I said earlier, in the statement, the re-engagement of our cancer services is a priority. They must be re-established as soon as possible. The time lags between diagnosis and treatment should not, to my knowledge, be as lengthy as the Member indicates. I will look into that case. We always red-flagged urgent procedures, even throughout the pandemic. We made provision for them. We could not identify them all, but we identified the majority of the urgent referrals. If the Member contacts my private office, I will follow it up.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister, his Department and the healthcare professionals for all their hard work. Will the Minister outline how he has managed to deliver the globally unique, functioning, pan-border StopCOVID NI app? Will he also thank the software industry for its hard work in delivering the app? It is indeed, Members of the Assembly, a unique thing that we are seeing across these countries.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for raising that specific point. It was mentioned by the Chair of the Committee.

With regard to the contact tracing app, we started with a foot in both camps. We watched what the Republic of Ireland was doing, and we were also conscious of what NHSX was doing. The chief digital information officer, Dan West, and his team in my Department worked on it. He presented the app to the Health Committee and the Executive Committee last week. I thank him and his team for doing an astonishing piece of work. That very small, dedicated team has delivered the app that we will launch shortly, once we get it into the Apple Store, to go through that provision. Not only has the team developed it but it made sure that the concerns that many Members raised about data security and data sharing were at the centre of what it was doing. That small team, led by Dan West, should be commended as much as any other health professional or member of my Department.

The key point, an interesting and integral feature of our app, is interoperability, which gives us the ability to access information from either side of the border, so that we do not see an anomaly. That was the concern at the start: people would have to have two or three apps to travel throughout this island. It is also reassuring that the platform that NHSX is now progressing on will allow east-west interoperability as well. We will have an app that works across all these islands and internationally. I understand that it has progressed to the extent that it will interact with some of the main European apps, from Germany and other countries, because we use the same platforms.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for his statement and for providing updates to the House during the pandemic, particularly on the important issues that continue to be raised.

On elective care, specifically orthopaedic surgery, the Department received an additional £90 million earlier this year and the Executive will receive a total of £600 million of new money from Westminster to tackle the COVID-19 pandemic. What total additional funding will be allocated to elective care to ensure that surgery and appointments take place? Also, will the Minister update the House on what work has been done, aside from the important task of tackling COVID-19, to ensure that waiting times are reduced from the four- or five-year period that people have been told about?

Mr Swann: One of the points and, I hope, one of the outworkings of the orthopaedic and elective day-care surgeries will be a reduction in those waiting times. They were bad in January, and they got worse over the period that we were closed down because of the pandemic. This regional approach should start to tackle and reduce the current waiting lists to get them back to a place that is manageable and respectable. We need to get on top of four- or five-year waiting times and bring them down. That was already a challenge for my Department, and £50 million was promised under New Decade, New Approach to address waiting times. We got £10 million in our last bid. At that point, we were looking at using the independent sector and enhancing the provision that we had. Some of those avenues have closed down, so, although we may be tackling the current waiting times, it will not be to the extent that we previously hoped.

All these proposals have been worked up and costed, and bids will go to the Department of Finance and the Finance Minister in relation to the announcement of the new COVID support monies that have come forward. However, the important point on waiting times — I ask Members to support us on this — is encouraging people to look across Northern Ireland for a place to which they can go to get their procedure, operation or diagnosis. Let us break the regional perception that it must always be in your local hospital. I would rather that people were now able to look at accessing medicine in days, weeks, and months, and in miles, rather than years.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for his statement today, and I thank all the hardworking health staff for their ongoing work in our NHS. The Minister will be aware of the impact of coronavirus on maternity services and antenatal care. According to the latest information on the maternity website, the South Eastern Trust says that all educational classes are cancelled, and there is no information in the Minister's statement or online on when they will resume. Parenting classes are extremely important in supporting the parenting journey and are part of a wide range of services that are essential for women preparing to give birth. Can the Minister provide an indicative date for when he expects the resumption of the normal service provision of antenatal care and maternity services?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her point. I will come straight out and say that I do not have the answer with me today, but I will get it for her because I realise the importance of the issue. She will know that it was one of the services that was stepped down. I think that there was an attempt to put the service online so that prospective mothers could access it and have that guidance, but there is nothing like the personal attention of a midwife when preparing for the birth of a child. I do not have a specific date for the Member, but I will get details to her on how the service is being worked up across all trusts, not just the one that she mentioned.

Mr Carroll: It is welcome news that there have been no deaths in the last two weeks. However, as the Minister indicated, the virus is still with us and still very dangerous. What is his and his officials' assessment of the safety of all pupils returning to school without wearing masks, particularly teenagers and older pupils? I understand that the position of the Minister, if not the Executive, is that people should wear masks in shopping centres. It appears that the Education Minister might be going on a solo run that could put pupils at risk. What is his assessment of masks for pupils and staff in schools?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his point. On interaction with the Education Minister, I am having a meeting with him, the Chief Scientific Officer and the Chief Scientific Adviser this afternoon on the next building plan and the opening up of the Education Authority and schools. I am sure that that issue will be discussed.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): We have heard from all Members on the list. We have some considerable time left: more than 20 minutes. If there are any other questions, Members should indicate.

Mr Carroll: I did not think that I would be called so quickly, but I am glad to be called. I would like to ask the Minister about strike pay for healthcare workers. The Health Committee is being led to believe that, sometimes, the issue is with the Finance Minister; sometimes, it is with the Health Minister. What is the Health Minister's assessment of where it is? Does he still believe that healthcare workers should be given the strike pay that they lost out on earlier this year?

1.00 pm

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. It reflects back to a question that he asked me prior to COVID, just after the strike. He asked me whether I would like to see the strike pay reimbursed. At that time, I indicated to him that there may be legal ramifications. Although the Minister of Finance has supplied us with the money, my Department is actually looking at the repercussive nature of the reimbursement of strike pay. It would be the first time that strike pay has ever been reimbursed, so it would set a precedent not just in Northern Ireland but across the United Kingdom. It would hit the Department of Health, because of that repercussive nature, if we were to do that as policy lead. Say, the Member had raised Education. If, for example, teachers went on strike, and the Minister of Education decided to reimburse strike pay to teachers, the bill would come to my Department because it had set the precedent. Therefore, where we are at this minute in time is that I have a paper with the Executive. It was last tabled on 9 July. If the Executive take the collective decision to take the unique step to reimburse strike pay, we can proceed with that. It would take a while to be able to work that. We have the money, but what I need is the reassurance that any future reimbursement of strike pay by another Department, either in this jurisdiction or across the UK, does not come back to impact Northern Ireland's Health budget, which is currently my understanding. Therefore, at this minute in time, we are not proceeding because I need that reassurance from the Executive that, should that ever happen in the future, the Department of Health and my budget would not suffer as a result of that decision.

Miss Woods: The Minister will be aware that many people are having ongoing issues with accessing physical appointments with their GPs. I have written to him and the South Eastern Trust on that issue. Some of my constituents have been offered telephone appointments, which have not resulted in any diagnoses or referrals, and some have been told that they should probably go private. At what stage will the resumption of GP services, with all the necessary PPE and safety measures, if there is an indicative date for the next stage of the recovery programme, be announced?

Mr Swann: I refer the Member to my earlier answer to John Blair on GP interactions and the services that they provide. GPs are independent providers. We have supplied them with PPE. Anybody who needs a face-to-face appointment should get one. We have moved, in certain cases, to telephone or online triage services. As regards advising people to go private, the Member might want to give me the specific details of that. She says that she has written to me. I am not sure where it is in the system, but we will certainly look at that. I encourage GPs, and patients as well, that, if patients need a face-to-face consultation, it should be open to them.

Mr Gildernew: The Minister referred in his statement to the travel regulations. It is widely accepted that there is a great degree of confusion about travel regulations. I welcome the fact that the Minister has sought closer cooperation with his counterpart in the South in order to try to streamline some of those issues. It is important to say that the issue is South/North as well as North/South, and if we are going to truly maximise the benefits of having a single epidemiology unit, that work will be crucial. Can the Minister update the House on the memorandum of understanding or any other work that is being done to ensure that we can deliver, as far as possible, the aims of the independent SAGE 'A Better Way To Go' document; that we work together to reach a COVID rate that is as close to zero as possible in as short a time frame as possible?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. It is actually one of the very few for which I had a prepared answer. The memorandum of understanding between the Health Departments in Ireland and Northern Ireland was signed on 7 April, signalling the willingness of both jurisdictions to promote cooperation and collaboration in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Both jurisdictions are committed to working in partnership to predict the likely impact of COVID-19 and to enable evidence-based decisions on how best to respond across the island of Ireland. We have been working closely with our Irish colleagues since the start of the COVID-19 crisis, and we shall build on that relationship to continue to share information and learning. There are regular meetings between the CMOs of both jurisdictions and their teams to discuss areas of mutual information.

As regards the Member's specific question, I think that I said to him yesterday — I went slightly off course from the Member's question — there will be a North/South Ministerial Council meeting this Friday, which will discuss the memorandum of understanding and should there be any further relationship-building that we can do, considering a new Government are in place. I had a good relationship with Simon Harris, the previous Health Minister, and I have had a number of engagements with Stephen Donnelly. We are very proactively engaging because we both have the same challenges as to how we tackle COVID-19 and how we rebuild our services as well.

There is good work going on in regard to travel. We have had some challenges with the travel locator forms with regard to the sharing of information. I am now led to believe that the matter of how that information can be shared is with the Irish Attorney General and the Dáil. We have made progress with that. I think that it is not so much a matter of not wanting to but of not being able to make progress at this time. Hopefully, at Friday's discussion, we will be able to get a solution to that problem and we can move on. We have had good working relationships with the Health Minister, the Chief Medical Officer, the PHA and HSE, and I think that is something we can build on.

Mr McCrossan: Again, Minister, I want to put on record my thanks to you for your leadership on the huge challenges that have been thrown at you since you were appointed as Health Minister. I ask you to reinforce your message on hand sanitisation. Hand washing is very important, and it is important that that message does not get lost or fade.

In relation to mental health services, Minister, you will realise that, throughout the pandemic, a huge number of people have been very badly impacted. People are fearful and anxious, and all that feeds into their mental ill health. What extra funding will there be, if any, from the £600 million from Westminster COVID-19 moneys that might support mental health services that are so badly in need of it at present?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. Again, the point is well made because of the stresses and strain that we have seen COVID-19 put on not only those who are shielding but the people working on the front line and their families.

In the last monitoring round, a bid of £1.5 million was made and accepted for the 'Mental Health Action Plan' work, which we kept going, and we published it last month. That 'Mental Health Action Plan' was adopted and includes COVID-specific work as well. Since then, we have been able to appoint our mental health champion, Professor Siobhan O'Neill, who is doing a fantastic job already in interacting with stakeholders and all Departments.

One of the bids for the additional moneys will be an application for the further development of multidisciplinary teams that are working across a number of areas in Northern Ireland and through which we are able to bring different professionals, including psychologists and psychiatrists, into GP practices. That model had worked well, but we did not have the funding to expand it to other areas, so additional money will be sought to expand it. However, it is also dependent on having the professionals to fill the posts. It is not just about the money, although the money is always welcome; it is about making sure that we have the right people in the right place at the right time.

Ms Flynn: To follow on from Mr McCrossan's question, I do not mean to sound critical of the Minister — that is not my intention — but he will know that, after the monitoring round that included that £1.5 million, and although there is a bid for £7 million for the multidisciplinary teams, I said publicly that that was not enough, given the challenges that we face with mental health.

At the Health Committee last week, the issue of trauma and the psychological impact of COVID-19 was discussed and the fact that we still have not seen what will come next. The Minister referred to the 'Mental Health Action Plan', and there is a section in it on the COVID-19 response. I know that the report stated that that is a fluid piece of work that will change. Is there anything concrete on actions under the COVID-19 mental health response?

Mr Swann: I do not have the detail with me because of the scope of the statement that we are covering today, but I will get the detail of that. The Executive Committee on mental health, well-being and suicide prevention meets again tomorrow. So, as we come out of the Executive's response to COVID, those additional strands of work are being put back in place. There are a number of presentations to it in regard to work that is coming forward. That even includes members from the voluntary and community sector. The Elephant in the Room youth mental health initiative is presenting to the Committee tomorrow afternoon as well.

It is about how we get all those pieces to work together and deliver the support that we need as we come out of COVID and see more people presenting with challenges. I know that it is something that the Member continues to raise and has a passionate interest in, and I commend her for that. Never worry about the “but” that comes in your statement. Keep bringing it and keep asking it. It is only by raising those concerns and questions in this Chamber that I can keep it firmly on the platform not just in my Department but in the Executive.

Mr McGrath: Will the Minister commit to meeting the British Dental Association (BDA) and its Chief Dental Officer to address the serious impact on dental practices at the moment as a result of the regulations? They have made many representations to the Committee and to Members, and there is a threat to the viability of practices going forward. I know that he has extended the urgent dental care centres to the end of August, but I do not want to get to another cliff edge at the end of August with those problems. Will he undertake an assessment and meet those individuals to try and resolve any problems going forward?

Mr Swann: I met the BDA and the acting Chief Dental Officer two or three weeks ago. At that stage, I had quite a good engagement with them. So, some of the fallout and comments that I have seen recently were not my takeaway from that meeting. I understand the pressures that our dental profession is under. The acting Chief Dental Officer is due to meet them and engage with them in regard to a number of funding packages — I am not even sure whether the BDA is aware — around additional money that is there in support for other industries and service providers that have fallen through the gaps, I think, is how the Finance Minister has described it.

I have written to the Minister for the Economy to see whether there is some sort of support mechanism that she could bring forward to the private side of our dental profession. Where we can support and fund the national health side, there is also that private side of many BDA businesses that need additional support. That engagement has commenced. The BDA wrote to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister and the Executive as a whole last week, and that is the step that I took in response to that letter.

Mr Sheehan: In my haste to get two questions in the first time around, I probably did not frame my question around urgent and emergency care too well. What I was asking is: does the Minister have a date when that review will be published? That was the last question. This question relates to plans for care homes in the event of a second surge. In your statement today, you outlined plans for extra testing in care homes, but are there other plans in place to deal with a second surge?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his clarity. I was not sure about his question because I had mentioned that in the statement. I hope to be in the position to publish that in August if not September. I know that we are in recess, and I do not want Members thinking that I am doing it because we are in recess, and it is a good time to do it. When it is there and it is in the final position, I will do it, but I will make sure that we are engaged with the Health Committee as well to make sure that members have interaction and some input and knowledge of what is being done. So, hopefully, in August, or September at the latest, that urgent emergency care piece will be published.

In regard to care homes and the supports that we are getting, we have been looking at best practice across all jurisdictions in the support of care homes. The Chief

Nursing Officer is leading an urgent review into the provisions that were put in place not just here in Northern Ireland but in other jurisdictions and even worldwide practice as well to see what additional measures can be put in and at what point you can still have visitors etc.

It is about all those challenges, and all those steps bring about different challenges for residents and families. It is about making sure that care homes are provided for. We will be in a better place than we were with the initial outbreak because of what we know about COVID, how it works and how it interacts with care homes. We have established a good working relationship with the care home sector in how we work together to make sure that we protect and support the residents of those homes.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): We have just over six minutes left. With the indulgence of the Minister, I know that Colm Gildernew has indicated that he would like to ask another question. Is there anyone else?

Mr Gildernew: I thank the Minister again for taking a range of questions on all the issues. My question is linked to the question that Pat asked about care homes. Across the islands, there has been a sense that we could do better for care homes in a potential second wave or in future pandemics. Is a specific look being taken at discharge policy into hospitals and out of hospitals into care homes that may be of benefit during a potential second surge? I know that work is being done in England on that. Is specific work going on here on discharge policies during a second surge?

Mr Swann: The number of admissions and discharges from hospital settings into care homes and the testing policy are part of the work that the Chief Nursing Officer is leading on. We had a testing policy in place, which meant that testing was carried out 48 hours before discharge from hospital into a care home. If there is a second surge, that will be there from the very beginning. That policy has been established, and we ask people who are transferring from hospitals to care homes to go into isolation for 14 or 7 days, as appropriate. Those steps and measures are all being looked at in the rapid review that the Chief Nursing Officer is bringing forward. We are cognisant of that and are doing the work on it. It will be part of that review.

Miss Woods: It is great to get to ask so many questions. I thank the Minister for answering them.

I welcome the roll-out of the COVID-19 app, the announcement of which has been done in conjunction with the ICO. I previously raised questions with the Minister about the legal advice that was given about the roll-out of the app and data protection. Will the Minister confirm that the collection and storage of data in the app will be based on a decentralised model, whereby data is only held locally on your phone?

Mr Swann: It is fortunate, because I had a prepared answer for that question, unlike most of the questions that were asked in the rest of the hour.

The data will be stored on your phone, and information will be shared only when you enter and fire the key. The information will be shared with a secure server in the Business Services Organisation that has been specifically developed and will be managed for that. The interoperability with the system in the Republic of Ireland is also done by secure measures to make sure that they talk and act together. We have undertaken wide engagement.

I reassure the Member that the draft data protection impact assessment for the proximity app, while it is being finalised to take account of comments from the Information Commissioner's Office, will be available and will be published to give users and those who know what that means the ability to have a look at it before we go live. That gives that reassurance. One of the things that I, as the Minister, and we, as an Assembly and an Executive, want is for as many people as possible to use that app. It will start to open up many other avenues as we ease restrictions.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): I call John Blair for a very quick question.

Mr Blair: Thank you for your patience, Temporary Speaker. I also thank the Minister for his perseverance. In his statement, which we are grateful for, the Minister touched on the resumption of cancer services. It has been reported that cancer diagnoses are down by somewhere around two thirds, and Cancer Research UK says that as many as 200,000 people across the UK are not being screened for cancers such as bowel, breast or cervical cancer. Can we have any more information on what is being done to prevent the non-detection of a high number of early cancers?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his point. It is valid and ties in with the point that was made by Dolores Kelly. In relation to screening, the strategic framework for rebuilding HSC services was launched in June with the direct aim of rebuilding health and social care services in prevailing COVID-19 conditions. It outlines a phased restoration of screening programmes as quickly and as safely as possible. The PHA is leading on the restoration of screening and has produced a recovery plan for each of the paused programmes to ensure that they are reintroduced safely and that the benefits of screening are greater than the clinical risks associated with COVID-19. Given the ongoing pandemic and the continued need for enhanced infection control measures, screening throughput is likely to be slower, and it will therefore take some time to catch up on postponed appointments and to restore services to pre-COVID levels of activity. I assure the Member that that work is ongoing to make sure that we catch up on what has been missed.

The Temporary Speaker (Mr G Kelly): That concludes questions on the statement from the Minister with some second questions to deal with. I thank the Minister for his indulgence.

I ask Members to take their ease while we get ready for the next item.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Executive Committee Business

Executive Committee (Functions) Bill: Final Stage

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Speaker has received a letter from the Secretary of State signifying that he is content to grant consent for the Bill to enter its Final Stage.

Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): I beg to move

That the Executive Committee (Functions) Bill [NIA Bill 08/17-22] do now pass.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on the debate. I call the junior Minister to open the debate on the motion.

Mr Lyons: The Executive Committee (Functions) Bill will provide greater clarity for Ministers on the circumstances in which they must refer matters to the Executive Committee for agreement; in particular, it provides an exemption from referral to the Executive Committee for certain decisions taken by the relevant Minister under the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011. The Bill is not concerned with the detail of the planning process but, instead, seeks to clarify who is responsible for making decisions.

Section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 states:

"The Executive Committee will provide a forum for the discussion of, and agreement on, issues which cut across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers".

Additionally, the Executive Committee has

"the function of discussing and agreeing upon ... significant or controversial matters that are clearly outside the scope" of the Programme for Government. Those functions are also reflected in the obligation placed on Ministers to bring certain matters to the Executive Committee under paragraph 2.4 of the ministerial code. It is important to note that the Bill would not change the obligations on Ministers to refer to the Executive Committee or the role of the Executive Committee in considering cross-cutting matters. However, it would address the implications of the Buick judgement, and it is informed by the legal advice of the Departmental Solicitor's Office (DSO) and the Attorney General, which, as Members will be aware, related to the decision of the Department for Infrastructure to approve a planning application for a waste disposal incinerator in Mallusk in 2017.

The Bill addresses the implications of the judgements in the following ways. First, the Bill fully protects and maintains the requirement of section 20 of the Northern Ireland Act that any matter that is "significant or controversial" must continue to be brought to the Executive. It further clarifies that that requirement is also on Ministers even if there is no Programme for Government in place. That means that the absence of a Programme for Government, for whatever reason, cannot be used as a reason for not referring a matter to the Executive Committee for a decision. That is the purpose of clause 1(2), and it not only protects but enhances the St Andrews Agreement.

In relation to the implications of the wider definition of “cross-cutting”, this had been interpreted as applying only to matters that cut across the statutory responsibilities of two or more Ministers and did not encompass those in which they simply had an interest, although the matter might, as in this case, be supportive of other Ministers’ aims or objectives. The judgement means that the range of matters that would require referral to the Executive could be widened substantially, with the inherent difficulty of measuring the extent and nature of the interest that another Minister might have in the matter. It could also undermine the executive authority of individual Ministers in their areas of responsibility. Specifically, it means that planning decisions that were considered the sole responsibility of the relevant Minister and were not referred to the Executive Committee for agreement would henceforth need to be, to remove the risk of legal challenge on the cross-cutting principle. That would make the Executive Committee the de facto planning authority rather than the Minister for Infrastructure, in whom the statutory power is actually vested. The Bill addresses that implication by providing that a Minister does not need to refer to the Executive Committee a matter where the effect on another Minister’s statutory functions is only incidental; for example, a statutory requirement for one Minister to consult another would not be considered to affect the exercise of statutory responsibilities more than incidentally. That reflects the practical application of the cross-cutting requirement by the Executive since St Andrews but prior to the Buick case.

Finally, to place the responsibility for planning decisions beyond doubt, the Bill provides an exemption from referral to the Executive of certain decisions made by the Department or Minister for Infrastructure under the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 or regulations or orders made under the Act. Therefore, the Bill would bring into statute the implications of the Buick judgement in respect of the Programme for Government while providing much-needed clarification to Ministers on the extent of their obligations to the Executive Committee. That will preserve an appropriate degree of ministerial authority while placing reasonable limits on the extent to which ministerial decisions, including essential planning decisions, could be challenged on the grounds that they are cross-cutting. I commend the Bill to the House.

1.30 pm

Mr Stalford: I do not intend to detain the House for long, because the arguments around the Bill are well rehearsed and were discussed at length yesterday in the Chamber.

I think that everyone can recognise that the advances that were made at St Andrews represented an enormous improvement on how this part of the United Kingdom is governed. It was an important principle that the Government should function collectively and in a spirit of cooperation, and the changes that were made as a consequence of the efforts of the Democratic Unionist Party at St Andrews facilitated that positive change to how this part of our country is governed. This proposal is completely consistent with St Andrews, and it is important that that is noted.

We have had arguments thrashed out between differing interpretations. The Government act on legal advice given to them by, among others, the Attorney General and the Departmental Solicitor’s Office. That is why they are there. That is one of the reasons why the office of the Attorney General exists and one of the reasons why the Departmental Solicitor’s Office exists. In recent days, Members have questioned the advice that has been given by both those organs of the state. It is their right, in a democracy, to do that, but, if we question the validity of that advice, we are effectively saying that we should abolish those offices. What is the point of their existence, if we simply decide that we prefer the advice of someone else outside of —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: No — we prefer the advice of someone else —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: No.

Mr Wells: Petrified.

Mr Stalford: I am not petrified of you, Mr Wells.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr Stalford: You believe that if you want to.

The consistent position of those who have opposed accelerated passage of the Bill —.

Miss Woods: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: Speaking of which, I will give way to Miss Woods.

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for giving way. Will the Member agree with me that not all Members have had sight of the legal advice that he refers to?

Mr Stalford: Absolutely, and that is standard custom and practice in government. Even those who have served as Ministers will be able to attest to the fact that the legal advice that they are given is not publishable. I will accept criticism of the accelerated passage procedure from Miss Woods. I will accept it from Mr Carroll, from Mr Allister or from Ms Bailey, because they are the only four Members who have maintained a consistent position on the issue. They were opposed to accelerated passage from the very start, and I accept and acknowledge their right to be.

I give way to Mr Wells now.

Mr Wells: Will Mr Stalford accept that the very same legal advisers gave advice to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on the renewable heat incentive (RHI) scheme and that the advice was found to be very wanting indeed?

Mr Stalford: If Mr Wells wishes to take to his feet in the Chamber and consistently denigrate the professionalism and the standards of the Departmental Solicitor’s Office, that is his right. I am merely pointing out that the DSO and the Attorney General exist as organs of this state to advise Members.

The provisions that the junior Minister outlined actually strengthen the concept of collective responsibility, because they provide clarity around the areas that are defined as significant, controversial or cross-cutting. That is important, because this is an issue that, as Members will be aware, has been argued out in the courts on numerous occasions. If provisions are being put in place that provide clarity and mean that we do not have a situation where, as has had to happen in the past, Ministers in the same Executive end up on opposing sides in a court case, that should be welcomed. It encourages the smoother and more effective operation of our Government, it encourages Ministers to work together and it encourages people to act in a collaborative fashion. That was the vision of St Andrews: a collective Government.

It is also important to note that, under the provisions, Ministers will not be able — Members know this — to go off on so-called solo runs, as happened in the past. Under these provisions, for any decision that is deemed to be significant, controversial or cross-cutting, if a Minister unilaterally assumes the power to themselves to take such a decision, that decision is not valid. It has no standing, because of the provisions that have been outlined by the junior Minister.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: Yes.

Mr Wells: Let us envisage a situation, Mr Stalford, in which we have a pro-choice Minister of Health who exercises his authority in a way that is repugnant to many Members of the House. How do we bring his or her activities to the Executive? For it to be significant or controversial, the matter has to be clearly outside the ambit of the Programme for Government. Should it be cross-cutting, under the old law, it is very clear that it has to be brought to the Executive. However, under the new law, unless it affects significantly any other Department, it cannot be brought before the Executive. Now, abortion is a controversial issue, but it is difficult to see how it affects anything significantly in the work of the Department of Agriculture, the Department for Infrastructure or the Department for the Economy. Therefore, it fails those two tests. How do you bring something that many Members of the Assembly and in the Executive find utterly repugnant to the Executive under your legislation?

Mr Stalford: Because it also falls under the remit of the Department of Justice.

It is important that any decision —.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Stalford: No. I have been very generous. The Member accused me of being terrified to give way to him. I think that I have given way three times; certainly twice. I was generous with him yesterday as well.

Any decisions taken by a Minister outside the scope of the provisions will not be valid and will not have force, and that is clear to anyone who reads them.

The arguments have been well rehearsed; indeed, to some of those who protested yesterday that there had not been enough scrutiny, I say that, for a three-clause Bill, one of which is the title, the Assembly has exercised a very decisive level of scrutiny of this legislation. The arguments have been thrashed out. It is important that we move forward together.

Mr Sheehan: I agree with the Member who spoke previously that all the arguments have been rehearsed and ventilated in the Chamber in a number of debates. I will not detain the House long, but I will reiterate where we came from and how we have arrived at this point.

The Buick judgement, which no one expected, has made the potential of people bringing the Executive or Ministers to court an ever-present danger in its context. That needs to be changed. There is no point in having Ministers end up in court over practically every decision made. As has been pointed out, the Bill is short, but it recalibrates the legislation back to what, everyone believed, it was prior to the Buick judgement. The safeguards are there. If a decision is significant, controversial or genuinely cross-cutting, it is for the Executive to deal with. That seems to be absolutely clear.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: The advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office and the Attorney General is crystal clear.

I will give way.

Mr Wells: Let us move to consider another situation. One of your Ministers is responsible for infrastructure. He decides to implement Irish language road signs throughout Northern Ireland. Clearly, that is entirely within the ambit of the functions of his or her Department. Unless there is a policy forbidding it in the Programme for Government, how does that policy go onto the Executive table? What is to stop his Minister simply proceeding to introduce Irish language signs throughout Northern Ireland?

Mr Stalford: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr Sheehan: Yes. I will.

Mr Stalford: That would arrive at the Executive because it touches on two Departments: Infrastructure and Communities.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat. Thanks for both interventions. Mr Wells's intentions are to spook the horses. They are simply that. The question was answered clearly, so I do not have to answer it.

We needed accelerated passage for the Bill. That has been an issue, and I accept that some Members here are opposed to accelerated passage as a general principle. I also accept that accelerated passage does not allow for the depth of scrutiny that would normally be the case. We are, however, in a crisis situation. We are in the middle of a pandemic that has, of course, affected the health of our citizens, but a consequence of that has been the damage done to the economy. We need to get the economy going, and one way in which we can do that is that through major infrastructure projects. They are sitting in the Infrastructure Minister's in tray, which is probably overflowing at the minute. We need to get those projects going, get people back to work and get the construction industry back to work. For that reason, I support the Bill.

Mr McGrath: I continue to support the Bill. It is a sensible one that will allow, amongst other things, the Minister for Infrastructure to make decisions. They will not be small decisions. They will be about regional applications that will deliver jobs, boost the economy and get the North's economy moving again. We have coronavirus, and we have Brexit. The two combined have had a major impact on the economy, and, when the economy is in a bad way, our communities are in a bad way. Fewer jobs means less money in our communities, and that has ramifications that go beyond mere planning applications.

The Bill will also help the Executive to work better and help stop paralysis. Time and time again, doorstep after doorstep, election after election, the people told us, “Get up there and do your work”. “Do your job” is what we were told. How many years have gone by in which people struggle to think of decisions that have been taken here that have truly and positively impacted on their lives?

There will be significant and controversial decisions — I have mentioned Brexit — and such decisions may create division. Different approaches will be difficult to unite, but the procedures are there to call in such matters and to help the Executive search for consensus and compromise to ensure that delivery takes place. To me and my party, the Bill is about action. It is about getting things done. It is about delivering for people and delivering for communities. Some may not like to cede a little power. Some may not like to devolve a little bit of decision-making. Some may whiff a few stray votes in the air, and that may be a little more what is happening here than having any problems with the Bill. I want to see action. I want to see activity. I want to see autonomy, where appropriate. I want to see this place delivering for people and truly serving people’s needs by helping them and through us doing our job. I am happy to support the Bill and look forward to seeing it pass today.

Mr Beattie: It is a short Bill but a far-reaching one. We should not really look at how few pages or how few clauses it has but at the effect that it will have. I thought yesterday’s was a good debate. It was an important debate, and people got their points across well. I will not rehearse any of the arguments from yesterday, because the outcome was clear and I accept what the outcome was.

1.45 pm

However, during yesterday’s debate, I had to bite my lip somewhat when I was accused of being insulting, when my moral integrity was questioned, when MLAs made the assertion that 11 minutes of scrutiny at a Committee was good enough and when MLAs questioned the whole planning part of the Bill but absolutely ignored my amendments. How dare I change my mind. How dare I, as an MLA, say, “Actually, I got it wrong, and I’ve changed my mind”. How dare I question a Bill that is a carve-up between two parties. How dare I.

When I take part in debates on important matters like this, I genuinely try to hold the hand of friendship out to everybody here and listen to the points that they are trying to make. I genuinely try. Let me make it clear, however: do not confuse friendship with weakness. This Bill is bad legislation, and there are people in the Assembly who know that it is bad legislation and are still going to vote for it. Shame on them. It has not been scrutinised to the level that it should have been. MLAs have not had the opportunity to question all the experts about it. We do not know the effects of the legislation in the medium to long term. No idea.

It will create a combative Executive. When pretty petty decisions are made outside the Executive, it will allow other Ministers to participate in a pile on. That is dysfunctional government. It will allow Ministers to step outside of collective government to get themselves away from any controversial decisions that are being made.

The Bill is a U-turn by the DUP on the core argument that it made to its electorate for its being able to share office with Sinn Féin. At St Andrew’s, the DUP said that it had fixed the Belfast Agreement, and stopping Ministers from going on solo runs was one of the core tenets for it saying that it had done so. Yet, here it is, doing a U-turn and backtracking on that very principle.

Section 2.4 of ministerial code of conduct is nearly a direct extraction from the St Andrew’s Agreement — nearly a direct extraction — and yet section 2.4, which was designed to keep the bar low for cross-cutting measures, is going to be overturned. I am in no doubt whatsoever that, after the summer recess, we will have the ministerial code before the Assembly, and section 2.4 will have been changed.

The junior Minister’s assertion that every Minister is stuck in a quandary because of the Buick judgement, which means that they have to bring all decisions before the Executive, is just not true. We have had an Executive for six months, and Ministers have not brought all the issues before the Executive. In fact, the Health Minister reduced the ban on gay and bisexual men giving blood from one year to three months. He did not bring that before the Executive, and not a single Minister raised an issue with it. That could be viewed as being controversial, as it was controversial enough for previous DUP Ministers to take it to court.

It is a fallacy to say that, for the past six months, we have been running contrary to the Buick judgement. That raises the prime question that has never been answered: why are we rushing this through? What is behind the rushing through of this legislation? Somebody needs to answer and say, “This is why we had to do it”, because if we were able to operate for six months with Ministers making decisions outside the Executive, why do we now have to rush it through?

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: I certainly will.

Mr Wells: That question was asked [Inaudible] in the Chamber yesterday, but it is the one question that —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I ask the Member to speak in front of the microphone so that everyone can hear.

Mr Wells: That question was asked by so many Members yesterday. It is the one question that was evaded on every occasion by the proponents of the Bill. What would be wrong with parking the Final Stage of the Bill until October to allow a cool-headed reflection of its implications? I am perfectly happy for Mr Lyons, Mr Stalford or anyone else to stand up and answer these questions. Why the rush? Why did it have to be handled this way? If they do not answer those questions, I am afraid that many of us have deep suspicions around what is going on.

There is silence.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for his intervention. It is a really important point, and I hope that the junior Minister can address it in the winding-up speech. It is incredibly important. I believe that this is a dangerous carve-up between the DUP and Sinn Féin, aided and abetted by some of the other parties, without looking into it in any depth. They are doing this because they want to distance themselves from some controversial issues that are about to come before the Executive.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: No, I will not. Sit down and take your medicine.

I think that controversial issues are coming before the Executive, and they will try to distance themselves from them. For example, the armed forces commissioner, the Irish language commissioner and abortion legislation. Just watch and see people dive for cover when they start coming out, as they try to hide and distance themselves. There is not a chance that I will support this legislation, not a chance that my party will support this legislation, but there is every chance, in the future, that I will point out the folly of this legislation.

Mr Muir: My party will vote for the Bill today. The Bill gives the Minister for Infrastructure the power to make planning decisions, as was always the intention.

Mr Stalford: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. No matter how intemperate or ranting Mr Beattie chooses to be, the fact of the matter is that, when he says “aided and abetted by some parties”, he needs to look at the result of the Division yesterday. I think it was 73 Members to 10. When Mr Beattie talks about aided and abetted by other parties, I suggest that he does some basic mathematics.

Mr Muir: I find Mr Beattie’s argument — that it is a DUP/Sinn Féin carve-up to give power to other Ministers, including those from the three smaller parties — rather strange. That is something new and revealing, perhaps. The Bill allows Ministers to take decisions that are not cross-cutting, that are within their sole statutory authority and are not significant or controversial, without the need to bring them to the Executive Committee first. Without the legislation, Executive Committee would become the de facto planning authority for Northern Ireland. The Minister for Infrastructure only deals with regionally significant and called-in planning applications. Therefore, if all significant decisions have to come before the Executive Committee, it would follow that all the Minister’s planning decisions would fall into that category. The Executive Committee being responsible for all regionally significant planning decisions would only make the current delays in the system worse.

Yesterday, Mr Wells stated that there is not a huge stack of applications waiting to be processed. To clarify, on 15 June, the Minister for Infrastructure confirmed with me that there were 38 applications still to be determined, with the top two stuck in the system for 698 weeks and 695 weeks.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Muir: Yes.

Mr Wells: The Member is making a valid point that there are 38 applications in the system. How many of those would be determined before October? Given that we are in the COVID-19 crisis and in the middle of the holiday period, if we decided to halt the consideration of the Bill to allow for cool heads to sit down and think through its implications, would any of the 38 applications be affected if we had the temerity to sit down and have a long hard look at what we are about to do?

Mr Muir: I thank the Member for his intervention. It will be for the Infrastructure Minister to clarify what decisions can be made over the weeks and months ahead. After three years of no Government in Northern Ireland, and in the middle of an economic crisis, we can ill afford to wait even further. The people of Northern Ireland, as the other Member outlined, have been saying to us “Get back to work. Get decisions made.” The message from today is to delay and think about it. We have done enough thinking about things here. We need to start taking decisions, The facts in relation to delays in planning applications and those needing to be determined speak for themselves.

It was always the intention that decisions would fall under the powers of the relevant planning Minister. It is my opinion that the legislation takes us back to the position that all parties had accepted before the Court of Appeal’s judgement in the Buick case. As the judgement states:

“No previous Environment Minister or Infrastructure Minister had ever referred an individual planning application to the Executive Committee for agreement prior to its determination.”

In addition, the legislation will go some way to allowing Ministers to make decisions that are neither significant nor controversial — decisions that are their sole statutory responsibility and which are not cross-cutting — without having to refer them to the Executive Committee. Legal opinions are just that: opinions. I have heard one opinion that the cross-cutting element will be largely unaltered as a result of the legislation, with the Infrastructure Minister again able to determine regionally significant applications. Essentially, pre-Buick, post-St Andrews. I have read other opinions on social media that are contrary to that opinion, but, ultimately, the decision to be made is whether this legislation is the best response to the Court of Appeal’s Buick ruling.

I feel that it strikes the right balance between necessary collective decision-making and granting Ministers the power to make judgements. I know, from reading the Buick judgement, that failure to act would lead not only to unnecessary ministerial inertia but successful legal challenges that Northern Ireland can ill afford. We cannot afford to ignore Buick. We have to act.

However, I have raised the issue of the wording of the ministerial code, as it will need to be updated to reflect the provisions of the legislation. The ministerial code is a very necessary piece of the statute book, designed to hold Ministers to account for their actions. It is important that it be updated in line with the legislation, if passed today, so that it continues to be an active document that reflects the law of the land rather than being a set of alternative rules that add unnecessarily to legal uncertainty. However, I seek clarity from the Ministers in their response on whether planning decisions can be made before the code is updated.

How Ministers and the Executive act, individually and collectively, is the most important factor in whether these institutions can survive and regain the trust of the people of Northern Ireland. We need Ministers who will apply planning policy objectively when making their judgements. In the Executive, we need Ministers who work together collaboratively to deal with the significant and controversial issues that need to be tackled. That is what I believe today’s legislation allows for. Ultimately, however, it will be up to Ministers to make it work.

Mr O’Toole: As many Members, particularly the Member for Upper Bann, have said, the length of the Bill is in inverse proportion to its importance. It is, first of all, worth saying, as all other Members have, that we need a legal remedy to the precedent created by the Buick judgement. That judgement created enormous uncertainty in our planning process, leading to stasis in our planning system, which added to a broader policy and decision-making stasis in our politics and public sector.

We need our planning process to work effectively in order to make decisions that will be vital to our economic recovery. That point was well and emphatically made by Members from multiple parties. In short, the Infrastructure Minister needs to be able to make decisions, and the Bill achieves that. Andrew Muir outlined the volume of decisions before the planning Minister.

However, that is not to say that the Bill, or the process surrounding it, has been ideal. Since re-forming the Assembly, we have been asked, more than once, to compress our scrutiny and to grant accelerated passage to legislation that, in normal times, would and should receive more attention, including multiple Budget Bills. Agreeing to accelerated passage for the Bill was far from ideal, and I say that in full recognition that I was not here to speak against it when it was first debated. Like Mr Beattie, I am happy to acknowledge where I should have spoken up earlier about a process not being ideal. I am happy to take anyone's criticisms today about not speaking up. I do not think that it is ideal that a Bill like this receives compressed scrutiny.

2.00 pm

It is, however, welcome that, once passed, the legislation will enable planning decisions to be made promptly after years of uncertainty. For that reason, I and my party are supporting it, but, as I said yesterday, in doing so, I am keen to ensure that we have clarity from the Executive Office on one particular area of concern: the issue of Brexit and in particular the implementation of the Ireland protocol.

Proposed new subsections (8) and (9) have been the subject of particular controversy and appear to give much more sweeping power to individual Ministers to make decisions without reference to the Executive Committee. The Bill retains the provision that "significant or controversial matters" must be brought before the Executive. We do not yet have sight of the updated ministerial code that has been mentioned frequently. That document, as others have said, will need to provide real clarity on how the provisions in the updated Bill interact with the responsibilities of Ministers.

As I said yesterday, if any issue qualifies as fundamental, cross-cutting, significant and controversial, it is Brexit and the implementation of the protocol. The junior Minister helpfully confirmed to me yesterday that the Executive and their Brexit committee remain core to dealing with Brexit-related matters. Though I have been disappointed with and critical about the level of scrutiny the Assembly has been able to give to the subject of Brexit and specifically the implementation of the protocol — indeed, I was very frustrated — I was glad and grateful for that from the junior Minister. The 'New Decade, New Approach' document references the importance of Brexit by setting up a Brexit subcommittee. Indeed, that is now a straightforward Executive committee, with representation from all parties.

As we give our support today to the intentions the Bill, with my careful caveats about the frustration with accelerated passage and the acknowledgement that there are legitimate criticisms of the Bill and, indeed, while acknowledging much of what Mr Beattie and others have said, I would be grateful if one of the junior Ministers could today confirm again that nothing in the Bill undermines the decision-making power of the Executive as a whole in relation to Brexit or the implementation of the protocol, and nor does it give individual Ministers the right to take decisions about protocol implementation that are significant, controversial or cross-cutting. With that request, I will draw my remarks to a close.

Dr Aiken: As I look around the Assembly, I am reminded, if we look back in history, of when RHI was being debated in the Assembly. Even though there are reduced numbers here due to COVID, the number of Members who have been able to take part in this debate on what is, quite frankly, bad legislation is particularly disappointing. I do not wish to make this into a moment where we harangue each other on particular issues, but there are some significant issues here. The first question, and we have not had the answer, is: why this legislation and, more particularly, why now?

Mr Lyons, thank you very much indeed for your very fulsome description and your briefing when we were talking about the amendments yesterday. You talked extensively about the legal opinion from the Departmental Solicitor's Office to the Executive and the views of the last Attorney General. We fully accept — it is a pity that Mr Stalford is not here — the fact that privileged information to the Executive is, indeed, privileged and should not be subject to further discussion. We do, indeed, welcome the offer that you made yesterday that the solicitors will be available to brief us in more detail. It is just a pity that, in the 11 minutes that the Committee for the Executive Office took to decide on the Bill, there was not the opportunity to get some more guidance and advice, particularly on the legal aspects.

We know that, because of the unique situation in Northern Ireland, our party is in a mandatory coalition. We also know that many of the reforms that were mentioned in and were supposed to be part of New Decade, New Approach have not yet been brought to the fore or actioned. Here we are in a situation where we are looking at a piece of bad legislation, with the impact that that will have. It will have an impact not just this year but next year and in the years to come. As some of the learned Members who have been here much longer than I said, we will be dealing with the implications of this not just in the short term but in the medium and much longer term. Many MLAs need to reflect on that.

Mr Lyons referred yesterday — this is quite important — to three key issues about the checks, balances and controls, and that is one of the main reasons why this is bad legislation. He mentioned the three Ministers rule and how that will be referred to in the ministerial code. However, we have been informed that there is going to be an update to the ministerial code. We are being invited to look at this legislation before we know what the changes to the ministerial code are going to be. Indeed, where New Decade, New Approach is concerned — like many others in the Chamber, I sat through hours and hours of turgid discussion behind the scenes in Stormont House and beyond — we still have not seen the updated ministerial code. Being asked to take this legislation through on the basis of something that we have not seen smacks again of the RHI inquiry and some of the issues to do with that.

Mr O'Toole: Will the Member give way?

Dr Aiken: Certainly.

Mr O'Toole: I was not involved in those turgid discussions, but he is right about New Decade, New Approach and, indeed, the ministerial code. Given that everybody in the House wants to see Brexit, including the implementation of the protocol, dealt with in a way that protects the Northern Ireland economy in the fairest way, does he agree that it is particularly important that we get clarity that because the implementation of the protocol and Brexit are such cross-cutting, fundamental and inherently controversial issues — that is why they were included in New Decade, New Approach — they will not be subject to ministerial solo runs?

Dr Aiken: I thank the Member from South Belfast. He must have been reading my notes, because those are, indeed, the very words that I was going to discuss now. Not only do we not have any view of what the updated ministerial code will be like, we need to understand clearly the definitions of the words “significant”, “controversial” and “cross-cutting”. We talk about improving clarity for Ministers, but when are we going to see this information so that we are able to assess whether it is appropriate to test whether this law is good law? We have not seen that. If we look back at some of the things that happened in the past and at some of the reasons why the Assembly did not sit for three years, we can see that that lack of scrutiny has been very clear.

I ask the First Minister and the deputy First Minister these questions: how does the Bill help to restore trust in the Northern Ireland Assembly? Does it restore openness and transparency? Does it address the democratic deficit? They should ask themselves very clearly whether any of those questions have been answered.

There was a note in one of the newspapers asking whether MLAs are “incurious” and “inept”. I am quite insulted by that, because I am not incurious. I might be inept in some things, and I do not think that people in the Assembly would consider that to be the case. However, there is a real issue here. We have a precedent of legislation coming through the Assembly that has brought this place into disrepute, and, Members, we are doing that again.

How does the Bill respond to the challenges of our unique legislative system? This was introduced to sort out a planning issue in a series of planning issues. My honourable friend from South Down has said this on many occasions: what is the rush? Indeed, my honourable friend Mr Muir said that some planning applications have been in the system for more than 650 weeks. One of the great things about being a submariner is that I am quite good at mental maths, and that shows that these planning applications have been in the system since long before the Assembly was shut down for three years and long before Buick. There is something more fundamentally wrong with our planning system than was going on with Buick, and I am not sure that this legislation in any way is going to address those fundamental issues.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Dr Aiken: Certainly.

Mr Wells: The junior Minister Mr Lyons is obviously quite shy when it comes to me, because he has been offered many opportunities to come to his feet to explain the rush, and he has sat quietly, as has Mr Kearney, and we have —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Could I again ask the Member to use the microphone?

Mr Wells: Mr Lyons must be very reticent to speak when I am on my feet, because he has been given many opportunities through yesterday's debate and today's to explain the reason for the rush, the reason why less than 24 hours was given for amendments and why we are heading at breakneck speed down a road that may prove disastrous. He has not on any occasion been prepared to intervene when I have been speaking, so I am offering him the opportunity, since you have raised the question, to explain why we are doing this.

Dr Aiken: Thank you very much for that intervention.

Mr Lyons: Will the Member give way?

Dr Aiken: I shall indeed.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Lyons: I am very grateful to the Member for giving way, although I will point out that I did give way multiple times yesterday to the Member. I have no problem in doing that, and I may even seek to make an intervention when he is speaking later on.

The Members want to know why it is that we are taking forward this legislation in the way that we are today. One issue has already been touched on, and that is the issue of planning. Regardless of the fact that some applications have been in for a long time, it is still important that we get the process right. The second issue that we want to make sure that we address is that the significant and controversial issues are not currently allowed to be used. The Member should be aware of that. Why? It is because we have no Programme for Government in place. So, without this Bill today, Ministers will be free to do things in their own Department that are significant or controversial, and it is important that we do something about that.

The third reason why we need to bring this Bill in is to make sure that there is clarity. I think that some are of the opinion that the judgement might mean that we will have to bring all these decisions to the Executive but they are saying, “Don't worry about it. We will just let that go. Just because it was the practice and custom previously, we do not need to bring it in now”. That would be wrong because, as Mr Stalford has already said, if a Minister has to take something to the Executive, he cannot make that decision by himself. It becomes an invalid decision, and there is no legal certainty around that. Those are three reasons why we are bringing this Bill in.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister very much indeed for doing that, but his intervention continues to raise fundamental questions about why this is bad legislation and a bad law. I am sure that the junior Ministers, when they are briefing the Assembly at the end of this debate, will talk fairly clearly about the definitions that we require for significant, controversial and cross-cutting. Maybe we will also get an update on the proposed new ministerial code because, indeed, junior Ministers, we are being invited to agree this legislation before we even know what the proposed changes in the ministerial code are.

I will conclude fairly shortly. We do have a choice. We, as Members of the Assembly, can meekly accept bad legislation, which the Ulster Unionist Party will not be doing. Do we really seriously say that we will allow the so-called smartest lawyers in the room to set the agenda? This is all that I have heard. I have heard everybody say that we need to agree with this because the best legal minds, from the government lawyers to the Attorney General, tell us that it is the right thing to do. We do not have to go back very far in the Assembly to see the last time that we had lots of advice and guidance from departmental solicitors and where that led us to. That should be the touchstone that we look to as we go through.

Finally, how does the Bill actually give us clarity? I have not heard anything from any Ministers or from any of the more eloquent people from the Back Benches. [Interruption.] Christopher is very eloquent, and I quite enjoy his interventions.

Mr Stalford: Elegant?

Dr Aiken: No, eloquent. You are never getting “elegant”.

The real issue, ladies and gentlemen, Members of the Assembly, is that this is bad legislation. In the future, when this comes back, which it will, and creates enormous problems, we will have to ask ourselves, with our conscience, whether we had the ability to stop this bad legislation at this stage. Or are we going to go through another whole rigmarole that is going to create all sorts of impediments to the future good governance of Northern Ireland? It will probably not even make sure that we get the York Street interchange built on time. We need to have good legislation. We need to have good scrutiny. We may not have made the amendments yesterday, but the Ministers still have an opportunity to delay this process so that we can look at the Bill properly.

2.15 pm

Mr Wells: Mr Deputy Speaker, if you hear a hissing sound during my speech, it is me burning many bridges between me and my erstwhile party. I am fully aware of the consequences of what I am about to say, but it has to be said. I simply cannot stand by and watch the House take a decision that will have — could have enormous implications for the governance of Northern Ireland without at least standing up and warning of the consequences. It is often said that opposing the Executive is like jeering at a passing steamroller — that is probably about as much impact as I will have — but I want to be able to look the people of South Down in the face, maybe in 18 months’ time, when this radically unravels, and say that, at least, I had the courage to stand up and say that we should not have done it.

Before I go into my speech, I say that I am glad that Mr Stalford is back. He answered a question that I raised about a rogue Sinn Féin Minister on a solo run wanting to inflict Irish-language road signs on the people of Northern Ireland. He stood up and said, “Oh, but that is cross-cutting, because it also impinges on the role of the Department for Communities”.

Mr Sheehan: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Yesterday, we heard intemperate and inflammatory language from the Member who was speaking there. I see that, today, he is back at the same old lark, talking about “rogues” and so on. Is there any chance he could be asked to restrain his intemperate language, please?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I am sorry, I have not heard any intemperate language thus far today. I can assure the Member that, if I do, I will intervene.

Mr Wells: I use “rogue” in the sense of someone who is totally out of control, rather than someone of doubtful moral background.

The point I am trying to make is that we have seen this, of course. Mr Conor Murphy introduced legislation to impose Irish-language road signs on the people of Northern Ireland. The reason that he got absolutely nowhere with that Bill was that it was pointed out to him that, under the existing legislation, it would get absolutely nowhere.

Now, I will give way to Mr Stalford on this point. He said, “Ah, but that affects the work of the Department for Communities”. Now, if a Sinn Féin Minister or, indeed, an SDLP Minister for Infrastructure decided to have Irish-language road signs between Newcastle and Kilkeel, it would be difficult to argue that that is a genuinely cross-cutting measure that will have an impact on the Department for Communities. It will not really matter, because a court will decide that it has no real impact on the work of the Department for Communities.

Mr Stalford: The Member will also be aware that it has section 75 implications and equality implications. If people object to such provision, as, I am sure, they would — he mentioned the town of Kilkeel, where, I am absolutely sure, they would — they have recourse to the law. Ministers have to act within the statute. Ministers are creatures of statute. They also have to act within the law, and the parameters of the law are clear around the specific issue that the Member has raised. This is becoming a pattern with the Member: setting up theoretical examples that are designed to frighten people. It is becoming boring.

Mr Wells: Gosh, Mr Deputy Speaker. I have been described as many things in my life, but never “boring”. I say to the Member that the people of South Down already have experience of this, because the district council has imposed Irish-language signs throughout the district and all attempts to invoke section 75 have failed miserably. The council has full authority to impose those on communities that do not want them, so I wish the Member well in trying to stop Irish-language road signs within similar restraints.

The Member says that I am throwing up, in a rather boring fashion — I will really have to up my ante, if I am being boring — false alarms about situations where people will feel worried and concerned, but my 22 years’ experience in the Assembly has shown that such situations do arise. There will be maverick — I will use “maverick” rather than “rogue” — Ministers on the nationalist side who will attempt —.

Mr Muir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr Muir: Will the Member accept the Equality Commission’s finding in relation to Paul Givan’s decision to cut Lóifa funding? That was another way in which the legal system found in relation to decisions made by other Ministers.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members. I remind everyone that this is not a debate about the Irish language. I draw everyone back to the Bill that we are considering today.

Mr Wells: My point is that a court could well decide that a Sinn Féin or SDLP Minister or even an Alliance Minister who wished to impose Irish-language road signs on the people of Northern Ireland would have the power to do that under the Bill, because it is not cross-cutting. Unless there was a clause in the Programme for Government expressly forbidding that, the Minister would be well within his powers to proceed with that policy, which would be anathema to a large proportion of the people of Northern Ireland. They do not want Irish-language road signs.

The Bill purports to update the legislation to reflect the Buick case. Everybody here knows the significance of the Buick case, but, over the last 24 hours, I have received many hundreds of emails from individuals, from people who are even concerned about giving the Minister for Infrastructure the power to unilaterally make a decision on controversial planning applications. I am sure that other Members have also received emails, for instance from the group opposed to the Dalradian gold mine application in west Tyrone or the application for a similar development in Armagh.

Mr O'Toole: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Several Members have issues with proposed subsections (8) and (9), and several Members have had issues with accelerated passage. I can understand those. He now seems to be drawing a broader issue with the Infrastructure Minister having the ability to make such decisions. Does he have a fundamental problem with the idea that the Infrastructure Minister should have, post-Buick, a clearer ability to make planning decisions?

Mr Wells: I am saying that the Bill has caught many people in Northern Ireland unawares, and many people would like to have had an input to a proper consultation on it through the Committee. I presume that Mr McGrath's Committee would have been the appropriate Committee to deal with this. They have been denied that opportunity. The Bill has gone from the printer's to ratification and, presumably, Royal Assent in less than a month. There have been 11 minutes of consultation about it in the relevant Committee. Members were given less than 24 hours to submit amendments. I sat in the Chair, Mr Deputy Speaker, and had to read out to Members that, if they wished to table amendments, they had to be in by 9.30 the following morning. That is highly irregular.

I thank Mr Lyons for the fact that, at last, he has explained the need for the rush, but can he tell me of one decision that would definitely have to be made between now and the first week of October? Mr — the gentleman from North Down, I have forgotten his name. I am awfully sorry. The new Member for North Down — somebody remind me.

A Member: Mr Muir.

Mr Wells: Mr Muir listed 38 planning applications that were sitting in the system, but what he did not say and what nobody said is that, on planning application A, we want to make a decision in August, and, on planning application B, we will definitely need to make a decision in September. I suspect that the reality is that, when we come back in October, there will still be 38 planning applications sitting there, because that, unfortunately, is the way that things work in the system at the moment. I will give Mr Lyons the opportunity to name me the applications that are so urgent that they have to be processed over the next 8 weeks.

Mr Lyons: I am happy to take up the offer of an intervention. The Member has not addressed my other two points yet; I hope that he will. Surely, the Member believes that it is right that we have the proper processes in place and that we have the legal certainty that the decisions that we make are made in the right way?

Mr Wells: Yes, if that is what he is doing, but he has not convinced me that he is. I gave him the opportunity to say that application A and application B will have to be processed between now and the first week of October. If he is saying that there is no prospect of that happening, what would be wrong — he has not answered this point — in allowing the Assembly, the community groups that have been caught unaware, the general public and the legal profession an opportunity to have a few weeks — I mean “a few weeks” — to sit down and to consider the Bill more carefully? Nothing could be lost. However, what if he is wrong and Mr Stalford is wrong? The implications for the governance of Northern Ireland are immense, because it could lead to judicial review and a legal situation where Ministers can prove that, under the legislation, they have a right to proceed in whatever way they jolly well like. When things are being done and Ministers are out of control, it will be difficult for them to meet members of our community and say that they sat in the Chamber and allowed themselves to be whipped to vote for something that they did not approve of.

Having been a member of the DUP for 46 years, I am aware of the internal workings of the party. I know that there was no consultation on the Bill in the largest political party in the Chamber until yesterday morning. There was no discussion on it until one prominent member of the party pleaded with the Chief Whip to have a meeting. That was denied. It was only when several members of the party pleaded for a meeting that a meeting was held yesterday morning at 10.30. Please feel free to contradict me, if that is not true. At that meeting, a lot of concern was expressed, as a lot of concern has been expressed to me by Members from across the board. In the absence of someone much more capable, in the form of Mr Allister, unfortunately, they have had to turn to an obscure Back-Bencher. “Obscure Back-Bencher”: is that unparliamentary, Mr Deputy Speaker?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I want to draw the Member back to the Bill rather than the internal workings of a political party.

Mr Wells: Mr Deputy Speaker, I think that most Members are fascinated to hear about the internal affairs of the DUP, but they have turned, I am afraid, to an obscure Back-Bencher marooned in the desert, who, unfortunately, is today ensuring that he will remain in that desert for a long time.

There was an intense discussion. Assurances were given by those involved that, legally, the Bill was an enhancement rather than a weakening of the St Andrews Agreement. On the basis of that verbal assurance, people have allowed themselves to be whipped to go into the Lobby to vote for something with which they are extremely unhappy but are scared to say so, apart from saying it to me. There are many people out there this afternoon whose names are on a piece of paper held by the Chief Whip, who will stand in that Lobby and shout out those names, when many of those people are very unhappy with being asked to vote for the Bill.

Mr Deputy Speaker, may I suggest that I have unlimited time because this is legislation?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member is right: there are no time limits. However, I gave the Member some direction to move on from the internal workings of a political party and to refer to the Bill.

Mr Wells: Mr Deputy Speaker, Members are still assuring me that they are hanging on my every word, so it cannot be that boring. However, I will not wander any further into the internal machinations of any political party in the Chamber, but I note that none of the Members to my left has stood up to contradict anything that I have said.

Following yesterday's debate, there has been a huge adverse reaction from the community on what happened. Many people have put pen to paper, either on social media or in newspapers, to indicate that they are deeply concerned. Most significantly, one of those is Mr Richard Bullick. There was concern yesterday that we quoted Mr Bullick so often. Frankly, I have enormous respect for the judgement of Mr Richard Bullick. The fact that he has now gone public on three occasions to express his concerns about what we are doing holds a lot of water as far as I am concerned. No one in the Chamber has really answered his concerns. Many of the younger Members — there are people who were not born when I first sat in the Chamber; not you, Mr Deputy Speaker, I assure you — will not be aware of the significance of Mr Bullick; in fact, people have asked me, "Who is Mr Bullick?". I can assure you, from my experience of St Andrews, even though I was not there, that Mr Bullick played an absolutely crucial role in the negotiations at St Andrews to establish the protections that have served the Assembly so well; indeed, it is noticeable that what was agreed at St Andrews has saved our community from some really strange proposals, many of which still sit in a store in the Executive Office. We know that, under the St Andrews Agreement, they have absolutely no prospect of seeing the light of day. That has given us protection for 13 or 14 years. When the author — the person who was so instrumental in the drafting of that document — says that he is still extremely concerned, despite the eloquent defence by Mr Lyons yesterday at the end of the debate. Mr Kearney was remarkably quiet, but Mr Lyons has been given the job of defending this document. Having listened carefully, as many did, to Mr Lyons, I feel that there is still an element of concern. The issue is so important to me and the people of Northern Ireland, that, even if I harbour a 10% doubt as to the effectiveness of the legislation, I think that we need to have another look at it.

2.30 pm

I plead with Mr Lyons, who exercises a powerful position in the Executive Office, not to go over the cliff this afternoon or to go beyond the point of no return but to accept, as Mr Stalford said yesterday, that there is conflicting legal advice. That is the only thing that we agreed on yesterday; there is that conflicting advice. If there is that element of doubt that all the MLAs I have spoken to have, what would be wrong in allowing this item to be rolled over to the first sitting day of the new session?

I will gladly give way to Mr Lyons, Mr Stalford, Mr Dunne or Mr Harvey to tell me what could go wrong by doing that to allow us to forensically examine the comments of those opposed to the Bill, to see if they hold water. I believe they do, but maybe they do not. Would there be massive planning applications that have to go through by the first week of October?

I am waiting, Mr Stalford or Mr Lyons.

Mr Lyons: I appreciate the Member giving way. Perhaps I can issue a challenge to him to set out why he believes that what we have in front of us is in any way a move away from the St Andrews Agreement. We have talked about three main issues. The first is that an issue might be controversial, and that remains. Something might be significant, and that remains. In fact, those two are enhanced, because, after the Bill is passed, not only will they apply when a Programme for Government is in place, they will apply when one is not in place. That is important. In terms of the cross-cutting issue, we have moved to what was clearly the position back at St Andrews. It is not whether we cut across the interests of other Ministers — I do not know, by the way, how you measure that — but their responsibilities. That is important because "responsibilities" is the key word. It is found not only in the St Andrews Agreement and the ministerial code but in the words of the then Member for East Belfast, Mr Peter Robinson, when, during a debate in the House of Commons, he talked about issues "beyond a de minimis level" — more than incidental — that are:

"regarded as cutting across the responsibilities of two or more Ministers."

Can the Member explain how the Bill is a move away from St Andrews?

Mr Wells: The honourable Member for South Down, who probably just about has CSE woodwork, is not the person to comment on that. The point is that, when Mrs O'Loan from Tughans, Mr Jim Allister QC and Mr Richard Bullick, who is the author of the protections that we are debating, have considered all he said yesterday and all the comments from other Members and are still alarmed, that doubt comes into my brain.

If this was the District Council Dog Fouling Bill or the Litter Picking Bill and we got it wrong, it would not be the end of the Earth. However, this is so fundamental to how we govern Northern Ireland that, if we allow it to go through, when many of us still have doubts, and it all unravels, we will never retrieve the situation. One thing is certain: the Members to my right will never agree to an amendment. It is like the definition of victims. We can never amend that definition. We are stuck with it, and it requires cross-community support to bring it back to something that people are comfortable with.

In a few minutes' time, if the honourable Member for East Antrim, the junior Minister, moves the Bill to a vote that, of course, he will win because of the Whip system — there are scars on the backs of all the Back-Benchers who have dared to oppose it — he will have a list of, I assume, 26 names that will be called out, and people will be dutifully registered as voting for something with which many of them feel uncomfortable. If he goes over that cliff and I am right and he is wrong, there will be a terrible consequence of what is about to happen.

Mr Lyons: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Yes, certainly.

Mr Lyons: I appreciate the Member giving way again. Is the Member saying that, right now, he is comfortable being in a position where there is no Programme for Government and Ministers are free, until the Bill passes, not to have to bring controversial or significant issues to the Executive?

Mr Wells: I am suggesting that the present legislation has served the Assembly and the community well. He has not answered the question: will anything drastic happen between now and the first sitting of the Assembly in October? He has power to delay the Final Stage of the Bill for a very short period to enable Members to have a good, long, hard look at it. He has it within his power to do that today. I am pleading with him not because I am a dissident DUP Back-Bencher or because I have an axe to grind with the party or, indeed, any other party in the Chamber. I say, "Let us make certain that we have got this absolutely right before we go beyond the point of no return". I am not asking him to concede the merits of the Bill. I am not asking him to accept any amendment to the Bill. I just ask him whether, given the extraordinary way in which it has been handled, the total lack of scrutiny that it has enjoyed, the widespread community concern about it and the issues that have been raised long after the Bill was dealt with and published by the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, he will consider a short — I mean "very short" — delay to enable cool heads to sit down and get this absolutely right. Those are my comments: I hope that they have not been dull.

Miss Woods: Earlier, Mr Stalford kindly gave way to me, and I was able to mention not having had sight of the legal advice from the DSO and the Attorney General, like the majority of Members. It is difficult for my party colleague and me to see the merits of this accelerated legislation, so I will take some time, despite having spoken on the Bill and the amendments yesterday, because this, for us, is important legislation.

I, along with others, have asked why the Executive are intent on pushing the legislation through at this time and asked whether consideration has been given to what this means for the powers of the Executive. Certainly, there is still no clarification of the timing issues and no reason given why we must have the legislation for the summer. The issue has been continually raised, and I will continue to ask, like Mr Wells and Mr Beattie, "What is the rush?"

We are told that the Bill is necessary to clarify the circumstances in which a Minister is required to refer a matter to the Executive Committee where that matter may be cross-cutting, significant or controversial. We are also told that it is about planning. Now, we are also told that it is about getting clarity, of which I see none here. Who decides what is cross-cutting, significant or controversial? Will that be set and clarified? Is there an appeal mechanism? What, in this case, is "more than incidental"? What is an "interest"? How does this relate, for example, to climate commitments and our environment? Would an impact on climate and the environment be considered a cross-cutting matter requiring a decision to be taken by the Executive rather than one Minister? Planning decisions that have significant climate impact would naturally cut across many departmental interests and across their statutory duties, such as the Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs Committee and Minister, and the Economy, Finance, Infrastructure and Health Departments. One can make the argument that all planning decisions on our built environment can have climate impacts. Where does that lead to in the context of the Bill? What about the Aarhus convention?

On 6 July, we were told that a number of significant planning decisions are expected during the remainder of this year that could lead to significant investment and employment opportunities that are being deferred or lost because of the Bill not being enacted, but is there any information on what they are? Do they actually lead to employment opportunities, which is how this has been sold to us, and for whom? The Bill is being proposed as necessary to help government to function quicker and more efficiently. However, without an agreed Programme for Government, all potentially controversial decisions will still have to go to the Executive for approval. What if one of those controversial decisions is on a planning matter? Would it still be within the remit of the Minister for Infrastructure to take that decision on their own? That was famously and controversially invoked five years ago over the Belfast metropolitan area plan (BMAP), yet that planning policy is still waiting for Executive approval and is now out of date.

The process is here yet again. Accelerated passage has been sought for legislation that has had limited scrutiny and no consultation. That has been a recurring pattern over the past few months with regard to mostly coronavirus-related legislation. Now, we are told that, if it is not resolved quickly, that could have important consequences for the economy and, particularly, the pressing need to promote investment in our infrastructure. We are told that the Committee agreed the need for accelerated passage in part because of the current COVID-19 pandemic. If that is so and the Bill is that important for investment in our infrastructure, why was it not brought forward as soon as the Executive were reformed earlier this year? Why is it being brought forward now, during what is supposed to be recess, and we are here attempting to pass the Bill with no time for scrutiny?

On the surface, the Bill is about planning decisions. It has been stated that it stems from the Buick judgement on the incinerator. However, could the passage of the legislation open up unintended consequences? Has that been considered? As I said, when Mr Stalford was kind enough to give way to me, we have no information. I cannot make a judgement on that because I have not seen the legal advice.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Miss Woods: I will.

Mr Wells: As a former Minister, I accept what Mr Stalford has said: Ministers do not normally release the legal advice that they have been given. However, does the Member accept that not only have we not been given the legal advice but we have not seen the wording of the ministerial code or many of the definitions that are crucial to the Bill's implementation? We are being asked to vote for the Bill blind, and the important bits will come along afterwards. That could create chaos. Again, surely, that is an argument for a slight delay.

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for his intervention. I accept that we do not have the legal advice, as he already knows, and that the code is crucial. It seems to be a case of putting the cart before the horse. I am sure that the Member would agree.

Does it deepen the silo mentality and silo decision-making by Ministers and their Departments? Many Members commented at Second Stage on the need for quick decisions to be made on planning applications that are in the system and those currently on the Minister's desk. However, are quick decisions the best decisions, especially when it comes to the planning system and developments of the scale, size and impact that we are discussing?

Mr Carroll: Will the Member give way?

Miss Woods: I will.

Mr Carroll: I am sure that the Member shares the concerns that I and others have that the planning process often excludes people and ignores their voices.

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for his intervention. I absolutely share those concerns about the planning process. There are too many barriers for people, not enough consultation and not the right sort of consultation. Certainly, my party would push for equal rights of appeal in the planning process.

I will continue. The Bill is not actually about the planning process. We have a lot to do on that. Yes, we have experienced long waits for planning applications through the system. Mr Muir has outlined some specifics that are currently with the Minister for Infrastructure. Most Members will have experience of other issues with the Planning Service, of which there are many. However, the Bill will not change that. Mr Wells is correct. It is probably the first time that I have agreed with him in the Chamber. What major planning applications will be made in the next few weeks that could not wait until after the summer recess? Are the Executive telling us that hugely important planning applications are waiting to be signed off by the current Minister for Infrastructure that cannot be done without the legislation?

Mr Stalford: I appreciate the Member's giving way. In yesterday's debate, Mr Wells referenced the Casement Park development. I am sure that the Member would agree that what happened in that case was not that a ministerial decision was made but that local residents, in conjunction with their Assembly Member, campaigned and used the planning system to prevent a bad application going ahead? Therefore, the suggestion that a Minister could simply impose such a decision is not valid.

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for his intervention. Mr Wells can reference whatever he wants, as we know, and has already done so. I do not have the specifics on Casement Park, even if it is part of the elusive list that is on the Minister's desk.

2.45 pm

Just to reiterate, if it was so important for all these long-standing applications to be progressed and for the legislation to be passed, why was it not one of the first pieces of legislation brought by the Executive in February? Why was it not in New Decade, New Approach? I see no reference to it there.

The role of the House is to scrutinise legislation and take decisions that need to be taken throughout these so-called unprecedented times. We have been denied our full scrutiny role through the use of accelerated passage. Now, some legislation needed to be enacted quickly over the past few months. However, I do not see the urgency of this Bill being needed in the same way as the Private Tenancies (Coronavirus Modifications) Act was needed to ensure that people were not evicted during the COVID-19 pandemic and lockdown. That was an immediate and very real threat faced by many people here as we implemented the health protection regulations. This has, again, been presented as a technical Bill that is only about planning issues, but —.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Member for giving way. As the debate has gone on, one of the key things that we have seen is that it is about the planning process. The planning process needs to be —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask the Member to address the Chair.

Dr Aiken: Sorry. My apologies. The planning process is the problem. It is not about giving ministerial authority for it; it is about the planning process. Why are we introducing bad legislation that will not even deal with the problem?

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for his intervention, and I agree that the planning process does need to be completely reformed. I look forward to any engagement on that and any input that I can make to that.

Again, the legislation has been posed as being about planning issues, but, in my opinion, it opens up a very big can of worms down the line that we might not be seeing now.

The Bill will change the Northern Ireland Act, yet we have little detail on what the consequences of it might be, apart from it being painted as a great opportunity for future employment, which is highly questionable and raises more than a red flag. Is that it? What else does it do? Through the Bill, if the Executive have reduced cross-cutting to mean only when there is a significant impact on another Department's statutory responsibility, what does that mean for previous legal obligations to work together, such as on the Children's Services Co-operation Act? What impact at all, outside planning, has been looked at and adequately tested legally? Have unforeseen circumstances been correctly thought out?

As I stated yesterday when speaking on the amendments, we should be encouraging better collective and collaborative working, not giving Departments cover to plough ahead with working in silos. 'New Decade, New Approach' stated:

"parties are committed to working together ... This will reflect new ways of working that ensure the Executive is transparently and collectively accountable to the Assembly and to citizens."

However, for me, that is not what this legislation is an example of. This is bad government, and bad policy will flow from it. We have had no time to consider the full implications that this might have. It is supposedly to prevent the Executive from becoming de facto a decision-making body for planning applications, so why was the entire Bill not limited to planning. This is bigger than it has been made out to be, and we need time to properly consider it. There is still no justification for accelerated passage.

The Green Party does not support the Bill. There are too many questions and far too few answers.

Mr Carroll: I am not going to repeat the many concerns that I have raised repeatedly about the Bill. However, at Final Stage, it has to be stated that it is very concerning that not only is the Bill being proposed but it was debated at breakneck speed and is likely to be passed. The junior Minister stated, or certainly indicated, that controversial planning decisions will still be heard at the Executive Committee, and, much like my colleague Miss Rachel Woods, I do not believe that this question has been answered: who determines what is controversial and therefore properly discussed by the Executive?

Since yesterday, I and many other Members, I assume, received a lot of emails from groups and individuals — some have been referred to already — who have concerns about this Bill. It is notable for two reasons. First, so many people are raising serious concerns with their MLAs about the environment, and the skipping over of an element of the scrutiny process has also raised concerns about the Bill. Secondly, that so many people have contacted me before the Final Stage of a Bill is no accident. To me, that indicates that the public —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Carroll: I will.

Mr Wells: Does the Member accept that, in many of those emails, the Aarhus convention was cited, and yet, in none of their contributions has Mr Lyons or Mr Stalford actually sought to deal with that issue? Are we in contravention of the Aarhus convention by doing what we are about to do? I would be very interested to hear whether Mr Kearney or Mr Lyons will answer that fundamental point at the end of this debate.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Member for his intervention. They did. I do not claim to be an expert on the convention, to be frank, but it was raised with me, and the question needs to be asked: are we in breach of that convention if we pass the Bill? Many people raised that concern, and it needs to be directly answered by the junior Minister.

I refer back to my point before the intervention. The fact that so many people contacted MLAs the day before the Final Stage of the Bill, indicates to me that most of the public did not understand the content or the ramifications of the Bill. Even some MLAs have stated honestly that they did not understand the full ramifications of the Bill, and fair play to them for being honest. There are serious concerns, and the fact that people are raising so many the day before Final Stage should be a warning sign to MLAs.

We heard from Pat Sheehan about the economy needing to get going. In abstract, that sounds correct, and, in abstract, there is no problem with it, but you cannot rip out an important aspect of accountability when decisions are made by Ministers. We have to emphasise the fact that there are fundamental problems with planning, and some have been referred to already.

The main problem with planning is that people are excluded from the process time and time again. Objections are often ignored or not addressed properly, and the Bill does nothing to deal with those issues. Residents are often ignored. Casement Park residents for one. Environmental campaigners are often ignored and dismissed as well, and the Bill compounds that problem and does nothing to address it.

What I am hearing from some in this debate is make building decisions, build things, and if there are concerns, so be it, or, best case scenario, we will deal with them after. That is not good enough for making decisions around planning or anything else. Somebody once said, "Never waste a good crisis". It seems that Stormont has not wasted the opportunity to use a health pandemic to remove an important aspect of scrutiny when it comes to big decisions. For those reasons, I oppose the Bill.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call on the junior Minister, Declan Kearney, to conclude the Final Stage of the Bill.

Mr Kearney (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): I acknowledge and thank the Assembly for its willingness to consider the Bill by accelerated passage. It is certainly not the preference of the joint heads of government to progress legislation in this way. However, due to the urgency of the need for decisions on planning applications in particular, it has been necessary to bring the Bill forward in a much faster time than would be ideal or desirable. Even in that short timescale, a number of important issues have been debated, and Members have been given the opportunity to voice both concern and support.

This final debate will bring to a close the Assembly's consideration of the Bill, which remains unamended following yesterday's proceedings. In so doing, it will help to enable the appropriate decision-making by the Minister for Infrastructure on planning applications that, as others have pointed out, will aid our economic recovery from the midst of the health emergency caused by —

Dr Aiken: Will the junior Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: If you just let me finish my sentence. It will aid our economic recovery from the midst of the health emergency caused by COVID-19.

Dr Aiken: I thank the junior Minister for giving way. He has alluded to planning decisions that are in the process of coming through. Many Members have asked for guidance from either him or the other junior Minister on what some of those planning decisions may be. Will he give us some information on that, which may help us to make up our minds around the debate?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for that intervention. I will take it at face value that it was a genuine question, and I was intending to revisit those issues as I respond to his intervention and those of other Members who have spoken during the debate.

I thank all Members who have taken the opportunity to speak. Gabhaim buíochas leis na Comhaltaí ar fad a ghlac páirt sa díospóireacht seo. I am grateful to you all, regardless of what position you took in relation to the issue, for your contribution. A Leas-Cheann Comhairle, déanfadh mé léargas ar an méid a dúirt Comhaltaí. I will take this opportunity to briefly address a number of comments that were made by Members during the debate.

Christopher Stalford commenced the debate and stated that the legislation that has been brought before the House is consistent with the St Andrews Agreement. He affirmed the legal opinion that has been received. I agree with you that Members are entitled to challenge and critique; that is the challenge function of the Assembly. I also agree that the legislation provides clarity and has the potential — I believe that it will be seized as potential — to increase collaboration in our five-party, power-sharing Executive. I would go further. The legislation will be enabling in that respect, and if all five parties who have seats at the Executive table — most of them are represented in the Chamber today — take that opportunity in a positive, constructive way, the legislation can assist in that process. Mr Stalford also observed that all the relevant arguments have been made and that, in his view, scrutiny has been achieved.

Pat Sheehan spoke next. He began by highlighting the consequential legal hazards that were created as a result of the Buick ruling. In his view, the Bill recalibrates the legislation, and I agree with him in that respect. However, as many other Members on both sides of the debate said today, particularly Mr Beattie, there are limitations to accelerated passage. He noted the limitations of that. In the circumstances that we face, it is a necessary position to adopt.

Mr Wells: Will the honourable Member give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes. Go ahead.

Mr Wells: Does the honourable Member accept the points made by Mr Carroll that, for hundreds of community groups —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, I ask the Member again to ensure that he stands beside a microphone.

Mr Wells: Sorry, Mr Deputy Speaker. I keep making the same fundamental error. Does the honourable Member accept the information given by Mr Carroll that, for hundreds of community groups throughout Northern Ireland, the first that they were aware of the legislation was when they turned on their TVs yesterday and heard the debate on it? They have been caught totally unawares and have had no opportunity whatsoever to have an input into this vital piece of legislation. How can he defend his premise that there has been adequate consultation?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention. The point that I made was that Mr Stalford had opined that we had subjected the legislation to substantive scrutiny, notwithstanding the fact that we are operating with a system of accelerated passage. I remind the Member that we are all representatives. We are all constituency MLAs and all have a duty, not only to be accountable to our constituents but to inform them. Given the fact that the legislation has been in the making for weeks, we have all, individually, collectively and as parties, had ample opportunity to apprise our constituents of the pending legislation.

Colin McGrath spoke next. He began by reminding us of the multifaceted nature of the emergency and the need for us to reboot our economy by finding stimulus measures, particularly large-scale capital infrastructure projects, which we hope will have the desired effect of creating much-needed and new employment as we move through the torrid times that we have been living through. He believes, as I indicated earlier, that the legislation will help the Executive to work better, but he emphasised the importance of action and of the Executive being seen to deliver for the benefit of wider society. On that basis, he indicated his willingness to support the Bill.

Doug Beattie spoke next. I want to affirm his opening remarks. He noted the quality of yesterday's debate, to which he made a very substantial contribution. He expressed offence at some of the comments that were made yesterday, which he felt were personalised. He suggested that the Bill was a carve-up between the two largest parties in our Assembly.

I know that Mr Beattie will accept my response in the fraternal matter in which it is intended, but I remind him that our power-sharing Executive and Government are made up of five parties of which his party is one. All Ministers supported the Bill as it proceeded through the Executive and all Ministers had sight of the advice that was provided to the Executive on how to deal with the issues that are required to be remedied.

3.00 pm

He did however say that —

Mr Stalford: I appreciate the junior Minister giving way. Will he return to the comments that he has just made? In the debate yesterday, it was implied, if not stated directly, that one Minister in the Executive was not in agreement with the Bill. Is the junior Minister stating now that there was unanimity in the Executive about the Bill coming before the House?

Mr Kearney: Certainly, I can. With respect to the confidentiality of Executive business — I would not betray any such confidences — I have no record of any discord or rancour within the Executive relating to discussions on these matters.

Dr Aiken: Will the junior Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Dr Aiken: This is important. We have already had discussions about the internal workings of the Northern Ireland Executive. We have already had discussions about privileged Executive information — legal information — that we do not have sight of. Are we in a situation whereby two parties are trying to use the situation to demonstrate that they will use the internal information of the Executive, which is supposed to be confidential, for this debate, when the conventions are that they must not do that? For clarity and the record: it is a mandatory coalition. It is not a normal democratic situation. The Ulster Unionist Party has a seat in the Northern Ireland Executive because of the Belfast Agreement. That is why we are there. That is why.

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention, and, on that point, we will depart. I am pleased to be a member of our power-sharing Government. My party is pleased to be sharing power with other parties. Clearly, the leader of the Ulster Unionist Party has some qualification, reservation or doubt about the issue of power-sharing and the logic for our having power-sharing and doing politics on a consociational basis. I hope that it does not telegraph an intention on behalf of his party in maintaining the collegiality of our power-sharing Government.

To return to Mr Beattie's comments, he said that, in his view, it is bad legislation. He expressed a concern that, if the Bill is passed, it will create a situation where the Executive and their business may become more combative. On that point, I seek to reassure him that with the commitment of all the Ministers and all five parties with seats at the Executive table, I believe that power-sharing works.

Making our power-sharing Government work is not so much about whether we pass the legislation or not — although I believe that it will have an enabling function — but about the will and the spirit that Executive members bring to the Executive table to try to map out a better future for our society. It is on that basis, on many occasions over recent months, that the Minister from the Ulster Unionist Party has stated that he appreciates the level of collegiality, support and assistance — from all other Executive Ministers, within and outside Executive meetings — that has been provided to him in his important work in leading the fightback against COVID-19.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Member for giving way, especially because he has given way quite a few times already.

I take at face value his belief that the legislation will keep that collegiate Executive, and I accept that in good faith. Our Executive have been doing a good job, but they have been underpinned by a ministerial code that is quite expansive. The cross-cutting issue is quite expansive in there. The junior Minister must agree that, when the Bill is passed, paragraph 2.4 will have to be changed to be less expansive, and its being less expansive, may lead to more conflict in the Executive. That is the point that I was trying to make.

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention and I thank him for taking what I have said at face value. I can reassure him and his party that it is my resolve and intent, and that of my party, to seek to continue to work in a collegiate way with other members of the Executive, including his party colleague, the Minister of Health.

I intended to address the ministerial code later in my remarks. Yes, there are matters pertaining to the ministerial code and, yes, the ministerial code will be required to be amended. The ministerial code cannot be amended until the legislation completes its passage. An example of how we will address the ministerial code and the required amendment, consequential to the passage of the legislation, relates, for example, to functions. We will need to amend the functions in the Executive to ensure that that is reflected in the statutory functions.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kearney: Just let me finish, please.

It is, in the context of this discussion and with regard to a Minister's adherence to the ministerial code, for Ministers to make their assessment of what is deemed controversial and significant. The First Minister and deputy First Minister will determine whether an issue is significant and they will retain, in the context of the legislation, the capacity and the prerogative to call matters in.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes, briefly, please.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member for South Antrim, the junior Minister, should not be concerned about there being numerous interventions because this is such a crucial issue.

He made a couple of points. First, he said that the First Minister and deputy First Minister could make the decision but, of course, they would have to agree jointly to make the decision to call a matter in. They could not disagree on the issue. So, in other words, if one party decides that it is not appropriate to bring it in, it will not happen.

Secondly, he made a point that I found somewhat surprising. He said that it is essential that the legislation is passed — I presume that he means today — in order for there to be discussion on the ministerial code. What would be wrong in delaying the final implementation of this legislation to allow the revised ministerial code to be published, and also for the definitions, which are so important to this legislation, to be out for public consultation? Neither he nor Mr Lyons has answered that fact, and nobody has produced the mythical planning applications that have to be dealt with between now and October. Will he answer why it is inappropriate to have a short delay to allow more scrutiny of the legislation?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for that intervention. At no stage did I imply that I was concerned or frustrated about the number of interventions at all, I simply suggested that it might be helpful to be brief in order that I could finish making my remarks in response to Mr Beattie. However, he is absolutely right: there is a requirement for us to use every opportunity in the process of the legislation's passage to subject issues to the appropriate scrutiny and debate. This is an opportunity for additional scrutiny, and I absolutely agree with him on that point.

Returning to Doug Beattie, he and Steve Aiken raised the issue of timing and the fact that we are using accelerated passage, and, to that extent, this point refers back to one of the elements of the last intervention. I think that we have to set all of this into the context of the last period of months. Our power-sharing Executive was re-established in the second week of January, and we are now at the end of July. Within a matter of weeks, the new Executive, the new power-sharing Government, were engulfed with the scale of managing COVID-19. The consequence of that was that 'New Decade, New Approach' and all the provisions in that document, to which every party in the Chamber made a contribution, has effectively been placed on ice. We have not yet had the space to design a Programme for Government. That also has been effectively placed on ice. The existential catastrophe of COVID-19 has effectively absorbed the focus and the attention on a whole-of-government basis. I say that with respect to the fact that every Member elected to the Assembly, on the basis that they are constituency representatives, has also been absorbed with the scale of demand arising from COVID-19.

It has only been in recent weeks that, with the imminence of the transition period for Brexit coming to a conclusion — I refer back to a point made by Mr O'Toole — the Executive have managed to start to address the scale and complexity of issues relating to withdrawal from Europe; five months before the transition period concludes.

The Minister for Infrastructure brought this matter to the Executive a couple of months ago as an issue that she believed required attention for remedy. She made the point that it was essential that legal clarity was obtained and the Executive discussed that matter, and, in turn, the Executive commissioned the legal opinion that was required in order to try to position ourselves to have the clarity and the ability to address planning issues with the Minister for Infrastructure. As Mr Muir pointed out, there were 38 applications in her in tray, some of them obviously being of greater imminence and significance.

As I have said already and said previously, using accelerated passage is not the ideal way of doing government, but it is the mechanism that exists to assist government in trying to navigate and manoeuvre circumstances created as a result of unintended consequences, and, for that reason, accelerated passage was commended, with a view to ensuring that the legislative basis existed, and specifically to avoid a situation where planning issues would drift into next year.

That takes me to Mr Muir's contribution, during which he pointed out that almost 40 applications are sitting parked with the Department for Infrastructure at this point, along with so many other elements of government that we have not had the capacity or the ability to address as a result of everything that has impacted us over the last four to five months. Mr Muir pointed out that we cannot afford to wait any longer on this matter. He made the point, echoing what was said by earlier contributors, that this legislation goes back to pre-Buick and post-St Andrews Agreement. I agree with him that it strikes the correct balance between the role of Ministers and the collective and collegiate basis of how the Executive should do their business. I have already touched on this matter, but he raised the issue of the ministerial code, and I can assure him that, yes, it will be updated. However, on his question as to whether planning issues can proceed prior to the amendment of the ministerial code, the answer to that is no. The ministerial code must be adjusted in order for the planning issues to proceed.

When we factor in time frames and timescales to how we are trying to do our business here, there is a process that we are following [Interruption.] There is a process that we are following, which is an attempt to try to get things expedited but mindful of the point that there are a number of steps that need to be taken. The danger in not proceeding with accelerated passage is that the can is kicked up the road until later in the year and we are left with the prospect, in 2021, of only then having the ability to deal —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kearney: When I have finished my sentence, Mr Wells, if you do not mind.

Mr Wells: It is a very long sentence.

Mr Kearney: I am sorry?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr Kearney: If you keep interrupting me, Mr Wells, I will forget what sentence I am trying to articulate. Please.

We will end up with a situation, in 2021, where we have not advanced any of the planning issues that we hope to address.

3.15 pm

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member has let the cat out of the bag. The Member has said that planning applications cannot be considered until the new ministerial code has been adopted. Therefore, there is no rush. Obviously, it will take significant time to devise, publish and consult on that, so there is no reason why we cannot have a delay in the passage of the Bill to enable adequate consultation and public debate on it and analysis of the various legal opinions. At the end of the day, pushing it through today will not facilitate any planning application because it has to run in tandem with the new ministerial code. Why can he not allow the issue to be discussed again in the first week of October?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member, once again, for his intervention, but he misses the point. The legislation must be passed and adopted in order for us then to make the necessary adjustments to the ministerial code. On the basis of making the adjustments to the ministerial code, when we have concluded that process, we are in a position to start to address a number of the planning issues coming through from the Department for Infrastructure.

Mr Muir: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Mr Muir: This place came back at the beginning of January this year. If the Bill is passed, the ministerial code will have to be updated, and that will then have to be passed. Some Members talk about delaying things and the passage of the legislation until October. Does the Minister agree that it would be a damning indictment of this place if, for the whole year of 2020, the likelihood was that not one regionally significant planning application would be passed?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention. He makes an entirely valid point, which is the point that I have been trying to make. I have attempted to respect the issues raised by Members in relation to timing and accelerated passage. Some have asked, "Why the rush?". The Member makes the point that, when the amendments are made to the ministerial code, they will be put to the Assembly for scrutiny and potential amendment, which further adds to the process that we are involved in to get us to the stage at which we are, in fact, on a fit-for-purpose basis, in a position to deal with a number of the planning issues that remain extant.

Matthew O'Toole expressed caveats about accelerated passage. I have already indicated that I agree that it is not the best and ideal way of doing business. He also raised a question about the Irish protocol and whether it, in turn, also carried cross-cutting implications. He asked whether the legislation would impinge on the collective decision-making process relative to the Irish protocol. I think that the Member has raised that point before and perhaps he has received a response to it. The Executive deal with Brexit in a collective format. All the issues relating to withdrawal are brought to the attention of all Ministers in the Executive. We deal with them on the basis that it is an issue that requires the collective focus of all Ministers. Notwithstanding differences in the Executive in relation to withdrawal or otherwise, Brexit or otherwise, the reality is that we are where we are. We have the Irish protocol that needs to be implemented. It has cross-cutting ramifications, and the Executive are focused on dealing with those discussions collectively.

Steve Aiken began by expressing his concern that the legislation is bad and has long-term consequences, in his view, on the basis that, if bad legislation is passed, there can be unforeseen circumstances with negative results. He expressed doubts about what changes to the ministerial code would entail. I have attempted to address that issue with regard to remarks made by other Members. I make the point again: we are not in a position to amend the ministerial code, which will require amendment, until we have changed the law. As I said a short while ago, however, our Assembly will have the ability to approve the amendments.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Minister for giving way. I guess that the ministerial code is becoming quite an important part of this. If you look at section 28A(3) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, you will see that there is nothing in there that states that you have to wait for legislative change before you can amend the ministerial code. You can change the ministerial code now. You can put a draft before the Assembly to allow Members to see what it will look like. Doing that would add to the Bill. Can you see the concerns? The more we dig into this, the more that it smacks of there being more scrutiny required, if we are pulling out things like that.

Mr Kearney: Yes, I accept that the Member has his own specific concerns about the legislation. He has made that clear. You made fulsome contributions yesterday. You tabled your amendments. Regrettably, from your point of view, those amendments were not agreed, because they did not secure the majority required. You did not persuade Members that the amendments would be of benefit to the quality or the substance of the Bill.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes, Mr Wells.

Mr Wells: I am sorry to be awkward, junior Minister, but we have homed in on an absolutely vital issue here. You have said and Mr Lyons has said that you cannot amend the ministerial code without passing the Bill. There is no legal advice and no law that says that you cannot amend the ministerial code, regardless of what you do with the Bill. What is also important to note, however, is that, if you amend the ministerial code, that has to be approved by the House. That will, obviously, not be done until the autumn. There may well be amendments. There will be several stages to that. The main rationale therefore for you rushing the Bill through now, which is to get planning applications, falls in its place, because you cannot do so without an amended ministerial code. That cannot be done until the autumn, so why can you not allow the Bill to be scrutinised further and bring it back at the stage that you are dealing with the ministerial code?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention. Again, he misses my point. We are attempting to create a situation in which we are in a position come the autumn and early winter to address the extant planning issues that have been congesting the Department for Infrastructure. Amendments to the ministerial code need to be brought to the Assembly for agreement. They must reflect the law, Mr Wells; otherwise, they will have no standing. You, in fact, are attempting to take the cart and put it before the horse.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: No, Mr Wells. I want to continue with my response to Mr Aiken.

Mr Wells's intervention was on the very point on which I left off. The examples that will require to be addressed in the context of changes to the ministerial code relate, for example, to those statutory functions and specifically to the provision of the exemption of certain planning decisions from the cross-cutting issues affecting the Executive. Mr Aiken, echoing what Doug Beattie said, was emphatic about seeking further delay to the legislation. Like Mr Wells, he suggested that there was no valid basis for not allowing further delay.

Dr Aiken: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Dr Aiken: The crux of the discussion so far has been about the ministerial code. If you have gone to the bother of rushing through this Bill via accelerated passage, there must be a draft ministerial code out there that you are expecting to come through. Can the Minister therefore publish that draft ministerial code so that all MLAs can have a look at it and decide where this needs to go? From what we have heard today, that is something that we at least need to see from the Executive.

Mr Kearney: I thank Mr Aiken for his intervention. I have instanced two of the examples that will require amendment and will be subject to discussion and will need to be brought to the Assembly for its assent. In the event that Members feel that there is a requirement for a more expansive amendment to the ministerial code, the opportunity will exist through scrutiny and debate in the Chamber for that to be done.

Jim Wells then spoke and conflated his concerns about the legislation with the potential for a Sinn Féin, SDLP or Alliance Minister to erect Irish-language signage without community support. Once again, he raised the haste of the Bill's passage. I absolutely respect his democratic right to do so.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Excuse me, Mr Wells. You have an awful habit of trying to make an intervention when I am halfway through a sentence.

I was trying to say that he once more raised his concern, as he has done throughout this debate and as he did yesterday, about the haste of the Bill's passage and expressed misgivings about the manner in which that is happening.

Mr Wells: The Minister is articulate, but he uses long sentences, so it can be difficult at times to ascertain when he is about to finish a sentence. It is not my intention to disrupt his flow of thought, as it were.

He raised the point that I alluded to about a Minister wanting to inflict Irish-language road signs on a community without its support. That has happened already in South Down with the district council. Mr Stalford said that a solo run could not be done on that because it was also an issue for the Department for Communities. He did not answer adequately how exactly that was significant to the Department for Communities or any other Department or how in court it would stand up as being significant and how we could stop a Minister doing that. The Minister now has a good opportunity to explain how my concerns and those of many unionists in South Down can be assuaged and why that could not happen because of this legislation. I just do not see it, and nor do many other legal experts.

Mr Stalford: Before the Minister resumes, may I respond?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Mr Stalford: The Member referred to road signs and then to the experience of his constituents. He knows that he is comparing apples with oranges. He is referring to the corporate marketing used by the council. That is a council decision. They are not the directional road signs. The sign that points people to Kilkeel is not in two languages. The Member knows that, and he is conflating one with the other.

Mr Wells: That does not answer my point.

Mr Stalford: It does.

Mr Kearney: I thank both Members for their interventions. Go díreach chun seo a rá mar Ghaeilgeoir agus mar Ghael leat, ionas go bhfullimid ar an aon leathanach amháin. Ní ghlacaimse ar chor ar bith gur cheart go gcuirfí suas comharthaí sráide ná comharthaí bóithre in áit ar bith nuair nach bhfuil an pobail áitiúil toilteanach glacadh leis na comharthaí sin. Go díreach chun sin a rá leat. I will briefly translate: as a Gaeilgeoir, for not one moment would I countenance the notion of erecting Irish-language signs or bilingual signage in locations where they would be against the will of the local community, so it is entirely fallacious for you to conflate your concerns about the Bill with the issue of Irish-language signage. It betrays more about the approach that you have brought to the debate than about any serious thought or consideration to ensuring that we have good legislation. In fact, you are not too bad yourself, Mr Wells, at making long-winded statements and filibustering. You made a fair good fist of filibustering your way through yesterday and, by the appearance of things, today.

The context of the legislation has been set out. You will also know, due to your concerns and criticisms about the use of accelerate passage, that the scheduling of the Bill is a function of the Assembly of which you are a Member. Characteristic of your approach to the debate was your suggestion that some members of the DUP preferred to speak to you instead of their party officers. People will make of that statement what they will, but it is absolutely immaterial to this discussion. You repeated the view that the Bill should be parked because you are persuaded by the legal opinion of some. Of some.

Of course, as has been said throughout today, yesterday and previously, everyone is entitled to their opinion, including lawyers. You have posed many questions, but, notably, you have not answered the question relating to the logic of the legislation in the absence of a Programme for Government, which, I explained earlier, was part of the context that led us to the invidious situation where we were absent the legislation that was required to ensure that we could, in fact, proceed with the planning issues that remain extant.

Rachel Woods spoke and, as she has done before, reiterated her concerns about accelerated passage; she did so in a very succinct and clear way. I agree that climate issues are, and can be, of a cross-cutting nature. The sentiment of that is reflected in New Decade, New Approach. For the first time, we are seeing a whole-of-government focus on the climate crisis that affects our society and our global village. She asked “why now?” for this legislation and not at an earlier stage. With the indulgence of Rachel Woods, I hope that she accepts that I have tried to address that. She raised the issue of the ministerial codes and amending it subsequent to the legislation being passed. As I explained for a number of Members, it is not possible to make amendments to the ministerial code unless and until the amendments are consistent with the nature of the law that they are designed to reflect.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for giving way. The junior Minister stated earlier that all parties in the Chamber had input to the ‘New Decade, New Approach’ document, which is incorrect. Not all parties were part of that.

To get back to the matter at hand and the comments made by Mr Beattie, Mr Wells and Mr Aiken, what is the basis or advice to the Executive stating that this legislation must be enacted before the ministerial code is amended? Given that no application can actually progress without this, what happens if the ministerial code is not changed in the way that is needed for further scrutiny of the House, given that a change in the code can be subject to amendment?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for the intervention and she is right, but, again, I made the point that the issue of amendment to the ministerial code will be required to be subject to scrutiny by the Assembly, and that provides Members with an opportunity to assess whether those amendments are, in fact, robust and effective or require further alteration.

Dr Aiken: Will the junior Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Dr Aiken: Can the two junior Ministers assure the Assembly that, when this revision of the ministerial code comes forward, there will not be any form of accelerated passage on the discussions?

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention. I am sure that his own Minister, in our power-sharing Government and under the advice of his party leader, will ensure that those remarks are passed on to the Executive to be heard collectively.

Rachel Woods suggested that the legislation is not about planning and she criticised the planning process. I agree with her. I am on record as saying, in the Chamber and outside, that every aspect of our governmental process, including planning, which is so essential, needs to be further democratised and subject to greater levels of transparency and scrutiny. The point is to overlook the fact that the scrutiny process to which the Minister for Infrastructure will be subject, on any issues that he or she brings forward at any time in the future, including addressing the extant issues in their inbox.

I point the Member again to the context of recent months; that is not camouflage, that is reality. Everybody here has lived it, and it has put a cart and horse through our normal approach to good government and how we make decisions.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: No, I will not, Mr Wells.

Miss Woods is right to emphasise the need for better and more collaborative working. Even though her party is not a member of the Executive, it has a challenge function to perform in these institutions to ensure that that better, collaborative working is continuously maximised and achieved, and, to that extent, I draw a correlation to Mr Beattie’s position, because, while we disagree, I absolutely affirm and agree with his right, whether as an individual MLA or on behalf of his party, to provide the challenge function in this debate. However, I agree —.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Kearney: No, Mr Wells, I will not give way. I am trying to bring the debate to a conclusion. You have had a fair crack of the whip several times.

I disagree with the Member that this is going to incentivise —.

Mr Wells: On a point of order.

Mr Kearney: That this is going to —.

Mr Wells: On a point of order.

Mr Kearney: That this is going to incentivise silo working in the Executive.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Point of order, Mr Wells.

Mr Wells: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Throughout the debate, the Minister has failed to produce the advice that he has received that states that this legislation must be passed before the ministerial code can be amended. Will he produce that advice? It is an absolutely crucial aspect of the debate.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member ought to know that that was not a point of order.

Mr Kearney: I understand the Member's concerns about silo working. That is something that the Executive, on a collaborative basis, need to ensure does not happen. I believe that the legislation, if it is embraced in the correct spirit, will go some way to ensuring that we do not revert to silo working.

Gerry Carroll was the last Member to speak in the debate. He pointed out multiple concerns that had been raised with him over the past 24 hours about the imminence of final decision-making in relation to the legislation. He said that he does not believe that the Bill remedies the lack of transparency in our planning process. I have already made the point that we always need to do better in respect of scrutiny and transparency in planning issues — and much more. He suggested that the pandemic was being used to camouflage some sort of sleight of hand. I disagree with the Member on that. I do not see where he is coming from. We will agree to disagree politically, but, on this particular point, I just do not understand his logic. However, he does raise —.

Mr Carroll: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kearney: Yes.

Mr Carroll: I appreciate that we disagree on that point, but I would like to ask the Minister whether he has any concerns that health decisions could be taken down the line that are not considered significant or controversial, but which could be, and that such decisions may not be discussed at the Executive Committee and that his party would not have the chance to disagree with those decisions, vote against them or challenge them. I am not privy to the inner workings of the Executive, but it is a concern that has been flagged with me.

Mr Kearney: I thank the Member for his intervention. I am content that the clarity that will be introduced on cross-cutting issues will provide the reassurance that I hope that the Member will be content with.

He also asked a question about the Aarhus convention, which requires consultation on a range of environmental matters. This Bill reaffirms the position of decision-making on planning pre-Buick.

I want to conclude by commending all Members for their contribution to the debate. I hope that my fellow Minister and I have done our best to allay concerns, provide additional information and persuade Members that this is the correct position to take. I appreciate the fraternal manner in which the debate has taken place. Mar gheall air sin, molaim-se an Bille don Tionól.

Mr Wells: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I believe that, unlike my last intervention, this actually is a point of order. Can you explain the ramifications of what is about to happen? Is it possible for the Bill to be put on hold and a final decision delayed until October? Are we putting ourselves on a trajectory that means that, if we go to a vote now, there is no way back and this Bill will become law? To put it another way, is it possible for the two junior Ministers to adopt a procedure that would enable us to come back to this in eight weeks' time?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member should be aware that, at the start of the debate, the motion was moved. Given that it was moved, we now face a decision, and Members have to take their decision accordingly. I am not aware of a procedure to stop a vote once a motion has been moved.

Question put.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Clear the Lobbies. The Question will be put again in three minutes. I remind Members that they should continue to uphold social-distancing measures and that those who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come to the Chamber.

Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that it would be preferable if we could avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

3.45 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before the Assembly divides, I remind Members that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. It is important that, during a Division, social distancing in the Chamber continues to be observed. In order to facilitate that, I ask the following: any Members in the Chamber who are not due to vote in person should consider leaving the Chamber until the Division has concluded. Those Members who wish to vote in the Lobbies on the opposite side of the Chamber to which they are sitting should leave the Chamber via the nearest door and enter the relevant Lobby via the Rotunda. Those remaining Members who are sitting closest to the Lobby doors should enter the Lobbies first. Any Member who has voted may then wish to leave the Chamber until the Division has concluded. Any Member who needs to vote in both Lobbies should not leave the Chamber.

I remind Members of the need to be patient at all times, to follow the instructions of the Lobby Clerks and to respect the need for social distancing.

The Assembly divided:

Ayes 58; Noes 13.

AYES

Ms Anderson, Dr Archibald, Ms Armstrong, Mr Blair, Mr Boylan, Ms S Bradley, Mr K Buchanan, Mrs Cameron, Mr Catney, Mr Dickson, Ms Dillon, Mrs Dodds, Ms Dolan, Mr Dunne, Mr Durkan, Ms Ennis, Ms Flynn, Mrs Foster, Mr Gildernew, Mr Givan, Ms Hargey, Mr Harvey, Ms Hunter, Mr Irwin, Mr Kearney, Ms C Kelly, Mrs D Kelly, Mr G Kelly, Ms Kimmins, Mrs Long, Mr Lynch, Mr Lyons, Mr Lyttle, Mr McAleer, Mr McCann, Mr McCrossan, Mr McGlone, Mr McGrath, Mr McGuigan, Mr McHugh, Ms McLaughlin, Mr McNulty, Ms Mallon, Mr Middleton, Mr Muir, Ms Mullan, Mr Murphy, Ms Ni Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mr O'Toole, Mr Poots, Mr Robinson, Ms Rogan, Mr Sheehan, Ms Sheerin, Mr Stafford, Mr Weir.

Miss Woods voted for Ms Bailey.

Question accordingly agreed to.

That the Executive Committee (Functions) Bill [NIA Bill 08/17-22] do now pass.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before I put the Question on the Adjournment, I remind Members that it is anticipated that the next plenary sitting of the Assembly will be on Monday 7 September. The Business Committee will meet on Wednesday 2 September, after which the Order Paper will be issued. During recess, meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response may be scheduled. Should that occur, Members will be notified in advance in the usual way.

Adjourned at 4.07 pm.

Miss Rachel Woods

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Welcome to this meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response. Item 1 on the agenda is the minutes of proceedings of the previous meeting, which was held on 21 May. Members are asked to note those minutes, which have been agreed. The minutes from that meeting have been published in the Official Report and are available on the Committee's web page.

Agenda item 2 is a statement from the Minister for the Economy. The Speaker received notification on 9 June that the Minister wished to make a statement to the Ad Hoc Committee at today's meeting. A copy of the statement that the Minister intends to make is in your pack.

I welcome the Minister for the Economy to this meeting of the Committee. Before the Minister makes her statement, I remind members that, following it, there will be an opportunity to ask questions, not to make speeches. Members who ask short, sharp, focused questions will be invited to ask a supplementary question if they wish.

Members who engage in preambles, however, may find that they do not get to put a question or a supplementary. I ask members for their cooperation, and I will, of course, expect the Minister to also give succinct answers so that everyone will be afforded an opportunity to ask questions.

I invite the Minister to make her statement, which should be heard without interruption.

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity, once again, to address the Committee.

No one needs to be reminded of the devastation that the COVID-19 pandemic has caused to our economy. Only this morning we have had very regrettable news of 600 redundancies at Bombardier. My thoughts are with the people who are directly affected and their families. As members will appreciate, that was a commercial decision reflecting the global market conditions as a direct result of COVID-19. My Department's careers service is available to support those who are impacted by offering free professional and impartial careers information. That advice and guidance are tailored to individual needs and are designed to help people to explore future training and employment opportunities.

I and my officials in the Department and in Invest NI have been in constant contact over the past few months with firms such as Thompson Aero Seating and Bombardier. I have raised my concerns about the impact of COVID-19 on the aerospace sector with Minister Zahawi in the Department for Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy (BEIS) in London over the past number of weeks, and I expressed the urgent need for a national strategy to support the sector.

Locally, I have asked Invest NI to convene a group of parties involved in the wider aerospace sector to consider what additional support they require and what the Governments at national and devolved level can do to help them through this very turbulent period. I fear that this will not be the last day that we have bad news on the economy.

Thousands of businesses have temporarily shut their doors, our tourism industry was put into deep freeze and it is estimated that the jobs of over 200,000 people in Northern Ireland have been furloughed as a result of COVID-19. That represents nearly a quarter of workers here having been furloughed and almost three quarters of the self-employed having to avail themselves of the support scheme that is open to them.

From these most difficult of circumstances, Northern Ireland has responded and adapted. Essential businesses modified their premises and introduced strict hygiene practices to enable us to continue buying vital items like food and other supplies. Front-line workers played a very important role.

We have adopted social-distancing rules and limited our contact with others; college and university students have moved to online learning; and many people have been working from home. Everyone has sacrificed a lot and given a lot of themselves to enable us to live alongside the virus while it is here. I thank everyone for everything that they have done.

Government has also stepped up. So far, we have paid out £300 million in support grants to thousands of businesses. Those grants have protected jobs, prevented business closures and provided vital temporary support. A rates holiday was agreed, and extended, to help businesses survive into the future, and the UK Government's job retention scheme took the unprecedented step of paying 80% of people's salaries, up to £2,500 a month.

All of the hard work of the past few months means that we have reached the point at which we can focus on the recovery phase and rebuilding of the Northern Ireland economy. We need to take action to rebuild a more competitive, inclusive and greener economy. We will have the safety of people at the heart of everything that we do. The hard days are not over, but we are taking steps forward. It is time for the pace to accelerate.

At the end of May, I published 'Charting a Course for the Economy — Our First Steps' an outline for economic recovery. It is the first in a series of publications by my Department that look at how to move forward from the economic damage caused by the COVID-19 pandemic. Other important issues, including childcare, public transport and the management of the footfall on city centre streets, need to be considered alongside our work.

We are working to extend confidence in the construction and manufacturing sectors as they continue to move out of lockdown while staying safe and working safely. Many firms have adapted their working practices and protocols, or are preparing to do so, particularly in the wider manufacturing and food production sectors. All employers need to ensure that their workplaces are safe. That may include the increased cleaning of premises, the addition of Perspex walkways, the splitting of work patterns or having appropriate PPE.

The engagement forum has published workplace safety guidance for employers, employees and the self-employed. The tourism recovery steering group, which I chair, has been engaging with stakeholders to plan for a new future for tourism here. We received a boost, last week, when it was agreed that hotels, caravan sites, guest houses and B & Bs could reopen on 20 July. That is conditional on the transmission rate remaining low. Tourism will not be the same as before, but I am optimistic about what is to come.

I was pleased to be at Debenhams, this week, for the reopening of its store, and I was delighted that I was able to make an internet star of Shirley Roberts, who was caught moonwalking in the background of the interview. From tomorrow, all goods retailers can reopen, as long as they adhere to the necessary safety measures, and provided that there is no increase in the spread of the virus. It is hoped that further announcements can come soon on dates for the reopening of service providers and the hospitality sector.

I have written to the Health Minister to ask for a review of the physical-distancing advice to stay two metres from other people. That needs to be debated, and people need to recognise the positive impact that moving to the World Health Organization-recommended one metre would have on various sectors across our economy and education sectors. I stress that people who can work at home should continue to do so.

Unfortunately, government grants, homeworking and the reopening of some sectors cannot protect all businesses or all jobs. I have said many times that each month of shutdown has been akin to a large recession. We know that the impact of the virus will be long-lasting in homes across Northern Ireland. That will have a knock-on effect on people's mental health, physical health and family life.

The claimant count rose by almost 90% in April, and unemployment increased by over 26,000 to 56,200. Six years of labour market progress was lost in a single month.

We need to look out for one another. Going forward, we must protect the vulnerable. Restarting the economy safely, as we are doing, allows people to get back to work. We also need to address the persistently high levels of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland. We want to give those who have lost their job the opportunity to seek new employment elsewhere.

Skills has been a priority area for me since I took up office, as I recognise that skills will play a key role in our economic recovery. I have supported thousands of learners across the system, from further education (FE) and higher education (HE) students to apprentices and trainees, as well as a great many others engaged in skills.

We have been working through real challenges, from protecting the skills infrastructure so that it will be there to play its place in our recovery to the very practical issues of supporting learners to adjust to a new way of learning. That work is particularly important to those participants who are the most vulnerable in society, as it will ensure that their studies are completed and their qualifications gained. We know already some of the future challenges that we may face. Studies suggest that 16- to 24-year-olds, such as those who are apprentices, are particularly vulnerable. That is why we are developing initiatives to help sustain apprenticeships and to support the apprenticeship pipeline for new apprentices.

In the longer term, we want to make sure that we have a system that promotes upskilling and reskilling, in order to allow individuals to move into areas in which there is greater demand. As Minister for the Economy, I want to support individuals on their journey and ensure that they are equipped to avail themselves of new opportunities. Just this week, I approved an investment of £1.7 million to support 2,000 online accredited courses. We will focus on sectors that can deliver high-paying jobs. Those jobs are likely to be in big data, health and life sciences, clean energy, advanced manufacturing, materials and engineering.

There are different phases involved. This is a long-term aspiration and requires a change in the skills base. There are currently disproportionate numbers with low or no skills in the labour market. Our initial objective is to stabilise the labour market and ensure that we retain as many jobs as possible. We will be developing our new 10-year plan for skills.

City deals and growth deals also have a significant part to play in supporting sustained subregional growth, with capital investment of nearly £1.5 billion from the public and private sectors. I remain committed to continuing the excellent collaboration and partnership work that there has been to date with local councils and their delivery partners to deliver the city and growth deal programme across Northern Ireland. The reconstituted Economic Advisory Group (EAG), chaired by Ellvena Graham, will help us to plan ahead. Next week, I will be unveiling the full membership of the group and the work that it will be engaged in.

People in Northern Ireland are resilient and innovative. I have no doubt that we will rebuild and redesign our economy, and we can all help in the recovery. I encourage everyone to consider a holiday at home this year, when the time is right. Please also support our local businesses, hotels and retailers as they reopen. Doing that will help us to rebuild from the inside and will put strength in our core. As we plan for the future, everyone must continue to work safe and stay safe.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): We will now have a period of about one hour for questions to the Minister. I remind members that they should be concise in their questioning. This is not an opportunity to make a speech. I encourage the Minister also to be concise in her answers to members' focused questions. In that way, members will be afforded supplementary questions, and every member will be allowed to ask one.

I invite the Chair of the Committee for the Economy, Caoimhe Archibald, to ask the first question. As is normal, the Chair will be given more latitude.

Dr Archibald (Committee Chair - Committee for the Economy): I thank the Minister for her statement, and I send my solidarity to the workers and their families at Bombardier, Thompson and elsewhere who have lost their jobs this week. It is a big blow to our local economy. I know from speaking to union reps this morning that they are emphasising that it is not just the loss of those jobs in those companies, it is the impact on our local supply chains.

In planning for the economic recovery, is the Minister looking at how to support strategically important sectors to our local economy as well as expanding others? Is she making the case to the British Government for an economic stimulus in respect of that? Of course, there would need to be some conditionality with any intervention that is going to companies in respect of meeting targets, for example on decarbonisation, and in respect of upholding workers' rights.

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Chair for her question and for her continuing cooperation on these very, very important measures. We need to reopen our economy. We need to reopen for businesses. That, I think, will need two phases to what we do. The first phase will be trying to reopen and to work with the impacts that COVID-19 has had on our economy. We have seen that very dramatically with the job losses in the aerospace sector at Thompson and at Bombardier and the potential for the fragility of that supply chain into those very big companies to be impacted by it.

The next phase will be about rebuilding and reinventing, making sure that we have an economy for Northern Ireland that is fit for the next phase of its development and, indeed, for the next century of Northern Ireland. I am pretty positive that we will continue to support and work with those sectors — agri-food, tourism, manufacturing and the service sectors — that are the staples of our economy. Northern Ireland is a very large service economy, and those will all be the staples of our economy. I also want us to look at those areas where we can bring in new and additional benefit to our economy. We already have a reputation as being world-class in the cybersecurity area, and I want to build on that. I want to build on the green economy, and I want to work alongside our universities, where we can use their innovation, research and knowledge to try to help us to boost the economy and grow it so that we are not just getting jobs but are getting better jobs and are retaining our young people here in Northern Ireland and giving them prospects for the future.

Dr Archibald: I thank the Minister for her response. Minister, it was reported in today's 'Irish News' that the hardship fund is undersubscribed and there may be an underspend from that. Will you be looking, therefore, to redirect that towards additional support for other businesses that have been missed out so far?

Mrs Dodds: The hardship fund will close tomorrow, and, using this public platform, I appeal to anybody who thinks that they may be eligible to check that criteria and get the application in. We will be looking at the applications and how that rolls out, and then we will be assessing whether there is an underspend in relation to that. Any underspend in relation to these funds is ring-fenced. It will go back into the centre, and it will then be for the Executive and the Finance Minister to say how much is being made available for further help to businesses. As soon as that process has concluded, I will be very happy to identify other areas of the economy to the Executive and the Finance Minister where help will be needed.

Mr Middleton: Minister, there have been discussions recently around social distancing and moving from 2 metres to 1 metre. The WHO points to 1 metre. How would that help the local economy in rebuilding?

Mrs Dodds: There has indeed been much discussion around this, and I thank the member for bringing this up. This is really key to the reopening and development of our economy. Before I go any further in all of this, in everything that we do, we must make sure that we are acting safely, in the best interests of protecting lives and in line with the scientific and medical advice. However, if we are to open up our economy and our schools and create capacity, we will have to have an open and honest discussion with ourselves about the issue of 2 metres versus 1 metre. Many countries across Europe have already adopted 1 metre. It is the World Health Organization standard, so, in Scandinavian countries, in France and in other areas, 1 metre is now the standard accepted rule; in other countries, like here, the Republic of Ireland and, I think, the US — in some pictures from there, there is not a lot of social distancing — the desire has been to keep the 2-metre rule. Think about it in terms of businesses and schools. People who own restaurants tell me that, at 2 metres, they are running at about 30% of capacity but, at 1 metre, they will run at 75% or 80% capacity. That gives them a decent chance of survival.

This is something that we as an Assembly and the Executive will have to have that open and honest discussion about. I have thrown it out there. I have been honest, as Economy Minister, and said that this is what we need to do to get our economy up and running, but it must be in line with the transmission rate of the virus and where, the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser tell us, it is safe.

Mr Middleton: Some of the hospitality groups have suggested open-air or outdoor spaces to manage social distancing. Is that something that you would support?

Mrs Dodds: Yes, of course I would. As we move to open up our hospitality sector, I have been doing an increasing amount of work with it in the last number of months. In March, it had to close down, and that was that. It was an enormous sacrifice that the hospitality sector made during this really extraordinary time. We need to work with it to make sure that it can get back on track. I cannot see that we will not have social distancing and the need for good hand hygiene in restaurants, shops etc. To help them to utilise their space, there is an argument for allowing people to use outdoor space as part of that. I have written to the Department for Communities and the Department for Infrastructure, because, as I was saying to the Executive when we were talking about the issue earlier, if you have been a councillor you will know how complicated and complex the whole area is. It seems simple, but it has impacts on licensing and planning, and, of course, there are impacts for people with disabilities if we go for something akin to the pavement café culture that we might look at. Yes, I think it will help with the viability of the hospitality sector and is something that we should absolutely look at, but we need a little work in-house with Infrastructure and Communities to make sure that we can do it successfully.

Ms McLaughlin: I am glad that you got through that statement today, Minister, without any interruptions either before you or behind you.

The UK has traditionally been particularly bad at dealing with insolvency. In the US, about 25% of businesses that are insolvent are rescued: we are way below 10%. Can the Minister give a commitment to help and support businesses, particularly SMEs, that face insolvency, so that they too are protected and rescued to the best of her Department's ability?

Mrs Dodds: This is an important area of work. We have, as she will know, recently passed a legislative consent motion giving consent to elements of the insolvency Bill that is currently before the House of Lords. That should help us and help firms to stay on track for a little longer as well as being fair to creditors and ensure that we have a fair process for insolvency.

It would be regrettable and very difficult to explain to firms suffering from cash-flow problems as a result of the COVID-19 crisis if the mitigation measures were not in place. I thank the House for its support for the legislative consent motion. Many of the measures were originally designed to be in place until June, but they can roll forward to make sure that we can deal with a crucial area of business.

Ms McLaughlin: A recurrent theme among the many industry and representative bodies that have spoken to the Committee is that the support of Invest NI goes particularly towards large businesses. In the current circumstances, Invest NI needs to concentrate on SMEs if we are to support the recovery and prevent insolvency in that sector.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can I have the member's question?

Mrs Dodds: I will reply to that, because it is an important issue. Northern Ireland is a small-business economy, so it is very important that we take steps to support small business. That is why the access to finance scheme, the job furlough scheme and the self-employment income support scheme are vital in getting us through the current situation. I have been talking to businesses regularly, and they have indicated that, without those extraordinary interventions from government, they would not have stood a chance.

The best thing that we can do is to try to reopen our economy safely, sensibly and in a staged manner. I have been trying to do that. I am glad that we have dates for hotels. I will bring forward more papers next week on the tourism sector, focusing on how we can get an early recovery and maybe make something out of what is left of the home market and the summer season. The Executive today agreed that all retail across the board, including shopping centres, should reopen. Those are important steps, but we will also need to work with manufacturing and construction to ensure that we have a holistic approach.

Mr Stewart: I join the Minister in sending our best wishes and thoughts to the families of those who, potentially, have their lost their jobs at Bombardier. I fear that there could be a lot more, if we do not have a robust recovery strategy in place. Hopefully, the Government will do all that they can to intervene.

I thank the Minister for her intervention so far and for her work to get retail reopened. Hospitality looks as if it is coming back, and we await big announcements today on —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can we have a question?

Mr Stewart: — that taking place. One of the sectors that have not had any support, guidance or clarity is the health and beauty sector. Our salons, hairdressers and barbers provide vital support to town centres. Can the Minister do anything to outline a pathway for them and give them guidance on what safety measures they can put in place ahead of reopening?

Mrs Dodds: Along with many others, I would give anything to have the hairdressers open again. It has been one of the trials of life.

The member makes an important point. We need not just to get not general retail open again — our food sector functioning well, our non-food retail open and functioning well — but to get the service bit of the economy working again.

As the member knows, in all the plans that we have had throughout the British Isles, that is the sector, because of the nature of the work that it does, that has been a little later in everyone's plan. It is certainly the next piece in the jigsaw to get our town centres revitalised and to get a sense of normality back for people who have found it very difficult.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Mr Stewart for a brief supplementary.

Mr Stewart: Thank you for your indulgence, Mr Deputy Chairperson. The Chair raised the issue of the micro-hardship fund, as it looks as if a significant amount will be returned. Is there a shovel-ready package that could be released, should more money become available in the June monitoring round to help social enterprises and the sole traders who, to date, have missed out on everything?

Mrs Dodds: The issue of grants funding is slightly different to the June monitoring round in that it is ring-fenced, COVID-specific funding that will go back to the Executive for the Executive to make a further decision on how that will look. I will, of course, prepare an options paper that includes all the options that you have indicated.

Mr Lyttle: We are all reacting to the devastating news of significant job losses at flagship manufacturer Bombardier, which will affect hundreds of families in my constituency of East Belfast. What action is the Minister for the Economy taking to support the company to mitigate redundancies and provide retraining and re-employment opportunities for a highly skilled staff?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for his question. I understand very well the significant distress that today's announcement will cause for Bombardier and the shockwaves that it will cause within the wider manufacturing supply chain. In recent weeks, I have been to Bombardier to talk to its chief executive, as I have done with Thompson Aero Seating. The issue in aerospace is a global and national issue as well as something that will disproportionately impact on us in Northern Ireland. If we think that Boeing and Airbus have reduced their purchasing capacity by over 40%, we understand not just the short-term, but the long-term challenges for the aerospace industry.

I hold a weekly meeting with BEIS. In fact, last week Minister Zahawi, Michael Ryan and I had a specific meeting to discuss the challenges for not just Bombardier, but aerospace in general. If you look at the redundancies in Rolls-Royce and across the country in this sector, you will see just how difficult it is. Nationally, although BEIS tells me that this is red-flagged and a sector that it knows will need intervention, I think that the Government now need to accelerate that intervention plan. I will be doing everything that I can to make sure that that happens.

Locally, Invest Northern Ireland has obviously been talking to both Thompson and Bombardier. These are innovative, research-and-development-orientated and export-orientated client companies of Invest Northern Ireland, and we will continue to work with them to see what we can do to help them diversify. The most important thing that Bombardier needs to do is conclude the deal with Spirit and get everything back on track.

I, of course, will work with those among the workforce who have received this devastating news and those who will potentially be impacted on by it. I understand that the 90-day redundancy procedure will go into operation today. As this progresses, my Department will organise help in terms of other employment opportunities or retraining and upskilling for those who have been impacted.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for her detailed answer. As she says, Bombardier COO, Michael Ryan, has called COVID-19 an existential crisis for the aerospace industry. What specific support has the Minister secured from the UK Government for our aerospace sector? What actions has she taken to advance a regional aviation and aerospace recovery strategy for Northern Ireland?

Mrs Dodds: As I said in my previous answer, this needs to be taken forward at a national level. I am hopeful that Minister Zahawi will, indeed, conduct that. Of course, I will continue my conversations with him to ensure that it happens. I hope to meet the broader sector next week, because that sector itself needs to identify where the opportunities are and how we can sustain not just the larger aerospace companies, but the small manufacturing companies, some of whom I met earlier in the week, and the part that they play in the aerospace industry supply chain.

Mr Harvey: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. When caravan parks reopen soon, will it be only static caravans that are allowed to be occupied, or will touring vans be permitted if they are self-contained?

Mrs Dodds: Thank you very much for that question. I can understand why that is of particular interest to you, coming from the Strangford constituency. We have already identified 20 July as the date for reopening. However, I am hopeful that we would be able to bring that date forward, recognising that static caravans and touring caravans are self-contained units, as are other elements of self-catering holiday accommodation in Northern Ireland. Therefore, for those that are self-catering and self-contained, I would hope that we would be able to bring forward a proposal. I certainly intend to bring a paper to the Executive next week on that specific issue.

I am keen to allow people to return to their caravans, whether they be touring vans or static vans. However, I see that there is an issue for caravan park owners with regard to how common areas and shared facilities, such as showers, toilet blocks etc are treated. I suspect that the return to caravan parks will be for those who own static caravans, because they are self-contained, and those who can plug their touring caravan into the amenities on their pitch. Medical advice shows us that it is pretty difficult to manage the sharing of services without really deep cleaning in between. That is what I see for that sphere. I hope that we will be able to make an announcement on that fairly soon.

Mr Harvey: You mentioned 20 July as the opening date. Are you hopeful that it would be sooner than that? You mentioned that it was possible that it could happen sooner.

Mrs Dodds: The member is persistent in his question for his constituents. Executive colleagues recognise that self-contained units are different to hotels, restaurants etc. I am keen to see the wider tourism and hospitality sector open. It has had an exceedingly difficult time. It closed down in March off the back of the very long autumn and winter period, when it is much more difficult to successfully operate financially. Now, it has been closed for three months. I would really like to see it get some of the summer back. I know that communities in Northern Ireland will support it in doing that. Therefore, I am hopeful. However, it is, of course, for Executive colleagues to decide and to do so, of course, on the advice of the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Officer.

Mr McAleer: In these difficult economic times, many employers are struggling to hold on to their apprentices. Has the Minister any ideas or has she given any consideration to how she can support employers and training providers to hold on to their apprentices at this time?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for that question. It is very timely. I have just looked at the reprioritisation of funding in the Department for the Economy. The skills agenda, retaining skills and upskilling young people are really important to me. In the last downturn, we know, 16- to 24-year-olds were impacted disproportionately to any other part of the economy. At one stage, we had unemployment in that sector running well above 25 to 27%. I do not want to see that happen again. I have just taken measures in my Department — we will make announcements on them fairly soon — to specifically target apprentices, retaining apprenticeships and supporting employers to retain those young people as they try to continue with their career path.

Mr McAleer: I believe that the Minister has also answered my supplementary. I was going to ask about the possibility of introducing an interim apprenticeship programme. Minister, is that what you were talking about in your answer?

Mrs Dodds: Yes. I am very concerned. I do not want a lost generation of young people who go through similar trials and tribulations. Of course, I am also really supportive of apprenticeships at all levels, right through to those higher-level apprenticeships. I have had many conversations with the education sector and with the Minister, stating that those higher-level apprenticeships are a really important pathway for young people and that schools need to highlight them as alternatives to the traditional A level and university route. The answer is yes. We are working on this as a proposal, we have set aside some money for it and we will see how it works out.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for coming here today. We all understand the massive impact on tourism that COVID-19 has had and on Northern Ireland. However, there are opportunities, and I am sure that the Minister will take the opportunity to highlight those with regard to holidaying at home, staycations and promotion of our local tourist attractions.

Mr Beggs: Can we have your question?

Mr Dunne: We need to fill the empty bed-spaces in our hotels and B & Bs.

Mrs Dodds: Yes, this is important. As I have said, the opportunity for our sector to make something of what is left of this summer season — of course, being Northern Ireland, we do not get a long summer season — is that home market. I have been talking to Tourism NI around some marketing and publicity on this specific issue. Obviously, we want to get the issues out of the way of opening and all of the challenges around that. We want to get that sorted out and have a marketing campaign aimed not just at the island of Ireland but at the wider British Isles, so that we are looking to Scotland, England, Wales and the Republic of Ireland and to target and market what tourists can do, see and enjoy in Northern Ireland.

Mr Dunne: Air connectivity is a huge issue as we try to attract tourists. What conversations has the Minister had and what work has she done around getting our three airports up and running and getting the planes back in the air?

Mrs Dodds: That is an essential part of where we need to go. For business, family life and the wider tourism sector, air connectivity is absolutely essential. We need to connect to our biggest market. GB is that market, and we need to do that. We also need to connect to that market in a way that takes us to the regions within that market. Air connectivity to all parts of the United Kingdom is extremely important. You will know that we worked hard, between Finance, Infrastructure and Economy, to make sure that there was a package in place for our airports during the worst of the pandemic. With regard to connectivity to London, I am glad to say that Aer Lingus has increased the number of flights very significantly. My information is that BA will soon start its flights again. Last week, I spent some time talking to the chief executive of Belfast City Airport and asked him what further support was needed and how they were working to fill the routes that were lost with the demise of Flybe. The good news is that they are pretty confident that they will be able to fill those routes once again and that we will get back to a much more stable place in our connectivity with the rest of the United Kingdom.

It is a work in progress. We will need to, perhaps, ensure that there is further support for those airports and we are engaging with the Department for Transport, as it is a national issue, to see if they can do that. We never fail to point out that connecting the regions of the United Kingdom is supposed to be a priority for the Conservative Government.

Ms Ennis: Following on from Declan McAleer's question about the apprenticeship recovery initiative, industry providers have suggested that the Department for the Economy should help pay apprenticeship wages in the short term. Will the Minister ensure that the apprenticeship recovery strategy includes those proposals?

Mrs Dodds: As I said, we are working on the proposals. We will bring them forward shortly. We have identified funding for them, and I see it as a huge priority. By the way, we are not only working on apprenticeships proposals but want to make sure that we retain and stabilise the wider training sector, so it is really important for all of our young people, whether they are doing an apprenticeship or are part of Training for Success, that they have a pathway for their career. To try to stabilise that sector, we have continued to pay those training providers even while young people have not been operating in them. We have continued to pay young people all of their training allowances so that we retain young people and give them purpose, direction, pathways, choices and opportunities in life.

Ms Ennis: Again, I piggyback on another member's question. You said in your statement that tourism would not be the same as before, and I am glad to hear that. I wonder if the Minister or the tourism steering group has considered the possibility of extending Ireland's Ancient East to the two north-easterly counties of Ireland — Down and Armagh — with the great economic benefits that that would bring to our tourism product.

Mrs Dodds: We are, of course, always open to looking at how we can extend the tourism product in Northern Ireland. To be specific to my constituency, I have been exploring how we can do further work on the 'Game of Thrones' proposal that there is for that area. The work of the tourism steering group so far has been on trying to get the tourism and hospitality industry up, running and open again. That has been our focus. We will then turn to the long-term challenges that we have not just about what we have in product terms but about the marketing of that product.

A couple of weeks ago, I conducted a conversation by Zoom — the great thing that we are now all connecting with — with some tourism operators in North America. They said that, while they had cancelled many of their tours, many of those had been rebooked for 2021. Therefore, while I recognise the real challenges, difficulties and distress that some of the people in that sector have at this minute in time, we will recover, and we will come back. We need to make sure that we have everything with the building blocks in place for it. Some of them were also talking about our golf offering, because a lot of the Americans who come here want to play at Royal Portrush Golf Club, Royal County Down Golf Club and all of the other courses that are so amazing. Of course, we will try to identify further opportunities to enhance that golf offering and promote it across the world.

Mr O'Toole: 'Game of Thrones' tourism does not happen without an ecosystem of creative professionals and artists who are make-up artists, costume designers, camera technicians, grips and video designers, but our creative industries in Northern Ireland feel left behind, I am afraid. Will the Minister urgently work with the Communities Minister to develop a long-term strategy to revitalise and protect our arts and cultural sectors in Northern Ireland, which are not just economically important but socially and culturally critical to our whole island?

Mrs Dodds: Sometimes people try to figure out how quickly we will mention the creative industries in Northern Ireland, even 'Game of Thrones', in a debate like this, but that is because it is really important. It is really important to individuals and to the success of Northern Ireland. Some of the wonderful things that have been happening with the creative industries have showcased this part of the world right across the world. That is why we have tourists coming from the Far East etc. So, I absolutely recognise the importance of the creative industries to Northern Ireland. That is why I have been working with Northern Ireland Screen around how we support those industries going forward and how we open up those film projects again and get them back on track so that we can continue not just for the creative industries' sake but for the wider economy to get those elements of our economy back on track.

The member will know that, at Belfast harbour a few months ago, there was a project to double the amount of space and investment in the creative industries there. Those things are important for the economy but they are also important for us as a people.

The Minister for Communities has more responsibility for the individual arts projects than I do. My element of it is tourism and how it impacts on the economy, and I see a great future ahead.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you, Minister. You mentioned some of the big ticket creative industries and the big productions that are happening. Those are great and we want those to continue, but it is really important to say that this is about joining that up and protecting our small-scale arts and cultural sectors. It would be good if you could commit to that.

Very briefly, will the Minister join me in asking the BBC to clarify its position on the £77 million investment that it is supposed to be making in my constituency in inner South Belfast? It is supposed to be investing £77 million in a new digital hub and refurbishing Broadcasting House. I have written today to the director general. This is vital investment. Will she join me in urging the BBC to make sure that that proceeds?

Mrs Dodds: I am always looking for opportunities for investment in Northern Ireland. I will ask my officials to come back to you and talk to you about that particular project and see how we can help in ensuring that that type of investment goes forward.

Mr Nesbitt: In the past 55 minutes, there has been one very brief mention of the social economy. Will the Minister agree that that does not do justice to that sector and that, coming out of COVID, the social economy will be even more important than ever?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for his question. The social economy is incredibly important. It is a diverse range of businesses within our economy, but, most importantly, some training providers who are part of that social economy, which my Department funds and has continued to fund, are able to bring people into the labour market who previously would have been very distant from that market, and I know that the member will know many examples of that. It is an incredibly important part of our economy. They have been able to access the furloughing scheme. As I said, my Department has continued to pay training providers those training allowances. They are able to be part of the microbusiness scheme, and should there be any other opportunities to support the sector, we will, of course, look to that.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Minister for those words. With regard to the micro scheme — the micro fund available to social enterprises with nine or fewer employees — is she aware that the criterion that you had to be a social enterprise without charitable status has knocked out a huge number of those organisations? Will she rectify that situation?

Mrs Dodds: Of course, there are many social enterprises that do not use charitable status, and they are willing to apply and have applied to any or all of the schemes. The Minister for Communities is about to bring forward a scheme for the wider charity sector, and, of course, that will be open to the social enterprise sector.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Members, we are just about halfway down the list. I look for your continued assistance in asking concise questions and for concise answers from the Minister, so that everyone will be afforded an opportunity.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for attendance today. She has answered quite a few questions that I would have looked to ask. We all join in her concerns about the situation in the aerospace industry and the bad news at Thompson's and Bombardier. There are a few thousand jobs throughout the wider aerospace sector in Northern Ireland and quite a few companies, and, unfortunately, everybody is looking nervously at that sector today. Has there been any wider engagement, Minister, at this stage?

Mrs Dodds: As I have said in previous answers, I am not concerned just about the larger aerospace companies. Of course, we are very concerned about them. Some of them are our flagship companies for Northern Ireland, and are recognisable across the world for the product, skill and the craftsmanship of what they have produced, but I am equally concerned for the smaller manufacturers who are part of the supply chain into the wider aerospace industry. I recognise that many of them are small businesses that rely on the supply chain into the wider and larger sector. Yes, I am engaging, and they will be part of our discussions on how to maintain the supply chain or diversify it, going forward.

Mr Hilditch: Childcare is another sector that has been raised recently, particularly with the First Minister yesterday, maybe not directly with you. Will the Minister work with Executive colleagues to provide support for further initiatives in childcare as we move forward, because that is equally important to the economy?

Mrs Dodds: We spent a long time on that issue at the Executive meeting this morning. We need to get back to some semblance of normality on the childcare issue. Issues such as social distancing impact on the provision of childcare and on people getting back to work. We cannot get our economy back up and running if we are not providing people with adequate and appropriate opportunities to have their children looked after safely and appropriately as we go forward. That is a hugely important area that we look at.

As we travel forward in reopening the economy, we will need to balance all those competing needs, so that we have some semblance of a road map that helps everything to converge at the right time. Childcare is one of those, and opening up education and allowing our young people to get back to school is another that we will have to look at carefully.

Mr Boylan: I welcome the Minister's statement. I am glad to hear the Minister mention the issue of working from home and online. She is well aware that Project Stratum will be a major project. Will she give a wee update on it, and will the project prioritise the notspot areas and the areas with the poor broadband that people have experienced over this COVID period when trying to work from home and everything else?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question. That is a very important area. I spoke to representatives from one of our flagship tech companies yesterday and they are planning to have most of their staff working from home for the rest of the year. They see that as the most efficient approach for what they do and in keeping their staff safe from the virus. Of course, things will change as the economy opens up — if we can stay safe and control the transmission of the virus — but working from home will be part of the future programme for work in Northern Ireland and, indeed, throughout the world. We will probably not do things in the same way as we have done heretofore. Therefore, it is really important that we focus on how to connect people through good broadband.

Project Stratum is at the procurement stage. I hope that the assessment of the bids that have come in will be made and that we will be able to announce how to take it forward by September. That will give us £165 million to invest in connectivity throughout Northern Ireland. Around 80,000 properties in Northern Ireland have broadband speeds that would need the intervention of Project Stratum, and 97% of those are in rural areas or areas with fewer than 1,000 houses. I see it not just as an important connectivity project but as really important in levelling up economic opportunity across Northern Ireland.

Mr Boylan: I welcome the Minister's comments. Minister, I have been contacted, and I know that many other members will have been contacted, about ongoing engineering work by BT and other contractors. People are watching others being connected 100 metres down the road and are frustrated that they do not have broadband. In the interim, will the Minister commit to engaging with providers so that, where possible when they are on the ground, they will look at whether they can facilitate those people and provide better broadband?

Mrs Dodds: A range of initiatives are available, including community initiatives and different types of initiatives, to help upgrade broadband for individuals and, indeed, small community areas. I know of some small rural areas that have taken advantage of those initiatives. I will ask my officials to write to you after the meeting and give you a list of the types of initiatives so that you might pass them onto your constituents.

Mr Muir: I raised the following question with the Health Minister on Tuesday. He batted me over to you, Minister, so I am going to have a go at it now. It is about allied health professionals' businesses and independent practices. They provide a very valuable role in supporting people and will continue to do so in the future. What financial assistance will you be able to give them in the form of grant support, as many of them have missed out on that? There is also the issue of their ongoing operating costs, because they will be unable to operate using the model that they have used in the past.

Mrs Dodds: I recognise the issue. I hate to tell the Health Minister, but I will be writing to him again because I think that he needs to plot a course for the reopening of allied health professionals. For those who go to physiotherapy or wherever else to have those things sorted out, we need to pursue a strategy that allows those people to get back to opening up safely and in line with the advice of their professional bodies. I am in the process of writing to the Health Minister about that issue because it is the most important thing that we can do.

Physiotherapists are not just for hospitals. Many of them operate in our communities and pick up services that hospitals, because of long waiting lists etc, simply cannot get to. We need to work with them and their professional bodies to make sure that they can open again safely. Many of those people have been able to avail themselves of the £10,000 grant, and if they employ people, they can avail themselves of the microbusiness grant. They all tend to fall into that category. The greatest help that we can now give them is direction, guidance and help to open safely.

Mr Muir: I thank the Minister for her response. I urge you to come together to get a solution to that, particularly the ongoing operating costs. I go regularly to a physio because of my running injuries, so it is self-inflicted.

Just one other thing, the 10K and 25K schemes closed a while ago. Was there any underspend in those? If so, could that be used to help those who were excluded from assistance, such as bed and breakfasts that are paying domestic rates or businesses that have multiple properties but got only one grant?

Mrs Dodds: As I have said before, the funding for those schemes is held centrally, as part of the COVID funds. We will submit a paper to the Executive, giving the detailed figures on how much the schemes have spent and where there are underspends, and the Executive will then take a decision as to what to do with that further funding.

Mr McGuigan: I thank the Minister for her statement. She mentioned a few times so far the tourism recovery steering group that she chairs and the engagement that it is having to plan for recovery. Given that I represent North Antrim, a constituency heavily reliant on the tourism sector, will the Minister give me a few more details about the type of issues that the recovery group is considering and when it will report?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for his question. Last Friday, I had a Zoom call with many tourism businesses, including hotels in his constituency. Of course, the work of the tourism recovery group has been focused on how to get tourism up and running again. The first product, if you like, or report of that group will be the guidance offered to hotels and the wider tourism and hospitality sector on reopening. I hope that the group will report with that next week, and we will publish it as soon as we can thereafter.

Mr McGuigan: Thank you for your answer, Minister. Obviously, there will be short-term challenges in the tourism sector as it plans its recovery. You mentioned marketing earlier. Do you agree that Tourism Ireland is key as we try to recover from the pandemic? You talked about engagement with American tourists. When people travel to this island, they do not recognise borders or separate jurisdictions; they recognise a single island and travel from one part to the next, and Tourism Ireland is key in marketing that.

Mrs Dodds: Of course, I have no desire to make tourism into any political agenda, and I think the member should reflect on that. I regularly speak to the chief executive of Tourism Ireland because he is charged and payed by the Executive to market Northern Ireland, for example, in Great Britain. Just the other day, I was talking to him about a marketing campaign that Tourism Ireland should be carrying out for the benefit of Northern Ireland in Great Britain. I did not design the structures, and I would have designed them differently had I been allowed to do so, but we are where we are, and that is where his responsibility lies. The responsibility for marketing Northern Ireland on the island of Ireland is, of course, a matter for Tourism Northern Ireland, and I have been talking to it about marketing campaigns that we can use for the immediate future.

In the wider range of issues around tourism, I think that we should also reflect on the fact that many of our international tourist visitors feel unprepared and unsafe, and people are really unwilling to travel. That is why I was engaging, through Tourism Ireland, with the North American tour operators, many of which bring tours into Northern Ireland, whether those are around worship and churches, golf, history or many other things. I will continue to do that because I think that we can see growth in the North American market on many sectors; not least, in Ulster Scots heritage, which is also very important in Northern Ireland.

Mr McNulty: Following on from my colleague's statement on tourism, I note the Minister's work on reopening the tourism industry and the date of 20 July for the reopening of hotels, caravan sites, guest houses and B & Bs. Given the Taoiseach's announcement that the same sectors will open in the South on 29 June, and given the Minister's comments about people's unwillingness to travel for international tourism, should we try to avoid an even greater exodus than is normal in July and invite some people from the South to the North to avail themselves of our tourism offerings?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for his question. We need to do what is right for Northern Ireland, which is what the Executive have been focused on doing, as have I, as Minister for tourism. Part of that will bring us into line with what is happening in the wider British Isles. The member is quite right in what he says: I was very busily engaged with sector and the Executive in trying to get a date for the opening of hotels, which was around 20 July. I am preparing another, separate paper for the Executive through which I hope that they will reconsider that date, not just for hotels but for the wider tourism and hospitality sector, and, indeed, set a separate date for the self-catering and caravan sector. Those are all really important issues.

I do not want our industry to be uncompetitive or at a competitive disadvantage compared with other parts of the British Isles, and I will do whatever I can to make sure that that is understood and that we are able to operate safely and to open as soon as is practicable.

Mr McNulty: Thank you, Minister. You mentioned that the Executive met today. Did you make a recommendation on the reopening of shopping centres such as the Buttercrane or The Quays in Newry or The Mall in Armagh?

Mrs Dodds: The member will be really pleased to know that that was one of the items that the Executive agreed today. All of retail will be open.

Dr Aiken: Thank you very much indeed, Minister, for your statement. On behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, I express the party's concerns about the aerospace industry and the loss of jobs.

I welcome your forming of an economic advisory group. Ellvena Graham has done much very positive work for Northern Ireland. However, my question is this: how can an economic advisory group work effectively if we do not have a fiscal council, or fiscal commission, which has been much promised but much delayed?

Mrs Dodds: The fiscal council is an NDNA commitment. In my role, as the Minister for the Economy, I am doing what I am responsible for and that is forming an economic advisory group. I hope to announce the names of the individuals who will form that group. We want to look at a future economic strategy for Northern Ireland. That future economic strategy should support the industries that are part of our core and our fabric: our agri-food industry, our tourism industry and the things that are absolutely core to Northern Ireland. It should also look for new opportunities to develop Northern Ireland, not just into new markets but into new sectors. I mentioned cybersecurity. There is also our tech sector. We will have an opportunity with some of the really innovative work that is happening in our clean, green energy sector to bring forward really good proposals.

It is a really good time to re-establish the economic advisory group, and I hope to connect it to the east coast advisory group that I re-formed when I was in the States in March. That group comprises individuals who come from Northern Ireland, have done really well in their careers and lives on the east coast of America, and want to give back to Northern Ireland. We want to harness and utilise their energy in trying not just to promote Northern Ireland but to bring foreign direct investment, jobs and better jobs to Northern Ireland. If I may be permitted, this is something I am quite passionate about and on which I want to set the direction before this Assembly finishes its term. Members' cooperation, help and conversations about this are really important. We need to get our industry working really well alongside our universities because research and innovation is key to where we pitch our economy in the long-term.

I spoke to the chief executive of Cygilant, a Boston-based company that is bringing 65 cybersecurity jobs to Northern Ireland. Even in the midst of our pandemic, he was saying, "I am investing in Northern Ireland. I see great opportunities in Northern Ireland". He said that primarily because we have an MA in cybersecurity and because our industry and universities are working hand in hand. It is really important.

Dr Aiken: Thank you very much, Minister. I have met the east coast group many times and extolled the virtues of Northern Ireland; it is an excellent group.

At present, when there are so many different innovative ways to gather funding, will you ask the economic advisory group and the fiscal council — if we ever see it — to start looking at a national recovery fund? A fund that will enable Northern Ireland to pull itself out of COVID and prepare itself for next year and the rest of our second century. We have been successful, so far, during the first century, and we look forward to our second century, but let us do it with a strong economy.

Mrs Dodds: I absolutely concur with the member. I want Northern Ireland to be well placed for its second century, and that is hugely important. I will work with whoever to make sure that that is the case. For now, I am focusing on getting the economic advisory group up and running. My Department will service it with papers and the things that it needs to do, but we want it to be there for ideas and discussion, and to use and harness the skills of the people on the group, who are already very successful in their own right, to drive our economy forward. That will, of course, support local jobs and families, which is very important.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Again, I encourage concise questions and answers so that everyone can be afforded the chance to ask a question.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you, Minister, for being here today and answering the questions thus far. Minister, I am sure you will agree that the hospitality sector has been the sector most severely impacted by the consequences of the pandemic we have faced. Many restaurants, cafe and pub owners are very concerned about the uncertainty of the date for reopening. Can you provide some clarity about the discussions you have had about when the reopening of those premises will take place?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the member for his question. I can confirm, and most members will acknowledge, that I have had extensive discussions with the hospitality and tourism sectors. I hope to be able to bring forward a paper to the Executive at the start of the week, and, hopefully, we will be able to give the clarity that is needed.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. As you will be aware, the Irish Government have announced dates for the reopening of such premises at the end of this month and the beginning of July. For a town like Strabane, Omagh or the city of Derry this will come as a great concern. Pubs in the South, at a distance similar to that from this Chamber to the Senate, will be open while pubs in Strabane will be closed, and it will be the same for restaurants and cafes. Minister, will you reconsider the date in order to come into line with that announcement in the economic interests of all across this island, North and South. This is not a political point, it is a very clear point.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): The member has asked his question.

Mr McCrossan: If you are not going to do that, Minister, will you consider further intervention for the hospitality sector?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): The member has asked his question. Minister.

Mrs Dodds: Of course, it is not for me, alone, to make the decision about the dates. The Executive, on the advice of the Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Scientific Officer, will take that decision. However, the member makes my argument for me. I agree.

Mr Catney: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker — Mr Principal Deputy Speaker — sorry, Mr Deputy Speaker [Laughter.] [Interruption.] I am up and down here. I do not know what is happening. I have been waiting outside.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can you be concise?

Mr Catney: Minister, I apologise to you —.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can you be concise?

Mr Catney: Minister, if this question has already been asked, I apologise; I seem to have missed it. Has the Minister considered a support package for sole traders and single-person businesses that have not been able to access any of the current support programmes and have had no income for 12 weeks?

Mrs Dodds: I, of course, have already indicated that any funding that is available after the current grant schemes have finished and been finalised will be made available to the Executive, who will decide what further mitigations are necessary.

Mr Catney: As others have said, the hospitality sector and, especially, the public house sector find themselves locked into a situation in which there is unfair competition. Nothing will destroy their businesses like unfair competition. In my family, my sister has a debt of £85,000 on her business, debt that she has never had before. We need to get those businesses open. What is the Minister doing to level the playing field in Northern Ireland for small entrepreneurial publicans?

Mrs Dodds: Of course, I agree that we need to get businesses open. We need to get the wider economy open. We need to get business back doing business, as I said in response to questions in the House earlier in the week. It is important that we get our wider economy, as a whole, open. As I said, I have had extensive contact with the wider tourism and hospitality industry, and I will, of course, provide further information to the Executive next week.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for her statement. I particularly welcome the mention of the word "green" in relation to recovery. Let us hope that that is followed by suitable action by the Executive.

The Minister, in her statement and in the 'Charting a Course for the Economy' document, says that her Department will:

"provide 'Forward Guidance' to businesses and employees to reduce uncertainty and facilitate planning."

With more businesses due to reopen tomorrow, has specific guidance been published? When will it be provided to all businesses and sectors so that they can reopen safely in order to protect staff and customers?

Mrs Dodds: I am, of course, interested in a clean, green recovery. I recognise that technology, in improving and sustaining our climate, has been of benefit and has resulted in significant jobs for Northern Ireland. I am very confident that the innovative and entrepreneurial spirit of Northern Ireland will lead us further in that direction.

Just this week, my Department provided updated guidance on the nibusinessinfo website. That guidance was the result of documents on working safely that came to us from our national Government in London. The guidance was looked at by the engagement forum, which is a compilation of business organisations and unions that have come together for the common good in these difficult circumstances, and was amended to make it more Northern Ireland-specific. It is now available on the nibusinessinfo website and provides further clarification for businesses as we go forward.

The tourism steering group has been looking at guidance for the tourism and hospitality sector, and we will publish that in due course as well. It will be in plenty of time for the reopening of the sector.

Miss Woods: Who is responsible for ensuring that public health measures are followed in places where relaxation has been allowed?

Mrs Dodds: If you mean the policing of those areas, there will be a combination of areas of responsibility. Of course, the Public Health Agency will give guidance and support, and the Health and Safety Executive will do the same where there is an issue of safety. Of course, on the wider front, some of our councils have statutory duties in relation to food safety etc. There will be a wide range of people who have responsibility in that area.

Mr Allister: I have heard many comforting platitudes about the haulage sector. Even though the Finance Minister told us that there was £59.5 million that came to us as a Barnett consequential at the centre for transportation, he tells us that there has not been a single application or bid from the Economy Minister or the Infrastructure Minister for the haulage sector. What is the point of platitudes, if there is no bid?

In the same vein, will the Minister tell us why a request that I made to her private office as an MLA on 27 May — over two weeks ago — for a Zoom or conference call —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Will the member finalise his question?

Mr Allister: — with representatives of the industry has not even been acknowledged? Why is that?

Mrs Dodds: That is the first time that I have heard of that request for a conference call. I will, of course, take that back to the Department this afternoon and make sure that a response is issued.

In March and April, we had extensive discussions with the Department for Transport about help for the haulage industry. I have worked with many of our haulage companies to alleviate specific difficulties that they have had. The Department for Transport put forward proposals to Her Majesty's Treasury that were not then looked at. Since then, we have had a group looking, along with the Road Haulage Association and the Freight Transport Association, at the difficulties in the sector. We understand that about 80% of the sector is operating normally, but that leaves a significant 20% in significant difficulties. We continue to work at the issue, and I will, of course, revert to the member in due course about his request.

Mr Allister: The point, of course, Minister, was that there was a pot of money in Finance and no bid to use it. Having vented my frustration with the Department,

I will be more encouraging to the Minister on my next point. I welcome the fact that —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can we have a question?

Mr Allister: I will. Mr Deputy Speaker, I am not a second-class member of the House.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Order. We are trying to ensure that all members have an opportunity for questions. I have been generous with many in their introductions, and, when I ask members to come to a question, I expect them to do so. I will afford you another opportunity, Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: In embracing the logic of moving from two metres to one metre, as has happened successfully in Denmark and France and in highly populated places such as Singapore and Hong Kong, I assume that the Minister has medical backing for that sensible proposal, so why is there feet-dragging in the Executive about it? Without it, as she said, we will never open the economy, and we will never open our schools.

Mrs Dodds: I appreciate the member's sentiments around the issue. It will not go away, and we will have to address it. The World Health Organization has indicated that one metre is a suitable and sensible distance. However, those are the very large balances that the Executive as a whole have to weigh up as we plot our way forward and open up the economy, which has to be balanced with the public health risks. I want to make it clear that I will take the advice of the Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Scientific Adviser, people who have worked hard to keep Northern Ireland safe in these very difficult circumstances. So, while we can have that open and honest debate and I can say to you genuinely that, to open the economy successfully and get our schools back up and running, we will need to review that issue, we will have to balance that with the transmission rate of the virus and the safety and health of the people in Northern Ireland, which will always come first.

Ms Sugden: There is a particular problem for guest houses in that the vehicles that the Executive have used to provide financial support exclude those that do not pay non-domestic rates. People who own guest houses do not typically employ staff nor do they pay business rates, because it is their home and is, therefore, a domestic property. I appreciate the Minister's commitment to supporting tourism in Northern Ireland, but, in the north coast in particular, where we have a deficit of four-star, luxury accommodation —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can you come to the question?

Ms Sugden: — guest houses supplement that. When we move into the recovery phase, they will continue to have difficulties and will need ongoing financial support. Will the Minister put focus on trying to support guest houses?

Mrs Dodds: The member makes a really valid point. The tourism offering in Northern Ireland is not just about the five-star hotels, important as they are, or even the medium-sized hotels. Many people who visit the north coast, Fermanagh and places across Northern Ireland find themselves in really good accommodation in local guest houses and B & Bs. That is on my mind, and, as I have indicated, as we go forward, I will bring forward a paper on the options for further support.

Ms Sugden: I have received responses from the Finance Minister and the Economy Minister on accessing other supports, including the hardship fund. The difficulty for these guest houses is that they cannot access them, because, in order to do so, they must have employees, which, as I stated, typically they do not. The other difficulty is that the extension of the 12-month —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): We must have a question, or we will move on.

Ms Sugden: — business rate relief does not include those individuals either. Is there an opportunity to work with the Finance Minister to ensure that business that pay domestic rates could have access to rate relief for the remainder of the financial year?

Mrs Dodds: How that is set up is a matter for the Finance Minister, and I am sure that the Member has made representations to him on it. My officials can, of course, pass this on to him following this debate.

Mr Carroll: There has been much talk about the “new normal”, and we were led to believe that lessons had been learned from previous crises. However, it seems that the bosses at Bombardier, who are cutting hundreds of jobs, and the management of Debenhams, who are looking to follow suit, have not got the memo.

In relation to the advisory group, is it time for a totally new economic strategy that puts workers first rather than one that leaves the destiny of so many in the hands of so few?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his concern for the workers at Bombardier. It is very important that we provide support and help, going forward. I am, of course, keen to develop a new economic strategy for Northern Ireland, one that puts workers at its heart but also ensures that workers have jobs and businesses can flourish and allows those who can provide and support communities to get on with that job. The entrepreneurs and businesses in our society support many families across Northern Ireland, and we need to support them too.

Mr Carroll: Would the Minister advise all the people who are starting back to work tomorrow and are not in a trade union, especially those in retail, to join one to protect themselves and their health and safety at work?

Mrs Dodds: That, of course, is a matter of individual choice.

Mr McGrath: Minister, in reference to the B & B scheme, there is a successful scheme in Scotland that might be worth looking at to provide support for that sector.

I want to ask you about outdoor markets. If they are clear-cut, because they are outside in town centres or in open spaces, they are grand, but what if you must go through a building to get to the outside space? I have a social enterprise group in my constituency that helps to fund the work that they do. It is within a council building. Will you be advising councils that they should facilitate social enterprises for work that is permitted under other schemes, such as outdoor markets?

Mrs Dodds: I cannot comment on the specifics of it, but if you write to me, I will be very happy to do that or we can have a conversation about it at a later stage. I encourage all councils to work with businesses — social enterprises and the wider range of businesses — to ensure that we are opening up our economy safely in the days ahead in a way that boosts and creates jobs, supports families and keeps people safe.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Members, that concludes questions on the statement.

Mr McCrossan: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I know that other members will feel the same frustrations that I do. I travel two hours to the Chamber to represent my constituents and to be interrupted mid-question is entirely inappropriate. Also, Mr Deputy Speaker, to sit like this here behind that podium is not appropriate.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr McCrossan: It needs to be reviewed.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Order. If the member has any concerns, he should speak with the Speaker's Office. In my role as Deputy Speaker, I endeavour to ensure that everyone has an opportunity to ask their question and, indeed, questions. To enable me to do that, I have sought assistance from members to be concise in their introductions, and when I have felt that people have gone over that, I have drawn attention to that fact and sought their cooperation. If the member wishes to ensure that he gets two questions in the future, he, and all members, should remember that. It is also important not to challenge the Chair.

That concludes questions on the statement.

Agenda item 3 is the time, date and place of the next meeting. We have yet to receive confirmation from the Executive when Ministers will next make statements to the Committee. As soon as confirmation has been received, notification will be forwarded to members in the normal fashion.

I remind members that the next plenary sitting of the Assembly is scheduled to take place on Tuesday 16 June and that Ministers may continue to make oral statements to the Assembly on sitting days, perhaps with shorter notice.

That concludes the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response

25 June 2020

Ministerial Statement: Education

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Roy Beggs (Deputy Chairperson)
Ms Paula Bradley
Mr Jonathan Buckley
Mr Gerry Carroll
Mr Pat Catney
Mr Alan Chambers
Mr Gordon Dunne
Ms Sinéad Ennis
Mr Harry Harvey
Mr William Humphrey
Mr Gerry Kelly
Mr Chris Lyttle
Mr Daniel McCrossan
Mr Philip McGuigan
Mr Justin McNulty
Mr Andrew Muir
Ms Karen Mullan
Mr Mike Nesbitt
Mr John O'Dowd
Mr Matthew O'Toole
Mr Peter Weir
Miss Rachel Woods

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): We are now at the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response, and everyone is very welcome. Sorry for that slight delay.

Agenda item 1 is the minutes of proceedings of the previous meeting, which was held on 11 May. Members are asked to note those minutes, which I have agreed. Members should also note that the Minutes of Evidence from that meeting have been published in the Official Report and are available on the Committee's web page. Agenda item 2 is a statement from the Minister of Education. The Speaker received notification on 22 June that the Minister wished to make a statement to the Ad Hoc Committee at today's meeting. A copy of the statement that the Minister intends to make is included in your pack at page 7.

I welcome the Minister of Education to this meeting of the Committee. There will be opportunity for questions after the statement. I will endeavour to ensure that all members get an opportunity to ask a question, but I remind you that it is questions, not statements, and if members are succinct they may also be invited to ask a supplementary question.

I have the task of chairing this meeting. As a guide, there will be approximately one hour for questions. It will be tight allowing everyone to ask a supplementary question in that time frame, and that is why I need your cooperation. I may bring you to a question if you prolong your preamble, and you may not be allowed to ask a supplementary question. I also encourage the Minister to be succinct in his answers, so that we can deal with this in the time frame and allow every member to ask a question.

I invite the Minister to make his statement, which will be heard without interruption.

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker, for this opportunity to update the Ad Hoc Committee for the third time on the work that has been undertaken in the education sector in response to COVID-19. There have been important developments over the past weeks, and I wish to consolidate matters by making a statement today.

We are now just over three months from the beginning of lockdown, throughout which all areas of society have been dealing with great challenges. The issues that we are facing in education have never been encountered before. An incredible amount of work has gone into the development of policies and procedures to ensure that we continue to meet, as best we can, the learning needs of our pupils.

I would again begin by paying tribute to school principals, teachers, classroom assistants and all those who have been working hard and with such dedication in the wider educational sector at this challenging time.

In my previous appearances before the Committee I provided updates on a range of complex issues that have been addressed since lockdown. In recent weeks, those efforts have continued as we look to the future and put in place plans for the summer and the new school day. Whilst our response is ongoing, it is important that we begin planning for restart and recovery, and a process of phased reopening of our schools in a safe and effective manner, when conditions allow. Before I get to some of the detail of those plans, I would like to provide an update on a number of key issues.

In my updates to the Committee in May, I advised members of the launch of an income support scheme for substitute teachers who have been unable to avail themselves of any financial support through Government schemes related to COVID-19. The Department launched the income support scheme for substitute teachers on 19

May, with a closing date for applications of 26 May. I can advise that 1,650 substitute teachers will receive income through the scheme in June, and the vast majority of those received payments through the DE pay run on 16 June. A process is also in place to take any individual's special circumstances into account and, where applicable, payments for those will be made in the July pay run.

While the full cost of the scheme will not be known until late July, the costs will be lower than anticipated, mainly because not all those who were entitled to apply to the scheme did so. Substitute and permanent teachers will also receive the two-years' pay arrears for the 2017-19 pay settlement in the June pay run.

On 16 April I set out the details of the alternative arrangements for awarding GCSE, AS and A-level qualifications. Those arrangements placed a high degree of trust in our teaching profession and I know that teachers were very aware of their responsibilities towards their pupils. Despite the enormity of the task, schools met the tight deadlines set for submitting the centre-assessed grades to the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment. That data is now going through a process of standardisation to ensure that the final outcomes are fair and robust. While there is still some way to go through various stages of checking and validation, CCEA is on track to have results issued on the original published dates in August for all pupils, including private candidates. I want to thank every teacher and school leader involved in that process. It has been an enormous challenge, and I am very proud of the way that our teachers rose to it to ensure that their students will be able to progress to the next stage of their lives in September.

While the work on awarding this year has been progressing, my Department has commissioned the CCEA to bring forward proposals for examinations in the next academic year. If anything, given the uncertainty surrounding public health, this is an even more complex planning process than the arrangements for this year. Account needs to be taken of the impact of lost teaching time on students as well as the impact of any restrictions on teaching and assessment arrangements in the next academic year. For example, how will social distancing impact on the different types of assessments that make up qualifications, and what adjustments, if any, can be made without impacting the integrity and, therefore, the value of those qualifications?

Work will carry on over the summer, and more information will be made available at the earliest opportunity. However, while the work is being progressed, the starting point is that exams are the best, fairest and most accurate way of awarding qualifications. Therefore, every effort must be made to make sure that exams take place. CCEA is progressing plans for the normal November exams series, taking account of evolving public health guidance. This series involves only a small cohort of pupils, normally those taking GCSE single- and double-award science, so it will provide an opportunity to monitor any adaptations to exam arrangements.

Any lessons that can be drawn from this exam series will be used to further refine the planning for the remaining series in 2021.

Earlier this week, I published guidance for schools on curriculum planning for the 2020-21 academic year. The guidance provides advice and support to schools as they consider how to tailor and adapt delivery of the curriculum to support recovery when pupils return for the new academic year. My Department has also commissioned CCEA and the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) to provide further guidance to schools on effective ways in which the curriculum could be planned for, implemented and assessed in the new academic year. Those guidance documents will set out ways in which existing resources can be used to support remote and blended learning approaches and provide exemplars of current practice and resources that schools can adapt to reflect their circumstances. The guidance will add to the wide range of resources that have been collated, developed and disseminated to support school leaders and teachers during the pandemic.

We are fortunate that the Northern Ireland curriculum is specifically designed to be adaptable and dynamic and is, therefore, the ideal scaffold to support and underpin teaching and learning. Limited prescription gives schools flexibility to choose what to teach, for how long and how often, and to use approaches that best suit their pupils. The key message across the system is that the aim for 2020-21 is to support pupils to be motivated to learn and to become competent and independent learners through a curriculum that gives equal emphasis to knowledge, understanding and skills.

I want to thank all the teachers and staff who are working so hard to ensure that our pupils are supported at this time. I hope that they will find the guidance provided by the Department and our delivery partners helpful in supporting their planning.

In my previous statement to the Committee, I advised of the £12 million emergency package for childcare provision for key workers and the associated establishment of the childcare support scheme. Application forms were issued to open and closed day-care and school-age childcare settings on 6 May. Application forms for the approved home childcarer scheme and support for childminders were issued on 7 May. In order to allow the maximum opportunity for applications to be received, the closing date for applications for closed settings was extended until 12 June. Funding for the current COVID-19 childcare support scheme ends on 30 June, and demand for childcare and expenditure across all elements of the scheme is being monitored in line with the available £12 million budget. The amounts paid out under the childcare scheme are determined by the volume and nature of the applications submitted by the sector and by the assessment of eligible costs.

However, despite support put in place to assist applicants, and the closing date being extended, only 46% of closed settings applied. The Departments of Education and Health continue to work with the childcare reference group on the reasons for the smaller than expected numbers of applications. Initial findings suggest that many settings were in receipt of financial support from other sources. A number of applications are still to be processed for April and May, in addition to payments for June, so that amount will increase over the coming weeks.

I will come to plans for childcare sector recovery later in my statement. Turning to the arrangements for the summer period and beyond, the current arrangements for the educational supervision of vulnerable children and the children of key workers in schools will end on 30 June. Support for vulnerable children and the children of key workers will need to be reshaped for the summer. I am grateful for the support and provisions that have been provided by teachers and principals since 23 March 2020 when schools in Northern Ireland closed for all children, except for the children who were deemed vulnerable and for the children of key workers. Teachers and principals deserve a break over the summer, and we are, therefore, looking at alternative support mechanisms. The well-being of children and young people remains our primary concern and I recognise that certain groups may continue to need support during the summer months, but with focus shifting from the educational to play and leisure activities for vulnerable children and the children of key workers.

To mitigate the impact of ending the emergency educational scheme, I have gained the Executive's agreement to a number of measures that could support summer activities for those children and young people. I can confirm that the Education Authority (EA) is working with a number of special schools to make summer provisions for 2020. It should be noted that, given the impact of the pandemic, this will not be in the usual format of previous years. The EA is working in partnership with special schools to provide ideas and activities online for pupils, and also some tailored school-based summer schemes. The EA will shortly provide further details.

Although generic, non-targeted youth work provision ceased in March, the Education Authority and youth organisations have worked closely to ensure that the needs of vulnerable children and young people continue to be addressed. The statutory Youth Service will continue to provide support to vulnerable young people as part of the ongoing response.

In addition to the existing support, the statutory Youth Service will provide some small-group work, along with some further targeted outreach and detached work. There is an opportunity for voluntary sector youth providers, uniformed organisations and private sector providers to deliver limited summer programmes that prioritise the children of key workers aged nine to 13 and that are consistent with the public health restrictions that are in place. These programmes will complement existing online youth services.

Many of the voluntary youth workers who are funded by the EA are maintaining contact with their members online and they are developing creative solutions to deliver the curriculum. For example, in the creative sense. It is anticipated that that will continue during July and August.

Feedback from the youth centre indicates that youth workers are keen to support young people over the summer. We recognise that there are associated issues with adherence to the public health guidance, the training of volunteers and staff to ensure compliance, individual and personal concerns for some staff and volunteers and having the appropriate insurance cover. Departmental guidance for safe working in all educational settings in Northern Ireland was issued by the Department on 4 June. That has been shared with the youth sector and will be made available to all those who are involved in the running of summer schemes. Work has also commenced to develop additional, specific youth guidance.

The provision of summer programmes will be conditional on compliance with the Department of Education's safe work guidance and the relevant permissions with regard to the Executive's five-stage recovery plan.

The disruption to our children's learning owing to COVID-19 cannot be overestimated. I am considering how to bring forward projects to support learning for children over the summer and beyond. I brought forward a project called "Engage" to provide literacy and numeracy support, mental health interventions and the widening of nurture support for the 2021 academic year in socially deprived areas.

Free school meals have been the subject of considerable recent public debate, particularly in relation to concerns that some children will go hungry over the summer period. Direct payments in lieu of free school meals are scheduled to cease on 30 June. Subject to the availability of funding, the Executive have agreed that a similar but separate summer food scheme will be established to alleviate the hardship over the summer months for the families of children who are entitled to free school meals direct payments. Details on how the scheme will be delivered are being finalised and will be published shortly. In addition, I plan to extend and expand the EA's Eat Well, Live Well programme to provide healthy breakfasts and lunches to around 5,000 vulnerable young people.

The provision of home-to-school transport in September will be an extremely complex and challenging area of work. Any form of social distancing will have an impact on the EA's ability to transport all children to school by bus or taxi. The Education Authority is making every effort to maximise the number of children who can be safely transported, however, if any restrictions remain in place in social distancing, there is likely to be a substantial shortfall between the number of pupils who are eligible for home-to-school transport and the number of places available on vehicles, and that impact will undoubtedly be likely to be felt across all school sectors. I am looking at all options that could help to mitigate the disruption that would be caused to many families, and my officials and those of the Education Authority are working tirelessly with a range of key stakeholders on the issue.

Childcare is a key priority in Education Restart as well as being of the utmost importance in enabling parents to get back into the working environment. A paper on childcare sector recovery planning was discussed and agreed by the Executive on 18 June. The childcare recovery plan aims to restore the childcare sector to pre-COVID-19 capacity levels as quickly and as safely as possible. The aim of the plan is to ensure that parents can access childcare as and when they need it over the next few months. The widening of the key worker definition on 8 June and further on 16 June has been the first step in the reopening of the sector. In addition, in recognition of the need for childcare provision to align with Executive decision-making in relation to parents being able to return to work, from 29 June the definition of key worker will no longer apply for access to childcare, so it will be open to everyone. That will assist in the return to full capacity by enabling more providers to reopen and more parents to access registered childcare.

Childminders can care for children from four families in July and, from August, five families. There is no minimum or maximum number that a childcare setting can accommodate. However, childcare providers must adhere to the Department of Health's COVID guidance, which sets out the expectations on providers in terms of adherence to public health and infection control advice. For childcare settings, the guidance makes it clear that children should be cared for in play pods of up to 12 children and that pods should be kept apart. The layout of a play pod should comply with the minimum space-per-child requirements in the minimum standards. That will mean that some settings will not be able to operate at full capacity, although that will depend on how they organise the setting and the extent to which they can maximise the use of outdoor space.

The childcare recovery plan includes financial support for childcare providers to reopen. Further funding will be subject to Executive agreement, and the detail of a funding support scheme is being developed. In childcare terms, the announcement by the Executive on 22 June allowing up to six people to meet indoors will provide some flexibilities for families to access childcare support from another family member or a friend, thus providing informal childcare provision.

We are all too aware of the stresses felt by our teachers, our parents and our pupils due to the ongoing disruption and uncertainty regarding the future. The COVID-19 pandemic has presented significant challenges across society and has been particularly difficult for children and young people, parents and carers and the education workforce. About half of our schools have remained open for children of key workers and vulnerable children, although, as in other parts of the UK, the number of vulnerable children has been low. Many of those children particularly benefit from the structured support of a school setting away from what is often a challenging home environment, which is why supporting such children has been a key priority.

We will not know the final impact of the current crisis on children's safety, well-being and learning at this stage, but it is clear that the longer children remain out of school, the slower the recovery of lost learning. My strategic objective is to see the full-time resumption of classroom-based learning for all pupils as soon as possible, when it is safe to do so. Education is of vital importance for our children and our young people, not only for their lifelong opportunities but for their emotional well-being and development and for the fabric of wider society, including the economy. My Department is working on a restart programme that focuses on physical protection; well-being; vulnerable learners and special educational needs services; standards and learning; the new school day; and childcare.

Education Restart involves significant collaboration and co-design, and there is ongoing engagement with school principals, trade unions, managing authorities and sectoral bodies representing the various school sectors, parenting organisations and children and young people. Education Restart is also supported by the Public Health Agency and the Department of Health. Education recovery planning is based on the broad assumption that the education system will not be able to return to business as usual from day one. An immediate priority is, therefore, the development of strategic guidance for practical arrangements for the safe reopening of schools in August.

I want to put on record my appreciation for the work of the practitioners' group, which has worked tirelessly to co-design the New School Day framework guidance by which schools will plan reopening. The group delivered finalised guidance, which was considered and endorsed by the Executive on 18 June and published on 19 June, representing a significant step forward in the process of planning for the safe reopening of schools.

The guidance is focused on day one and will be supplemented by a range of additional operational guidance papers that cover a wide range of matters, such as transport, catering, curriculum and early years arrangements. I want to make an important clarification arising from the Executive's endorsement of the guidance and the social distancing assumptions under which planning for the reopening of schools will be planned. The Executive's decision was that schools should use a planning assumption of a two-metre social-distancing rule among adults and between adults and the pupils whom they are working with, and a one-metre social-distancing rule between pupils that, in order to limit transmission and movement within school settings, can and should where possible be further mitigated by the use of protective bubbles. The Executive have decided that the one-metre social-distancing assumption will apply to all year groups within a school setting, up to year 14 inclusive.

The practitioners' group reflected on the Executive's decision and acknowledged that, while protective bubbles will not be applied for years 11 to 14, the reduced instances of contact across the whole school, through the use of a bubble strategy in years 8 to 10, would be a mitigating factor against transmission and would, therefore, provide an appropriate rationale for applying a one-metre social-distancing rule across all year groups. I am grateful to the group for the professional insight that they brought to the consideration of the matter, which, from a practical perspective, will assist with planning decisions.

I am conscious that every school building and every classroom is different. Therefore, the guidance is not prescriptive: school leaders will be best placed to consider the guidance and implement it based on their own circumstances.

We are all aware of the challenges of physical distancing. These challenges are particularly acute within educational settings. The ongoing need for physical distancing will impact on how schools return by affecting, for example, class sizes, attendance patterns, catering arrangements and the structure of the school day. These measures are designed to be deployed when schools return in August and September and will need to be reviewed in advance of the new school term to ensure that they align with the wider public health position at that point. In all our work, we will continue to be guided by the medical and scientific arrangements.

We remain in a fluid situation. My overriding aim remains a full return, for every pupil, to full-time classroom learning. The restart arrangements that I have outlined reflect the current position but I hope that, if the wider public health situation continues to improve, further decisions will be able to be taken before the start of the new term to enable schools to resume classroom teaching for all students, full-time, subject to protections to mitigate risk and to protect public health.

In closing, Mr Speaker, the challenges that we are dealing with in education are unprecedented. Although our overall approach to managing the COVID-19 virus must, rightly, remain cautious, the work towards Education Restart is a positive step in our wider recovery.

I would like to thank, again, all school leaders, teachers, non-teaching staff and parents for their continued work to support not just our vulnerable people and the children of key workers but the tens of thousands of pupils in our education system.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): I thank the Minister for his statement. There will now be approximately one hour for questions. I remind members of what I said at the start of the meeting: questions should not be prefaced by a speech or a statement. They should be succinct, particularly if you wish to ask a supplementary question. You should aim for a single sentence question and introduction if you wish to ask a supplementary question. Again, I encourage the Minister to be concise.

I call the Chair of the Committee for Education, Chris Lyttle, who, as normal, will be given a little more latitude.

Mr Lyttle (Committee Chair - Committee for Education): I also thank the teaching staff, non-teaching staff, parents and pupils across Northern Ireland for their leadership and hard work during the public health emergency.

As of today, 600 children in Northern Ireland have been waiting longer than the statutory limit of six months for a statement of special educational need. There are 285 children with statements of special educational need who do not yet have a school place for September 2020, and 156 of those children are without a place in a special school. These are some of the most vulnerable children in our community. The children, their families, their schools and the Assembly demand to know what specific action the Education Minister has taken to arrest the dysfunctionality of special educational need statementing and area planning that is failing children with special educational needs in Northern Ireland.

Mr Weir: I thank the member for his question. The figures that he mentioned are unacceptable. It is clear that the assessment that was done of, and the inquiry that was held into, the Education Authority produced a range of recommendations that showed dysfunctionality in the Education Authority in relation to special educational needs. Those recommendations are being implemented. There has been delay because of the COVID situation. As part of that — although, ultimately, a lot of this is internal to the EA — we are keeping a close monitoring arrangement on it and ensuring, for instance, that there is a representative of the Department on any implementation board. Those are, if you like, the systemic issues that need to be tackled in the short to medium term. There is also the very specific issue of the unplaced children. Today my officials have been meeting — the Executive have been meeting at the same time — the Education Authority to discuss the issue. We expect to see progress on that. For each family within that, it creates an enormous burden and uncertainty. It needs to be tackled as quickly and thoroughly as possible, because it is unacceptable that any child is left without a school place.

Mr Lyttle: Given the dysfunction of the special educational need statementing and area planning processes, does the Minister accept that his suspension of the independent review of education was wrong and that it must be restarted immediately?

Mr Weir: With respect, I have not suspended the independent review of education. Perhaps the member should check his facts in relation to that. The position is that the review, as well as the independent panel, is part of the New Decade, New Approach commitments, which we are progressing. There is budget for that. To establish them will require us to identify who the members will be and what the terms of reference will be — everything. Indeed, the approach that has been taken by the Executive as a whole has been to focus everything that they can on the COVID situation. Those issues will be progressed as quickly as possible and as soon as possible, but there has been no suspension of any of it, and it would be misleading to give the impression that it has been suspended.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his statement. I, too, on behalf of my party, thank the principals, teachers, auxiliary staff, parents and, not least, children for their forbearance during the COVID-19 situation.

In relation to youth work and voluntary youth work, the Minister said that youth workers are keen to support young people over the summer. I raised this issue yesterday at the Education Committee with the permanent secretary of his Department and the chief executive of the Education Authority. I implore the Minister and those involved in education, particularly the Youth Service —

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Can the member finalise his question?

Mr Humphrey: [Inaudible] absolutely crucial that interface work in areas like north Belfast should continue over the summer, to alleviate problems and pressures at interfaces.

Mr Weir: Yes [Inaudible] very specifically — I do not think it was directly mentioned in the statement — particularly working with communities, working with the DOJ, working with the police in interface areas where we are seeing at-risk children, those are very much at the forefront of the interventions of Youth Service. Those programmes are being worked on on a multi-agency basis to ensure that they continue throughout the summer. That is in addition to whatever wider youth work is done throughout the summer. Certainly, there will be a focus on that, and there has been a discussion at various departmental levels to ensure that that progresses.

Ms Mullan: Minister, thank you for your statement. I also want to pay tribute to teaching and non-teaching staff, parents, guardians and young people at this time.

Further to Mr Humphrey's question about youth provision, you have given an update this week and you have given an update in your statement, but youth settings, particularly community and voluntary ones, are still awaiting guidance. They have not received the update. When should they expect to receive that guidance?

Mr Weir: Well, as part of that, which was, I think, suggested at the Executive, indeed in terms of dealing with the paper, I think it is also helpful that we are moving towards a youth sector reference group, which will mirror the childcare reference group. Youth workers and a range of agencies will be involved in that. The idea will be to have guidance available not simply for those who are directly doing youth work through the EA, but there is a very big role for the voluntary and community sector, private organisations, uniformed organisations and church groups and that there is permissibility over the summer, and that it is done in connection with the guidance. The EA will act as a signpost for that and will make sure that any group that is doing any level of organisation is given that guidance.

Ms Mullan: I also welcome that teachers and sub teachers received their two-year pay accrual in the June payroll. In relation to plans for sub teachers for September, is there a plan and funding in place to allow schools to employ extra sub teachers and classroom assistants to allow as many children as possible to get back into the classroom given social distancing?

Mr Weir: If we face any additional costs that arise out of a restart, those will be met by the Department. I think that will be very clear. Substitute teachers will play a role when teachers are off sick.

I have made it very clear that we are preparing for the scenario in which we try and maximise that, but I am very hopeful that we can reach a situation where every child is in school, and we can find a slightly different formula. There is a range of mitigation measures already in place as a result of the guidance, which apply, to some extent, whether you have schools that are 50% full, 80% full or 100% full. I am very hopeful that we can move towards that.

There will potentially be a key role for substitute teachers if funding for the Engage programme is accepted. It might not be the exact same, but members will remember the signature projects that were done a number of years ago and which were very successful. There will be a key role as we look to widen the number of those who will be involved in the education system. That will apply to substitute teachers as well.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. When GCSE and A-level results are sent out to parents, it is largely unchallengeable if there is significant discontent among parents and schools because CCEA's untested and unbenchmarked model has changed the moderated grades awarded through teachers' professional judgement. Are you simply going to tell everyone to suck it up and make the best of it, or do you have an alternative plan?

Mr Weir: The vernacular that the member uses is not what I would use. While the assessment of the grades is made by individual teachers, there has to be moderation between centres. It is part of human nature that, where you get two or more people, for example in an interview situation, you and I sit on a panel and we may both decide who the best candidate is, but you may score that person 80% and I may score them 60% because one of us is a hard marker and one is not. So, from the point of view of fairness, there has to be centre assessment. That will apply across the board and across different jurisdictions if grades are being awarded on that basis. Otherwise, there would not be the level of robustness and fairness in the system to ensure that we have a reasonable position for all students.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can post-primary schools be assured that decisions around the content of the GCSE, AS and A-level curriculum and around exams, if any, that will go ahead in the 2020-21 academic year will be made well before the schools return in September so that teachers can prepare for learning and teaching?

I note in your statement that you said that normal exams will resume in November. How can it be normal when this has been a very abnormal year and children have been out of school since March?

Mr Weir: Maybe normality is in the eye of the beholder. A small number of exams normally take place in November. The intention is for those to go ahead. As we scope the way ahead, it is likely that there will be a paring down to basics of the curriculum — I think that the flexibility of the Northern Ireland curriculum allows for that. We need not only that detailed advice from CCEA but, to be fair, broader advice on the curriculum. That is particularly true of public examinations at GCSE, AS level and A level. We also have to take cognisance that of the fact that it is not simply the Northern Ireland board, through CCEA, that delivers those exams. We need to ensure that, particularly where there is competition between different jurisdictions, there is a relatively level playing field, so that, above all else, none of our pupils is disadvantaged.

It is clear, and I think that there must be an expectation among parents, given the circumstances, that what can be delivered through the curriculum in the autumn of 2020 will not necessarily be the same as that in 2018 and 2019. There will also need to be a certain level of expectation management. However, the aim is to provide as broad a curriculum as possible. Where things need to be brought down to basics, they will be. We have the flexibility in the curriculum, which is not overtly prescriptive, to enable that to happen.

Mr Nesbitt: Can I just double-check that summer schemes or summer schools that take place on school campuses can go ahead, including those organised by the private sector?

Mr Weir: There is no particular problem with that. The only issue around any sort of summer scheme will be compliance with public health guidance. If the Public Health Agency puts a limit on numbers and use of space, for example, that will apply. That guidance will be there. The idea is that, provided people fulfil public health guidance and, therefore, do not step outside the regulations that are there, there is permissibility for those schemes to go ahead. That is critical because things that can be done from the broad statutory settings will take us so far, but I think that there is an opportunity and a strong desire amongst many community, voluntary and private sector organisations to provide some release for our young people, many of whom have been left in a very difficult situation since March.

It is important that that release is managed and controlled. In recent weeks, I think that we have seen, perhaps, at one end of the scale, very large gatherings of young people, which were not helpful. However, I want to pay tribute to young people. I have seen countless examples of the great work that young people have done throughout the crisis, particularly in providing support to the elderly, for instance, and in a whole range of ways. However, we need to ensure that the necessary release of tension that can happen over the summer is done in a managed and controlled way. I think that there is a key role for voluntary and uniformed organisations and private providers to do that.

Mr Nesbitt: Two specific questions, if I may. Is the social distance, indoor and outdoor, still 2 metres? Is the maximum group size, including an adult supervising or mentoring, still 10?

Mr Weir: On the basis that we are not quite at the start of the summer and issues around social-distancing regulations are evolving, it would be a matter of ensuring that what is there is compatible at the time. Again, as we are in a fluid situation, that might be something that may end up moving according to the level of easement. I think it is important that what is done is compatible with whatever the time frame is for a particular venture to take place. At the moment, the easement is going in one direction, so I think that anybody can assume that the most restrictive the guidelines are likely to be over the summer is where we are today.

Ms P Bradley: The Minister talked about a project called Engage; will he give us a little bit more detail on that and when it is due to start?

Mr Weir: We are looking at a number of things, including smaller learning interventions over the summer. Undoubtedly, no matter what great work has been done through remote learning, there will have been some loss of continuity of learning. There is a wider group in the Department looking at continuity of learning. However, it is clear that we need a focused, tailored piece of work that will stretch over most of the next academic year, where support can be put in place. That is particularly focussed, given the constraint on resources, on areas and schools where there is social deprivation. There is undoubtedly a concern that, often, those in deprived areas will have suffered most because of the lockdown and may have lost opportunities. It is critical that we have that focused level of intervention. That will focus principally on literacy and numeracy, but there will be other areas of catch-up. The detail of that is being scoped out with experts and with the likes of the ETI and teachers, so that we can have a full scheme that, assuming that there is funding for it, can kick in early in the new academic year. That could have a major impact in bridging some of the gaps and the potential loss of learning that we have faced during the spring months of this year.

Ms P Bradley: How up to date is the definition of "socially deprived" in the Department? I represent North Belfast, which can go from one end of the scale to the other and has lots of pockets of social deprivation. Often, identified need is not identified. In the broader sense, can others be brought into it who are not recognised as being from a socially deprived area?

Mr Weir: From that point of view, we will want to try to get the best possible definition to ensure that resources are most targeted. We are looking at a scheme that will be significant in its ambitions, and we want to make sure that it can be relatively widely drawn to provide that level of support.

Ms C Kelly: Minister, given the underspend in the childcare support scheme, will you ensure that any new financial support package is less complex to allow providers to reopen their doors and support parents returning to work?

Mr Weir: There have been a few problems. You are right: we need to ensure that whatever is put forward and administered by Education and Health is less complex. Therefore, moving forward, there are lessons to be learned from the scheme.

It is undoubtedly the case that there have been a number of catch-22 situations. One of those has been that the support that has been available, particularly to childcare settings, has come from different sources and, effectively, the support has perhaps been available but has been drawn down differently. That has been significant. There have also been issues with the turnaround speed from a regulatory point of view from the Department of Health and the health trusts, and there has been a commitment from the Department of Health for that to happen much more quickly.

The critical issue is the alignment of supply and demand. You can provide all the support in the world for a setting to open, but, if it is so heavily restricted in the numbers that it can provide for, it will not be sustainable. That is why the widening of the definition of key workers and the movement to effectively open it up across the board have been critical. While public health is vital, any restrictions on numbers that are applied from a practical point of view on the ground must be sustainable to enable those settings to reopen. It is about trying to ensure that there is that alignment between supply and demand. One of the issues on the other side that, I suspect, will have some impact is that we are likely to come out of this with higher unemployment. For some families who would normally choose childcare, their most practical option may be for children to remain at home during that period. There is also an interlinkage between that and school openings.

Ms C Kelly: Will the Minister ensure that the community and voluntary sector, which provides preschool education in our local communities, is included in any new support package? It was not eligible to apply for the previous scheme.

Mr Weir: I will certainly raise that. The package is not entirely within my gift. It will need to be signed off by the Department of Finance and much of the regulatory side lies with the Department of Health, but I am happy to work with colleagues to ensure that that point is borne in mind as we move ahead.

Mr Harvey: Minister, will you assure us that rural country schools are invaluable, going forward? In most cases, there is more room available in them for working at the required distances, and, therefore, they make for safer working conditions for pupils and teachers alike.

Mr Weir: I had the opportunity to visit a rural primary school yesterday. One of the levels of complexity around what is doable is a combination of the physical size of the classes and the number of pupils. It tends to be that the smaller schools, particularly in a rural setting, are probably better placed to have a full return, even on the basis of social distancing.

I reiterate that it is important that our aim is to reach a point at which we can provide safe provision for everybody to be back all the time. I would like to feel that we are moving towards that goal as we move towards the new academic year. As part of that, we need to plan for a range of scenarios. However, I think that a lot of rural schools, particularly at primary level, are quite well placed to be able to do that.

Mr Harvey: Thank you, Minister, for your answer. Can the Minister assure us that the necessary funding will be available for rural schools for that purpose?

Mr Weir: I do not want to create a turf war between rural schools and urban schools or, indeed, those in a suburban area. I think that the honourable Member for North Down would be growling at me at that point.

It is the case that, where there are additional resource implications in doing what needs to be done to help to reopen schools, those will be met, be that for deep cleans or the PPE required. There is a range of those types of issues.

Given the pressures on the resource budget, where additional money needs Executive support, I will work with Executive colleagues to see whether that can be found and to see what can be capitalised within the system. The pressure on capital funding, in the short term, is likely to be less of a pressure than on the resource side. I am confident that we can give assurance to schools that whatever funds are needed to be able to get them to reopen will be met centrally.

Mr McGuigan: As a result of COVID, blended learning is a new and sudden phenomenon for teachers, schoolchildren and parents. Despite the Minister's objective of, ultimately, getting all children back, blended learning is likely to continue. In his statement, the Minister mentioned guidance. When is that guidance likely to be made available?

Mr Weir: Guidance on remote learning has been given out. Having visited a number of schools yesterday, I know that a lot of work on remote learning, which forms the other side of blended learning, is being developed and supported.

The member makes a valid point about the necessity for some blended learning. Even if we are in a position, come August and September, where we have a route to get everybody back in, for a minority of children, perhaps because of a condition or a particular vulnerability, it may not be suitable for them to be in school all week. Some children may have a condition that means that they need additional protection, and, therefore, they have to work from home. It will be a necessity to have some remote learning and blended learning no matter what.

Having been thrown into an entirely unprecedented situation in March, schools have done a lot of work and a lot of thinking has gone on. I will not name the school, but I was at a school, yesterday, where a presentation was given on the various elements of preparation done, including on remote learning. The amount of work that has been put in is remarkable, as is the quality of that work.

However, I think that everybody will accept that any blended learning and remote learning is, at best, a substitute for classroom teaching. I think that everybody shares the view that we want, as soon as possible, to get children back into the classroom and back into something that, while it is not quite a normal routine, at the very least, means that they are in school five days a week.

Mr McGuigan: I echo the Minister's praise for the good work on blended learning that has been done in schools and by parents. Is it likely that additional training or practical support will be offered?

Mr Weir: Any support that is needed can be provided. Training will be more difficult at times, because we will not be getting large numbers of people into one hall or one room — the normal method of training — to do it. There are resources, and there can be a level of support.

Throughout the crisis, every school has had a link officer appointed to it by the EA or the ETI to provide that level of support, so no school will be left isolated in that sense. That route of information and help can be provided to them if they need that level of additional help and support. The flip side of that is that schools should put any innovative practices that, they think, are worth sharing out through the system. One of the positives to come out of this major crisis is the number of schools that have come up with innovative ways of doing things and thinking about things. There are lessons to be learned when we get past the COVID crisis that can lead to better teaching methods and better ways of doing things. There is always something positive to take out of this terrible and unprecedented overall position.

Mr McNulty: Minister, will you pay tribute, along with me, to the multitasking parents who have been juggling their careers and homeschooling? A regular occurrence of the pandemic — a ray of sunshine in the gloom of the pandemic — has been the children who have gatecrashed Zoom calls and meetings. It has been wonderful.

On a more serious note, Minister, you said that direct payments in lieu of free school meals were scheduled to cease on 30 June 2020, subject to availability of funding. That is just over four days away. Are you saying that, from Tuesday, children could go hungry?

Mr Weir: No. Technically speaking, the vires for free school meals is linked in directly with the school year, so a different route would be taken. There is consensus and agreement among all parties about the need for those payments to continue. The methodology for the timing of the payments would be slightly different over the summer anyway. There would probably be a payment in July and a payment in August that would cover the full period. There is no political disagreement over this; everybody is on the same page. Northern Ireland should be proud of the range of families that we support and the level that is supported, because it is on a much more extensive level than happens elsewhere. For example, we estimate the level of support that will be provided over the summer to be around £12 million or £12.5 million for a cohort of roughly 100,000 children who would be impacted. If you compare that with England, which is 30 times the size of Northern Ireland in population, you will see that, over the summer, they will provide a maximum of around £120 million. There is a much greater level of support here. We are also supporting the Eat Well, Live Well campaign. It covers 5,000 of the most vulnerable children, not as an alternative to free school meals but in addition to them.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Minister and the teaching staff for their hard work throughout the pandemic. I welcome the clarity in the Minister's statement regarding the desire for full-time educational provision in September. The decision to move from social distancing of one metre is key to that happening, albeit that it still has its problems. Will the Minister outline his rationale for the move?

Mr Weir: Following the previous question, I omitted to mention that I join the honourable Member for Newry and Armagh in paying tribute to the hard work that parents have done throughout the process in juggling and multitasking, where possible.

The move to one metre was very carefully considered. There were discussions with PHA and the Department of Health, and we worked closely with them on the guidance. It is abundantly clear that the level of risk of illness or serious illness to children is much lower than it is to the adult population. The curve starts to move up for those of us who are 45 and over. I know that the honourable Member is in a category where the risk to him is a lot lower than it is for many others in the Chamber. There is, perhaps, a bit of a misconception about distancing. There is no such thing as a safe distance. There is not safety at one metre, there is not safety at two metres, and there is not safety at three metres. It is about mitigating risk. The first step that we were able to take was moving the distance down to one metre, which is now being replicated in other areas. If we can have alternative arrangements and make a gear change that means that we are able to provide a different methodology that enables every child, barring the most medically vulnerable, to be in school, we should try to make that gear change, the medical situation permitting, before the end of the summer.

Mr Buckley: To date, the Minister's approach has been informed by the scientific and medical advice. Is he aware that the Secretary of State for Education is expected to announce that pupils in England will not be expected to adhere to social distancing while in school and that the current bubbles of 15 can be increased to include entire classes? Has the Minister had the opportunity to view or request the medical advice that informed that decision?

Mr Weir: We are in constant contact with the Departments of Education throughout the rest of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. Bubbling will play a critical role. I think that the vast majority of medical people would accept that, from a practical point of view, particularly when dealing with very young children, the concept of, for example, five- and six-year-olds socially distancing from each other is somewhat fictional. Therefore, the bubble scenario represents a good way forward.

We will look at what happens in August, September and beyond to inform our judgements on what can be done in schools. Clearly, we are not quite at that point, so we will have to consider how this is seen in the broader medical situation in the community. We are on a good trajectory, and I believe that this will lead to different ways of providing that level of safety.

We should remember that, during the COVID situation, we have got very hung up on specific measures, even social distancing, being the means to an end rather than the end itself. The end is ensuring that we have proper protection for all our people. As the situation moves on, some things will change, and I hope, in the very near future, to see a situation that allows a full return to school, albeit with a range of mitigating measures to provide that level of protection.

Ms Ennis: Minister, difficulties relating to internet connectivity and the level of access that some children and young people have to appropriate IT equipment for learning have been raised consistently with you over the last number of months. You previously stated that work would be undertaken to procure laptops for every child and young person who needed one for this academic year. May we have an update on that work?

Mr Weir: We talked about this being done in three stages. The first stage was devices that were, effectively, in the system. Initially, back in March/Easter time, there was a misconception that, if you simply took such devices out of schools, they would not be compatible with what had to be done at home. The system is one that can be quickly adapted by C2k, so those devices are starting to be lent out. Also around that stage, a consignment had been procured by the Education Authority, and I know, having spoken to a principal this morning who indicated that their primary school was handing out some of them this week, that those devices are starting to be rolled out. As part of that, the Department will procure additional devices as well. That should give relatively comprehensive coverage.

There is a more difficult situation to which the solution is limited to more old-fashioned methods. In some parts of the country, you could provide the best possible device but, if there is no broadband connection or a certain level of internet coverage, it will be of limited value. Schools know where those areas are. They have been working and will continue to work with fallback options. Sometimes, paper packs will be needed. There are certain things that lie under my control, and I can try to influence those. However, the extent to which I can influence broadband coverage throughout Northern Ireland may be, in all aspects, entirely beyond my control. The aim is to try to ensure that all pupils are covered. The best possible solution is if we can reach a point where a large amount of home learning is not needed, because the children are in school.

Ms Ennis: I thank the Minister for his response. Across South Down, I have been contacted by a wide spread of parents who are adversely affected by not having access to adequate IT equipment. Can the Minister guarantee that the parents and children who need it will have that equipment by the end of August?

Mr Weir: The aim is to have everybody covered. What we found, in surveying schools, was that, while some schools raised the issue of internet coverage — there will have to be different solutions to that — it was rare that there are no devices in a household. The pressure came from multiple members of a family needing to use one or two devices. That is where targeting will take place. We will roll that out as quickly as possible. With the provision of devices, there has been a structure in which priority is given to children in years 12 and 14, and then to vulnerable children. There is a range of priorities that we are trying to work through in the lending of those devices. From a financial point of view, the capital investment should not be eye-watering, unlike some other aspects of this crisis. It should be something that we can meet, and we are committed to it.

Mr Muir: I declare an interest in that I am on the board of governors of Priory Integrated College in Hollywood. Minister, why are 285 children who have statements of special educational need still without a place for September?

Mr Weir: Each year, there is a disjoint between the numbers who have applied and the number of places available. This year, it is much greater than in previous years. There has been, at times, a dysfunctionality on the placement side. While I was at today's Executive meeting, my officials were meeting with the EA — a meeting that was planned before these numbers were known — with the aim of taking whatever action is needed to help to resolve the situation.

There will always be a slight disjoint because some locations are completely full. On some occasions, a place has been offered to a parent, but the parent is not happy with the offer. It is not always as straightforward as there having been no offer made. There is less opportunity for variability, depending on the nature of the unit that a child may need to go into. There is a lot less flexibility in that than in the normal school system. As the member is aware, and as we have seen for a number of years in North Down, the demand for places has outstripped the supply. There is greater flexibility in mainstream school placements to have, for instance, temporary variations. However, if you are operating to a specific special needs unit, which is effectively restricted to, for example, 15 pupils, there is no opportunity to put in an extra couple of pupils. There is not that level of flexibility.

The numbers are unacceptable, and the Department is working with EA, which has the operational responsibility for this, to try to make sure that the problem is solved as quickly as possible.

Mr Muir: I thank the Minister for his response. What responsibility do he and his Department take for this area-planning failure for children with special educational needs?

Mr Weir: I do not necessarily accept that it is an area-planning issue. A combination of concerns has been raised. A report has been written on the functioning of the EA as regards special educational needs. The report has made recommendations, and those are being implemented. One of the problems has been that making the corrective changes has not been done as quickly and as well as it would normally be. Across a range of things in government, the shift has been to dealing with the immediate crisis of COVID. That means that not everything that can be done is being done as quickly as it could be. It is clear that that represents an ongoing need to provide a much more systemic challenge in relation to special educational needs.

We are also working on guidance. We are conscious of the fact that, as we head into August and September, there will be challenges for children with special educational needs, particularly with regard to schools. Consequently, in addition to the general guidance that has been provided to schools, the special schools' principals have been working alongside us to make bespoke guidance available to special schools. That is currently being reviewed by PHA to make sure that it is fit for purpose; I think that it should be issued fairly shortly so that we can make sure that we get things right for all our pupils this autumn.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his statement and for all his efforts in recent times during the COVID crisis. We all endorse what has been said about recognising the good work of teachers, especially in those schools that have stayed open for key workers' families.

I am sure that the Minister has been working on the challenge of providing transport to schools. Has he considered how he is going to transport children to schools? I appreciate that Translink has a responsibility, but he has responsibility for a fleet of yellow buses. How are we going to fit the children into those buses? Has he thought about using sanitisers or some form of mild protective equipment?

Mr Weir: Hygiene will be a critical issue and buses will need to be cleaned much more frequently. We are working with the Department for Infrastructure and Translink on the matter. Some of the mitigations for public transport are a live issue for the Executive and we are working to resolve them. It is clear that unless we get over those issues, that will create pressures on school transport. We need to look at where we can mitigate to ensure that we can cater for the maximum number possible. It is undoubtedly the case that children do not create the same level of risk as adults; that is something else that needs to be taken into consideration.

I anticipate that, next year, it is likely that there will be behavioural shifts in relation to travel. I am sure that many members, including me, would like to see much more active travel to school. However, in practical terms, the vast majority of additional travel will involve parents transporting their children, although there will also be a shift in that. We have to make sure that we align, as much as possible, school transport provision to what is needed.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): I will allow Gordon Dunne a brief supplementary question.

Mr Dunne: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker; you are very generous. I thank the Minister for his answer. Has he looked at using alternative transport providers? As he said, it is important that children are transported in a safe and hygienic environment.

Mr Weir: Yes, all of that will be considered. The only restriction on alternative providers is that the volume in the market will be such that that would add a level of easement to the situation. In and of itself, that is not a solution because I do not think that the volume that would be available could meet the anticipated need.

There is also a wider issue that the Executive need to consider. If we end up in a situation where, in transport in general, but for children in particular, there is a restriction on how many people can be on a bus, that will have major implications not just for schools but for the wider economy as well. That is why there needs to be an Executive-wide solution. If I may speak for my colleagues, the Executive are very cognisant of that and they are working hard to find a solution.

Mr O'Dowd: I am sure that the Minister is conscious of Mr Buckley's advice on Mr Williamson's social distancing for schools in England. It would appear from Tory media reports that Mr Williamson will be facing social distancing from the Cabinet by the autumn, so I would caution him about taking that advice on board.

I want to ask about children with profound special educational needs and summer schemes and activities for those pupils. Will the Minister outline what consultation there has been with parents and pupils in that sector?

Mr Weir: The Department of Health, the Education Authority and my Department have been working closely on that to scope out what can be done. It is also about what can be done by youth workers. While there has been reference, for example, to what is happening in the Republic, some of that has been a little bit over-spun. I want to see the maximum amount of summer scheme support that can be made available.

I do not know whether the Member, when talking about social distancing in the Cabinet, was offering to swap jobs or whether he feels that he is well enough out of it.

We will look at the advice coming from not only England but from other jurisdictions. One advantage of us not being in a position to implement everything is to learn lessons from outside. For example, bubbling has been used extensively in a number of European countries. I am not going to become a Europhile all of a sudden, but we can all learn lessons from different parts of the world. It is about having the maximum amount of knowledge and being able to apply it. Sometimes, things are done elsewhere that are not applicable to Northern Ireland. We have our own unique circumstances as well.

Mr O'Dowd: I can assure the Minister that I do not envy any of the Ministers' roles at the moment, and I wish you all well.

Is the Minister be hopeful that there will be provision over the summer for children with special educational needs?

Mr Weir: There will be provision but not to the same extent as in previous years. It is the same with other Youth Service availability. There will be a level of restriction caused by coronavirus, but the Department of Health, the Public Health Agency and the Education Authority will be pulling together as well as coordinating with schools on what provision can be made available.

Mr Catney: Thank you, Minister. I pay tribute to the Education Authority youth workers, especially in my Lagan Valley constituency, who adapted quickly to provide services and support to children online. There has been some fantastic engagement in these difficult times, and those workers deserve our thanks.

I am concerned about the Minister's comments on the impact on transport services, particularly for children with disabilities. I have asked the Minister to keep a close eye on that and make sure that it impacts as little as possible.

I thank the Minister for his clarification on social-distancing protective bubbles. However, given the ad hoc way that the Executive have been making decisions on the relaxing of restrictions, what assurances can he give to teachers and principals that they will not have to work through the summer to put those arrangements in place only for the Executive to change their mind come September?

Mr Weir: There needs to be a level of preparation. I am judging that the member may be adopting a one-metre rule in his distance from People Before Profit. It does not seem to be sufficiently distant.

We have to prepare for all eventualities. I take on board the point that was made. If we reach a situation in which we can make a gear change —. Given that we are two months out from the start of term, we cannot do everything absolutely 100% at this stage. The vast bulk of the preparations that are being made will apply in all circumstances. For example, with regard to how to create a bubble situation in a primary school, one school that I was at talked about base classrooms where the teachers move around rather than the pupils. There will be arrangements on hygiene and on making sure that unnecessary interactions do not happen. Arrangements on school meals will be different from school to school. There will be arrangements on dropping off and collecting children, or how to discourage parents from being in reception. Until we reach a point at which COVID is completely behind us, those arrangements will be there, irrespective of whether we have one metre, two metres or a different form of social distancing, although it may mean that we reach a point at which some of the work gets overtaken by events.

Teachers, parents, pupils and everybody else will welcome a scenario in which we can move safely to a point at which we are able to resume something that is a lot closer to normal. If people, to some extent, then feel that some of their work was unnecessary, it will be in a benign manner that essentially says, "Actually, we are able to move forward for everybody's benefit". That would be welcomed by pretty much everybody.

Mr Chambers: Minister, I appreciate that you have been faced with many difficult challenges during the pandemic, as indeed have our dedicated professional —

Mr Catney: On a point of order —.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Order. This is a Committee, and there are no points of order at Committee. [Interruption.] Order, members. I have been given the task of having the Committee last approximately one hour. We regularly go over that and I allow some flexibility. In order to do so, I need your cooperation. I indicated at the start and have indicated a number of times that, if you have a long preamble, there will not be a supplementary question. I have called that on a number of members. There is a choice for members: if they have a long preamble, they will not get a supplementary question.

Mr Chambers: I will start again. Minister, I appreciate that you have been faced with many difficult challenges during the pandemic, as indeed have our dedicated professional educators. I acknowledge with gratitude the work that has gone into confronting those challenges.

Human nature will dictate that some children will have worked harder at home than others during the period of school closures. Some will have received more parental support than others. Indeed, the sad reality is that some children will have received no parental support during the closures. Will schools have systems in place to gauge exactly where each child is in relation to their educational needs on their return to the classroom? Will teachers have the time and opportunity to fill any gaps that they identify?

Mr Weir: The answer is threefold. First, schools will be in a good position to assess where their children are. We can make presumptions at this stage, but we will not know precisely until we see the lie of the land when children return in the autumn. The catch-up required will be reflected in the curriculum. It will be about returning to the basics of the curriculum. I mentioned specific interventions through Engage. Over the summer, we will also be looking at a number of smaller projects that are more limited in scope. Therefore, it will be a combination of those measures. Undoubtedly, different pupils will be at different stages and have received different levels of support. We have to do all that we can to help pupils to catch up.

Mr O'Toole: Minister, in your statement, you reiterate that there is a £12 million emergency package for the childcare sector. I believe that the Education Committee heard this week that only £700,000 of that has been disbursed. Is that right? Can you give an indication of why that is? Is it that the criteria were too tight?

Mr Weir: There is still some money being processed as part of that. We will not know the final figure until a little bit later. I indicated a range of factors. A range of the childcare settings have been receiving financial support from other sources. In some of those cases, this package is either not needed or the other sources are seen as less cumbersome routes. The methodology that was used probably did put off some people. However, principally, there is a need for greater alignment of the supply and demand. It may be too restricted in respect of key workers, for example. There was a problem, particularly at the start, in that the Department of Health's definition of a key worker was much narrower than that of the rest of the Executive. That limited the number of parents who could avail themselves of the service. Consequently, even with financial support, the number of childcare settings in which it made financial sense to open on a very limited basis was limited. It is also that there would not be a form of double payment for closed settings and, therefore, some settings found other schemes that were more lucrative or provided that support. It is about adapting the system and making sure that, in our recovery, we widen the system to try to have that alignment between what parents need and what the economy needs and between supply and demand.

Mr O'Toole: Just on those numbers, the statement says:

"only 46% of closed settings applied."

If just £700,000 has been disbursed, that is a little more than 5% of the overall number. What will happen with the rest of that money, particularly given that the childcare sector is in crisis? Will it just be sucked back into the centre?

Mr Weir: Strictly speaking, any money that is unspent has to be directly surrendered to the centre, but an additional bid has been made to carry things on beyond June. I suspect that, although this is beyond simply my control, there will be some recycling of that money to make sure that it is available. We need to make sure that resources are available to meet the demand that is out there.

Mention has been made of the closed settings, for instance. The closed settings, because they were closed, got a level of support, albeit that it was at a lower percentage than was hoped for. The message that has certainly come back to me via others is that, in some cases, that has effectively enabled childcare settings to keep their head above water and to be in a position to resume when we see more of an opening up in that sector. While the level of money that has been spent is disappointing, in many cases, it has made a significant difference to the provision and will leave the childcare settings in a better position to resume as things open up and as the economy opens up.

Miss Rachel Woods: I will get straight to my question, as I would like to ask a supplementary. I will pick up on Mr McNulty's question. Is the Minister confident that the Executive will sign off on the continuation of free school meal payments before next week — 30 June — and has a decision been made about that?

Mr Weir: The Executive are meeting at the moment. Given Executive confidentiality, I am not in a position to discuss precisely what is being said, but I will say that there is all-party consensus on the issue both outside and inside the Executive. I think that there is a strong will to do this.

From the point of view of the timing, it is likely that there would be a phased payment of two instalments throughout the summer. The fact that money would not necessarily be in bank accounts on 1 July is not the key determinant; it is covering the nine-week period. I think that, in England, they are looking at a shorter, six-week period to be covered. The proposals that I put forward to the Executive covered the entirety of the summer through July and August. I believe that that will mean that the necessary support will be there. I am confident that the Executive will agree that position.

Miss Woods: Can clarification be given that the finances from the Department of Education that have already given for the summer preparation for youth services and the summer delivery of projects are not frozen for this year and can be spent?

Mr Weir: Whatever is needed to be spent will be spent. If, because of necessity, certain things have to be done on a somewhat restricted basis, that may not mean that everything will need to be spent on those things. There are plenty of pressures in the system through which we can try to provide that level of support. There is no unwillingness on our part to do the maximum that is doable during the summer, but, if, because of COVID, interventions are more limited, you will not necessarily spend the same amount. For instance, everybody who is a youth worker continues to be employed and to be fully funded. The COVID crisis across the piece means that, in some cases, there will be much greater financial pressures, but, even for schools, there will be areas where there will be less direct pressure on finances.

Mr Carroll: As regards the return to school, a sector that is often overlooked, undersupported and underfunded is children with special educational needs. The Children's Commissioner has said that there are systemic failures, and we have heard of hundreds of people not getting placements for September. What guarantees can the Minister give us that those young people will not be left behind, as they were in so-called normal times?

Mr Weir: As regards the placements, I have indicated that we are working with the EA to make sure that they are fully in place. The aim will be to ensure that there is resumption across the piece, including special schools. Obviously, the vast majority of children with statements are not in special schools; they are in mainstream schools. For all those children, the aim is to ensure that those happen at the same time.

The member also makes a point about a concern that people will be left behind. That is why, in addition to the guidance for schools in general, we have a bespoke strand on special educational needs and vulnerable children in the restart and why there will be additional advice given specifically for that area. It is important that the circumstances of every child are taken into account as we move forward to the new term.

Mr Carroll: Thank you, Chair. Given the news that various Irish language playgroups and naiscoileanna have lost out on Pathway funding despite meeting the criteria, what assurances can the Minister give to my constituents and their family members who use those organisations that they will not have opportunities withdrawn as a result of that decision? Will he explain the rationale for it?

Mr Weir: The rationale for the decision, and we have a former Minister here who will be able to bear this out, is that the Pathway Fund effectively replaced previous funding of playgroups. To be fair, there was a reasonable level of criticism of the previous methodology that, effectively, funding was pretty much ring-fenced for the groups that got it year-on-year for about 10 years roughly. It meant that anybody who did not get that funding did not have the opportunity to get it. A different system was introduced in the Department of Education roughly five or six years ago, whereby a block of Pathway funding of about £3 million is made available on a rolling one-year basis and, each year, any group may apply. Where there is more demand than funding available, which, I think, has been the case each year, criteria are used to rank organisations. The criteria have not been altered since Pathway was introduced in, I think, 2014-15. One of the products of that will be that, each year, there will be some groups that received funding the previous year who are not ranked high enough and will drop out of the system and other new groups will come in. There will be a situation where groups will go in and out. That is done entirely by officials; there is no ministerial involvement in that. I know that some groups, from different constituencies, will have missed out this year, and some will have had a degree of funding. It is not sector-specific. It is applying the criteria, and the criteria have been exactly the same for the last five years.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Members, I hope that you will note that the Minister has been answering questions for over an hour. Some 20 members — [Interruption.] Please take your seat. Some 20 members have placed questions and covered a wide range of areas.

Mr Lyttle, you wish to speak.

Mr Lyttle: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. The Education Minister said that I was wrong to say that he had suspended the independent review of education and that I should check my facts. A letter I received on 18 May from the Minister states:

“I have temporarily suspended work on the independent review of education”.

It is appropriate that that is read into the record.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): The member has made his point.

I thank members for their cooperation. I have done my best to do this in a fair manner.

Mr Humphrey: Mr Deputy Speaker, on a point of clarification in relation these COVID-19 Committee meetings, is it the case that members are not required to be here for the entire statement that a Minister makes? There is a courtesy issue about members being here and taking the time to come here, as they should, to hear statements. We have had members today who have not been here, who did not hear the statement and who came in, asked a question and left before proceedings concluded. Is that appropriate?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): This is a Committee. There are no Standing Orders over the running of the Committee, and, of course, we operate under COVID rules, where there is a necessity, on occasion, for some parties to alternate their members in order that the others can ask questions. That does happen, but I am not aware of any rules. Perhaps you should take that up with the Business Committee or the Speaker, but I am not aware of any requirement [Interruption.] Order. Listen, folks: there are no points of order. This is not the Assembly [Laughter.] Please take your seats. I have been generous in taking a few questions. Mr Humphrey: very briefly.

Mr Humphrey: I asked whether it was appropriate; I did not ask for a ruling on it. I do not think that that is appropriate, no matter who the Minister is. The other point that I would make is that I did not walk out because you did not call me to ask a supplementary question. However, although some members who were waiting to ask a question or to be called to ask a supplementary question did not get their chance, other members who were not present to hear the statement were given the opportunity to ask a question followed by a supplementary question. I do not think that that is fair.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): I understand the member's concern. I have endeavoured to follow the guidance given to me. Ideally, members should start with a single sentence and then ask a question. I stretched a little to try to allow everybody to ask a supplementary question, but I have to make a judgement at some point. I have done my best. I hope that I have been fair to all sides, although I am sure that some members will be feeling sore. We have had the Minister here for over an hour for questions, and members have had an opportunity to question him.

Mr Weir: Can I check whether I have permission to walk out? [Laughter.]

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Beggs): Item 3, members will be glad to know, is the date, time and venue of our next meeting. We have yet to receive confirmation from the Executive of any further meetings of the Committee. As soon as details are provided to the Speaker's Office, members will be notified.

I remind members that the next meeting of the Assembly is on Tuesday 30 June. I also remind members that Ministers may make additional oral statements. Relatively short notice has to be given, so do not assume that whatever is on the Order Paper represents all the business. Members have to watch their emails and messages. That concludes the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response

9 July 2020

Ministerial Statement: Communities

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Christopher Stalford (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Andy Allen
Ms Kellie Armstrong
Ms Clare Bailey
Mr Cathal Boylan
Ms Paula Bradshaw
Mr Jonathan Buckley
Mr Gerry Carroll
Ms Jemma Dolan
Mr Gordon Dunne
Mr Mark Durkan
Ms Sinéad Ennis
Mr Harry Harvey
Ms Sinead McLaughlin
Mr Mike Nesbitt
Ms Carál Ní Chuilín
Mr John O'Dowd
Mr Matthew O'Toole
Ms Emma Rogan
Mr John Stewart
Mr Mervyn Storey

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): I welcome members to this meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response. Before I move to the agenda, I welcome the Minister for Communities, Carál Ní Chuilín, to her post. I know that all members will join me in wishing the former Minister — I am sure that she will be the Minister again soon — a very speedy recovery from her recent illness.

Agenda item 1 is the minutes of proceedings for the previous meeting, which was held on 25 June. Members are asked to note those minutes, which I have agreed. Members should also note that the minutes of evidence from that meeting have been published in the Official Report and are available on the Committee's web page.

Agenda item 2 is a statement from the Minister for Communities. The Speaker received notification on 3 July that the Minister wished to make a statement to the Ad Hoc Committee at today's meeting. A copy of the statement that the Minister intends to deliver is included in your pack.

Once again, I welcome the Minister for Communities to this meeting of the Committee. Before the Minister makes her statement, I remind members that, following it, there will be an opportunity to ask questions but not to make speeches. Members who ask short, sharp, focused questions will be invited to ask a supplementary question if they wish. Members who engage in long preambles, however, may find that they do not get to ask a supplementary question. I ask members for their cooperation and I will, of course, ask the Minister to return the favour by giving succinct answers. I invite the Minister to make her statement, which should be heard without interruption.

Ms Ni Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): Thank you very much, Principal Deputy Speaker. I am very uncomfortable standing with my back to you all. [Laughter.] This is my first time at a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee and, apparently, this is the way that it works. I note that we were well and truly slapped there before we even started.

Without further ado, I want to thank the Committee for inviting me here today. I am proud to carry on the good work that my colleague Deirdre Hargey has been doing, and as we begin to move now from the COVID response into recovery and renewal, this is a great opportunity for me to update the Committee on my Department's ongoing work to support our vulnerable communities and households through this crisis and beyond.

It goes without saying that my Department's swift and decisive response would not have been possible without the dedication, hard work and cooperation, not only of my officials and those in other Departments but our partners in the voluntary and community sector, councils, sporting bodies, faith-based organisations, and the many grassroots groups and community workers who worked with each other and with my Department to put in place real, practical solutions and supports for those who are most in need. I am sure that members will join me in thanking them for the difference that they have made and continue to make in responding to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Members will be aware that, in the June monitoring round, the Department received COVID-19 allocations of £88.8 million, comprising £66.1 million that was previously agreed by the Executive and £22.7 million that was allocated against new bids of £24.7 million. At this early point in the year, it is anticipated that the COVID allocation will be spent in full. As we move into the recovery phase, it is vital that my Department's financial and staff resources are directed to delivering on my longer-term strategic priorities, while at the same time continuing to respond to the immediate needs of vulnerable people.

One of my Department's early interventions, in partnership with Advice NI, was the establishment of a Freephone

COVID-19 community helpline. That service is still available to ensure that the most vulnerable and those at risk of COVID-19 have access to practical support services and emotional support at this most difficult time. My Department also made a significant number of emergency changes to social security benefits. Those include changes to operational practices and legislative changes.

All face-to-face personal independence payment (PIP) and disability living allowance (DLA) assessments, as well as attendance allowance reviews, were paused in March, initially until June 2020. However, given the ongoing social-distancing requirements, I have extended that easement to safeguard people's health and safety while ensuring that my Department continues to provide the most appropriate support to disabled people. I will keep this position under review, and my officials are due to meet the advice sector again to keep them updated and to brief them on next steps.

At the outset of the pandemic, my Department put in place measures to provide financial easement for those with a benefit-related overpayment or loan due to COVID-19. Around 90,000 cases were adjusted, which went some way to alleviating financial pressure during the emergency period. A rolling approach will be adopted to restart deductions from this week. This will begin with off-benefit deductions, with all deductions expected to be back in place by the autumn.

To make financial assistance available to people here, 17 sets of emergency regulations, relating to social security and discretionary support, have been tabled by my Department in a compressed time frame.

To reflect the changing public health guidance, as COVID-19 lockdown measures and shielding advice is eased, amendments have been made to statutory sick pay to ensure that it continues to be available as a financial safety net for individuals who are currently shielding, or if any future periods of shielding should be needed. To help people follow self-isolation advice, if recommended, statutory sick pay has also been amended to support the Executive's contact tracing strategy. This is an important measure to provide an incentive to individuals to follow public health advice, keeping people safe and protecting our health service.

Access to food remains a critical element of the emergency response. Working collaboratively across Departments, health and social care trusts, councils, local community organisations and the private sector, my Department put in place a programme to distribute food to vulnerable people across all communities. My Department invested £10 million in this service, and over 184,000 food boxes have now been delivered.

Access to food was further bolstered by putting in place arrangements for those who are shielding to get priority online shopping delivery slots with major retailers. The food box initiative was set up as a short-term emergency response to support the most vulnerable. It will continue to be available until 31 July to those who are shielding and in critical need of support.

Arrangements were also put in place to ensure the safe delivery of medication to vulnerable and isolated people who cannot arrange for anyone to collect their prescriptions.

These vital services ensure that those in most need in our society, who do not have a support network of family and friends to help them through the emergency, have had access to basic food and medical supplies. The services also allow those at risk of social isolation to see a friendly face and know that we, as a society, have not forgotten about them. There is a tremendous amount of goodwill and generosity in action across our society, which is particularly welcome at this challenging time.

A number of other strands in the overall emergency response programme relate to food support, and my Department has provided financial support to allow councils to deliver directly or to enable the very important work of local voluntary and community organisations at grassroots level. To date, £1.5million, which included an element for food, has been distributed to the voluntary and community sector through the councils.

My Department has undertaken a review of the overall access to food programme, with the aim of supporting a more sustainable approach to help those who need help to access food.

The Department will provide an additional investment of up to £875,000 to FareShare, a national network of charitable food redistributors, to deliver an increased supply of food to community food providers. In addition, the social supermarkets pilot programme has shown positive outcomes to date and has been extended to allow for the consideration of a full programme being rolled out. This reflects the value of wraparound supports alongside the access to food programme, as well as offering a possible platform for pathways to employment. The Department is developing a supporting business case, with the aim of having the appropriate network established by October.

In the longer term, the Department will factor the findings from the emergency programme into the development of an overarching anti-poverty strategy, to include a clear set of actions on food poverty. My Department has taken the lead in responding to the challenges that community and voluntary organisations face in introducing a range of flexibilities in terms and conditions around grant funding, including advancing six months' funding for salaries and running costs, and reduced bureaucracy. To enable that to happen, my Department has prepared the necessary contracts for funding, and paid out over £13 million in grant payments to just under 400 organisations, excluding councils, since 1 April. The councils received £4.36 million. That was funded via the community support programme, which provided £1.32 million, the COVID-19 community support fund, which provided £1.5 million, advice services, which provided £890,000, and £650,000 through welfare reform initiatives. On 1 July, I was able to announce that additional funding of £4.5 million had been secured for the COVID-19 community support fund, on top of the £1.5 million that had been released in April. That has enabled local councils to directly support grassroots organisations to help those in greatest need.

I am grateful to my colleague Minister Hargey who launched the COVID-19 charities fund on 15 June 2020. Some 180 applications have been received, to date, requesting funding totalling £4.5 million, and 38 grants, totalling £643,000, have been distributed. In addition, 340 applications are in progress. That suggests that the total spend will be around £10 million, but the position will become clearer when the fund closes for applications on 10 July. I will update members on the final position and, if the fund has a remaining balance, I will present proposals on how that will be spent.

I commend our delivery partner, the National Lottery Community Fund, which has risen to the challenge of getting money, speedily, to the bank accounts of hard-pressed charities. This week, I heard, at first hand, about the impact of the emergency funding. I am delighted that my Department has been able to support Action Cancer, with a grant of £75,000. That will be greatly appreciated by 850 women who have been anxiously awaiting vital cancer screening.

I am conscious that other sectors are facing significant challenges at this time. Following the initial announcement of a £1.5 million COVID-19 creative support fund to enable artists, creative practitioners and small to medium-sized institutions to work on new projects, I have announced a further £4 million. Work is ongoing to assess where that will be best spent and to establish the requirement for recovery of the sector moving forwards.

Following the announcement, on Sunday, of a further £33 million investment in culture, arts and heritage institutions, I will be making strong representations to my Executive colleagues, at the earliest opportunity, on how that money should be spent to support the local arts, culture and heritage sector, which has a vital role to play in keeping spirits high and in promoting creativity in these difficult times.

I recognise that sporting organisations at every level, from grassroots to those who compete at an international level, are facing serious financial challenges as a result of the COVID-19 restrictions. My Department and Sport NI have supported the sports sector by providing financial and practical advice. Sport NI immediately paid to sports' governing bodies grants that were due to them under existing lottery programmes. We also launched the sports hardship fund, which, with a fund of £1.245 million, will enable 620 clubs to receive a grant of £2,000 to assist with essential maintenance costs for their facilities. I have recently secured a bid for £2 million through the June monitoring round. It will be used to continue to support those clubs, governing bodies and sporting organisations that are experiencing hardship as they move into the recovery period, and it will help the sector build resilience, capacity and capability moving forward.

In addition, Minister Hargey made the case for clubs to be included in the eligibility criteria for the £25,000 hospitality, retail, leisure and tourism scheme. That has enabled around 80 sports clubs to benefit from that funding.

On a practical level, Sport NI has developed a portfolio of advice and guidance for the sector. It is aligned to the Executive's five-step plan and is based on medical and scientific evidence. That portfolio is available online. The Department and Sport NI continue to provide support to the sector as it takes gradual steps for a safe return to sport as restrictions ease.

I am conscious that the impact of the crisis on construction and tourism has created a significant challenge for the heritage sector. My Department cares for 190 state care monuments, and I am pleased that we have reopened the sites where it is safe to do so. We are also working closely with the wider heritage sector as it looks to the future.

The retail and hospitality sectors have been hit particularly hard by the coronavirus crisis, and the road to recovery for them presents a particular challenge. With the Executive announcing the easing of restrictions for retail and hospitality sectors, guidance for urban centres and green spaces was published on 29 June to provide owners and operators of public spaces, including councils and landlords, with information and examples of measures that may be undertaken to adapt and manage public spaces in order to help social distancing. The outdoor spaces close to hotels, bars, restaurants and cafes can be used by those businesses to deliver their services, while ensuring the safety of staff and customers and keeping under consideration the impacts of the measures on people with disabilities and other groups.

My Department owns sites in town and city centres that have been acquired for regeneration purposes; for example, Bank Square and Blackstaff Square in Belfast. It also owns civic and public spaces in city and town centres, and we have made those available, where that is helpful, to support safe queuing, social distancing or spill-out space for cafes, bars and restaurants. Minister Hargey wrote to council chief executives on 11 June, outlining how the Department was working to support town and city centres in their recovery and encouraging councils to make more use of the existing pavement cafe legislation. My officials are finalising a business case for a revitalisation programme to support our towns and city centres in recovering from the impact of COVID-19. I also recently announced a £300,000 support fund for business improvement districts so that they can continue to play a key role in bringing local businesses and other stakeholders together to help them regenerate their areas and to improve their local trading environment.

My Department continues to provide assurances to households facing difficulties in paying their rent. We received initial commitments from the Housing Executive and all of our housing associations to treat such cases with extreme sensitivity. Minister Hargey also postponed the Housing Executive's rent increase for 2020-21 until October of this year. As well as providing strengthened protections for private renters during the COVID-19 crisis through the introduction of legislation that requires that private landlords give tenants a 12-week notice to quit period, my Department has produced guidance to assist tenants and landlords — social and private — to remain safe and secure and to comply with obligations while observing social distancing guidelines. Those documents are hosted on the DFC website and nidirect and are linked on the websites of partner organisations such as Housing Rights, councils and housing providers. They are regularly reviewed and have been and will continue to be updated as COVID-19 arrangements evolve.

Like Minister Hargey, I am very aware of the impact that the restriction on house moves was having on many households, with many individuals and families being forced to live in unsuitable accommodation because they were prevented from moving into more appropriate housing. Housing officials worked with colleagues across the Executive and experts across the housing sector to analyse the evidence and to produce guidance to permit the housing market to reopen from 14 June. Of course, that action was made possible only because of the progress made over the last few months in reducing the spread of coronavirus here. In that context, it must be emphasised that the reopening of the housing market does not represent a return to normality. The process of finding and moving into a new home is different. Everyone involved in the process has had to adopt practices and procedures to ensure that the risk of the spread of coronavirus is reduced as far as possible. That includes doing more of the process online, such as initial virtual viewings, the use of appointment systems and strict infection control procedures before, during and after viewings. With those new practices and procedures in place, the house-moving process is as safe as it can be, and that has allowed households to recommence or to start the process of looking for a new home.

In her statement to the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response, Minister Hargey outlined the importance of protecting the homeless during the crisis. The Housing Executive set up a dedicated team to manage its response to the crisis and has put in place interventions to support homeless individuals or those threatened with homelessness. The Housing Executive is drawing up an exit strategy that will assess and evaluate the measures that it put in place to address homelessness during the COVID-19 outbreak and consider what long-term strategies will need to be put in place to support those who are homeless or threatened with homelessness in the long term. I will continue to take all possible measures to prevent vulnerable people from sleeping on our streets, and I commend all those who have worked with us to make sure that they are kept safe. Additional funding of £7 million has been allocated for homelessness. That has allowed the Housing Executive to deal with the initial surge and will allow it to take more long-term actions as we go through the recovery process.

I acknowledge the joint working with the Department of Health. It provided funding to the Housing Executive to provide accommodation for homeless individuals with no recourse to public funds, which ensured that those residents were protected from contracting COVID-19 and enabled them to comply with government guidance on shielding, self-isolation and social distancing.

Executive colleagues approved £10 million in funds for the Supporting People programme, which, along with the unfreezing of £3 million in Supporting People restricted reserves, will be used to address staff shortages and mounting pressure in that area. That funding allocation represents my commitment to the vulnerable people in the Supporting People schemes and the staff providing support to them. We support them and are working hard to ensure their safety and well-being. I also acknowledge the very quick response from our Finance Minister in allocating £3.5 million to be used for the procurement of personal protective equipment (PPE) for singly commissioned Supporting People schemes.

Our partnership with councils has been vital in responding to the crisis, and I am well aware of the financial pressures that face them, as they have lost practically all their self-generated income while much of their operational expenditure and, in particular, staff costs remain. While £20.3 million was allocated to councils for quarter 1 of 2020-21 to assist them with financial pressures as a result of COVID-19, as we move forward, my Department continues to work closely with councils to identify the continued financial pressures and constraints arising as we move through the various phases of recovery. It is clear that we cannot expect that council finances will return to pre-COVID-19 levels immediately, and I have asked that officials look at council pressures for the July to September 2020 period. Councils have highlighted concerns about any potential economic downturn with the resultant reduction in the rates base and how that could have a significant longer-term impact on the financial sustainability of each of our councils.

Finally, as we move out of the response phase and plan for our recovery, it is important that we build our operational resilience in preparation for any further wave of COVID-19 or any other disruption to our business, and plans remain in place to enable the rapid scaling-up of contingency operations should that occur. My Department has taken considerable steps to support staff during the emergency response to the COVID-19 pandemic through the provision of ICT to enable working from home and by ensuring that office buildings across our estate are safe for increased numbers of staff to return.

I am committed to working with colleagues across the Executive and in local government and with our stakeholders and partners to ensure that we face the challenges in a cohesive way, with the well-being of our citizens, our communities and our economy at the heart of all our decision-making. I thank Committee members for their attention, and I am happy to take questions.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): Thank you, Minister. Before I call the Chair of the Committee for Communities to ask her question, I inform members that I have 21 names on my list. If everyone asks two questions, that is 42 questions. The time for questions on the statement allows roughly 60 minutes. Do the maths, and you see the need to be succinct.

Ms P Bradley (Committee Chair - Committee for Communities): I join in wishing Deirdre Hargey the very best. On a purely selfish level, we want that Minister back in our Committee pretty soon.

Minister, you spoke about the £20.3 million that was allocated to councils. Even if councils are able to open up, we know that a lot of their self-generated income was subsidised by ratepayers. Have you had any conversations with the Minister of Finance around the estimated penny product and the rates guarantee that councils asked for when they last briefed us?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for her questions. My officials are working very closely with local government. They gave a fairly good presentation to the Committee, so you will know that they are looking at the next quarter from July to September. They are also liaising with colleagues across the Executive to ensure that we provide appropriate and speedy support to councils. It is accepted that all the opportunities for councils to raise their own revenue are practically defunct during this period. Officials have done due diligence for the first quarter. They will do the same due diligence for the second quarter to see what spend is needed and what we can do to ensure councils' sustainability.

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Minister for her answer. I absolutely agree that her Department has worked very closely with councils. We have seen that in any of the briefings that we have had from her Department.

Given the statement released by the chief executive of Belfast City Council last night and the problems faced there, when does she feel that it would be appropriate to get involved, if she has not already, to steer that council forward?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I saw the statement last night and have heard some of the commentary today. I will talk to my officials to see what action, if any, I can take or it is appropriate to take. Belfast City Council has had difficulties for a long time. The statement was certainly very concerning. I need to be careful about what I can and should do. I urge all leaders in Belfast City Council to come together despite the difficulties. Belfast City Council, which I was a member of from 2003 to 2007, has come through many difficulties. We need to knuckle down and see what we can do collectively; hopefully, that will be sooner rather than later.

Ms Ennis: I thank the Minister for her statement. In it, she referred to the recent allocation of £33 million to the arts, culture and heritage sector. Will she elaborate on how best she thinks that that could be spent and on what initial discussions she is having?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Some of the commentary that I have heard is that £33 million is not enough. OK, but I know that there are many sectors that would certainly appreciate an injection like that. There has also been some commentary about how it should be spent. I notice that the Arts Council has an online survey asking artists and creatives for feedback on how it should be spent. For me, the statement is very clear: it needs to be spent on arts, culture and heritage. We need to look particularly at freelance artists, creatives and musicians who could not access any benefits at all during this crisis and who did not get access to universal credit or any discretionary funds. We need to look at a hardship fund to help those people; that, in itself, will help the economy. We then need to look at how that money will be used for venues, not just in Belfast but right across the board.

Ms Ennis: I concur with the Minister's comments. We know that the issues affecting the arts sector predate COVID. The year-on-year funding reduction as a result of austerity had huge impacts on the arts sector. I urge the Minister to make the case to Executive colleagues again that, across the Executive, we need to fundamentally change the way that we view the arts. Yes, the arts provide entertainment but these are also highly skilled individuals and people who, as the Minister said, deserve some sort of stabilisation fund in line with what the hospitality and other sectors were able to access during the COVID crisis.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): I do not think there was a question there, Minister, but if you want to agree with what your colleague said, I am sure that that is permissible.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I totally agree, Sinéad. [Laughter.]

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): There you go.

Mr Durkan: It is good to see you back, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for her statement, and commend her work, that of her predecessor and her Department at this extremely challenging time.

I pay particular tribute to the many volunteers and groups who have been a lifeline in their communities. Will the Minister outline whether she intends, along with ministerial colleagues, to look at how some of those voluntary groups, who fall outside normal DFC funding streams, such as neighbourhood renewal, can be supported with their core costs to enable them to do their vital work?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for his question. He has been consistent in asking about this. I am looking at that. There might not be a budget headline in the Department for particular funds throughout the COVID crisis, but money has been made available. I am looking at what additional support we can get in. The member is right: groups have done vital work, outside neighbourhood renewal or areas at risk, and they need to be supported.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Minister for her answer and commitment. The small grant for volunteering has not been renewed this year. Over the past four years, that small grant enabled some of those small groups and organisations to keep their doors open and lights on. Does the Minister concur that it seems perverse that, at a time when their value has never been more evident, or the need for them as great, those groups cannot now avail themselves of that vital assistance?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As I said to the member, the groups have applied through different routes in the Department, including for money that the Department has put into arm's-length bodies and the councils. The volunteering small grants programme that was launched in 2013 was very successful. I will look at that as part of an anti-poverty strategy, because some of that work, particularly volunteering, should be reflected in that. Last year, the Department allocated £521,000 to 662 organisations. That is evidence that a small bit of money goes a long way and has a great outcome for people.

Mr Allen: I declare an interest as a charity trustee. Minister, you provided a helpful update on the COVID-19 charities fund. I appreciate that you cannot pre-empt it at this stage, but you said that you suspect that it will be a £10 million scheme overall. Given that £15.5 million was allocated initially, dedicated towards a charities scheme, do you have the flexibility to re-prioritise that in your Department or will it be repackaged for the charitable sector?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It will be a bit of both. I said that any remaining money would be reallocated, but the indications are that there will be no remaining money. We might need additional money. This is relevant to the question that Mark asked about volunteers. A lot of those charities have volunteers and voluntary schemes that have been helping people for years. Whatever money is there will be well used. We may need to look for opportunities to get additional funds.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): Mr Allen, have your supplementary question?

Mr Allen: I do not require a supplementary question.

Ms Armstrong: I will take this opportunity to thank you, Minister, and all your staff, particularly those working in the front line at jobs and benefits offices, who, behind the scenes, have helped so many through this.

You mentioned the revitalisation programme to support towns and city centres to recover from the impact of COVID. In particular, you talked about using the pavement cafe system. In rural areas, it is difficult for pavement cafes to be facilitated. What are you doing with other Departments about that?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for her question. It is timely, because Minister Poots and I are meeting this afternoon. I am looking at the revitalisation programme for £5,000 and above. He and I are both looking at what we can do for £5,000 and below. As I said at the Committee yesterday, some villages do not have footpaths to allow for tables and chairs to be put outside but that does not mean that they do not need support.

That is the sort of initiative that we are looking at. I am working with Minister Mallon on the development of local councils' licensing regimes for cafes, and using whatever open spaces that we can. We are also working with the Department for the Economy to try to help those small businesses and give them every opportunity to ensure that they flourish as much as possible under the circumstances.

Ms Armstrong: Thank you, Minister. I will use my second question to draw out another aspect, which is sport. Can you provide clarification on when the £2 million that has just been allocated will be announced and when there will be an update on contact training in groups for up to 30 people?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Taking the last point first, we had an Executive meeting today, and that is not long finished. Obviously, easements are going through, but I do not want to pre-empt any announcement that is coming. We certainly looked at that issue.

I anticipate that an announcement about the £2 million will be made very soon. We did ask for more money, but we did not get it. We will certainly be looking at opportunities in future monitoring rounds and, indeed, at any other opportunities to try and get some money out to the grassroots organisations in particular.

Mr Buckley: The Minister will be acutely aware of the impact of COVID-19 on the housing market, which, in turn, could place further stress on the social housing stock. One of the most alarming aspects is the impact on first-time buyers in Northern Ireland, where the four main banks are asking for higher deposits, making it virtually impossible for them to get on the housing ladder. Will the Minister agree to engage earnestly with the Economy Minister and the Finance Minister and present a united front, meeting with banks to encourage greater flexibility and a return to low-deposit mortgages?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I certainly will give the commitment, and any commitments that I give will be in earnest. Watching the news last night, I saw that there was an announcement from the British Treasury about stamp duty while there were other announcements that appear to show that what you get on the one hand will be taken away from the other. In particular, some families who had the opportunity to move into a home have now been priced out of it, and none of us want that to happen. I will take up any opportunities with Executive colleagues after today to see what we can do.

Mr Buckley: Continuing on the theme of housing, the Minister will be aware of the Chancellor's announced green recovery scheme for home insulation in an attempt to stimulate local growth post-COVID-19. Has the Minister considered extending this scheme to Northern Ireland homeowners?

Ms Ní Chuilín: That was an England-only announcement, as far as I could see. We would certainly like to see some Barnett consequentials from it. Any green schemes, including retrofitting, that not only benefit people who are living in fuel poverty but which will help the construction industry, particularly in new methods of construction, will be welcome. This morning, when I was looking through the papers, I saw that it was an England-only announcement and that we had yet to benefit from any Barnett consequentials.

Ms Dolan: I thank the Minister for her statement. I welcome the Minister's comments about the overall anti-poverty strategy, including direct learning regarding access to food. Can the Minister provide an update on the progress of the development of the anti-poverty strategy?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I spoke to the Committee yesterday, and I have met officials on this since coming into the Department. I have had a webinar with a lot of groups that were involved in the emergency leadership group. They went through all the emergency arrangements from 20 March, and central to that and acknowledged by all those people was the work that the grassroots groups did in the community to get the food and all those supports out. They all said yesterday that being able to scale up and scale down and help neighbours who are really vulnerable has to be reflected in the anti-poverty strategy, and I concur with that because we have all heard well-used phrases, particularly in winter time, about heating or eating. An anti-poverty strategy needs to tackle that head on.

Ms Dolan: I thank the Minister for her answer, and I look forward to working with her on that. You touched briefly on this, but an issue in many of our homes is fuel poverty. Can you provide an update on the affordable warmth scheme?

Ms Ní Chuilín: There are lots of great ideas and lots of policy developments out there. We have all been lobbied by many the people, and the fact that we are getting lobbied does not mean to say that all the lobbies that are coming to us are not good. However, we need to make sure that people can live in a house that not only they can afford to rent but that they can afford to run. We need to make sure that people, particularly those who are on a low-to-middle income, are facilitated as much as possible. That is something that we are looking at, and, hopefully, we can bring that forward in the autumn.

Mr Storey: Sadly, the Minister's message today will be tarnished and damaged by the actions of her friends and colleagues in west Belfast last week. Much in the statement is about social distancing, keeping the law, keeping the rules and so on, and what happened last week will detract from much of the good work that has been done by the Department.

The Minister referred to £10 million that has provided 184,000 food boxes? Will she give the House a breakdown of the geographical spread of that particular amount of money?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): Before the Minister rises, I would say that she should answer the question at the end. Mr Storey's introduction did not directly relate to her statement. It is simply the question about food boxes.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Thank you, Principal Deputy Speaker. That is exactly what I was going to do anyway, and I am sure that Mervyn knew that I would do that. [Laughter.] I do not have a geographical breakdown, but we will need to get one because it is important that that level of support is reflected. To give the member some assurance, the criterion is people who are shielding for medical reasons. It is not a political or ideological criterion. That is what it is.

I suspect that it will take some time to breakdown the information from GPs. I have had difficulties, even as an MLA, in that some of my constituents — I am sure that we have all had this — did not get their shielding letter until a lot of weeks ago, when they should have had it a lot earlier. I will certainly endeavour to get the member that information.

Mr Storey: I thank the Minister for that commitment and I look forward to seeing the breakdown.

The statement refers to the work of the Housing Executive for the homeless and vulnerable. The Minister will be aware that a property in Portstewart in the East Londonderry constituency has raised public concern. It comes out of the fact that there is a shortage of properly structured and properly provided supported living. Will the Minister ensure, in conversations with the Housing Executive, that that particular type of provision will be made available? We can clearly see that there is a need for that at the moment.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for raising that. Under Supporting People — he will know from his tenure in the Department — there are much-needed funds to do a lot of work, particularly within families and communities that are vulnerable. What we do not need to do is put people in further jeopardy, or make them more vulnerable, in a property that will perhaps endanger them, emotionally, physically or mentally.

I think that I am aware of the property that the member is talking about. I am happy to talk to him about it afterwards. I would be willing to go to the Housing Executive to ensure that there is more appropriate accommodation to suit some of the people who need our help the most. What we do not need to do is put them somewhere that will put them at risk.

Mr Boylan: The Minister mentioned strength and protection for the private rented sector following COVID. Does she intend to develop further protections and regulations for the private rented sector?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for his question. In short, the answer is yes. It was a priority for Minister Hargey, and I will continue with that.

At the start of the emergency, when the legislation came through, particularly about the extension of the notice to quit, that helped. Given the fact that more housing benefit is paid into the private rented sector than the social housing sector, we need to look at strengthening and furthering some of those regulations, both to protect tenants and to protect those landlords who want to be good landlords who offer good protections for their tenants and their property.

Mr Boylan: Thank you, Minister. In the light of that, does the Minister agree that there needs to be a big roll-out in social housing to give people an opportunity of ownership? What is the time frame for rolling out some of those regulations?

Ms Ní Chuilín: We are going to come back to look at rolling out the legislation further. At the start of the week, the Department for Communities introduced its first bit of legislation not done under the accelerated passage procedure. That was the Pension Schemes Bill, so it had nothing to do with housing. We need to look at that.

In answer to all this, I am not saying that the private rented sector is bad and the public sector is good — we need a blend of both — but one thing that we all agree on is that we need more social housing. We need to increase the supply to reduce the demand. Unfortunately, there have been inconsistencies in the private rented sector. There is no security of tenure, and the conditions and standards of housing that people live in are not as good as they are in the social sector. We need to have better and stronger regulation of the private rented sector.

Ms McLaughlin: I add my appreciation to the Minister for her statement today and for the work that her Department has done throughout the pandemic. It has been very well received in my community. However, in February, her Department stated that it was targeting resources to ensure that they engaged with those furthest away from work and those in the constituencies that have the lowest employment rates. She will be well aware that my constituency has very high levels of economic inactivity — almost one third of our working-age population is economically inactive — and that has been exacerbated by COVID-19. Will the Minister tell me what she is doing to support those who are unable to work and to tackle economic inactivity in the Foyle constituency, please?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member will be aware that a lot of the face-to-face support for people, particularly those who are long-term unemployed, was cancelled due to COVID-19. Some was restored, if not at the same level, through teleconferencing and telephone calls.

There are many reasons why people are unemployed, as the Member will know. Some are unemployed due to regional disparity; some due to physical and/or mental health problems; and others because there has been no consistent investment to create jobs and apprenticeships. She will probably be aware of the announcement that was made about apprenticeships, and I will work with my ministerial colleague Diane Dodds to see what we can do in a joined-up way to ensure that areas that have experienced long-term economic deprivation get an opportunity to change.

Ms McLaughlin: I totally agree that there are lots of reasons for economic inactivity, but some of the reasons for economic inactivity are down to bad policy as well. Poor childcare and social-care policies create barriers to employment, particularly for women. Will the Minister agree to cross-departmental collaboration with the Health, Economy and Education Departments to tackle economic inactivity, because it is pushing down Northern Ireland's productivity? Our economic inactivity is extremely high — the highest of all the regions in the UK.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will certainly commit to doing that work. I endeavoured, even at the webinar meeting, to look, in particular, at the budgeting process, given that we have heard about gender imbalance and economic imbalances that depend on where people live, and we all agree that we need to have a robust childcare strategy. You cannot offer people opportunities, on the one hand, when, on the other hand, they cannot avail themselves of them and, ironically, get sanctioned because they will not take a job that they really cannot afford because they do not have access to childcare. I will absolutely work with Health, Education and Economy on this.

Mr Nesbitt: First, can I check some figures with the Minister on the arts and sports? I see pots of £1.5 million, £4 million and £33 million for creative industries, culture, arts and heritage. Sport gets £3.245 million plus £2 million from the hospitality and leisure pot. Is that £38.5 million for the arts and £5.3 million for sport?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member will be aware that is a very attractive figure, particularly if it is on the front page of the 'Belfast Telegraph' tonight. However, the Member will be aware that the £33 million came as a result of the statement through Barnett consequentials. If I could split it up and help other areas in my Department, I would, but that is not the case. As I said in response to Kellie Armstrong, I think, I bid for additional money for sports and did not get it. I got £2 million of the £4 million that I bid for. I will commit to you and other members that I will continue to try to put money into sport, given the fact that a lot of the work at grassroots has been crucial, particularly during the COVID-19 period. Someone asked me about food parcels: many sporting organisations in my constituency and others were right at the middle of ensuring that the most vulnerable people were protected.

Mr Nesbitt: Given the fact that both sectors are Province-wide and have elite performers as well as grassroots performing in venues of various shapes and needs, a discrepancy of £33.2 million, you would agree, Minister, is not acceptable.

Ms Ní Chuilín: If there are further Barnett consequentials to come for sport — I anticipate that there will be — sport will get that. It is a bit disingenuous to say, first of all, that I have created that imbalance or that my Executive colleagues have created it. I am glad that you are not saying that. However, there is a big disparity in the figures. I will continue to try to bid for additional funds for sports. I will also continue to try to get additional funds for the arts, because, let us be honest — the member will know this from his own experience — any economic recovery must include our artists, our creative industries and all the rest. However, we have all enjoyed seeing our sportspeople and athletes on both the international and the local stage and even in grassroots groups. They, too, need our support. I will recommit to try to put additional money into sports wherever I get it and look forward, potentially, to more Barnett consequentials coming to sport.

Mr Dunne: Thank you for your statement, Minister. You have mentioned sport. You will be well aware that a large number of local sports clubs missed out on a previous scheme. There was a short lead-in time and limited funding. Can you assure us that more clubs will be included in the next funding round?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The member may already be aware that, at the time, his colleagues who are on the Committee for Communities, along with the rest of us, expressed disappointment to Sport NI about the way in which the hardship fund was managed. First of all, people did not get to know about it until the last minute; then there was a scramble. I do not mean that in a derogatory way, but there was a rush to get applications in. Many of them were extremely disappointed and remain so. I want to get more money, if possible, to those groups. Hopefully, the £2 million that I received in the June monitoring round will go some way to alleviate their pressures.

Mr Dunne: Will the Minister encourage small clubs, in particular, to work with Sport NI and assure us that any future funding will be spread equally across all sporting clubs, not just a few specific organisations?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The answer is yes, but we also need to look at the reality that soccer, rugby and the GAA make up over 80% of participation in sport. You cannot give a lesser — not a "lesser" sport but one that people do not participate in in the same numbers the same amount of money as those three codes. That would not be fair. However, the member is right to say that those small groups also need funds, regardless of whether they are involved in the big three. They need help, and I am committed to that; for example, there is boxing, MMA, gymnastics, rowing and all sorts, all of which have all achieved medals in international competitions. Even beneath all that, there are the walking clubs and all sorts. We need to try to get them some support.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): There goes my bid for funding for Ravenhill Presbyterian indoor bowls club.

Ms Rogan: I thank the Minister for her statement. Ensuring that everyone has some form of accommodation throughout the crisis has been a major positive step in the midst of the global pandemic. Can the Minister outline what steps she will take to continue that trend in the future?

Ms Ní Chuilín: We can all say with some pride — it is a mixture of pride and shame, really — that, during the COVID-19 pandemic, we had no one sleeping on the streets of our towns and villages. To be frank, they should not have been there in the first place, and we all need to make sure that they are not there again. I hate the term "rough sleepers". It obviously comes from someone who has never slept on a cardboard box in a shopfront. We need to make sure that there is proper and appropriate accommodation for people who, for all sorts of reasons, find themselves homeless. Regardless of whether they have an addiction or not, they are entitled to a bed and an address, and we will make sure that they get that.

Ms Rogan: We know the negative impact that COVID has had, and will continue to have, on our hospitality and tourism sector. I welcome the steps already taken by the Minister, some of which she outlined in her statement today. The much-needed reform of the liquor licensing laws would be welcomed by the sector at this time. Can she give us an update, and when does she plan to bring forward this legislation?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Again, we discussed liquor licensing today, and we are, hopefully, going to try to get it resolved as soon as possible. Liquor licensing has been about DSD and DFC for a long time and there have been loads of consultations and reviews on it. We just need to get it over the line, and I am sensing that we are nearly there. Hopefully, we will be able to make an announcement soon on the outcome.

Ms Bradshaw: Apologies, Minister. I was at the Health Committee; that is why I missed your statement. I have a question about the money from the Treasury that was announced for the arts. Given the urgency of the help needed for the arts sector, can you allocate that funding before the September monitoring round, so that the sector can get the preparations under way and the money spent before the end of this financial year in March?

Ms Ní Chuilín: First, we did cover it, and it was covered earlier. We want to try to get the money out as soon as we can. We need to ensure that as many people as possible in the arts and culture sector and the heritage sector are supported. It is a substantial amount of money. The member will be aware that some other groups have said that it is not enough, but it is a good start. Certainly, my priority will be to get it out as soon as possible and to try to help those musicians, freelancers and artists who did not get access to public funds, whether through universal credit or discretionary funds as a result of this crisis. They are living in dire straits, and they need our support.

Ms Bradshaw: Thank you, Minister, for that commitment. Regarding broader and longer-term issues around the arts, you mentioned the word "recovery". Are you going to put together a specific plan for the recovery of the arts?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am going to have a meeting fairly soon with a lot of people involved in the arts sector who have come forward with ideas about recovery. I want to bring them together. I am aware that there are strategies out there, and I am aware that there are reviews and plans, but a lot of them are disjointed, so we just need to bring them together. Whether there is agreement or not, we need to get something done. So yes, I am aware, and I said, when you were not in the Chamber, that arts, culture and creativity have to be part of any economic recovery — they absolutely must, because they are just as important as hotels, bars, restaurants and all the rest. We need to ensure that they are supported.

Mr Harvey: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. With the announcement of the allocation of lifeline support and funding for the arts, can the Minister give assurance that the money will be distributed fairly, reflecting the need for help in different areas, being mindful that the theatres' box-office losses will be in the region of £25 million and that the reopening of theatres will be difficult due to social-distancing requirements?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for his question. I am assuming that, when he spoke about different areas, he meant different geographical areas. I am a Belfast girl, as you know, and I am also aware that a lot of people have concerns that the bulk of this money will be spent on a few theatres in Belfast. However, I am going to look at it right across the board, because we made public investment across the board, and we need to sustain that investment. The people who live in those areas also should be entitled to have an expectation to go back and see their favourite musical, play, drama or whatever.

Mr Harvey: Thank you, Minister. I also have concern about our museums, for example the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum, which is not far from here. Can the Minister assure me that those visitor centres will also be catered for?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Again, the member might have seen the five-point recovery plan from the Executive. Museums and libraries put different dates in, because it is an operational issue for them. They know what they need to do, and we need to give them the respect and the space to do it. Depending on how they are organised, and what expectations there are, indoors and outdoors, they need to do that. Museums and libraries need to open as soon as possible to ensure that their budgets are protected.

Mr O'Dowd: I welcome the Minister's extensive statement, as it shows that when a Minister or, in this case, Ministers identify legislation or policy in their Department that is a problem, they change it. Debt recovery, which was suspended during the worst of the crisis, is to return. Can the Minister set out for us what measures she will put in place for the months ahead?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the member for his question. Debt recovery was, as I said in my statement, suspended for about 90,000 people for a three-month period. Some people wanted to continue their payments; there were also many who could not. Emergency measures were brought forward by DWP, but there was a suspension on the basis that it would recommence three days ago, and that is happening. It will be done in a manner that does not put people under any more pressure. It will also be done in their adviser's office to ensure that they can meet the commitments that they have made, even if it means going back to the original agreements that they made.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): Mr O'Dowd? You are OK.

Mr O'Toole: As the Minister will see, I am wearing a mask. Although it is slightly awkward, and I felt slightly self-conscious coming into the Chamber, it is really important that we all start to get used to wearing masks. Tomorrow, they become mandatory on public transport in Northern Ireland. Can the Minister advise us whether she is having discussions about making face coverings mandatory or least issuing guidance to some of the many sectors that her Department covers, such as arts and heritage venues, which, hopefully, will be opening soon, local council premises or benefits offices? Is she preparing guidance on face coverings?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have worked with the member's colleague Minister Mallon and other Executive colleagues on the mandatory wearing of face coverings on public transport. I visited a jobs and benefits office in east Belfast the other day and looked at the social-distancing measures that it is putting in place. Some people will need to wear face coverings, which could include visors, depending on their proximity to those with whom they work.

The answer is yes, but we are taking our lead from our arm's-length bodies on what they feel is appropriate. We are also working with our trade unions and their staff-side representatives to ensure that they are protected in the recovery and in coming out of this process.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. Further to it, and going back to the arts sector and the welcome support that the Minister will be disbursing in the coming weeks, Paula Bradshaw mentioned the need for a long-term recovery plan for the arts sector. Will part of that plan be a strategy for mitigations in spaces, including face coverings and social distancing? Can the Minister work on a comprehensive plan that joins up how we reopen arts and cultural venues while making them safe and disbursing money for support in one, joined-up process?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I think that that is a reasonable ask. The Arts Council also needs to issue guidance and to work with big venues in open spaces, as well as in indoor spaces, to ensure that people are protected. That may mean wearing face coverings, and that is fair enough.

Mr Stewart: I thank the Minister for her statement and for her work, and that of her Department, thus far. Minister, you will no doubt be aware that COVID-19 has posed particular problems for individuals suffering from gambling addiction or gambling disorders. The Gambling Commission in Great Britain, which does not operate here, recently conducted a survey in England, Scotland and Wales during COVID-19 that found that 60% of those who identified themselves as at-risk gamblers saw an increase in their online activity during that period. That is deeply worrying. I have no doubt that if we conducted a survey here, we would see a similar, if not worse, result. I am conscious that this is a cross-departmental issue, but, as it falls under your remit, what is your Department doing to monitor the activity of problem gamblers and what more can we do, as an Assembly and Executive, to help them?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Robin Newton, I think, raised the issue in depth yesterday at the Committee. I have no jurisdiction over online gambling, which, as the member will be aware, is harder to regulate. He is absolutely right that, particularly during the crisis, the evidence from and the concerns and experience of people who work with those with addictions, including young people and families, are that there has been an increase in online gambling. That is really worrying. Certainly, in the consultation, the increase in online gambling was one of the things that, people said, they were concerned about.

There is a need for regulation. When you are looking at vulnerable people, particularly children, there needs to be greater responsibility in the industry. Some of the legislation introduced in England is not strong enough, so whatever we bring forward needs to include the necessary level of strength and prevention to put people off becoming addicted to gambling.

Mr Stewart: I agree wholeheartedly with the Minister's response and appreciate it.

I will pivot quickly to sports clubs, which you raised in the statement. Sadly, while some got support, many missed out. They are at the centre of our communities, and they have massive outdoor spaces. Whether it is our cricket clubs — I am a member of one — our GAA clubs or our football clubs, they have an opportunity to provide big beer gardens and places where people can socialise safely while maintaining socially distancing. Sadly, due to the restrictions on licensing laws, clubs are unable to sell alcohol outside, which is an anomaly that could be looked at quickly to maximise their ability to sell and provide a place where their clients can socially distance. Is that something that we could look at?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It has certainly been raised in the Executive: the difference between a "wet" and a "dry" bar. OK, I thought that they were all wet bars, but there you go. I think that it relates to the provision of food.

There is an anomaly. I do not want to pre-empt any discussions, but we are aware of the issue, and I will try to bring forward your concerns. Sports clubs and private clubs are involved in those discussions as well, as that is how they sustain their premises.

Ms Bailey: I agree with the Minister that £33 million for the arts and creative sector is nowhere near enough, no matter how welcome it is. It is because of that that the Music Venue Trust and other organisations that work with grassroots music venues, such as the Oh Yeah centre in Belfast and Sandino's in Derry city, have expressed serious concern that those venues will be lost to us for ever if we do not do what we can to save them and the vibrant community that they help. Will the Minister commit to some sort of ring-fenced financial assistance to save those venues?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I cannot commit to ring-fencing for those venues or any others at this stage, to be totally honest. If you commit to ring-fence for one part to the detriment of another, you will have the same argument. I am completely aware of the member's concerns and the point that she makes. Those venues will not operate unless we have the creatives, the artists, the groups, the bands and the acts back. Those artists and venues have been hit really hard during this period, so I commit to her and the Committee that I will try to get them as much support as I can, not only through this announcement but, potentially, through Executive colleagues and other funding measures.

Ms Bailey: In Northern Ireland, we have a long history of underinvestment in and, indeed, in-year funding cuts to the arts sector. We have the lowest levels of funding across these islands, which should be to our shame. We talk about the creatives, the artists and the freelancers, but what can we do to encourage them not to leave the sector because they find it impossible to pay their bills and have done for years?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is shameful that, even in that contribution, the Tory Government were not mentioned once. They have cut the block grant, including for the arts, for decades. That is what we are dealing with. We are also dealing with a mindset among people — not the member and certainly not others — who think that the arts are a luxury and that they do not contribute to mental health, to the economy and to the sustainability of families. Let us be clear about where the cuts have come from. If we are serious about sustaining the economy, then, we have to include our arts and cultural package as part of that. We cannot talk about tourism or revitalising towns and cities and economies if arts and culture are not part of that. We cannot expect artists to perform for nothing because it is good for tourism. People need to start paying up. I absolutely agree with the member but I also want to make sure that she and other members are clear where the gap has been for decades and will continue to be under that regime.

Mr Carroll: I missed the Minister's statement because I was attending the Health Committee. I hope that my question, which is about PIP decisions, has not been asked. The Minister will be aware that a lot of people in my constituency and in hers are still waiting for decisions on appeals and dates for appeals to be made. That situation has, obviously, been exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic and the lockdown. Is she aware of any plans to address that backlog and recruit more staff to the appeals service and the Department more generally to address that issue?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have answered several of the member's questions for written answer on that issue. Indeed he may have received those answers today, but if not he will get them soon. He is right that there needs to be a bit more focus on the appeals service because anybody who gets to that stage is already sick and vulnerable and going through a lot of stress. The process takes quite a long time; it takes a long time for an application to be assessed and, if it is appealed, it takes even longer. I think that that is unacceptable.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Minister for her reply. I look forward to reading the replies to my questions. I want to ask about the upcoming PIP review. I appreciate that it may well be that Minister Hargey will be involved in that, but does she know whether looking at the actions of Capita and Atos Healthcare will be part of the PIP review?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Marie Cavanagh, who is well known to a lot of people in the community, will take the PIP review forward. If she did not say it in a statement, Minister Hargey certainly mentioned it in the publicity that she wanted to look at the potential for in-house facilities when contracts run out. I do not wish to disparage individuals who work in those organisations, however a scary amount of decisions have subsequently been overturned on appeal, so there is something wrong and we need to fix it.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr Stalford): Thank you, Minister. That concludes questions on the statement.

Agenda item 3 is the time, date and place of our next meeting. We have yet to receive confirmation from the Executive about when Ministers will next come to make a statement to the Committee. As soon as that confirmation has been received, written notification of the time, date and place of our next meeting will be issued to members in the usual way. I remind members that a plenary sitting of the Assembly is scheduled to take place on Tuesday 21 July and that Ministers may continue to make oral statements to the Assembly on sitting days. That concludes this meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Department for Infrastructure

2020-21 Budget Settlement

Published at 9.30 am on Wednesday 10 June 2020

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): I want to update the Assembly on the decisions I have taken on the Department for Infrastructure budget for 2020/ 2021. Due to the impact of Covid-19 this has been a difficult process in a context still plagued with uncertainty as we respond to the crisis and take steps towards recovery. The decisions I have taken are to ensure DfI plays its part in responding to this crisis and enabling our safe and speedy recovery from it to a new way of living and working.

Resource

I will focus first on the resource budget. I was allocated a £418m opening resource budget. This is a welcome £33m above last year's opening baseline but, even without the Covid-19 pressures, unfortunately it is insufficient to meet the costs required to deliver our public transport system or to provide adequate water and waste water services. It also does not allow for the level of investment needed in road maintenance and that was recommended independently in the Barton Report and supported by the NIAO Report on Structural Maintenance. There is no secret of the fact that this is mainly due to decisions taken about the DfI budget in 2015.

The financial climate remains very tight in resource budget terms and has been significantly financially compounded by the Covid-19 crisis. This is the case across all departments, however, I am committed to continue supporting our Health and Social Care Service and key workers and to working hard with Executive colleagues to seize the opportunities that this crisis presents to enable a greener, cleaner, recovery towards a new and better normal for all. This requires our community to have a public transport system and a 21st century water and waste water network to serve the growing population and allow for economic growth.

The 2020/21 opening budget settlement does not meet all of my Department's urgent resource needs and so there are still some financial pressures to address in the June Monitoring Round and I am committed to working collectively with Executive colleagues within that process.

If Covid-19 had not arisen, the current Resource budget allocation would still have caused challenges including in maintaining Translink's continuing going concern status, itself a statutory requirement, and NI Water's baseline funding levels. The allocation does not allow for any significant injection of additional funds to invest in enhancing basic services such as routine road maintenance, which means the road network will continue to deteriorate. This is disappointing as I am keen to get the basics right in delivering services that are essential for local communities and in gaining and maintaining public confidence in what we do. This is an aspiration which, I know, many members share.

I will continue to argue for recurring resource baseline additions required to deliver an appropriate roads maintenance service and to put the public transport system on a firm financial footing to meet the changing demands of a modern economically vibrant society. I am pleased to have already received a commitment from Executive colleagues to fund our public transport system in recognition of the crucial economic, social and environmental benefits it delivers, not least as we emerge from lockdown, supporting our town centres, businesses, rural communities and to help transport children safely to and from school.

I am also anxious to ensure that NI Water is adequately funded to meet all of its running cost pressures so that it can concentrate on the important job of developing and investing in the much needed water and waste water infrastructure, protecting the environment and supporting economic and housing development. I know these issues are priorities for all members and all parties. Clean water is a fundamental right for all citizens. From washing our hands now more often than ever, to delivering more social and affordable homes for our communities, to enabling development to grow our economy, it is a critical public service.

The already challenging resource position has been made worse by the financial impact of the Covid-19 crisis which I am currently seeking to address with Executive colleagues. My Department continues to work to deliver for our communities in the best ways that we can, in these difficult circumstances for all of our citizens.

Capital

I have examined closely the opportunities for capital investment carefully within the context of the Covid-19 crisis, and after returning inescapable flagship surrenders due to Covid-19 as required to the Department for Finance, I am pleased to announce that I am planning to spend approximately £544m this financial year which will make a major contribution to the broader economic recovery particularly within the construction industry. I recognise again that there are uncertainties as we come out of lockdown but I believe that with prudent management and effective monitoring as we go forward this is achievable.

My Department is responsible for the upkeep of existing infrastructure valued in excess of £30bn. I need to balance maintaining and investing in existing infrastructure assets with investing in new projects and infrastructure. There exists already a considerable body of evidence that the Executive is simply not investing enough in maintaining public assets. Despite my budgetary pressures, I will therefore be maintaining the level of investment in structural maintenance – some £75m as in previous years – in rail safety – almost £50m – and in our water and waste water infrastructure – some £150m. They are key in providing an immediate boost to our recovery – maintenance programmes are an important source of work for local businesses and local people and, through their multiplier effects, have a much wider impact in local communities. It is crucial that we ensure work can continue and that we get the basics right for all communities across Northern Ireland.

I am keen to improve connectivity and achieve regional balance in investment and to look more strategically beyond the current financial year. Specifically, I have approved budgets for the continuation of works on all the flagship projects, the A5 Western Transport Corridor where I am awaiting the Public Inquiry Inspector's Report and also the A6. I have also approved commencement of works on site at the Belfast Transport Hub, which will transform public transport across the city and the north, as well as contributing to the wider economic recovery. These Executive priorities will continue to progress at pace laying the foundations for future transformation in connectivity within and across the north and across our island, assisting the economic recovery so urgently needed as we enter the recovery phase. In terms of north-west connectivity and regionally balanced investment I have also made funding available for an updated feasibility study for Phase 3 of the Derry – Coleraine rail line to restart plans on this important connection for the North West and ensure progress is made. I recognise the importance of this project to the people of the North West and while I face severe limitations in my Department's resource budget, I am pleased that with capital investment we can take steps to address regional imbalance in the North West.

I also recognise the importance of investing in the Strategic Road Improvement schemes, many of which are in development, and so I have set aside £8m this year to further progress and develop these schemes. I am keen to ensure these schemes progress and deliver multiple benefits for communities across Northern Ireland, and consistent with my wider priorities, they are future-proofed and help stimulate our green recovery.

With the capital budget available to me, I have taken the opportunity to accelerate my transformation agenda to create new spaces and places where people can enjoy a cleaner, greener way of living and travelling, whether for work or for pleasure. To that end I have added £5m to the already ring-fenced allocation of £25m for Low Emission Buses in Translink in an effort to take further steps towards addressing climate change and making public transport more attractive and efficient as an alternative to private cars.

On Active Travel, my decision to create a Walking and Cycling Champion within my Department is already leading to the identification of collaborative opportunities for investment in infrastructure, with a £20m Blue/Green fund I can now make available, which will act as a catalyst for positive infrastructure and cultural change in the way we live and travel, building on current initiatives. I am determined that there will be an inclusive approach to determining the deployment of this with a wide range of stakeholders having the opportunity to identify innovative solutions that will transform our communities for the better. This is our chance for change. Change that we can deliver through community, through partnership and together.

As part of this transformation I am determined to make roads safer around our schools by investing £2m to introduce 20 mph speed limits across around 100 school in the north so that parents, children and staff are safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis.

Other transformation investments supporting our green recovery include £4m for Greenway infrastructure, £4m for Park and Ride sites, £8m for investment in low energy LED street lights, £4m for intelligent Transport Systems at our Traffic and Information Control Centre and I am investing £10m over the next two years in the new DVA Test Centre at Hydebank which will be capable of delivering the legally required emissions testing on all vehicles.

My officials are also examining ways of transforming the way we do business through our Digital Strategy with a £2.0m investment within the Department and DVA to enable us to work smarter and work towards a digital approach that uses the most up to date technology to automate and reduce the cost of service delivery, while improving digital access for customers.

In line with my commitment to tackle regional imbalance, the budget for Structural Maintenance will include £10m for a Rural Roads Fund, which will help address the growing problem of potholes which should go some way to improving road standards and safety for all road users. Our rural communities cannot suffer or be left behind.

In summary therefore my budget position is a mixed picture. On the resource side, in line with previous years my Department will struggle to maintain a decent level of service, despite the best endeavours of all involved. Capital, however, offers more opportunities and the decisions that I have taken will help kick start our economic and green recovery from Covid-19.

I look forward to the continued support of all of my Assembly colleagues in delivering these very important infrastructure projects and service improvements to enhance all of our lives as we focus on planning for recovery and a new and better shared future.

The Executive Office

Statement By The First Minister And Deputy First Minister On The Attorney General

Published on Monday 15 June 2020

Ministers: The term of office of Mr Larkin QC as Attorney General for Northern Ireland comes to an end on 30 June 2020. The Executive Office will initiate a selection process to help us identify and appoint a successor. This process will be based on the principles that apply to public appointments and will be an open competition. We recognise the importance of the position and are considering a number of options to ensure continuity in maintaining the responsibilities and statutory functions of the Attorney General and his office in accordance with the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002.

We would like to take this opportunity, on behalf of the Executive, to thank Mr John Larkin QC for his tireless and invaluable work over the past decade.

We will provide a further update to the Assembly in due course.

Department of Justice

Commencement of the Criminal Finance Act 2017 and the Crime (Overseas Production Orders) Act 2019 in Respect of Relevant Provisions Relating to Northern Ireland

Published at 9.30 am on Thursday 18 June 2020

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): When I was appointed Minister of Justice I set out my intention to ensure that in the two years left of this mandate I would make a real difference, including through measures to reduce harm within communities. Today marks a further step on the journey towards delivering that goal by ensuring that law enforcement agencies in Northern Ireland have effective legal powers to deal with the threat posed by crime, including serious organised crime.

Later today I will be writing to the Home Secretary asking that she commence the relevant provisions of the Criminal Finances Act 2017 ('the CFA 2017') for Northern Ireland, including new unexplained wealth orders, account freezing and forfeiture provisions and listed assets forfeiture provisions. I will also ask the Home Secretary to commence the relevant provisions of the Crime (Overseas Production Orders) Act 2019 ('the COPO Act 2019') which will ensure that law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities in Northern Ireland have the same powers as their counterparts in the rest of the UK to apply for and obtain electronic data from overseas service providers for the purposes of criminal investigations and prosecutions.

Background

The CFA 2017 is a UK-wide Act with a mix of reserved (terrorist financing and tax) and devolved matters (assets recovery and powers to recover the proceeds of crime). The CFA 2017 makes legislative provision to provide law enforcement agencies and partners with new capabilities and powers to recover the proceeds of crime and to tackle money laundering, corruption and terrorist financing. The emphasis is on strengthening the existing provisions in the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 to ensure that law enforcement agencies have effective legal powers to deal with the threat posed by serious organised crime and to ensure that its application in Northern Ireland is consistent with its application in the rest of the UK.

The Criminal Finances Bill received Royal Assent in April 2017 and the Act has been fully commenced in England, Wales and Scotland. In Northern Ireland, only provisions that relate wholly to reserved or excepted matters have been commenced. Steps were taken during the passage of the Bill to draft and secure agreement to a Legislative Consent Memorandum (LCM) for the provisions that relate to devolved matters. The Justice Committee was consulted and in December 2016 the Executive Committee approved the tabling of the LCM for debate. The draft LCM was laid at the Assembly Business Office in January 2017 pending a date for a motion but the Northern Ireland Assembly was dissolved before the debate could take place.

Rather than amend the Criminal Finances Bill so that it did not extend fully to Northern Ireland, Home Office Ministers decided to keep the provisions relating to devolved matters in the Bill and added provision for different commencement dates for the provisions in the different UK jurisdictions. In addition, the Home Office Security Minister made a commitment that provisions that either related expressly to, or touched on, devolved matters would not be commenced without the appropriate consent being obtained.

The COPO Act 2019 is a UK-wide Act with provisions which relate to both reserved matters (e.g. telecommunications, foreign affairs/cooperation, counter-terrorism powers) and devolved matters (e.g. policing and courts). The Act creates a standalone legal regime for UK law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities to obtain electronic data directly from overseas communication service providers for the purposes of criminal investigations and prosecutions, through applying for an overseas production order.

The development of the Act was a pre-requisite for the UK to progress a data access agreement with the United States of America, which will enable UK law enforcement and criminal justice agencies access to information held by US service providers who process, create, store or communicate electronic data on behalf of UK persons. It will also enable the UK to enter into similar agreements with other international partners.

The Act received Royal Assent on 28 February 2019 and has been fully commenced in England, Wales and Scotland. In Northern Ireland, only provisions that relate wholly to reserved or excepted matters have been commenced. The commencement of the devolved provisions was held back pending the restoration of the Northern Ireland Executive.

Legislative Procedure

I have made the commencement of these provisions one of my key priorities since taking up office at the start of the year and have been determining the appropriate course of action to progress commencement in the context of enacted legislation. While there is no predetermined protocol to seek the retrospective consent of the Northern Ireland Assembly after the UK Parliament has legislated for devolved matters, it is important to ensure that before progressing to commencement I am assured that a sound and justifiable case can be made for commencing the relevant provisions in Northern Ireland.

The additional powers will significantly enhance existing powers and tools to tackle serious organised crime in Northern Ireland and I am keen that they should be available to the relevant enforcement agencies as soon as possible. There have been wide calls for the commencement of the powers, including from members of the Northern Ireland Assembly, particularly in relation to the new unexplained wealth order provisions, account freezing and forfeiture provisions and listed assets forfeiture provisions.

I do not want Northern Ireland to have a weaker regime than other UK jurisdictions – to be seen as a ‘safer’ place to keep criminal assets. Organised crime does not observe geographical boundaries and there is value in handling matters such as asset recovery consistently. These new and additional powers will strengthen and align regimes and further support law enforcement efforts to subvert the financial motivation of criminals.

I feel it is important to also highlight that the CFA 2017 provisions became operational in other parts of the UK between October 2017 and April 2018. I am keen to ensure that we can progress at pace and do not miss the opportunity to have them commenced in 2020. I want to avoid any further delay in ensuring that law enforcement agencies and partners here have the same capabilities and powers to recover the proceeds of crime, as their counterparts in England, Scotland and Wales.

I have updated Executive colleagues and the Justice Committee of my intentions in recent weeks, through correspondence and briefing papers. I am pleased to note that while some procedural points were raised and addressed, Ministerial colleagues have to date not raised any objections to the provisions. The Justice Committee was briefed on 28 May and I subsequently provided additional information to address a range of procedural points raised. I understand the Justice Committee has also taken the views of the Northern Ireland Policing Board and that members of the Board are supportive.

I am making this written Ministerial statement to advise members of the Northern Ireland Assembly of my intentions.

Next steps

I will be writing later today to the Home Secretary to seek her agreement to commence the relevant provisions of both the CFA 2017 and the COPO Act 2019 in Northern Ireland. The Home Secretary has the primary role in terms of commencing the majority of the outstanding CFA 2017 provisions by commencement regulations at Parliament. A number of provisions will be commenced by regulations by my Department at the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Home Secretary has the sole responsibility for commencing the relevant COPO Act 2019 provisions.

The aim is to commence the provisions of CFA 2017 by December 2020. The COPO Act 2019 provisions are expected to be commenced after the UK/US data access agreement is ratified, which is likely to be in July 2020.

There is a significant programme of work required to support commencement of the CFA 2017 provisions, including the drafting of the commencement regulations and consultation prior to making of the regulations, as well as other secondary legislation to bring court rules and associated Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 codes of practice into force. Much of the preparatory work needs to be taken forward by the Home Office, with the support of officials in the Department of Justice.

Secondary legislation to amend court rules will also be required to support the commencement of the COPO Act 2019 provisions.

Future Assembly Scrutiny

Informing Ministerial Colleagues, the Justice Committee and advising members of the Northern Ireland Assembly of my intentions to proceed to commence the provisions by way of this Written Ministerial Statement, will I hope, provide a proportionate and pragmatic means of moving forward while recognising the unique circumstances of these particular Acts.

There will be an opportunity for Assembly Members to be consulted on the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 Codes of Practice which will set out how those powers should be operationalised in Northern Ireland.

I have also asked officials to make arrangements to provide an annual update to the Justice Committee on the use of the powers in the CFA 2017.

Conclusion

The additional powers, through commencement of the CFA Act 2017, will significantly enhance existing powers and tools to tackle serious organised crime in Northern Ireland and I am keen that they should be available to the relevant enforcement agencies as soon as possible.

Commencement of the COPO Act 2019 will significantly strengthen existing procedures under Mutual Legal Assistance to enable law enforcement agencies in Northern Ireland access to information which may be critical to an investigation or prosecution.

As Justice Minister I believe that there is a compelling case to commence these provisions. I strongly believe that they are essential in the fight against crime, including serious organised crime.

£25 Million Covid-19 Support Package for Beef, Dairy, Lamb, Potato and Ornamental Horticulture Producers

Published on Tuesday 30 June 2020

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs):

- 1 I wish to make a written statement to the Assembly to advise Members of my decision to target the COVID-19 £25m financial support to those sectors most impacted by the crisis.
- 2 On 19 May the NI Executive agreed to a £25m financial support package following a case I made seeking to help alleviate the emerging threat to Northern Ireland farm incomes. This was due to falling farm gate prices triggered by COVID-19 and the losses that were occurring within the ornamental horticulture sector.
- 3 I have continued to meet with a number of sectors and industry representatives to examine the nature and extent of the financial losses that are being incurred. I have decided to target £21.4m of the £25m support package towards those businesses in the beef, dairy, sheep, potato and ornamental horticulture sectors that have been hardest hit financially and those in most immediate need as a direct result of the Covid-19 pandemic.
- 4 In the coming weeks I intend to bring forward legislation to the Assembly to enable the delivery of schemes that will provide financial support to the beef, dairy, sheep, potato and ornamental horticulture sectors.
- 5 Allocation of the funding to these sectors will be based on evidence and distributed in an equitable way to those sectors that can clearly demonstrate tangible losses.
- 6 The Covid-19 support package is a contribution towards the losses incurred by businesses as a result of short term market disturbance. Since other HMG support measures are available to agricultural and horticultural businesses, rates of compensation for losses incurred have been set at 100% or 80%. Businesses in some sectors have been able to gain more support from these schemes than those in other sectors. The 80% rate is compatible with that set for the Self Employed Income Support Scheme and the amount of wages paid to furloughed workers through the Coronavirus Job retention Scheme.
- 7 The schemes that are being developed to support the sectors will all follow similar design principles to ensure good governance, avoid unnecessary bureaucracy and ensure that the schemes comply with legal requirements. These principles include:
  - Support for evidence-based losses caused by market disturbance;
  - Support targeted to those impacted most financially;

- Compliance with State Aid rules;
- Simple approach and flexible to administer / minimum bureaucracy;
- No negative impact on administration of Basic Payment funding;
- Compliance with good governance and accountability;
- Measures to avoid over compensation of losses / consideration of benefits from other schemes;
- Partnership approach with stakeholders;
- Compliance with Section 75 obligations.

Support for Beef Sector (£7M)

- 8 The evidence of the impact within the beef sector demonstrates that the worst losses were incurred by beef finishers who bought stores at higher prices and faced low finished cattle prices, due to the collapse of the food service market and weakness in international markets for 5th Quarter products.
- 9 Proposed support for beef producers is comprised of two flat rate payments per head based on the number of animals presented for slaughter and when those animals were marketed. Payment 1 of £40 per head would target those producers impacted most when beef prices fell significantly following “lockdown”, and Payment 2 of £33 per head for cattle slaughtered in the period mid-February to end of June. Both payments would be made to the farmer who had those animals in their herd for at least 30 days prior to slaughter.
- 10 I am aware that many beef farmers have not been able to receive any benefit from the Self Employment Relief Scheme due to low prices and levels of profit in recent years. On that basis I am compensating them for 100% of their losses.
- 11 Estimated amount of support required for the beef sector is £7m.

Support for the Dairy Sector (£11m)

- 12 Losses within the dairy sector have been assessed and evidence demonstrates that a market slow-down started in March when “lockdown” caused the hospitality and food service sector to close and milk price for dairy farmers was reduced.
- 13 Proposed support is based on making payments of an amount per litre based on a reference period before “lockdown” (February 2020) in order to determine the price per litre on which payment is based.
- 14 I am aware that many milk producers have received benefit from the Self Employment Relief Scheme to compensate for loss in profits, and have taken out the Bounce Back Loan Scheme to alleviate capital costs. This payment should therefore be a contribution towards losses incurred, in particular the working capital or production costs as opposed to the profit element. On that basis I am compensating them for 80% of their losses.
- 15 Estimated amount of support required for the dairy sector is £11m.

Support for the Sheep Sector (£232K)

- 16 Losses within the sheep sector have been assessed and evidence demonstrates that the price for lambs fell in week ending 28 March and remained relatively low for four weeks before recovering to pre Covid-19 levels in the week ending 25 April.
- 17 Comparing total sales in the four week period (w/e 28 March to w/e 25 April) to the previous four weeks before the prices fell, there was a total loss to the sector of £232K that equates to approx. £6.88 per lamb.
- 18 I am aware that many sheep farmers have not been able to receive any benefit from the Self Employment Relief Scheme due to low levels of profit in recent years. On that basis I am compensating them for 100% of their losses.
- 19 Estimated amount of support required for the sheep sector is £232K.

Support for the Potato Sector (£1.2 – 1.6m)

- 20 Losses within the potato sector have been assessed and evidence demonstrates that potato growers who specialise in supplying the food service and hospitality industry with processing potatoes have been significantly affected by the closure of these businesses during “lockdown”. They were left with falling prices and very few market outlets for this valuable perishable product.
- 21 The evidence gathered to date demonstrates a loss to the sector that would require an intervention of £1.5 – £2m.
- 22 I am aware that some growers will be eligible for the Self Employment Relief Scheme (up to £7.5k per person) to compensate for loss in profits, and some have taken out the Bounce Back Loan Scheme to reduce costs of capital or fund this year’s growing costs. On that basis I am compensating them for 80% of their losses.
- 23 Estimated amount of support required for the potato sector is £1.2 - £1.6m.

Support for the Ornamental Horticulture Sector (£1.2 – 1.6M)

- 24 Growers in the ornamental horticulture sector have suffered losses due to closure of markets for bedding, cut flowers and other plants prior to the reopening of garden centres. Horticultural businesses do not pay rates so have been unable to access the £10k and £25k Covid-19 business grants from the Department of Economy. DAERA officials have made an assessment the potential loss through engagement with growers and from other sources. This information has indicated that losses in the region of £2 - £2.5m have been incurred.
- 25 I am aware that some growers have received benefit from the Self Employment Relief Scheme (up to £7.5k per person) to compensate for loss in profits, have used the furlough scheme for their staff, and have taken out the Bounce Back Loan Scheme to reduce costs of capital. The support payment should therefore be a contribution towards losses incurred, in particular the working capital or production costs as opposed to the profit element. On that basis I am compensating them for 80% of their losses.

- 26 Estimated amount of support required for the ornamental horticulture sector is £1.2 - £1.6m.

Conclusion

- 27 I recognise that we have all faced many challenges this year as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, that we all have a responsibility to support businesses, communities and individuals in Northern Ireland and that there is a finite budgetary envelope to do so. As Minister responsible for our agri-food sector I trust that you will recognise the importance of supporting these sectors which have been particularly affected by market disturbances as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.
- 28 The financial interventions that I am proposing to make amount to approximately £21.4m of the £25m support package that I have secured from the Northern Ireland Executive. I believe that this support to the beef, dairy, sheep, potato and ornamental sectors will go a long way in helping these businesses survive the current crisis. However, I want to be prudent at this stage with the funding as we cannot rule out the possibility of further market disturbance as a result of this pandemic and the need for additional farmer support.
- 29 For that reason, I want to retain a budget of just over £7m based on the residual funding of £3.6m (from the £25m) and the £3.6m that was reprioritised internally. This would allow me to address additional issues and challenges Covid-19 may present in the weeks ahead. For example, if there is evidence of impacts on the lamb market as higher numbers of lambs are presented for sale in the coming weeks or if there are consequences of a food processing business closing due to an outbreak amongst staff. I will therefore continue to monitor the situation and assess the impact on those sectors that have not been supported to date.
- 30 I would like to take this opportunity to thank my Executive colleagues for their support thus far in my endeavours to support our vitally important agri-food industry and support our local economy during these extremely challenging times.

Written Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they will repeal the exemption of teachers from The Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.
(AQW 687/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): A review of the exemption of teachers from The Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 will be considered in due course.

Ms Bailey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of possible conflicts of interests in relation to the Attorney General's office, given the Attorney General's new appointment as Deputy High Court Judge on 31 January 2020, as his tenure as Attorney General is until June 2020.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We are aware of the potential conflicts of interest that could arise between the role of the Attorney General and the role of temporary High Court Judge. The Attorney General has offered to undertake not to sit as a temporary High Court Judge while he continues to serve as Attorney General. We wrote to the Attorney General on 19 March accepting this undertaking.

Mr McGlone asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what is being done to protect the rights of citizens from other European Union states residing in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 964/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: EU, EEA or Swiss citizens can apply to the EU Settlement Scheme to continue living here after 30 June 2021.

The Executive Office is working closely with the Home Office in London to facilitate and support the full implementation of the Scheme.

Mr Stewart asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 42101/11-15 and AQW 5338/16-21, whether the Executive Office will legislate to remove Article 71 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 should the Department of Education establish the policy position requiring the need to amend or repeal legislation and that position is agreed by the Executive.
(AQW 1385/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The Executive Office has legislative responsibility for the exemption from The Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. The matter will be considered in conjunction with the Department of Education in due course. Ministers will act in accordance with any decision of the Executive.

Ms Armstrong asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline (i) what steps they have to take to enable the Citizens' Assembly to meet; and (ii) how will they ensure there is appropriate civic engagement and public consultation on the topics to be considered.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The New Decade, New Approach Deal outlines in paragraphs 3.9 and 3.9 proposed arrangements for future structured civic engagement, including the role of Compact Civic Advisory Panel in recommending appropriate models of engagement on specific issues, including a Citizens' Assembly. We will be considering the potential and opportunities of a Citizens' Assembly as part of the work on implementing 'New Decade New Approach' (NDNA). A detailed assessment on NDNA commitments is currently underway within our Department.

Mr Blair asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister in relation to (i) the Specialised Committee; and (ii) the Joint Consultative Working Group, for their assessment of the (a) role; (b) terms of reference; and (c) appointment process, with particular reference to the representation of Northern Ireland at both committees.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The role, terms of reference and appointment process of the Ireland/Northern Ireland Specialised Committee and the Joint Consultative Working Group are agreed between the UK Government and the European Union.

The UK Government committed in New Decade, New Approach to ensure that representatives from the Northern Ireland Executive are invited to be part of the UK delegation in any meetings of the UK-EU Specialised or Joint Committees discussing Northern Ireland specific matters which are also being attended by the Irish Government as part of the European Union's delegation.

The first meeting of the Ireland/Northern Ireland Specialised Committee took place on 30 April. Dr Andrew McCormick, Director General for International Relations, was invited by the UK to attend on behalf of the Northern Ireland Executive. It was agreed at the meeting that the Joint Consultative Working Group should be convened but detailed terms of reference and a date for its first meeting have not yet been confirmed.

Mr Givan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the resourcing cost associated with the Equality Commission's involvement in the Lee v Ashers Baking Company Ltd. court case.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland is a Non Departmental Public Body and as such this is a matter for it to answer. We have therefore asked the Chief Executive to respond to you directly on this matter.

Ms Sheerin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the options they are considering to appoint the Panel of Experts to assist the Ad-Hoc Committee on the Bill of Rights.

(AQO 370/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Our officials are currently finalising options for how we constitute the panel of five experts.

They have also been liaising with the Assembly authorities in respect of the work of the Ad-Hoc Committee on the Bill of Rights.

Dr Aiken asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the findings and recommendations of the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry report.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The Report of the RHI Inquiry is an important and substantial document. It will have implications for the future role and conduct of Ministers, civil servants and special advisers and for the operation of departments and indeed the Assembly.

The Executive has accepted the recommendations which now deserve comprehensive and detailed consideration as to their implementation. It has therefore established a sub-committee chaired by the Minister of Finance to consider the recommendations of the report. The sub-committee will prepare an action plan within one month and a response within three months. At this time therefore we do not intend to pre-empt this work by offering separate comment.

Mr Beggs asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what action they are taking to co-ordinate an Executive response to the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry report.

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer given to AQO 373/17-22.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in light of the comments of Junior Minister Declan Kearney at the Committee for the Executive Office on 13 May, (i) what contact have they had with Her Majesty's Government on the issue of border control posts in Belfast, Warrenpoint and Larne; and (ii) whether they will publish the same, along with their response.

(AQW 4126/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: A document on border control posts has been shared with officials in the NICS. This document has been shared with the Executive for information.

We have no plans to publish it, as it is a Government Paper.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) whether the fact-finding report on the data breach in the Historical Institutional Abuse Interim Advocate's office been received; (ii) whether it will be published; and (iii) what action has resulted.

(AQW 4476/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The Group Internal Audit and Fraud Investigation Service is undertaking the investigation at pace. Following receipt of the report, Ministers will determine the next steps.

Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the total cost of the damage to Castlewellan Forest Park caused by the fire which started close to the Leitrim Road on 15 May 2020.

(AQW 4290/17-22)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): The estimated financial cost to my Department of the damage to Castlewellan Forest Park caused by the fire is approximately £16,000. This includes staff costs associated with dealing with the fire incident, estimated future costs to re-establish the burnt area and losses associated with future timber value. External costs incurred by the emergency services and other organisations in dealing with the incident are not included.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of the implementation of the Ireland protocol.

Mr Poots: From 1 January, the greater the deviation between the UK and the EU in terms of trading arrangements, tariffs and SPS rules, the more difficult and intrusive the Protocol becomes. Therefore, one of my key priorities is for the UK and the EU to agree a zero tariff, zero quota limit deal, and to have maximum alignment in terms of SPS arrangements. I believe there is still time to achieve this and it is in everyone's interest that we do. If there is no trade agreement between the UK and the EU, the implementation of the Protocol becomes even more challenging.

It is my aim to ensure that the Northern Ireland Protocol is implemented in a way that maximises the flow of trade, and which works for Northern Ireland's businesses and citizens in terms of agri-food. This means having approved port facilities designated by the European Union which enable the continued importation of animal and plant products and live animals into Northern Ireland; and a legally binding framework which ensures continued unconstrained access for Northern Ireland's businesses to their key market in Great Britain.

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, in relation to planning enforcement notice LA11/2016/0168/CA prohibiting the use of an unauthorised eighteen million litre slurry lagoon and associated waste water lagoon constructed close to the River Faughan and Tributaries Special Area of Conservation, whether his Department is monitoring the movement of slurry and waste water from the dairy cattle farm at Longland Road, Claudy.

Mr Poots: The farmer is legally responsible for ensuring that any slurry and waste water produced on his farm is properly stored, used or exported in line with the Nutrient Action Programme (NAP) Regulations and any planning requirements.

The movement of slurry from any farm is captured under the NAP Regulations. The Regulations require records concerning the movement of livestock manure off holding, to be kept and submitted annually to the Department (by 1 March of the following year for Derogated holdings and by 31 Jan of the following year for all other holdings).

All farmers claiming Basic Payment Scheme and other direct payments are required to comply with the NAP Regulations and failure to do so can lead to penalties being applied.

In addition, any incorrect storage or spreading of manures, that causes a water pollution incident, can also lead to a criminal prosecution under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 with the possibility on conviction of fines, possible imprisonment, or both.

My Department is aware of the issues around this case and have been undertaking monitoring in the area. Since January 2020, Water Quality Inspectors have conducted regular proactive inspections of the waterways in the vicinity of this farm and will continue to do so. The inspections have included waterway checks conducted at Longland Road and at Glenshane Road and to date no pollution has been found at these locations. If any future pollution is discovered, our staff will investigate and if appropriate, instigate enforcement action.

Finally any breach of the planning enforcement notice referred to is a matter for the relevant planning authority, in this case Derry City and Strabane District Council.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail cattle movements (i) to marts; and (ii) from farm to farm; broken down by month for the years (a) 2017; (b) 2018; and (c) 2019, and by Divisional Veterinary Office area.

(AQW 4449/17-22)

Mr Poots: My officials in Veterinary Service Animal Health Group (VSAHG) carried out a search of the Animal and Public Health Information System (APHIS) for the information that you have requested.

In each of the years 2017, 2018 and 2019 the number of cattle movements monthly from farm to marts and from farm to farm were as laid out in the attached tables by Divisional Veterinary Office (DVO) area, based on the DVO area of the holding from which the movement originated.

Department of Education

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, in light of coronavirus, whether sufficient supplies of cleaning products are available for all schools.

(AQW 3159/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): The Education Authority is responsible for ensuring the procurement of Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) and cleaning products to schools and has secured the supply chain of these products. The Education Authority is confident that this arrangement will ensure that sufficient supplies of PPE and cleaning products are available to meet schools' needs.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what guidance and support the Education Authority gives to Governors in the event of a complaint being made against them while carrying out their role.

Mr Weir: The Education Authority (EA) has provided schools with a Model School Complaints Procedure and accompanying Guidance<sup>1</sup> developed in conjunction with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, the Controlled Schools' Support Council and the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education. This procedure is not used for handling complaints about matters for which separate established procedures and appeal mechanisms exist.

Under Article 40(1) of the Education (NI) Order 1996 a board of governors is constituted as a body corporate. Once appointed, each governor is a member of the body corporate; decisions are made collectively either by the board or by a committee thereof in accordance with the school's scheme of management.

While it is the responsibility of the governors to follow the correct procedure when a complaint concerns the actions of a board of governors, EA officers can provide guidance and support regarding which procedure to follow, and how to follow the procedure correctly. Where appropriate, such guidance and support may extend to legal advice. Where a complaint is made about the actions of an individual governor, the EA can also provide advice, through the board's chairperson, regarding which procedure to follow and how to follow the procedure correctly.

To further support governors the EA provides an annual programme of governor training which includes training on Complaints Handling. All governors also have access to the Governors' Guide<sup>2</sup>, which provides guidance and advice to governors on the gamut of their responsibilities, including handling complaints.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education to outline the criteria applied in terms of defining salary pay grades for Principals employed within the primary school sector.

Mr Weir: The salary pay grade for each Principal is determined by the Board of Governors (BoG) based on the Leadership Group to which the school has been assigned and the Individual School Range (ISR) as determined by the BoG.

The Leadership Group for a school is determined using a specified formula which relates to the size of the school. A school is assigned to a Leadership Group based upon a unit score, calculated by reference to the number of pupils at each Key Stage on the register on the most recent Annual School Census Statistical Return.

The methodology for calculating unit scores is detailed in DE Circular 2006/17 at paragraphs 4.1 to 4.3 which require Relevant Bodies i.e. Boards of Governors to pay Principals and Vice-Principals on a 43-point Leadership Group pay spine - link included here for ease of reference:

<https://www.education-ni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/de/circular-2006-17-leadership-group-pay-structure-from-1-september-2005.pdf>

Please see DE Circular 2020/04 for current pay scale amounts - link included here for ease of reference:

<https://www.education-ni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/education/Circular%20202004%20-%20Teachers%27%20Pay%20and%20Allowances%20from%201%20September%202018.pdf>

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education to confirm what authority is granted to Board of Governors to make the final determination in terms of a Principal's pay grade.

(AQW 4296/17-22)

Mr Weir: Boards of Governors of schools have a statutory responsibility to develop a salary policy related to the needs of their school. The authority to do so is contained within The Teachers' Salaries Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1993 No. 318.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education to confirm if a Board of Governors has the authority to initiate a progression in pay grade to a Principal, if this is deemed necessary to retain this member of staff.

Mr Weir: Where there is clear evidence of extremely exceptional circumstances a Board of Governors (BoG) must consult the employing authority i.e. the Education Authority (EA) for controlled schools, detailing the reasons before considering any salary adjustment to retain a principal; it must be affordable to the school in the long term without the need for additional funding. The maximum of the Individual School Range (ISR) must not exceed the maximum of the Leadership Group range.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education (i) whether he will ensure that qualifications awarded in educational institutions in Northern Ireland will retain legal recognition across the European Union after Brexit, and, equally, whether qualifications awarded across the European Union will continue to be legally recognised within Northern Ireland; and (ii) to detail what work his Department has undertaken on this issue to date.

Mr Weir: Qualifications obtained by 14-19 year olds in schools in Northern Ireland will retain the same standing and status that they held prior to exit from the EU. Qualifications are closely regulated for quality and standards in the UK and are recognised by other jurisdictions both across Europe, through the European Qualifications Framework (EQF), and elsewhere in the world. This situation will remain unchanged.

CCEA Regulation also works closely with the Irish Universities Association (IUA) and the Central Applications Office (CAO) to facilitate mutual recognition of qualifications.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of year 8 places available across schools in North Down; and (ii) the number of applications there has been.

(AQW 4383/17-22)

Mr Weir: The total number of Year 8 places made available to date across schools in North Down for the 2020/21 academic year is 954.

---

2 <https://www.education-ni.gov.uk/publications/guide-governor-roles-and-responsibilities>

The Education Authority has advised that the number of first preference applications to North Down schools for September 2020 was 930.

By the close of the admissions procedure, a total of 1,220 applications had been considered by North Down schools. This does not equate to 1,220 separate applications as any child accepted to a school other than their first preference school will have had their application considered by multiple schools.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education whether some schools will remain open during the summer holidays to help with childcare for essential services staff still dealing with the COVID-19 pandemic.

Mr Weir: My Department is focused on the immense challenge of restarting education safely. I am carefully considering the implications of this challenge on the temporary emergency supervised learning arrangements being provided by our schools currently. I plan to announce details which will clarify these matters in the near future.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on the new school builds for Holywood Primary School and Priory Integrated College, Holywood.

Mr Weir: Holywood Primary School is not currently listed for a major capital investment scheme.

Priory Integrated College has been selected for a major capital investment project to improve or replace its existing accommodation. The project will cater for the school's current approved enrolment of 600 pupils.

In February 2020 the EA successfully completed the appointment of an Integrated Consultant Team to carry out the design of the proposed Priory Integrated College. The Integrated Consultant Team is now working on the early stages of the design process.

Ms C Kelly asked the Minister of Education to outline how his Department is intending to support (i) children with special educational needs; (ii) children with disabilities; and (iii) their parents and carers, over the summer period.

(AQW 4461/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Education Authority (EA) Special Education (Statutory Operations), continues to carry out statutory assessments and to arrange placements and provision for pupils with special educational needs (SEN) within their "best endeavours" duty as set out in the Coronavirus Act 2020 Modification of Education Duties (No.7) Notice (NI) 2020. Staff continue to issue proposed statements, amendment notices and final or amended statements to ensure that the appropriate level of support is in place for each child with SEN.

The education/health joint planning process will continue to engage over the summer to identify the children most affected and put services in place where it is safe and appropriate to do so.

Summer support is currently being explored for children at Special Schools. The EA SEN Pupil Support Services have a core focus of assisting schools in their responsibilities to identify and address the needs of children and young people in the school or learning environment. Support to parents, children and young people will continue, at this time of extended school closure due to Covid-19. An extensive suite of resources, materials and contact details is available in the Pupil Support Services area of the EA Website which be accessed via <https://www.eani.org.uk/services/pupil-support-services>.

Childcare for school age children with a disability will be provided over the summer months through the Bright Start Holiday Grant Scheme. Applications are currently being received and will be approved for those settings deemed eligible and which have approval to remain open to care for vulnerable and keyworker children during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Sure Start services are available to all children (aged 0-3) and families within catchment areas. Support has continued during the COVID-19 pandemic and will continue throughout 2020/21 including the summer months. During COVID-19 the 38 Sure Start projects are delivering services by alternative means, prioritising to the most vulnerable children and their families.

The Pathway Fund includes support for children (aged 0-4) with special educational needs, complex needs and their parents/carers. Many of the Pathway Fund projects will operate over the summer months, having identified alternative means to meet the needs of the families within their local community.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Education for the estimated cost to schools for additional extended cleaning practices and sanitising products per term, and how this will be budgeted for.

Mr Weir: My Department has established a Restart Programme to consider a range of issues relating to the safe and effective re-opening of schools. As part of this, guidance is being prepared, through co-design with practitioners, on practical issues linked to a "new school day". This will cover issues such as hygiene and cleaning practices.

It is likely that there will be additional costs as a result of additional health and safety measures, such as cleaning. The Department is not in a position to quantify these costs at this stage. These will be identified and managed as work develops on Restart.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education for an update on his Department's scheme to provide laptops to school children.

Mr Weir: I recently announced plans to provide digital devices to those children who meet certain criteria in order to assist with their learning at home. The full statement is available here: www.education-ni.gov.uk/news/minister-outlines-plans-provide-digital-devices-disadvantaged-children.

Stage 1 – meeting immediate need – The Education Authority is working with schools to maximise the use of existing stock to get devices to pupils quickly. The Education Authority C2K service is supporting schools to enable these school owned devices to be made suitable for home use.

Stage 2 – The Education Authority has procured 3,664 new laptops. These devices are currently being configured with the relevant software for home use.

Stage 3 – Assuming that there is likely to be a level of need over and above what schools and the EA are able to provide under Stages 1 and 2, I have approved the purchase of up to an additional 8000 devices. The procurement of these devices along with an internet connectivity solution is currently going through the appropriate approvals process and will commence shortly.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education to what extent racism is covered by the school curriculum.

Mr Weir: The flexibility of our curriculum enables schools to regularly review and update their approach and resources to reflect societal change. The curriculum provides learning opportunities for young people to develop as individuals, contributors to society, the economy and the environment. The key elements include Mutual Understanding; Citizenship; Cultural Understanding; and Ethical Awareness. Our schools have the freedom to use a variety of resources to introduce key concepts, such as the impact of racism in society, into many areas of learning.

At primary level the "Personal Development and Mutual Understanding" area of learning explores topics such as responsibility for self and others; human rights and social responsibility; causes of conflict and appropriate responses; valuing and celebrating cultural difference and diversity; similarities and differences between people; respect for others; and living as members of the community. At post-primary level, the "Learning for Life and Work" area of learning covers topics such as discrimination in greater detail under the subject "Local and Global Citizenship".

The curriculum at both primary and post-primary level contributes to promoting 'good relations' and is closely aligned with the Department of Education's Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education Policy. This aims to contribute to improving relations between communities by ensuring learners have an understanding of and respect for the rights, equality and diversity of all without discrimination. The policy seeks to provide children and young people with the skills, attitudes and behaviours needed to develop mutual understanding, recognition of and respect for difference.

The Department's Shared Education Policy also provides opportunities for pupils to learn about each other from each other. The policy seeks to deliver educational and social benefits to learners, promote equality of opportunity, good relations, equality of identity, respect for diversity and community cohesion.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education whether consideration has been given to (i) cancelling transfer tests for 2020 in light of the current pandemic; and (ii) delaying the transfer test for a period longer than the current two weeks.

(AQW 4605/17-22)

Mr Weir: Any decision to cancel or further delay the transfer tests this year is a matter for the test providers and those schools that use the tests results as part of their admissions criteria. The provision of the tests is a private arrangement between schools and the providers and any decision regarding their organisation and timing are not the responsibility of my Department.

Department of Finance

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of Civil Service staff (i) employed in each Department; (ii) working from home; (iii) furloughed; and (iv) shielding.

(AQW 4335/17-22)

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): Based on the latest management information, I can confirm there are 21.5k people employed by the NICS. As of the end of May, our management information indicates that 52.3% of them are working from home. The table presented below provides a breakdown by department.

	NICS Employee Headcount	Number of staff working from home
		Headcount	%
NICS Overall	21,484	11,241	52.3
DAERA	3,175	2,360	74.3

	NICS Employee Headcount	Number of staff working from home
		Headcount	%
DE	540	498	92.2
DFC	6,934	1,518	21.9
DFE	1,160	1,065	91.8
Dfi	2,989	1,392	46.6
DOF	3,504	2,949	84.2
DOH	462	334	72.3
DOJ	1,951	863	44.2
TEO	321	262	81.6
PPS	448	no data available	no data available

* above excludes NI Prison Service and staff on career breaks or secondments

The Covid-19 furlough scheme does not apply to civil servants.

We do not collect information about the number of civil servants who are shielding.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister of Finance to detail how the Northern Ireland Executive spent the additional Barnett Consequential funding for Northern Ireland as outlined in his response to AQW 4101/17-22.
(AQW 4368/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I set out the Executive's COVID-19 allocations in my statement to the Assembly on 19 May 2020. These are also published in the attached link.

- <https://www.finance-ni.gov.uk/publications/covid-19-funding-allocations-0>

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance what is the current total value of the block grant.
(AQW 4381/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Block Grant, or NI DEL for 2020-21 is £13,769.4 million. In addition to this, the Executive are in receipt of a number of financial packages. These are set out below.

- New Decade, New Approach - £523.0 million
- Fresh Start Agreement - £196.7 million
- Confidence and Supply - £45 million

Furthermore, the Executive received a Barnett Consequential of £1,246.9 million (correct at 19 May 2020) for its COVID-19 response.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance what does the current block grant spend workout as per head of population.
(AQW 4382/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Block Grant, or DEL for 2020-21 is £13,769.4 million. Latest population statistics published by NISRA on 6 May 2020 estimate the population to be 1.894 million. Therefore the block grant spend per head of population is some £7,270.

In addition to this the Executive are in receipt of a number of financial packages. These are set out below.

- New Decade, New Approach - £523.0 million
- Fresh Start Agreement - £196.7 million
- Confidence and Supply - £45 million

The Executive also received a Barnett Consequential of £1,246.9 million (correct at 19 May 2020) for their response to the impacts of COVID-19.

These additional elements provide a further £1,062 spend per head of population.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance whether he has tabled a proposal to the Executive for funding the additional monies needed for the redevelopment of Casement Park.
(AQW 4390/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The redevelopment of Casement Park is currently awaiting a planning decision by Department for Infrastructure. If planning is approved the business case can be completed, the final costs confirmed and the appraisal process completed.

At that point the Communities Minister can table the revised funding request. As an Executive Flagship project, Casement Park will be a considered a priority.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Finance to confirm what discussions he has had with HM Treasury and the Financial Conduct Authority to address the rising cost of business insurance when so many Northern Ireland companies have been unable to claim for loss of business from their business insurance; and what protections will be introduced to ensure the insurance industry will provide policies across the whole of the U.K. including Northern Ireland.

Mr Murphy: I fully appreciate the concerns of businesses who have purchased insurance policies with the understanding that these would have covered them for the current interruption to their business, and who have seen their premiums rise while not being able to make a claim for the losses that have been incurred.

My department has been in contact with Treasury and the insurance industry throughout the current crisis to highlight the concerns of policyholders here. While the Executive have no powers in this sector, I will continue to call on the Treasury, its regulatory authorities, and the financial services industry to play their full part in treating businesses fairly and helping them in recovering from the devastating impacts of COVID-19.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how much has been paid to employees in Northern Ireland under the furlough scheme.

(AQW 4418/17-22)

Mr Murphy: My Department has been pressing Treasury, and HMRC who administer the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme, for data on its uptake in the North.

While this information is not yet available, the Department for the Economy estimate that around 200,000 people are furloughed locally.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Finance for an update on implementation of the recommendations of the Renewable Heat Incentive inquiry report.

(AQW 4429/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Executive agreed to establish a Subcommittee on Reform following the RHI Inquiry, as set out in the New Decade, New Approach Agreement; the establishment of the Subcommittee has been delayed as a result of COVID-19. The Department of Finance is preparing a paper to the Subcommittee, setting out proposed responses to the recommendations, including relevant work already completed, for consideration at its first meeting.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Finance whether he has had any conversations with the UK Government about waiving the block grant reduction related to the zero-rating of long haul Air Passenger Duty in the absence of any long haul routes from Belfast.

(AQW 4465/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Block Grant Adjustment (BGA) applied is a requirement of state aid rules which dictate that the Assembly must bear the financial consequences of devolving direct long haul Air Passenger Duty (APD) rate setting powers. The BGA was agreed at the time of devolution in 2012 and the extent of our liability was made clear at this time.

My officials are in regular contact with their counterparts in Treasury, and the other administrations who have similar BGAs in place, to discuss ongoing developments in tax devolution.

Seeking to avoid previously agreed costs would, I believe, weaken our position with Treasury in seeking additional fiscal powers going forward.

Mr Harvey asked the Minister of Finance in light of the decrease in activity in the property market as a result of COVID-19, to detail the action his Department can take to ensure that (i) the market can bounce back; and (ii) the backlogs created in the relevant property agencies such as Land Registry are reduced.

(AQW 4526/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Minister for Communities is responsible for housing and I understand that she is working on measures to re-open the property market.

On Monday 8th June 2020, Land Registry resumed the full range of services with the appropriate application of social distancing measures. Volumes of applications have decreased and backlogs are not anticipated. The matter will be kept under review by Land Registry managers.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Finance to detail the updated cost of the Aramark contract for the extra cleaning work carried out as a result of COVID-19 in all Civil Service and public sector buildings.

Mr Murphy: Each Department is responsible for managing the cleaning services contract for the buildings occupied by their staff.

Due to the outbreak of the pandemic, all Departments have been asked to carry out a health and safety risk assessment of their office accommodation. The risk assessments will dictate the standard and frequency of cleaning required. DoF does not have sight of other Departments risk assessments or the impact any additional cleaning services will have on their contract costs.

For the DoF locations, Aramark has not requested any variations to existing fixed contract costs as, due to the fact that most staff are working from home, any changes to the cleaning regime can be facilitated within the current arrangements.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Finance, pursuant to AQW 4216/17-22, why the answer does not include the figure for West Belfast.

Mr Murphy: AQW 4216/17-22 provided unemployment estimates from the Labour Force Survey for each Parliamentary Constituency.

Estimates based on less than 3 persons responding to the Labour Force Survey were suppressed to protect against the risk of disclosure. This applied to estimates for Belfast West, Lagan Valley and South Antrim.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance for an update on the outcome of the Review of the Non-Domestic Rating System.

(AQW 4589/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Significant progress continues to be made on key matters raised in the business rates public consultation. The overall high level of business rates was a major concern and in response I reduced the Regional Rate by 18%. I also extended the Small Business Rate Relief scheme and I am re-introducing the Rural ATM scheme, both as a result of positive feedback. As a result of the consultation I decided to re-introduce the Back in Business scheme; however, this has been superseded by my decision that all retail properties will receive 100% rate relief for this rating year.

The Review needs to be considered in the context of a completely different set of circumstances and in the light of £313m additional rate relief in this financial year.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of COVID-19 related deaths in (i) private; and (ii) public nursing and care homes.

(AQW 4601/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The information requested is not available. The Northern Ireland General Register Office's Registration System (NIROS) is used to produce vital statistics relating to registered deaths. However, NIROS does not hold information relating to the status (private/public) of care homes in which deaths have occurred.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Finance whether the Central Procurement Unit (CPU) was involved in joint bid for personal protection equipment with Republic of Ireland; and to outline CPU engagement throughout the process.

(AQW 4615/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I can confirm that Construction and Procurement Delivery (CPD) was working with the Office of Government Procurement (OGP) in Dublin on a North/South collaborative order for PPE.

CPD's engagement throughout this process is outlined below:

- captured details of the products and volumes required for our Health Sector and other public bodies. This detail formed our part of the North/South order which was forwarded to OGP on 27 March 2020;
- worked with OGP to refine details of the order in terms of volumes, products, specifications and pricing;
- engaged with OGP officials on the resourcing requirements in Beijing; and
- engaged with officials in the Irish Government in relation to the transfer of funds.

Department of Health

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health (i) to detail the recruitment process for the Mental Health Champion; (ii) when the position will be advertised; (iii) when an appointment will be in post; and (iv) how the salary will be funded.

(AQW 3959/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): The Mental Health Champion will initially be an interim appointment selected by my Department. This is to allow the establishment of the role and work to progress as soon as possible, whilst the recruitment process follows in due course. I hope to make an announcement on the interim appointment soon.

The recruitment process for the permanent Mental Health Champion will be open and transparent. It is my intention that the Champion will be in post as soon as possible.

In terms of funding the Executive have agreed to support the Champion by sharing the costs across Departments.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health whether the Northern Ireland Office, or any organisation, has provided medical professionals forms for (i) certification; and (ii) notification of abortions under Regulations 9 and 10 respectively.
(AQW 4214/17-22)

Mr Swann: The information which is to be provided for certification and notification purposes is specified in The Abortion (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020. The Regulations also allow for the Department of Health to provide forms. My Department has neither issued nor authorised the use of forms for either purpose.

My Department is aware of forms being used by healthcare professionals to notify abortions to the Chief Medical Officer but has not verified who provided these forms.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health when dental practices will be able to re-open to treat patients using appropriate social distancing measures.
(AQW 4215/17-22)

Mr Swann: Most General Dental Practices have remained open to treat non-Covid-19 patients with urgent dental care needs, providing the treatment does not involve the use of Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs). Patients needing emergency dental treatment which involves AGPs have been referred to our Urgent Dental Care centres.

The Acting Chief Dental Office, Michael Donaldson, wrote to all General Dental Practitioners on 2 June 2020, outlining the plans for a phased, safe full restoration of General Dental Services.

A copy of the letter can be read at the link below. <http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/pdf/Letter%20to%20GDPs%20on%20the%20Re-establishment%20of%20Dental%20Services%202020.06.20.pdf>

My Department will continue to work closely with the Health and Social Care Board and representatives of the dental profession to identify what additional support will be required as we move through the pathway to recovery and re-establish dental services.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health, given the obligation of Health and Social Care Trusts to provide services, why there is no information on accessing any abortion services on the Trusts' websites.
(AQW 4218/17-22)

Mr Swann: There is no legislative obligation for the provision of abortion services. Abortion, within the confines of The Abortion (Northern Ireland) (No. 2) Regulations 2020, can legally be provided. The extent to which an abortion service is delivered, as with any other service, is a matter Trusts must consider within the context of other service developments competing for investment within the available budget.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health, in relation the statement by Lord Bethell, the Parliamentary Under Secretary for State at the Department of Health, on 19 May 2020 that mistakes were made at the Northern Irish test laboratory that led to some COVID-19 tests at care homes being delayed or voided, to outline the mistakes and the subsequent ramifications.

Mr Swann: On 5 May, my Department became aware of an issue affecting tests arriving in the Northern Ireland laboratory that resulted from an issue with on-site equipment. The laboratory has been commissioned by the Department of Health, London (DHSC) to support Covid-19 testing as part of the National Testing Programme. DHSC has confirmed that the issue impacted a minority of samples arriving on 30 April and 1 May. Of the affected samples, a number were urgently shipped to a lighthouse laboratory operating as part of the National Testing Programme and processed before they became void. We are advised that other samples were intercepted before arrival at the laboratory and a further batch were frozen at the laboratory in accordance with World Health Organisation guidelines on preserving samples.

DHSC has also advised that a number of samples were voided as a result of the backlog, as the freezing and shipping mitigations were not available on time to preserve these samples, and that those people affected have been contacted directly through the established mechanism for reporting results operated by the National Testing Programme.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister of Health whether services at the Children's Cancer Unit are still affected due to Aspergillus infection; and what contingency arrangements are being made to ensure that no treatment is delayed.
(AQW 4233/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Children's Haematology Unit (CHU) continues to be affected by Aspergillus. When Aspergillus was identified during weekly air sampling in the CHU, steps were immediately taken to mitigate the risks this fungus presents to patients. This included remedial works to provide better management of air quality in CHU.

Trust staff are currently taking part in multi-agency discussions with their Health and Social Care colleagues in the Public Health Agency, Health and Social Care Board and the Department of Health to ensure that patient safety is maintained. As a precaution at this time, some of the high risk patients are being transferred, for some of their treatment, to other centres outside of NI so as not to delay their treatment.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health to outline the timetable for recommissioning routine (i) breast cancer; (ii) ovarian cancer; and (iii) bowel cancer screening services; and whether he will publish an assessment of the impact of the services being temporarily suspended.

Mr Swann: Routine breast and ovarian cancer services were maintained as far as possible during the pandemic surge, taking account of national guidance and based on individual assessments of risk / benefit. The step-up of routine breast and ovarian cancer appointments will continue and be timed to ensure an appropriate match with available capacity across cancer services.

Routine bowel screening was paused to ensure that adequate healthcare and laboratory resources could be redirected to the pandemic response and to reduce the risk of infection. Planning is underway for the phased restoration of bowel screening programme as soon as possible with priority given to people at highest risk along with clearing any backlog of patients already in the screening pathway. The Department has collated a comprehensive assessment of the impact of COVID-19 across the totality of Health and Social Care (HSC) services. This was published on 9 June 2020, alongside the "Rebuilding HSC Services Strategic Framework".

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health whether his Department, or relevant authorities, have advised local ports and airports to install thermal scanners and cameras to ensure that those with potential symptoms of COVID-19 can be detected on arrival.

Mr Swann: There are no plans at this time to introduce thermal screening at points of entry to Northern Ireland. Current evidence, including evidence acquired in the early phases of the COVID-19 pandemic in Europe, indicates that entry thermal screening procedures are ineffective in preventing virus introduction.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health (i) whether all fit testing of personal protection equipment has been undertaken by individuals and companies trained to the required standards; (ii) whether there has been an audit of fit training; and (iii) who conducted the audit.

Mr Swann: It is a legal requirement that workers using tight fitting respiratory protective equipment (face pieces/masks) must be fit tested by a competent person for all Aerosol Generating Procedures. This requirement is detailed in Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) regulations.

- (i) The fit testing providers currently being used by Health and Social Care Trusts in Northern Ireland are Amon Electronics and G&L Consultancy Ltd, Healthcare Essentials, FITTEST.IE and Task NI. All of these companies are accredited under the Fit2Fit RPE Fit Test Providers Accreditation Scheme and operate in line with HSE INDG479 protocols. The Fit2fit scheme is designed to confirm the competency of any person performing face piece fit testing.

Additionally, Amon Electronics provide accredited fit test training programmes to all five Health and Social Care Trusts and NIAS Trust which allows those Trusts to carry out in-house fit testing.

- (ii) Fit Testing Provision is subject to regular audit in all HSC settings across Northern Ireland.
- (iii) Under the Fit2Fit and PHECC requirements Amon Electronics conduct regular and ongoing Quality Improvement Audits across a range of their business activities and these are independently assessed where required.

Additionally, Health and Social Care Trusts have a number of internal audit processes in place to ensure the ongoing competency of Fit Testing processes.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister of Health whether shielding letters will be automatically renewed; and what these letters will allow for access to support and issues with returning to work.

(AQW 4282/17-22)

Mr Swann: The advice on shielding remains current, anyone advised to shield by their GP or hospital specialist should continue to do so until advised otherwise.

As announced on 1 June, from Monday 8 June, provided the rate of Covid-19 infection allows, those who are shielding will be able to spend time outside with people from their own household or a person from another household whilst ensuring social distancing is observed.

Looking ahead, the UK's four Chief Medical Officers are leading work at a national level to carefully assess what needs to be done to continue to protect people who are extremely vulnerable, against the latest evidence of the risk posed by Covid-19. This will include consideration of the future of the shielding scheme. You will appreciate that this is a process which must be led by the most up to date scientific and medical evidence.

As soon as any decision on the future of the shielding scheme is made guidance will be communicated quickly to those affected.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Health when the Asha Centre, Omagh, will reopen to address the lack of provision for people with addiction problems in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 4283/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Asha Centre closed on 31 March 2020 as a necessary measure for the purpose of infection prevention and control in relation to COVID-19. In conjunction with the Health & Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency, HSC Trusts are now planning a phased safe re-introduction of services including the regional Tier 4 inpatient addiction units in Omagh, Antrim, and Downpatrick. Whilst inpatient services at the Asha Centre are currently paused, community addictions staff are providing face-to-face contact at the facility for people with urgent assessed needs, and are providing detoxification advice and guidance to GP colleagues through telephone support. The team is also providing support for alcohol detoxification at both Altnagelvin and the South West Acute Hospital, as well as providing telephone support to clients in the community.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health whether he will publish his Department's business case for the Magee Medical School.

(AQW 4284/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department has not produced a business case for the Magee Medical School. The Department of Health's outline business case considers how best to meet Northern Ireland's future medical education needs and does not specify the provider or location.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Health what plans are in place to open a COVID-19 testing centre in Omagh.

(AQW 4288/17-22)

Mr Swann: There are currently no plans to open a National Testing Initiative fixed testing centre in Omagh. The first mobile testing unit operating under the National Testing Initiative was placed in the grounds of Omagh Hospital and commenced testing on 21 May to support the demand for testing in the surrounding area. Following a number of days testing, due to a reduction in demand in the Omagh area, this mobile testing unit has now been relocated. The demand for testing will be kept under continuous review and our mobile testing units will be deployed throughout NI as necessary.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, in relation to the fire which started close to Castlewella Forest Park on 15 May 2020, to detail the cost to the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service.

(AQW 4292/17-22)

Mr Swann: The estimated cost to the Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service of mobilisations to the fire which started close to Castlewella Forest Park on 15 May 2020 is £66,000.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health whether a second phase of GP shielding letters will be issued to recipients prior to the completion of the 12 week period.

(AQW 4314/17-22)

Mr Swann: The advice on shielding remains current, anyone advised to shield by their GP or hospital specialist should continue to do so until advised otherwise.

As announced, from Monday 8 June, those who are shielding will be able to spend time outside with people from their own household or a person from another household whilst ensuring social distancing is observed.

Looking ahead, the UK's four Chief Medical Officers are leading work at a national level to carefully assess what needs to be done to continue to protect people who are extremely vulnerable, against the latest evidence of the risk posed by Covid-19. This will include consideration of the future of the shielding scheme. You will appreciate that this is a process which must be led by the most up to date scientific and medical evidence.

As soon as any decision on the future of the shielding scheme is made guidance will be communicated quickly to those affected.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health to detail each occasion since March 2020 that (i) he has had formal contact with the Minister for Health in Dublin; and (ii) his Department has had formal contact with his counterpart department in Dublin regarding contact tracing and travel restrictions.

(AQW 4329/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) The Department of Health NI and its agencies have agreed a Memorandum of Understanding ("MoU") with the Department of Health, Ireland and its agencies in response to COVID-19 and I met with the Minister for Health for Ireland on 14 March 2020 to discuss North-South cooperation in dealing with the pandemic.

Since March 2020, formal contact has been made with the Chief Medical Officer in the Department of Health Ireland on 22 April, 1 May, 21 May, 29 May and 5 June 2020. This included discussion on contact tracing and travel restrictions.

- (ii) In relation to contact tracing and travel restrictions, the Department of Health, Ireland and its agencies and the Department of Health NI and its agencies currently work together to develop evidence-based public health measures central to the response to COVID-19 in both jurisdictions. Measures such as, but not limited to, contact tracing and public health-mandated travel restrictions are provided for under the MoU.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health whether his Department is aware of the identity of the person who started the fires close to Castlewellan Forest Park on 15 May 2020.

(AQW 4330/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has advised it is not aware of the identity of the person who started the fires close to Castlewellan Forest Park on 15 May 2020 and that the matter is under investigation by the PSNI.

NIFRS has dealt with a spate of grassland or gorse fires in recent weeks, some of which have been started deliberately.

In response to these incidents, NIFRS has used social and local media to appeal to the public to stop deliberately starting fires and consider their behaviour whilst outdoors during the extended period of dry weather.

Gorse fires pose a serious risk to life, property and the environment and can exert undue pressure on the wider availability of NIFRS resources.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health to detail the implications of the COVID-19 pandemic for patients referred for initial diabetic prognosis, or those who have been diagnosed and living with diabetes, in terms of delays to (i) initial prognosis appointments; (ii) follow-up appointments; and (iii) on-going support, care and treatments.

(AQW 4340/17-22)

Mr Swann: Upon diagnosis, type 1 diabetes (adult and paediatric) is managed in secondary care without any delay and has been uncompromised by COVID-19. In primary care, patients are usually diagnosed as they are symptomatic or unwell. Patients will often be triaged by telephone and may be referred for tests in the practice treatment room or Trust Emergency Department.

Follow-up appointments for newly diagnosed type 1 diabetes, adult and paediatric, continue as necessary although more are now delivered by remote contact.

In terms of ongoing support and care, hospital care for all type of diabetes has been impacted by COVID-19, with routine review appointments largely cancelled. As the clinical needs related to COVID-19 have diminished, virtual clinics are being instituted. Additional activity for ongoing type 1 diabetes care, such as structured education and provision of new glucose monitors, has been halted and has not yet restarted.

In terms of antenatal diabetes, diagnostic oral glucose tolerance tests have been replaced by HbA1c and glucose level testing. Diagnostic testing is currently being re-established, however joint face to face clinics with a diabetologist and obstetrician have been cancelled.

All paediatric diabetic clinics are undertaken via virtual clinic or telephone consultations. Patients and families are encouraged to use remote monitoring to upload their pump/glucose/CGM data. Although the structured diabetes education CHOICE programme has been on hold due to staff re-deployment, plans are underway to provide this remotely in some HSC Trusts. Whilst there has been a delay in new insulin pump starts, these have continued for those most in need. Advice and information in relation to insulin pumps continues to be provided both in and out of hours.

Diabetic foot care services delivered in secondary care, not immediately life or limb threatening, were cancelled although restoration of some urgent caseload has commenced. High-risk patients have received regular telephone reviews from podiatry services and the use of technology has enabled photo triage to be used to determine urgent intervention. All other patients have received verbal and/or written advice on foot care and wound care, supplemented by social media.

In primary care, activity in chronic condition management will be variable across general practice, although some practices have continued to carry out annual reviews for patients with diabetes, including via video-conferencing. GPs have also been able to refer patients to the regional Diabetes Network Helpline for further support and advice. Over the coming weeks, it is likely that more practices will begin to focus again on chronic condition management. District Nursing services have continued to support patients living in the community who need assistance with administration of insulin and have also provided patient education advice where appropriate.

At a regional level in response to the challenges of COVID-19, the NI Diabetes Network has established a diabetes telephone support helpline and e-mail support facility to provide additional clinical support and advice to people living with diabetes.

This service runs seven days a week, alongside existing HSC Trust services Monday to Friday and as a stand-alone service, Saturday and Sunday, 9am until 3pm.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health for an update on his Department's plans for targeted preventative spending that will address (i) children's oral health inequalities; and (ii) childhood obesity levels in more deprived communities.

(AQW 4349/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) The Oral Dental Health specialists from the five Health and Social Care Trusts have developed and delivered a new training programme which focuses on key dental messages to be reinforced in the Health Visitors' and Child Health Assistants' contacts with families. The training has been offered across all Trusts.

In 18/19 Trusts received funding to allow 81,238 young children to participate in oral health and Improvement programmes across the region. The regional Happy Smiles programme for pre-school children accounts for 18,000 of these children. This is targeted at children from lower socioeconomic groups and delivered in a nursery setting

PHA is responsible for the yearly update of the Birth to Five Book which is given to every mother having their first baby. The importance of tooth brushing is highlighted, along with the option of downloading the free Brush DJ app.

- (ii) The current obesity prevention framework, A Fitter Future for All 2012-2022, was launched in March 2012. The ten year strategy takes an integrated approach to obesity prevention and contains outcomes and actions across the life course for the entire population of Northern Ireland. Work is currently underway to look specifically at the issue of childhood obesity through an innovation lab process.

As well as a number of population wide programmes to improve participation in physical activity and promote healthy eating among children and young people, the PHA have developed and are funding the Early Years Obesity Prevention Programme (EYOP) across NI. This targeted programme will address risk and protective factors for childhood obesity, adopting a holistic approach focusing on parenting skills, family lifestyle habits, diet and nutrition, physical activity and emotional wellbeing. The PHA has awarded a contract to HENRY (Health, Exercise & Nutrition for the Really Young) in Feb 2020, to provide an early years obesity prevention training programme to HSCT and SureStart staff across Northern Ireland

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Health what percentage of contact parents have had no contact with their children since the COVID-19 lockdown commenced.

(AQW 4354/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Department of Health and the Health and Social Care Trusts do not hold the information requested. However, the Head of the Child Contact Centre Network has provided information from the Child Contact Centres. It is estimated that approximately 50% of their service users are currently engaged in alternative means of contact. A small number are managing contact themselves in the community. Others have been supported and encouraged to use Whatsapp video, Facetime and/or text messaging to maintain contact. Facilitated by coordinators, another group is using Zoom; co-ordinators are present on calls. All Contact Centres are actively continuing to support families and encouraging them to utilise all available alternatives.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Health what percentage of contact parents have presented with mental health concerns as a result of not having contact with their children during the COVID-19 lockdown; and what support has been provided to these parents.

(AQW 4355/17-22)

Mr Swann: The information requested is not held by the Department, Health and Social Care Trusts nor the Northern Ireland Network of Child Contact Centres. I can advise that all Child Contact Centres are actively continuing to support families and encouraging them to use all available alternative means of maintaining contact, including through the use of technology.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health to provide clarity on the two key worker family limit on childminders; and when it will be lifted.

Mr Swann: From Monday 8 June 2020, childminders can provide care for the children of up to 3 different households at one time. It is intended to increase the number further over time. The increase will happen gradually and will be subject to medical and scientific advice.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health, given the known additional susceptibility to COVID-19, and the communication, language, cultural issues and potential additional difficulties in relation to isolation requirements, to detail the bespoke community engagement with less engaged communities, including foreign national, Traveller, and black and minority ethnic communities.

Mr Swann: The Public Health Agency (PHA) commission services with various organisations that target and support Minority Ethnic, Migrant and Traveller communities across Northern Ireland. Partnership working with these organisations has been crucial as they have strong established relationships, expertise and proven track records of supporting and linking with vulnerable individuals. This is additionally important during the current pandemic. Different approaches have been used depending upon the needs of each group.

I am aware Public Health England have just published their report examining disparities in the risk and outcomes of COVID-19. The report examines important factors such as ethnicity, age, sex and deprivation. The report has just been published and my officials are now examining it in detail and will brief me in more detail about the findings of the report and any potential implications for the people of Northern Ireland and our response to COVID-19 going forward.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health to detail the number of Fire Service call-outs in North Down for outdoor fires that have been recorded as being set deliberately over the last three month period.

(AQW 4380/17-22)

Mr Swann: During the period 1 March 2020 to 31 May 2020, Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service mobilised to 75 outdoor fires classified as deliberate within the Ards and North Down Council area.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health (i) when childcare for key workers will cease to be provided free of charge; and (ii) when and how key workers making use of the free childcare were notified that it is a taxable benefit.

(AQW 4412/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Belfast HSC Trust provided childcare free of charge on an interim basis to key workers between April and May 2020. The Department was not involved in the Belfast Trust's decision to offer free childcare places to Trust employees, nor has the Department issued any instruction to the Trust to withdraw funding.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health for an update on the review of Neurology services, with particular regard to (i) which recommendations in the review (a) are being taken forward; and (b) are not being taken forward; and (ii) what the timescale now is for implementation.

(AQW 4413/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Regional Review of Neurology Services has been paused due to the need to redirect resources to respond to the challenges posed by COVID-19. While I believe this was a necessary and correct decision, I am acutely aware that Neurology services are in need of reform and will give careful consideration as to how best and quickly we can move forward with the Review. This will include the identification of final recommendations, in the context of my priorities for rebuilding health and social care services.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health what plans he has to address the underfunding issues of Health and Social Care providers that look after people with learning difficulties and complex special needs, such as Camphill Community at Glencraig.

(AQW 4425/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) have advised that the Camphill Community Glencraig are paid at the agreed regional tariff rate for residents of care homes. However, Glencraig have recently indicated to South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust (SEHSCT) that the needs of many of their residents, have over time, become more complex. The SEHSCT is currently in a process with the provider to reassess the needs of individual residents at Camphill and will adjust the level of funding in line with the reassessed needs and complexity of individuals.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Health what work is being undertaken to ensure cross-border interoperability of track and trace schemes, including planning for data sharing in the event that the EU and UK do not have a data equivalence regime at the end of this year.

Mr Swann: Cooperation on the public health-driven response to COVID-19, including on contact tracing, is built on existing and long-established cooperation on the island of Ireland between health services on areas such as cancer treatment, ambulance and congenital heart services, alongside strong pre-existing cooperation between the respective offices of the Chief Medical Officers in both jurisdictions.

Following the implementation of the General Data Protection Regulation and the Data Protection Act 2018 HSC organisations routinely use mechanisms, such as contracts and MOUs (with (EU Agreed) Standard Contract Clauses & provisions within Administrative Agreements), to ensure compliance with their obligations on any cross-border data transfers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health whether there is any regional breakdown of the R-number in Northern Ireland; and, if so, to publish the number.

Mr Swann: The Covid-19 modelling group does not produce regional estimates of the reproduction number (R) as the number of cases and other data related to the epidemic are too small to allow R to be reliably determined for an area smaller than Northern Ireland as a whole.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health to outline (i) when he intends to bring forward plans for rehabilitation for patients recovering from COVID-19; (ii) whether he intends to appoint a local rehabilitation lead; and for his assessment of whether these plans should be taken forward by the Chief Allied Health Professions Officer, similar to Scotland and Wales.

Mr Swann:

- i) Officials are considering how the rehabilitation of patients recovering from Covid-19 will be taken forward in Northern Ireland and will report to me in the near future.

- ii) The decision of an appointment of a local rehabilitation lead will form part of these deliberations, in so doing they will take account of rehabilitation models across other parts of the UK and beyond and the roles that Allied Health Professionals will have to play in the Northern Ireland model.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health as mental health services have historically been underfunded, whether will he introduce additional funding for mental health services in the current budget period.; and for his assessment of the increase of funding required to address the increase in mental health issues.

(AQW 4490/17-22)

Mr Swann: Mental health is one of my top priorities and I published a Mental Health Action Plan on 19 May 2020. Action 2.1 of the Action Plan is to create a 10 year funding plan for mental health, to be published together with a new mental health strategy in the middle of 2021.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health when his Department will publish the report on the findings of the public consultation and his preferred model for future stroke care.

(AQW 4509/17-22)

Mr Swann: While my officials have completed an analysis of responses to 'Reshaping Stroke Care – Saving Lives, Reducing Disability', progress on the Reshaping project was paused in response to the challenges posed by COVID-19.

My department has now published a Strategic Framework for Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services. The Framework notes the impact of this pause on the Reshaping Stroke Care project, and sets out the process for rebuilding services. The way forward in respect of stroke services, including timescales, will be determined through this process.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health to outline the next steps for progressing the proposed reform of stroke services.

(AQW 4510/17-22)

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health to outline the revised timetable for the reconfiguration of stroke services.

(AQW 4511/17-22)

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health what additional funding has been put in place to support community pharmacies during the COVID-19 crisis.

(AQW 4539/17-22)

Mr Swann: In March 2020, advance contractual payments of £35m, amounting to one month's payment were made to community pharmacy contractors in recognition of the surge in demand for prescriptions and related drug costs which occurred at the beginning of the pandemic. Between April and June 2020 non-essential pharmacy services were suspended and funding of circa £250k per month was left in the system. Also during this period an additional £10.5m COVID funding was provided for staffing, adaptation of premises for social distancing, business continuity and a new emergency supply service plus a further £1m was made available for an exceptional Easter rota and to support enhanced palliative care on-call arrangements.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health, in light of the announcement that the Chief Medical Officer (CMO) is content to publish all scientific evidence that has guided the Executive's actions in relation to COVID-19, whether the CMO's notes of the SAGE meeting on 12 March 2020 will also be published.

Mr Swann: A SAGE meeting was not held on 12 March 2020. Minutes of all SAGE meetings relating to Covid-19 are published online at:

<https://www.gov.uk/government/groups/scientific-advisory-group-for-emergencies-sage-coronavirus-covid-19-response>

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health what future additional financial support will be made available to community pharmacies to mitigate the costs being incurred due to essential changes required in the fight against COVID-19.
(AQW 4547/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department continues to engage positively with representatives from Community Pharmacy NI in delivering support to community pharmacy contractors and their staff during the current Covid-19 pandemic. To date, community pharmacies have played an essential role in maintaining the supply of medicines and advice to patients and considerable financial support has been made available to enable them to do this. Consideration is now being given as to how community pharmacy can continue to effectively respond to the current needs, as well as making preparations for the provision of appropriately funded pharmacy services in the coming weeks and months ahead.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health (i) whether staff conducting the second phase of the Dr Watt review recall (a) have gone back to their original work; or (b) are still involved in the COVID-19 effort; and (ii) when the second phase of the recall will be published.

Mr Swann: The second phase of the recall of the former patients of Dr Michael Watt is complete. It was planned that the findings from the second phase of the recall would be published in the first half of 2020, together with an announcement in respect of the need for a further phase of the recall.

The staff involved in taking this work forward were redeployed as part of the response to the Covid-19 outbreak.

It is not possible to provide a date for the publication of the findings from the second phase of the recall at the current time.

Department for Infrastructure

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) to detail the efforts she has made to explore the possibility of furloughing staff to reduce departmental pressures at this time; and (ii) whether she has consulted with unions over this issue.

(AQW 4190/17-22)

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): HMT guidance states that where employers receive public funding for staff costs, and that funding is continuing, staff are not eligible for furlough.

An assessment by Translink and NIW explored the furloughing of staff and consulted with unions on this issue. It concluded that furloughing staff was not an option and this assessment was shared with the Minister for Finance. The Minister of Finance wrote to Executive colleagues with updated CJRS guidance on 22 May. A further assessment has been commissioned on the applicability of the CJRS to the Department and its arm's length bodies including Translink and NI Water.

It is essential that any furloughing of public sector employees is considered by the Executive and that this issue is addressed on a consistent basis across all departments and in liaison with unions.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure, until such times as PSV tests can be safely carried out at test centres, whether an exemption could be granted to commercial vehicles (vans) in the same way as MOT exemptions had recently been applied to four year old private cars.

Ms Mallon: I can confirm that from 5 February 2020 Temporary Exemption Certificates (TECs) are being issued to all eligible light goods vehicles, which includes commercial vans that are 3 years old or more. Commercial vans require to be tested at 3 years from their date of first registration, unlike private cars whose first test is due when they are 4 years old.

From 11 May, TECs are automatically being generated from DVA's system for all eligible vans without the owners needing to take any action. Owners of vans not registered in Northern Ireland, which are not on the DVA's system, must contact the DVA using the following email address dva.customerservices@infrastructure-ni.gov.uk and provide the vehicle details for a TEC to be processed.

Vans whose MOT certificate has expired by more than 12 months do not qualify for a TEC. These vehicles will need to be tested when normal testing resumes and in the meantime must not be driven on public roads. More detailed information on TECs can be found at <https://www.nidirect.gov.uk/articles/coronavirus-covid-19-and-motoring>.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure . in relation to local GP's still refusing to carry out medical assessments for the renewal of taxi driver licences, whether her Department would consider an extension the licences to allow self-employed taxi drivers to continue to work.

Ms Mallon: Taxis are governed by separate primary legislation, which does not enable an extension of the taxi driver's licence or the issue of a short term licence.

For those taxi drivers who do not have a medical condition to declare, my Department will renew their five year taxi driver's licence without a medical report, although they may be required to submit a medical report at some future date.

Following discussions with the Department for Health and the British Medical Association (BMA), which represents General Practitioners (GPs) in Northern Ireland, the BMA and GPs have agreed to support and prioritise the processing of medical forms for those key workers who have a medical condition and need a medical assessment to renew their licences.

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) how many residents parking schemes she plans to bring forward in North Belfast; and (ii) to provide details of each scheme, including the location.

(AQW 4277/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The first residents' parking scheme in Rugby Road / College Park Avenue, Belfast, came into operation during April 2018. A review of the scheme, which reflected the needs, experiences and feedback of residents, is currently being considered. I will want to make sure that any lessons learnt from this scheme inform wider policy on implementing residents' parking schemes to the benefit of communities.

I anticipate that I will be able to advise the Assembly and its members of the outcome of my departments review into residents' parking within the next two months.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for Infrastructure why her Department will bring into law an EU regulation extending the validity of driving licences with an expiry date of between 01 February and 31 August 2020, for a further seven months.

Ms Mallon: The EU is adapting certain rules for different transport sectors to help companies and authorities cope in the extraordinary circumstances created by the coronavirus crisis. The Regulation enabling the extension of the validity of certificates and licences will support those transport operators, individuals and national administrations that, owing to the coronavirus restrictions, are having difficulties fulfilling certain administrative formalities before the expiry of the relevant deadlines.

Opting out of the provisions in this Regulation will be applied here and in GB. On the 4th June 2020 when the new EU Regulation became law, all driving licences with an expiry date between 1 February and 31 August 2020 will be treated as valid for a further seven months.

This new EU Regulation provides a practical solution to a very real problem and ensures that most drivers can remain on the road without having to worry about getting a renewal application processed, which for some requires a medical assessment. It will also help any customers who could not access or were finding it difficult to renew their licence online.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 201/17-22, (i) whether a tapping connection is usually metered; and (ii) if not, in what circumstances would it be.

(AQW 4302/17-22)

Ms Mallon: A meter install on a tapping connection is dependent on the type of property served off the mains supply. A domestic property is not metered and a non-domestic property is usually metered, when it is possible to do so.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether grass cutting of road verges on all major roads in North Down involving traffic management schemes will be completed on at least three occasions in 2020.

(AQW 4317/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department's current policy is to provide two grass cuts per annum on all roads throughout Northern Ireland, the exception being sightlines which will receive additional cuts as necessary for road safety reasons.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure what resurfacing schemes are planned on the A2 Bangor to Belfast dual carriageway this financial year.

(AQW 4318/17-22)

Ms Mallon: There are currently no resurfacing schemes planned for this section of carriageway during this financial year.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) any plans to restart vehicle testing, even on a phased basis, at any of the MOT test centres; and (ii) whether all centres have had new vehicle lifts installed.

(AQW 4320/17-22)

Ms Mallon: On 24 March 2020, in the interest of public safety and to tackle the spread of Covid-19, I suspended all vehicle testing at our test centres until 22 June 2020.

In recognising the significant impact on some customers, including those who require an Individual Vehicle Approval (IVA) test and cannot avail of a Temporary Exemption Certificate (TEC), I am pleased to confirm that from 1 June the Driver and Vehicle Agency has reinstated IVA testing safely. The provision of IVA tests will initially be prioritised for emergency service vehicles and those used to provide essential services in direct response to the Covid-19 crisis. This will ensure that supply chains and the health service continue to be supported during this time of significant challenge.

In respect of when other testing services might resume, I am keeping the position under constant review with the aim of reintroducing vehicle testing as soon as it is safe to do so, taking account of guidance on social distancing and in line with the Executive's Pathway to Recovery, to ensure the safety of DVA staff and customers.

I have assured the Health Minister that my Department is committed to doing all that we can to help in the fight against coronavirus and, given the importance of community testing in controlling the spread of the virus, that he has priority use of these centres for as long as required.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) what her Department is doing to support the development of the Strathfoyle Greenway in Londonderry; and (ii) the level of investment from her Department.

Ms Mallon: I am currently considering carefully how I can assist in the development of greenways as part of my vision to enable greater sustainable transport options that connect communities, tackle the impact of climate change and improve lives.

My Department continues to operate under challenging budget constraints and the current COVID-19 emergency has added additional load to that budget. However, I am keen to take decisions in relation to funding of my various priorities as soon as possible.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Infrastructure when her Department will complete the resurfacing of the Trench Road and Curryfree Road junction, Londonderry.

Ms Mallon: Following the easing of COVID 19 restrictions the contractor has now recommenced work which is being taken forward at a number of sites on a prioritised basis. It is anticipated that work on the resurfacing scheme at Trench Road and Curryfree Road junction will recommence before the end of July with completion anticipated by the end of September.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the current number of public use electric vehicle charging points across Northern Ireland; and (ii) the scheduled increased number of electric vehicle charging points for (a) Northern Ireland; (b) Belfast; and (c) East Belfast, within the next 12 months, 24 months and 36 months.

Ms Mallon: There are currently 320 22kWh (fast) charge points at 160 locations and a further 17 50kWh DC rapid charge points across the North. In addition, public sector organisations have also made available 40 7kWh charge points (23 charge posts) for use by the general public when visiting their sites or availing of their facilities.

In respect of a scheduled increase in the number of electric vehicle charging points for Northern Ireland, Belfast and East Belfast within the next 12 months, 24 months and 36 months, my Department does not currently hold information of this commercial nature. There are a number of very recent developments that are likely to impact expansion and improvement of the network. For example, the Utility Regulator recently published its findings from the recent consultation on the Maximum Resale Price (MRP) of Electricity as it applies to electric vehicles (EVs). The decision to remove the MRP on the electricity cost of charge points, which will allow commercial operators to charge above cost price of electricity supply, should give clarity for operators wishing to provide commercial services in the North. It should also impact positively in providing opportunities to apply to the UK Residential Charge Point Scheme. My department will work with stakeholders in all areas to facilitate improvements to the current network, strengthen network provision and contribute to the Northern Ireland Executive's commitment to reducing carbon emissions.

I am committed to ensuring that the public charge point infrastructure remains fit for purpose commensurate with growth. The DEARA Minister and I met earlier this year to discuss this matter and opportunities for partnership working. As such, officials are currently exploring a range of options and solutions to enhance our infrastructure, improve lives and tackle the climate emergency, particularly, in the context of COVID-19 recovery plans.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 4086/2017-22, whether the proactive management of the environmental aspects of the A6 construction project includes an assessment of the cumulative effects of any environmental harm that has been caused by the numerous pollution events of the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation.

Ms Mallon: Prior to construction of the A6 Dungiven to Drumahoe scheme commencing, the cumulative effects were considered in the Environmental Impact Assessment and Habitats Regulations Assessment. These documents, and associated sampling, established the baseline environmental conditions. The contract subsequently required the collection of water samples to monitor the level of suspended solids throughout the construction phase of the works. This enables the impacts of the contractor's activities and the scheme to be monitored.

The Department is aware of the potential for cumulative impacts on the environment due to pollution incidents. In order to help manage this, an Environmental Regulators Forum was set up by NIEA in February 2020, to provide greater oversight by the various relevant units in NIEA. Loughs Agency also attend, along with officials from my Department and staff from the contractor. Also, as a direct result of the pollution incidents that have occurred and their potential to cause cumulative impacts, NIEA has established a Major Client Interface Group, to coordinate the environmental matters on the project. This group is chaired by a senior official from NIEA.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the (i) Armagh North and West Link road; and (ii) Armagh East Link road.

Ms Mallon: Whilst I am currently faced with serious and challenging budget constraints, I am committed to working to find solutions that deliver better for our communities and improve lives across Northern Ireland. In this respect, I recognise that many in the local community support the proposed Armagh East Link and Armagh North and West link schemes

My Department is currently developing proposals for a new Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan which will set out the priorities for future development of the main road and rail network. In particular, I am considering my long term priorities for strategic road improvement schemes, including the Armagh schemes, and how they might facilitate complementary improvements to promote sustainable travel choices, connect people and communities and create thriving and liveable places. The Draft Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan will be issued for public consultation.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the Sligo to Enniskillen greenway.

Ms Mallon: The proposal for a greenway from Enniskillen to Sligo was developed by Fermanagh and Omagh District Council (FODC). It was submitted for funding under the INTERREG Va programme in 2016 but was unsuccessful.

When my Department invited Expressions of Interest for funding under the Small Grants for Greenways Programme around the same time in 2016, Fermanagh and Omagh District Council did not include Enniskillen to Sligo in its submission. The Council did receive grant funding of £16,000 for the development of greenway feasibility studies for two routes: Enniskillen to Clones; and, Omagh to Carrickmore.

The Sligo to Enniskillen greenway is mentioned in New Decade, New Approach as an example of the kind of cross-border project that shows potential for development. I am currently considering carefully how I can assist in the development of greenways as part of my vision to enable greater sustainable transport options that connect communities, tackle the impact of climate change and improve lives.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in light of small groups being able to meet outside, whether planning site meetings can resume for applicants seeking to make relevant onsite representations.
(AQW 4360/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Health Protection (Coronavirus Restrictions) Regulations (NI) 2020, as amended, allow for up to six people not from the same household to meet outdoors. It is also permitted to leave the place where a person normally lives for this purpose, to participate in an outdoor activity, or for the purposes of work.

It is a matter for each planning authority to ensure that any such meetings that are arranged comply with the Regulations and that social distancing is observed at all times.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) when she intends to set the terms of review with regards to the implementation of the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011; and (ii) a timescale for the publication of a report.
(AQW 4376/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Due to the current COVID 19 pandemic my priority has been taking through a number of pieces of legislation that will help address immediate issues faced by the public during these challenging times. I intend to look at setting the terms of the review and aim to bring a draft statutory rule to the Infrastructure Committee before summer recess, if possible. Whenever the terms have been set and the regulations made, my aim is to publish the report as soon as is practicably possible.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline the measures that will be taken to ensure (i) worker; and (ii) customer safety on public transport.
(AQW 4385/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Translink continues to engage and take advice from the Public Health Authority on the appropriate measures to be taken to protect staff and customers using Public Transport. A wide range of controls have already been implemented proactively by Translink, with a clear focus on the safety, health and well-being of both customers and staff. These measures include enhanced cleaning and sanitisation of buses, trains and stations; implementation of social distancing signage, guidance and controls across the network; additional protection for Translink staff including protective screens and additional Personal Protection Equipment (PPE) and customer messaging via multiple channels including press and social media. It has also implemented a series of controls at all stations including signage, queuing systems, one-way passenger flows and the provision of hand sanitiser units for customer's at all main facilities. On vehicles, additional signage, provision of protective screens on bus driving cabs and addition staff PPE have been introduced.

In addition my Department is in the process of developing safer travel guidance. I am also actively exploring making the use of face coverings mandatory and am working with the unions and my Ministerial colleagues on this. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on work to promote North-South connectivity.

Ms Mallon: Improving connectivity between the north and south of Ireland is a key priority for me as it provides opportunities for increased social inclusion, enhanced economies and an improved environment. In line with this and the commitments within the New Decade New Approach, I intend to engage with my southern counterpart, through the North South Ministerial Council, to discuss the improvement of the transport links by both rail and road.

In addition, you will be aware that Translink provides the Enterprise Rail Service on the Eastern Seaboard Corridor of Ireland connecting Belfast, Portadown, Newry, Dundalk, Drogheda and Dublin. Cross Border Express Coaches are also provided on a number of cross border routes providing connectivity from a range of locations across the North of Ireland. In addition there are a number of local bus services which provide cross border services.

The delivery of the A5 dual carriageway, which is specifically referenced in the New Decade, New Approach deal will greatly improve connectivity between the North West and Dublin. A Public Inquiry into the scheme concluded on 13 March 2020. I am awaiting the report from this Public Inquiry and I hope to be in a position to consider its findings later this year.

A new Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan (RSTNTP) is currently being prepared. It will set out future investment and improvement for our strategic transport networks, by road, rail and bus, including key links for cross-border services.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on plans to address regional imbalance.
(AQW 4394/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As I am sure you will appreciate, my Department's primary focus over the last number of months has been to support the Executive's fightback against the Covid-19 pandemic.

However, as we start to look towards a green recovery, we must ensure that it is underpinned by modern and sustainable water, drainage and transport infrastructure. This is the only foundation upon which improved connectivity and sustainable, regionally balanced growth can be achieved.

The fact remains that too many parts of Northern Ireland are still not realising their potential and there are very significant socio-economic differentials across the North, particularly in urban areas of Belfast, the North West and across a number of our rural areas too.

There are many reasons for that and addressing this is a challenge for the Executive collectively. It will require action on a range of fronts including innovation; entrepreneurship; skills; and no less important – building the confidence and self-belief of our businesses and communities. But these cannot be delivered if we fail to address the water, sewerage and transport infrastructure deficits that exist in these areas.

The quality of the transport infrastructure across the North impacts on investor confidence. That is why our investment in key projects – such as the A5, A6, North West and Belfast Transport Hubs and our rail network - are so important if we are to address a key barrier to economic growth across all parts of Northern Ireland. I can assure you that I remain committed to progressing these projects as much as possible during my tenure as Minister so that as an Executive, we can address the existing regional imbalance.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the financial pressures facing NI Water.
(AQW 4396/17-22)

Ms Mallon: NI Water is reporting significant financial pressures, both in 20/21, and beyond into the next Price Control (PC21) period from 2021 – 2027. The economic and social consequences of the COVID – 19 pandemic has created an immediate resource pressure in this financial year, estimated at some £31.6m. In terms of the detail, this pressure is made up from the following:

- Reduced income from paying customers: NI Water is expecting to lose up to £22m from paying non domestic customers that had been mandated to close under government guidance, and an increase in bad debt. This includes budget cover to defer the water charges increase for 20/21, a position that I will review again in October.
- Operational costs: NI Water is estimating an increase of £4.6m in operational costs, as a result of adapting working practices to manage COVID-19, with large amounts of PPE required, changes made to staffing patterns and IT provision for home working. People are also using more water during the COVID-19 crisis and recently, NI Water has also had to work around the clock to keep taps running during hot weather, when usage spiked to over 20% higher than normal demand.
- Pension scheme: NI Water's pension scheme will require an additional £5m cash payment to ensure that the scheme is fully funded. The drop in scheme value is an impact of market conditions as a direct consequence of the COVID-19 pandemic.

NIW is also facing further unfunded costs of £3m in 2020/21, mainly from the rates revaluation carried out by the Department of Finance and estimated additional costs in preparation for Brexit of £2.3m. I have bid for this funding and for the COVID pressures as part of the COVID reprioritisation exercise and June monitoring.

In the longer term, NI Water is reporting a requirement of around £2.3bn in capital budget, in PC21, to invest in the major infrastructure improvements which our people deserve. Set against a budget allocation of around £930m in the current Price Control (PC15), this is a significant increase. However without that level of funding, NI Water will not be able to deliver the level water and wastewater service improvement required to sustain good public health, help the economy recover and to protect our environment.

Ms Hunter asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on her plans to boost Active Travel opportunities.
(AQW 4435/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As the Member will be aware, I recently announced the creation of a Walking and Cycling Champion in my Department with responsibility for spearheading work to embed active travel across my Department so that we give people the freedom and confidence to walk and cycle as part of their everyday routine. I have also established a Walking and Cycling Advisory Group with representatives from a wide range of public and voluntary sector organisations. The purpose of the group is to discuss areas of interest and provide me with advice to ensure that the initiatives we take and the infrastructure we build supports communities during these unprecedented times.

I am committed to working towards reimagining and reshaping our spaces to accommodate cycling, walking and active travel as part of an ambitious Executive recovery plan. Building a better future that delivers more for our citizens, socially and economically, delivering cleaner, greener and healthier communities.

I am working with Belfast City Council, Derry City and Strabane District Council and Newry, Mourne and Down Council to explore options for improving walking and cycling provision. I have also written to all Councils to see if they can identify any more areas for improvement across the North.

In addition, I am considering carefully how I can assist in the development of greenways as part of my vision to enable greater sustainable transport options that connect communities, tackle the impact of climate change and improve lives.

My Department continues to operate under challenging budget constraints and the current COVID-19 emergency has added additional load to that budget. However, I am keen to take decisions in relation to funding of my various priorities as soon as possible.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) what plans she has to reintroduce driving tests; and (ii) how the Driver and Vehicle Agency will deal with the backlog of tests that were already in the system, pre COVID-19.

Ms Mallon: The Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) suspended all practical driving tests from 20 March until 22 June 2020 as it is not possible to deliver them safely and adhere to current Public Health Agency advice and guidance on social distancing.

I know that this is currently causing inconvenience and concern to some customers. I will, of course, continue to keep this position under review with the aim of reintroducing practical driving tests as soon as it is safe to do so, taking account of guidance on social distancing and in line with the Executive's Pathway to Recovery. The priority is keeping staff and customers safe and for this reason I do not expect the DVA to be able to commence driving tests from 22 June and it is likely to be some time before they are in a position to reinstate this service safely. As soon as practical driving tests can be resumed safely, I will move to do so and to ensure there is clear communication to affected customers.

All driving tests up to 22 June have been cancelled and customers have had their fee refunded. The DVA holds a list of essential workers whom they will contact when driving tests resume to prioritise their appointments. All other customers will need to re-book their test when the service is reinstated.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in light of her announcements around innovative green infrastructure to support recovery and to accommodate social distancing, and given the number of multi-car collisions in the area, whether she plans to install a pedestrian crossing on the Ravenhill Road at Cherryvale Park.

Ms Mallon: In my previous announcements, I have underlined my commitment to connecting communities and encouraging more active travel to create a greener environment and to tackle the impact of climate change. It is very important to maximise our efforts in making our roads and footways safer for all users, particularly during these unprecedented times.

There have been a number of requests for a pedestrian crossing on Ravenhill Road at Cherryvale Park over the past few years. Most recently, my officials carried out an assessment for the provision of a pedestrian crossing at this location in February 2020. The results of this assessment places this location at 61st on the prioritised list of potential sites assessed for a controlled crossing in the Belfast area. Given funding pressures against the high level of requests, it is unlikely that any works will be carried out in the short term. I have however asked officials continue to keep this location on their list and under review.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) whether capital funding for greenways will be released in the current financial year; and (ii) which greenway projects will benefit from the funding..

(AQW 4528/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am carefully considering how I can assist in the development of greenways as part of my vision to enable greater sustainable transport options that connect communities, tackle the impact of climate change and improve lives and hope to be in a position to announce my approach shortly.

From experience gained elsewhere, there is a considerable amount of work required in preparing schemes for construction including community consultation, planning permission and land issues. I would encourage all Councils to continue their preparatory work so that they are able to proceed to construction as soon as possible.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure when the Driver and Vehicle Agency will recommence the issue of Compulsory Basic Training certificates.

(AQW 4600/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Following the Government's decision to introduce measures to delay the spread of Covid-19 in March, the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) suspended all testing services. DVA counter services were also subsequently suspended and this prevented the normal provision of Compulsory Basic Training (CBT) certificates to authorised CBT trainers.

I am pleased to confirm that this service has now been reinstated and officials have contacted authorised trainers to make arrangements with them to safely collect fresh supplies of CBT certificates.

For further queries regarding CBT certificates trainers should contact the DVA at DVA.AMI@infrastructure-ni.gov.uk .

Department for the Economy

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for the Economy how her Department is supporting businesses, in particular small and medium enterprises and those businesses most likely to be impacted, in the event of a delay phase in response to COVID-19. (AQW 3581/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): The Department has launched three schemes to support businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Small Business Support Grant scheme provided a £10,000 grant to businesses who are in receipt of Small Business Rates Relief or Industrial Derating, and who have a Total Net Annual Value of £15,000 or below.

The £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme provided a grant to businesses in those sectors who have a Total NAV of between £15,001 and £51,000.

The NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund opened on 20 May 2020 offering up to £10,000 of support to businesses with one to nine employees facing immediate cash flow difficulties due to Covid-19.

Further details on these scheme as well as UK-wide schemes such as the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme are available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/campaign/coronavirus-updates-support-your-business>.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for the Economy whether a funding package will be given to businesses to offset the financial challenges they may face due to COVID-19.

(AQW 3658/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Please refer to the answer provided for AQW 3581/17-22 for this information.

Mr Chambers asked the Minister for the Economy for her assessment of the impact on the local economy of the COVID-19 outbreak and what interventions she is planning to offset the damaging effects on many businesses.

(AQW 3705/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The economic impact of Covid-19 is unprecedented. Initial assessments of the NI economy suggest overall output is potentially running 25% to 30% below normal. Local independent forecasts suggest that our economy could shrink by something in the region of 7% to 10% in 2020.

It is estimated that the number of workers directly impacted by the shutdown could be over 200,000. While the shutdown of many local industries has resulted in the widespread furloughing of workers, there might still have been 25,000 job losses, and given the massive spike in Universal Credit claims it could even be more than this. There is every chance that the young and the lowest earners will be hardest hit. That is the early indication from this recession, and it would be a trait of many recessions of the past.

Since March 2020, my Executive colleagues and I have launched a number of support packages to help support businesses, protect jobs and promote economic recovery. As we move towards planning for economic recovery, we will continue to work to mitigate the worst impacts on our economy by protecting as many livelihoods as possible.

To date, my Department has launched three schemes to support businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic. The £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme and the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme closed on 20 May 2020 and have to date provided almost £300 million of support to businesses during this difficult time. Additional details of these schemes can be found here:

The NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund, administered by Invest NI, opened on 20 May 2020 offering up to £10,000 of support to businesses with one to nine employees facing immediate cash flow difficulties due to Covid-19. To date over 2,000 applications have been submitted and are under consideration. Applications for this scheme will close on 12 June 2020.

Invest NI is providing advice and guidance to Businesses across Northern Ireland via their dedicated Business Support Helpline and is taking specific action to try and best support businesses including launching a series of Covid-19 response webinars.

InterTradeIreland has provided support for cross-border SMEs by amending its programme delivery to provide targeted support to companies affected by the crisis to assist with the immediate response, as well as to provide support for the future re-emergence of companies once lockdown restrictions start to ease. New initiatives include e-commerce support for cross-border traders, and an emergency business support scheme to help companies complete risk assessments to navigate their way through the crisis.

Additionally there are a range of UK wide measures available to SMEs such as the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme and the Bounce Back Loan scheme. Further info can be found at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/business-support/coronavirus>

A top priority for the Executive will be to put in place the conditions through which we can take our first steps to restart our economy safely and adjust to the new normal.

These steps will be gradual and in stages. At every stage we will work with the Minister for Health to ensure the steps we are taking are cognisant of the scientific advice. Further information on the course for recovery can be found here - <https://www.economy-ni.gov.uk/publications/charting-course-economy>.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for the Economy whether her Department will provide a loan scheme for small businesses impacted by COVID-19.

(AQW 3806/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: There are no specific plans for the Department to provide a loan scheme. However, the Chancellor has announced the Bounce Back Loan scheme, which offers loans between £2,000 and £50,000 to small and medium sized businesses, and the Coronavirus Business Interruption Loan scheme which provides loans up to £5 million to similar sized businesses.

These loan schemes supplement other regional and UK-wide schemes such as the Business Support Grant schemes and the Self-Employment Income Support Scheme. Details of all these schemes can be found at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/campaign/coronavirus-updates-support-your-business>.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for the Economy what help is being made available to small and medium-sized enterprises to help them survive the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 3831/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Department for the Economy has launched three schemes to support businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme provided a £10,000 grant to businesses who are in receipt of Small Business Rates Relief or Industrial Derating, and who have a Total Net Annual Value (NAV) of £15,000 or below. This scheme closed on 20 May 2020.

The £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme provided a grant of £25,000 to businesses in those sectors who have a Total NAV of between £15,001 and £51,000. This scheme closed on 20 May 2020.

To date over 2,000 applications have been submitted and are under consideration. Applications for this scheme will close on 12 June 2020.

Invest NI is providing advice and guidance to Businesses across Northern Ireland via their dedicated Business Support Helpline and is taking some very specific action to try and best support businesses including launching a series of Covid-19 response webinars. Information on all current support available for businesses, including on UK-wide schemes, tax relief, loans and advice for the self-employed, can also be found at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/campaign/coronavirus-updates-support-your-business>.

InterTradeIreland has provided support for cross-border SMEs by amending its programme delivery to provide targeted support to companies affected by the crisis to assist with the immediate response, as well as to provide support for the future

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for the Economy what protections are being put in place to protect self-employed individuals who will be adversely affected by COVID-19.

(AQW 3832/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: On 5 May 2020 I announced the development of the NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund to help micro-businesses and social enterprises who have been unable to access other regional and national support measures. My Department will make up to £40 million available through this fund, which is being administered by Invest Northern Ireland.

Self-employed people who employ at least one other person are able to apply for the fund. An Eligibility Checker and the application portal are available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/content/coronavirus-ni-micro-business-hardship-fund>. Applications can be made until 12 June 2020.

In recognition of the issues being faced by business owners, including the self-employed, the Minister of Finance announced a 3 months rates holiday for all businesses in Northern Ireland to support them at this unprecedented time. In effect, this rates holiday, which has resulted in all businesses paying zero rates in April, May and June, has reduced the annual billable amount by 25% for each business, after all other reliefs have been applied. The Minister also recently extended the rates holiday by one month for all businesses and for the remainder of this financial year for businesses in hospitality, tourism and leisure sectors, retail (excluding certain supermarkets and off-licences), childcare facilities and Belfast City Airport, Belfast International Airport and the City of Derry Airport.

Other means of support are offered on a UK-wide basis. The Chancellor has announced the Self-employed Income Support Scheme. This offers 80% of trading profits up to a maximum of £2,500 per month for 3 months. Other support is available such as HMRC Time to Pay and Income Tax Deferral. Further details are available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/business-support/coronavirus>.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether her Department is considering potential financial support measures for businesses to assist with implementing social distancing measures going forward.

(AQW 4036/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: On 28th March 2020, the First Minister and Deputy First Minister announced a series of enhanced containment measures, agreed by the Executive, designed to restrict the spread of the Coronavirus. This included the publication of The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020.

In addition, the Executive and the UK government have since introduced a number of interventions and packages of financial support to help those who have been affected by the consequences of Covid-19, including a £370m Grant Scheme to support small and large businesses alike.

As of the end of May 2020, more than 25,000 business had received payments of either £10k or £25k to help mitigate the financial impacts of Covid-19 on their business, totalling almost £300m of government assistance thus far.

The Executive has also established a new and very representative multi-stakeholder NI Engagement Forum (the Forum), to advise on how best to manage the challenge of Covid-19, as it applies to the NI Economy / Labour Market.

The Forum have worked collectively and collaboratively in a short space of time to produce a number of documents, including the following:

- A framework of priority sectors/sub sectors; and
- An Emergency Code of Practice offering practical assistance to essential businesses and their workforce to comply with the Health Protection Regulations and Public Health Authority (PHA) and Health and Safety Executive (HSE) guidance.

The Code of Practice offers practical advice and guidance on safe working practices, including social distancing, as it applies to the working environment.

The Forum is now taking forward a piece of work, aimed at developing 'principles' on restarting the economy. Once again, advice on the importance and specific considerations required, in relation to social distancing measures, are likely to feature prominently.

I have raised this issue with the Business Secretary and will continue to make the case for NI businesses in need of support. Also, officials from my Department are working closely with the Department of Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy (BEIS), as they start to examine in detail, the impacts and challenges facing businesses as they look to implement necessary measures, such as social distancing. This will help to inform future decision making in Northern Ireland.

Applying social distancing measures will place an additional financial burden on many employers and businesses. There will be requests for Government financial assistance to mitigate these operational costs, for example, changing/altering layouts, shift allowance payments, procuring Personal Protection Equipment (PPE) and increased cleaning of premises.

I am not in a position to confirm whether additional financial support will be made available, specifically to support social distancing measures, however, I can confirm that the Executive, along with all stakeholders from across every sector of our society, including those on the aforementioned NI Engagement Forum, share a common goal:

“To deliver a strong, competitive and regionally balanced economy with more people working in better jobs through all phases of the COVID-19 pandemic and within the context of EU Exit.”

In working towards this goal, the health, safety and well-being of our current and future workforce, will be paramount.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy, for each of the COVID-19 business support schemes her Department has responsibility for, to detail (i) the number of applications; (ii) the number of successful applications; (iii) the number of applications still waiting to be processed; and (iv) the average waiting time from application to the payment of funds.
(AQW 4106/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

£10,000 Small Business Support Grant

For the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant Scheme, 6,775 payments were made automatically to eligible businesses, in receipt of Small Business Rate Relief, whose direct debit details were held by Land & Property Services for ratings purposes. 15,955 applications were submitted via an online web portal.

Of these web portal applications a total of 13,385 have been successfully paid to date.

There are 2,570 applications still being processed. There are also an additional 1,279 applications which were made through a separate online rental portal, These require additional checking to ensure the business, and not the landlord, receives the grant.

LPS has advised that it is not possible to calculate an average waiting time between application and payment. The range of waiting times is between three days and eight weeks, with the length of time required in each case driven by the complexity of the issues which need to be resolved before the payment can be released.

£25,000 Business Support Grant

For the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme, 3,624 applications were received before the scheme closed on 20 May 2020. This figure includes 686 duplicate and ineligible applications.

As of 26 May 2020, 2,890 applications have been approved for payment. A further 34 applications are still to be processed.

The average waiting time from receipt of application to approval for payment is 13 days. Payment may take an additional three to five days to reach the applicant's bank account.

A further breakdown of the number of applications, successful applications and applications being processed is published in the 'Operation of the scheme by council, constituency and sector' section on the following webpage - <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/content/coronavirus-£25000-retail-hospitality-tourism-and-leisure-grant>.

This data is updated on a regular basis

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for the Economy (i) how many complaints have been made to the Health and Safety Executive about business premises in Upper Bann, regarding social distancing and other COVID-19 related concerns of employees or others, since 1 March 2020; (ii) how many on-site inspections have been carried out in the same period; and (iii) what number of prohibition notices have been issued.

(AQW 4121/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: There have been 127 complaints lodged with HSENI relating to businesses in the Upper Bann area. 93 of these related to premises which fall under the remit of HSENI and 34 were passed to the local authority (who have responsibility for retail, office (non-government) and leisure businesses). In the period 7 sites in the Upper Bann area were visited. There were no prohibition notices served. HSENI will use enforcement action where necessary, but will always seek to engage with employers and staff to ensure that things can be resolved swiftly. With complaints relating to social distancing, measures can frequently be implemented swiftly to ensure staff are kept safe.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will give a commitment to the appointment of representatives from the north west to her reformed economic advisory group to assist the group in developing policies to redress existing economic imbalances.

(AQW 4152/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Economic Advisory Group is being re-established to assist me in developing a new economic strategy and to provide ongoing advice on how to grow our economy. Members will be appointed on the basis of their knowledge, experience and expertise, and will be expected to act and advise on the wider Northern Ireland economy interests rather than their own sectoral or geographical interests.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for the Economy to detail (i) how many businesses in Upper Bann have successfully applied for the £10,000 Small Business Grant and the £25,000 Hospitality, Leisure and Tourism grant; (ii) the total amount awarded for those grants; (iii) how many businesses in Upper Bann were unsuccessful in their applications to both schemes; and (iv) how many businesses were successful in appealing the original decision to refuse them a grant.

Mrs Dodds: For the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant, 1,419 businesses in the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency have been paid grants as of 26 May 2020, totalling £14,190,000. Some of these payments were made against applications to the online portal. Other payments were made to businesses without application where bank details are held against a Direct Debit in the Land & Property Services (LPS) rating system.

The £10,000 Small Business Grant Scheme closed on 20th May 2020. LPS are still processing the applications, and therefore unsuccessful outcomes have not been communicated in full.

For the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme, 188 businesses have been paid grants in the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency as of 26 May 2020, totalling £4,660,000. A total of 50 applications have been rejected in the constituency as of 26 May 2020.

A total of 36 appeals have been received to date for both schemes. The appeals are currently being processed although no decisions have been made as of 26 May 2020. Therefore a breakdown of appeals by constituency is not available at present.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister for the Economy whether they will ensure that businesses with multiple properties will receive support through (i) the Small Business Grant; and (ii) the Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant for each property.

(AQW 4201/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Executive launched the £10,000 and £25,000 Business Support Grant Schemes to support businesses that were experiencing financial hardship as a result of the Covid-19 pandemic with the overarching aim of protecting jobs, preventing business closures and promoting economic recovery.

The grant schemes were designed to extend the benefit of the grant payments to as many eligible businesses as possible within the funding envelope allocated to support the delivery of the schemes.

There is limited funding available for the schemes and the Executive has taken the decision, at this stage, to limit eligible businesses with multiple premises to one payment so that support could be offered to all potentially eligible businesses.

My Executive colleagues and I will continue to work to identify the best means of offering support to as many local businesses as possible within the available funding envelope as we move towards putting in place a pathway to economic recovery.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether her Department has invited airlines which serve Northern Ireland to be part of the Tourism Recovery Steering Group.

(AQW 4234/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I have established a Tourism Recovery Taskforce consisting of a Steering Group which I chair, and a Working Group chaired by John McGrillen, Chief Executive of Tourism NI. The Working Group oversees ten work streams, one of which focuses on air and sea connectivity. A 'Task and Finish' Group has been formed to take forward this work stream, which includes members from British Airways, EasyJet and Loganair. Ryanair have also been invited to attend the Group. The Task and Finish Group is chaired by Albert Harrison, the chairman of City of Derry Airport.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for the Economy what contingency plans are in place should universities be unable to open in September 2020.

(AQW 4247/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Northern Ireland's higher education institutions are autonomous and as such are responsible for own contingency planning. However, the institutions have shared the following information regarding their plans for the coming academic year. Information regarding The Open University is not included as provision is already delivered online.

Ulster University

Ulster University confirmed on Wednesday 27 May 2020 to students, prospective students, staff, and wider stakeholders that the first term of academic year 2020/21 will commence on 21 September 2020 with plans to deliver lectures and other teaching online for semester one.

Ulster University are currently re-designing aspects of the University's usual Welcome Week programme for first years for this new online context.

Where it is safe to do so, the University will be exploring other face to face activities that can be held on campus following a robust risk assessment. Priority will be given to using campus spaces for practice-based learning activities including lab work.

Ulster University will also open sporting, catering, and other facilities as soon as it is safe to do so in-line with public health guidance and restrictions. In the meantime, there are a range of options for online programs and classes available.

Ulster University staff members who can work from home will continue to do so until at least the end of August and after the summer, the University will look to move to a phased, managed return of all staff within public health guidelines and with the health, safety and wellbeing of staff and students as its primary concern.

In order to actively plan for the return of some campus-based activities, there will be a safe, phased return to campus for some staff in early summer. Ulster University's People & Culture team will be on hand to inform and support those colleagues through this transition.

Queen's University, Belfast

Queen's University has produced a draft working document outlining three main options for the re-entry of students on 21 September 2020. These options include: 1.) face to face teaching with measures of social distancing and blended learning; 2.) an option to graduate teaching to different groups of students taking account of social distancing and blended learning; and 3.) a contingency plan to move to online learning should physical re-entry not be feasible at that time.

The first option is the University's preferred course of action.

The document is in working draft form and out for consultation and should be agreed in the next few weeks.

Stranmillis University College

Stranmillis has advised that their key priorities are as follows:

- 1 The health, welfare, and safety of the College community.
- 2 The continued provision of a high-quality learning and teaching experience for all students, and the maintenance of quality standards.
- 3 The continued provision of a high-quality broad all round educational experience for all students.

At present the College is preparing a contingency plan that will see the College open in September using a blended learning approach with small groups on campus at any given time. Priority will be given to first year students coming on campus as on-campus experience is particularly important to enable them to adjust to third level study.

Strict social distancing, sanitization and cleaning regime will be in place. This means that:

- All lecture materials will be online;
- Blended/Interactive learning for other classes as standard;
- Online delivery of practical/workshop classes if possible with the postponement of other practical classes to Semester 2, with priority given to on-campus delivery to Year 1 in Semester 1;
- In line with social distancing, consider rotated classes on campus;
- Online assessment and feedback to students;
- Online evaluations as standard;
- Placements postponed to Semester 2 for all but Year 1 (and possibly Year 4) students;
- There would be an appropriate cleansing regime put in place for areas of common use e.g. IT facilities, library, learning resource areas; and
- Staggered break and meal times to alleviate mass gathering in certain places and alleviate the pressure on bathroom facilities.

Work is currently being done to assess the protocols and systems required to allow for the effective and efficient recommencement of restricted on-campus activity. However at the same time planning is underway to provide an effective connected learning approach for students in the event of on-site delivery being restricted or not permissible.

St Mary's University College

St Mary's is planning for two possible scenarios from September 2020:

- 1 Students on campus with social distancing and a hybrid approach to learning and teaching which might involve the prioritisation of students taking practical subjects or a particular year group.
- 2 Online delivery of tuition, library service and student support/ guidance.

If the College is unable to open, they are planning for scenario 2. In this case, there will be:

- Interactive delivery for small groups (which are very common at the College);
- Google Classrooms, or equivalent, attached to each module;
- Online delivery of lectures to large groups;
- Formal assessment up to December 2020;
- Online access to Student Guidance and the Library; and
- Revisions to placement learning arrangements.

I trust you find this information helpful.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy what is her assessment of the economic impact of the proposed steps to implement the EU Withdrawal Agreement Protocol on Ireland and Northern Ireland at the ports of Northern Ireland.
(AQW 4272/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Work produced previously by the Department has emphasised that the long term outcome for Northern Ireland will depend greatly on two things.

These were the practicalities around the trading relationship with GB, and the relationship that the UK and the EU negotiated.

While I am obviously keen for successful outcomes to both of these key questions at this stage there is still much detail to be filled in on the first point, while on the second point we do not have a conclusive approach emerging from the EU negotiations as yet.

Until clarity emerges on both these points any assessment will be speculative.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for the Economy to outline the process for her Department to seek and gain approval, from a public health perspective, for reopening sectors of the economy.
(AQW 4300/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: My Department produced a range of material, since published, to set out our wider plans on reopening the economy in a staged manner. This is available at: <https://www.economy-ni.gov.uk/publications/charting-course-economy>.

Separately the Northern Ireland Executive agreed an approach to reviewing the restrictions and requirements in the Covid-19 regulations. This included a decision-making framework and a structured process for withdrawing or amending restrictions or requirements.

In line with the agreed approach, the proposals to amend the regulations to give effect to a subset of changes within the retail sector were subsequently submitted to the Department of Health for an assessment of the risks, impacts and the potential for a recommendation to the Executive.

Ultimately decisions on this and other proposals are made by the Executive on the recommendation of the Minister for Health, taking account of the scientific advice.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for the Economy to detail what discussions and actions are taking place to increase flight connectivity between Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom following the collapse of Flybe.
(AQW 4308/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Maintaining air connectivity with the GB mainland is critical, especially during this COVID-19 crisis period. Hence, following the announcement on Friday 1 May, I am delighted that the lifeline passenger flights from the City of Derry Airport and Belfast City Airport (BCA) to London are being supported. I engaged with the UK Chancellor and both the Transport and Northern Ireland Office Secretaries of State to deliver this. I would also like to highlight the tremendous work that has been done by Belfast International Airport (BIA) to maintain our vital freight links with the world over this period.

As we move into the Recovery phase I welcome the announcement by Easyjet to recommence operations from the BIA later this month. I am also aware that the Chief Executive of Belfast City Airport has publicly stated his intention to secure new carriers to fill the routes previously operated by Flybe.

As you are aware civil aviation is a reserved matter for the UK Department of Transport (DfT) and I speak regularly with both DfT and Devolved Administration Ministers on transport issues, including air connectivity.

I have established a Tourism Recovery Steering Group to lead on the recovery of the NI Tourism Industry in response to COVID-19. Part of this work involves working with both airports and airlines to consider how we can enhance air connectivity, thereby growing inbound tourism.

At our meeting on 2 June 2020, I impressed upon the NIO Secretary of State the importance of NI's air connectivity with GB both during the pandemic and beyond as we build the economic recovery.

I have also requested that, once the pandemic has abated, the UK Government should suspend Air Passenger Duty (APD) for at least six months. It is my view that APD is an unfair tax that should be addressed at a national level, as it has a particularly detrimental impact on Northern Ireland passengers, due to our physical remoteness to mainland GB.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for the Economy what help can be provided for the single person, self-employed businesses across Northern Ireland.
(AQW 4309/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: To date, my Department has provided almost £300 million of support through the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme and the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme. Both schemes were available to the self-employed provided they operate out of business premises and other eligibility criteria were met.

I am aware that there are self-employed people who may not be able to avail of these schemes, such as those not operating out of business premises. Others may not be eligible for the Microbusiness Hardship Fund as they do not employ other people. I, along with my Executive colleagues, will continue to explore if further funding can be identified to help support as many local businesses as possible during this difficult time.

The majority of the self-employed will be eligible for the Self-Employed Income Support Scheme (SEISS). This is a national scheme open to those self-employed that have been adversely impacted by COVID-19. Under SEISS, Self-employed people can apply for a taxable grant worth 80% of trading profits up to a maximum of £2,500 per month for a three month period. Other means of support are offered on a UK-wide basis to the self-employed such as HMRC's Time to Pay and Income Tax Deferral. Further details of all these schemes are available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/business-support/coronavirus>.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for the Economy what plans does her Department have to help stimulate the housing market across Northern Ireland once the COVID-19 pandemic is over.
(AQW 4310/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

Introduction and Context

The COVID-19 pandemic has created unprecedented challenges and difficulties for society at large, and in particular, the local economy.

Each month of shutdown is akin to a large recession. The longer we face into these damaging economic impacts, the greater the risk of long-term scarring on our economy and society.

This is why I, along with my Executive colleagues, have commenced work on an economic recovery plan, to coincide with a five step pathway for us to emerge from lockdown in a safe and sustainable way; 'Coronavirus Executive Approach to Decision Making'.

The First and deputy First Minister have recently announced the first steps that we will be taking, providing the rate of transmission does not increase. This includes those employment sectors and businesses that can re-open, subject to safe working practices and other specific measures being in place.

I have also published my Department's analysis on how we can take our first steps to restart our economy safely. This is available at: <https://www.economy-ni.gov.uk/publications/charting-course-economy>

At every stage we will work with the Minister for Health to ensure the steps we are taking are cognisant of the scientific advice.

The Housing Market

The housing market is an important issue with many component parts, straddling a number of different Executive departments, as well as various other statutory and non-statutory organisations.

The Department for Communities are the policy lead for housing in Northern Ireland, and I am aware that they are actively working with relevant partners and stakeholders on this matter. I welcome their lead on this important task. The Department of Finance, with responsibility for the Land and Property Services, is another key contributor in terms of opening up and revitalising the property market to a degree of normality.

However, as with all matters during this very difficult time, the Executive will work in a collective manner to ensure that the economic recovery is managed as safely and as swiftly as possible.

I am aware of the current desire and need to re-open some related sectors and services to kick start the housing market. Already many construction firms are starting to re-open and have their contractors and sub-contractors back on site, provided social distancing and safe working practices can be applied in all circumstances.

Representations have been made on behalf of other key players, including Estate Agents, Valuation Surveyors, as well as Residential Property and Building Control Surveyors. The Executive will consider these in line with the five step relaxation and recovery planning process and will make these decisions as soon as it is deemed safe and practicable to do so, based on all of the evidence and information available.

I do not underestimate how difficult a time this is for everyone in our society and no business or sector will be immune to the negative impact and consequences of this pandemic.

However, we do have to start looking towards and planning for the future, and this is of course relevant to the housing market, an area that has such far reaching and potentially positive knock on benefits for many sectors, businesses, employees, and of course families.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether she intends to bring forward support for businesses where the sole employee is the business owner or company director.
(AQW 4324/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: At present there are no plans to bring forward specific support for those businesses mentioned.

To date, almost £300 million of support has been provided through the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme and the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme. Both schemes were available to businesses who met the scheme's eligibility criteria.

I am aware that there are self-employed people who may not be able to avail of these schemes, such as those not operating out of business premises. Others may not be eligible for the Microbusiness Hardship Fund as they do not employ other people. I, along with my Executive colleagues, will continue to explore if further funding can be identified to help support as many local businesses as possible during this difficult time.

Many other means of support are offered on a UK-wide basis. The Chancellor has announced the Self-Employed Income Support Scheme. This offers 80% of trading profits up to a maximum of £2,500 per month for 3 months. Other support is available such as the Bounce Back Loan scheme, HMRC's Time to Pay and Income Tax Deferral. Further details are available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/business-support/coronavirus>.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether her Department has had discussions with, or provided guidance to, Northern Ireland universities regarding the delivery of teaching online.

(AQW 4326/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Northern Ireland's higher education institutions are autonomous and as such are responsible for the own policies regarding the delivery of teaching. However, the institutions have shared the following information regarding their plans for online teaching in the coming academic year. Information regarding The Open University is not included as provision is already delivered online.

Ulster University

Ulster University confirmed on Wednesday 27 May 2020 to students, prospective students, staff, and wider stakeholders that the first term of academic year 2020/21 will commence on 21 September 2020 with plans to deliver lectures and other teaching online for semester one.

Where it is safe to do so, the University will be exploring face to face activities that can be held on campus following a robust risk assessment. Priority will be given to using campus spaces for practice-based learning activities including lab work.

Ulster University staff members who can work from home will continue to do so until at least the end of August and after the summer, the University will look to move to a phased, managed return of all staff within public health guidelines and with the health, safety and wellbeing of staff and students as its primary concern.

In order to actively plan for the return of some campus-based activities, there will be a safe, phased return to campus for some staff in early summer. Ulster University's People & Culture team will be on hand to inform and support those colleagues through this transition.

Queen's University, Belfast

Queen's University has produced a draft working document outlining three main options for the re-entry of students on 21 September 2020. These options include: 1.) face to face teaching with measures of social distancing and blended learning; 2.) an option to graduate teaching to different groups of students taking account of social distancing and blended learning; and 3.) a contingency plan to move to online learning should physical re-entry not be feasible at that time.

The first option is the University's preferred course of action.

The document is in working draft form and out for consultation and should be agreed in the next few weeks.

Stranmillis University College

At present Stranmillis University College is preparing to open in September using a blended learning approach with small groups on campus at any given time. Priority will be given to first year students coming on campus as on-campus experience is particularly important to enable them to adjust to third level study.

Strict social distancing, sanitization and cleaning regime will be in place. This means that:

- All lecture materials will be online;
- Blended/Interactive learning for other classes as standard;
- Online delivery of practical/workshop classes if possible with the postponement of other practical classes to Semester 2, with priority given to on-campus delivery to Year 1 in Semester 1;
- In line with social distancing, consider rotated classes on campus;
- Online assessment and feedback to students; and
- Online evaluations as standard.

Work is currently underway to assess the protocols and systems required to allow for the effective and efficient recommencement of restricted on-campus activity. However at the same time planning is underway to provide an effective connected learning approach for students in the event of on-site delivery being restricted or not permissible.

St Mary's University College

If St Mary's College is unable to open in September, they are planning:

- Interactive delivery for small groups (which are very common at the College);
- Google Classrooms, or equivalent, attached to each module;
- Online delivery of lectures to large groups;
- Formal assessment up to December 2020;
- Online access to Student Guidance and the Library; and
- Revisions to placement learning arrangements.

I trust that you find this information helpful.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether a furloughed employee, subsequently made redundant, would have redundancy pay calculated based on furloughed pay or regular contractual pay, in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 4386/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Responsibility for the UK-wide Job Retention Scheme falls to Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs. However, I understand there is nothing in the scheme that prevents employers from taking into consideration time on furlough when calculating redundancy pay.

The rules on calculating redundancy pay are complex and depend on age, length of service, working pattern and contractual arrangements. Theoretically, this complexity could mean that there may be some situations where the employer could use furlough pay as part of this calculation.

However, in these difficult times, I am firmly of the view that employers should assess redundancy pay using employees' weekly pay prior to furlough in line with any contractual obligations at that time. I would not expect an employer to take advantage of the Government's Job Retention Scheme, which has brought benefit to employers and employees alike, to make someone redundant on less favourable terms than they would otherwise have received. It should also be borne in mind that any redundancy payment may be subject to determination by an Industrial Tribunal.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for the Economy to outline what checks and review processes have been put in place by her Department to ensure no double counting or double allocation of public funds.

(AQW 4395/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Spending proposals are developed and implemented by the Department for the Economy in line with Managing Public Money NI, NI Public Procurement Policy and the NI Guide to Expenditure Appraisal and Evaluation.

When allocating public funds to the Voluntary and Community sector, the Department utilises the Voluntary and Community Sector Funders' database to help identify any potential double-funding or other kinds of financial impropriety prior to payment.

As part of the Department's Casework Committee process, Additionality, Displacement, Objectives, Proposed Assistance and Rationale for the format of Support are considered when a case is presented to the Committee for approval. Consideration of these issues in detail helps ensure there is no double counting or double allocation of public funds.

The Department participates in the bi-annual National Fraud Initiative process conducted by the Northern Ireland Audit Office, and investigates any matches and reports on any findings. The Comptroller & Auditor General (C&AG) has statutory powers to conduct data matching exercises for the purpose of assisting in the prevention and detection of fraud.

The Department processes payments in partnership with the NICS Shared Service provider Account NI. The creation, authorisation and approval of all transactions on the Account NI system are in accordance with the Departmental approval hierarchies. This approach, together with the availability of management information and the application of wider controls, aims to minimise the likelihood of double counting or double allocation of public funds. In certain circumstances, funding is administered by third party organisations on behalf of the Department. These arrangements are managed through Service Level Agreement or Memorandum of Understanding, and the Department relies upon controls in those organisations to ensure prevention of double counting or double allocation of public funds.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for the Economy when does she anticipate the re-opening of static caravan sites.

(AQW 4423/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Subject to the continued containment of COVID-19, the Executive has determined that all tourist accommodation, including Caravan Sites, will be permitted to open with effect from 20 July 2020. It is possible that this date may change, subject to further deliberations by the Executive.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy to detail what financial support her Department has made available to hauliers.

(AQW 4427/17-22)

Ms Kimmins asked the Minister for the Economy whether (i) she has had any engagement with the shopping centre industry; and (ii) her Department has developed guidelines to enable shopping centres to prepare to safely reopen.

(AQW 4462/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I recently met with Aodhán Connolly, NI Retail Consortium (NIRC) along with representatives from a range of national retailers and we had a useful discussion about several topics including an Exit Strategy and the reopening of retail in Northern Ireland.

I have also scheduled a meeting this month with Retail NI and other retail businesses to discuss the planning and preparation for the reopening of retail outlets.

My Department and officials will continue to work with both the Executive and the UK Government to ensure the concerns of the NI retail sector are reflected in local/national initiatives, where possible and appropriate.

- (ii) The Engagement Forum was established by the NI Executive, to provide advice and guidance in response to Covid-19 as it impacts on the NI Economy / Labour Market.

This is a unique and very diverse range of stakeholders reporting to me, as Minister. The Forum is drawn from all sectors of the local business and employment community, including the NIRC.

The Forum produced an initial list of priority sectors and sub-sectors that could remain open, subject to applying safe working practices, as well as a new Code of Practice on Safe Working as it applies to the current Covid-19 pandemic. The Priority sector list and Code of Practice, as agreed by the Executive, have been published on the NI Business Info website: www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk

Subsequent to this, on 12th May 2020, the Executive announced and published a phased five-stage plan for slowly moving out of lockdown; 'Coronavirus Executive Approach to Decision Making'. The document sets out the approach the Executive will take when deciding how to ease restrictions in the future, see below:

<https://www.executiveoffice-ni.gov.uk/news/executive-publishes-coronavirus-recovery-strategy>

It is therefore for the Executive, through the First and deputy First Minister's Office, to determine when further relaxation measures will be permitted, including those related to the re-opening of employment sectors and specific businesses within each. Details, including the dates on which any further relaxations come into effect, will be provided on a regular basis, and the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 will be updated accordingly.

Meanwhile the Engagement Forum will continue to work closely with the Department, and provide advice and guidance to the Executive on how best to manage the challenge of Covid-19 as it applies to certain issues related to the NI Economy/Labour Market.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for the Economy, given the decreasing cost of renewable energy and the increased risks of investing in fossil fuel projects, what stranded assets analysis has her Department carried out regarding the proposed Belfast Harbour Estate fossil gas power plant.

(AQW 4481/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The proposed gas power plant at Belfast Harbour Estate is a privately funded project and therefore the commercial risks sit with the developers.

My Department has no responsibility for undertaking a stranded asset analysis of such a privately-funded project.

Dr Archibald asked the Minister for the Economy to outline (i) the number of people that became self-employed since April 2019; and (ii) whether she will amend the criteria for the Hardship Fund to include those self-employed people not eligible for any other support.

(AQW 4520/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

- (i) The latest figures indicate that approximately 2,000 people became self-employed in Northern Ireland between April 2019 and December 2019 (the latest date for which data is available).
- (ii) At this point in time no plans are in place to expand the Micro-Business Hardship Fund beyond its current scope.

Written Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the process by which Brendan McAllister was appointed to the role of Interim Advocate for Victims/Survivors of Historical Institutional Abuse; and (ii) whether he declared an interest in relation to his role within the Roman Catholic Church.
(AQW 3921/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): A request was issued to victims' and survivors' groups and also to the Department of Health seeking suitable nominations for the role.

A considerable number of suggestions were received in response. Mr McAllister was nominated by one of the victims' and survivors' groups.

A shortlist was drawn up based on set criteria, and "conversations with a purpose" carried out in May 2019 by a panel comprising TEO officials and an independent advisor with a social care background.

Mr McAllister was deemed the most suitable candidate and was appointed on 2 July 2019 by the Head of the Civil Service.

Mr McAllister informed the panel that he was working towards becoming a deacon in the Catholic Church. However any such appointment would not occur whilst Mr McAllister was in post.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the relationship between the Interim Advocate and victims of institutional abuse.
(AQW 3922/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Since his appointment in July 2019, the Interim Advocate has worked with victims and survivors groups and individuals including advocating for them during the drafting and implementation of the HIA legislation and the establishment of the Redress Board and Scheme.

We are aware there have been some issues which have arisen, and we have received some complaints. This matter is currently under consideration by the Head of the Civil Service, who appointed the Interim Advocate.

The appointment process for the HIA Advocate is currently underway and we hope to appoint someone to this post as soon as possible in line with the agreed process.

Miss Woods asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to their statement on 12 May 2020, and their response to my question on the Executive's responsibility to implement and enforce COVID-19 guidance for employers, (i) to outline the Executive's current oversight mechanisms for ensuring workplace safety in light of COVID-19; (ii) whether they intend to expand or enhance oversight; (iii) when the enhanced messaging, referenced on page 10 of the Coronavirus: Executive Approach to Decision-Making document, around what is permissible in terms of work, will be published; (iv) what enforcement bodies are represented on the Civil Contingencies Group; and (v) whether they intend to increase engagement with Trade Unions.
(AQW 4129/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Workplace safety in light of COVID-19 requires all employers to look at how, through a risk assessment process, they can comply with the available public health guidance on managing this community disease and thereby fulfil their legal duty in the workplace to minimise the risk to employees.

The responsibility for enforcement of health and safety at work legislation is split between HSENI and the district councils. HSENI can be contacted by employees or trade unions who either need advice or wish to make a complaint about safety concerns at work. HSENI or the district councils will follow up on complaints using a variety of methods which may in some cases include a site inspection. Matters of wider strategic concern regarding compliance with the available public health guidance should of course be raised with the Executive through departmental channels as appropriate.

As stated in the Coronavirus decision-making document 'The Executive will provide enforcement powers as necessary to the PSNI and other public bodies to address any small minority who may seek to ignore rules in place'.

At each step we will provide further information about how the changes affect employers and employees. We are currently looking at the guidance published recently by UK Government and the Economy Minister has asked the Engagement Forum chaired by the Labour Relations Agency to consider whether this would help our employers, employees and the self-employed understand how to work safely during the coronavirus pandemic.

Organisations represented at CCG meetings in the COVID 19 context are detailed below. Enforcement is carried out by various bodies depending on the activity in question and relevant enforcement bodies are represented either directly, or indirectly, at CCG meetings as appropriate depending on the stage of the response.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what arrangements are in place to fill the post and role of Attorney General when the current office holder's term of office expires in June 2020.
(AQW 4180/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Ms Brenda King, First Legislative Counsel, will discharge the functions of the Attorney General on an interim basis while a process is developed to identify a substantive replacement.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) whether the process to recruit a new Attorney General has commenced; (ii) if so, when will such be completed; and (iii) if not, why not.
(AQW 4181/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We have tasked officials to develop a process to identify a replacement Attorney General and it is our intention that this should be completed as soon as possible.

In the interim period Ms Brenda King, First Legislative Counsel, will discharge the functions of the Attorney General.

We will update the Assembly further in due course.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether (i) the current Attorney General is willing to accept an extension to his term of office until the end of the mandate; and (ii) that has been offered.
(AQW 4182/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The current Attorney General's term of office expires at the end of June.

We have arranged for Ms Brenda King, First Legislative Counsel, to discharge the functions of Attorney General while a process is developed to identify a substantive replacement.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, if the Attorney General's term of office expires without a replacement in position, to detail (i) who will provide legal advice to the Executive; and (ii) who will perform the relevant statutory functions in relation to Assembly legislation.
(AQW 4183/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We are considering a number of options to address the matter to ensure continuity in maintaining the responsibilities and statutory functions of the Attorney General and his office.

We will provide a statement to the Assembly in due course.

Mr McNulty asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline (i) the number of occasions on which they have been asked by the Minister of Communities or the Minister of Finance to include a request for additional funds for the redevelopment of Casement Park in discussions at Executive meetings; and (ii) the number of occasions on which the redevelopment of Casement Park has been discussed at the Executive, since the return of the Executive in January 2020.
(AQW 4391/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: It is not our practice to disclose details of Executive business. The content of Executive papers and all aspects of Executive business are confidential.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the decisions taken by urgent procedure by their Department.

(AQW 4407/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: It is not our practice to disclose details of Executive business. The content of Executive papers and all aspects of Executive business are confidential.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the implementation of the Ireland protocol.
(AQW 4408/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: In the Command Paper "The UK's Approach to the Northern Ireland Protocol" the UK Government sets out proposals for implementation of the Protocol at the end of the transition period on the 31 December.

The Executive is under a legal responsibility to work with the UK Government on the implementation of the legal obligations arising from the Protocol.

It will not be possible to fully assess the implementation of the Ireland/Northern Ireland Protocol until there is clarity on the future trading relationship between the UK and the EU. We are determined to ensure that the outcome is as favourable as possible to our businesses and citizens.

Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether his Department has the power to (i) seek financial compensation for damage caused by the deliberate starting of a fire; and (ii) withdraw any grants his Department pays to anyone proven to have started a fire.

(AQW 4291/17-22)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): The Forestry Act (2010) specifies that a person shall not burn vegetation within one and a half kilometres of a forest unless they have served the forest owner notice of their intention to burn vegetation. A person who burns vegetation in contravention of this commits an offence and is liable, on conviction, for a fine and all damages which are recoverable by the forest owner from the person burning the vegetation.

Farm businesses claiming grants or subsidies under a number of DAERA schemes must meet the conditions contained in the Northern Ireland Cross-Compliance Verifiable Standards. Under the Verifiable Standards, the farm businesses must not burn heather, gorse, whin or fern between 15 April and 31 August each year. A breach of this Verifiable Standard could result in a cross compliance penalty being applied.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether (i) his Department is aware of the identity of the person who started the fire close to Castlewellan Forest Park on 15 May 2020; and (ii) his Department plans to initiate an investigation in this case.

(AQW 4293/17-22)

Mr Poots: My Department is not aware of the identity of the person who started the fire close to Castlewellan Forest Park on 15 May 2020.

Forest Service report all wildfire incidents on, or with the potential to impact on, its property to the PSNI for investigation. In all cases Forest Service facilitates any police investigation to take place first, and subject to outcomes, consideration is given to any further action that can be taken under the Forestry Act.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for a breakdown of (i) all COVID-19 resources bids made by his Department; and (ii) allocations received by his Department.

(AQW 4406/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) In March, a £105m support package was submitted to the Department of Finance (DoF) which has since been reviewed and refined. The bid is now classified as a "Marker bid" and a new substantive Support for Farming Sector - Market Intervention Resource DEL Bid of £107.5m was submitted to DoF on 6 May. Bids were also submitted for Waste, which was subsequently reduced from £16.7m to £5.0m, £1.5m for Support to the Fishing Sector, £1.3m for AFBI COVID-19 Testing Kits and £1.0m for Rural Affairs.

Following an internal review of COVID-19 requirements and allocations by the Executive, a residual bid of £81.5m for Market Interventions for the Agri Food sector was confirmed to DoF on 5 June.

- (ii) The Executive has allocated £25m Resource DEL for Market Interventions in the Agri Food Sector, £3.8m for Waste and £1.5m for Support to the Fishing Sector.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) for his assessment of the continual harvesting of periwinkles, lugworm and ragworm from the Outer Belfast Lough Area of Special Scientific Interest; (ii) to outline the impact this will have on local ecology; and (iii) whether his Department has any plans to address this.

(AQW 4484/17-22)

Mr Poots: As part of my Department's routine monitoring of protected areas, shellfish gathering and bait digging is occasionally observed at Outer Belfast Lough Area of Special Scientific Interest. My Department also receives reports from members of the public. The current level of activity is not considered to be impacting on the local ecology but there is a risk that excessive harvesting could cause damage and disturbance. My Department is currently reviewing all activities that occur within marine protected areas to identify where additional conservation measures are required and intertidal harvesting will be included within this review.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) where the £25 million pound hardship funding for farmers will be spent; (ii) for a breakdown on how much will be spent on beef farmers and dairy farmers; and (iii) to detail the fund's application process.

(AQW 4505/17-22)

Mr Poots: Since the NI Executive announced the allocation of the '£25 million COVID-19 support package' I have invited views and sought input from a range of industry representatives and stakeholders.

On 22 May I spoke to the AERA Committee and invited their views on how best to allocate the funding to those most affected. I have also received independent analysis, reports and industry proposals, and I have met with representatives of the Dairy sector, Red Meat sector and Farming Unions to hear their proposals for allocating this funding.

During these discussions, there was a clear acceptance of the need for support to be targeted at those farm businesses hardest hit financially as a direct result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

In addition, I have received numerous emails and letters from political representatives, farmers, businesses, rural groups and organisations representing farmer's interests, requesting support for a range of sectors including dairy, beef, ornamental horticulture, sheep, wool, hill farming, potatoes and poultry breeding egg producers.

I am carefully considering all of these views and opinions and reviewing farm gate market data for the periods when sectors were impacted most. I will use this information to make my decision on how best to allocate this funding, in a fair and equitable way based on evidence, in the near future.

When a final decision is made on the allocation of the funding it is my intention to ensure that it is administered with ease and at pace so that businesses get the funding into their bank accounts quickly to address cash flow concerns.

I want to avoid creating an overly bureaucratic system which would create additional paperwork and complexity for farmers, therefore it is my intention that the delivery mechanism should ideally rely on data that the Department already holds, or is readily available from other sources, but still ensure that the appropriate governance arrangements, and accountability for expenditure of public money is in place.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to outline the progress made on the introduction of an animal cruelty register.

(AQW 4506/17-22)

Mr Poots: As I have previously indicated, I am open to the possibility of creating a register of those convicted of animal welfare offences. Given its cross-cutting nature, it is my intention to raise this matter with the Minister of Justice to seek her views on the creation and maintenance of such a register. This has not been progressed over recent months due to the Department's focus on its response to the COVID pandemic.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what progress has been made on managing the risk of the spread of bovine TB in dairy herds as a result of the increasing badger population.

(AQW 4538/17-22)

Mr Poots: Reducing and ultimately eradicating bovine Tuberculosis (bTB) is a key priority for my Department. I have been working closely with the Chief Veterinary Officer and others to develop a bTB Eradication Strategy for Northern Ireland. The Strategy will seek to tackle all of the factors which contribute to the spread of bTB, including measures to address the threat posed by badgers. In 2012 the NI badger population was estimated at just over 34,000 and there is no data to suggest any significant increase in numbers since then.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs why have Less Favoured Area questions been removed from the Agriculture and Horticultural Census for June 2020.

(AQW 4603/17-22)

Mr Poots: It is not possible to run the Agricultural and Horticultural Census as normal this year due to COVID-19 and the Department's statisticians have made changes to the data collection method as a result. The Census is being collected online only for the first time, with telephone support provided for those who can't complete it online.

In order to make the online completion as straightforward as possible and to minimise the burden on farm businesses, a number of questions have been removed (contact details, Less Favoured Area (LFA), breeding heifers) and some have been reduced in complexity (labour).

In removing the LFA questions, Departmental statisticians determined that a robust estimate of the land farmed in LFA areas can be made by using returns from previous years, and administrative data held within the Department including the mapping of fields use in Basic Payment application system. The Department remains committed to providing statistics specific to LFA.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what assurances he can give to workers across the agri-food sector regarding (i) health and safety concerns; and (ii) job protection during the COVID-19 pandemic.
(AQW 4655/17-22)

Mr Poots: Since the NI Executive announced the allocation of the '£25 million COVID-19 support package' I have invited views and sought input from a range of industry representatives and stakeholders.

On 22 May I spoke to the AERA Committee and invited their views on how best to allocate the funding to those most affected. I have also received independent analysis, reports and industry proposals, and I have met with representatives of the Dairy sector, Red Meat sector and Farming Unions to hear their proposals for allocating this funding.

In addition, I have received numerous emails and letters from political representatives, farmers, businesses, rural groups and organisations representing farmer's interests, requesting support for a range of sectors including dairy, beef, ornamental horticulture, sheep, wool, hill farming, potatoes and poultry breeding egg producers.

I am carefully considering all of these views and opinions and reviewing farm gate market data for the periods when sectors were impacted most. I will use this information to make my decision on how best to allocate this funding, in a fair and equitable way based on evidence, in the near future.

When a final decision is made on the allocation of the funding it is my intention to ensure that it is administered with ease and at pace so that businesses get the funding into their bank accounts quickly to address cash flow concerns.

I want to avoid creating an overly bureaucratic system which would create additional paperwork and complexity for farmers, therefore it is my intention that the delivery mechanism should ideally rely on data that the Department already holds, or is readily available from other sources, but still ensure that the appropriate governance arrangements, and accountability for expenditure of public money is in place.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what measures he is putting in place to ensure that workers across the agri-food sector will not be financially disadvantaged as a result of being unable to work due to testing positive for COVID-19, or self-isolating pending a test result.

Mr Poots: Since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic I and my officials have been meeting on a regular basis with industry stakeholders to discuss business issues impacting the agri-food sector.

My officials have also coordinated and facilitated regular meetings between industry stakeholders, the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI), the Food Standards Agency Northern Ireland (FSA NI) and the Public Health Agency (PHA). These meetings and associated communications have ensured that the agri-food industry and key stakeholders are familiar with the latest PHA guidance on the management of staff who are unable to work due to testing positive for COVID-19 or self-isolating pending a test result. The primary objective of this advice is to ensure a safe working environment for all personnel and minimising the risk of COVID transmission in the workplace.

NICS staff who have tested positive or who are self-isolating pending a test result will continue to receive full pay during the period of absence.

DAERA is not in a position to comment on employment policies in the Private Sector or wider Agri-food industry.

Throughout the pandemic I have also encouraged agri-food businesses to maintain regular contact with the Department for Economy to ensure they and their staff are able to avail of support measures introduced by Government, including the Small Business Grant Scheme, the £25,000 Business Support Grant Scheme, the NI-Micro Business Hardship Fund, Self Employed Income Support Scheme, the Job Retention Scheme, the Coronavirus Business Interruption Loan Scheme and the Bounce Back Loan scheme.

Further details on the range of COVID-19 support measures for businesses can be found on the NI Business Info website www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk. These details are updated and added to on a regular basis.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) to detail the uptake of the financial package announced to assist fishermen; and (ii) to outline what other measures have been put in place to support the fishing sector during the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4786/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) To date, my Department has issued 169 offers of support under the Sea Fish Industry (Coronavirus Financial Assistance) Scheme (NI) 2020. Of these 161 offers have been accepted with 158 payments totalling £1.21m made to fishing vessel owners.
- (ii) Officials and fishing industry representatives continue to meet on a weekly basis to monitor recovery and determine what, if any, further measures and support might be necessary. In addition, I have recently announced a £360,000 support package for the aquaculture sector and which is now open for applications. To date, nine applications have been submitted.

Dr Archibald asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on the New Decade, New Approach commitment to review the Executive's strategies to reduce carbon emissions in light of the Paris Climate Agreement and the climate crisis.

(AQW 4808/17-22)

Mr Poots: I am still considering plans to meet climate change commitments and approaches outlined in 'New Decade, New Approach'.

I believe it is imperative that we build the evidence base and ensure government policy making has climate and environment at its core and that future policies and strategies can demonstrably deliver the outcomes people expect.

The introduction of any new cross cutting approaches on climate change will of course require the support of the NI Executive.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what action he has taken to date to meet the climate change commitments in New Decade, New Approach.

(AQW 4892/17-22)

Department for Communities

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Communities to outline funding for advice services to support the EU Settlement Scheme after March 2020.

(AQW 2691/17-22)

Ms Hargey (The Minister for Communities): My Department has no role in funding to support advice services to the EU Settlement Scheme; this is administered by the Home Office.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities to detail the (i) areas of public land belonging to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that have been sold or transferred to the private sector, including housing associations, since 2015; (ii) the open market value of the land; and (iii) the amount received for the land.

(AQW 3207/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive has provided the following table which details the addresses and size of each area of land that it has sold since 2015, as well as the open market value of that land and the final sale price achieved. For completeness it has also included sales or transfers to bodies other than private and housing associations, such as councils.

The following information should also be noted:

- Under Department of Finance (DoF) guidance on the disposal of public sector property, all land transfers must take place at the best value obtainable, being no less than Market Value assessed in accordance with RICS "Red Book" standards. The market value of all Housing Executive land disposals is independently assessed by the Land & Property Services District Valuer in accordance with this requirement. In line with this requirement any transfers at less than the best consideration must be approved by the Department for Communities.

- Housing Association Transfers - These are sites which are included in the Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) for development by a Housing Association to meet social housing need. Transfer sites are valued by Land & Property Services at open market value but are actually transferred to Housing Associations at nil. There is no capital receipt due to the Housing Executive and the Housing Association Grant is reduced by the value of the land being transferred.
- Open Market Sales - Disposal of surplus land by way of open market sale are initially marketed at the current Undeveloped Land Schedule (ULS) assessed valuation reported for the Annual Accounts. The final sale price achieved for all open market sales are recommended for acceptance by Land & Property Services before the sale is approved and Contracts drafted.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what progress has been made in securing a veteran's centre, either at the premises previously identified at Regent Street, Newtownards, or elsewhere.

(AQW 3230/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department has not been undertaking work to secure a veterans' centre in Newtownards or elsewhere. This issue was last raised with the then Department for Social Development in 2014, when Minister Storey advised that the Department had no suitable funding programmes for such a project.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Communities to outline the extent of the public consultation with local residents on the proposed redevelopment of Casement Park.

(AQW 3263/17-22)

Ms Hargey: UCGAA has sought to consider and respond to the views of local residents throughout the stages of the proposed redevelopment of the Casement Park Stadium. At present on the Planning Portal there are over 3,500 public comments on the project, of which almost 2,300 are positive. I know that the GAA share my view that engagement with the local community is of vital importance.

Ulster GAA held a 32 week Pre-Application Community Consultation to support their new Planning Application for the Casement Park Redevelopment, which concluded in November 2016. This was a more significant public consultation commitment than the minimum 12 week duration specified within The Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.

This consultation allowed the community to provide feedback to Ulster GAA before finalising the design, prior to submitting the Planning Application in February 2017. The level of participation response to the Pre Application Community Consultation process was high and Ulster GAA listened to the views of a range of groups and individuals. The community response to the proposed Casement Park redevelopment plans presented through this process was overwhelmingly supportive, with in-excess of 2,000 people participating across a range of events and forums and 91% of respondents in favour of the project.

During the three years that the Planning Application has been under assessment, Ulster GAA continue to inform members of the local community with up-to-date and accurate information about the proposed development. Ulster GAA is committed to maintaining this engagement throughout the delivery of the project.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities how many archaeological items are held in storage; and will she undertake a programme to share our history by undertaking a proactive programme of displaying these artefacts in hospitals, schools and libraries.

(AQW 3268/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department's Historic Environment Division (HED) holds the excavation material from 450 excavations carried out by its staff and their predecessors since 1950. Given the fragmentary nature of most of the material recovered in excavations (which can include animal bones, production waste, pottery sherds and environmental samples) it is impossible to state the total number of items but there are certainly tens of thousands of individual items in this material. HED also curates a limited amount of material from non-Departmental excavations, including some works associated with infrastructure schemes.

In regard to display, many of the most significant objects in HED's possession are already on loan to a variety of appropriate and publically accessible institutions, including National Museums NI (NMNI), local authority museums and heritage centres; and some relevant artefacts are also on display on some of the monuments in the care of the Department, such as Greypoint Fort and Bellaghy Bawn.

All loan requests to NMNI are individually assessed to ascertain the security and environmental conditions required for the objects requested. NMNI refer to industry standards and important considerations such as object security, condition, rarity, value and accessibility. NMNI works closely with requesting venues to ensure the standards necessary for the national collections. Libraries and in some instances schools can provide suitable exhibition spaces. However, the level of security required, especially in regard to damage and theft prevention, and environmental stability, is not normally available within public spaces such as libraries, schools or hospitals. In any of these buildings secure, museum-standard cases would be required for display purposes, and these cases are very costly to acquire.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AQW 2132/17-22, (i) to detail the options her Department is considering in respect to self-employment and how best to assist people in this category; (ii) to confirm when she expects a final decision to be made; (iii) to confirm whether the New Enterprise Allowance is being actively considered as one of these options; and (iv) if the New Enterprise Allowance is not amongst those being considered, to detail the reasons why it has been discounted.

(AQW 3310/17-22)

Ms Hargey:

- (i) Currently, options under consideration are:
  - (a) Continue to provide Work Coach support including sign-posting to local Councils, Enterprise agencies and other organisations to utilise the range of existing support available.
  - (b) Introduce a scheme similar to DWP's New Enterprise Allowance.
  - (c) Introduce an entirely new scheme specific to here to support people to become self-employed and people in the early stages of business development.
- (ii) At this stage it is anticipated that the preferred option will be decided upon by March 2021. The options under consideration will be assessed for affordability in line with current budgetary constraints.
- (iii) My department is currently assessing the viability of support equivalent to the New Enterprise Allowance.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Communities (i) how many staff car parking spaces her Department and its agencies have in Belfast city centre; and (ii) whether she is taking any action to reduce this number.

(AQW 3339/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department for Communities currently provides 297 car parking spaces in Belfast City Centre for essential car users. The department monitors the usage of car parking for its core business areas and is currently reviewing its policy and procedures in this regard. At present there are no plans to reduce the number of spaces currently provided.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister for Communities whether her Department has engaged with banks to ensure they provide an option to people suffering from gambling addiction to opt out from being able to use financial products on gambling.

(AQW 3345/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The current legislation in relation to gambling here dates back to 1985; I recognise that it is outdated and takes no account of the internet and other industry advances nor does it address the serious issue of problem gambling.

My Department's consultation on the regulation of gambling closed on 21 February. The purpose of the consultation was to seek views on the appropriateness of the current law and to identify areas of gambling activity which should be included in any future legislation.

My officials are currently analysing responses to the consultation and I expect to receive a report in a few weeks. I hope to be able to announce the way forward by the summer.

My officials are monitoring the work which a number of financial institutions are engaged in with respect to assisting customers who have a problem with gambling, and will engage directly with them should this be considered necessary.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister for Communities whether the ban on the use of credit cards for the purposes of gambling in Britain, coming in to force on April 14, will also apply here.

(AQW 3347/17-22)

Ms Hargey: On 14 January, the British Gambling Commission announced its intention to introduce a ban on gambling businesses allowing consumers there to use credit cards to gamble. The ban, which will apply to all online and offline gambling products there with the exception of non-remote lotteries, is to commence on 14 April and will be implemented through changes to the licence conditions.

Gambling here is regulated by The Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. With the exception of bingo clubs, premises based gambling operators here are not prohibited from offering credit and changes to our legislation would be required to address this.

Online operators who wish to advertise to consumers here are required to hold the appropriate Gambling Commission licence and comply with the relevant licence conditions, therefore the ban on the use of credit cards to gamble will also affect consumers here.

My Department's consultation on the regulation of gambling closed on 21 February. The purpose of the consultation was to seek views on the appropriateness of the current law and to identify areas of gambling activity which should be included in any future legislation.

My officials will analyse the responses received and I hope to announce the way forward by the summer.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the number of sports teams sponsored by gambling companies and the amount being spent.

(AQW 3348/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department does not hold any record of the number of sports teams sponsored by gambling companies or the amount being spent. With regard to sponsorship by gambling companies of local sport, I recognise the great work sports clubs do, especially for young people and that many of them rely on advertising and sponsorship to raise funds. I am, however, also very concerned at the harm caused by problem gambling in our society.

My Department's consultation on the regulation of gambling here closed on 21 February. The purpose of the consultation was to seek views on the appropriateness of the current law and to identify areas of gambling activity which should be included in any future legislation.

My officials are analysing responses to the consultation and I expect to receive a report in a few weeks. I hope to be able to announce the way forward by the summer.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the planned cycle and walkway route for Strabane.

(AQW 3355/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I can confirm that my Department has awarded grant funding of £675,769 to Derry City and Strabane District Council towards anticipated project costs of £1.4 million for the Strabane Greenway project. Ground clearance work commenced on the 9 March 2020 and the project is expected to be completed by 31 August 2020. The development, when complete, will provide a 3.5 kilometre walkway and cycle route in the town, connecting the A5 Derry Road, Canal Basin, River Mourne Flood Wall and Strabane Retail Park.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities to detail the current budget for each Neighbourhood Renewal Area in Upper Bann.

(AQW 3359/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Neighbourhood Renewal areas do not have individual budgets and instead, funding is allocated to individual projects. There are three Neighbourhood Renewal areas in Upper Bann – North-West Portadown, Lurgan and Brownlow and in 2019/20 my department allocated a total of £840,693 under the programme to support projects in these areas.

The projects currently funded, work across all three Neighbourhood Renewal areas and it is not possible to identify precisely the proportion of the total funding which is allocated within each of the three areas.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Communities what measures her Department can put in place to mitigate unnecessary distress to families whose relatives may be named in records released under the PRONI Annual Release scheme.

(AQW 3367/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The PRONI annual release scheme is a bi-annual event in which the historic records are reviewed and made publicly available by my Department.

Prior to public release, the content of the records are subject to a sensitivity review by the current Department who are the Responsible Authority for those records. The sensitivity review is carried out in accordance with Freedom of Information legislation which applies to historical files (i.e. those over 20 years old) and Data Protection legislation. The review consists of a page by page consideration of the content of each record, by the Responsible Authority and a recommendation to open, close or partially redact the record.

In order to mitigate unnecessary distress to families consideration is given primarily under the health and safety exemption of FOIA (Section 38). This exemption can be applied where the public release "would, or would be likely to

- a) endanger the physical or mental health of any individual, or
- b) endanger the safety of any individual."

The application of Section 38 results in the redaction of names or personal identifiers of individual's families.

The application of another FOIA exemption relating to personal information (Section 40) will also result in records being redacted to prevent substantial distress to families upon release.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities where tenants impacted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Tower Block Strategy in Rathcoole will be rehoused.

(AQW 3368/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Tower Blocks Action Plan proposes that Monkscoole House and Abbotscoole House should be demolished with new social housing built on the combined cleared site, and that Carncoole House and Glencoole House should be retained for a period of at least ten years and have full improvement works undertaken. Monkscoole House is vacant as the remaining tenants have already been rehoused.

There are currently 35 tenants in Abbotscoole House who will need to be rehoused if the proposal to demolish the block is approved by the Housing Executive's Board and the Department for Communities. As part of the work to prepare the business case for Abbotscoole House the Housing Executive will be consulting its tenants as to their rehousing preferences. If they wish to remain in the Rathcoole area it is estimated that they could be rehoused within 2-3 years into relets in existing Housing Executive and Housing Association stock in the area.

There will also be additional rehousing opportunities in an already programmed 2021/22 scheme by Connswater Housing Association to provide 25 units at Barna Square, and the nearby former Newtownabbey High School site with an estimated development potential of 80 social housing units. The intention is that the combined Monkscoole/Abbotscoole cleared sites will be developed for around 50 new social housing units and it may be that some tenants will want to temporarily decant to relets and then move into this new housing.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities what sites will be developed for new housing in Rathcoole to rehouse tenants impacted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Tower Block Strategy.

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive have advised that there are currently 35 tenants in Abbotscoole House who will need to be rehoused if the proposal to demolish the block is approved by the Housing Executive's Board and the Department for Communities. As part of the work to prepare the business case for Abbotscoole House the Housing Executive will be consulting its tenants as to their rehousing preferences.

If they wish to remain in the Rathcoole area it is estimated that they could be rehoused within 2-3 years into relets in existing Housing Executive and Housing Association stock in the area. There will also be additional rehousing opportunities in an already programmed 2021/22 scheme by Connswater Housing Association to provide 25 units at Barna Square, and the nearby former Newtownabbey High School site with an estimated development potential of 80 social housing units.

The intention is that the combined Monkscoole/Abbotscoole cleared sites will be developed for around 50 new social housing units and it may be that some tenants will want to temporarily decant to relets and then move into this new housing.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities to outline the consultation undertaken with residents in Rathcoole impacted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Tower Block Strategy.
(AQW 3370/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The consultation exercise undertaken by the Housing Executive in Rathcoole was as follows:

- In June 2018 a letter was issued to each resident and owner in the four blocks advising that the Housing Executive would be consulting with them about the future of the tower blocks.
- In September 2018 a further letter was issued to residents advising them that Housing Executive staff would begin door-to-door consultation to take account of their views on the proposed plan. This letter was accompanied by a block-specific leaflet which set out the proposal for their block and provided advice on issues such as rehousing and compensation.
- The Draft Plan consulted on at that stage proposed the demolition of Monkscoole & Abbotscoole House in the 'Short' term (1-5 years), demolition of Carncoole House in the 'Medium' term (6-10 years) and the retention of Glencooles House for the 'Long' term (+10 years).
- The consultation was carried out over two months and an average 80% contact rate was achieved across the Rathcoole blocks (compared to 82% across the entire Tower Block portfolio).
- Analysis of the consultation results showed that 34% of tenants and 26% of leaseholders in the Rathcoole blocks were supportive of the long term aspiration to remove the tower blocks from the Housing Executive's stock.
- There was strong opposition to the proposals at that time from residents in Abbotscoole House and Carncoole House; responses from these blocks showed that approximately 70% of residents were not in favour of the proposals.
- Residents in the blocks were advised of the results of the consultation exercise in March 2019.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities whether compensation will be paid to homeowners in Rathcoole impacted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Tower Block Strategy.
(AQW 3372/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive have confirmed that all flat owners affected by this strategy will be offered the market value of their properties which was determined through negotiations between the owners and/or their agents and Land & Property Services (who have acted on the Housing Executive's behalf). Owners may also be entitled to Home Loss and Disturbance Payments subject to them meeting eligibility criteria.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Communities how much funding from the Arts Council instrument grants have been awarded to marching bands in South Antrim since this scheme began.
(AQW 3383/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Since the scheme began in 2006/07 a total of £61,937 has been awarded to marching bands in South Antrim.

This is broken down as follows:

Year	Amount £
2006/07	0
2007/08	8,963
2008/09	3,750
2009/10	4,680

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AQW 1679/17-22, to provide the same information for local office locations and direct labour depots.

(AQW 3390/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I would draw your attention to the answer which I supplied on the 26 February 2020 in relation to AQW 1238/17-22 which included the relevant Housing Executive figures that you have requested. I have provided a copy of these figures below.

The Housing Executive has provided the following tables detailing the breakdown of its staff by community background and office location.

Given the protocol that such information should not be disaggregated in circumstances where there are less than 10 in any particular group, to ensure that the identities of any individual cannot be inferred from the data provided, information has been provided as a total based on each office location.

Similarly, in circumstances where identity may be inferred from the office location total, this information has not been provided.

* Figures as at January 2020:-

- includes staff on external secondment and those on career break;
- excludes agency workers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AQW 2052/17-22, to list the information requested on the basis that she is not being asked to publish information generally, but to provide information in respect of an Assembly Question in accordance with Standing Orders.

(AQW 3391/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As I have previously advised, this information is already held in the public domain as a result of the court case.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities how many people on Universal Credit have received sanctions due to their inability to use online services or lack of access to online services; and whether she will consider updating the system to contact people before sanctions are imposed to check the person is able to use and access online services.

(AQW 3423/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Information on the number of sanctions imposed for Universal Credit, together with the reasons for imposing the sanction is available in reports on my Department's website at the following link: -

<https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/publications/welfare-supplementary-payments-discretionary-support-standards-advice-assistance-and-sanctions>.

When someone claiming UC has been unable to fulfil a particular conditionality commitment a number of attempts will be made to contact them, including by telephone, to establish why they were unable to do so. Consideration will also be given as to whether the person is vulnerable or has complex needs. If the case is then referred for a sanction and prior to the decision being made, the Decision Maker will also attempt to phone the person to again confirm whether there is any vulnerability or reason why they were unable to engage with us at that time.

Whilst conditionality is a key part of the existing rules, I want to further explore how we can use that to incentivise rather than punish people, and to make sure we have the necessary safeguards in place to protect the most vulnerable and particularly those with underlying health conditions.

I plan to make further announcements about this in the time ahead.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what steps her Department is taking to improve electrical safety in the private rented sector.

(AQW 3424/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department is currently carrying out a comprehensive review of the role and regulation of the private rented sector to ensure the regulatory framework and supporting policy improve standards for the benefit of both tenants and landlords.

I am currently considering 16 proposals for change. One of these is to make it a mandatory requirement for private landlords to carry out periodic electrical checks.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Communities how much her Department has spent on producing materials in Irish, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 3430/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The attached table sets out the estimated costs of producing materials in Irish since the Department for Communities was established in 2016.

Year	Cost £
2016-17	8,198
2017-18	10,395
2018-19	7,233
2019-20	16,274

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the Housing Executive pilot to build new homes in Rathcoole, for which it already has outline planning permission.

(AQW 3450/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Old Irish Highway site in Rathcoole is one of a number of small sites that the Housing Executive had been considering for its re-provision pilot scheme. However, the site that has been selected for the pilot scheme is at Ballysillan in Belfast. A business case seeking approval to implement the pilot scheme has been approved by the Board of the Housing Executive and has been referred to the Department for Communities for its consideration. If approval to proceed with the pilot scheme in Ballysillan is granted then the position of the Old Irish Highway site will be re-considered. If the Housing Executive is unable to proceed then the site will be considered for inclusion in the New Build Transfer Programme for development by a housing association.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities how many new homes will be built on the sites of the tower blocks earmarked for demolition in Rathcoole.

(AQW 3452/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The intention is that the combined Monkscoole and Abbotscoole cleared sites will be developed for around 50 new social housing units.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities when the last Housing Executive flat was sold under the buy to own scheme.

(AQW 3454/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The date of the last Housing Executive flat sold under the House Sales Scheme was 6th March 2020.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Communities (i) whether she will instruct her Department to carry out a special exercise into the application of Regulation 25 of The Universal Credit, Personal Independence Payment, Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance (Claims and Payments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 for Universal Credit claimants; (ii) what her Department is doing to prevent failures of the application of Regulation 25 for Universal Credit claimants; and (iii) whether her Department is considering compensation for those claimants disadvantaged by a lack of application of Regulation 25 by her Department.

(AQW 3486/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Regulation 25 of the Universal Credit, Personal Independence Payment, Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance (Claims and Payment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 allows the Department to backdate a claim for Universal Credit for up to a month in a limited number of circumstances. This is to protect the most vulnerable who may be delayed in claiming through no fault of their own.

Once an application is made and it is accepted that the provisions of this regulation apply, backdating is always granted. Accordingly, my Department is not aware of any cases where this regulation has not been properly applied.

The issue which prompted Advice NI to raise this concern, was not on the basis my Department was incorrectly applying the legislation, rather on an individual case when the person claiming did not initially apply to have their case backdated.

Once they did, the case was considered, backdating granted and any arrears due paid. If there are other similar cases, I will be happy to have them considered on a case by case basis. However, let me be clear my Department is fully aware of this provision, already applies it and will continue to do so as appropriate.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the impact of removing the free TV License for anyone over 75 years and not in receipt of pension credit.

(AQW 3512/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The financial impact of removing the free TV licence for anyone over 75 and not in receipt of pension credit is an annual cost of £154.50.

The BBC have announced that they have extended the free TV licence for over 75's until August 1st however as the COVID-19 crisis is fluid, they will continue to keep this under review.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AQW 1013/17-22 and AQW 2132/17-22, to outline the timescale to decide upon a preferred option for support for benefit claimants seeking to begin self-employment; and whether this option will apply to all means-tested benefit claimants, and not just claimants of Universal Credit.

(AQW 3517/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department is continuing to explore options in relation to providing support for people seeking to commence self-employment. All options will be assessed for affordability considering current budgetary constraints. This will ensure a fully informed decision can be reached within the next financial year. The eligibility and entitlement criteria for any proposed new scheme are yet to be determined.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities whether hand sanitiser will be made available to jobs and benefits offices for staff and service users.

(AQW 3522/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Whilst supplies of hand sanitisers were initially difficult to obtain due to contractors experiencing a higher than usual demand, I can advise that supplies of hand sanitisers have now been provided throughout the Department's office estate, including all of the Jobs and Benefits offices. The Department has also taken steps to suspend the need for customers to attend Jobs and Benefits offices and to reduce face to face contact across all related services. Advice and guidance from the Public Health Agency and the National Health Service continues to be followed and all staff have access to hand washing facilities throughout the office network.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Communities (i) what support is available; and (ii) what funding is currently provided for womens football participation in South Antrim.

(AQW 3526/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Increasing female participation in sport and physical activity is a target in the Sport Matters Strategy and a priority for my Department. As a result, my Department and Sport NI have provided both financial and practical support to grow female participation in sport, including football.

Sport NI's Every Body Active 2020 is a four year lottery funded programme delivered through local councils aimed at getting people, particularly women and girls, more active more often through sport and physical activity. Councils that cover South Antrim i.e. Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council and Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council have been awarded £47,030 and £108,238 respectively through Every Body Active.

There has been both financial and practical support to grow the female game. Since 2016, the Department and Sport NI have invested approximately £1.2 million to support the delivery of the Female Sports Forum's Women in Sport Strategy: 'Active, Fit & Sporty'. This investment included funding of just over £65,000 to build on the legacy of hosting the UEFA Women's Under 19 European Football Championship Finals in 2017 and offer opportunities for women and girls to get involved in football, both in terms of participation and club support.

The growth in women and girl's football has also benefited from £204,000 of funding to the IFA through the Department's Volunteering Innovation Fund since 2016.

In terms of practical support, Sport NI has facilitated a Pathway Health Check process for the IFA, in order to provide a baseline from which the IFA can develop the Women's performance system within the sport. This work will help the IFA deliver against its Girls and Women's Strategic Plan 2019-2024, Growing the Game – Maximising Impact.

With specific regard to South Antrim, I can advise that since 2017, Sport NI has provided Exchequer and Lottery funding of approximately £291,000 to a number of football clubs in the South Antrim area. This funding has helped to improve health and safety at facilities and increase access and participation opportunities for both male and female teams.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Communities what measures her Department is taking to raise awareness and accommodation of hidden disabilities.

Ms Hargey: I am committed to developing a Disability Strategy which addresses the barriers and inequalities faced by all disabled people, including those with hidden disabilities.

The new Strategy will be taken forward using a co-design approach, which will involve disabled people from the outset of the drafting process through to the monitoring mechanisms established to report on the Strategy's progress. I will ensure that meaningful engagement with stakeholders takes place at all stages of the Strategy's development. This co-design approach will involve those with hidden disabilities and their representative organisations. As the Strategy is developed, consideration will be given to actions that can be undertaken to raise awareness of disabilities, including those that are hidden.

I am committed to providing equality of opportunity for all and ensuring that everyone in society is able to have their voice heard, including those with hidden disabilities.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the number of (i) successful; and (ii) unsuccessful Personal Independence Payment appeals, broken down by those with and without tribunal representation, over the last three years. (AQW 3545/17-22)

Ms Hargey: During the last three years there have been 14,198 Personal Independence Payment appeals that have had a final decision, of which 8,347 were successful and 5,852 were unsuccessful.

The appellant was represented in 6,547 of the 8,347 successful appeals and the remaining 1,800 were unrepresented.

In relation to the 5,852 unsuccessful appeals, 3,607 appellants were represented while the remaining 2,245 were unrepresented.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities what consideration she has given to including Donegall Pass in public realm works, similar to the Three 'C's she announced on 10 March 2020. (AQW 3600/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Five Cs project is a public realm scheme aimed at enhancing several areas within Belfast city centre which will complement previous environmental improvements. There are currently no plans for public realm works in Donegall Pass.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities, in light of her announcement of £2 million funding to assist a Public Realm Scheme in Belfast City Centre, whether her Department will be similarly assisting further Public Realm schemes in Londonderry. (AQW 3610/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department has developed designs for the £4.7 million Inner Walled City Public Realm project in Derry. The scheme will improve the streetscape within the historic City Walls. Planning permission is already in place and the detailed design works are expected to be completed shortly. As with all schemes, a decision on the allocation of funding to the construction phase will need to be considered in the context of my Department's wider budgetary position.

In addition, my Department has invested over £900,000 in a range of regeneration projects in Derry in the current financial year.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of prisoners receiving benefits in spite of being in custody for longer than 28 days. (AQW 3639/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you will be aware the policy for social security benefits falls within the remit of the Department for Communities and so your questions to the Minister for Justice have been transferred to my Department. As they relate to the same topic they have been combined and I trust the following answer addresses each of them.

People who had been receiving social security benefits immediately prior to being imprisoned or lawfully detained will not generally remain eligible to receive them while they remain in prison. This is because they will either be disqualified from receiving benefit, they will no longer be entitled to the benefit or they will have an applicable amount of nil for the duration of their imprisonment. This applies to the majority of benefits and is in order to avoid duplication of payment when prisoners have their costs met by the appropriate custodial body.

However under certain circumstances, an exception applies to the housing costs elements of some social security benefits. This is whereby single claimants whose benefit included an element for housing costs may continue to receive payments towards those costs if their term of custody is not expected to exceed 6 months or they are in prison on remand.

There is also an exception in the case of Personal Independence Payment (PIP), under certain circumstances. Article 92 of the Welfare Reform (NI) Order 2015, and regulation 31 of the Personal Independence Payment Regulations (NI) 2016 relates to the payability of PIP for prisoners.

The Order provides that PIP is not payable for a period during which a person is imprisoned or detained in legal custody. However if a person was entitled to PIP immediately before their imprisonment began then it will remain in payment for the first 28 days of that person's imprisonment. Maintaining payment of the benefit for 28 days in these circumstances allows for a continued but limited contribution towards any outstanding disability-related expenditure.

In these circumstances the payment of PIP ceases once someone has been detained in legal custody for 28 days irrespective of the outcome of the proceedings against them. This is in order to avoid duplication of payment when prisoners have their disability-related costs met by the appropriate custodial body and/or health authority.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities whether offenders currently in custody or imprisoned remain entitled to receive benefits. (AQW 3640/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you will be aware the policy for social security benefits falls within the remit of the Department for Communities and so your questions to the Minister for Justice have been transferred to my Department. As they relate to the same topic they have been combined and I trust the following answer addresses each of them.

People who had been receiving social security benefits immediately prior to being imprisoned or lawfully detained will not generally remain eligible to receive them while they remain in prison. Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities to outline whether those detained in prison remain eligible to receive benefits. (AQW 3642/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you will be aware the policy for social security benefits falls within the remit of the Department for Communities and so your questions to the Minister for Justice have been transferred to my Department. Mr McCann asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has for additional powers and services going to local government. (AQW 3651/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department has close working relations with local government officials and we deliver a range of services in collaboration with local government.

I am currently exploring the potential of transferring the landlord registration function to councils.

As regards Urban Regeneration and Community Development my predecessor, the then Minister for Communities, Paul Givan MLA, made an Oral Statement to the Assembly on 22 November 2016 announcing that he did not intend to pursue the transfer of these statutory powers to district councils.

This is something the Department is considering and will be engaging with stakeholders about in due course.

Mr McCann asked the Minister for Communities to outline whether proposals on the regeneration of town and city centres will include social and affordable housing as part of any proposed housing developments.

(AQW 3652/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department's regeneration teams are actively pursuing a number of schemes which feature an element of social and/or affordable housing. Following a joint DfC and Belfast City Council Strategic Sites Assessment of Belfast City Centre, officials in partnership with Council are currently exploring the potential for a housing-led mixed use regeneration scheme in an area designated as the Inner North West Cluster (Kent Street, Library Street and Little Donegall Street); such a scheme could provide a mix of private, social and affordable housing. The regeneration teams are also actively seeking to maximise opportunities for housing-led regeneration through comprehensive development agreements to address social and affordable housing needs such as the construction of 140 social housing units at the former military site at St Patrick's Barracks in Ballymena, and at Queen's Parade in Bangor which itself is anticipated to deliver 125 units of social or affordable housing.

While the public realm schemes delivered in town and city centres by my Department and councils do not directly include social and affordable housing, the stimulus created by enhanced public realm does have a positive regeneration impact on cities and towns which may lead to improved economic and social conditions that may stimulate both demand and need for social and affordable housing.

In determining and addressing social housing need in a town or city, the Housing Executive works closely with local councils to assist them to develop a housing policy for their Area Plans that includes social and affordable housing.

My Department is also engaged in an exercise to identify public land and release it for housing where appropriate through the Public Land for Housing Project.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the amount spent by each local council paying energy bills in each of the last five years.

(AQW 3671/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department is unable to provide details of the amounts spent by local councils on energy bills as this information is not separately disclosed in their annual accounts. The information is not submitted to my Department in any financial return.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities to outline the legislation that would allow some prisoners to continue to receive Personal Independence Payment.

(AQW 3711/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you will be aware the policy for social security benefits falls within the remit of the Department for Communities and so your questions to the Minister for Justice have been transferred to my Department. As they relate to the same topic they have been combined and I trust the following answer addresses each of them.

The Order provides that PIP is not payable for a period during which a person is imprisoned or detained in legal custody. However if a person was entitled to PIP immediately before their imprisonment began then it will remain in payment for the first 28 days of that person's imprisonment. Maintaining payment of the benefit for 28 days in these circumstances allows for a continued but limited contribution towards any outstanding disability-related expenditure.

In these circumstances the payment of PIP ceases once someone has been detained in legal custody for 28 days irrespective of the outcome of the proceedings against them. This is in order to avoid duplication of payment when prisoners have their disability-related costs met by the appropriate custodial body and/or health authority.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities what financial assistance is available for people who are on zero hours contracts, or are self-employed, who find themselves out of work due to the impact of COVID 19, but are not ill themselves; and whether he is considering the creation of a hardship fund to help people most at risk from falling through the welfare support system.

Ms Hargey: People who find themselves with reduced or no income because of the impact of COVID 19 can apply for Universal Credit and New Style Jobs Seeker's Allowance. Everyone who makes a claim for Universal Credit can apply for an advance payment if they require financial assistance until their first payment is received. Applications for Universal Credit, including where an advanced payment is needed to meet immediate financial need, can be made online. A grant is also available through the Universal Credit Contingency Fund.

In addition, people are able to apply for financial assistance through the Department's unique Discretionary Support Scheme, which provides immediate help for those in crisis or facing financial hardship. To apply, people can call Freephone: 0800 587 2740 or Textphone: 0800 587 2751. Further information is also available at www.nidirect.gov.uk/articles/extra-financial-support.

Self-employed people may also claim a grant through the coronavirus (COVID-19) Self-Employment Income Support Scheme. Further detail is available at: www.gov.uk/guidance/claim-a-grant-through-the-coronavirus-covid-19-self-employment-income-support-scheme

The Department's website also provides helpful information on new measures in response to COVID 19 and will be regularly updated to ensure people know what help is available. www.communities-ni.gov.uk/covid-19-service-updates

I am committed to protecting the most vulnerable, and will keep the support available under review - in particular at this challenging time.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities how much funding her Department has allocated to (i) the Ulster-Scots Agency; and (ii) Foras Na Gaeilge, in each year since 1998.

(AQW 3746/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge make up the North South Language Body (NSLB). The Department for Communities (DfC), together with the Department for Culture, Heritage and the Gaeltacht (DCHG) jointly funds the NSLB.

The Member's request for information spanning 22 years cannot be fully met. Guidance contained in the "Department for Communities Disposal of Records Schedule" (Dec 2016), which is published on the Department's public website, states that Accounting and Funding information should be destroyed after 7 years.

The Department for Communities jointly funds Foras na Gaeilge with the Department of Culture, Heritage and the Gaeltacht on a 25:75 basis for operational costs [including pension costs] and on a 50:50 basis for Colmcille<sup>3</sup> and has provided funding to Foras na Gaeilge in the last seven calendar years (£stg) as follows:

Calendar Year	Foras na Gaeilge
	DfC Contribution (£stg)	DCHG Contribution (€Euro)
2013	£3,617,077	€ 13,690,340
2014	£3,156,575*	€12,711,090
2015	£2,840,621	€12,614,150
2016	£3,140,966*	€12,527,548
2017	£3,285,812	€12,705,982
2018	£3,318,664	€12,619,990
2019	£3,309,404	€12,162,923

* In addition the Department for Communities provided funding to Foras na Gaeilge of £53,692 in 2014 and £16,000 in 2016 for specific projects.

The Department for Communities jointly funds the Ulster Scots Agency with the Department of Culture, Heritage and the Gaeltacht on a 75:25 basis for operational costs [including pension costs] and has provided funding to the Ulster Scots Agency in the last seven calendar years (£stg) as follows:

Calendar Year	Ulster-Scots Agency
	DfC Contribution (£stg)	DCHG Contribution (€Euro)
2013	£1,914,316	€752,627
2014	£1,887,435	€758,282
2015	£1,836,836*	€853,719

<sup>3</sup> Colmcille is a jointly funded partnership programme between Foras na Gaeilge and Bòrd na Gàidhlig, promoting the use of Irish Gaelic and Scottish Gaelic in Ireland, Scotland and internationally.

Calendar Year	Ulster-Scots Agency
	DfC Contribution (£stg)	DCHG Contribution (€Euro)
2016	£1,743,012*	€721,862
2017	£1,806,463	€801,489
2018	£1,885,785*	€705,114
2019	£1,891,112*	€669,719

* In addition the Department for Communities provided funding to the Ulster Scots Agency of £60,000 in 2015, £75,839 in 2016, £56,000 in 2018 and £253,698 in 2019 for specific projects.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister for Communities how many people were employed in her Department on the Liofa initiative; and what were their roles.

(AQW 3876/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Two officials, the Liofa Officer and the Liofa Support Officer were employed by my Department on the Liofa initiative. Their roles involve management and administration of the Liofa initiative in both Irish and English alongside wider administrative responsibilities within the Languages team commensurate with their grades.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the Social Supermarket Pilot Programme.

(AQO 420/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Social Supermarket Pilot Programme has been running since October 2017 with five sites in operation. By the end of September 2019 almost nine hundred people received support through the programme and in excess of seventy eight tonnes of food had been redistributed.

Evaluation to date has indicated that it is achieving significant outcomes for users, with positive impacts on wellbeing, self-efficacy, healthy eating, food stability and, in some cases, employability.

Minister Hargey extended the pilot phase whilst a business case is undertaken to assess the case for rolling out a full programme.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for Communities what services does the Bereavement Service single point of contact provide for people reporting a death.

(AQW 3987/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Bereavement Service is a free telephony based service which provides a joined up approach across social security benefits for people reporting a death. The service allows people to:

- report a death – the date of death will be recorded and each office that paid benefit to the deceased will be notified automatically
- check for help with Funeral Costs – if eligible then a claim for Funeral Expenses Payment can be taken during the call;
- check for help from a Bereavement Support Payment – if eligible a claim for Bereavement Support Payment can be taken during the call;
- receive advice on potential benefits or other support that may be available.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for Communities what services provided by the Tell Us Once programme in Great Britain are not provided by the Bereavement Service contact number; and what plans there are to extend those services in line with the rest of the UK.

(AQW 3988/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Tell Us Once Service, offered by local authorities in Britain, captures information on a deceased person and conveys it to a number of public sector service providers. The service is voluntary and where it is not used individuals have to report the death to each service provider separately.

The Department's Bereavement Service here;

- shares details of the deceased with benefit branches -the date of death is recorded and each office that paid benefit to the deceased is notified automatically
- checks for help with Funeral Costs – if eligible then a claim for Funeral Expenses Payment can be taken during the call;
- checks for help for a Bereavement Support Payment – if eligible a claim for Bereavement Support Payment can be taken during the call;
- provides advice on potential benefits or other support that may be available.

The General Register Office also shares details of all deaths with a wide range of other public sector service providers.

The development of a Tell Us Once service is being considered as part of the work programme of the Digital Transformation Service within the Department of Finance.

Department of Education

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Education whether a classroom assistant designated to a pupil with special educational needs should be continuing to provide support to that pupil during homeschooling due to COVID-19.

(AQW 4271/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): Classroom Assistants continue to play an active role to support children with a statement of special educational needs during remote learning in the home, across all age groups.

Examples of work undertaken by classroom assistants to support remote learning include:

- reading stories to pupils;
- using online platforms e.g. Seesaw to give pupils weekly challenges;
- Using online platforms to support pupil wellbeing;
- weekly/daily check in arrangements through emails,
- telephone calls or video calls;
- posting activities to children to complete or by way of encouragement;
- assisting pupils with the completion of projects.
- Collation of resources and sharing via email, post and some door visits;
- Food delivery; and
- Direct support in EOTAS centres.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 4246/17-22, whether legislative measures will be amended in light of the COVID-19 pandemic and the requirement for parents to send children to school.

(AQW 4331/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department is currently planning for the formal re-opening of schools following the COVID 19 pandemic.

As guidance is prepared, consideration will be given to whether there is legislative impact or the need to amend existing legislation.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, once schools reopen following the COVID 19 pandemic, to detail the (i) plans; and (ii) funding available to primary and post-primary schools for (a) personal protection equipment; (b) additional cleaning staff; (c) social distancing signage; and (d) additional amounts of cleaning materials.

(AQW 4332/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department is currently developing plans relating to the formal re-opening of schools. This planning will involve consideration of issues including physical protection, practical arrangements for the school day and funding, as well as other issues.

In addition to this, my Department has published guidance to support safe working in educational settings in Northern Ireland. The guidance can be accessed at <https://www.education-ni.gov.uk/news/guidance-support-safe-working-educational-settings-published>

The guidance, written by the Public Health Agency, includes advice on effective infection prevention and control including cleaning and hygiene to facilitate safe working during the coronavirus (COVID-19) outbreak. The guidance also covers the specific circumstances in which personal protective equipment (PPE) should be used and will kept under review plans develop.

My Department recognises the financial impact the current COVID-19 pandemic is having on society as a whole, including the education sector, and will continue, in conjunction with the Education Authority, to assess the financial impact of COVID-19 responses on grant aided schools. Once the detailed plans are established for the re-opening of schools, the resulting funding requirements will be further assessed.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, once schools reopen following the COVID 19 pandemic, to outline his Departments plans for class sizes; and whether his Department will acquire additional buildings to ensure social distancing is adhered to.

(AQW 4333/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department is currently planning for the formal re-opening of schools following the COVID 19 pandemic.

Guidance is being prepared for schools and settings on practical issues such as physical distancing and physical protection. This guidance is being prepared through co-design with practitioners and will be supported through engagement with Public Health Agency.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, once schools reopen following the COVID-19 pandemic, whether schools will be instructed to monitor the temperature of pupils during school hours.

(AQW 4334/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department is currently planning for the formal re-opening of schools following the COVID 19 pandemic.

Guidance is being prepared for schools and settings on practical issues such as physical distancing and physical protection. This guidance is being prepared through co-design with practitioners and will be supported through engagement with Public Health Agency.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education whether (i) all post primary schools can avail of the additional funding, offered in a letter dated 7 May 2020 from the Department of Education to Voluntary Grammars Schools, to assist in the teachers pay award; (ii) all schools were required to accrue a 1% saving to assist with the teachers pay award; and (iii) those schools that accrued the 1% saving will now be compensated by his Department as proposed for those Voluntary Grammar schools that did not accrue the saving.

Mr Weir:

- (i) There are differences between the financing arrangements for Voluntary Grammar (VG) and Grant Maintained Integrated (GMI) schools as compared to those for Controlled and Maintained schools.

VG and GMI schools are separately identifiable entities in their own right, with the majority operating as companies limited by guarantee and/or charities. Each VG and GMI school must manage their own financial positions and prepare their own individual sets of annual accounts, which are externally audited. VG and GMI schools must also manage their cash flows to mitigate or minimise the need to negotiate overdrafts or loan arrangements with commercial banks, which can incur significant interest charges.

In contrast, Controlled and Maintained schools' cash payments are managed by the Education Authority (EA), with any overspends being reflected as deficits.

As a result of these differing arrangements, it is therefore acknowledged that VG and GMI schools could potentially face cash flow difficulties when paying the teachers' pay award arrears. In recognition of this, the Department advised VG and GMI schools in this position, to contact the EA for emergency cash grants. Such grants would be used to address cash flow difficulties that are unique to VG and GMI schools.

- (ii) In line with Public Sector Pay policy, the EA, as funding authority for all grant-aided schools, has consistently advised schools to accrue on the basis of a potential 1% teachers' pay award in previous years.
- (iii) Any school which faces financial difficulty should contact the EA, as funding authority for all grant aided schools.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education whether he will extend Youth Service funding over the summer months for community and voluntary organisations to (i) deliver support for young people coming out of lockdown; and (ii) help address emerging issues.

(AQW 4527/17-22)

Mr Weir: I wrote to the Education Sector on 19 March 2020 setting out arrangements for youth services to continue to provide support to vulnerable young people and existing statutory and community partnerships. At that time I agreed to continue to meet the on-going costs, including salaries, of voluntary youth service organisations. This funding will continue over the summer period.

Many voluntary Youth Service providers have developed innovative ways to continue to deliver youth services via online and social media platforms and such work will also continue over the summer period.

Planning for an Education restart, including youth services, is in progress and includes consideration of what may be possible over the summer period, taking account of limitations in terms of numbers and the need to be compliant with public health guidance. I intend taking a paper to the Executive on the role which the education sector could provide over the summer months, which will include youth services.

Work is also in progress to identify any emerging issues for young people to enable youth services and other education services to deliver appropriate support and address such needs.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has conducted a scoping study to ensure that all schools are fit for purpose when returning from the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4560/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department has established a Restart Programme to consider a range of issues relating to the safe and effective re-opening of schools. As part of this, guidance is being prepared, through co-design with practitioners, on practical issues linked to a "new school day". This will cover issues such as hygiene and cleaning practices, classroom infrastructure and use of personal protective equipment.

Individual schools will be best placed to consider and apply this guidance in the context of their own setting, taking into account their own premises. The Education Authority will work with schools to address any individual discrepancies or concerns identified by school leaders.

Ms Rogan asked the Minister of Education (i) what personnel will be required to wear personal protective equipment in schools; (ii) what specific equipment they are advised to wear; (iii) what the current procurement advice is for schools in relation to obtaining personal protective equipment; and (iv) what additional funding will be made available to assist schools with the cost of obtaining this personal protective equipment.

Mr Weir: My Department has established a Restart Programme to consider a range of issues relating to the safe and effective re-opening of schools. As part of this, guidance is being prepared, through co-design with practitioners, on practical issues linked to a “new school day”. This will cover issues such as use of personal protective equipment (PPE).

Departmental guidance will follow Public Health Agency (PHA) advice. PHA has already published guidance to support safe working in educational settings in Northern Ireland. This advises that routine use of PPE within education settings is not required other than for certain tasks deemed to be of higher risk of transmission. PPE is only needed in a very small number of cases. These are:

- Working with children, young people and pupils whose care routinely already involves the use of PPE, due to their intimate care needs; and
- Giving children medication.

The PPE required may include fluid-resistant surgical face masks; disposable gloves; disposable plastic aprons; and eye protection (for example a face visor or goggles). PHA guidance advises that children should not wear PPE.

Whilst the Department cannot at this stage quantify the resource or capital requirement in respect of PPE, the potential need for funding for PPE costs has been highlighted to the Department of Finance (DoF) as part of the COVID-19 Re-prioritisation exercise. The Education Authority is leading on procurement of suitable quantities of PPE for educational settings and advice will be provided shortly.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to provide details of schools in North Down that currently have year 8 spaces left.
(AQW 4595/17-22)

Mr Weir: There are no available places remaining at North Down schools for Year 8 pupils in September 2020.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education to outline (i) what action his Department has taken to ensure health and safety measures are implemented in schools on their return after COVID-19; and (ii) when schools should expect to receive details of this guidance.

(AQW 4604/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department has established a Restart Programme to consider a range of issues relating to the safe and effective re-opening of schools. As part of this, strategic guidance is being prepared, through co-design with practitioners, on practical issues linked to a “new school day”. This guidance will focus extensively on social distancing and hygiene measures, informed by Public Health Agency advice and will have a “day-one” focus. The guidelines will be supplemented by a suite of further documentation and operational guidance.

I intend to write shortly to all school principals to provide advice on the timing of release of the guidance, after which it will be communicated more widely and published on the DE website.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education to provide a breakdown of how the £10 million allocated to Special Educational Needs has been spent to date.

(AQW 4606/17-22)

Mr Weir: The £10 million funding allocated to the Education Authority, as part of 2019-20 January Monitoring, was to address in-year pressures within the provision of Special Educational Needs (SEN). As outlined previously in AQW 1106/17-22, this allocation was broken down as follows: Special Schools (£1.4m), SEN in mainstream Schools (£3.2m), Pupil Support (£1.5m) and SEN related transport (£3.9m).

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education to confirm (i) when wraparound childcare will be allowed to be provided by schools; and (ii) when he will inform parents this childcare provision will be available.

(AQW 4637/17-22)

Mr Weir: It is acknowledged that childcare is crucial as parents return to work. From Monday 8 June, childcare provision has been extended to those key workers who can currently access school places and also those parents who are returning to work in the wider retail sector in line with Executive decisions on reopening the economy. From 16 June, this also includes workers in the construction and manufacturing sectors.

In line with announcements made by the Executive on 18 June, as part of the Childcare Sector Recovery Plan, with effect from 29 June, there will no longer be a key worker definition for the purposes of childcare. This will allow parents who are returning to work in line with the Executive plans, to access childcare if they require it..

The Early Years teams working in the Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts are working as collaboratively and as quickly as possible with childcare providers to re-open their provision, this includes those providers offering wraparound services for school age children from August.

Schools can be asked to facilitate childcare provision offered within schools where it is possible, however such decisions relating to the use of school premises are for the Board of Governors of each individual school. Arrangements should be made and agreed locally. Schools should have a written agreement in place with childcare providers for such arrangements and subject to any necessary Covid-19 health and safety requirements and specific Department of Health guidelines and approvals for provision of childcare .

DE and DoH have also established a COVID-19 Childcare Reference Group with key representatives from the childcare sector. A Childcare Communications sub group has also been established with the intention of promoting effective communication with parents and the childcare sector.

All the relevant information in relation to Covid-19 and childcare, is available at the link below:

<https://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/Support/91/covid19-childcare-options-and-associated-guidance>.

I have asked my officials to develop proposals for potential summer scheme provision in schools for some school year groups during July on a voluntary basis. The proposals may include schools being open for all children going into years 5, 6, and 7 for a 2 week period in July. There may also be scope for virtual learning support for pupils going into Year 7. Any access within schools to School Age Childcare would have to comply with medical and scientific advice and health and safety requirements in relation to COVID-19, and would be subject to agreement by the Executive, schools and Trade Unions. Any decision on this would be communicated at the earliest possible opportunity. A survey issued to schools on 17 June which is being analysed, the findings of which will help to establish levels of interest amongst schools in providing summer schemes on an entirely voluntary basis.

Schools participating in the 2020/21 Extended Schools (ES) programme can choose to offer various forms of wraparound support with the resources made available (£9.1m) including pastoral care, or additional learning and development activities before or after the standard school day. Whilst some elements of ES provision have still been possible during the Covid-19 pandemic, most has not taken place as it usually would.

I have ensured that all extended schools will receive funding in 2020/21 at the same rate as last year to ensure that disadvantaged children and young people and their families continue to be supported at this critical time. Schools have been asked to consider what provision may be appropriate this year to best target those pupils most in need or at the greatest risk of underachievement. The particular support measures put in place will be determined by schools and clusters taking account of the evolving context and latest health guidelines.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education (i) how many; and (ii) what percentage of pupils accessed on-road cycle training, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4648/17-22)

Mr Weir: The provision of cycle training is coordinated by the Department for Infrastructure, therefore my Department does not hold the necessary information to answer this question.

I note that you have asked a similar question of the Minister for Infrastructure under AQW 4747/17-22. Her Department should hold this information and will therefore be in a position to provide a detailed response.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education to outline the timescale for the full implementation of the Addressing Bullying in Schools Act 2016.

(AQW 4657/17-22)

Mr Weir: Following concerns raised by the teaching unions, the Department agreed to a temporary pause in the planned implementation of the Addressing Bullying in Schools Act (NI) 2016 ('the Act') to facilitate further meaningful dialogue.

While I am unable to confirm an exact date for implementation of the Act, I am considering this in the context of the impact of the Covid-19 pandemic and the Education Restart Programme on schools and their pupils.

I will make an announcement in due course.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail what elements of Northern Ireland's history with racism and slavery are covered in the curriculum.

(AQW 4683/17-22)

Mr Weir: 'Northern Ireland's history with racism and slavery' is not a specific element within the curriculum. However, there are many opportunities within the curriculum to address the issues of racism, social injustice and intolerance whilst promoting both an understanding and appreciation of equality, diversity and inclusion.

In History, at Key Stage 3 young people explore how the past can affect their personal identity, culture and lifestyle and how their understanding of religion and identity can be shaped by historical events such as colonisation. Young people are also encouraged to investigate how history can be selectively interpreted to create stereotypical perceptions and justify the views and actions of others in relation to, for example, slavery. Additionally, there is scope to examine individuals who are considered to have taken a significant moral stand and explore their motivation and legacy. This includes but is not exclusive to Gandhi, Nelson Mandela, Martin Luther King Jr, Rosa Parks and Oscar Schindler.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether his Department currently funds any programmes exploring the impact of racism in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 4684/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department of Education does not currently fund any programmes exploring the impact of racism in Northern Ireland.

The Department funds the Northern Ireland Anti-Bullying Forum to develop appropriate strategies to prevent and deal with all bullying behaviours. When schools identify a particular bullying issue, such as racist bullying, the anti-bullying co-ordinator will signpost them to the most appropriate area to receive expert advice.

The 2018 Young Life & Times and Kids Life & Times surveys included a module, funded by the Department, comparing attitudes towards those from different section 75 groups, including ethnicity, between those who had experience of Shared Education and those who had not. These surveys are conducted by Access Research Knowledge, a joint initiative of Queen's and Ulster Universities.

Topics such as disability, racism, sectarianism, homophobia, transphobia and religion are addressed through the concepts of equality, diversity and inclusion which are central to the Northern Ireland Curriculum.

The Department's Community Relations, Equality and Diversity policy encourages formal and non-formal education providers to provide opportunities for young people to build relationships with those of different backgrounds.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Education what short-term measures are being implemented to enable school children and students working from home in rural not-spot areas to have access to adequate broadband.

(AQW 4706/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department is conscious that internet access remains an issue for a number of children and young people particularly those in a rural setting. In line with my strategy to provide digital devices to vulnerable and disadvantaged young people, my officials are working with the Education Authority to progress a business case to provide those young people with internet connectivity using the NI Public Sector Shared Network Contract.

Two options exist; access can be provided via a British Telecom 'Hotspot' using a voucher, or alternatively, young people working from home in rural areas will receive a MiFi device with a built in data allowance.

Further options are also being explored that may include the use of libraries and the wider education estate.

On-line learning is one aspect of remote learning. Where children and young people do not have access to either digital devices or broadband, their schools will be using other approaches to ensure continuity of learning. Such approaches include for example learning packs of resources which can be collected and returned to the school.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Education, in relation to pupils having to travel to attend a school with an ASD unit, how he will address the lack of ASD unit provision in West Belfast.

(AQW 4716/17-22)

Mr Weir: I recognise that there is a deficit of specialist mainstream provisions in a number of areas across the region. The deficits in these areas are being addressed in a prioritised way through the Education Authority (EA) Area Planning structures and work to date has been focused in the wider Ballymena and Belfast areas.

There is currently no approved primary or post primary Autism provision within the West Belfast area, however, funding for teaching and non-teaching staff to support a small group of pupils diagnosed with Autism was agreed with The Good Shepherd PS, Holy Evangelist PS, Scoil an Faiseoige and Coláiste Feirste as a response to the immediate and pressing need within the West Belfast area. This funding will continue in the 2020/2021 academic year.

One of the key issues emerging from analysis of current local provision, as identified in the 'Providing Pathways— Strategic Area Plan for Schools 2017-2020' document, was the need to develop proposals to establish additional learning support and autism specific provision within primary and post-primary schools. The EA recognises that there is a deficit of specialist mainstream provisions within the Belfast area, including West Belfast.

The EA intends to consult on the formalisation of this provision and this is demonstrated in the published Area Planning Action Plan. The Action Plan also includes a specific action to consult on options for the establishment of Autism Spectrum Disorder Centres for Children at Key Stage 1 and General Learning Support Centres for children at Key Stage 2 for The Good Shepherd Primary School.

As a result of the current COVID-19 emergency situation, the Department of Education has suspended all Area Planning activity.

The EA continues to review the availability of specialist provision in the West Belfast area on an on-going basis and will link directly with schools to explore solutions to meet the current demand for specialist provision.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether (i) he has instructed the Education Authority to scope necessary maintenance works of schools before they reopen; and (ii) he has provided an emergency budget for such works.
(AQW 4847/17-22)

Mr Weir: Guidance for schools is currently being drafted to assist them in planning for the process of restarting education. The means by which schools can access support and the funding arrangements will be communicated in due course when the guidance has been finalised.

It is not envisaged that any significant works will be required to facilitate the return to school over and above normal maintenance or statutory planned and preventative maintenance. It is anticipated that any works required will be accommodated within the existing budgets available.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has spent on producing material in Irish, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 4907/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department's expenditure on producing material in Irish, in each of the last three complete financial years, was as follows:

	Total £
2017/18	524.44
2018/19	36.35
2019/20	482.56

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister of Education when his Department will consider the amalgamation of Dunluce School, North Coast Integrated College and Coleraine College, as outlined in the action plan.
(AQW 4972/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Managing Authorities of the three affected schools were to have developed options for future provision by March 2020. The area planning process and associated publication of Development Proposals requires significant engagement with key stakeholders and sufficient time to allow for full and meaningful consultation. In the current climate the focus of all stakeholders, including managing authorities, bodies representing sectoral interests, schools and parents, is management of the COVID-19 response. Area Planning activity prior to the publication of a Development Proposal is currently suspended and I have no current time-table for resumption as the re-opening of schools will remain the priority.

Department of Finance

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance (i) what progress has been made on setting up the RHI sub-committee; and (ii) which Ministers will sit on it.
(AQW 4472/17-22)

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): At its meeting on 10th March, the Executive agreed the establishment of the RHI sub-committee and its terms of reference. The subcommittee will be chaired by the Minister of Finance and will include the Ministers in those Departments which have been core participants in the Inquiry and representation from each party on the Executive. The Junior Ministers will represent the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance (i) whether they will publish the terms of reference for the RHI sub-committee; and (ii) to detail who was involved in drawing up and approving the same.
(AQW 4473/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The terms of reference for the RHI sub-committee were prepared by the Department of Finance and agreed by the Executive. They will be published following the first meeting of the sub-committee.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance (i) whether they will publish the findings of the RHI sub-committee; and (ii) to outline an anticipated timescale.
(AQW 4474/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The sub-committee has not met and has not yet considered publication of its findings. I have previously outlined that the sub-committee will publish an action plan for implementation of recommendations flowing out of the RHI Inquiry report and I committed to keeping the Assembly updated regularly.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance to outline how recommendation 30 of the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry Report has been implemented; and to what extent.

Mr Murphy: The Executive agreed to establish a Subcommittee on Reform following the RHI Inquiry, as set out in the New Decade, New Approach Agreement. The establishment of the Subcommittee has been delayed as a result of COVID-19. The Department of Finance is preparing a paper to the Subcommittee, setting out proposed responses to the recommendations, including relevant work already completed, for consideration at its first meeting.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Finance which business types within the retail, leisure and hospitality sectors are eligible for the full one year rate relief holiday, as referenced in his statement on 19 May 2020.
(AQW 4541/17-22)

Mr Murphy: In my statement of 19 May, I announced that a targeted rate relief scheme will be introduced from 1 August to provide further support to those sectors identified as having the greatest need: specifically, all retail, hospitality, leisure, tourism and childcare sectors, and the 3 main airports. The precise details, including a number of exceptions, will be included in Regulations, shortly to be laid before the Assembly.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Finance what action he can take to ensure that Aramark staff will be able to get overpayment for the extra work they have carried out as a result of COVID-19.
(AQW 4544/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Construction and Procurement Delivery (CPD) awarded a collaborative cleaning contract to Aramark for 420 sites on behalf of the Civil Service Departments and a number of Arms Length Bodies in January 2020.

Although each Department is responsible for managing the performance of the contract and agreeing any contract variations for their individual locations, CPD will investigate any allegations about Contractor staff not being paid for the hours they have worked.

If you have any specific details about this matter, please forward these to Lila Clarke (lila.clarke@finance-ni.gov.uk).

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Finance what budgetary provision he has made to ensure commitments, requiring monetary support, made within New Decade New Approach are being honoured.
(AQW 4548/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The New Decade, New Approach (NDNA) Document was produced by the British and Irish Governments. It outlines a number of priorities to be considered by the Executive, and is accompanied by a financial package which includes £1 billion of new funding to be provided over a number of years.

The 2020-21 Budget includes £523 million of new NDNA funding. This is comprised of £4 million for unique circumstances, £44 million to support the transformation of public services, £25 million to support the roll out of ultra-low emission public transport, £15 million to help deliver the Graduate Entry Medical School in Derry, £85 million for the Agenda for Change pay dispute and £350 million of additional funding provided to give the Executive time to place its finances on a sustainable footing, which has been used for a range of pressures.

My officials have been working with Departments to identify the costs of delivering the full range of NDNA priorities. This work has indicated that the costs are far in excess of the current funding package.

Therefore I have been, and will continue, to press the British Government to provide adequate funding to take forward the NDNA priorities.

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Finance how much funding he had allowed for in the joint bid for personal protective equipment (PPE) with the Irish Government; and for a breakdown of the (i) dates funding was assigned by his Department for the purchase of PPE; (ii) full amount allocated; and (iii) subsequent use of that funding.
(AQW 4550/17-22)

Mr Murphy: This PPE order was being progressed in collaboration with DoH.

On 30 March, the Executive agreed that DoH would receive an allocation of £140 million for a range of issues, including but not restricted to: mobilising the health and social care response, including additional staffing, ramping up of testing, and securing essential personal protection and other equipment; providing much needed support for primary and community care sectors and suspension of car parking charges for staff.

It was anticipated that further funding for PPE would be required by DoH. However, as the order was not progressed additional funding was not agreed at that time.

The Executive agreed on 8 April that £150 million would be set aside for PPE. DOH subsequently sought, and was granted, approval for PPE orders of £84.1 million from this funding. Ultimately £22.8 million of this was not required and an allocation of £61.3 million was formalised by the Executive on 18 May 2020 to secure an order with a company in China and delivery is now underway.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance what percentage of civil servants are currently able to work from home on a full-time or part-time basis.

(AQW 4588/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Based on the latest management information, there are 21.5k people employed by the NICS (excluding NI Prison Service and staff on career break or secondments). At 2nd June 2020, management information indicates that 52% are working from home. The information cannot be broken down further to indicate full-time or part-time basis.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance (i) whether she has had discussions with the UK Treasury about the future application of the furlough scheme from August; and (ii) whether she can advise if the scheme will be applied differently in Northern Ireland than in England.

(AQW 4591/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I wrote to the Chancellor prior to his 12 May 2020 announcement on the extension of Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme to call for a delayed, and then only a gradual winding down of the scheme.

There are no difference in how the CJRS is applied in the North, and I also indicated to the Chancellor that consideration should be given to potential differences in how each devolved administration manages the transition to exit the current lockdown restrictions.

While the extension of the scheme until the end of October and the flexibility around part-time working is welcome, I have stated that the tapering of support from August is premature. I intend raising this matter at my forthcoming meeting with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Finance what plans he has for the future of the Construction & Procurement Delivery when the UK leaves the European Union, given the work is heavily regulated by European Directives and the UK regulations that implement them.

(AQW 4621/17-22)

Mr Murphy: After the EU exit transition period, as a member of the World Trade Organisation Government Procurement Agreement (GPA), government will be required to follow procurement rules which maintain similar principles to EU rules.

The Public Contracts Regulations have been amended so that they will continue to function and meet the legal obligations of GPA membership.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Finance whether he has plans to alter Building Regulations to incorporate mandatory standards for the provision of changing places toilets in (i) large public buildings; and (ii) future developments.

(AQW 4631/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I am very sympathetic to the dignity issues arising from the limited provision of changing places toilets here and will continue to support an equitable and accessible built environment for everyone. I am keen to improve the provision of changing place toilets (CPTs) here and have tasked my Department's Building Standards Branch with incorporating mandatory requirements for their provision into local Building Regulations.

Scottish Building Regulations classify the within scope building types as public buildings and I understand that the forthcoming amendments to Building Regulations in England may include a similar classification. In those circumstances the requirements for CPTs may also apply to new developments is so far as they comprise one or more public buildings.

My Department will work with the local Building Regulations Advisory Committee to consider fully recent developments in Building Regulations in the other administrations to shape proposals for public consultation here. Trigger criteria, based on the building type and scale, that would determine if a building here were within scope for mandatory provision, will need particular consideration.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance what progress is being made to amend Building Regulations to make changing places toilet provision mandatory in new public and government buildings.

(AQW 4640/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I am very sympathetic to the dignity issues arising from the limited provision of changing places toilets (CPTs) and will continue to support an equitable and accessible built environment for everyone. I am keen to improve the provision of CPTs here and have tasked my Department's Building Standards Branch with incorporating mandatory requirements for their provision into local Building Regulations.

Trigger criteria, based on the building type and scale, that would determine if a building here were within scope for mandatory provision, will need particular consideration. The Scottish Building Regulations classify the within scope building types as public buildings and I understand that the forthcoming amendments to Building Regulations in England may include a similar classification.

My Department will work with the local Building Regulations Advisory Committee to consider fully recent developments in Building Regulations in the other administrations to shape proposals for public consultation here.

My Department is also taking forward plans to provide a CPT facility on the Stormont Estate near to the children's playpark, which will be fully accessible to the public. This will help inform considerations on the installation of CPTs in appropriate properties in the Central Government Office Estate.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of vacant Executive Officer 2 posts currently within the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

(AQW 4641/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The current number of vacancies at Executive Officer 2 and analogous grades is 248.

This number refers to vacancies approved by Departments and forwarded to NICSHR to fill. It may also include a small number in anticipation of an approved future dated vacancy.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of Administrative Officers who have been temporarily promoted to Executive Officer 2 posts within the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

(AQW 4642/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The number of Administrative Officers (AO) and analogous grades who have been temporarily promoted to Executive Officer 2 (EO2) and analogous grades within the Northern Ireland Civil Service is 386.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of (i) vacant Executive Officer 2 posts; and (ii) Administrative Officers who have been temporarily promoted to Executive Officer 2 post, in the Department of Health.

(AQW 4644/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Most General Dental Practices have remained open to treat non-Covid-19 patients with urgent dental care needs, providing the treatment does not involve the use of Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs). Patients needing emergency dental treatment which involves AGPs have been referred to our Urgent Dental Care centres.

The Acting Chief Dental Office, Michael Donaldson, wrote to all General Dental Practitioners on 2 June 2020, outlining the plans for a phased, safe full restoration of General Dental Services.

A copy of the letter can be read at the link below. <http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/pdf/Letter%20to%20GDPs%20on%20the%20Re-establishment%20of%20Dental%20Services%2002.06.20.pdf>

My Department will continue to work closely with the Health and Social Care Board and representatives of the dental profession to identify what additional support will be required as we move through the pathway to recovery and re-establish dental services.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance, pursuant to AQW 463/17-22, what progress has been made on amendment of Building Regulations to require the provision of disability-friendly changing place facilities in toilets in public buildings.

(AQW 4650/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I am keen to improve the provision of changing place toilets (CPTs) here and have tasked my Department's Building Standards Branch with incorporating mandatory requirements for their provision into local Building Regulations.

Trigger criteria, based on the building type and scale, that would determine if a building here were within scope for mandatory provision, will need particular consideration. The Scottish Building Regulations classify the within scope building types as public buildings and I understand that the forthcoming amendments to Building Regulations in England may include a similar classification.

My Department will work with the local Building Regulations Advisory Committee to consider fully recent developments in the Building Regulations in the other administrations to shape proposals for public consultation here.

Ms Dillon asked the Minister of Finance for his assessment of the provision of special paid leave for domestic abuse victims for public sector workers that fall under his Department's responsibility.

(AQW 4670/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Civil servants have access to a special leave policy which enables staff paid time off for domestic reasons and in a domestic crisis of one day to a maximum of five in a twelve month period. This may include domestic abuse.

The NICS has a policy on Domestic Violence and Abuse which sets out available advice and support to Departments and Agency staff. In addition it signposts staff to internal sources of organisational support through the Welfare Support Services and the NICS Employer's Assistance Programme, currently provided by Inspire, as well as a list of external contacts offering advice and support.

This year the NICS will be working to attain the 'Workplace Charter Mark on Domestic Violence' as part of our commitment to raise awareness of and provide support for colleagues experiencing domestic and sexual violence and abuse.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance, pursuant to AQW 4092/17-22, for an update on the resolution of online identification verification problems with the Self Employed Income Support Scheme for holders of an Irish Passport and a Northern Ireland Driver Licence.
(AQW 4687/17-22)

Mr Murphy: My Department has worked closely with HMRC and the Driver and Vehicle Agency to ensure people from here are now able to access the Self-Employment Income Support Scheme, using their driving licence in the verification process.

This improvement to the HMRC service went live on Friday 12th June 2020, and by 16:00 that day, over 50 applications had already been verified using local driving licences.

HMRC are engaging separately with the Irish Passport Office to provide a similar service.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how were funding grants for the North/South bodies approved in the period 2017-2020.
(AQW 4701/17-22)

Mr Murphy: During the period 2017-2020, as permitted by the North/South Cooperation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999, Department of Finance Officials approved the payment of grants by sponsor departments to the North/South Bodies, to ensure the continuation of service delivery whilst avoiding illegal spend.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Finance how many people, who were detained under (i) the Mental Capacity Act 2016; and (ii) the Mental Health Order 1986, have died, or are suspected to have died, from COVID-19.
(AQW 4717/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The information requested is not available. The General Register Office's Registration System (NIROS) is used to produce vital statistics relating to registered deaths. Although NIROS will record cause of death details such as COVID-19 it does not contain any information on whether the deceased was detained under the Mental Capacity Act 2016 or the Mental Health Order 1986.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Finance whether all emails connected directly or indirectly to the unsuccessful personal protection equipment joint order in March 2020, including the email trails for the 30 March 2020 and 31 March 2020, will be retained and not deleted from the email system after three months, under the Email Retention Policy.
(AQW 4744/17-22)

Mr Murphy: All email records are managed in accordance with the DoF Records Management policy and the emails relating to my Department's role in securing PPE from China, including emails for 30 and 31 March have been saved in the official records management system and will not be deleted.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Finance what measures are being put in place by Central Procurement Directorate to complete the tender process for new capital projects delayed due to COVID-19.
(AQW 4774/17-22)

Mr Murphy: To mitigate any further delay in awarding contracts and to assist with economic recovery, tenders that have been received will be evaluated using the costs submitted. Any additional costs associated with the impact of new working practices to maintain social distancing will be agreed with contractors during the delivery phase of the contract. Contractors will be required to agree to operate in a transparent partnership basis in regard to additional costs. Bidders will be asked to confirm that they are content with this approach.

Department of Health

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health (i) whether training has been provided to medical staff who are performing abortions; and (ii) who (a) funded; and (b) delivered the training.
(AQW 4103/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): No training has been provided, although some clinicians have updated their knowledge to ensure that their practice is current

Ms Dolan asked the Minister of Health (I) to list the location of the central stores of personal protection equipment (PPE); and to detail the quantity and type of any PPE items distributed that were past their initial expiry date and required re-tested.
(AQW 4136/17-22)

Mr Swann: Business Services Organisation (BSO), an Arms-Length Body of the Department of Health, procures and distributes PPE on behalf of the Health and Social Care (HSC) organisations in Northern Ireland. BSO currently operates 4 warehouses which are located across Belfast, Lisburn and Campsie, Co. Londonderry.

Approximately 712,000 3M FFP3 respirators, held as part of the Department of Health's emergency stockpile, expired in 2019. Following stringent Quality Assurance and age accelerated testing in March 2020, these respirators had their shelf-life extended until 2021. To date, 291,350 of these units have been distributed to HSC organisations for use in primary and secondary care settings.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health (i) to list the Nursing and Residential Homes in each Belfast constituency that had an RQIA inspection between 1 March 2020 and 29 May 2020; (ii) which Nursing and Residential Homes in each Belfast constituency received notices from the RQIA; and (iii) how many residents have died in each Residential and Nursing Home from COVID-19.

(AQW 4348/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) The Nursing and Residential Homes in each Belfast constituency that had a Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) inspection between 1 March 2020 and 29 May 2020 are tabled below:

Constituency	Service	Inspection Date
Belfast East	De La Cour House (RCH)	10/03/2020

- (ii) Clifton Nursing Home, Belfast received one failure to comply notice from RQIA on 20 May 2020 in relation to governance, management and leadership of the home.
- (iii) While it is not possible to provide the number of deaths from Covid-19 by individual nursing and residential care homes, my department publishes information on the number of COVID-19 deaths in care homes on its daily dashboard

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health how much has been spent addressing wild fires in each of the last 10 years, broken down by Fire Service division.

(AQW 4452/17-22)

Mr Swann: The table below details Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service estimated spend on wildfires in each of the last 10 years, broken down by Area command:

	Northern Area £'000	Eastern Area £'000	Southern Area £'000	Western Area £'000	Total £'000
2010/11	140	55	236	264	695

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he will publish the data protection impact assessments carried out on any proposed contact tracing app.

(AQW 4467/17-22)

Mr Swann: These 3 questions are related and have been answered together.

There has been no formal decision made regarding development of an NI specific Proximity App. If a decision is made to proceed the appropriate legislative and regulatory obligations will be met.

Any Equality Impact Assessments or Data Protection Impact Assessments (DPIA) will be published. DPIAs will include retention and disposal details as appropriate.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he will publish the Equality Impact Assessment carried out on any proposed contact tracing app.

(AQW 4468/17-22)

Mr Swann: These 3 questions are related and have been answered together.

There has been no formal decision made regarding development of an NI specific Proximity App. If a decision is made to proceed the appropriate legislative and regulatory obligations will be met.

Any Equality Impact Assessments or Data Protection Impact Assessments (DPIA) will be published. DPIAs will include retention and disposal details as appropriate.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he has consulted with the NI Human Rights Commission as part of the plans to develop a contact tracing app.

(AQW 4469/17-22)

Mr Swann: There has been no formal decision made to proceed to develop an NI specific Contact Tracing App.

However, a Steering Group commissioned by the Department of Health through the Chief Medical Officer, Dr Michael McBride, has been established to oversee the implementation of the Contact Tracing service in Northern Ireland.

As part of this work the Steering Group has been engaging with a number of key stakeholder organisations.

On 18 May 2020 Mr Les Allamby, the Human Rights Chief Commissioner for Northern Ireland, attended the Steering Group meeting which included a discussion on the proposals for a contact tracing App.

An engagement meeting took place on 29th May, where multiple Human Rights stakeholders in Northern Ireland joined a call with a panel of speakers from the PHA and Department of Health to hear an update on the Contact Tracing plans, including digital considerations. Stakeholders included:

- Office of the Children's Commissioner
- Social Change Initiative
- Privacy Advisory Committee
- Committee for Administration of Justice
- Amnesty International
- Women's Resource and Development Association
- Office of the Older People's Commissioner NI
- Human Rights Consortium
- Northern Ireland Human Rights Commissioner
- Equality Coalition
- Children's Law Centre
- NICVA

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health when data collected as part of a contact tracing app will be deleted.
(AQW 4470/17-22)

Mr Swann: These 3 questions are related and have been answered together.

There has been no formal decision made regarding development of an NI specific Proximity App. If a decision is made to proceed the appropriate legislative and regulatory obligations will be met.

Any Equality Impact Assessments or Data Protection Impact Assessments (DPIA) will be published. DPIAs will include retention and disposal details as appropriate.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health (i) whether the Drink Wise Age Well service will receive continued funding in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area; and (ii) for his assessment of increased alcohol consumption as a growing concern throughout the COVID-19 pandemic.
(AQW 4489/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) The Drink Wise Age Well programme is funded through The National Lottery Community Fund. While this funding was due to cease at the end of March 2020, I understand that the National Lottery has now awarded a 6-month extension until the end of September.
- (ii) While there is at this point no specific prevalence data for Northern Ireland, information from online surveys, media reports and alcohol sales across the four UK administrations and ROI indicates that alcohol consumption is a key issue during the pandemic. With the closure of on-sale premises it is unlikely that alcohol sales overall have increased, however there has been an increase in off-sales purchases. There is a concern that people may engage in different, and more harmful, alcohol consumption behaviours at home, and that family members may be exposed to more alcohol-related harm.

The Public Health Agency has therefore published advice on safer drinking for people staying at home due to the pandemic, and highlighted the health risks associated with alcohol consumption, with specific messaging related to the difficulties some may face during this period of social isolation. PHA will continue to use social media platforms to provide alcohol messaging and advice on an ongoing basis.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health to outline the plans to resume services for women receiving treatment at the Belfast Mesh Clinic.
(AQW 4491/17-22)

Mr Swann: You will be aware that on 9 June 2020 I published the Strategic Framework for Rebuilding Health and Social Care, along with Phase 1 (June 2020) rebuilding plans for each of the six Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts.

The Strategic Framework will underpin the development of incremental service plans by Trusts. The key aim will be to incrementally increase HSC service capacity as quickly as possible across all programmes of care, including services at the Mesh Centre, within the prevailing COVID-19 conditions. Subsequent phases will see these service activity plans and targets updated in three monthly cycles.

Whilst, at present, there is no confirmed date for the resumption of the Mesh Clinic, the issue will be kept under review by the Belfast HSC Trust.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health whether his Department has any plans to resume the Towards Zero Suicide initiative.
(AQW 4492/17-22)

Mr Swann: £649k has been allocated through the transformation programme which will support the continuation of the Towards Zero Suicide programme in 2020/21. The programme will resume activity with staff redeployed as a result of the Covid pandemic returning to their roles in Trusts in July 2020. Cognisant of the potential impact of COVID-19 on the mental health on some vulnerable populations an adapted Action Plan for the initiative will be completed and implemented.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Health to outline the options considered to support families of children with autism where, as a result of current restrictions, sensory rooms and soft play areas are unavailable.
(AQW 4523/17-22)

Mr Swann: Sensory rooms are generally located within Educational settings and in particular special schools. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and the Public Health Agency (PHA) have been jointly working to identify children who, as a result of a needs assessment, should be accessing support in these settings. However, access is extremely limited and priority is given to those families where there is a risk of family breakdown.

There are a number of short break units that do have facilities but, due to infection control issues and subject to PHA advice, access to these units is limited and the number of young people accessing the facilities remains small. Many families have also advised that they do not wish to avail of this type of support at this time.

Trusts continue to link with families where advice and support is required by virtual means and, if required, by face to face contact which is subject to PHA guidance and advice, including access to PPE. Consideration is also given to the impact on children with autism and other conditions and only after consultation with carers and following the appropriate risk assessment.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Health how his Department plans to address the waiting lists for children with autism referrals.

(AQW 4524/17-22)

Mr Swann: Autism remains a key priority for my Department and significant investment has been made in autism services in recent years to address the waiting lists which have arisen as a result of the increasing rates of referrals. However, it is clear that reform is needed to secure sustainable improvements in waiting times for assessment and intervention and it must be acknowledged that current restrictions in place, as a result of COVID 19, are likely to have an impact on the current waiting list.

Funding has been provided by my Department to the Health and Social Care Board to support the finalisation of an Emotional Health and Wellbeing Framework for Children and Young People which will focus on greater support and early intervention through regional standardisation of autism services and proactive support for children, their families and carers. The Framework has been informed by a review of children's autism services, recently undertaken by the Public Health Agency and Health and Social Care Board, and consideration is being given to appropriate methods of stakeholder engagement within the challenges presented by the current climate.

The Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency continue to work closely with the Trusts to consider innovative ways to address the needs of children undergoing autism assessment and enable them to access autism specific intervention.

Additionally, preparations in my Department had been at an advanced stage for the next phase of cross-departmental and stakeholder engagement to agree future actions for a revised autism strategy, due for implementation in 2021. Whilst this work has been significantly constrained as a result of the COVID 19 pandemic, planning is currently underway for this work to resume. A key priority within the strategy will be the need for early intervention and support for families.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health how his Department is replenishing levels of personal protection equipment, including for a potential second surge of COVID-19.

(AQW 4553/17-22)

Mr Swann: A regional health resource model has been developed to predict projected demand for PPE as we begin to rebuild services and prepare for a potential second wave later in the year.

The protection of our frontline health and safety staff is an absolute priority and we are working extremely hard to build up our PPE supplies to meet the anticipated demand.

Every feasible route locally and indeed internationally is being pursued to ensure we have the appropriate PPE available.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health for an update on his Department's plans for targeted preventative spending that will address (i) children's oral health inequalities; and (ii) childhood obesity levels, in more deprived communities.

(AQW 4554/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) The Oral Dental Health specialists from the five Health and Social Care Trusts have developed and delivered a new training programme which focuses on key dental messages to be reinforced in the Health Visitors' and Child Health Assistants' contacts with families. The training has been offered across all Trusts.

In 18/19 Trusts received funding to allow 81,238 young children to participate in oral health and Improvement programmes across the region. The regional Happy Smiles programme for pre-school children accounts for 18,000 of these children. This is targeted at children from lower socioeconomic groups and delivered in a nursery setting

PHA is responsible for the yearly update of the Birth to Five Book which is given to every mother having their first baby. The importance of tooth brushing is highlighted, along with the option of downloading the free Brush DJ app.

- (ii) The current obesity prevention framework, A Fitter Future for All 2012-2022, was launched in March 2012. The ten year strategy takes an integrated approach to obesity prevention and contains outcomes and actions across the life course for the entire population of Northern Ireland. Work is currently underway to look specifically at the issue of childhood obesity through an innovation lab process.

As well as a number of population wide programmes to improve participation in physical activity and promote healthy eating among children and young people, the PHA have developed and are funding the Early Years Obesity Prevention Programme (EYOP) across NI. This targeted programme will address risk and protective factors for childhood obesity, adopting a holistic approach focusing on parenting skills, family lifestyle habits, diet and nutrition, physical activity and emotional wellbeing. The PHA has awarded a contract to HENRY (Health, Exercise & Nutrition for the Really Young) in Feb 2020, to provide an early years obesity prevention training programme to HSCT and SureStart staff across Northern Ireland

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health why, in relation to childminding services, people working in gas and electricity services are not classed as key workers.

(AQW 4572/17-22)

Mr Swann: With the approval of the Executive, the definition of keyworker for the purpose of accessing childcare was expanded on Monday 8 June. Under the new definition within the category of Utilities, those working in gas and electricity services are classed as key workers and able to access childcare at this time as a result. Further guidance for parents and childcare providers is available at:

<https://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/Support/91/covid19-childcare-options-and-associated-guidance>

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health how much money has been set aside, both capital and resource, to develop the COVID-19 contact tracing programme.

(AQW 4581/17-22)

Mr Swann: The information that you have requested is not currently available. It is anticipated that the total costs in respect of the Contact Tracing Programme will be finalised in the coming weeks.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to detail the number of (i) suspected; and (ii) confirmed, cases of COVID-19 referred to COVID-19 primary care centres since they opened, broken down by (a) centre location; and (b) week.

(AQW 4582/17-22)

Mr Swann: Patients are referred to the COVID-19 Centres when they are suspected of being COVID-19 positive. Data is not available for those who are confirmed as COVID-19 either prior to or after their COVID-19 Centre attendance.

The tabulated information overleaf details the weekly count of all COVID-19 patient contacts broken down by COVID-19 Primary Care Centre location for the period week beginning 9th April 2020 to week beginning 28th May 2020.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health (i) whether the 'R' number being published weekly is the actual 'R' number on that day, an average number collated over the previous week or something else; and (ii) does the range given indicate the high point and low point over the week, or something else.

(AQW 4612/17-22)

Mr Swann: The published position in respect of reproduction number R each week represents the best estimate of the range in which the R number falls as agreed by the Covid-19 modelling group. This assessment takes account of the outputs from modelling conducted in Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK by a number of separate groups. Each of the models provides an estimate of R with a 95% confidence interval.

The range does not indicate the high or low point over the week, but the best estimate of the range in which the R number falls as agreed by the modelling group.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health (i) whether it is possible to be prescribed Natural Desiccated Thyroid (NDT) tablets through the Health Service; (ii) how many patients are being prescribed NDT tablets; (iii) whether there is a difference in approach across Health and Social Care Trusts; (iv) which Trusts allow NDT on prescription for low thyroid conditions; (v) whether a GP can prescribe NDT tablets without the advice of a consultant; and (vi) to outline any difference of approach to prescribing NDT tablets in Northern Ireland as to the practice in GB, including the rationale for the difference in approach.
(AQW 4613/17-22)

Mr Swann: NDT products are not licensed for use in the UK and their use is not recommended by national and international clinical guidelines (including those produced by the Royal College of Physicians, British Thyroid Association and European Thyroid Association). Recent NICE guidelines published on 20 November 2019 also recommend against the use of NDT's in the treatment of hypothyroidism (<https://www.nice.org.uk/guidance/ng145>)

The use of NDT is not therefore supported by the Northern Ireland Formulary which clinicians are expected to consider when making prescribing decisions (<https://niformulary.hscni.net/formulary/6-0-endocrine/6-2-thyroid-and-antithyroid-drugs-and-parathyroid-disease/6-2-1-hypothyroidism/>). Subsequently, no HSC Trusts currently support the prescribing of NDT to patients for low thyroid conditions.

Licensed products should always be used in the treatment of any condition, unless there are exceptional clinical circumstances which make this impossible. Medical practitioners including GPs can however, without the advice of a consultant, prescribe NDT tablets in clinical situations where it is judged that, on the basis of the available evidence, use of the unlicensed medicine in question would be in the best interest of the patient. This is done under the proviso that the prescriber is then willing to take personal responsibility for the treatment. With this being the case I am advised that 24 patients have been identified as having NDT tablets prescribed to them on a "named patient" basis in Northern Ireland.

There is no known difference in approach or practice to the prescribing of NDT tablets in NI to that undertaken in GB.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, pursuant to AQW 2489/17-22, for an update on the draft regulations to prohibit the sale of nicotine inhaling products to under 18 year olds.

(AQW 4643/17-22)

Mr Swann: Draft regulations to prohibit the sale of nicotine inhaling products to under eighteens were being progressed by officials before the COVID-19 outbreak. Since then, staff have been redeployed to assist with the Department's response to the pandemic and work on the regulations was paused. Officials will soon be in a position to resume work on these draft regulations.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health what has been the cost, to date, of the 11 COVID-19 centres; and what has been the throughput of each.

Mr Swann: COVID-19 Centres ensure that patients with COVID symptoms can be assessed and treated by a GP, whilst minimising the risk to patients who do not have COVID symptoms

The operational of the centres is managed locally, based on demand. Rotas are developed a number of weeks in advance of each shift and seek to ensure that centres can be staffed to full capacity should the need arise. Where capacity in the Centres exceeds patient demand during particular periods, the number of staff who are on the rota to support a Centre may be reduced. Staff can also be put on standby, allowing them to carry out other duties whilst remaining available to assist patients in the Covid-19 centres should the need arise.

The expenditure to date for the COVID Centres is £1,538.4k.

A total of 6,473 people have attended the centres during the period 9 April – 3 June 2020. This is broken down by location in the table below:

COVID Centre Location	Total Contacts

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health when dental practices will be able to reopen.

(AQW 4664/17-22)

Mr Swann: Most General Dental Practices have remained open to treat non-Covid-19 patients with urgent dental care needs, providing the treatment does not involve the use of Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs). Patients needing emergency dental treatment which involves AGPs have been referred to our Urgent Dental Care centres.

The Acting Chief Dental Office, Michael Donaldson, wrote to all General Dental Practitioners on 2 June 2020, outlining the plans for a phased, safe full restoration of General Dental Services.

A copy of the letter can be read at the link below. <http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/pdf/Letter%20to%20GDPs%20on%20the%20Re-establishment%20of%20Dental%20Services%2002.06.20.pdf>

My Department will continue to work closely with the Health and Social Care Board and representatives of the dental profession to identify what additional support will be required as we move through the pathway to recovery and re-establish dental services.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health to detail the comparative impact of COVID-19 on Black, Asian and minority ethnic people.

(AQW 4692/17-22)

Mr Swann: Public Health England (PHE) have recently published their report examining disparities in the risk and outcomes of COVID-19. The report examines important factors including ethnicity and its key finding was "Risk of dying among those diagnosed with COVID-19 was also higher in males than females; higher in those living in the most deprived areas than those living in the least deprived; and higher in those in Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic (BAME) groups than in White ethnic groups".

My Department is currently considering this report in detail. This will include any potential implications and lessons for the Black, Asian and minority ethnic people.

It is important to note that the Public Health Agency (PHA) commission services with various organisations that target and support Minority Ethnic and Migrant communities across Northern Ireland. This is especially important during the current pandemic.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health to outline his plans for putting in place comprehensive and expanded rehabilitation services for people who have had COVID-19 that involve Allied Health Professionals, particularly with regard to ensuring that anyone who has had COVID-19 has access to a dietitian and suitable nutrition.

(AQW 4695/17-22)

Mr Swann: I have asked the Chief Medical Officer to set up a working group to consider how the rehabilitation process will be taken forward. In so doing consideration will be given to the important roles all Health and Social Care (HSC) staff including dietitians will have to play in delivering rehabilitation services.

Dietitians have vital roles to play across the HSC in assessing, diagnosing and treating dietary and nutritional problems. Good nutrition will be a vital part of the recovery and rehabilitation process for all patients with Covid-19, many of whom will require individual nutritional support.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health how Allied Health Professionals will be represented on the management board overseeing the Strategic Framework for the Re-opening of Health and Social Care.

(AQW 4697/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Chief Nursing Officer Charlotte McArdle as head of the Nursing, Midwifery and Allied Health Professionals Directorate provides representation on behalf of nurses, midwives and allied health professions on the Management Board overseeing the Strategic Framework.

The Chief Allied Health Professions Officer in the department reports directly to the Chief Nursing Officer and will be in attendance at Board meetings to deal with specific issues as they arise in relation to AHPs.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health what progress has been made in approval of the Trikafta drug for cystic fibrosis patients.

(AQW 4702/17-22)

Mr Swann: Trikafta does not have an EU or UK marketing authorisation and so is an unlicensed medicine. This means that it has not yet been fully assessed by the European Medicines Agency or the Medicines and the Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency in terms of its safety, quality and efficacy, and so is not currently available for routine commissioning.

I regret that until the licensing position of Trikafta is confirmed there is nothing further that can be added. However, I can assure you that the Department will continue to monitor the situation and keep developments under review.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health, pursuant to AQW 4350/17-22, whether he will commit to amending the Mental Health Order 1986 to remove barriers to establishing a dual diagnosis service for addictions and mental health.

(AQW 4713/17-22)

Mr Swann: There are currently no legal barriers within the Mental Health Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 prohibiting the establishment of a dual diagnosis service for addictions and mental health.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health why there are no Allied Health professionals or trade union representatives on his Department's Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services Strategic Framework's Management Board.

(AQW 4722/17-22)

Mr Swann: The interests of all HSC colleagues are represented through the current membership of the Board. The Chief Nursing Officer represents the views of Nurses, Midwives and Allied Health Professionals on the Management Board and will be advised by the Chief Allied Health Professions Officer in my Department.

I am currently taking initial soundings on my proposed amendments to the HSC Framework Document and this will be followed by a 12 week consultation in due course in the light of any significant matters that may emerge from the soundings.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health what guidance has been issued to local councils and leisure providers in respect of the phased reopening of gyms, swimming pools, sporting facilities and community centres.

(AQW 4772/17-22)

Mr Swann: At present, facilities such as gyms and swimming pools must remain closed and, as such, no specific guidance in respect of phased reopening of these facilities has been provided to councils and leisure providers. Outdoor sports facilities may open for use and guidance on The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020, including detail on the restrictions, social distancing and hand hygiene, which you may find helpful, is available at:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/health-protection-coronavirus-restrictions-northern-ireland-regulations-2020>.

I am clear that we will not retain the current restrictions any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of the Community Pharmacy Workforce Survey Report 2019; and whether there is improvement on the 320 community pharmacist deficit estimated last year.

(AQW 4842/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department recognises the importance of ensuring that the pharmacy workforce has the capacity and capability to support the challenges faced by the HSC. For that reason prior to the pandemic, a formal review of the pharmacy workforce had been completed. Although progress was interrupted by coronavirus, it is the intention to re-start this work and to publish the review with an implementation plan, in the coming months, subject to COVID-19.

In respect of pharmacist numbers, the review found that there was no way of accurately assessing need in community pharmacies, unlike Trusts where vacancies are monitored. It is the intention to address this during implementation of the review with a proposal to develop a structured process to monitor current and projected workforce needs in all sectors.

In the absence of a robust method of analysis I am unable to comment on the 2019 deficit figures quoted in the independently commissioned community pharmacy review undertaken by Community Pharmacy NI. However, you will be aware that a range of interventions were made to support community pharmacy in recent months in their response to COVID-19.

In addition to significant additional funding, a number of short term actions were taken that aimed to support the workforce. This included the re-registration of recently retired pharmacists, promotion of locums, delay of general practice pharmacist commencement dates, protected lunch breaks, engagement of pharmacy undergraduates, foundation dental students and the community and voluntary sector. The implementation of the Department's pharmacy workforce review will build on this to drive longer term change.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of the safety risk to both patients and pharmacists from the shortage of community pharmacists.

(AQW 4843/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), as commissioner of community pharmacy services, has advised that community pharmacies are continuing to provide pharmaceutical services in both a professional and safe manner and it is not aware of any apparent known safety risks to patients or pharmacists as a consequence of a shortage of community pharmacists in Northern Ireland.

In accordance with the professional standards of conduct, ethics and performance for pharmacists in Northern Ireland, a community pharmacist would be professionally obligated to notify the HSCB immediately should they ever become unable to deliver pharmaceutical services in a manner that was both safe to them and their patients.

Department for Infrastructure

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether modes of public transport are marked out for social distancing for passengers; and (ii) if so, when it was instituted; and (iii) how it is being enforced.

(AQW 4366/17-22)

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure):

- (i) Translink has implemented a wide range of Covid 19 controls with a clear focus on the safety, health and well-being of both customers and staff. These measures have included the roll out of social distancing measures and signage, guidance and controls across the public transport network together with enhanced cleaning and sanitisation of buses, trains and facilities; additional protection for Translink staff including protective screens and additional PPE; and customer messaging via multiple channels including press and social media. Translink has also proactively amended Bus and Rail timetables to ensure that sufficient capacity is provided ahead of demand in order to assist social distancing. All services are monitored for passenger demand and where required, additional capacity has been provided to ensure social distancing can be facilitated. On buses, seats have been marked off behind driving cabs to ensure passengers are at least 2m away from the driving cab. Whilst seats beyond this are not currently marked out, passengers are reminded through signage within each vehicle regarding their responsibilities for practising social distancing on our public transport network. We are also asking passengers to 'Help Us Help You' by being respectful to other passengers and utilise the space provided to maintain social distancing. The vast majority of passengers have respected the social distancing guidelines, customers are also kept regularly informed of the latest health guidance via customer channels including the local press and social media.
- (ii) All measures to help with social distancing guidelines were established over the period from the end of March 2020 to date and are kept under constant review.
- (iii) As seats are not currently marked out on our public transport network, there is no system to enforce. It is worth noting that Translink has worked closely with the PSNI to provide assistance through our network to help with social distancing when required. This has included ensuring that our public are travelling for essential travel only. I have also asked officials to explore markings in light of plans in the south to ensure an island wide approach to safety on our public transport network for staff and passengers.

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given the complaints from residents around drivers' speed in built-up residential areas, whether she plans to introduce traffic management measures in the (i) Torrrens; (ii) Oldpark; and (iii) Rosapenna areas of North Belfast.

(AQW 4367/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department recognises the importance of traffic calming and road safety measures and is committed to exploring solutions that deliver better for communities and improve lives across Northern Ireland. I have asked my officials to carry out an updated assessment in these areas.

In the meantime if residents are concerned about persistent issues with speeding, or persons driving inappropriately, they may wish to report such incidents to the PSNI on their non-emergency number 101.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) for a list of planning applications under the remit of her Department that have yet to be determined; and (ii) how long each application has been awaiting a decision.

(AQW 4377/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Data extracted from my Department's Planning Portal shows the following list of live planning applications with my Department at 31 December 2019. This is taken from the latest published information.

Figures up until the end of March 2020 will be published on 2 July 2020.

My Department's Strategic Planning Directorate is also continuing to process 3 other applications remitted back to the Department by the Courts [one in July 2018 and the other 2 in February 2019] following their original determination/approval.

You will note the extensive timescales taken to process some of these applications. The timescales reflect the inherent complexity and often controversial nature of some of these applications, the volume of information comprising the application, the level of representations received, the conducting of Inquiry and Hearings into the applications and the tendency for legal challenges to a number of these controversial proposals.

Ms Kimmins asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether (i) the progression of the A1 safety improvements will be a priority for her Department; and (ii) funding will now be committed, following the conclusion of the public inquiry.

Ms Mallon: I recognise that many in the local community support the safety improvements which are being proposed along the A1 between Hillsborough roundabout and Loughbrickland village. I am very aware how important the A1 improvements are for the many people who have expressed their support, especially those who have lost loved ones.

As announced last week, I have asked my officials to continue developing the current Strategic Road Improvement programme, including the A1 Junctions Phase 2 safety improvement scheme, during the current year within the capital budget made available to me. I am awaiting the report from the Public Inquiry and am keen to progress to the next stage as quickly as possible, whilst of course completing all of the necessary statutory processes.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the consultations outstanding from statutory consultees in relation to the planning application for the redevelopment of Casement Park before a final report can be drafted by officials for her consideration.

(AQW 4444/17-22)

Ms Mallon: All consultation responses have now been received. My officials continue to work at pace to complete their assessment of this significant planning application to bring forward a recommendation for decision.

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given the complaints from residents around drivers' speed in built-up residential areas, whether she plans to introduce traffic management measures in the area of new housing in New Lodge, North Belfast.

(AQW 4456/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department is a statutory consultee to the planning authority and through that process provides advice on the proposed road layout of any new developments. These layouts are designed in accordance with planning guidance, "Creating Places - Achieving Quality in Residential Developments" which seeks to restrain vehicle speeds and provide a safer environment for pedestrians, cyclists and other road users.

This is achieved at design stage through the arrangement of buildings and spaces within the layout to provide measures such as short through roads, cul-de-sacs and roads with 'easy' bends to control speeds. Where the road layout in itself does not produce low speeds, further traffic calming measures, such as chicanes and road humps, are integrated as necessary into the design.

Traffic calming has already been given consideration at design stage of the new housing in the New Lodge, however I have already asked officials to carry out an assessment.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) what NI Water works are being carried out at Walworth, Ballykelly; (ii) the proposed duration of the works; (iii) whether neighbourhood notification was carried out; and (iv) whether she will undertake to investigate noise complaints from neighbours.

(AQW 4458/17-22)

Ms Mallon: NI Water is currently constructing the final phase of a £6.4million essential project for the upgrade of Ballykelly Wastewater Treatment Works. The works upgrade project will cater for future population demands and environmental standards to return treated effluent to the environment. Due to the poor bearing capacity of the coastal alluvial soil, NI Water requires driven piled foundations to be installed to support concrete structures. The programme of work has been impacted by the implementation of Covid-19 social distancing measures, and currently piling work is programmed to continue until 31st July.

Letters were issued by hand on 3rd June to local customers and residents. Noise levels are monitored by the contractor on a daily basis and I am advised that to date these levels have not exceeded normal working practices at the boundary of the works site. Under the contract, the contractor is limited to working only between 8am and 6pm. Any noise complaints will be investigated by NI Water to confirm whether noise levels have been exceeded.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Infrastructure, regarding the classification of vehicles as classic cars and motorcycles, whether she will address the anomalies between Northern Ireland and Great Britain by amending the Northern Ireland legislation to bring it into line with other parts of the UK.

(AQW 4459/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that this exemption was introduced in Great Britain in 2018 which has led to a difference as to how Vehicles of Historic Interest (VHIs) are treated in GB and NI.

Following requests to align Northern Ireland legislation with that in GB, from both elected representatives and members of the public my Department ran a public consultation exercise in 2019 seeking views as to whether this exemption should be introduced here. Officials have prepared an analysis of responses for my consideration and to assist me in taking a final decision on the way forward.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department has any plans to adopt the UK rules on 40-year old cars being exempt from an annual MOT.

(AQW 4471/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that this exemption was introduced in Great Britain in 2018 which has led to a difference as to how Vehicles of Historic Interest (VHIs) are treated in GB and NI.

I am also aware that following requests to align Northern Ireland legislation with that in GB, from both elected representatives and members of the public my Department ran a public consultation exercise in 2019 seeking views as to whether this exemption should be introduced here. Officials have prepared an analysis of responses for my consideration in making a final decision on the way forward.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the level of investment she has committed; and (ii) the number of additional public use electric car charging points planned to be provided for (a) Northern Ireland; (b) Belfast; and (c) East Belfast, within the next 12 months, 24 months and 36 months.

Ms Mallon: I am focused on delivering clean public transport and active travel options to build connectivity, reduce emissions and promote health and well-being for all. Given the impact of transport on greenhouse gas emissions and air quality, reducing congestion and decarbonising public transport must be a priority. However, we need to achieve this at a time when our public finances are constrained, particularly, now with added financial pressures arising as a result of the Covid-19 pandemic. I will be supporting a Green Recovery in the North, making use of all available resources to achieve this. My Department is working closely with the UK Office for Low Emission Vehicles (OLEV) which is working across government to support the early market for ultra-low emission vehicles (ULEV). This includes the provision of a range of e-car related grants including home, workplace and residential charge points to support the uptake of electric vehicles. The UK Government also recently announced that government funding will be increased to £20 million (up from £10 million) for 2020/21 for the installation of charge points on residential streets. The application process is open to relevant Local Authorities throughout the UK and in the North.

I would refer you to my previous reply to AQW 4341/17-22 in respect of the number of planned additional public use electric car charging points. I am committed to ensuring that the public charge point infrastructure remains fit for purpose commensurate with growth. The DEARA Minister and I met earlier this year to discuss this matter and opportunities for partnership working. As such, officials are currently exploring a range of options and solutions to enhance our infrastructure, improve lives and tackle the climate emergency, particularly, in the context of COVID-19 recovery plans.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline the measures her Department is considering to address road safety concerns during COVID-19, including (i) increased public awareness campaigns; (ii) the introduction of 20mph zones outside schools; (iii) speed limit decreases on certain roads; and (iv) advancing projects vital for road safety such as the A1 upgrade.

(AQW 4493/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister for Infrastructure, I take my responsibility for promoting and improving road safety very seriously, particularly through the current Covid-19 situation. I continue to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads.

With the increase of all age groups walking and cycling, and a decrease in traffic flow, road safety messages are tailored towards emerging changes in road user behaviour during this time.

My Department was immediately proactive in adapting its road safety bus rear campaigns to reflect the current situation, around travelling safely and only when essential. We have a full programme of road safety messages running on the 'Share the Road to Zero' social media channels, all underpinned with current Government safety messaging.

I have recently met with the Chief Constable to discuss priority road safety issues of mutual interest to which I am giving consideration.

My Department is committed to introducing measures that reduce the speed of traffic on our roads. We are currently trialling an arrangement of signs on some rural roads that is intended to allow the introduction of more part-time 20mph limits at schools. To further demonstrate my commitment, I also announced in my budget that I have allocated funding for the roll out of 20mph limits for some 100 schools this year.

We are also trialling the effectiveness of introducing 20mph limits using traffic signs alone, which would be more economical and could be used more widely in appropriate environments, such as residential areas with schools, than would be possible with the current approach of providing 20mph limits along with traffic calming features. I am expecting receipt of the findings of the trials imminently, and I fully intend to see what potential there is to build on the work already undertaken in terms of these 20mph limits and other limits. Speed limits are assessed on a site-by-site basis in line with current policy and in response to incidents and public requests.

In areas where we have widened footways and pop-up cycle lanes for social distancing we will consider the placing of temporary speed reductions and we are actively working with partners, particularly councils, to explore what is possible.

Whilst I am currently faced with serious and challenging resource budgetary constraints, I am committed to working to find solutions that deliver better for our communities and improve lives across Northern Ireland. I recognise that many in the local community support the safety improvements which are being proposed along the A1 between Hillsborough roundabout and Loughbrickland village. I am very aware of how important the A1 improvements are for the many people who have expressed their support, especially those who have lost loved ones. As I announced recently, I have asked my officials to continue developing the current Strategic Road Improvement programme, including the A1 Junctions Phase 2 safety improvement scheme, during the current year, within the capital budget made available to me. I am keen to progress to the next stage as quickly as possible, whilst of course completing all of the necessary statutory processes.

I recognise the continuing challenges of preventing road deaths and serious injuries and as such, it is key that my Department, in collaboration with partners continues to address the issues using all practicable methods.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the number of motorcycle driving tests that have been carried out in each of the last 12 months; and (ii) the difficulties that have had to be overcome to enable this outdoor test, in which the examiner does not travel in the same vehicle, to be carried out safely.

(AQW 4496/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The table below provides the number of motorcycle tests delivered each month between April 2019 and March 2020. The information is broken down into Off-Road Motorcycle Tests, On-Road Motorcycle Tests and Extended Tests following disqualification.

Motorcycle Tests	Apr	May	Jun	Jul	Aug	Sep	Oct	Nov	Dec	Jan	Feb	Mar
Off-Road	162	164	167	191	179	173	127	127	74	74	44	51
On-Road	110	127	162	107	174	131	144	87	73	57	67	56

From 20 March 2020, in the interest of public safety and to tackle the spread of COVID-19, the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) suspended all driving tests at all DVA testing centres for three months, until 22 June 2020.

The DVA has been undertaking a full review of risk assessments for the standard operating procedures for delivering motorcycle tests with particular focus on key issues such as PPE, Health and Safety in light of current Public Health Agency advice, delivery of tests when test centres are closed and how to manage communications between examiner and candidate during the on-road element of the test. Revised processes will be agreed with staff and Trade Unions before motorcycle tests resume.

I know that this is currently causing inconvenience and concern to some customers. I can assure you I am keeping this position under constant review with the aim of reintroducing practical driving tests for motorcycles as soon as it is safe to do so, taking account of guidance on social distancing and in line with the Executive's Pathway to Recovery, to ensure the safety of staff and customers.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline any discussions she has had with the Minister of Justice and the Chief Constable in relation to the capability and equipment necessary to identify those engaged in driving under the influence of drugs and to understand the extent of the problem.

(AQW 4518/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I recently met with the Chief Constable to discuss a number of road traffic concerns along with any road safety issues emerging throughout the lockdown period. While the issue of drug driving in Northern Ireland and the use of the current field impairment test formed part of our discussions the main focus, in terms of equipment, was on procuring evidential breath testing devices. These are required to enable the introduction of the new lower drink drive limits provided for in the Road Traffic (Amendment) Act (NI) 2016.

I have considered the extent of the drug driving problem in terms of road casualties. During the period from 1st January 2014 to 31 December 2018, 41 people were killed or seriously injured where the driver/rider was impaired by drugs. This compares with 352 deaths or serious injuries during the same period, where the driver/rider was impaired by alcohol.

I am concerned about the ongoing dangers of drink and drug driving and want to do whatever it takes to make it quicker and easier to hold drunk and drug-drivers to account.

Drug driving is a complex issue and before I bring forward any new strategies I plan to consider the approaches that have been implemented in both Britain and Ireland in recent years, and see what we can learn. In the meantime I will continue to keep the issue under review and liaise with the Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for Infrastructure to provide an update on the progress of her Department's Planning Environmental Governance Work Programme against previously agreed actions and timescales.

(AQW 4521/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Environmental Governance Work Programme (EGWP) outlines a number of areas of work being taken forward which are aimed at improving environmental governance and practice across the planning system.

Progress has been maintained across the main strands of the Programme. In relation to capacity building and support, there has been positive engagement with all councils with the delivery of tailored training in conjunction with an external environmental expert. An 'Environmental Officer's Forum' has also now been established which includes planning officers from DfI and councils. This work was all completed as programmed, however, the current COVID-19 crisis has delayed the next phase of the training and the timing of practice guidance. Work is underway to take this forward as soon as possible.

My Department continues to engage with councils in relation to certain operational environmental compliance issues where appropriate. Work in other areas of the Programme, including engagement and co-operation with other organisations and authorities, remains ongoing.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure pursuant to AQW 4000/17-22, (i) whether she considers the Regional Development Strategy (RDS) objective of reducing Northern Ireland's carbon footprint and facilitating mitigation and adaptation to cover both demand-side issues and supply-side issues, including the wider infrastructure that keeps Northern Ireland locked into dependency on fossil fuels; and (ii) for her assessment of whether significant additional new capacity for the storage and distribution of fossil fuels are contrary to the objectives of the RDS and Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPSS).

(AQW 4531/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Regional Development Strategy 2035 (RDS) is the overarching strategic framework which facilitates and guides long term spatial development in Northern Ireland and as such, its objective of reducing Northern Ireland's carbon footprint through facilitating mitigation and adaptation, covers both demand and supply side issues and applies to key infrastructure projects. It is my assessment that any planning application for new capacity for the storage and distribution of fossil fuels will be considered by the relevant planning authority on a case by case basis taking into account the local development plan, the RDS, the Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPPS) and all other material considerations. As the relevance and weight to be attached to the RDS, SPPS and all other material considerations is a matter of planning judgement for the decision taker, it would be inappropriate for me to predetermine such considerations in advance.

Ms Kimmins asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will commit to rolling out the 20mph zone initiative outside schools.

(AQW 4532/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am determined to make roads safer around our schools and as a demonstration of my commitment I have allocated £2m to introduce 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools across the North, so that parents, children and staff are safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis.

Ms Ennis asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will commit to advancing the Narrow Water Bridge project.

(AQW 4537/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As outlined previously and as recently as last week in a public statement, I remain committed to advancing the Narrow Water Bridge Project. This is a commitment in New Decade, New Approach and I look forward to engaging with my counterpart in the South in advancing this important cross border project.

I will be pressing to ensure that we can maximise the tourism potential of this cross border region whilst protecting the natural environment in this area of historic and ecological significance. I hope to work with local communities, driving change from the ground up rather than the top down. I look forward to engaging with all stakeholders including the Council and local interest groups.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether her Department intends to produce safe travel guidance for drivers and passengers during COVID-19; and (ii) whether this will also include guidance for taxi drivers.

(AQW 4597/17-22)

Ms Mallon:

- (i) My Department is in the process of finalising safe travel guidance, which will provide advice to public transport users, walkers, cyclists and drivers, and to public transport operators during Northern Ireland's recovery from coronavirus (COVID-19). The guidance will be published in support of the Northern Ireland Executive's five-stage coronavirus recovery plan and will be updated as appropriate to reflect the changing situation as we progress through the various stages of the plan.
- (ii) My department is responsible for regulation of the taxi industry. Provision of guidance for taxi drivers during COVID-19 falls within the remit of the Department for the Economy. I have written to the Minister for the Economy on this matter and she has advised me that she has tasked the NI Engagement Forum to consider whether the existing guidance for employers, employees and self-employed people can be enhanced to strengthen the advice to taxi drivers.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) what discussions have been had; and (ii) recommendations issued regarding protection equipment in public taxis.

(AQW 4629/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Department's remit in relation to taxis is regulatory, and a priority for me during the current public health emergency has been to facilitate the necessary rapid two way communication with the industry on regulatory issues that need to be addressed. My officials and I have been in regular and ongoing contact with the industry, including with individual drivers and operators, augmented by open letters to the industry.

The Department for the Economy is the Department responsible for issuing guidance on protective equipment. I have contacted the Minister for the Economy on a number of occasions seeking an update as to when guidance will be available for the taxi industry.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will suspend the sale of Portavoe Reservoir, in light of fencing being erected and before a right of way has been considered by Ards and North Down Borough Council.

(AQW 4665/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Northern Ireland Water has advised me that the sale of Portavoe Reservoir has been completed. Therefore, consideration of your request to suspend the sale is not possible.

However the fact that the reservoir is now in private ownership, or that fencing has been erected, should not prevent Ards and North Down Borough Council continuing to consider the possible creation of a public path around the reservoir, using its powers under the Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

Ms Kimmins asked the Minister for Infrastructure for a list of schools to be included in the roll-out of the 20mph zone, as detailed in her budget statement.

(AQW 4710/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to have been able to commit funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. As the budget commitment has only been confirmed, priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the locations which will be developed as park and ride sites this financial year.

(AQW 4730/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have allocated £4m for the development of Park and Ride sites in 20/21 and I will shortly be considering my priorities for this programme.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on bringing forward MOT exemptions for Vehicles of Historical Interest that are 40 years old or more.

(AQW 4778/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that this exemption was introduced in Great Britain in 2018 which has led to a difference as to how Vehicles of Historic Interest (VHIs) are treated in GB and NI.

Following requests to align Northern Ireland legislation with that in GB, from both elected representatives and members of the public my Department ran a public consultation exercise in 2019 seeking views as to whether this exemption should be introduced here. Officials have prepared an analysis of responses for my consideration in making a final decision on the way forward.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether there is a timetable to restart driving tests.

(AQW 4865/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) suspended all practical driving tests from 20 March until 22 June 2020 as it is not possible to deliver them safely and adhere to current Public Health Agency advice and guidance on social distancing.

I know this is currently causing inconvenience and concern to some customers. I am keeping this position under constant review with the aim of reintroducing practical driving tests as soon as it is safe to do so, taking account of guidance on social distancing and in line with the Executive's Pathway to Recovery.

My priority is to keep staff and customers safe, for this reason and given the clear guidance from the Department of Health on 2m of social distancing, I do not expect the DVA to be able to commence driving tests from 22 June. However, as soon as practical driving tests can be resumed safely, I will move to do so and ensure there is clear communication to our customers.

I will be providing an update on the resumption of DVA services in the coming days.

Department of Justice

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice what actions her Department is taking to encourage applications from young people living in areas of social deprivation to consider a career in the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 4477/17-22)

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): I want talented young people from across Northern Ireland, who want to make a contribution to their community to come forward and be part of our Police Service. We need people based on their skill sets who can do the job and have the capacity to help people and that includes applicants from areas of social deprivation.

The Department's role is to ensure regulations are in place which help the PSNI meet its business needs and the current recruitment regulations make provision for targeting advertising in places likely to reach under-represented groups.

The Police Service of Northern Ireland has advised that, in advance of the most recent police officer recruitment campaign, a detailed outreach plan was implemented which encompassed a range of local engagement activities and outdoor advertising within working class areas. In addition, advertisements in local press and sporting programmes were also supplemented with a targeted social media campaign to attract those from working class communities.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister of Justice to outline any discussions she has had with the Minister for Infrastructure and the Chief Constable in relation to the capability and equipment necessary to identify those engaged in driving under the influence of drugs and to understand the extent of the problem.

(AQW 4519/17-22)

Mrs Long: I have not had any discussions with the Minister for Infrastructure or the Chief Constable on these matters. The capability and equipment necessary to deal with the identification of those engaged in driving under the influence of drugs, and to understand the extent of the problem, are operational matters for the Chief Constable, who is accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board. I am committed to respecting the operational independence of the Chief Constable and the Northern Ireland Policing Board. You may, therefore, wish to direct your question to the PSNI.

However, my Department is acutely aware of the risks associated with any unsafe usage or abuse of drugs and alcohol. Policing and Community Safety Partnerships (PCSPs) located in each Council area across Northern Ireland work to raise awareness of the dangers of drugs through supporting campaigns such as 'One Pill Can Kill' and through their sponsorship of RAPID (Remove All Prescription and Illegal Drugs) bins located in community locations for the safe and anonymous disposal of prescription and non-prescription drugs. Over 150,000 tablets have been disposed of using these bins over recent years. PCSPs also run road safety awareness campaigns targeting young drivers and highlight the risks of drink and drug driving as part of these schemes.

Further, my Department, in collaboration with the Department of Education, PCSPs and the Lyric Theatre Creative Learning Department, has been delivering a drama production in secondary schools to increase awareness of the harm and potential consequences of taking alcohol and drugs. We are also engaging with the Department of Health on the development of a new Northern Ireland response to tackling the issue of substance misuse and the wider societal harms related to both alcohol and drug misuse.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice what plans are being put in place to reopen court houses to facilitate a return to normal working arrangements.

(AQW 4542/17-22)

Mrs Long: In keeping with the Northern Ireland Executive's plans for recovery, the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is working on a phased recovery from the critical business model implemented as a response to the Covid-19 pandemic and subsequent PHA advice.

It is recognised that the traditional model for courts is very difficult to use in the current circumstances. Members of the public and legal practitioners are advised not to attend court buildings unless directed to do so. The majority of hearings are taking place remotely.

The Lord Chief Justice has initiated a programme of work to commence the incremental recovery of court business. This will see an increase in the number of legal practitioners and court users attending court buildings.

My officials in the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service are currently working through a series of Covid-19 Risk Assessments on our operational buildings to ensure that they comply with PHA guidelines on managing the risk of Covid-19 and are safe for staff, judiciary and court and tribunal users.

Risk assessments have already been completed in the main court venues in Belfast and the next phase is the operational hubs of Lisburn, Dungannon and Londonderry followed by additional administrative venues, which are to be assessed during June.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of animal cruelty cases, involving domestic animals, that have been prosecuted and resulted in (i) a custodial sentence; (ii) a fine; and (iii) other court decisions in (a) 2017/18; (b) 2018/19; and (c) 2019/20.

(AQW 4577/17-22)

Mrs Long: The information requested is not readily available. Prosecutions and convictions data held in Departmental datasets are on the basis of offence description and there is no specific offence relating to domestic animals.

To identify cases which related to domestic animals would require a manual search of case records for offences which involved animal cruelty or offences under the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 and Welfare of Animals (Dog Breeding Establishments and Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013, of which there have been more than 50 dealt with at courts in each of the last three years. We estimate that to locate, retrieve and extract information that might be relevant to your request would involve work of more than the appropriate limit.

The appropriate limit is specified in regulations and for central government is set at £700. There were approximately 230 potentially relevant cases over the period. It is estimated that to search systems manually for relevant information to identify whether offences for which a conviction was handed down related to domestic animals, it will take one member of staff approximately ten minutes per case, giving a total of over 38 hours work. At a cost of £25 per hour, this equates to over £950 which is higher than the appropriate limit.

With the above in mind, information has therefore been provided on the total number of prosecutions and convictions at courts for all animal cruelty offences under relevant Welfare of Animals legislation. The most recent year for which finalised information is available is 2018. Therefore, figures provided for 2019 are provisional.

Prosecutions and Convictions at courts for animal cruelty offences, 2017 – 2019

	2017	2018	2019 (p)
Prosecutions	70	97	69
Convictions	47	67	53
of which	-	-	-
Custodial sentence	4	5	5
Monetary penalty	22	31	24
Other	21	31	24

Note:

- Figures relate to cases prosecuted by PPS on behalf of PSNI or other bodies.
- Figures relate to initial disposal at court only. Results of appeals are not included.
- Figures relate to cases with a prosecution or conviction for at least one animal cruelty related offence under the legislation specified.
- Animal cruelty offences included are relevant offences under Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 and Welfare of Animals (Dog Breeding Establishments and Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013.
- Prosecutions for offences in respect of Wildlife legislation and Livestock regulations are not included, as the question posed is in respect of domestic animals. Similarly, offences under Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1996, Welfare of Animals (Transport) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006, Welfare of Farmed Animals Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 and Welfare of Livestock Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 were also excluded.
- Figures for 2019 are provisional.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of convictions secured for racially motivated crimes, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 4685/17-22)

Mrs Long: The information requested is provided in the following table. The most recent year for which finalised information is available is 2018. Therefore, figures provided for 2019 are provisional.

Cases that resulted in conviction at court, where race was recorded as a motivational factor, 2015 - 2019

Year	No. cases
2015	90
2016	98

Year	No. cases
2017	57
2018	56
2019 (p)	62

Note:

- 1 Figures relate to initial disposals at court. Appeals are not included.
- 2 Figures relate to cases where the motivational factor specified was recorded against at least one offence for which a conviction was handed down.
- 3 Figures relate to cases where race was recorded as a motivational factor, as assessed by Public Prosecution Service.
- 4 (p) - Figures provided for 2019 are provisional.

Department for the Economy

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy whether she plans to introduce any new financial support measures in the case of illness, for self-employed workers and independent contractors, in response to COVID-19.

(AQW 3422/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): As part of my Department's strategy to support people affected by the Covid-19 public health emergency, we are making a number of temporary changes to our benefit processes and legislation to ensure people who need financial help have access to the benefit system when they need it.

To avoid increasing the burden on the health system and the risk of further infection, we are temporarily removing the requirement for fit notes in relation to both Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) and Universal Credit (UC) claims relating to Covid-19 only. Anyone who claims and is infected with Covid-19 or who is required to self-isolate will be treated as having Limited Capability for Work in ESA and UC without being required to provide a fit note or to undergo a Work Capability Assessment.

In addition, to better support the needs of people, particularly the self-employed and those not eligible for Statutory Sick Pay and/or Universal Credit, we are removing the seven waiting days that currently apply to Employment and Support Allowance.

To further support those self-employed people who choose not to self-isolate there will be a temporary suspension of the minimum income floor used to calculate the household's Universal Credit entitlement. This will provide greater financial security during this period.

I will continue to keep these and any other available supports under review.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for the Economy (i) to give her assessment of the impact and competitive disadvantage to businesses in Northern Ireland of the suspension of business rates in England for those companies with a rateable value of less than £51,000 and; (ii) to outline her plans to work with the Minister of Finance to address any impact.

(AQW 3580/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Member will be aware that significant progress on business support has been made in the intervening period since she tabled her question.

To date, my own Department has distributed over £300 million in grants to businesses and the micro-businesses fund has also opened, with over 2,000 applications received. In total, over 40,000 businesses in Northern Ireland will have been eligible to apply for support under all of the Northern Ireland Covid-19 grant schemes. Many businesses have also received support from UK-wide schemes with rates relief being a significant support factor.

As noted above, in the intervening period the Executive has implemented its approach to supporting businesses with relief on rates. Initially the introduction of a 3 months rates holiday, subsequently extended to 4 months, provided an immediate support to businesses. That was subsequently followed by a targeted rate relief scheme that will provide businesses in retail, hospitality, leisure, tourism, childcare and airports with 100% rate relief for the full financial year. It should also be noted that the scheme to be applied over 12 months has a wider scope in NI than it does in other parts of the UK.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for the Economy to detail what her Department can offer to the taxi industry in terms of (i) financial support measures; and (ii) guidance in relation to implementation of social distancing requirements.

(AQW 4019/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Schedules 1 and 3 to the Budget Act 2020 allocate funding to the Department for Infrastructure for "transport licensing, enforcement and regulation", as well as "support for transport services including grants in respect of rail and road passenger services including fare concessions". Taxis are clearly regarded as "transport services".

Within this context I have set out below my own Department's actions, as well as those of the Executive and UK government, in providing financial support and guidance to this industry.

Financial Support measures for the Taxi Industry

The Executive and UK Government has introduced an unprecedented number of interventions and packages of financial support to help those who have been affected by the consequences of Covid-19.

Information on current and evolving support options are being updated continuously on the NI Business Info website:

<https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/campaign/coronavirus-updates-support-your-business>

I understand that over 30 taxi firms which met the eligibility criteria, were able to access the business support grants available in Northern Ireland. In addition taxi firms and self-employed taxi drivers who met the relevant criteria are able to access national support packages including the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme (CJRS) and the Self-Employment Income Support Scheme (SEISS), which have both been extended to October 2020.

Health and Safety Guidance, including social distancing

Neither the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI) nor my Department are responsible for providing specific advice or direction on the application of the public health guidance on social distancing and safe working practice for the transport industry, which includes taxi companies, owners and drivers. To reiterate, these are public health matters, with specific policy responsibility for this industry residing with the Department for Infrastructure.

A safety guidance document, Covid-19: Working Through This Together, A Practical Guide to Making Workplaces Safer', is available on the NI Business Info website and has been informed by input from the Public Health Authority (PHA) and HSENI:

<https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/sites/default/files/Covid-19-Working-Through-This-Together.pdf>

There are a large number and wide variety of businesses and working environments, and an assessment of each has to be fact-specific. It is, therefore, for each business, in light of its own legal advice, to determine whether it can continue to, or start to operate in accordance with the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 and the guidance that has been produced.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for the Economy to outline what agency or Department is the decommissioner of last resort relating to energy projects in the event of an operator of marine infrastructure becoming insolvent and unable to decommission equipment installed under the terms of a marine licence in Northern Ireland.

Mrs Dodds: There are currently no 'decommissioner of last resort' arrangements in place in Northern Ireland. Arrangements to ensure the safe decommissioning of marine infrastructure related to energy projects which have ceased operations are matters for the authorities who may have granted environmental consents for their original construction, including the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs which grants marine licences, and The Crown Estate which awards seabed rights.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for the Economy what impact the announcement of the medical school at Magee Campus will have, if any, on the future of the Coleraine Campus of the Ulster University.

(AQW 4185/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Whilst my Department provides funding and sets the strategic direction for the higher education sector, universities are autonomous institutions responsible for the location of the courses which they provide.

However, my Department continues to be supportive of the provision of higher education at Ulster University's Coleraine Campus.

The University has advised that it remains committed to its regional mission and multi-campus operation, including the on-going success of the Coleraine campus, and it will continue to optimise the capacity of the campus in a coherent and sustainable way.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy to provide her Department's assessment of the number of social enterprises registered as charities, broken down by constituency, that, thus far, have been excluded from COVID-19 Business Support Schemes.

(AQW 4235/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The number of applications from social enterprises registered as charities that have been excluded from the £10,000 or £25,000 Business Support Grant Schemes cannot be provided as the information was not captured in the application process and therefore is not held by the Department.

The status of a business as a social enterprise was not part of the eligibility criteria for either scheme. Eligibility for the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme included the business receiving Small Business Rate Relief or Industrial derating, subject to exclusions, and having a Total Net Annual Value (NAV) of £15,000 or less. For the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme, eligibility was based on the business operating in one of the four eligible sectors, subject to exclusions, as well as having a Total NAV of between £15,001 and £51,000.

It is acknowledged that social enterprises, if receiving Charitable Exemption for rates, would not be able to apply for the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme, and, if they have charitable status, will not qualify for the NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund. Eligibility for the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme would depend on the sector the social enterprise operates within and the Total NAV.

The Department for Communities has announced a £15.5 million fund for charities which is aimed at providing support to all charities who are facing financial difficulties as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for the Economy (i) how many businesses in Upper Bann have received the £10,000 small business support grant; (ii) how many have received the £25,000 retail, hospitality, tourism and leisure grant; and (iii) how many are still awaiting a decision on their application.

(AQW 4336/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: For the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant, 1,453 businesses in the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency have been paid grants as of 1 June 2020. There are 251 small businesses in the constituency, where an application has been made to the online portal with valid IDs, or where bank details are held against a Direct Debit in the Land & Property Services rating system, which are still awaiting a decision on their application.

For the £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant scheme, 205 businesses have been paid grants in the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency as of 3 June 2020. There remain 3 applications from within the constituency currently being processed.

Information on the number of businesses in the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency that have applied for and received payment of the £25,000 grant scheme, are published in the 'Operation of the scheme by council, constituency and sector' section on the following webpage - <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/content/coronavirus-£25000-retail-hospitality-tourism-and-leisure-grant>.

Based upon applications received, this details applications by decision status (paid/rejected/being processed), and provides a facility to interrogate by District Council area, Parliamentary Constituency, and supported sector. This data is updated on a regular basis.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for the Economy to detail any discussions she has had with the Irish Government to coordinate the lifting of lockdown restrictions on hotel operators and caravan parks.

(AQW 4389/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I have had several telephone calls with Shane Ross TD, Minister in the Department of Transport Tourism and Sport, to discuss the impact of COVID-19 on our respective tourism industries. However, our discussions have not focussed on co-ordinating the lifting of lockdown restrictions on hotel operators and caravan parks. These are matters for the Northern Ireland Executive and the Irish Government to consider in the context of our respective COVID-19 lockdown roadmaps.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for the Economy what analysis has been carried out regarding the climate change impact of the proposed Belfast Harbour Estate fossil gas power plant.

(AQW 4479/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: To avoid duplication, I will provide a single answer to cover AQW 4479/17-22 and AQW 4480/17-22 together.

My Department has no responsibility in analysing the climate change or air pollution impacts arising from the planned construction of a new power station.

The Department of Infrastructure granted planning permission for the construction of the 480 Megawatt combined cycle gas turbine generating plant at Belfast Harbour Estate in April 2019. I understand the development was subject to an environmental impact assessment and including compliance with the Pollution Prevention and Control (Industrial Emissions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013.

Any further questions in relation to these assessments would need to be directed to the Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for the Economy what air pollution impact analysis has been carried out regarding the proposed Belfast Harbour Estate fossil gas power plant.

(AQW 4480/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: To avoid duplication, I will provide a single answer to cover AQW 4479/17-22 and AQW 4480/17-22 together.

Any further questions in relation to these assessments would need to be directed to the Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Kimmins asked the Minister for the Economy whether (i) people have any consumer protection under current legislation for users of Liquid Petroleum Gas (LPG) for home heating; and (ii) she can provide figures for the number of households using LPG in comparison with oil fired, electric storage and mains gas central heating.

(AQW 4486/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

- (i) The liquid petroleum gas (LPG) market in Northern Ireland is not regulated by the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation in the same way as the natural gas and electricity markets and there are currently no plans to introduce regulation. Due to the relatively small number of LPG customers in Northern Ireland, the potential benefits of introducing regulation could well be offset by the cost of doing so which would be reflected in consumer bills.

The Consumer Council for Northern Ireland (CCNI) represents consumers' interests on energy matters, monitoring the marketplace on their behalf, and has powers to investigate complaints. CCNI carried out research into consumers' experience of using electricity, oil and gas for home heating in 2019 which included a survey of a small sample of LPG users. Following on from this work, the CCNI has provided evidence to the Competitions and Markets Authority (CMA) on the home heating oil and LPG markets in Northern Ireland and is awaiting confirmation on whether the CMA proposes to undertake an investigation.

- (ii) LPG suppliers have advised that around 12,000 households in Northern Ireland currently use LPG. While there will have been some changes since 2016, the most recent comparison figures available for all types of heating, as noted in the 2016 House Condition Survey (published by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in May 2018), show that 526,190 households (67.5%) were using oil-fired heating; 186,010 households (23.8%) were using natural gas; and 61,060 households (7.8%) were using solid fuel, electric, dual fuel or other fuel (including LPG) in 2016. This report is at the following web link: <https://www.nihe.gov.uk/Working-With-Us/Research/House-Condition-Survey>

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy what engagement there has been between management, staff and trade unions in the six further education colleges to discuss and plan for the academic year ahead, to ensure the safe operation of colleges and the best outcomes for students and young people.

(AQW 4498/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Department has established an Advisory and Oversight Group to work collaboratively with the six Further Education (FE) Colleges, as well as the non-statutory training contractor sector, to prepare for the safe resumption of on-site educational delivery and related activity at all colleges and campuses. The Advisory and Oversight Group includes representatives from the Department for Economy, representatives from the FE Colleges and non-statutory training contractor sectors, and Advisors.

It is the Department's priority that all learners should be enabled to succeed in, and complete, their respective courses, while maintaining their safety and their physical, mental and emotional well-being. In establishing this group, the Department recognises its responsibility to facilitate this by working collaboratively with the FE and non-statutory sectors, and by taking account of the sectors' own skills and expertise in the design and delivery of vocational education. It also recognises that that these plans must be made with appropriate consultation with advisors and stakeholders, and that plans must be communicated clearly and in a timely fashion to ensure not only the safety, but the confidence, of all.

As key stakeholders, we recognise the importance of the full support and participation of the Trade Unions throughout this process. The Department is engaging regularly with all six Trade Unions, and they have also nominated a member from both the University and College Union and Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance to represent them on the Advisory and Oversight Group. The first meeting of the group was held on 9 June 2020

In addition to the engagement through the Advisory and Oversight Group, on 9 June 2020, the Committee for the Economy heard representations from the FE Colleges about a range of issues, including the challenges they face in the year ahead. The Department is committed to ensuring that the FE Colleges and non-statutory contractors are sufficiently supported as they prepare to resume safe operation of educational provision and are enabled to achieve the best outcomes possible for students and young people.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy, as of 3 June 2020, how many applications have been submitted to the Micro-business Hardship Fund.

(AQW 4499/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: There were 2,521 submitted applications to the Micro-business Hardship Fund as at 3 June 2020.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will amend the criteria for the Micro-business Hardship Fund to include sole traders.

(AQW 4501/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: At this point in time no plans are in place to expand the Micro-Business Hardship Fund beyond its current scope.

For any plans to be feasible a budget allocation would need to be available from the Finance Minister that might plausibly cover potential applications from up to approximately 88,000 businesses that (excluding the business owner) have zero employees that might be eligible to apply if the criteria were amended.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister for the Economy what guidance will be provided for photographers, make up artists, musicians and hairdressers that may be asked to work at outdoor weddings of less than 10 people from week commencing 8 June 2020.

(AQW 4517/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: This issue needs to be considered in the current context of the exclusions set out in the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (NI) 2020, and those listed within Part 2 of Schedule 2. Currently the regulations specifically prohibit hairdressers and beauticians from operating. More generally, businesses need to consider if they can safely operate while exercising the social distancing and hygiene guidelines.

Guidance on making workplaces safer prepared by the NI Engagement Forum – ‘Covid-19: Working Through This Together’ – is available on nibusinessinfo.co.uk and is there for all businesses and employers to consult and consider the principles of how to work safely. It is up to each individual business which is allowed to operate to decide if and how these principles can be applied to their specific work and their working environment.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for the Economy what additional COVID-19 funding has been put in place to support the return of our further education colleges.

(AQW 4540/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: For the 2020/21 period, my Department has already allocated a resource budget of £210.0 million to the Further Education sector, representing over 25% of the Department’s resource budget. The allocation includes £22.8 million of additional funding to colleges this year.

In addition capital investment of circa £32.3m has been allocated in the current financial year to enable colleges to progress the delivery of the planned capital works programme. This will also fund essential equipment to deliver critical skills for the Northern Ireland economy and achieve the strategic outcomes which I and the Executive have set.

Additional resource and capital funding is being sought in June monitoring to meet known COVID-19 requirements. The Department is continuing to monitor college funding requirements in relation to COVID-19.

I will continue to consider the specific impacts of COVID-19 on colleges within the context of the Executive’s overall approach to managing the emergency.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy (i) to outline the basis, both financial and otherwise, on which the South Eastern Regional College Professional Skills Centre in Dublin was established; (ii) what involvement the Department had in this; and (iii) what, if any, public funding commitment results from this.

(AQW 4567/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: South Eastern Regional College’s (SERC’s) Professional Skills Centre in Dublin was established on a commercial, profit generating basis.

(ii) The Department’s involvement has been limited to providing advice to SERC on the requirements for setting up a company, as permitted under the Further Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, to manage the activities of the Professional Skills Centre. No approval has yet been given for the establishment of a company.

(iii) There has been no public funding commitment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy for a breakdown of the number of students attending the South Eastern Regional College Professional Skills Centre in Dublin from (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 4568/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: To date 90 learners have attended a range of commercial training courses relating to the Gas Installation industry at the South Eastern Regional College’s Professional Skills Centre in Dublin. These courses include Domestic Gas, Gas Boiler Servicing and Flu Gas analysis. All of the learners are from the Republic of Ireland.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will consider calling on colleges and other public sector organisations within her Department’s remit to continue paying staff who are on zero hour contracts at this time.

(AQW 4585/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: All six Further Education (FE) Colleges have confirmed they are implementing the FE Sector policy in relation to casual/zero hour contracts, which is to pay for any work or hours agreed before the lockdown came into effect (23rd March 2020).

Stranmillis University College, the Department's only Higher Education Non Departmental Public Body, has confirmed that all staff, who would have been due to undertake work had the College been open as usual, will continue to be paid.

I have asked my officials to develop policy proposals in relation to zero hour contracts. In developing these proposals, I will wish to take account of the views of stakeholders. Any proposals to regulate the use of zero hour contracts would be subject to public consultation.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for the Economy how businesses can ascertain whether they are permitted to re-open in line with (i) The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020; and (ii) the Northern Ireland Executive Pathway to Recovery.

(AQW 4590/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: It is the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020 which set the legal position in relation to which businesses can open in which circumstances. Amendments update those regulations to reflect the latest position in terms of the circumstances under which businesses can open. Those regulations and amendments are publicly available on the Department of Health website for all to access. In addition there are supporting communications from the Executive and within NIBusinessinfo (nibusinessinfo.co.uk) that help explain and publicise that update.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy for a weekly breakdown of the number redundancies and redundancy consultations, notified to the Department since the beginning of 2020.

(AQW 4635/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) collects redundancy notifications on behalf of the Department for the Economy. Since the beginning of January 2020, the Department has been notified of 3530 proposed redundancies, originating from 33 different notifications. The table below gives a breakdown of these notifications over the year to date. In order to preserve confidentiality, data has been combined into 4 week bands so that no individual returns can be identified.

Date HR1 received	Number of notifications received	Number of redundancies proposed
28th Dec 19 - 24 Jan 20	3	424

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for the Economy to confirm (i) what equality impact assessment her Department has undertaken to consider employees who are people with dependants in the Coronavirus economic strategy and relaxation of rules enabling people to return to work; and (ii) what support will be in place to ensure people who are parents or carers will be protected so that they are not subject to redundancy or have to resign from employment as a result of lack of childcare or daycare provision.

(AQW 4638/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

Relaxation of Restrictions and Economic Recovery

On 12th May 2020, the Executive announced and published a new phased five-stage plan for slowly moving out of lockdown; 'Coronavirus Executive Approach to Decision Making'. The document sets out the approach the Executive will take when deciding how to ease restrictions in the future, as we move through the phases of relaxation to recovery.

It is for the Executive therefore, through the First and deputy First Minister's Office, to determine when further relaxation measures will be permitted, including those related to the re-opening of employment sectors, and the subsequent return to work of employees.

Details, including the dates on which any further relaxations come into effect, will be provided on a regular basis, and the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 will be updated accordingly.

In making such decisions, the Executive Office will be guided by most up-to-date scientific evidence; the ability of the health service to cope; and the wider impacts on our health, society and the economy.

Further to this Executive announcement, my Department took the lead on a piece of work, focussed on economic recovery. Working with a number of key stakeholders, officials committed to developing a series of papers that would be presented to the Executive. These papers will outline initial thinking on how the economic recovery plan could materialise.

This will include consideration of safe working practices for individual sectors or working environments, the need for continued social distancing and flexible working in the foreseeable future, and the support, financial and otherwise that will be required to enable different businesses and employers to implement such.

My Department has now published the first of these papers; an analysis on how we can take our first steps to restart our economy safely. This is available at: <https://www.economy-ni.gov.uk/publications/charting-course-economy>

My Department is not developing a Coronavirus economic strategy, and therefore, it is not deemed necessary to carry out an equality impact assessment

Childcare and Day care provision

Lead policy and operational responsibility for childcare and daycare provision in Northern Ireland resides with the Department of Health and the Department of Education.

Obviously, this will be a key factor and integral to the work of the Executive in implementing further relaxation measures and implementing the economic recovery plan.

The Executive will take a collective approach therefore, to ensure that adequate childcare and daycare provision is in place, as soon as this is safe and practicable to do so, and this will be reflected in the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020.

Employment Rights

With regard to employment protection for employees and workers with caring responsibilities, Northern Ireland has strong and robust employment law, whereby all employees are protected by law against unfair treatment and dismissal.

Redundancy is a form of dismissal, and where an employee is dismissed for exercising or trying to exercise a statutory employment right, they will have been automatically unfairly dismissed. An employee's statutory employment rights include but are not limited to:

- maternity, paternity or adoption leave
- parental leave
- time off for dependants
- the right to request flexible working arrangements

Employers must use a fair and objective way of selecting people to make redundant. If the reasons an employee is selected for redundancy are unfair then they will have been unfairly dismissed.

Anyone who finds themselves in this position may consider contacting the Labour Relations Agency Workplace Information Service on 03300 555 300 for free, confidential and impartial information. In addition, the Law Centre NI provides free, independent, specialist legal advice on employment rights. The Law Centre can be contacted on their advice line on 028 9024 4401 or by email: employmentadvice@lawcentreni.org

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for the Economy whether she would consider introducing paid carers leave as envisaged in the EU Work-life Balance Directive, to help support women with dependants.

(AQW 4679/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: It is my long term vision to build on existing Northern Ireland employment law with measures that will introduce better support for working families. Leave for those in work who also undertake a caring role will be considered as part of this strategic process.

I am keen that we start to make progress in developing proposals for Employment Relations and Law in NI. To that end I am interested in hearing the views of all interested stakeholders and would encourage you to participate in any relevant forthcoming consultations.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for the Economy whether her Department has given any consideration to bringing forward short-term measures to help school children and students living in rural not-spot areas to have access to adequate broadband to ensure they are not at an educational disadvantage.

(AQW 4707/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: My Department fully appreciates the impact of poor broadband on local communities, particularly in rural areas of Northern Ireland. I also recognise that the Covid-19 crisis has highlighted the greater challenges faced by those with poor broadband coverage, especially for those tasked with home schooling responsibilities.

You will be aware that my Department has developed Project Stratum to utilise £165m available funding to improve broadband connectivity for those premises across Northern Ireland currently unable to access infrastructure capable of delivering broadband services of 30 Mbps or greater.

This is a transformational project which has the potential to positively impact the lives of citizens and the productivity of businesses, by providing the infrastructure to support access to broadband services. The target intervention area consists of just under 79,000 premises, some 97% of which are rural, defined as NISRA Band H – settlements of fewer than 1,000 people or open countryside. Almost 9,773 of these premises are in the West Tyrone Constituency.

Analysis undertaken by the Department and advice from independent advisors, indicates that it is not possible to prioritise specific geographical areas, without potentially sacrificing overall coverage, increasing costs and slowing delivery.

While the precise number and location of premises that will directly benefit will not be known until after contract award, the aspirations of the Department continue to be to maximise broadband coverage from the funding available, and to secure an outcome that closes the broadband connectivity gap that exists in Northern Ireland compared with other parts of the UK. It is not possible to fast track the procurement or the required governance procedures, however, the project team continues to manage the project against an ambitious timeframe aligned to industry requirements.

The closing date for submission of tenders for Project Stratum has now passed. The evaluation of bids is underway, with contract award expected in late September 2020.

There are also a number of other UK Government broadband schemes operating in Northern Ireland and available to both citizens and businesses. These are listed below and links have been provided:

Universal Service Obligation: <https://www.ofcom.org.uk/phones-telecoms-and-internet/advice-for-consumers/broadband-iso-need-to-know>:

Rural Gigabit Connectivity Scheme: <https://gigabitvoucher.culture.gov.uk/rural/>.

I will also take this opportunity to provide an update on the range of initiatives that the telecommunications industry, led by the Department for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS), has implemented to ensure that customers, especially the vulnerable, can keep connected with work, family, friends and important services during the Covid-19 crisis. The following links relate to recently published initiatives:

- Vulnerable consumers DCMS notice - here and further information here.
- Information on mobile connectivity from Mobile UK - here (including links through to the pages of the major mobile operators – each operator has different packages of support available).
- You may be aware of the raising up of voice minutes included in packages and raising data limits as a boost to staying connected. Ofcom has pulled together some great advice under its 'stay connected' banner which can be found here.

In terms of vulnerable consumers who may be having difficulty with payments, the telecommunications providers are very keen for these consumers to make direct contact with them so that they can make arrangements for appropriate support at this time.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for the Economy to detail what financial aid, other than from Student Finance NI, would be available to biomedical graduates who wish to pursue graduate-entry level veterinary medicine in Scotland.
(AQW 4757/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: My Department is responsible for Higher Education support provided through Student Finance NI. Graduates should contact their University who may be able to advise what additional financial aid may be available.

Dr Archibald asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on her Department's reviews of the petroleum and minerals licensing regimes.
(AQW 4807/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The strategic reviews of both petroleum and mineral licensing policy are ongoing. Given the importance of these reviews, in terms of informing our future policy on both petroleum and mineral licensing, the decision has been taken to commission two separate pieces of independent, NI specific research into the economic, societal and environmental impacts of exploration for, and extraction of, our petroleum and minerals resources.

You will be aware that my Department is currently considering two petroleum licence applications; in order to inform decisions on issues raised in public consultations on those applications, the decision has been taken to commission the research into the impacts of petroleum exploration and extraction first.

The tender for the petroleum research was published on 9 June and work is ongoing to finalise the specification for the minerals research, with a view to publishing this tender in the coming months.

The outputs from the two research projects will be used to inform the development of future policy positions on petroleum and minerals licensing.

Dr Archibald asked the Minister for the Economy to detail how much of the allocated funding was spent on (i) the COVID-19 Small Business Grant Scheme; and (ii) the COVID-19 £25,000 Business Support Grant Scheme for retail, hospitality, leisure and tourism businesses.
(AQW 4809/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: As of 15 June 2020, 23,152 payments have been issued under the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme totalling £231,520,000. For the £25,000 Retail Hospitality Leisure and Tourism grant scheme, 2,917 payments have been issued totalling £71,695,000.

To note under both schemes, a number and value of payments is subject to variation as some payments may fail, be voided or be returned.

Written Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

Ms McLaughlin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) for an update on the use of the former Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly; (ii) how many jobs were promised to have been created on the site (a) by Government; and (b) by the private sector; and (iii) how many people are currently employed on the site by the (a) public; and (b) private sectors. (AQW 4711/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): In 2016 the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (DAERA) confirmed it intended to relocate at least 320 posts to its new nine acre Head Quarters site on Shackleton, Ballykelly by 2021. A total of 334 staff have relocated to date and a further 73 are due to move by 2021. This will bring the total staff compliment to 407 which will achieve full occupancy of the building. However, in light of COVID-19 and the ongoing need for social distancing measures, the number of staff located in the building will be subject to further review.

On purchasing 721 acres of the Shackleton site in 2016, MJM Group committed to creating 100 jobs on site with 21 currently employed. Planning applications for a new Data Centre and a Manufacturing Unit on Shackleton have been submitted and MJM is pursuing several other significant opportunities.

Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, in light of his decision to give £360,000 support to the aquaculture sector, whether he will review his decision not to offer financial support to the Lough Neagh eel fishing industry.

(AQW 4445/17-22)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): In terms of financial support for families, many fishermen are self-employed and may be eligible for the self-employed support scheme or for Universal Credit.

The Department has increased the European Maritime Fisheries Funding (EMFF) grant for glass eel stocking into Lough Neagh, from 50% to 60%, thereby reducing this cost to the LNFCS.

My officials will meet with the Lough Neagh Fishermen's Cooperative Society to consider options following the recent amendment to EMFF funding which may provide a further avenue of support for the fishermen affected by the cessation of fishing.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) what plans he has for the reopening of Touring in the Trees facilities for self-contained motor homes; and (ii) what assessment exists to demonstrate that this restriction remains necessary.

(AQW 4453/17-22)

Mr Poots: You will be aware of the Executive's five stage recovery plan, published 12 May 2020, following which the initial date of 20 July was agreed for the re-opening of tourist accommodation, depending on the rate of transmission of Covid-19.

The NI Executive subsequently agreed, on 15 June 2020, to bring forward the re-opening of caravan parks, camping sites and self-catering tourist accommodation to 26 June 2020.

My Department will reopen its caravan parks, including touring in the trees facilities, from the 26 June 2020, in line with the Executive's decision.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail what financial aid, other than from Student Finance NI, would be available to biomedical graduates who wish to pursue graduate-entry level veterinary medicine in Scotland.

(AQW 4813/17-22)

Mr Poots: The Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs' role in financing higher education is limited to support for those availing of the courses provided by CAFRE, in Northern Ireland, and the awarding of post-graduate research grants.

The Department has no mechanism to make financial aid available to students wishing to pursue other courses (including veterinary medicine, graduate entry or undergraduate) at other institutions, either in the United Kingdom or further afield.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of the impact of leaks, from slurry tanks into water courses, on environmental quality and biodiversity.

(AQW 4866/17-22)

Mr Poots: There is no doubt that if slurry is incorrectly managed and stored within tanks then there is an increased risk of leakage leading to significant environmental impacts.

Slurry leakage into water courses can give rise to higher levels of ammonia, increased eutrophication and lower levels of dissolved oxygen which can contribute to an overall increase in nutrient loading. This will have a negative impact on water quality and in more serious cases it can kill fish and other freshwater or marine life.

Leaking slurry tanks can also have wider biodiversity impacts on sensitive habitats such as fens and bogs, adversely altering the plant community composition in those specialised habitats due to nutrient enrichment. This favours more generalist plants and animals at the expense of specialised, range-restricted species.

My Department carry out intensive routine biological and chemical monitoring in rivers across Northern Ireland. Where water quality is assessed as being at less than good status they will investigate the pressures impacting on that water course.

In response to specific pollution events further investigative monitoring may also be carried out to assess oxygen levels in the river, to ascertain if there is any impact on invertebrate life in the river and to help identify the source of the pollution.

My Department, through CAFRE and the Knowledge Advisory Service, provides advice, guidance and training on slurry tank maintenance to reduce the risk of leakage, while checks for leakage from tanks form part of the routine cross-compliance inspections undertaken on farms by NIEA. In cases where a leaking slurry tank causes pollution to a water way enforcement action may also be taken under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) when the regulation procedure for slurry tanks was last reviewed; and (ii) , in the interests of environmental protection and water quality, whether he has any plans to review this procedure in the future.

(AQW 4867/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) Slurry storage tanks are regulated under the Nutrients Action Programme (NAP) which was last reviewed in 2019. The current Nutrients Action Programme Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2019 came into effect on 11 April 2019, and are in place for the period 2019 – 2022. As a result of the 2019 review, additional requirements to the previous NAP 2015-2018 were introduced for above ground slurry tanks constructed after 1 January 2020. These requirements are for new above ground slurry tanks to be sited at least 50m from any waterway into which slurry could enter if it were to escape and for the tanks to be covered.
- (ii) The NAP is reviewed every four years and the next review is planned for 2022.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 4344/17-22, (i) when he will publish the Strategic Investment Board report entitled an Analysis of NI Residual Waste arisings to 2035'; and (ii) for a full list of the stakeholders consulted by the Strategic Investment Board and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency in the preparation of the report.

(AQW 4868/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) I wish to consider the report in detail and as waste arisings closely align with economic activity, this may necessitate further modelling by SIB to address post-Covid projections for the economy and broader recovery requirements. Consequently I have not yet set a date for publishing this report.
- (ii) In preparing the report, SIB consulted with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (licensing and permitting teams), the Department for Infrastructure (major plant planning applications team) and the planning departments of the 11 Councils. Current Illegal Waste Sites Identified

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) to detail the locations of all current illegal waste sites that have been identified by his Department, (ii) to detail the approximate tonnage of waste that are contained within each of the illegal sites identified by his Department; and (iii) for his assessment of which of the illegal sites is best dealt with in situ rather than onward removal and transportation.

(AQW 4869/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- i) My officers currently have 81 open enforcement cases of alleged waste offending throughout Northern Ireland, ranging from unauthorised landfills to unlicensed vehicle breakers. I am not in a position to detail the location of individual incidents, as doing so could compromise ongoing and potential legal proceedings.
- ii) Calculation of site waste tonnages is often a complicated process as the volume of waste is dependent on a number of factors such as the type of waste, how the waste has been deposited, ability to take volumetric measurements, the availability of historical map data, etc., and in some cases, sites do not lend themselves to tonnage calculations at all. In addition to this, only after a site investigation has reached an advanced stage where all available information has been collated, will my officers estimate waste volume. Given these constraints and tonnages yet to be calculated, I can confirm that of the 81 sites, 28 have tonnage data available. The total tonnage of waste contained in these 28 site is estimated to be 163,065 tonnes. This figure excludes the infilled waste at the Mobuoy Road site in Londonderry.
- iii) I am unable to give you an assessment on individual sites, for the reasons set out in point i). However, I can assure you that for any type of illegal waste disposal the risks to the environment are assessed and appropriate remediation is determined.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) whether he is aware of the leisure use of Lough Neagh by jet ski users, the disturbance to other users of the lough and to protected wildlife in a nature conservation area; (ii) whether he has plans to strengthen regulatory enforcement against the use of Lough Neagh and other nature conservation areas by jet ski users.

(AQW 4877/17-22)

Mr Poots: My Department is aware of leisure use of Lough Neagh by jet ski users, but has not received any complaints regarding such activity in respect of Lough Neagh and Lough Beg Area of Special Scientific Interest.

My Department has no current plans to change the regulatory enforcement powers relating to activities which have the potential to have a detrimental effect on the features of this or other designated sites.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) whether he is aware of the leisure use of Benone beach by quad bike users, the disturbance to other users of the beach and to protected wildlife in a nature conservation area; (ii) whether he has plans to strengthen regulatory enforcement against the use of Benone beach and other beaches by quad bike users.

(AQW 4878/17-22)

Mr Poots: My Department is aware of quad bike activity within Magilligan Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI), which includes Benone Beach, and have been liaising with Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council who manage beach access at this site, as well as other relevant parties in respect of such activities.

My Department has no current plans to change the regulatory enforcement powers relating to activities which have the potential to have a detrimental effect on the features of this or other designated sites.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 4257/17-22, to outline how the Office for Environmental Protection will be independent from government.

(AQW 4916/17-22)

Mr Poots: The Environment Bill will establish the Office for Environmental Protection (OEP) as a body independent of government. The Bill provides for the body to have its own chief executive and board independent of government, hold its own assets, employ its own staff and manage its own budget.

The principal objective, functions and duties of the OEP are set out in the Bill, including the requirement for the body to prepare a strategy setting out how it will exercise its statutory functions. This will include the preparation of the OEP's enforcement policy and while the Bill provides guidance on what should be contained in the strategy, neither Defra nor DAERA will have any direct role in its preparation. The OEP will report independently to Parliament and the Assembly. The Secretary of State and DAERA also have a statutory duty to have regard to the need to protect the OEP's independence.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 4257/17-22, to outline a timeframe on issuing a discussion document to gauge stakeholder views on how environmental plans, principles and governance should be dealt with in the future.

(AQW 4917/17-22)

Mr Poots: It was my intention to publish this discussion document earlier this year but unfortunately, as a result of the measures required to control the spread of Covid-19, I decided that its publication should be deferred until: (a) my Department had sufficient resources available; and (b) stakeholders were in a better position to respond. While the most acute phase of the Covid-19 emergency has now passed, resources remain stretched within DAERA and many of our key stakeholder organisations have significant numbers of staff still on furlough.

While I am not in a position to confirm a timeframe for the publication of the discussion document, I am hopeful that it can issue sooner rather than later.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) why £1.5 million was cut from the research & development and staff budgets relating to climate change for the 2020/21 financial year; (ii) for his assessment on how this decision will impact his Department's efforts to respond to the climate change threat.

(AQW 4922/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) As part of the 2020-21 June Monitoring Round, my Department declared £1.5m of the Climate Change Capital budget as part of the £12.7m total DAERA Capital reduced requirements. The £1.5m included £1.0m for ICT (the development of an ICT platform to support Climate Change) and £0.5m for Research & Development (R&D). This budget was allocated in late March at the time the COVID-19 pandemic was developing and DAERA has not been able to proceed as anticipated. My Department will of course keep this matter under review as the year progresses.
- (ii) Although the above funding was declared as a reduced requirement my Department will still take forward tackling plastic pollution to support the UK Plastics Pact and establishing a grants panel for future capital funding to tackle marine litter. DAERA will also continue to carry out its duties to meet the requirements of the UK Climate change Act 2008, which will include actions to adapt to a changing climate and reduce emissions to sectors for which my Department has responsibility, for example, in agriculture, land use change and forestry, and waste sectors. DAERA continues to fund Climate NI to increase adaptation awareness and action in the Non-Government Sectors and is also exploring how the Climate NI platform could be used to provide Climate Change Mitigation advice and guidance to Non-Government sectors including Local Government.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on funding opportunities for Lough Neagh commercial eel fishermen.

(AQW 4958/17-22)

Mr Poots: My officials have met CEO Pat Close and other representatives of the Lough Neagh Fishermen's Co-operative Society (LNFCS) and are working on the details of a scheme under the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund (EMFF) (Regulation 2020/560- Article 33) which might offer some assistance to Lough Neagh fishermen. I hope to make an announcement on a scheme in due course.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on the rural policy framework.

(AQW 4960/17-22)

Mr Poots: My officials are currently finalising the draft Rural Policy Framework document and preparing to launch an online consultation in July. The five stakeholder working groups, established to inform the framework development, have recently been afforded the opportunity to review their reports in response to the impact of Covid 19. Officials are also preparing to take forward a number of pilot schemes this year that would support rural businesses and community needs and further inform the framework development and any future programme requirements.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs how much his Department has spent on producing material in Irish, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4965/17-22)

Mr Poots: The information which is currently available shows that the Department has spent a total of £2,616.00 on translation costs between the financial years beginning on 01 April 2017 and ending on 31 March 2020.

Below details the breakdown to the following financial years –

- 2017 – 2018: £2,616.00
- 2018 – 2019: Nil
- 2019 – 2020: Nil

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the extent of climate change-related research and development in his Department.

(AQW 5001/17-22)

Mr Poots: My Department has funded or co-funded 21 climate change related projects over the last five years. This funding supports a broad range of projects, including research into developing a better understanding of greenhouse gas emissions from livestock enterprises; research on carbon sequestration in our soils; and modelling potential impacts of climate change on land and marine environments to inform policy development.

A list of these research project titles is provided below:

List of climate change related research projects and those with climate change elements / benefits funded by DAERA

Programme	Title
DAERA Evidence and Innovation programme	Evaluation of the potential for changing land use practices to encourage soil and grass carbon sequestration
	Research to support development of an Agricultural Land Use Strategy
	Improving forest productivity and exploiting opportunities
	Arable weeds in Northern Ireland - current situation and potential threat to efficiency of arable production systems
	Baseline and evaluation study: Farm Business Improvement Scheme - Capital Scheme. Data analysis to inform the policy around future capital investment schemes and a scoping study to develop a framework for the longer term evaluation of the capital scheme (study2)
	Strong Report: C2: Crops: Increased research and development work, through DAERA, to examine crop performance and potential for alternative land uses in floodplain
	Evaluation of ammonia and greenhouse gas emissions from the livestock production sector in Northern Ireland
	Targeted agri-environmental landscape interventions exploiting SRC willow to mitigate the negative effects of sustainable intensification on water quality, energy use and the land-use nexus.
	Developing the resilience and resistance of Northern Ireland's tree species against pests, pathogens and climatic effects
	Effects of reseeded and liming on soil carbon stocks under intensively managed grassland in Northern Ireland
DAERA PhD funded (2015 – 2019)	Assessing the resilience of conservation objectives to climate change predictions for the critically endangered D. intermedia
	Effects of long- term nutrient fertilisation and land use change on the carbon sequestration potential of agricultural grasslands.
	Effects of land use practices on C sequestration and their implications for tackling GHG emissions for the agri-food sector in NI.
DAERA / DAFM funded	Smartsward: Future. Proofing Irish livestock sustainability
	Mine: Manipulation and Integration of Nitrogen Emissions
	Irish Land Use Emission and Sequestration Support Tool
	METH-ABATE: Development and validation of novel technologies to reduce methane emissions from pasture based Irish agricultural systems
	FitForests: Response of tree species to climate change
	SuHeGuide: Food based dietary guidelines for sustainable and healthy lifestyles
INTERREG Va	MarPAMM: Marine Protected Area Management and Monitoring
	COMPASS: Collaborative Oceanography and Monitoring for Protected Areas and Species

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what plans he has produced to assist with the development of the green and low-carbon economy sectors as part of the post-COVID-19 recovery.

(AQW 5002/17-22)

Mr Poots: Covid-19 recovery will involve sustainability, specifically economic, social and environmental, at the heart of everything that we do. I am recommending economic renewal that recognises the importance of our environment and advocates green growth as a pathway to a sustainable future.

In my recent Assembly statement, I set out my concept to achieve a healthy environment alongside a healthy bottom line for our economy, as part of the recovery from Covid-19. Using a co-design approach, I have asked Dr Denis McMahon, DAERA Permanent Secretary, to lead development of a multi-decade Green Growth Strategy and delivery framework, in partnership with other Departments, Local Government and stakeholders from across the business and voluntary sectors. The outcome will be a framework of programmes which will help deliver a resilient recovery through a greener, low carbon and circular economy for Northern Ireland.

To underpin this, I will establish and lead an inter-ministerial group to help embed Green Growth throughout all future Government policies and I very much look forward to engaging with colleagues on this.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on determining the facility requirements for (i) the points of entry; and (ii) potential border control posts.

(AQW 5049/17-22)

Mr Poots: My Department is currently scoping and implementing a cross-cutting programme of work as follows:

- understanding the processes required to reduce friction on trade as far as is possible while meeting the legal requirements of our statutory role which is to carry out Sanitary and Phytosanitary (SPS) checks at the Points Of Entry;
- understanding the IT requirements that will facilitate movement of trade while seeking to minimise the impacts on traders;
- understanding the minimum requirements for each of the designated or potentially designated points of entry to Northern Ireland that will meet EU specifications.

My Department's focus is to determine the facility requirements for the NI Points of Entry by the end of June. My officials are engaging with Senior Port Authority Officials and a range of key stakeholders to ensure appropriate measures are in place to facilitate the movement of goods and products between GB and Northern Ireland whilst complying with the statutory requirements of the Northern Ireland Protocol. I have been clear that I wish to implement the Northern Ireland Protocol in a way that maximises the flow of trade, and which works for Northern Ireland's businesses and citizens.

Department for Communities

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister for Communities what Housing Executive improvement schemes are planned for the East Londonderry constituency in the next three years, broken down by area.

(AQW 2370/17-22)

Ms Hargey (The Minister for Communities): The 3 tables below set out the Housing Executive's maintenance schemes for the requested constituency over the next three years.

It should be noted that:

- These schemes are subject to the availability of finance, the necessary scheme approvals being obtained and the appropriate Contractor capacity being available to carry out the works.
- Some of the schemes will include dwellings that are not in the constituency.

Table 1

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities (i) what was the total cost of running the former 26 local councils in their last full year of operation; and (ii) what was the total cost of running the current 11 local councils in the last year for which figures are available.

(AQW 2446/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The total cost of running councils is taken as meaning the net cost of services as disclosed in the annual accounts for councils, which is also the figure submitted to the Office of National Statistics in council expenditure returns.

- (i) The total net cost of services for 26 councils in 2014-15 was £742,298k.
(ii) The total net cost of services for 11 councils in 2018-19 was £790,994k.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the role carried out by the Local Government Commissioner for Standards in investigating complaints.

(AQW 2631/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I propose to answer AQWs 2631/17-22, 2632/17-22, 2633/17-22 and 2634/17-22 together.

The Local Government Act 2014 which makes provisions for the ethical standards framework for district councillors, gives the Local Government Commissioner for Standards (the Commissioner) authority to investigate and adjudicate on allegations that councillors have breached the Local Government Code of Conduct for Councillors (the Councillors' Code). All complaints regarding alleged breaches of the Code must be sent to the Commissioner's Office for consideration.

In accordance with section 56 of the 2014 Act, the procedure for conducting an investigation under section 55 of the 2014 Act is to be such as the Commissioner considers appropriate in the circumstances of the case. Section 56 also provides that the Commissioner must give any person who is the subject of an investigation an opportunity to comment on any allegation that the person has failed, or may have failed, to comply with the Councillors' Code.

I have no role to play in the process established by the Commissioner. This process is intended to provide confidence to the rate payers that councillors' behaviour is in keeping with the standards laid out in the Councillors' Code.

The Ombudsman is required, under section 46 of the Public Services Ombudsman Act (NI) 2016 (the 2016 Act), to lay a report annually before the Assembly. Section 63 of the 2014 Act, as amended by paragraph 5 of Schedule 7 to the 2016 Act, requires the Ombudsman to include in their annual report an account of their functions carried out as the Commissioner.

With regard to the Commissioner investigating matters not detailed in a formal complaint, section 55(1)(b) of the 2014 Act provides that the Commissioner may only investigate such matters where they have come to their attention during an investigation conducted as a result of a complaint being made.

The order in which investigations are conducted is a matter for the Commissioner to determine.

Departmental officials are carrying out preliminary work on an evaluation and review of local government legislation. This review will include the ethical standards framework set out in Part 9 of the 2014 Act.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the scope around which the Local Government Commissioner for Standards uses powers to investigate matters not detailed in a formal complaint.
(AQW 2632/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I propose to answer AQWs 2631/17-22, 2632/17-22, 2633/17-22 and 2634/17-22 together.

The Local Government Act 2014 which makes provisions for the ethical standards framework for district councillors, gives the Local Government Commissioner for Standards (the Commissioner) authority to investigate and adjudicate on allegations that councillors have breached the Local Government Code of Conduct for Councillors (the Councillors' Code). Section 56 also provides that the Commissioner must give any person who is the subject of an investigation an opportunity to comment on any allegation that the person has failed, or may have failed, to comply with the Councillors' Code.

I have no role to play in the process established by the Commissioner. This process is intended to provide confidence to the rate payers that councillors' behaviour is in keeping with the standards laid out in the Councillors' Code.

The Ombudsman is required, under section 46 of the Public Services Ombudsman Act (NI) 2016 (the 2016 Act), to lay a report annually before the Assembly. Section 63 of the 2014 Act, as amended by paragraph 5 of Schedule 7 to the 2016 Act, requires the Ombudsman to include in their annual report an account of their functions carried out as the Commissioner.

With regard to the Commissioner investigating matters not detailed in a formal complaint, section 55(1)(b) of the 2014 Act provides that the Commissioner may only investigate such matters where they have come to their attention during an investigation conducted as a result of a complaint being made.

The order in which investigations are conducted is a matter for the Commissioner to determine.

Departmental officials are carrying out preliminary work on an evaluation and review of local government legislation. This review will include the ethical standards framework set out in Part 9 of the 2014 Act.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities whether complaints made to the Local Government Commissioner for Standards are investigated chronologically or assessed against severity.
(AQW 2633/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I propose to answer AQWs 2631/17-22, 2632/17-22, 2633/17-22 and 2634/17-22 together.

The Local Government Act 2014 which makes provisions for the ethical standards framework for district councillors, gives the Local Government Commissioner for Standards (the Commissioner) authority to investigate and adjudicate on allegations that councillors have breached the Local Government Code of Conduct for Councillors (the Councillors' Code). All complaints regarding alleged breaches of the Code must be sent to the Commissioner's Office for consideration.

In accordance with section 56 of the 2014 Act, the procedure for conducting an investigation under section 55 of the 2014 Act is to be such as the Commissioner considers appropriate in the circumstances of the case. Section 56 also provides that the Commissioner must give any person who is the subject of an investigation an opportunity to comment on any allegation that the person has failed, or may have failed, to comply with the Councillors' Code.

I have no role to play in the process established by the Commissioner. This process is intended to provide confidence to the rate payers that councillors' behaviour is in keeping with the standards laid out in the Councillors' Code.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities whether she has any plans to reform legislation regarding the investigation of complaints made against local councillors.

Ms Hargey: I propose to answer AQWs 2631/17-22, 2632/17-22, 2633/17-22 and 2634/17-22 together.

The Local Government Act 2014 which makes provisions for the ethical standards framework for district councillors, gives the Local Government Commissioner for Standards (the Commissioner) authority to investigate and adjudicate on allegations that councillors have breached the Local Government Code of Conduct for Councillors (the Councillors' Code). Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities what protections exist to enable separation of work duties and private life for local councillors.

(AQW 2709/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Councillors provide an important service and their role covers a wide range of functions which are provided at irregular times of day. It is therefore important that councillors take time to enjoy their private life away from their work duties.

The Councillors' Code of Conduct recognises this separation. Paragraphs 2.7 to 2.9 of the Councillors' Code set out when the Code applies. Briefly, this is when a councillor acts, claims to act or gives the impression of acting as a councillor or sits on an outside body to which they were appointed by the council.

However, there may be circumstances in which a councillor's behaviour in their private life could reasonably be regarded as bringing their council into disrepute and in these circumstances the Councillors' Code would apply.

The Local Government Commissioner for Standards (the Commissioner) has the responsibility for determining whether the Councillors' Code applies in a particular circumstance and has, in their Guidance for Councillors, recognised that Councillors are entitled to privacy in their personal lives. A copy of the Commissioner's guidance is available at <https://nipso.org.uk/site/wp-content/uploads/2018/02/Guidance-for-Councillors-from-the-Northern-Ireland-Commissioner-for-Complaints-April-2017-2-1.pdf>.

The issue of when the Councillors' Code applies, has been considered by the High Court. A councillor appealed the Commissioner's decision to suspend him to the High Court. The decision of the High Court at appeal-

- referred to the guidance of the Commissioner where it gives examples of behaviour which may constitute bringing a council into disrepute, and
- referred to the Commissioner's consideration of the guidance.

A copy of the decision is available at - <https://judiciaryni.uk/judicial-decisions/2018-niqb-62>.

The work life balance of a councillor is important and councillors should take steps to mitigate their public duties merging into, or conflicting with, their private and personal lives.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what is the average time taken for the Charity Commission to register charities, from first application to registration, over the last five years.

(AQW 2722/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland does not hold information in a way which would readily allow a calculation of the average time taken from submission of an Expression of Intent to registration. This is due to a range of factors including the complexity of individual cases and the volume of cases in progress at any point in time. A further complicating factor is the McBride Judgment of 2019, and subsequent Court of Appeal ruling, which have resulted in the Charity Commission operating through a Committee, making emergency decisions. My officials are currently working with the Charity Commission to explore the implications of these Judgments and I have asked them to consider options for any necessary changes to future operations, including the registration process.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities (i) for her Department's definition of objective need; (ii) what criteria she will use when allocating funding to prioritise issues identified as delivering an objective need; and (iii) whether she will publish this criteria.

(AQW 2723/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I am committed to ensuring that my Department's resources are targeted where need is greatest, based on sound evidence and objective need. An agreed definition of objective need may be required as it is not currently defined in legislation. However, it will be challenging to agree a definition that fits all circumstances and, it is possible, the definition will change depending on the need we are trying to address.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities (i) how many Housing Executive homes were found to have the presence of mould and fungus in each of the last three financial years; (ii) whether any of this mould was tested; (iii) whether any of the moulds tested were found to be dangerous to residents; and (iv) what is being done to resolve this issue.

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive does not generally undertake testing when mould is found, but offers advice to tenants to remove the mould and prevent it from returning.

However, the Housing Executive takes complaints of mould seriously and, when actions taken by its response maintenance staff have not resolved the situation, it appoints expert consultants to carry out investigations to survey properties, identify the cause and provide recommendations. Once completed, a planned scheme can proceed to remedy this situation. These works could be a combination of improved ventilation, insulation and heating, along with providing advice to the tenant to avoid reoccurrence. Whilst the Housing Executive cannot provide statistics relating to exactly how many properties have had these investigations carried out, it is currently progressing three schemes as planned works to deal with damp and mould.

The Housing Executive has also recently awarded contracts to insulate the No Fines stock to help avoid and remedy damp and mould issues which can be prevalent in this form of construction. The term "no fines" refers to a type of concrete found in older dwellings of non-standard construction that does not contain fine aggregates.

The Response Maintenance teams also educate tenants on lifestyle choices which can contribute to the causes of condensation, which can frequently cause mould.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities (i) how many people on Universal Credit have been notified that they have received an overpayment as a result of system errors in the last 12 months; (ii) what is the average amount of overpayments made as a result of system error; (iii) what action she is taking to ensure these errors stop; and (iv) whether she will bring in a fair method of repayment or options to cancel debt to ensure people are not faced with further hardship as a result of mistakes made in the Universal Credit processes.

(AQW 2725/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The information requested under (i) and (ii) is not currently available.

As with other social security benefits, a single system, developed and managed by the Department for Work and Pensions, is used to collect and store Universal Credit data. We are working closely with the Department for Work and Pensions to improve the range of data available to us.

It is worth reflecting that Universal Credit brought together six former benefits into one new process. It involved a substantial amount of training for our people delivering the service from our 35 Jobs and Benefits offices alongside our Service Centres in Foyle, Newry and Belfast. .

Whilst the new UC system is more automated than any of the benefit systems it replaced, there is still a degree of manual intervention required. It is also worth noting that this is truly an agile system, it is still being developed and system changes are introduced on a fortnightly basis. We invest significantly to keep our people aware of these changes and we have a Service Improvement Lead in every office to support that local learning and development.

My Department is obliged to consider the recoverability of all Universal Credit overpayments, irrespective of how the overpayment arose. This is covered under Section 69ZB of the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992. However, we can and do apply discretion in respect of the issue of recoverability.

We advise all people with an overpayment to contact our Debt Management Centre in the first instance. This is their opportunity to tell us how recovery of the overpayment is impacting them, either financially or through ill-health. All cases are dealt with on their individual merits.

I am keen to make sure we deliver a service that is empathetic and protects the most vulnerable in our society. I can assure you that we will continue to review our approach here to make sure it meets that test.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities what progress has been made to establish a child funeral fund in order to ease the burden on families suffering the loss of children, as outlined in New Decade, New Approach.

(AQW 2801/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Officials within my Department continue to work on the development of a Child Funeral Fund including identifying the correct legislative vehicle. It is anticipated that proposed legislation for this fund shall be presented to the Assembly in due course.

As an interim measure, steps have already been taken by councils to voluntarily waive certain fees as set by councils, to ease the burden on parents dealing with the expenditure of a burial or cremation of a child.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities to outline the accessibility audit used by the Appeals Service to measure the appropriateness of venues it uses to hear benefit appeals; and whether the accessibility audit will be revised to add consideration for the impact such venues have on appellants with mental ill health, learning disabilities and limited mobility.

(AQW 2807/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Appeals are heard in public and privately owned venues based on the facilities available in each area.

Before any venue is confirmed as suitable for an appeal tribunal hearing the location and facilities are assessed based on a number of criteria, including accessibility/DDA compliance, parking, privacy, lighting, ventilation, heating and other criteria which consider the needs of the parties involved in the hearings.

A review of the criteria upon which venues are assessed has commenced and this will include any additional considerations which should be taken into account as part of the process.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what are the borrowings of each of the 11 councils; and what limits are applicable.

(AQW 2847/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The level of outstanding borrowing (long term and short term), as disclosed in the balance sheet of the councils' annual certified accounts at 31 March 2019 is set out in the table below.

Council	Borrowing at 31 March 2019
Antrim & Newtownabbey	49,736,014
Ards & North Down	78,900,163
Armagh, Banbridge & Craigavon	40,669,273
Belfast City Council	62,888,981
Causeway Coast & Glens	71,188,000
Derry & Strabane	50,234,150
Fermanagh & Omagh	7,215,870
Lisburn & Castlereagh City Council	27,032,294
Mid & East Antrim Council	62,798,320
Mid Ulster Council	6,746,933
Newry Mourne & Down	69,750,776

Sections 11 to 16 of the Local Government Finance Act 2011 make provision for district council borrowing. Section 13 imposes a broad duty on councils to determine and keep under review the amount they can afford to borrow. Councils have to comply with any relevant regulations made by my Department, and have regard to codes of practice specified in regulations, when determining an affordable borrowing limit.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Communities what her Department has done to promote and recognise mixed martial arts as a sport in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 2902/17-22)

Ms Hargey: At present Mixed Martial Arts is not recognised as a sport and there is no official governing body for the sport in the north of Ireland. Both SportNI and Departmental Officials have previously met with representatives of the sport to provide assistance and support as they continue to seek recognition and establish a governing body. I understand that a further meeting is expected soon.

Recognition is a process shared by all five Sports Councils (UK Sport, Sport Scotland, Sport England, Sport Wales and Sport NI) which determine the Governing Bodies responsible for governing the sporting activities that the Sports Councils are willing to consider supporting and working with and acknowledges the status of the Governing Body as a private organisation which governs a particular sport through the common consent of the sport itself.

My officials and Sport NI will continue to assist representatives of the sport as they seek recognition and try to establish a recognised governing body in the north.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities how many cases of Universal Credit overpayment have occurred due to departmental error; and what measures she will take to alleviate the consequent hardship for claimants.

(AQW 2913/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Information requested on the number of Universal Credit cases with an overpayment is not currently available.

We are working to improve the range of data available to us.

My Department is obliged to consider the recoverability of all Universal Credit overpayments, irrespective of how the overpayment arose. However, we can and do apply discretion in respect of the issue of recoverability.

We advise all people with an overpayment to contact our Debt Management Centre in the first instance. This is their opportunity to tell us how recovery of the overpayment is impacting them, either financially or through ill-health. All cases are dealt with on their individual merits.

I am keen to make sure we deliver a service that is empathetic and protects the most vulnerable in our society. I can assure you that we will continue to review our approach here to make sure it meets that test.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the average price to build a social and affordable house, broken down by bedroom size.

(AQW 2929/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The current average social housing development allowances for new build homes are as follows:-

Unit	Area	Total Cost Indicator
One person one bedroom flat	35/40m <sup>2</sup>	£101,433
Two person one bedroom flat	50/55m <sup>2</sup>	£125,383
Three person two bedroom two storey house	70/75m <sup>2</sup>	£140,883
Five person three bedroom house two storey house	90/95m <sup>2</sup>	£163,450
Six person four bedroom two storey house	100/105m <sup>2</sup>	£169,050

The TCI is the DfC benchmark for the average cost of development for a social housing general needs home procured via "new build acquisition and works". It includes land cost, construction cost, associated professional fees and statutory charges.

The Department funds the Affordable Home Loans Fund Pilot to deliver new build shared ownership affordable housing. The pilot is due to complete in April 2022 and the average cost of these houses will be established as part of a wider evaluation of the pilot. The evaluation report is expected March 2023.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities what properties or land are currently surplus to requirements within her Department

(AQW 2946/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department currently has one property that is surplus to requirements (Richmond Chambers) and 38 plots of land, details of which are included in Annex A. These sites are cleared, made safe, secured and maintained as part of the Urban Regeneration portfolio of assets and are held for future regeneration or resale.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for Communities whether she has any plans to reinstate the Replacement Grant, especially in instances of a house being uninhabitable due to serious fires, flooding or other accidents.

(AQW 3063/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive has advised that in 2009 discretionary grants were withdrawn. Funding for Renovation, Replacement and Home Repair Assistance Grants for improvement and repair were subsequently only made available in exceptional circumstances, such as where there is a risk to the health and safety of the occupier.

Currently there are no plans to reinstate the Replacement Grant for any other circumstances than those which qualify under the following exceptional circumstances criteria:

- 1 The need for the discretionary grant to be processed simultaneously to facilitate the completion of a Disabled Facilities Grant (a mandatory grant);
- 2 Were the identified repairs presenting any imminent and significant Health & Safety risk that would impact upon the occupants?
- 3 Was there serious risk to the occupants under structural stability?

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Communities what actions her Department has taken to promote and recognise the Northern Ireland Federation of Sea Anglers (NIFSA); and what assistance her Department will give to help NIFSA get recognition from the International Sport Fishing Confederation.

(AQW 3067/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Only one Governing Body can be recognised for each sport discipline and at present, the Ulster Council Irish Federation of Sea Anglers is the recognised body for the discipline of Sea Angling here.

Where a governing body is already recognised and another body wants to contest that recognition, the challenging body must provide substantial evidence to support a review which would be carried by a recognition panel which includes five Sports Councils.

It is not my Department's role to promote one sports body over another, but through SportNI, to provide information or assistance regarding the recognition process policy.

I understand that SportNI has been providing advice to the NIFSA since 2018 with regard to the recognition process and has recently offered to meet with its representatives in this regard.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities whether they plan to provide a funding package to businesses impacted by flooding in August 2017.

(AQW 3080/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance was introduced by the Executive in 2007. Its purpose is to provide immediate financial support to households who have suffered from flooding. It is not a compensation scheme and does not purport to be one; nor is it intended to replace or displace the assistance that households should receive from their insurers.

On 10 March 2016, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development obtained Executive agreement for an exceptional one-off extension to the Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance. This enabled flood assistance to be provided to non-domestic properties and small businesses including farm businesses impacted by flooding incidents following the heavy rainfall between 7 November 2015 and 31 January 2016. It also included recreational and community buildings as well as places of worship. Its remit was never extended and therefore it was not applicable outside of the specific timeframe of 7 November 2015 to 31 January 2016.

Any future Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance for small businesses and non-domestic properties would require a paper to be tabled and agreed at the Executive.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities (i) how many PA5 reports were completed by Capita and returned to her Department in the last 12 months; (ii) how many resulted in a changed award decision; and (iii) how many resulted in an unrevised decision and were then subsequently successful at tribunal.

(AQW 3082/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Capita provide advice on Personal Independence Payment (PIP) cases when requested to do so by the Department. In the last 12 months advice was provided on 13,987 PIP cases. This includes cases where a PA5 has been provided where no change has been recommended to the original assessment report and PA6 where a change has been recommended. This is not broken down further between the two categories of reports

While the Department retains information on the number of PIP decisions changed and unchanged at both mandatory reconsideration and appeal stages it does not hold information on decisions changed or unchanged solely in relation to having received a completed PA5 report from Capita.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities how many child maintenance claims were processed by the Child Maintenance Service in each of the last five years.

(AQW 3102/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The number of applications processed by the Child Maintenance Service in each of the last 5 years is set out in the table below:

Financial Year	Applications Processed
2014/15	2,865
2015/16	4,833
2016/17	7,174
2017/18	4,856
2018/19	3,499
TOTAL	23,227

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to list, by District Council area, the locations of the Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships and Areas at Risk with whom she has communicated about protecting the budget for those Neighbourhood Renewal programmes until 2022.

(AQW 3103/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Minister Hargey wrote to the Neighbourhood Partnership chairs and Areas at Risk representatives on 28/02/20 to outline her commitment to maintaining the budget for these programmes at current levels for the 2020/21 and 2021/22 financial years.

People and Place a Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal is a long term strategy which includes the Neighbourhood Renewal Programme and the Areas at Risk Programme. There are 36 Neighbourhood Renewal Areas identified as being the top 10% most deprived areas in the North. There are 13 Areas at Risk covering 16 areas identified as being outside the top 10% most deprived areas, but at risk of decline.

Please see attached table for details regarding the locations of Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships and Areas at Risk by District Council area as requested.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail (i) the amount that the Child Maintenance Service (CMS) receives in fees to process, administer and pay Child Maintenance; (ii) the cost to deliver the CMS; and (iii) how the CMS processing and payment fees were used, for each of the last five years.

(AQW 3106/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The amount that the Child Maintenance Service has received in fees and charges to process, administer and pay Child Maintenance over the last five years is set out in Table 1 below.

Table 1

Year	Fees received (£)
2018/19	762,648
2017/18	566,670
2016/17	347,963
2015/16	217,762
2014/15	138,249

Fee totals per annum include CMS 2012 Administration Charges, Court Costs, DNA fees and Enforcement Costs.

The cost to deliver Child Maintenance Service over the last five years is set out in Table 2.

Table 2

Year	Costs (£)
2018/19	11,005,174
2017/18	11,536,982
2016/17	15,819,191
2015/16	19,771,106
2014/15	18,982,770

Fees received by CMS for each of the last five years have contributed in part to offset the cost of running the service.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Communities, since the change of qualifying criteria in January 2020, what mitigation measures are in place for people of pension age who cannot afford the manufacturers report for their boiler when applying for grant assistance under the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 3181/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The eligibility criteria for the Scheme have not changed. This is a change in process to confirm compliance with existing criteria.

One of the energy efficiency measures offered under the Affordable Warmth Scheme is to replace boilers that are broken beyond repair and boilers that are over 15 years old.

It is therefore necessary to confirm that boilers under 15 years are broken beyond repair. From January 2020 this is confirmed using a manufacturer's report. This is a means to confirm compliance with existing criteria. If the manufacturer's report confirms that the boiler is repairable it will not be eligible for replacement under the Scheme.

If the boiler is found by the manufacturer to be broken beyond repair any fee the manufacturer charges for this report will be reimbursed to the householder within the approved grant should they satisfy all other existing eligibility criteria for the Scheme.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities whether community sector workers, employed by her Department, will receive sick pay if forced to self-isolate as a result of coronavirus.

(AQW 3220/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department for Communities does not employ community sector workers. These workers are employed by individual community organisations. My Department may contribute to their employment costs, and other organisational expenditure, via discretionary grants.

The organisation in receipt of this grant-aid is the employer and is therefore responsible for the terms and conditions of employment including statutory sick-pay.

I am fully committed to workers' rights and expect that all reasonable measures taken to minimise the risk to public health from the Covid-19 virus will be supported by employers and funding bodies, including my Department.

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Communities how many churches and faith-based organisations have successfully registered as a charity in each of the last five years; and what this figure represents as a percentage of all religious organisations.

(AQW 3237/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The table below shows the number of charities that registered with the Charity Commission for NI since 2015 that have 'advancement of religion' as one of their purposes, which is the classification drawn from the Charities Act (NI) 2008 that covers churches and faith-based organisations.

Year	Total Successfully Registered
2015	590
2016	689
2017	133
2018	53
2019	11
2020	52
2015 - 2020	1528

Neither the Department nor the Commission holds statistics on the total number of religious organisations here, therefore it is not possible to accurately calculate what this figure represents as a percentage of all religious organisations.

Dr Aiken asked the Minister for Communities what consideration has been given to introducing the New Enterprise Allowance.

(AQW 3333/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department is currently considering a range of options in respect of self-employment and how best to further assist people in this category.

At this stage it is anticipated that the preferred option will be decided upon by March 2021. The options under consideration will be assessed for affordability in line with current budgetary constraints.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Communities how many privileged access applications are currently awaiting completion by PRONI; and what measures are being implemented to expedite these applications.

(AQW 3366/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department currently has 261 applications for privileged access to court files, 92 under the Public Records Act (NI) 1923 pilot; and 169 under The Court Files Privileged Access Rules (Northern Ireland) 2016. I am committed to releasing information to applicants under these schemes. I have met with my officials to ensure these requests are prioritised and have completed the decision making process in a number of cases. I am pleased to confirm that court and inquest files will be released to applicants in the very near future. I am continuing to work with my officials to progress this important and sensitive area of work.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the consultation undertaken with residents in Rathcoole impacted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Tower Block Strategy.

(AQW 3371/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Draft Tower Blocks Action Plan was approved by the Housing Executive's Board in May 2018 as the basis upon which to consult stakeholders on the proposals for the blocks. Subsequently a consultation exercise was undertaken with tenants, leaseholders, community and elected representatives and other stakeholders between June and December 2018. Details of this consultation exercise are outlined in my response to your previous question AQW 3370/17-22.

The final Tower Blocks Action Plan was approved by the Housing Executive's Board in March 2019 and took cognisance of the outcome of the consultation exercise by revising the categorisation of some blocks; in Rathcoole, Carncoole House was re-categorised as having a 'Long' term life. Residents were advised in May 2019 that the Board had approved the final Tower Blocks Action Plan and of the proposal for their blocks.

The Housing Executive's South Antrim Area Office continues to update the local Housing Community Network on the progress of the Action Plan. Further consultation will be carried out with residents when the Housing Executive is preparing the business case for each block or group of blocks, and a detailed Local Implementation Plan will be prepared for each block (or group of blocks) following approval of the business case. Local communities will be involved in developing these plans with the Housing Executive.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities what action is being taken to reduce waiting times for adaptations to Housing Executive homes.

(AQW 3374/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Minor Adaptations

Minor Adaptations are processed by the local Area Office and categories are recorded as follows:

- 1 Urgent Showers
- 2 Non- Urgent Showers
- 3 Minor Adaptations including for example handrails, grab rails and the like.

Response times relate to the date the recommendation is received until the works are completed and are measured as follows;

- Urgent Shower Adaptations – completed within 5 working days
- Non- Urgent Shower Adaptation –completed within 20 working days
- Minor Adaptation work (prioritised as Emergency, Urgent or Routine) –completed within 20 working days

“Adaptations completed in time” is a key performance measurement that is used on a monthly basis. The latest figure available for overall performance (January 2020) was 94.84% which exceeds the Minimum Acceptable Performance (MAP) target of 91%.

Major Adaptations

Following the success of a pilot in the NIHE south region offices in Newtownards and Craigavon NIHE have expanded this pilot to their North region offices of Derry and Ballymena. Within the last 12 months NIHE have moved towards recruiting additional staffing resources to undertake the design element of the adaptation in-house.

This has proven to increase quality and improve time frames. Whilst good progress has been made in the last 6-12 months NHE are still suffering from backlogs following the insolvency of a consultant who provided much of this work previously. At the time of insolvency there was a large backlog of work which NIHE moved forward with internally. This has taken additional time to the overall adaptation process.

Other external factors impacting on this work have been the liquidation of a contractor providing a large portion of these works as well as the issues around contractor capacity and availability that is being encountered in the construction industry as a whole.

To mitigate this risk NIHE has gone to tender with a larger contractor framework and is hopeful to attract more contractors to this framework and limiting the need to procure further through the duration of the framework.

NIHE have also gone to press in recent weeks as well as to a recruitment agency to recruit additional resources to these teams internally. Recruitment of construction professionals has been an issue and NIHE have been working through this for some time. NIHE are hopeful that the recent recruitment drive will be positive and increase the size of the team to enable working through any back log.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of electrical safety standards in the private rented sector.

(AQW 3425/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department is currently carrying out a comprehensive review of the role and regulation of the private rented sector to ensure the regulatory framework and supporting policy improve standards for the benefit of both tenants and landlords.

I am currently considering 16 proposals for change. One of these is to make it a mandatory requirement for private landlords to carry out periodic electrical checks.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities what measures she plans to put in place for workers on zero-hour contracts who are unable to work because of coronavirus.

(AQW 3445/17-22)

Ms Hargey: People on zero hours contracts may be entitled to Statutory Sick Pay and can check eligibility at: <https://www.gov.uk/statutory-sick-pay/eligibility>. In response to the coronavirus, Statutory Sick Pay will be made available from day one, instead of day four and for those who need to self-isolate for medical reasons to protect others.

Those who aren't entitled to Statutory Sick Pay can make a claim to Universal Credit (UC) and/or new-style Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) depending on their circumstances. Additional support has been introduced for those affected by the coronavirus by removing the 7 waiting days for people to make a new claim to ESA and, for ESA and UC, treating those affected as having limited capability for work from the outset without a fit note, an assessment or some form of statutory public health notice.

Those who do qualify for Statutory Sick Pay will not be eligible for new-style Employment and Support Allowance but may still qualify for Universal Credit depending on their circumstances.

A person who is in a crisis situation can apply to the Discretionary Support scheme for assistance with short-term living expenses. Discretionary Support is available to people in employment provided their income does not exceed £16,286 per year. The income threshold is set with reference to the National Living Wage and will increase to £18,137 from April 2020.

I will continue to review the situation and take appropriate measures in line with any further developments.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities to outline the timescale for the development of new homes on the sites of the tower blocks earmarked for demolition in Rathcoole.

(AQW 3451/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Tower Blocks Action Plan proposes that Monkscoole House and Abbotscoole House should be demolished with new social housing built on the combined cleared site. The business case for the demolition of Monkscoole House has been approved by the Housing Executive's Board and the Department for Communities, and a consultant has been appointed to prepare a demolition scheme for next year. The business case for Abbotscoole House will be submitted for approval this year. Subject to its approval, it is currently estimated that it could then take 2-3 years to clear the block and a further 2-2 ½ years to demolish the block and provide new social housing on the site.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities why her Department does not have an arts and culture strategy; and whether she intends to introduce such a strategy.

(AQW 3455/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Following a wide-ranging consultation in 2015-16 the introduction of a strategy could not be progressed in the absence of a Minister.

It is my intention to introduce a strategy at the earliest opportunity and I have asked my officials to engage in a co-design process to deliver this important work.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities whether Universal Credit staff have been applying Regulation 25 of the Universal Credit, Personal Independence Payment, Job Seekers Allowance and Employment Support Allowance (Claims and Payments) Regulations (NI) 2016 to allow decision makers to extend the time for claiming Universal Credit and ensure there is no gap between the Employment Support Allowance or Jobseekers Allowance claim and entitlement to Universal Credit; and, in instances when these regulations were not applied, what measures her Department will take to remunerate people who have been disadvantaged as a consequence.

(AQW 3459/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Regulation 25 of the Universal Credit, Personal Independence Payment, Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance (Claims and Payment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 allows the Department to backdate a claim for Universal Credit for up to a month in a limited number of circumstances. This is to protect the most vulnerable who may be delayed in claiming through no fault of their own.

Once an application is made and it is accepted that the provisions of this regulation apply, backdating is always granted.

My Department is fully aware of this provision, applies it and will continue to do so as appropriate.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities how much money was collected in service charges for each tower block in Rathcoole in the last financial year.

(AQW 3519/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The table below provides details of the credits/monies collected from leaseholders (sold flats) for service charges for each of the four tower blocks in Rathcoole in the financial year 2018/2019. Only tower blocks with sold flats are listed; service charges are only charged and collected from sold flats.

Leasehold Service Charge Account Information for period 1/4/18 to 31/3/19

Block Name	Number Of Leasehold Service Charge Accounts	Total Credits to Service Charge Accounts
Abbotscoole House	17	£15,191.31
Carncoole House	9	£13,728.84
Glencoole House	1	£1,128.00
Monkscoole House	4	£4,197.48
Total	31	£34,245.63

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Communities to detail the number of staff in the languages branch working solely on (i) Irish; and (ii) Ulster Scots, broken down by grade.

(AQW 3544/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Two non-civil service staff, one analogous to Staff Officer, the other to Executive Officer 1, discharge duties connected to promoting and protecting the Irish Language, including administration of the Department's Liofa Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme.

The remaining Languages Branch staff discharge a range of duties largely connected to sign language and co-sponsorship of the North South Language Body, which comprises Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency. None of these staff are regarded as working solely on Irish or Ulster Scots.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Communities what provision will be made for people in self-employment during the outbreak of COVID-19 if they are (i) infected; and (ii) self-isolating.

Ms Hargey: As part of my Department's strategy to support people affected by the Covid-19 public health emergency, I am making a number of temporary changes to benefit processes and legislation to ensure people who need financial help have access to the benefit system.

Anyone who is self-isolating and is self-employed can apply for Universal Credit and/or New Style Employment and Support Allowance. To avoid increasing the burden on the health system and the risk of further infection, I am temporarily removing the requirement for fit notes in relation to both Employment and Support Allowance and Universal Credit claims relating to Covid-19 only. The work search and work availability requirements within Universal Credit have also been switched off.

In addition, to better support the needs of people, particularly the self-employed and those not eligible for Statutory Sick Pay and / or Universal Credit, I am removing the seven waiting days that currently apply to Employment and Support Allowance.

To further support self-employed people there is a temporary suspension of the minimum income floor used to calculate the household's Universal Credit entitlement. This will provide greater financial security during this period. Some people will also gain access to a work allowance, and, if they have a partner who is working, access to help with childcare costs.

In response to the Covid-19 outbreak, enhancements to the Discretionary Support scheme include increasing the amount of individual living expenses awards by increasing the rate of benefit used when calculating awards and allowing discretion to pay for longer periods. In addition, the Discretionary Support Annual Income Threshold has been increased to £20,405 from 22nd April. This will ensure that more people can access Discretionary Support.

I will continue to keep these and any other available supports under review.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities whether she has any plans to introduce a sick pay scheme for workers forced to self-quarantine to avoid spreading coronavirus.

(AQW 3571/17-22)

Ms Hargey: With effect from 13 March 2020, the following measures have been introduced for Statutory Sick Pay (SPP), Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) and Universal Credit (UC) for people who need to self-isolate for medical reasons and to protect others-

- there will be a temporary removal of the 3 day waiting period for Statutory Sick Pay and compensation in respect of the employers liability for sick pay will be made available.
- the 7 waiting days for people who make a new claim for ESA due to public health emergency restrictions are removed.
- those affected will be treated as having limited capability for work (for UC and ESA) from the outset without a fit note, an assessment or some form of statutory public health notice. The effect of this will be that any work related requirements will be switched off. For self-employed claimants, this will include the 'Minimum Income Floor'. Some claimants will also gain access to a work allowance, and, if they have a partner who is working, access to help with childcare costs.
- those who are self-isolating in response to the Public Health Advice are eligible for SSP.

In addition, anyone who finds themselves in in a crisis situation can apply to the Discretionary Support scheme for assistance with short-term living expenses. Discretionary Support is available to people in employment as long as their income does not exceed £16,286 per year.

I will continue to review the situation and take appropriate measures in line with any further developments.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities whether all the measures outlined in the Chancellor's budget, regarding social security due to the coronavirus outbreak, will also be implemented in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 3574/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The following measures relating to Statutory Sick Pay (SPP), Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) and Universal Credit (UC) have been introduced here with effect from 13 March 2020 with the intention of financially assisting those who need to self-isolate for medical reasons and to inhibit the spread of the virus, thereby protecting others -

- those who need to self-isolate for medical reasons to protect others are treated as being ill. They do not need to go to a GP.
- there will be a temporary removal of the 3 day waiting period for SSP and compensation in respect of the employers liability for sick pay will be made available.
- the removal of the 7 waiting days for people who make a new claim for ESA due to public health emergency restrictions arising from the Covid-19 outbreak.
- for ESA and UC, treating those affected as having limited capability for work from the outset without a fit note, an assessment or some form of statutory public health notice. The effect of this will be that any work related requirements will be switched off. For self-employed claimants, this will include the 'Minimum Income Floor'. Some claimants will also gain access to a work allowance, and, if they have a partner who is working, access to help with childcare costs.
- people who are self-isolating in response to the Public Health Advice are eligible for SSP.

Additionally, anyone who finds themselves in a crisis situation can apply to the Discretionary Support Scheme for assistance with short-term living expenses. Discretionary Support is available to people in employment as long as their income does not exceed £16,286 per year.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the Sexual Orientation Strategy.
(AQW 3597/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I remain committed to developing a Sexual Orientation Strategy to address any barriers or inequalities related to Sexual Orientation and to fulfil the commitments in New Decade, New Approach and the Executive's Programme for Government.

I am keen to ensure that the people who will be most affected by the Sexual Orientation Strategy are able to make a meaningful contribution to its development and delivery, based on the principles and practice of citizen and community engagement.

You are aware that the COVID-19 pandemic has placed significant and unprecedented pressures on everyone. The primary focus of the Executive and all Departments has been to address and put in place measures to resolve current and emerging issues relating to the pandemic, especially those issues affecting the most vulnerable in our society.

I am therefore closely monitoring the ongoing COVID-19 situation so that work on the Sexual Orientation Strategy can commence at an appropriate time and be sustained throughout the co-design and co-development process.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities whether she plans to transfer regeneration and neighbourhood renewal powers to local councils.
(AQW 3601/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I refer you to the Answer to AQW 448 17-22.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Communities what measures she plans to put in place for self-employed people who are unable to work because of coronavirus.
(AQW 3607/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As part of my Department's strategy to support people affected by the Covid-19 public health emergency, we are making a number of temporary changes to our benefit processes and legislation to ensure people who need financial help have access to the benefit system when they need it.

To avoid increasing the burden on the health system and the risk of further infection, we are temporarily removing the requirement for fit notes in relation to both Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) and Universal Credit (UC) claims relating to Covid-19 only. Anyone who claims and is infected with Covid-19 or who is required to self-isolate will be treated as having Limited Capability for Work in ESA and UC without being required to provide a fit note or to undergo a Work Capability Assessment.

In addition, to better support the needs of people, particularly the self-employed and those not eligible for Statutory Sick Pay and/or Universal Credit, we are removing the seven waiting days that currently apply to Employment and Support Allowance.

To further support those self-employed people who choose not to self-isolate there will be a temporary suspension of the minimum income floor used to calculate the household's Universal Credit entitlement. This will provide greater financial security during this period. Some people will also gain access to a work allowance, and, if they have a partner who is working, access to help with childcare costs.

A person who is in a crisis situation can apply to the Discretionary Support scheme for assistance with short-term living expenses. Discretionary Support is available to people provided their income does not exceed £16,286 per year. The income threshold is set with reference to the National Living Wage and will increase to £18,137 from April 2020.

Self-employed people may also claim a grant through the coronavirus (COVID-19) Self-Employment Income Support Scheme. Further detail is available at: www.gov.uk/guidance/claim-a-grant-through-the-coronavirus-covid-19-self-employment-income-support-scheme

I will continue to keep the changes I have introduced and any other available supports under review.

Mr Blair asked the Minister for Communities what action she is taking, through consultation with relevant sectors including local planning offices, to ensure that all new private housing developments will have a quota of public sector provision.
(AQW 3625/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department works with a range of stakeholders, including local planning offices to support the delivery of public sector housing. Councils, particularly through the community planning and local development planning process, have a key role to play in the delivery of the types and volume of homes that are required to address the current and foreseeable housing needs.

The Housing Executive is vested with the statutory duty to assess housing need, and it is not within my Department's remit to determine the quota for private housing developments. However I am fully supportive of proposals which would deliver mixed tenure housing. My officials continue to engage with relevant stakeholders including Housing Executive and councils to ascertain how this can best be delivered.

Mr McCann asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the removal of grants for people in older properties who own their own homes, which has impacted on the fabric and condition of many of these houses.
(AQW 3653/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive has advised that while mandatory grants for people living in older properties who own their own homes are still available; there are restrictions on discretionary grants.

In the current financial year (1 April 2019 and 29 February 2020), the Housing Executive has issued 1,266 approvals to private home owners.

They are broken down as follows:

- 1,037 mandatory grant-aid approvals - to carry out disabled adaptation works; and
- 229 discretionary grant-aid approvals to improve or repair homes (100 Renovation Grants, 126 Home Repair Assistance Grants and 3 Replacement Grants).

The mandatory Disabled Facilities Grant is only available when an Occupational Therapist makes a specific recommendation or recommendations.

Renovation Grants, Home Repair Assistance Grants and Replacement Grants are currently discretionary and only available where exceptional circumstances exist.

Exceptional circumstances are defined as:

- 1 Where a Renovation Grant, Home Repair Assistance Grant or Replacement Grant needs to be processed simultaneously to facilitate the completion of a Disabled Facilities Grant (a mandatory grant);
- 2 Where the identified repairs present an imminent and significant Health & Safety risk that would impact upon the occupants; or
- 3 Where there may be a serious risk to the occupants under structural stability.

Mr McCann asked the Minister for Communities whether she plans to carry out a review of the private rented sector to ensure they are delivering houses to the social housing sector which are fit for purpose.
(AQW 3655/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department is currently carrying out a comprehensive review of the role and regulation of the private rented sector to ensure the regulatory framework and supporting policy improve standards for the benefit of both tenants and landlords. The areas being reviewed include:

- Supply
- Affordability
- Security of tenure
- Tenancy management
- Property standards
- Dispute resolution

I am currently considering how to take forward the recommendations in that review, and what other measures may be necessary.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities whether self-employed people, or people on zero-hours contracts, will be able to bypass the five week waiting period should they need to make a new claim for Universal Credit due to self-isolation.
(AQW 3669/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As part of my Department's strategy to support people affected by the COVID-19 public health emergency, we are making a number of temporary changes to our benefit processes and legislation to ensure people who need financial help have access to the benefit system when they need it.

These include treating anyone who makes a claim to Universal Credit or Employment Support Allowance, and is suffering from Coronavirus or is required to self-isolate, as having Limited Capability for Work. In these circumstances, people will not be required to provide a fit note or to undergo a Work Capability Assessment.

Anyone who experiences financial hardship awaiting their first Universal Credit payment can apply for an Advance Payment, and financial support is also available from the Universal Credit Contingency Fund and my Department's Discretionary Support Scheme.

Self-employed people may also claim a grant through the coronavirus (COVID-19) Self-Employment Income Support. Further detail is available at: www.gov.uk/guidance/claim-a-grant-through-the-coronavirus-covid-19-self-employment-income-support-scheme

The Department's website provides helpful information on new measures in response to COVID-19, and will be regularly updated to ensure people know what help is available. I will continue to keep these and any other available support, under review.

<https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/landing-pages/covid-19-and-benefits>

Dr Archibald asked the Minister for Communities to consider emergency legislation to allow people who are self-employed to access statutory sick pay to the same standard as employees if asked to self-isolate during the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQW 3761/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As part of my Department's strategy to support people affected by the Covid-19 public health emergency, I have made a number of temporary changes to legislation to ensure people who need financial help have access to the benefit system when they need it.

Changes have been made to Statutory Sick Pay so that those who need to self-isolate for medical reasons to protect others are treated as being ill. Where an eligible individual is sick or self-isolating due to COVID-19, the three day waiting period for Statutory Sick Pay has been temporarily removed. Amendments have also been made to extend Statutory Sick Pay to people classed as extremely vulnerable and at very high risk of severe illness from COVID-19 who are advised to remain at home, and cannot work, for at least 12 weeks (known as shielding).

Anyone self-isolating who is self-employed, if they are not eligible for Statutory Sick Pay, can apply for Universal Credit or new-style Employment and Support Allowance, depending on their circumstances.

In response to public health emergency restrictions arising from the COVID-19 outbreak the seven waiting days for people who make a new claim for ESA has been removed and the Department will treat those affected as having limited capability for work from the outset without a fit note, an assessment or some form of statutory public health notice. The effect of this will be that any work related requirements will be switched off.

To further support those self-employed people, the minimum income floor in Universal Credit has been suspended for the duration of the outbreak – meaning every self-employed person can now access, in full, Universal Credit. In addition, the standard allowance in Universal Credit and the basic element in Working Tax Credit has been increased for one year. The increases to rates of Universal Credit mean that on average, every Universal Credit award will go up by approximately £90 per month.

In response to the Covid-19 outbreak, enhancements to the Discretionary Support scheme include increasing the amount of individual living expenses awards by increasing the rate of benefit used when calculating awards and allowing discretion to pay for longer periods. In addition, the Discretionary Support Annual Income Threshold has been increased to £20,405 from 22nd April. This will ensure that more people can access Discretionary Support.

These are rapidly developing circumstances, we continue to keep the situation under review and will keep the Assembly updated accordingly. People's safety and protecting them and their families is of primary importance.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what actions she will take to ensure people with disabilities on work programmes or apprenticeships will be appropriately supported and have guidance provided to ensure they all understand why they may be asked not to attend work or to work from home during the COVID-19 delay phase. (AQW 3782/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department is fully committed to supporting people with disabilities and health conditions progress towards, move into and stay in employment. We do this through a number of disability programmes and we are working with all our programme contractors to ensure participants have been provided with all the information they need whilst working or remaining at home during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Department is in daily contact with contractors, by email and telephone, to answer their queries and provide advice on specific situations as and when they arise. The situation continues to be monitored to ensure communications remain current and in line with government advice. The Department continues to financially support those contractors delivering our disability programmes during the COVID 19 pandemic.

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to the AQW 1982/17-22, whether the 62.8 per cent rate for successful Personal Independent Payment appeals between April and December 2019 demonstrates a need to place more compassionate and effective application processes for claimants.

(AQW 3828/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department's priority is to ensure that people claiming PIP are treated with dignity and compassion right throughout the process and we are committed to getting decisions right first time.

You have referred to my response to AQW 1827/17-22. It is important to note that there is a significant time lag between an appeal being lodged by the appellant and the final determination by the Tribunal. This time lag means there is no direct correlation between the number, and associated percentages, of appeals lodged and decisions made within the same year.

To assist in improving the decision making my Department has in place a feedback mechanism that includes analysis of overturned appeals and the findings are regularly discussed internally and with Capita who provide the Personal Independence Payment Assessment Service. Changes have already made to the PIP process in relation to the consideration of evidence including ESA evidence where it exists and consistent use of throughout the process.

The second independent review of PIP is underway and the Public Service Ombudsman is also investigating PIP. My Department will carefully consider any recommendations arising from these reports when published.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister for Communities to detail the departmental budget for the Liofa initiative in (i) 2016-17; (ii) 2017-18; (iii) 2018-19; and (iv) 2019-20.

(AQW 3877/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The table below sets out the opening departmental budgets and the outturns which includes additional budget in –year.

Financial Year	Opening Budget £'000	Outturn £'000
2016/17 *	50	70
2017/18 *	50	70
2018/19 *	50	57
2019/20 	50	50

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities to outline the 2020-21 budget for each Neighbourhood Renewal Area in Upper Bann.

(AQO 410/17-22)

Ms Hargey: On 28 February I announced that the budget for the Neighbourhood Renewal programme in 2020/21 and 2021/22 would be protected at the same level as 2019/20.

There are three Neighbourhood Renewal areas in Upper Bann:

- Brownlow
- Lurgan and
- North West Portadown.

Given their proximity and the common set of challenges being faced in the areas, the projects funded tend to be organised on a Craigavon-wide basis rather than having a separate budget for each of the areas.

Support through the Neighbourhood Renewal programme is determined by local action planning and based on need. It is anticipated that support to projects that provide services and or programmes in these 3 areas in 2020/2021 to be up to £841,000.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities, in light of recent court judgements, for her assessment of the Charity Commission.

(AQO 413/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I accept the determination of the Court of Appeal that the legislative framework under which the Charity Commission operates does not allow it to delegate its statutory powers, duties or functions to staff acting alone.

Officials are currently working through the full implications of the Judgment.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Communities whether people leaving the Armed Forces, whose accommodation was linked to their job, and returning to Northern Ireland to settle will be entitled to 50 points for social housing under any new housing selection scheme.

(AQO 415/17-22)

- Ms Hargey: All social housing is allocated via the Housing Selection Scheme. The fundamental principles that underpin the Scheme are that the assessment and prioritisation of applicants and the allocation of accommodation are undertaken on the basis of greatest housing need.
- The Housing Executive processes applications from members and former members of the Armed Forces using the rules of the Selection Scheme as they would for any other applicant.
- People leaving the Armed Forces and returning here to settle meet the local connection requirements and can access social housing here.
- Applicants who are found to be homeless are awarded 50 points. Factors entitling an applicant to 50 points include the end of service in the Armed Forces.
- My Department took forward a consultation on 'A Fundamental Review of Social Housing Allocations' in late 2017. This has produced a range of proposals that aim to make the allocations system more fair, transparent and effective for all in housing need.
- Analysis of stakeholder feedback from the consultation has been completed by officials. I will consider the Review and possible next steps in the coming weeks.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities (i) to detail her deliberations on a bespoke support scheme for cross-border workers who cannot access COVID-19 support and benefit payments in Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland; (ii) whether she has made a bid to the Department of Finance for such a scheme; and (iii) what is the anticipated cost of such a scheme.

(AQW 3984/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I, together with the Minister of Finance, wrote to Regina Doherty, Minister for Employment Affairs & Social Protection urging her to extend Covid-19 support and payments, particularly the COVID-19 Pandemic Unemployment Payment, to cross border workers living here.

I can advise that there is support available to cross border workers during these difficult times. Depending on a person's circumstances, financial assistance is available to those impacted by the COVID-19 outbreak, including cross border workers, through Universal Credit.

In response to public health emergency restrictions arising from the COVID-19 outbreak, a number of beneficial changes have been made to Universal Credit to provide greater financial security. The standard allowance in Universal Credit and the basic element in Working Tax Credit has been increased for one year. The increases to rates of Universal Credit mean that on average, every Universal Credit award will go up by approximately £90 per month.

With the recent approval of the new COVID-19 living expenses grant by the Assembly, the Department currently delivers three different "types" of Discretionary Support living expenses awards. These are the Discretionary Support COVID-19 Living Expenses, the Universal Credit Contingency Fund and the Discretionary Support Living Expenses

The Discretionary Support COVID-19 Living Expenses grant is available if a person or any member of their immediate family is either diagnosed with COVID-19 or is self-isolating in accordance with the latest guidance from the Public Health Agency. Awards are made as a non-repayable grant.

Universal Credit Contingency Fund Living Expenses may be available if a person does not satisfy the criteria for a COVID-19 Living Expenses grant. The person must have made a new claim to Universal Credit. Awards are made as a non-repayable grant. Only one grant for Universal Credit Contingency Fund Living Expenses or Discretionary Support Living Expenses can be paid in any 12-month period.

Discretionary Support Living expenses may be available if a person is not eligible for a COVID-19 (Coronavirus) Living Expenses grant or a Universal Credit Contingency Fund grant. Awards may be payable as a loan or a non-repayable grant.

The Discretionary Support Annual Income Threshold has been increased to £20,405 from 22nd April. This will ensure that more people can access Discretionary Support.

Many cross border workers are availing of the Irish Government's Temporary Wage Subsidy Scheme. This is available to employers who keep employees on the payroll throughout the COVID-19 pandemic. The scheme consists of a subsidy payment based on up to a 70% of the normal net weekly pay for each employee up to a maximum of €410.

This is similar to the 'furloughed workers'/ Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme available to employers and employees available through HMRC.

Officials from my Department are available to advise and support cross border workers in signposting them to the benefits available to them.

I continue to keep the situation under review.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for Communities to detail (i) the number of applications received for the Hardship Fund for Sport; and (ii) the number of successful applications, broken down by (a) sporting type; and (b) amount each club received.

(AQW 4005/17-22)

Ms Hargey: A total of 402 completed applications were received to the Hardship Fund for Sport when it was suspended on 17 April due to the level of demand against the budget available. At that time, a further 562 applications had been commenced on-line, but were not submitted. Sport NI is currently working to call these 'in-progress' applications forward for assessment.

Table 1 below shows the number of successful applications broken down by sporting type as at 18 June 2020. Each successful applicant will receive a grant of £2,000.

Please note, Sport NI publish a weekly update on the Sports Hardship Fund on their website at the following link: <http://www.sportni.net/funding/our-funding-programmes/sports-hardship-fund-2/>.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what action she has taken, or plans to take, to ensure that the Community and Voluntary Sector will be able to survive the reduction in income as a result of COVID-19 and is in a financial position to deliver community services vital to the community coming out of lockdown; and when a community contingency fund will be made available to help sustain this sector.

(AQW 4021/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I am pleased to say that the Executive's Covid-19 Charities Fund opened for applications on Monday 15 June 2020. I believe that this Fund will help many charities survive the reduction in income so that they can continue to provide services vital to our community.

Minister Hargey also established hardship funds to assist our creative and sports sectors.

I am committed to supporting grassroots organisations as they respond to this crisis by supporting those who are most vulnerable and isolated. I am aware that Minister Hargey also launched a COVID Community Support Fund in early April 2020 which continues to be distributed by local councils to grassroots organisations.

The community and voluntary sector continues to be absolutely vital in helping our society to get through these trying times and will have an important part to play in the recovery phase.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities when AQW 3683/17-22, AQW 3682/17-22, AQW 3538/17-22, AQW 3391/17-22, AQW 3390/17-22, AQW 3230/17-22 and AQW 2511/17-22 will be answered.

(AQW 4028/17-22)

Ms Hargey: AQW 3391/17-22, AQW 3390/17-22 and AQW 3230/17-22 were answered on 23 June 2020. AQW 3538/17-22 was answered on 29 June 2020. AQW 3683/17-22 and AQW 2511/17-22 were answered on 30 June 2020.

AQW 3682/17-22 was asked of the Minister for the Economy.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities whether her Department has any plans to increase carers allowance during the COVID-19 crisis.

(AQW 4046/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I recognise at a very personal level the enormous amount of work that is done by those who have the responsibility of caring for others, and there is no doubt that their work is of great value to the wider community, as well as to those people for whom they are caring.

That's why my Department has introduced two important temporary measures to help unpaid carers through the current COVID-19 emergency:

- Unpaid carers will be able to continue to claim Carer's Allowance if they have a temporary break in caring, because either they or the person they care for becomes infected with coronavirus or has to self-isolate because of it.
- Providing emotional support to a severely disabled person will also now count towards the Carer's Allowance threshold of 35 hours of care a week.

The rate of Carer's Allowance was increased to £67.25 a week from April 2020 as part of the annual benefits up-rating exercise.

Carers on low incomes can access additional financial support through income-related benefits and their associated carer premiums/additions. Those carers claiming Universal Credit will also be able to benefit from the increase in the standard allowance (around £1000 a year) recently announced.

In addition, those in receipt of Carer's Allowance may, depending on their circumstances, be eligible to access the range of other emergency financial support that my Department is providing during the COVID-19 pandemic, including Discretionary Support.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities whether she will commit to fund Housing Associations in the current financial year for the acquisition of development sites, in circumstances where the completion of contracts in the 2019-20 financial year have been delayed by the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4067/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I can confirm that those acquisitions which did not reach completion due to the onset of Covid-19 will be carried forward into this financial year. Many of these have been approved in principle, which will assist the Social Housing Development Programme deliver more social housing and indeed aid the economic recovery of the construction sector post Covid-19.

Senior Officials have also contacted the Federation of Housing Associations to advise that the Department will help cover any additional costs incurred by Housing Associations as a direct result of the Covid-19 outbreak.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities, given that the New Decade, New Approach document has identified housing as a priority, whether she has discussed with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive its potential to provide new housing stock to address need.

(AQW 4081/17-22)

Ms Hargey: New Decade, New Approach committed the Executive to "enhanced investment in new social home starts". I am committed to increasing the number of social homes being delivered each year.

I have and will continue to have discussions with Housing Executive with a view to increasing the number of units provided through the Social Housing Development Programme. I have made it very clear that the provision of social housing is one of my key priorities.

The number of homes to be provided is governed by the amount of funding available from central government through DfC. While the budget is still to be confirmed I am committed to working closely with Housing Executive and Housing Associations to deliver the maximum number of units for the budget provided and to focus the provision of new housing in areas of acute housing need.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Communities whether she has any plans to supplement Carer's Allowance to support people with caring responsibilities during the COVID-19 crisis.

(AQW 4090/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I recognise at a very personal level the enormous amount of work that is done by those who have the responsibility of caring for others, and there is no doubt that their work is of great value to the wider community, as well as to those people for whom they are caring.

That's why my Department has introduced two important temporary measures to help unpaid carers through the current COVID-19 emergency:

- Unpaid carers will be able to continue to claim Carer's Allowance if they have a temporary break in caring, because either they or the person they care for becomes infected with coronavirus or has to self-isolate because of it.
- Providing "emotional support" to a severely disabled person will also now count towards the Carer's Allowance threshold of 35 hours of care a week.

The rate of Carer's Allowance was increased to £67.25 a week from April 2020 as part of the annual benefits up-rating exercise. There are no current plans for a further increase to the weekly rate or to pay a supplement to those in receipt of Carer's Allowance.

Those carers who are on low incomes can access additional financial support through income-related benefits and their associated carer premiums/additions. Carers who are eligible to claim Universal Credit will also be able to benefit from the increase in the standard allowance (around £1000 a year) recently announced.

In addition, those in receipt of Carer's Allowance here may, depending on their circumstances, be eligible to access the range of other emergency financial support that my Department is providing during the COVID-19 pandemic, including Discretionary Support

In response to the coronavirus outbreak, across my Department I have implemented a range of measures and actions to relieve hardship and to ensure people most in need at this time get the help and support they require. The Executive's response to the coronavirus emergency is evolving and my Department continues to look at how best to support people during this unprecedented time.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Communities whether her Department will consider implementing a scheme similar to the Future Jobs Fund that was previously operational in other parts of the United Kingdom, to assist the unemployed, particularly young people, into employment.

Ms Hargey: The response to the emerging economic downturn linked to Covid-19 is a matter for the Executive to consider. As a first step, we need to understand and anticipate the potential impact of the recession on unemployment levels here to inform the specific interventions that we put in place. My Department will be actively involved in shaping and implementing that response to support people who become unemployed.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Communities (i) to explain the two-child rule regarding universal credit and working tax credit; (ii) to outline the changes to the rule from February 2019; (iii) whether she has any plans to lobby for a change of this policy with the UK Government; and (iv) whether she has discretion to implement this policy differently in Northern Ireland.

Ms Hargey: From 6 April 2017, the British Government imposed a limit on support for a maximum of two children, referred to as "the two-child policy" stating a rationale that families in receipt of means-tested benefits should face the same financial choices about having children as those supporting themselves solely through work.

In February 2019, following an announcement in December 2018 by the Secretary of Work and Pensions, changes to the policy and the legislation were applied for families with 3 or more children to continue to receive an additional amount of Universal Credit for all children born before 6 April 2017.

In A Fresh Start: The Stormont House Agreement and Implementation Plan, the Executive agreed that Westminster would bring forward legislation to provide for the introduction of those welfare changes introduced in Britain. The Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 was subsequently made which made provision for the delivery of Welfare Reform here including the introduction of new benefits including Universal Credit. Under Article 4 of the 2015 Order, the powers to make subordinate legislation to implement the various welfare reforms, including the two child policy, are vested in the Secretary of State (for Work and Pensions). Until such times as those powers are transferred back to the Department, it is not in my power to make changes to the two child policy, however, I have consistently made it clear to the British Government that I have significant concerns about this policy.

In the New Decade, New Approach Deal the Executive committed to an urgent review of the welfare mitigation measures. It is anticipated that this review will consider the issue of mitigating the two child policy. My Department is currently developing proposals for the review and details will be announced once they have been agreed by the Executive.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities, following the publication of the Northern Ireland poverty bulletin 2018/19 released by her Department on 14 May 2020, to provide a written plan of the actions that she will take in 2020/2021 to reduce the growing number of children and older people in poverty.

(AQW 4134/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I am currently considering a draft plan and timetable outlining the co-design and co-production approach to the development of an Anti-Poverty and Child Poverty Strategy as outlined in New Decade, New Approach. I will be engaging with the Executive and the Communities Committee at key stages in the development of this work.

My Department is responsible for compiling a Child Poverty Annual Report which describes the actions implemented across departments to ensure that, as far as possible, children do not experience socio-economic disadvantage. The Annual Reports can be accessed on the Department's website <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/publications>.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities to detail (i) her plans to support cross-border workers whose income has been affected by the COVID-19 pandemic; (ii) any plans she has for a bespoke package for cross-border workers; and (iii) any representations she has made to the Minister for the Economy to include cross-border workers in a hardship fund for those who have fallen through the safety net of supports and who have yet to receive any assistance from the Executive.

(AQW 4157/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I refer my colleague to my reply to his previous question - AQW 3984/17-22.

I appreciate that these are unprecedented times and we will continue to review

Mr Buckley asked the Minister for Communities to outline the level of correspondence made with relevant sporting sectors and organisations prior to the launch of the Hardship Fund for Sports.

(AQW 4191/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Since the outbreak of Covid-19, my officials have been in regular contact with relevant stakeholders in the sporting sector including Sport NI, the NI Sports Forum and Governing Bodies on a range of different issues including volunteering, communicating key messages and assessing financial implications for the sector.

In terms of the Hardship Fund for Sport, I directed my officials to work with Sport NI to look at the financial impacts on sports as a result of the pandemic. This work included direct engagement with the NI Sports Forum, whose membership consists of 71 Governing Bodies of Sport.

The Hardship Fund for Sport was developed to help sports clubs and organisations with facilities, who could not access other Covid relief schemes, to help them with basic costs including essential maintenance, utility bills and basic insurance cover during the lockdown period while revenue generating activities are restricted.

As we work together to move into recovery following the COVID19 emergency, my officials, alongside Sport NI, will continue to work with the NI Sports Forum and Sports Governing Bodies, to establish the longer term financial challenges that sporting organisations face and how we can provide support.

Mr Buckley asked the Minister for Communities what equality impact assessment was carried out in the design of the Hardship Fund for Sports to ensure that all sporting sectors were equally represented in the funding allocated.

(AQW 4192/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Equality Impact Screening was completed prior to the launch of the Hardship Fund for Sport and published on the Department for Communities website at the following link: <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/publications/covid-19-hardship-fund-support-sports-sector-screening>

The Hardship Fund was open for applications from all sports Governing Bodies, clubs or organisations, with premises for delivering sport and physical recreation, that were experiencing short term financial hardship following the commencement of the Covid-19 lockdown.

Sport NI, who are responsible for the delivery of the Fund, are assessing the applications in the order they were received.

Mr Buckley asked the Minister for Communities to list the sports clubs and organisations that have been awarded funding under the Sports Hardship Fund.

(AQW 4242/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As of close of play on 29 May 2020 the clubs listed below have received the £2000 Hardship Grant for Sport.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Communities what discussions she is having to provide for people who have met the criteria of need and identified as requiring assistance, are currently in receipt of food hampers, who will need to continue to self-isolate and will have no other way of accessing provisions after June 2020.

(AQW 4244/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I am aware that a number of people across the community who have been relying on regular food hampers from my Department are likely to continue to require support for a period after 26th June 2020.

Having recently reviewed the situation with local Councils, Health and Social Care Trusts and engagement with the voluntary and community sector, the Department has decided to extend its food parcel programme until 31st July 2020. This extension will only apply to people who have been asked to shield by their GPs and cannot otherwise get food.

Those who are not medically shielding, but may still need food help, are now being signposted to other means of food support and the Department is investing up to £875,000 in other forms of food assistance. This includes the Department working with Fareshare to deliver increased food supplies to community providers.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities to outline the monitoring and evaluation process of allocations to projects from Supporting Communities funding.

(AQW 4248/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I have assumed that your question refers specifically to the Covid-19 Response Fund which was launched to assist community groups working to respond to the emergency on the ground, which is administered by the Housing Executive.

The process in relation to awards made through the Covid-19 Response Fund requires groups who are successful in receiving funding to, in the first instance, agree to the terms and conditions of the award. These details are set out in the application form, which advises that approved funding must only be used for purposes applied for, and that the amount is final.

Applicants are also made aware that the Housing Executive has the right to recover funding if the organisation is in breach of these terms and conditions, or if the actual expenditure incurred is less than projected. Failure to meet the conditions of funding may result in the Housing Executive recouping all or part of the funding awarded.

The reporting and monitoring requirements are also identified clearly on the application form. These include that the recipient organisation is required to adhere to monitoring arrangements and, at the end of the programme or anytime deemed necessary by the Housing Executive, they must provide:

- Certified confirmation of expenditure for example receipts, invoices, bank statements, statement from Treasurer.
- Report to outline activity undertaken, and any other relevant information.

The post project activities will be followed up internally and a Project Evaluation Report completed, outlining project activity in line with the objectives set out in the application as well as certified confirmation of spend. This exercise will also facilitate the capture of basic information which will allow the impact and outcomes of the funding awards to be gauged.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities what rent support will be made available for students.

(AQW 4268/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Since the outbreak of this pandemic my Department has put in place a number of provisions to assist households during this period, including private renters.

Some students may be eligible to receive Housing Benefit if they already receive certain benefits or have parental or caring responsibilities.

An increase in Local Housing Allowance rates from 1 April has provided additional financial support for private tenants including any students in receipt of Housing Benefit or the housing costs element of Universal Credit.

In addition, anyone who has lost their job and who signed on to Universal Credit can apply for a Discretionary Housing Payment to have their full rent paid for 13 weeks.

Discretionary Support is available to provide financial assistance in extreme, exceptional or crisis situations where there is significant risk to the health, safety or well-being of a person or a member of their immediate family.

A person who is in full time third level education is normally not eligible for Discretionary Support. However, a student who is experiencing financial hardship as a direct result of the COVID-19 pandemic may be entitled to Discretionary Support including a grant for short term living expenses if they, or any member of their immediate family, are diagnosed with COVID-19 or are advised to self-isolate in accordance with the latest public health guidance.

The main source of support for students facing hardship is the Department for Economy led Student Hardship Fund which is allocated to the local Higher Education Institutions (HEI) for distribution to students who can demonstrate genuine financial hardship. Each HEI is responsible for assessing student's need and issuing support within the guidelines of the scheme. The Executive has recently announced a further £1.4m for Student Support (Hardship) funds.

In addition to this my Department have also worked with local student representatives to ensure that students facing hardship have access to food parcels.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities whether she will increase the income threshold of the Affordable Warmth Scheme and exclude Disability Living Allowance, Personal Independence Payment, Carer's Allowance and Attendance Allowance from the calculation of income.

(AQW 4269/17-22)

Ms Hargey: From November 2017 to February 2018 my Department consulted on proposed changes to the Scheme.

There was broad support for the proposed changes including a proposal to remove Disability Living Allowance, Personal Independence Payment and Carer's Allowance payments from the calculation of income.

I had intended to make a decision on the proposals by the end of February 2020, however due to the Covid-19 pandemic this decision has been delayed. I am currently considering all of the proposed changes and a decision will be made in the coming weeks.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities how many benefit fraud investigators work in her Department; and how many of are being tasked with investigating or moderating the potential abuse of furlough scheme by employers.

(AQW 4289/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Department currently has 67 benefit fraud investigators tasked with investigating social security benefit fraud. As the furlough scheme is operated by Revenue & Customs there are no benefit fraud investigators from my Department tasked with investigating the abuse of the furlough scheme by employers.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities for an evaluation of the effectiveness of the food support packages administered by local councils; and whether there are plans to continue to issue food parcels to councils for vulnerable citizens beyond the end of June 2020.

(AQW 4313/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The food support package scheme, which has been taken forward with the support of local councils and other stakeholders, has provided critical food support to people who were very vulnerable and isolated during the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic and who did not have a ready network of family or friends to bring them food. The scheme has been widely welcomed across the community with almost 167,000 boxes being delivered to councils between 6th April and 22nd June 2020. This is an excellent example of effective partnership working between central government, local government, business and the voluntary sector to support those in need in our communities.

I am aware that a number of vulnerable people across the community who currently rely on regular food parcels from my Department are likely to continue to require support beyond the end of the programme on 26th June 2020. In light of this, it has been decided to extend the Department's food parcel scheme until 31st July 2020, but only for people who have been asked to shield by their GPs and cannot otherwise get food.

Those no longer eligible are being signposted to other means of support and the Department is now investing up to £875,000 in alternative forms of food assistance. This includes the Department working with Fareshare to deliver increased food supplies to community providers.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities to outline (i) her Department's current financial commitment for the redevelopment of Casement Park; (ii) the projected increase in costs for the redevelopment of Casement Park; and (iii) whether she has made a formal bid to the Department of Finance for the additional monies for the project.

(AQW 4328/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you know, the New Decade, New Approach agreement included a commitment to advance plans to complete the Casement Park project.

In March 2011, the Department was allocated a budget of £110 million of grant funding by the Executive to deliver the three projects within Regional Stadia Programme. This included £62.5 million towards the redevelopment of Casement Park. UCGAA committed £15 million of partnership funding bringing the total current, approved project budget for Casement Park to £77.5 million.

The current project cost estimate is circa £110 million for Casement Park.

This cost estimate may be subject to change and when all matters associated with the Planning Application are concluded, project costs will need to be finalised. Then I will be in a position to consider approval of the final UCGAA Full Business Case (FBC).

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities what support her Department gives to local foodbanks, broken down by constituency.

Ms Hargey: My Department does not provide direct support to local food banks. Food banks generally rely on food donations from members of the public, schools, churches and businesses. They often work, as well, with large food retailers and food redistribution bodies rather than government.

Whilst my Department does not provide funding to food banks, since October 2017 five Social Supermarket pilots have been supported as part of the Welfare Mitigations package. A Social Supermarket offers food provision alongside a wraparound of support to address the underlying causes of food insecurity. Evaluation of these has shown positive outcomes for users and a business case to consider a full roll out is underway. I believe this model has the potential to form a sustainable part of the food response in the medium to long term.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities how her Department proposes to support the arts sector, and its associated venues, impacted by COVID-19 as we emerge from lockdown restrictions.

(AQW 4359/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department is working closely with the Arts Council, sectoral representatives and other key stakeholders to plan for how and when we emerge from the lockdown restrictions. I have already announced a £1.5m Creative support fund to provide immediate assistance. I will continue to review how my Department will provide support and also focus on the future needs of the sector in its entirety.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities, following the completion of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) Economic Appraisal, to confirm when home owners, tenants and traders will be informed on the future of the NIHE block of shops, flats and maisonettes in Knocknagoney Avenue.

(AQW 4369/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The Housing Executive has advised that the Economic Appraisal for the block of flats, maisonettes and shops at Knocknagoney Avenue is currently being finalised. This is a particularly complex appraisal as potential future options for action would involve significant and varying implications for home owners, tenants and traders and has, therefore, taken some time to develop.

It is currently intended to present the Economic Appraisal to the Housing Executive's Board for approval in the summer and, subject to this approval, it will then be referred to the Department for Communities for its consideration.

Once the Department has made its decision, the Housing Executive's local office will inform the home owners, tenants and traders of the outcome and next steps.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities for a breakdown of the welfare mitigations, including bedroom tax, for last three years; and to detail the allocation for 2020/21.

(AQW 4400/17-22)

Ms Hargey:

- (i) A breakdown of the number of people who have received a Welfare Supplementary Payment and the associated expenditure for each of the mitigation schemes for the years 2016/17 to 2018/19 are included in the tables below. This information is taken from my Department's Annual Reports on Welfare Supplementary Payments, Discretionary Support, Standards of Advice and Assistance and Sanctions. These Reports have been laid before the Assembly and are available on the Departmental website at the following link:

<https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/publications/welfare-supplementary-payments-discretionary-support-standards-advice-assistance-and-sanctions>

The information for the 2019/20 year is not currently available but will be included in the Annual Report on Welfare Supplementary Payments that will be published later this year.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister for Communities to detail the number of social houses built in South Down in each of the last five years; and how many are planned for the next three years.

(AQW 4410/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Within the South Down Parliamentary Constituency I can advise that, 209 social homes were completed during the period 2015/16-2019/20 broken down as follows:

Year	Total social housing completions
2015/16	33
2016/17	29
2017/18	53
2018/19	55
2019/20	39
Total	209

Details of the locations of these units is provided in Table 1 below.

A further 34 units have been completed to date in 2020/21 and details of these can be found in Table 2.

59 units are currently under construction and details of these can be found in Table 3.

A further 139 units are programmed to start through the Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) 2020/21-2022/23. Details of these are included in table 4.

Programmed schemes can be lost or slip to future programme years for a variety of reasons e.g. relating to delays in acquiring sites and/or failure to secure planning permission.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister for Communities to detail the investment in sports provision in the South Down area for each of the last five years; and what is planned for each of the next three years.
(AQW 4411/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Table 1 below provides a summary of investment in sports provision by the Department for Communities in the South Down area for each of the last five years. Given the period covered by the question, these figures include funding from the former Departments of Culture, Arts and Leisure and Social Development and rely on historical records and accounting procedures. The funding has been provided through a range of programmes including the Regional Shared Space Sporting Facilities Fund, Community Halls Programme and the Small Capital Grants Programme.

Table 1

Year	DfC Investment in Sports Provision in the South Down area
2015/16	NIL
2016/17	£336,970
2017/18	£11,610
2018/19	£32,506
2019/20	£42,895
Grand Total	£423,981

In addition, Table 2 below provides a summary of funding allocated by Sport NI, the arms-length body responsible for the development of sport, for sports provision in South Down. Funding has been provided through a range of programmes including the Everybody Active Programme, Pitch Maintenance and the Single Facility Fund.

Table 2

Year	Sport NI Investment in Sports Provision in the South Down area
2015/16	NIL
2016/17	£8,349
2017/18	£240,320
2018/19	£675,244
2019/20	£573,262
Grand Total	£1,497,175

I can also advise that 26 sports clubs in the South Down area have received funding totalling £56,000 from the Sports Hardship Fund in 2020/21 to help with ongoing maintenance costs as a result of the Covid-19 lockdown. In addition, a total of £86,234 has also been allocated to three sports clubs in South Down through Sport NI's Pitch Maintenance Programme in 2020/21.

With regards to what is planned for each of the next three years, I can confirm that my Department and Sport NI are considering a number of capital and revenue funding programmes which may be available to support sports provision.

The capital programmes proposed for financial year 2020/21 include an Access and Inclusion programme to improve access to, and participation in arts, cultural and active recreation activities for people with disabilities; a Small Capital Grants programme to promote partnership and collaborative working across the voluntary and community sector; and a programme to improve health and safety at sports clubs and venues covered by the Safety at Sports Grounds (NI) 2006 Order.

Finally, Sport NI has recently approved a new National Lottery Distribution Fund plan to allocate National Lottery funding over the next five years. I would encourage sports clubs to register with both Sport NI and their local Councils to receive information on future funding programmes.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities how the recently announced £20.3m COVID-19 emergency funding is to be allocated between the 11 local councils.

(AQW 4415/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department carried out an analysis of the figures provided by each council to reflect their projected total financial loss and COVID-19 costs that would be incurred during the period March to June 2020.

These figures have been tested against the equivalent for the corresponding period for 2019 and have been signed off by individual Council Chief Executives.

This provided a basis for redistribution that was consistent with the original bid for support that was approved by the Executive in that it looks to assist councils with income lost and additional costs incurred as a result of COVID-19.

Based on this redistribution method the allocation between the 11 councils was as follows:

Council	Allocation £
Antrim & Newtownabbey	1,949,158
Ards & North Down	1,415,734
Armagh, Banbridge Craigavon	2,052,238
Belfast	4,042,083
Causeway Coast & Glens	1,965,989
Derry & Strabane	1,291,091
Fermanagh & Omagh	1,793,465
Lisburn & Castlereagh	2,016,401
Mid & East Antrim	934,149
Mid Ulster	1,298,985
Newry Mourne & Down	1,540,707

Council	Allocation £
TOTAL	20,300,000

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what legislative authority obliges a Council Chief Finance Office to report if it appears a local Council's expenditure, both incurred or proposed, is likely to exceed available resources.

(AQW 4416/17-22)

Ms Hargey: A council has a general duty under section 1 of the Local Government Finance Act (NI) 2011 to make arrangements for the proper administration of its financial affairs, carried out under the supervision of the council's chief finance officer, and under section 5 to keep its financial position under review.

Regulation 4 of the Local Government (Accounts and Audit) Regulations (NI) 2015 provides that a local government body is responsible for ensuring that:

- the financial management of the local government body is adequate and effective; and
- the local government body has a sound system of internal control which facilitates the effective exercise of its functions and which includes arrangements for the management of risk.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister for Communities whether she will push to secure a recovery strategy, including additional funding, for our arts sector.

(AQW 4430/17-22)

Ms Hargey: When I announced the £1.5m Creative Support Fund I recognised that further support would be required for the arts sector. My Department is working collaboratively with the Arts Council and key stakeholders to ensure that the recovery of the arts sector is realised.

The arts sector is hugely important for both community well-being and our attractiveness as a tourist destination; I will continue to work with the sector and Executive colleagues.

Ms Hunter asked the Minister for Communities (i) to detail the number of people who are (a) homeless; and (b) in housing stress in each constituency; and (ii) to outline her plans to deal with homelessness during and post-COVID-19.

(AQW 4436/17-22)

- (ii) The Housing Executive has statutory responsibility for Homelessness and worked to ensure resources were targeted to those in greatest need. This response involved working closely with my Department, Public Health Agency, Department of Health and local homeless providers to ensure the protection of the most vulnerable. The Housing Executive developed a surge plan which identified key services to be maintained throughout the pandemic and actions to be taken in each surge stage to ensure essential homeless services could be maintained.

The Housing Executive significantly increased the number of temporary accommodation bed spaces available. Weekly multi-agency meetings since Mid-March were held with officials from my Department, Public Health Agency, Health Trust, PSNI, Probation Board NI and the Housing Executive as well as representatives from across the sector.

A co-ordinator role was set up to work on behalf of the sector acting as a vital bridge between Homeless Sector Providers and Statutory agencies primarily Housing Executive, the Public Health Agency, Health and Social Care Board and my Department.

Twice weekly conference calls were and continue to be held with the PSNI in relation to Domestic Violence and the Housing Executive is seeking to develop a crash pad model with Women's Aid.

Guidance for Homeless Providers was developed and issued by my Department and the Department of Health. This was updated regularly as the pandemic progressed.

The Housing Executive is currently drawing up an Exit Strategy and contingency plans for any 2nd wave of the pandemic. The exit strategy aims to assess and evaluate the measures which were put in place to address homelessness during the COVID-19 outbreak and consider what strategies will need to be put in place to support those who are homeless or threatened with homelessness in the long term.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities what money her Department has ringfenced in its budget to progress plans for Casement Park.

(AQW 4443/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As you know, all parties agreed to 'investing for the future' as part of the New Decade, New Approach; plans to complete the Casement Park project were a specific commitment in that document.

In March 2011, the Department was allocated a budget of £110 million of grant funding by the Executive to deliver the three projects within Regional Stadia Programme. This included £62.5 million towards the redevelopment of Casement Park. UCGAA committed £15 million of partnership funding bringing the total current, approved project budget for Casement Park to £77.5 million.

The allocation of Executive funding of £62.5 million to progress plans for the redevelopment of Casement Park is an entirely ring-fenced project budget. Ring-fenced expenditure that is specific to a particular policy or programme cannot be used for any other purpose without prior approval by the Executive.

To date £10,512,253.17 of ring-fenced grant funding has been expended by the Department on the Casement Park Project. The balance from the allocation of £62.5 million will continue to be ring-fenced as part of the Executive-approved Regional Stadia Programme budget.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for Communities under what legislative framework does Belfast City Council offer its pest control function.

(AQW 4447/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Belfast City Council are not legally required to provide pest control services as householders, landlords, premises owners, etc. are expected to maintain their properties to a safe and hygienic standard. Pest control services, however, are normally offered by both Belfast City Council and Lisburn City & Castlereagh Council.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister for Communities whether any district Councils, other than Belfast City Council, offer pest control services either individually or through a grouped environmental health system.

(AQW 4448/17-22)

Ms Hargey: In addition to Belfast City Council, only Lisburn City & Castlereagh Council provides a pest control service to domestic residents. A number of councils provide free advice and/or leaflets on pest control.

No environmental health system grouping exists among the councils in relation to pest control.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities what legislative provision is being developed to compensate previous Tax Credit recipients who are financially worse off after making a claim to Universal Credit due to change of circumstances resulting from the Coronavirus pandemic.

(AQW 4451/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I can assure you that my officials have been engaging with senior officials in both the Department for Work and Pensions and HMRC to consider possible measures to assist people who are worse off after making a claim to Universal Credit.

To ensure people are fully informed, a message was added to the Universal Credit telephony call plan advising those on Tax Credits to visit www.gov.uk/working-tax-credit/further-information before making a claim to Universal Credit as they may be better off remaining on Tax Credits. This message has also been added to NIDirect and communicated via the Department's social media accounts. This message will continue to be highlighted to ensure people are fully informed before making any claim to Universal Credit.

In the New Decade, New Approach Deal, the Executive committed to a review of the welfare mitigation measures. This review has been delayed by the current public health crisis but details will be announced once agreed by the Executive. You will appreciate that any new mitigation measures would require legislation or changes to the existing legislation. The costs of any new mitigations would have to be funded locally and agreed by the Assembly.

The Department continues to review the situation to ensure that services and support are available to those in need.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Communities whether there are any plans to address the waiting list for housing in the Limavady area by building new homes.

(AQW 4457/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The principal means of meeting social housing need will continue to be through the re-let of existing social housing accommodation. Where this is insufficient to meet housing need, then the construction or acquisition of further (new) social housing will be required.

There were 14 social housing units completed in 2019/20 within the Limavady area. The details of these units are included in Table 1 below.

No social housing units have completed to-date in 2020/21, however three units are under construction. The details of these are included in Table 2 below.

There are 37 social housing units programmed to start through the Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) 2020/21 – 2022/23. The detail of these units are included in Table 3 below.

Programmed schemes can be lost or slip to future programme years for a variety of reasons, for example, relating to delays in acquiring sites and/or failure to secure Planning Permission. Additional schemes can also be added to the SHDP in-year through the purchase of Existing Satisfactory / Off-the-shelf properties.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Communities to outline (i) whether civil servants in her Department that are vulnerable to the COVID-19 virus will be able to work from home; and (ii) the length of time they will be able to work from home. (AQW 4503/17-22)

- I. Ms Hargey: My Department is committed to ensuring the wellbeing of all staff, including those who are vulnerable to COVID-19. Efforts are ongoing to facilitate working from home for as many staff as possible, including those staff who are required to "shield". Where this has not been possible, special leave may be granted in accordance with NICSHR guidance.
- II. Those staff who are required to follow advice on shielding will continue to be supported to work from home until they are no longer required to shield, or the guidance on shielding has changed.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister for Communities to outline how benefit fraud cases are identified, actioned and concluded. (AQW 4508/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Benefit fraud is identified from a number of sources, including calls to a dedicated fraud hotline, referrals from staff and internal and external data matches.

Allegations of benefit fraud are actioned by analysing the information gathered to identify discrepancies in reported circumstances and where appropriate an interview under caution will be carried out.

Arising from a fraud investigation there are a number of potential outcomes. No further action will be taken in those cases where no misrepresentation of circumstances has occurred. Cases of benefit fraud may be referred for consideration of prosecution through the courts and may include recovery of the proceeds of crime. In some cases as an alternative to prosecution an Administrative Penalty may be appropriate depending on the amount of the benefit overpayment.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Communities whether she will amend the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 to (i) satisfy local councils that pavement café licences do not require planning permission as part of the issuing process; (ii) allow the use of sole or multiple traders to facilitate the provision of hospitality in areas near existing premises; and to detail how her Department plans work with local councils on this issue.

(AQW 4530/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Under the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (NI) 2014, it is the responsibility of each district council to design a pavement café licensing regime appropriate to their area and the Act contains a significant degree of flexibility for councils to respond to local circumstances.

A pavement café licence authorises a person who carries on a business involving the supply of food or drink to place furniture on a public area for use by customers. Furniture placed there is required to be temporary in nature and must be capable of being removed within 20 minutes.

As they have responsibility for planning issues, it is matter for councils to determine whether an application for a particular pavement café licence will require planning permission.

Furthermore, I have written to councils with an update on work ongoing in the Department for Communities to support towns and cities in this recovery. Measures being explored include; consideration of how programmes such as the Department's Revitalisation scheme can be targeted in a way that supports town and city centres as they recover from the impact of Covid-19 and offering the use of Departmental owned assets and public spaces where this will be helpful to businesses. I am also providing £300,000 to Business Improvement Districts so that they can continue to play a key role in bringing local businesses and other stakeholders together to help regenerate their areas and to improve their local trading environment.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister for Communities to detail, since the beginning of 2020, the number of social housing units (i) approved by her Department but on which construction has not yet commenced; (ii) on which construction has commenced but has not yet been completed; (iii) on which construction has been completed but the units have not yet been handed over to the relevant housing association; (iv) handed over to housing associations by contractors; and (v) allocated to new tenants by housing associations, in the (a) Belfast East; (b) Belfast North; (c) Belfast South; and (d) Belfast West constituencies.

Ms Hargey:

Belfast East

Within the Belfast East Parliamentary Constituency there have been 2 social housing units approved since the beginning of 2020. Construction has yet to commence. Details of these units are included in Table 1 below.

There are currently 154 social housing units under construction. The detail of these units are included in Table 2 below.

There have been 28 social housing completions since the beginning of 2020. In this context, "completion" means that work on the dwelling is complete and that these 28 units have been handed over to a housing association (following receipt of a Completion Certificate from a contractor). The housing associations have confirmed that all 28 social housing units have been allocated to new tenant(s). The detail of these units are included in Table 3 below.

Belfast North

Within the Belfast North Parliamentary Constituency there have been 134 social housing units approved since beginning of 2020, but construction has yet to commence. The detail of these units are included in Table 1 below.

There are currently 257 social housing units under construction. Details of these units are included in Table 2 below.

There have been 72 social housing completions, since the beginning of 2020. In this context, "completion" has the same meaning as given above.

The housing associations have confirmed that 41 of the 72 units have been allocated to new tenant(s). The status of the remaining 31 units is not available as we have not as yet received this information. Details of these units are included in Table 3 below.

Belfast South

Within the Belfast South Parliamentary Constituency there have been 48 social housing units approved since beginning of 2020. Construction has yet to commence. Details of these units are included in Table 1 below.

There are currently 93 social housing units under construction. The detail of these units are included in Table 2 below.

There has been 1 social housing completion, since beginning of 2020, to date. In this context, "completion" has the same meaning as given above. The housing association has confirmed that this social housing unit has been allocated to new a tenant. The detail of these units is included in Table 3 below.

Belfast West

Within the Belfast West Parliamentary Constituency there have been 567 social housing units approved since beginning of 2020, but construction has yet to commence. The detail of these units are included in Table 1 below.

There are currently 571 social housing units under construction. The detail of these units are included in Table 2 below.

There have been 29 social housing completions, since the beginning of 2020 to date. In this context, "completion" has the same meaning as given above.

The housing associations have confirmed that 6 of the 29 units have been allocated to new tenant(s). The status of the remaining 23 units is not available as we have not as yet received this information. Details of these units are included in Table 3 below.

* NIHE is still awaiting response from Clanmil Housing Association in relation to status of these completed social housing units. However, as Clanmil notified NIHE of their completion in January 2020, we would assume that these units are now allocated to new tenants.

Programmed schemes can be lost or slip to future programme years for a variety of reasons, for example, relating to delays in acquiring sites and/or failure to secure Planning Permission. Additional schemes can also be added to the SHDP in-year through the purchase of Existing Satisfactory / Off-the-shelf properties.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what actions she will take, and has taken, to ensure that Libraries NI builds upon its equality scheme by proactively including books and online resources promoting equality and equity for marginalised groups that are in urgent need of representation, such as black and minority ethnic communities, by specifically stocking resources on racism, colonialism and slavery.

(AQW 4552/17-22)

Ms Hargey: I will continue to encourage Libraries NI to build on their ongoing work promoting inclusion, particularly with reference to supporting equality and equity for all marginalised groups.

Libraries NI's vision is 'a visible, accessible and inclusive library service at the heart of communities, enhancing lives and valued by all'. Libraries NI's stock policy outlines that Libraries NI will provide access to a wide range of quality resources to meet the needs of the entire community.

The provision of, and access to, stock in a wide range of formats supports Libraries NI in promoting lifelong learning and creativity and fostering a better understanding of a shared community. In doing so it assists with both fostering a more equal society and developing a shared society that respects diversity.

Libraries NI stock collection contains over 1,900 non-fiction titles on Civil Rights, Racism, Slavery and Discrimination. The titles include books for children, items in the curriculum support collections aimed at secondary school children, official publications, academic studies and general histories. In addition, there are many fiction titles that address issues of representation. Such titles are used in themed collections to support national promotions e.g. Black History Month, Holocaust Memorial Day as well as Libraries NI initiatives.

Libraries NI collections hold titles by established and contemporary authors which look at the themes of race, diversity, colonialism and immigration. These works (along with other titles) are featured across the year both in branch promotions and online collections. An example of these promotions is the BBC campaign "The novels that shaped our world" in which 100 novels were divided into ten themes, one of which was identity. As part of this promotion, Libraries NI, featured these books in branches, online and with selected reading groups and via a podcast.

Libraries NI staff attend information and networking forums and work collaboratively with other voluntary, community and statutory organisations. Specifically, the Good Relations and Targeting Social Exclusion Team within Libraries NI work closely with the following organisations:

- Community Relations Council – Good Relations Week and Decade of Centenaries
- Belfast Migrant Forum, Barnardo's and the Red Cross
- Beyond Skin and Bryson Intercultural to provide multicultural information and musical events including Culture Day
- English Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) Groups including Adult and Children's groups in Woodstock Library
- Conway Education Centre to provide creative writing groups for teenagers and younger children from refugee communities

Libraries NI is committed to marketing its services effectively and efficiently to ensure widespread uptake and the Libraries NI Equality Action Plan (Jan 2019) includes the target 'to develop, deliver, facilitate and support programmes and activities which respect and celebrate cultural diversity and contribute to community cohesion including the provision of, and access to, material on the theme of cultural diversity and/or community cohesion'.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Communities how many claimants are subject to the benefit cap and cannot avail of an Administrative Welfare Supplementary Payment.

(AQW 4608/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The most recent statistics on the impact of the Benefit Cap were published in February 2020. At this time a total of 507 households were subject to the Benefit Cap and were not in receipt of a Welfare Supplementary Payment.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities to detail the current number of job vacancy registrations at each jobs and benefits office; and the number of jobs available.

(AQW 4620/17-22)

Ms Hargey: My Department publishes statistical information on vacancies via a Statistical Factsheet on a quarterly basis. I have attached a link to the most recent publication, which highlights all employment vacancies notified to the Department for Communities, for Quarter three of the 2019/20 Financial Year. This publication provides vacancy information for each of the Jobs and Benefits Offices across the province for that period.

<https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/system/files/publications/communities/dfc-employment-vacancies-factsheet-jan20.pdf>

The publication of statistics has been delayed due to the pandemic and NISRA will publish further official statistics on 29th July 2020, detailing employment vacancies by JC/JBO and a link is provided below, which is the principal source of official statistics analysis for employment vacancies.

<https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/topics/statistics-and-research/labour-market-information>

However, in the interim I can advise that Management Information for May 2020 shows that a total of 1071 vacancies, offering 3242 positions, were notified to DfC and placed on the Jobcentre Online (JCOL) employment vacancy portal.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities whether she has considered extending and strengthening welfare mitigations to include people impacted by the two-child tax credit limit.

(AQW 4634/17-22)

Ms Hargey: As Minister for Communities one of my priorities is to complete a review of welfare mitigation measures as committed to in the New Decade, New Approach deal. The purpose of this review will be to identify and make recommendations on the provision of future welfare mitigations and I would expect that consideration will be given to the impact of the “two child policy” on social security benefits and tax credits.

I have instructed officials to develop proposals for the format of the review and I will make an announcement on this in due course after consultation with Executive colleagues and the Committee for Communities.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Communities what specific assistance (i) has been given; or (ii) is available to people affected by the COVID-19 pandemic who have no recourse to public funds.

(AQW 4660/17-22)

Ms Hargey:

Accommodation Support

My Department and public health officials worked with the Department of Health (DoH) on the issue of accommodation support for homeless people with no recourse to public funds.

Advice obtained from the DoH is that it had sufficient powers to enable the provision of accommodation and other services to individuals with no recourse and as the statutory body with responsibility for provision of housing, the Housing Executive was best placed to commission the necessary accommodation arrangements.

A Memorandum Of Understanding was drawn up and agreed between my Department, DoH and the Housing Executive to facilitate necessary arrangements to support those homeless individuals who have no recourse to public funds for the duration of the current Covid-19 emergency.

Food Supply

My Department lead on a delivery model based on cross-sectoral partnerships (public, private and Voluntary & Community sector) and leadership at local level through Councils. A food supply and distribution infrastructure was established. Food leads were identified in each council area and had a key coordination and oversight role. Alongside the delivery of food boxes within a regional supply contract, there is a broader food response delivered by Councils and the Department’s community and voluntary sector partners. This included funding from the Departments COVID-19 contingency fund, which included a criteria on food need. Support here included additional delivery of food to homes, work with food banks, and volunteer supported shopping. The client group included those who are shielding, as well as those who were and continue to be vulnerable during or due to the current emergency.

My Department also worked with Belfast City Council, Mears Housing, Storehouse and South Belfast Round Table to supply 136 food boxes per week for distribution to asylum seekers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities when the North/South Language Body last laid accounts before the Northern Ireland Assembly and submitted a statement of accounts to the Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland, as required under law.

(AQW 4699/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The North/South Language Body last laid accounts before the Assembly on 24th Apr 2020.

Each Agency of the North/South Language Body submits their statement of accounts to the Comptroller and Auditor General independently. Foras na Gaeilge last submitted a statement of accounts to the Comptroller and Auditor General on 31st March 2020 whilst the Ulster-Scots Agency last submitted accounts on 12th March 2020.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister for Communities whether she will relax the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 to enable more businesses serving food to open safely in town centres.

(AQW 4703/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Under the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (NI) 2014, it is the responsibility of each district council to design a pavement café licensing regime appropriate to their area. The Act contains a significant degree of flexibility to enable councils to respond to local circumstances.

The operation of pavement cafés can provide significant commercial opportunities for local businesses however, in granting a pavement café licence, district councils must ensure that the needs of pedestrians and other street users are not detrimentally affected.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities to detail the cost of Aramark cleaning contracts that have been over and above normal contract costs, for deep cleaning offices as a result of positive or suspected COVID-19 cases within her Department.

(AQW 4720/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Since the beginning of the COVID-19 emergency in March, my Department has spent c £277k on cleaning over and above the normal fixed contract cost. Additional cleans are undertaken in line with PHA Guidance COVID-19: Cleaning in non-health care settings.

My Department is committed to and will continue to provide additional cleaning within offices for as long as they are necessary to ensure the safety of my staff.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities, in relation to the additional £20.3 million awarded to local councils, (i) on what basis was this money awarded to councils; and (ii) how projected loss of income figures were audited.

(AQW 4734/17-22)

Ms Hargey:

- (i) My Department carried out an analysis of the figures provided by each council to reflect their projected total financial loss and COVID-19 costs that would be incurred during the period from mid-March to June 2020.

These figures were reviewed against the equivalent income for the corresponding period for 2019 and confirmed by Senior Council Officers.

This provided a basis for redistribution that was consistent with the original bid for support that was approved by the Executive in that it looks to assist councils with income lost and additional costs incurred as a result of COVID-19.

- (ii) The Department carried out a due diligence exercise on the figures provided by each council (which reflected their projected total financial loss that would be incurred during the period from mid-March to June 2020). The figures provided by the councils were also reviewed against the equivalent income for the corresponding period for 2019.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities what work her Department is carrying out, in conjunction with local councils, to streamline the pavement cafes legislation process to help businesses adapt to meet the challenges of social distancing and public health requirements.

(AQW 4735/17-22)

Ms Hargey: Under the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (NI) 2014, it is the responsibility of each district council to design a pavement café licensing regime appropriate to their area; the Act contains a significant degree of flexibility for councils to respond to local circumstances.

My officials have been looking at what action can be taken, specifically around the use of outdoor spaces, to support the economic recovery of the hospitality industry. They have discussed this issue with local government colleagues and the industry and are available to provide further support should this be needed.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities to detail the number of people registered as homeless in the Belfast East constituency (i) in 2018/19; (ii) in 2019/20; and (iii) currently and awarded Full Duty Applicant status.

(AQW 4747/17-22)

Ms Hargey: The information in the table below, provided by the Housing Executive, details the number of applicants, the number of applicants in housing stress and the number of applicants awarded Full Duty Applicant (FDA) status for the years ending March 2019 and March 2020 for the Belfast East and Belfast East and South constituencies.

Parliamentary Constituency	Applicants at March 2019	Applicants in Housing Stress March 2019	FDA at March 2019
Belfast East	1886	1262	865
Belfast East and South (Cross Boundary)	398	274	182
Parliamentary Constituency	Applicants at March 2020	Applicants in Housing Stress March 2020	FDA at March 2020
Belfast East	1890	1288	919
Belfast East and South (Cross Boundary)	377	266	185

Note: The figures above that apply to the Belfast East and South Parliamentary Constituency, Boundaries cannot be disaggregated exclusively for Belfast East Parliamentary Constituency as some areas will cover both constituencies.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities for an update on amended legislation on gambling.

(AQW 4773/17-22)

Ms Hargey: A consultation on the regulation of gambling here closed on 21 February 2020. The purpose of the consultation was to seek views on the appropriateness of the current law and to identify areas of gambling activity which should be included in any future legislation.

Officials are currently analysing the consultation responses received, I hope to make an announcement on the way forward during the summer.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities to detail when the Sexual Orientation Strategy will be (i) published; and (ii) implemented.

(AQW 4823/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am committed to developing a Sexual Orientation Strategy to address any barriers or inequalities related to Sexual Orientation and to fulfil the commitments in New Decade, New Approach and the Executive's Programme for Government.

I am keen to ensure that the people most affected by the Sexual Orientation Strategy will be able to make a meaningful contribution to its development and delivery, based on the principles and practice of citizen and community engagement.

You are aware of the significant and unprecedented pressures placed on everyone by the COVID-19 pandemic. The primary focus of the Executive and all Departments has been to address and put in place measures to resolve current and emerging issues relating to the pandemic, especially those issues affecting the most vulnerable in our society.

I am monitoring the ongoing COVID-19 situation so that work on the Sexual Orientation Strategy can commence in the near future and be sustained throughout the co-design and co-development process.

Publication of the Sexual Orientation Strategy is therefore dependent on the progress of the COVID-19 situation and the capacity and availability of stakeholders and officials from all Departments to engage in this important work.

Planning for the implementation of the Strategy will be a key element of the co-design and co-development methodology. I am determined that the Strategy will be a cohesive document (not just a collection of separate initiatives) that targets the key issues that need to be addressed.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities (i) to detail the communication she, and her Department, has had with the Department for Work and Pensions and the Treasury regarding the suspension of the Move to Universal Credit; (ii) when the Move to Universal Credit is expected to happen; and (iii) what plans she has to introduce transitional protections for people moved off legacy benefits before the Move to Universal Credit is introduced.

(AQW 4833/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) I am committed to protecting the vulnerable in our society and so officials in my Department engage regularly and closely with officials in DWP on all aspects of Universal Credit.

On the move to Universal Credit, a DWP pilot started in July 2019, with the aim of testing a number of possible approaches, including the calculation of transitional protection to support people through the next phase, known as Move to UC. I am aware that due to the Coronavirus outbreak and the need to meet the priority of responding to unprecedented demand and getting payment to those who need it as quickly as possible, the Move to UC pilot in Britain has been temporarily suspended.

- (ii) While my Department had work ongoing in planning for a future Move to UC exercise, including monitoring closely the pilot in Britain, people here were not included in the DWP pilot. However, as a result of the pandemic my Department has also faced an unprecedented increase in demand for services with reduced staff capacity. All available resources are being directed to delivering essential frontline services to those who need them, in particular the most vulnerable in our communities. Resumption of non - essential activity including work on planning for the Move to UC phase here, will take place at an appropriate time.

- (iii) The British Government has made a commitment that those people who make a claim to UC during the Move to UC phase will not receive less in Universal Credit at the outset than they would have in the previous legacy benefits - assuming their circumstances remain the same.

However, it is not appropriate to compare those who may move onto UC through Move to UC (with no change of circumstances) and those who move onto UC because of an event that triggers a new benefit claim. Where there is a change of circumstances, different amounts of benefit may be payable. Therefore, there is no 'correct' amount that can be calculated for transitional payments in comparison to what might be payable by way of transitional protection under Move to UC.

There are however additional payments of two weeks of Housing Benefit, known as a "run-on" which are already available to people moving to UC. Remaining people moving to UC under the Move to UC process will be eligible to receive a two-week Transitional Payment, in line with those claimants who migrate to UC because of a change of circumstances.

There will also be a two-week "run on" for people in receipt of income-based Jobseekers Allowance, income-related Employment and Support Allowance or Income Support from 22 July 2020. The amount of these "run-ons" will be fixed according to the amount of the award payable immediately before claiming UC.

My Department is also currently making transitional payments to those who lost the Severe Disability Premium after moving from legacy benefits to UC.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the COVID-19 hardship funds available for (i) soccer clubs; and (ii) GAA clubs.

(AQW 4849/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: To help address immediate financial challenges faced by the sports sector, the Department and Sport NI launched the Sports Hardship Fund with an initial budget of £750k. The demand for that fund was exceptionally high and, in response, Minister Hargey was able to increase the funding pot to £1.245 million.

The Fund, which is currently suspended, was open to all sports Governing Bodies, clubs or sporting organisations, including soccer and GAA clubs that owned or leased sports facilities. To date, 69 Soccer clubs and 87 GAA clubs have received the £2000 grant.

A weekly update on the Sports Hardship Fund along with other potential sources of COVID-19 related funding and support can be found on the Sport NI website at <http://www.sportni.net/funding-and-support/>.

In terms of other COVID-19 hardship funds which were available, Minister Hargey made the case for sports clubs to be included in the eligibility criteria for the Department for Economy's (DfE) Hospitality, Retail, Leisure and Tourism scheme which has resulted in larger GAA and soccer clubs and other larger sporting organisations, with business elements, receiving a grant of £25k. That scheme closed on 20 May.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities when the Housing Executive will be able to recommence housing improvement schemes.

(AQW 4853/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive have advised that as yet they cannot give an actual date as to the recommencement of non-essential planned maintenance schemes inside occupied properties. They are constantly monitoring the latest PHA advice and updates from the Executive and when it is safe to do so these work streams will recommence.

From the 8th June the Housing Executive resumed a number of work streams that focused on the external fabric of the property, or where the property is vacant. This included external response and heating maintenance repairs, works to vacant void properties and minor external adaptations for the disabled. From the 18th June they also recommenced their external cyclical maintenance programme and major adaptations to properties where they are vacant.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities to provide (i) an indicative timeframe for the reopening of community and voluntary sector services; and (ii) guidance for the community and voluntary sector on safe opening practise as lockdown restrictions are eased.

(AQW 5003/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) You will be aware of the current restrictions that remain in place and it will be for the Executive to provide an indicative timescale for when these can be eased.
- (ii) The NI Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA), as a DfC/DAERA jointly funded organisation, is supporting the Voluntary and Community Sector through the COVID-19 pandemic. NICVA has re-focused its activity and is providing advice to the Voluntary and Community Sector on complying with governance, infection control and wellbeing, including clothing and equipment. This advice and guidance is supporting organisations to take appropriate measures to help prevent the spread of infection and protect service users, volunteers and employees.

My department is working with NICVA and other regional and grassroots community and voluntary organisations to identify the range of issues which need to be addressed and the support which will be needed as part of a shared plan for recovery and renewal for the sector.

This work is being progressed in consultation with an Emergencies Leadership Group, established by my predecessor Minister Hargey, to co-ordinate a joint Government/3rd sector response to the Covid-19 crisis.

Department of Education

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Education whether he has considered allocating additional funding to extend payments to families who have been assessed as eligible for free school meals, beyond the current deadline of 30 June until all schools fully reopen.

(AQW 4630/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): The payments in lieu of free school meals was set up to ensure that families would not suffer additional hardship due to school closures as a result of the coronavirus outbreak.

On 16 June I announced that I would bid for an additional £12million from the Executive's Covid-19 fund to provide a summer food scheme for those children who normally receive free school meals during term time as part of a wider paper on summer activities to be considered by the Executive. This included a proposal to extend the Education Authority's 'Eat Well Live Well' programme which has been running for a number of months and is currently providing healthy breakfasts and lunches to over 3,000 vulnerable young people.

On 18 June the Executive agreed to the proposals and, subject to agreement on funding, a scheme will be put in place as soon as possible.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education to outline how much money his Department has allocated to the aggregated schools budget for this financial year.

(AQW 4658/17-22)

Mr Weir: I have allocated £1,334.5m to the Aggregated Schools Budget in this financial year. This includes the funding to mitigate the additional cost of the recently agreed teachers' pay award above the 1% Public Sector Pay policy limit in each of the relevant years.

Further information on the Department's 2020-21 Resource Budget is available on the Departmental website and can be accessed via the link below: <https://www.education-ni.gov.uk/publications/de-budget-2020-21>

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education to confirm (i) when his Department will provide information to parents of preschool, key stage 1 and children with special educational needs, outlining social distancing and hygiene requirements in schools; and (ii) what guidance is being provided for teachers and classroom assistants to ensure all are able to meet the needs of children starting or returning to school within the next 10-12 weeks.

(AQW 4672/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department has established a Restart Programme to consider a range of issues relating to the safe and effective re-opening of schools. As part of this, strategic guidance has been prepared, through co-design with practitioners, on practical issues linked to a "new school day". This guidance focuses extensively on social distancing and hygiene measures, informed by Public Health Agency advice and has a "day-one" focus. This guidance is available on the DE website and has been shared with Principals.

The New School Day guidelines are only a first step. I expect these strategic guidelines to be supplemented by further guidance on a range of issues, including specific information for supporting children with special education needs (SEN).

As part of the Restart Programme, a Vulnerable Children and SEN Services Project has been established with the primary objective to ensure that services to vulnerable children and young people including those with SEN are re-instated in a safe and effective manner when schools return to operation.

My Department is working to ensure appropriate information is available on the departmental website for a range of stakeholders including school leaders, parents / carers and children and young people.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister of Education to outline what she is doing to address the high costs of childcare.

(AQW 4680/17-22)

Mr Weir: I recognise that childcare costs can place a significant financial burden on families. Through the Executive Ten Year Childcare Strategy, I want to make it easier and more affordable for families to access high quality childcare. The revised Strategy will reflect the context of the current financial support available to parents and more importantly the accessibility of this support – with a clear focus on how we can make it easier for parents to access the benefits they may be entitled to and help offset the cost of childcare.

I will bring forward the Ten Year Executive Childcare Strategy for consideration and approval by Executive colleagues in due course. The Strategy has been updated to reflect the current context for childcare, the analysis of responses to the 2015 consultation, the policy priorities aimed at supporting families reaffirmed in the 'New Decade, New Approach' agreement and developments in early education and care services for families in other jurisdictions. My Department has continued to work closely with colleagues in other jurisdictions throughout the Covid-19 emergency to identify issues facing the sector and the impact on the various childcare offers available. This information will inform any further development of the Executive Strategy.

There are significant policy and resourcing issues to be decided in order to finalise the Strategy, including how we can deliver extended, affordable, responsive and high quality early education and care for families with children aged 3 to 4.

Publication of the Strategy requires the Executive's consideration of the budget and resources available to deliver all the actions, including an extended early education and care offer for 3-4 year olds. In addition to an extended offer for 3-4 year olds, the Strategy has wider aspirations for childcare services for children aged 0-12. Progressing to publication and implementation is predicated on securing the resources required.

Whilst work on developing the Ten Year Childcare Strategy has been ongoing, we have continued to sustain low cost childcare places through the Bright Start School Age Childcare Grant Scheme. Over the period of the Scheme, 91 settings have been supported, including an estimated 2,500 low cost childcare places providing services to disadvantaged families and/or located on the schools estate and/or in rural communities. Between 2014/15 and 2019/20, approximately £7.2million has been invested in the SAC Grant Scheme to sustain and create low cost childcare places. A further £1.1m has been allocated in 2020/21.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how much is spent by his Department for (i) Year 1 to Year 7; (ii) Year 8 to Year 12; and (iii) Year 13 to Year 14, broken down per year, per pupil.

(AQW 4718/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department does not hold information on spend per year, per pupil.

Such information would require disaggregation of central costs i.e. administration and services, transport, meals etc. In addition, overall expenditure includes grant-aided recurrent funding as well as capital expenditure which, by its nature, is not applied on a per pupil basis.

Every grant-aided school covered by the Common Funding Scheme receives a fully delegated budget for its day-to-day recurrent funding needs, distributed under the current Common Funding Formula arrangements. There are certain elements of this funding which can be broken down per year, per pupil.

The table below shows the funding allocated by the Department through the pupil element of the Age Weighted Pupil Unit and the pupil element of the Premises Factor in the CFF only for: (i) Year 1 to Year 7, (ii) Year 8 to Year 12, and (iii) Year 13 to Year 14, broken down per year, per pupil.

School Year	Funding Per Pupil* £
Years 1 to 7	2,469
Years 8 to 12	3,973
Years 13 and 14	5,106

* Data source: CFF 2020-21, which excludes funding to mitigate the additional cost of the teachers' pay award above the 1% public pay policy limit.

This excludes pupils attending special units in mainstream schools, as funding is not broken down by year group; special schools, which are not funded through the CFF; and Preparatory Departments

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what plans are in place to facilitate blended learning for children with a statement of special educational needs next term.

(AQW 4733/17-22)

Mr Weir: As part of the Education Restart Programme, the Department is working closely with the Education Authority (EA) to ensure that learning is delivered to children with a statement of special educational needs whether this be classroom based schooling, home schooling or a blend of both. A key objective of the Restart Programme is to safely re-instate services for vulnerable children and children with SEN including those with statements, most of which are delivered by the EA. Information on how those services will be re-instated will be communicated as soon as possible.

To complement the New School Guidance that was published by the Department on Friday 19 June, we are also developing guidance specific for special schools to ensure that the needs of those children and young people can be safely met, and we are working collaboratively with special school principals and key stakeholders to develop that guidance. Working in partnership, it is hoped the guidance will be published before the end of June.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education whether he took the Dickson Plan into consideration when making his decision around the reopening of schools for key age groups.

(AQW 4791/17-22)

Mr Weir: The guidance on the "New School Day", published on 19th June, explains that priority cohorts of children and young people will return to school on the 24th August. The broad principles outlined in guidance will be similar across all settings. However, it is recognised that Youth, Early Years and Special Education Needs sectors will require separate guidance and this is being developed.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education, as part of any phased-opening approach for schools, what measures will be put in place for children of key workers who may only be attending school 2 or 3 days a week.

Mr Weir: The strategic objective is to achieve maximum face-to-face teaching time for all pupils at the earliest opportunity. There will be a minimum 40% face to face teaching time within Primary schools and a minimum 50% face to face teaching time within Post-Primary schools.

My Department has not prescribed a full return of all children/young people to all schools, although for some schools this may be possible depending on enrolment numbers, physical classroom sizes and availability of other space that can be used for teaching purposes.

My Department will also be keen to maximise the space available for pupils and therefore will seek to work alongside those in the community who can assist by providing additional community facilities on a voluntary basis, and potentially volunteers, which may assist with supervised learning or classroom provision to expand the number of pupils able to be facilitated on a daily basis.

As schools begin to reopen it will be important to ensure that there is alignment between school restart plans and childcare provision so that the impact on working parents is kept to a minimum. On 18 June, I announced the publication of the Childcare Sector Recovery plan. The plan, agreed by the Executive, aims to restore the childcare sector to pre-Covid-19 capacity levels as quickly as possible. The plan will ensure that more parents can access childcare over the next few months.

Parents, including key workers, can find advice and support on finding a suitable childcare place, and the financial support available, by accessing the Family Support NI website at the link below: <https://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/>

Schools participating in the 2020/21 Extended Schools (ES) programme can choose to offer various forms of wraparound support with the resources made available (£9.1m) including pastoral care, or additional learning and development activities before or after the standard school day. Whilst some elements of ES provision have still been possible during the Covid-19 pandemic, most has not taken place as it usually would.

I have ensured that all extended schools will receive funding in 2020/21 at the same rate as last year to ensure that disadvantaged children and young people and their families continue to be supported at this critical time. Schools have been asked to consider what provision may be appropriate this year to best target those pupils most in need or at the greatest risk of underachievement. The particular support measures put in place will be determined by schools and clusters taking account of the evolving context and latest health guidelines.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education whether he will commit to producing a detailed programme of activities for schools, to ensure both physical education and mental health awareness will be key areas when children return to school.

Mr Weir: The current physical education (PE) curriculum already provides opportunities for children and young people to develop knowledge, understanding and skills in athletics, dance, games, gymnastics, and swimming. When schools return, it will need to be delivered flexibly which will be dependent on the context and differing needs of each school, ongoing risk assessment and adherence to the current and future Public Health Agency (PHA) advice and guidance.

In the shorter term, schools may need to focus on elements of the PE curriculum that do not involve physical contact or use of equipment, for example, age appropriate individual athletic events, non-contact fundamental movement skills, aerobics, orienteering within school grounds, and health related fitness. This could progress to minimal use of equipment, in clearly defined, physically distanced zoned areas, with small and consistent members of teams/groups/bubbles of children and young people. The approach of schools should include ensuring that children and young people have opportunities to engage in the recommended two hours of quality PE.

The emotional health and wellbeing of children and young people continues to be a high priority for the Department. We do not underestimate the challenges facing children and schools as they endeavour to support them, through their pastoral care and safeguarding protocols, often going above and beyond what is expected of them, and can appreciate they cannot be expected to do this alone.

Before the Covid-19 crisis DE had been working collaboratively with the Department of Health, the PHA, the Health and Social Care Board, the Education Authority and other Government Departments to develop a Framework for Children & Young People's Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education. This work is still progressing, the main emphasis of which is to support schools to promote emotional health and wellbeing at a universal level, through a holistic, multi-disciplinary approach, and providing early and enhanced support for those children and young people who may be at risk or showing signs of needing further help. I can confirm that £5m has been made available to support implementing this Framework in 2020/21

I appreciate that the Covid-19 crisis creates an added dimension to emotional health and emotional wellbeing, and through the wellbeing element of the Department's Education Restart Programme we will ensure that Principals, Leaders and staff in educational settings have information, resources and support that enables them to achieve a culture of positive health and wellbeing that contributes to positive outcomes for children and young people returning to schools and youth settings in the new academic year.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education (i) for an updated assessment of the backlog in school maintenance; and (ii) to detail his proposals for addressing the backlog.

(AQW 4830/17-22)

Mr Weir: The initial maintenance budget allocation in FY20/21 has been increased to £20.5m.

In addition, a total of £64m has been allocated for capital Minor Works schemes across the schools' estate in 2020-21. Many of these works will assist in reducing the maintenance backlog.

As in previous years, where possible, the Department will also seek to allocate any budget released in-year due to slippage in other programmes to the maintenance and minor works in order to assist in addressing deficiencies in schools' estate.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail his plans for the reopening of schools following the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4848/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department has in place a Restart Programme which is focussing on the following priority areas including Physical Protection, Well-being, Vulnerable Learners and SEN Services, Standards and Learning, New School Day and Childcare. This issue of funding will be considered within each of these priority areas.

In the short term, the Programme's key deliverables will primarily focus on a suite of guidance documents for schools and other educational settings on issues relating to the priorities detailed above. An immediate priority is the development of strategic guidance for practical arrangements for safe re-opening schools in August. This was published on 19 June 2020.

This will be supplemented by detailed operational guidance on issues such as school transport and school meals, and supported by information on curriculum delivery, assessment during the academic year 2020/21 and the reinstatement of SEN services. The Department are working to develop a suite of products to ensure principals, teaching, non-teaching and support, parents and pupils know what to expect when they return to formal education.

In the medium to longer term, my focus will likely switch to managing the impact of the disruption. To do this, the Department will have to assess the educational impact of many weeks' loss of learning and then develop appropriate interventions to mitigate that impact, where appropriate.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what budget has been allocated to the Education Restart Programme.

(AQW 4854/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department will continue to assess the financial implications of the key elements of the Education Restart Programme to provide a high-level estimate of costs, with assumptions, dependencies and variables clearly set out.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether he has any plans to engage local government to provide summer schemes to support childcare for older children.

(AQW 4893/17-22)

Mr Weir: I have announced plans for summer schemes to make provision for vulnerable children and the children of key workers. These schemes will be provided in conjunction with summer programmes delivered by voluntary youth organisations and uniformed organisations.

These plans have been made taking account of current public health restraints.

The decision on summer schemes is intended to be permissive to organisations providing they are following health advice, so it would be open to Councils to consider what actions they take over the summer.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education whether he will introduce a summer food fund or voucher scheme for families entitled to free school meals payments during the July and August school holidays.

(AQW 4923/17-22)

Mr Weir: The payments in lieu of free school meals was set up to ensure that families would not suffer additional hardship due to school closures as a result of the coronavirus outbreak. A voucher scheme was not offered in Northern Ireland.

On 16 June I announced that I would bid for an additional £12million from the Executive's Covid-19 fund to provide a summer food scheme for those children who normally receive free school meals during term time as part of a wider paper on summer activities to be considered by the Executive. This included a proposal to extend the Education Authority's 'Eat Well Live Well' programme which has been running for a number of months and is currently providing healthy breakfasts and lunches to over 3,000 vulnerable young people.

On 18 June the Executive agreed to the proposals and, subject to agreement on funding, a scheme will be put in place as soon as possible.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister of Education whether any discussions have taken place with Ulster University, Coleraine, to explore educational provision in the Causeway Coast and Glens area.

(AQW 4973/17-22)

Mr Weir: Three non-selective schools, Coleraine College, Dunluce School and North Coast Integrated College have been engaged in discussions with the Education Authority, Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education and Controlled Schools Support Council in conjunction with the Ulster University to progress options for sustainable provision for the Causeway area. These discussions are currently on hold due to Covid-19 but will resume in the new school term. The outcome of these discussions will be subject to full engagement and consultation with stakeholders, including parents, staff and governors and, where required, the full statutory Development Proposal process.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education whether he will reverse the decision of the previous Minister of Education and allow pupils to take the transfer test in their current primary school.

(AQW 5000/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department does not play a role in the administration or operation of the transfer tests including where they take place. The current arrangement whereby the tests are facilitated by schools that use the results as one of their admission criteria is a private one between the providers and schools which has been in operation for over ten years.

There is currently no bar on primary schools hosting tests. In 2016, my Department issued guidance which enables primary schools to provide a location for testing where this is mutually agreed with the test provider. Schools can decide the extent to which they follow the available guidance in line with the wishes of parents and the needs of pupils.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education to provide (i) an indicative timeframe for the reopening of youth services and youth sector organisations; and (ii) guidance for the youth sector on safe opening practise as lockdown restrictions are eased.

(AQW 5004/17-22)

Mr Weir: On 18 June I announced a limited resumption of youth services to facilitate delivery of some summer activity with priority given to key worker children. This is conditional on delivery complying with DE guidance on Safe Working in Education Settings and in line with the Executive's recovery strategy.

Wider reopening of generic youth services is part of the planning for Education Restart, with the Education Authority leading on this. An indicative timeframe has not been set but will be informed by this work and subject to medical and scientific advice.

DE guidance on safe working practices in education settings, including youth work settings was published on 4 June and is available on the DE website:

www.education-ni.gov.uk/publications/guidance-support-safe-working-educational-settings-june-2020

Supplementary guidance for the youth sector is being prepared and is expected to be available by early July.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) what advice the Chief Scientific Officer and the Chief Medical Officer have given in relation to social distancing in schools; and (ii) whether this advice will be published this week.

(AQW 5006/17-22)

Mr Weir: A working draft of the (now published) New School Day guidance was shared with the Chief Medical Officer (CMO) and Chief Scientific Advisor (CSA). Feedback received from the CMO and the Department of Health was included as the guidance was updated prior to publication.

The guidance contains a range of actions that will mitigate risk and provide additional protections. These include such measures as social distancing, protective bubbles, hygiene and cleaning practices, ensuring symptomatic staff and pupils do not attend and that appropriate procedures are in place in the event that a child/adult becomes symptomatic while in school.

The New School Day guidance was published on 19 June.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the Education Authority's plans for youth provision in Strabane; and (ii) what sites are being explored for this.

(AQW 5013/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Education Authority Youth Service has increased youth provision in the Strabane area through the appointment of three additional Area Youth Workers and has also secured funding from the Department of Communities for a Youth Support Worker in Charge to work with youth work staff to engage young people from across Strabane. In addition, the EA has designed a specification for the delivery of faith based youth work in the Sperrin and Derg areas, with funding available of up to £130,000 per year as part of a 3 year funding cycle.

The EA Youth Service continues to work towards the development of a fit for purpose youth centre in Strabane, where young people can participate in youth-led creative activities and which promotes the ethos of participation and active citizenship. These plans can be found in the Derry & Strabane Local Youth Development Plan on the Education Authority website.

The Youth Service are exploring both short and long term options for the Strabane area. Options relate to opportunities within the Strabane Grammar School site as well as a second option of utilising an existing youth site on the Melvin Road.

EA Youth Services will continue to work with the community and voluntary sector and will consult with key stakeholders on the development of the new facility.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Education (i) what plans his Department has for a new build for St Colm's High School, West Belfast; and (ii) whether a new school for St Colm's High School has been identified to his Department as a priority from the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

(AQW 5024/17-22)

Mr Weir: There are currently no plans for a new school build for St Colm's High School, Belfast.

The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools did not submit an application under the latest call for major works proposals.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what consideration he has given to the introduction of a flexible school starting age.

(AQW 5044/17-22)

Mr Weir: I recognise some parents have concerns about the age at which their children start school. Flexibility around compulsory school starting age was previously the subject of consultation in 2015. However, there remains no legal means by which a parent can defer when their child starts school and any change would require primary legislation.

Given the challenges to be addressed across education, I have not come to a firm view as to whether legislative change on this specific issue would be a priority.

Ms Hunter asked the Minister of Education whether he plans to improve the curriculum in schools in relation to education on racism and promoting racial equality in our society.

(AQW 5070/17-22)

Mr Weir: The curriculum is broad and balanced and provides schools with considerable flexibility to adapt what they teach and use approaches that best suit the learning needs of their pupils. Schools and teachers can choose to deliver sensitive and important aspects of the curriculum at a time when they are the subject of national debate and when young people can make explicit connections between what they are learning in school and what is happening in the wider world. This includes issues around racism and other forms of discrimination.

The curriculum in both primary and post-primary school contributes to promoting good relations and is closely aligned with my Department's Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education Policy. This aims to contribute to improving relations between communities by ensuring learners, at each stage of their development, have an understanding of and respect for rights, equality and diversity.

Similarly, shared education provides opportunities for young people to learn about each other from each other. This delivers educational and social benefits for learners and promotes equality and respect for diversity.

I believe it is important that we tackle all forms of discrimination not only through education but as a society as a whole.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education what assistance will be given to primary schools equipped with double desks to assist them to move to single desks so as to facilitate one metre social distancing.

(AQW 5093/17-22)

Mr Weir: I recognise the financial impact the current COVID-19 pandemic is having on society as a whole, including the education sector, and my Department will continue, in conjunction with the Education Authority, to assess the financial impact of COVID-19 responses on grant aided schools.

Once the detailed plans are established for the re-opening of schools, the resulting funding requirements will be further assessed.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education to provide a breakdown of the numbers of children with autism enrolled in (i) primary schools and (ii) post-primary schools.

(AQW 5098/17-22)

Mr Weir: In the 2019/20 academic year the number of children recorded as having Autism Spectrum Disorder was 5,869 for primary schools and 4,947 for post primary schools. These figures are sourced from the annual school census which is undertaken in October each year.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what outreach services are in place for children with special educational needs during the COVID-19 pandemic, in relation to the Position on 12 May 2020, highlighted in the Executive's Coronavirus Recovery Plan.

(AQW 5123/17-22)

Mr Weir: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Department of Finance

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Finance whether Civil Service staff absent from work due to COVID-19 will be subject to written warnings under the Inefficiency Absence Sickness policy; and whether staff absent for more than 20 days at present due to COVID-19 have been sent a letter by the Northern Ireland Civil Service Human Resources Department outlining they may be subject to a written warning when they return to work.

(AQW 4682/17-22)

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): At the beginning of March 2020 the Civil Service advised staff and managers that the review points that manage sickness absence would not impact those staff who had either been diagnosed with COVID-19 or were symptomatic of the virus. Therefore they would not be subject to consideration of either a written or a final written warning under the Inefficiency Sickness Absence policy. A similar approach is being taken by public sector organisations across these islands.

Guidance and FAQs is readily available for all staff on the NICS DoF Internet under the section Coronavirus (COVID-19). The FAQ section on sickness absence is particularly relevant to the issues that you have raised. This can be accessed via the following link covid-19-guidance-nics-employees.

Is mise le meas.

Dr Aiken asked the Minister of Finance, in light of recommendation 28 of the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry Report, for his assessment of the Civil Service policy of deleting emails after three months.

(AQW 4726/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Executive has agreed to establish a Subcommittee on Reform following the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry, as set out in the New Decade, New Approach Agreement. The establishment of this Subcommittee has unfortunately been delayed because of COVID-19. Departmental officials are setting out detailed responses and proposals to the recommendations to this Subcommittee, including those specific records management considerations contained within recommendation 28.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance (i) whether his Department, as a matter of course, provided the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry with departmental emails which were not on the TRIM system; (ii) in what circumstances was the RHI Inquiry supplied with departmental emails which were not on the TRIM system; (iii) whether Civil Service witnesses to the RHI Inquiry, retired or otherwise, were afforded access to their emails which had not been retained on the TRIM system; and (iv) whether staff and advisers of the RHI Inquiry were advised that departmental emails may not have been retained on the TRIM system, and told that such nonetheless could be accessed, if that was the case.

Mr Murphy:

- (i) The Department of Finance, as a corporate witness to the RHI Inquiry, provided the Inquiry with emails from the TRIM system. This is in line with the Department's records and information management policies and guidance.
- (ii) The Department provided the Inquiry, at their request, with back-up copies of NICS email accounts for a list of named individuals for specified periods during November 2015 to March 2017.
- (iii) As above
- (iv) The records management policies made available to the Inquiry would have allowed that conclusion to be arrived at.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance whether he will review the situation in relation to retention of emails on the TRIM system, so that retention rather than deletion might become the default position.

(AQW 4741/17-22)

Mr Murphy: All records that are stored in TRIM, including emails, are managed in line with agreed Departmental retention and disposal schedules, which have been laid before the Assembly.

The NICS is reviewing its records management policies and practices, including consideration of the most effective records management system to meet the evolving needs of the civil service in the modern digital era.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance what training on the retention of departmental emails on TRIM was provided to staff prior to July 2019; and, if no training was provided, to outline the rationale for this decision.

(AQW 4742/17-22)

Mr Murphy: When TRIM was first introduced as the electronic repository for official records of the NICS in 2007 all staff received mandatory training on how to use the new software along with guidance on their records management responsibilities. Staff were advised on how emails should be stored on the system. Training on the use of the software and records management is incorporated within the induction process for new staff. NICS staff are provided with refresher training and reminded of their records management responsibilities on a regular basis. When a record is stored in the system it is held in a comprehensive filing structure and retained in line with the Department's agreed Retention and Disposal Schedule which has been laid before the Assembly.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how emails sent by staff who leave, or retire from, the Civil Service are retained on TRIM.

(AQW 4795/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Prior to a member of staff leaving the NICS their mailbox is reviewed and all emails required for business purposes are saved to TRIM. Once an email is stored in the system it is held in a comprehensive filing structure and is managed in line with agreed departmental retention and disposal schedules, which have been laid before the Assembly.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance whether he has any plans to extend the targeted one year rates relief to businesses who do not currently pay business rates; and why he has not extended rates relief to domestic rates customers whose home is intrinsically linked to their business.

(AQW 4845/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The targeted rate relief scheme will remove the burden of rates this year from those businesses who are liable for business rates and who the research has identified are hardest hit by the pandemic. If a property is not liable for business rates then business rates reliefs cannot apply. Domestic premises are subject to domestic rates, as the name implies, and not businesses rates. I cannot extend the scope of business rates reliefs to those who currently do not pay business rates.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how often back-ups are made of all Civil Service systems; and for how long that back-up data is retained.

(AQW 4862/17-22)

Mr Murphy: This information is not collected or held centrally on behalf all departments. The back-up of individual systems and the retention of data will be dependent on the purpose of the system and the data collected, determined by the responsible department.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance, just as matters can be saved in the TRIM system, can such data also be subsequently deleted; and would a trail for such exist.

(AQW 4863/17-22)

Mr Murphy: All records, including emails saved in TRIM are managed in line with agreed Departmental retention and disposal schedules, which have been laid before the Assembly. When those records that do not need to be retained permanently for administrative or legal reasons reach the end of their retention period, they are considered for permanent preservation by PRONI. Records that are not selected for preservation by PRONI are destroyed. A report detailing deletions from TRIM can be accessed.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance what action will be taken in light of the Comptroller and Auditor General's criticisms of Land and Property Services' IT contract with BT.

(AQW 4908/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Department fully accepts the NIAO report and is implementing its findings.

The report states that for future agreements strong contract management controls should be in place. Negotiations are ongoing for a potential extension to the LandWeb contract which are being led by the Permanent Secretary, senior managers from Construction & Procurement Delivery and Land & Property Services with support from the Cabinet Office's complex transactions team where required. The NIAO welcome this work and the involvement of the Cabinet Office complex transactions team.

The report further recommends that mechanisms for Value for Money should be included as contractual conditions. The report confirms that cost savings of £1.8 million were negotiated by the Department as a part of the 2019-2021 LandWeb contract extension. It is also acknowledged that the inclusion of additional contractual controls could have resulted in further value for money savings and discussions are underway with the supplier in relation to further savings.

The final NIAO recommendation refers to the introduction of a new Fees Order. A surplus in the Land Registry fee income arose over the last three years as a result of the buoyancy in the property market, which saw a substantial increase in the number of transactions processed by the Land Registry, and improved efficiency in Land Registry operations. Due to the impact of the Coronavirus pandemic on the property market, the number of applications submitted to the Land Registry is projected to be substantially lower in 2020/21 than in previous years and it is not anticipated that a surplus will be generated this year.

The Department started work in 2018 on preparing a new Fees Order but was unable to progress this due to the absence of the Assembly. Work has restarted on preparing a new Fees Order with the aim of it being operative from April 2021.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance (i) whether the instant messaging service Cisco Jabber is used within the Northern Ireland Civil Service; (ii) whether it is backed up and messages retained; and (iii) whether its content is routinely checked in regard to FOI requests received.

(AQW 4909/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Cisco Jabber is used for Instant Messaging across the NICS, by approximately 9,000 staff as a digital alternative to telephone calls. The system is not backed up, and messages are not retained, as it is used in real-time. All Government business, including the use of messaging services, must be conducted in line with records management policy. Any informal discussion in an instant message which then evolves to a decision or transaction must be recorded and retained as the official record.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how much his Department has spent on producing material in Irish, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4910/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Department does not record separately the costs of producing material's, that is the cost of design, printing and issue etc., in different languages.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Finance whether his department will review NI Building Regulations, with a view to incorporating Changing Places disabled toilets in large public buildings and developments as set out in BS8300/201.

(AQW 4929/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I am very sympathetic to the dignity issues arising from the limited provision of Changing Places Toilets (CPTs) here and will continue to support an equitable and accessible built environment for everyone. I am keen to improve the provision of CPTs here and have tasked my Department's Building Standards Branch with incorporating mandatory requirements for their provision into local Building Regulations.

Dr Aiken asked the Minister of Finance for his assessment of the findings of the Northern Ireland Audit Office report on the Land and Property Services Northern Ireland LandWeb Project.

(AQW 4945/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Department fully accepts the NIAO report and is implementing its findings.

The report states that for future agreements strong contract management controls should be in place. Negotiations are ongoing for a potential extension to the LandWeb contract which are being led by the Permanent Secretary, senior managers from Construction & Procurement Delivery and Land & Property Services with support from the Cabinet Office's complex transactions team where required. Mr Storey asked the Minister of Finance, pursuant to AQW 3238/17-122, who his Department consulted with prior to implementing section 6.13 of the NICS staff handbook.

(AQW 5058/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Section 6.13 of the NICS staff handbook, The NICS Trans Equality Policy and Transitioning at Work Guide has been developed as a key NICS People Strategy diversity and inclusion initiative. In developing the Policy and Guide my Department consulted with a range of individuals and groups. This included:

- Trade Union Side
- NICS Diversity Champions
- The NICS LGBT Staff Network
- Individual Colleagues
- Stonewall
- Focus: The Identity Trust
- GenderJam
- SAIL NI, and
- TransgenderNI

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance what action he will take to address the concerns expressed about the retention of emails on the Northern Ireland Civil Service Trim system.

(AQW 5138/17-22)

Mr Murphy: All records, including emails, that are stored in the Electronic Records Management System used by NICS Departments, known as TRIM, are subject to agreed Departmental retention and disposal schedules, which set out the timeframes for how long all record types are retained in the system. These schedules have been laid before the Assembly for scrutiny by all Members and Committees.

The NICS, along with other large public bodies, have in place policies that recognise the need for emails that have to be retained for the official record to be transferred to secure records management systems. The ICO has also stated that it is a matter for departments to decide if they wish to implement policies to delete emails that have not been transferred, and that where departments take this approach they must ensure that staff are aware of the process and the timescales for making decisions on what needs to be saved.

Training in the proper use of the TRIM system, including saving emails, is mandatory for NICS staff, and staff are regularly reminded of their records management responsibilities.

As part of continual improvement, the NICS is reviewing its records management policies and practices, including consideration of the most effective records management system to meet the evolving needs of the civil service in the modern digital era.

Department of Health

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, pursuant to the Minister of Finance's response to AQW 3923/17-22, to detail, in respect of departmental procurement, the date on which each contract for (i) personal protection equipment; and (ii) uniforms, including scrubs, was signed since 1 March 2020, identifying, where permissible, the contracting parties.

(AQW 3957/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): During the period in question, 8,520 individual purchase orders were placed by Health and Social Care Bodies for the above goods. These orders contained 17,822 individual purchase lines relating to a variety of types of PPE to in excess of 150 suppliers.

Answering this question as asked would therefore require significant input from the Business Services Organisation (BSO) to analyse this information at individual purchase line level.

Given the current situation I feel it would not be appropriate to ask the BSO to undertake this work as it would detract from its focus on delivering front-line services during the biggest public health emergency that this country has ever faced.

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Health what steps his Department has taken to assess the impact of the COVID-19 lockdown on paid and unpaid carers in respect of (i) their mental health; (ii) the fiscal impact; and (iii) their continued ability to carry out caring duties.

(AQW 4047/17-22)

Mr Swann: The findings in the Carer's UK Report "Caring Behind Closed Doors: Forgotten families in the Coronavirus Outbreak" have provided a valuable insight into the impact of the pandemic on unpaid carers and families. Going forward, my Department will continue to work closely with carer representatives concerning the needs of carers.

<https://www.carersuk.org/help-and-advice/technology-and-equipment/36-for-professionals/policy-eng/report/6377-caring-behind-closed-doors-report>

My Department published guidance for unpaid/informal carers on 10 April and this was updated on 22 May. This will be updated regularly and is available at:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/advice-informal-unpaid-carers-and-young-carers-during-covid-19-pandemic>

The guidance includes a comprehensive list of services and links to assist people with their emotional health and wellbeing during the COVID-19 period.

In respect of paid carers, my Department recently advised HSC Trusts that Domiciliary Care Agencies should continue to be paid 100% of the provider's income based on their previous three months reference period. This will ensure that care workers can continue to be paid at their normal rates of pay. This guidance can be accessed via:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/health/COVID-19-guidance-for-domiciliary-care.pdf>

Independent sector employees also have access to Trust-based wellbeing services should they need to avail of these.

Mental health services in Northern Ireland are provided in line with the regional stepped care model. This approach remains during the COVID-19 emergency. No mental health services have stopped, and all who need care and treatment will be provided with services that are clinically appropriate.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, once steps within the Coronavirus Executive Approach to Decision-Making are actioned by the NI Executive, do these instructions supersede The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020, or will he be required to amend these regulations.

(AQW 4139/17-22)

Mr Swann: The NI Executive Coronavirus Executive Approach to Decision-Making sets out the approach that the Executive will adopt in the regular reviews of the Coronavirus Regulations. Any decision by the Executive to relax an existing restriction will require an amendment to the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to detail (i) the meetings of SAGE relating to COVID-19, that the Chief Scientific Advisor attended; (ii) the meetings at which someone else took his place as a full member, representing his Department and the Executive, including the date of the SAGE meeting, who was in attendance, and the status of their membership.

(AQW 4259/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- i) Please find detailed the meetings of SAGE relating to

COVID-19, that the Chief Scientific Advisor attended:

Dates of Meetings
29th March	30th April
7th April	1st May
9th April	5th May
14th April	7th May
16th April	19th May
21st April	21st May
23rd April
28th April

- ii) There were no meetings where someone else took Prof Young's place as a full member representing the department and Executive. However there was a meeting Prof Young could not attend on 31st March and the Chief Medical Officer was in attendance.
- iii) We do not hold the rest of the information you have requested but this link does have details of SAGE membership. <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/scientific-advisory-group-for-emergencies-sage-coronavirus-covid-19-response-membership/list-of-participants-of-sage-and-related-sub-groups>

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health (i) what percentage of people who have died with COVID-19 also had diabetes; (ii) whether there is a direct correlation or vulnerability with diabetes sufferers; and (iii) what measures or advice can be put in place to protect people with diabetes.

Mr Swann: The information on the percentage of people who have died with COVID-19 and who also had diabetes is not yet available. Deaths registered in 2020 are currently undergoing the necessary coding to the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-10) that will enable questions relating to co-morbidity and underlying and/or contributory causes of death to be answered. The coded death statistics are scheduled to be published in summer 2020.

People with a range of specific medical conditions identified as placing them at greatest risk of severe illness or hospitalisation if they catch the Coronavirus (Covid-19) received a letter advising them to 'shield' themselves from society for 12 weeks. People living with other underlying health conditions, including diabetes, were identified as part of a wider vulnerable group, but not included in the shielding group.

This group is advised to stringently socially distance and it is recognised that they are at higher risk of severe illness from coronavirus. They should stay at home as much as possible and, if they do go out, take particular care to minimise contact with others outside their household.

There may be some people with diabetes who need to shield based on other conditions which would put them into the clinically extremely vulnerable group. However, under current guidance, most people with diabetes do not need to do this. It is extremely important to ensure that the most effective and up to date advice is provided to those with underlying medical conditions. Any further changes to assessment of risk and advice for those with underlying medical conditions will be based on a thorough review of the medical and scientific evidence as more is learned about the virus.

The Northern Ireland Diabetes Network has established a diabetes telephone support helpline and e-mail support facility to provide additional clinical support and advice to people living with diabetes at this time. The Helpline can be contacted by telephone on 028 9536 0600 or by email at diabetic.helpline@hscni.net.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health what data his Department has received on the use of the NHS 111 service by people here, since February; and whether he will publish this data.

(AQW 4555/17-22)

Mr Swann: At the end of February 2020, Public Health England facilitated a dedicated NHS 111 Covid-19 helpline for callers from NI. Two sets of data are currently provided to the Department; a daily count of calls to the helpline by NI callers, and data in respect of the type of questions asked by callers as well as the location of the caller recorded by name of closest town or closest city and whether the caller is symptomatic of Covid-19. I have no current plans to publish a detailed breakdown of this data due to potential to identify individuals.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health (i) to detail the number of Health and Social Care staff who have tested positive for COVID-19; and (ii) whether he will include this information on the Department of Health dashboard.

(AQW 4556/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (i) Information on the total number of Health & Social Care Staff who have had a positive laboratory completed test for COVID-19 is not available as information to enable the identification of Health & Social Care Workers was not initially collected by all HSC Laboratories.
- (ii) My Department is currently working through outstanding issues with HSC Laboratories and National Testing Centres to establish a consistent count of Health & Social Care staff tested, and it is my intention that this information will be included on the DoH dashboard when these issues are resolved.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what arrangements he has made in conjunction with the Department of Education and the Department for the Economy to ensure childcare arrangements will be in place for people to be able to return to work in sectors such as retail from 8 June 2020.

(AQW 4562/17-22)

Mr Swann: A Childcare Sector Recovery Plan for Northern Ireland was published on Thursday 18 June. The objective of the plan is to return the childcare sector to full capacity as quickly and safely as possible and to ensure that childcare is available for any working parent who needs it. From 29 June, childcare will no longer be limited to vulnerable children and the children of keyworkers, and the number of families that childminders will be able to provide childcare to will increase to 4, rising further to 5 families in August. There will be no operating restrictions in terms of minimum or maximum numbers of children in daycare and school-age childcare settings. Guidance to support the sector through to full recovery was issued by my Department on 9 June 2020.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what additional support he will be offering to the childcare sector in (i) June, 2020; (ii) July 2020; and (iii) and August 2020.

(AQW 4566/17-22)

Mr Swann: Through the COVID-19 Childcare Sector Support Scheme, financial support will be provided until the end of June. Financial support for the sector beyond the end of June is currently under consideration and will be subject to the availability of funding. This is being led by the Department of Education.

Guidance has also been made available to the childcare sector, both settings and childminders. All guidance is available on the Family Support NI website at: <https://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/>.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to detail his Department's projected future capacity for testing, including target dates, broken down by testing programme or pillar.

(AQW 4579/17-22)

Mr Swann: Pillar 1 testing is delivered via Health and Social Care laboratories and laboratories operating as part of the Scientific Advisory Consortium. Current capacity is up to 2,200 tests per day. It is anticipated that Pillar 1 testing capacity will increase further over the coming weeks. Anticipated capacity under Pillar 1 is the subject to the availability of reagents, global supply chains and for some laboratories the allocation of ROCHE testing kits which are currently on a national allocation.

Testing capacity under Pillar 2 is flexible and is informed by the number of bookings made on the digital platform in the preceding 48 hours. If demand for testing increases, as recorded on the digital platform, testing capacity can be extended to meet the demand. Testing as part of the National Initiative will continue to be an important tool in our response to this Covid-19.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health when health workers will be reimbursed for pay lost due to recent industrial action, as announced by the Minister of Finance on 19 May; and why they have yet to be reimbursed.

(AQW 4583/17-22)

Mr Swann: I am on record as to the value I place on the skill, dedication and hard work of health and social care staff. I have seen at first hand the magnificent job that all HSC workers perform, the risks that they take, and the sacrifices that they make.

The Executive agreed at its meeting on 18 May to allocate funding of £1.64m to the Department of Health for the reinstatement of pay lost due to participation in strike action. On 20 May I was asked by the Minister of Finance to bring forward proposals to enable the award of this funding to be made to health staff.

I will be bringing a paper very shortly on the issue to the Executive.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health what advice his Department is giving people with diabetes who have to work but need protection against COVID-19 in the workplace.

(AQW 4594/17-22)

Mr Swann: People living with diabetes were identified as part of a wider vulnerable group at higher risk of severe illness from coronavirus. People within this group should follow strict social distancing measures and are advised to stay at home as much as possible and, if they do go out, take particular care to minimise contact with others outside their household.

There may be some people with diabetes who are shielding based on other conditions which would put them into the clinically extremely vulnerable group. In such instances, the guidance on shielding would apply.

Where people with diabetes have concerns about protection against COVID-19 in the workplace, they should discuss their particular circumstances with their employer who will be best placed to advise on appropriate measures for their role and workplace at this time, including, for example, if there might be scope for job re-design, changes to working pattern or location, or opportunities to reduce contact with others.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health to publish the details of the modelling methodology, with particular reference to the assumptions being used to calculate the 'R' number.

(AQW 4611/17-22)

Mr Swann: The estimated reproduction number, R published by the Department of Health represents the consensus view of the Northern Ireland Covid-19 modelling group.

This is based on estimates of R produced by a number of UK modelling groups using a range of different models, in addition to an NI developed model. The NI model derives R using an extended SIR (Susceptible-Infectious-Recovered) compartmental model and based on the mathematical relationship between the value of R and the growth rate of an indicator of infection. The model currently uses the number of Covid-19 positive hospital in-patients and admissions, and the main assumption is that an individual with Covid-19 is infectious for 6 days. This assumption is based on extensive published data relating to the natural history of the period of infectiousness.

The value of R as an indicator of the trajectory of the virus remains below one as the incidence of Covid-19 in Northern Ireland continues to fall. This means that greater reliance is now being placed on other indicators such as the number of new positive cases.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Health to publish guidance for (i) childcare and daycare providers that confirms the hygiene and personal protection equipment requirements when they return to full operation; and (ii) parents and carers of people with disabilities, explaining how and when support for families needing childcare or daycare will be provided.

(AQW 4639/17-22)

Mr Swann: In respect of childcare, updated COVID-19 guidance was published and circulated to all childcare providers on 9 June 2020, which covers hygiene and personal protective equipment. Guidance for parents who need to access childcare, including parents of children with disabilities, has also been published on my Department's website and NI Direct.

All of the latest guidance regarding childcare is also available on the Family Support NI website at:

<https://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/Support/91/covid19-childcare-options-and-associated-guidance>.

The public health guidance for all health and social care workers is available on the Public Health Agency website at:

<https://www.publichealth.hscni.net/covid-19-coronavirus/guidance-hsc-staff-healthcare-workers-and-care-providers>.

Engagement has been ongoing between HSC Trusts, carers and service users in relation to the reopening of a range of facility based services, including adult day care. HSC Trusts have advised that they have redeployed the staff resource to provide appropriate alternative support to vulnerable service users and families on a risk assessed basis, delivered within COVID-19 guidelines.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health how direct payments will operate over the period to 30 September 2020, particularly with regard to carers for children who are shielding.

(AQW 4693/17-22)

Mr Swann: Direct Payments will continue to be paid by Health and Social Care Trusts to individuals who have an assessed need and have chosen this option of self-directed support.

Further guidance for Trusts and individuals in receipt of Direct Payments during the COVID-19 pandemic is under consideration.

Self-directed support is designed to ensure people are given a range of options for how their social care is delivered, empowering people to decide how much ongoing control and responsibility they want over their own support arrangements. There are 4 options of self-directed support:

- 1 Direct Payments, Managed Budget, Trust-led services or a combination of all 3.
- 2 Direct Payments were first introduced by the 'Community Care (Direct Payments) Act 1996' which has since been repealed and replaced by the 'Carers and Direct Payments Act (Northern Ireland) 2002'.
- 3 A Direct Payment is a payment made to an individual as an alternative to services which would have been provided, or purchased by the HSC Trust. Direct Payments allow service users to procure their own care and support. It gives the individual flexibility and choice and helps the HSC deliver on its aim to personalise care and support arrangements.
- 4 Direct Payments can be paid either to the individual in receipt of services and/or their administrator. It is paid after an assessment of need has been undertaken and outcomes agreed with the individual. The personal budget can be used in different ways but the most common include the employment of a personal assistant (PA) or accessing short break (respite) care and support.
- 5 There are in excess of 4,500 people in Northern Ireland in receipt of Direct Payments.
- 6 New guidance being developed will encourage Trusts to adopt a flexible approach in relation to the use of Direct Payments. It is important that the use of Direct Payments is linked to the agreed outcome for the service user and that this is clearly demonstrated before any changes can take place.
- 7 The new draft guidance will shortly be included in a submission for your consideration.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health how pathways for people diagnosed with long-term neurological conditions will change in the period 1 July 2020 to 30 September 2020.
(AQW 4696/17-22)

Mr Swann: You will be aware that on 9 June 2020 I published the Strategic Framework for Rebuilding Health and Social Care, along with Phase 1 (June 2020) rebuilding plans for each of the six Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts.

The Strategic Framework will underpin the development of incremental service plans by Trusts. The key aim will be to incrementally increase HSC service capacity as quickly as possible across all programmes of care, within the prevailing COVID-19 conditions. Subsequent phases will see these service activity plans and targets updated in three monthly cycles, the first of which will cover the period July to September 2020.

Consideration will be given to opportunities to improve pathways across services at the earliest opportunity within this process.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of when clinics held within GP surgeries will return to business as usual.
(AQW 4736/17-22)

Mr Swann: GPs have a responsibility to provide core services to their registered patients and the current COVID-19 pandemic does not in any way negate this requirement.

GP practices are currently operating a telephone triage system which allows patients to continue to seek medical advice from their GP for both routine and urgent problems.

The GP uses their clinical judgement to decide if the patient can be safely managed over the telephone or whether a face to face appointment is required.

This ensures that patients only visit surgeries where it is absolutely essential.

The resumption of open clinics within GP surgeries is being kept under review and decisions will be made in line with scientific advice and within a framework for the future delivery of services.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health whether the COVID-19 testing centres in Derry, Craigavon, Belfast and Enniskillen have been closed for any days since coming into operation.
(AQW 4749/17-22)

Mr Swann: Only one COVID-19 fixed drive-through testing centre has closed since coming into operation. The SSE Arena (Belfast) was closed over the Easter holiday period on the following dates: Sunday 12th, Monday 13th and Tuesday 14th April 2020. The reason for closure of the SSE Arena site on those specific days was a low demand for testing.

If demand for testing increases, the opening hours of the drive-through testing centres can be extended to meet demand.

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health what assurances he can give that the Cancer Strategy is still on target to be delivered in December 2020; and how successful the steering group has been in remotely connecting with the wide range of stakeholders, including lived experience representatives, during COVID-19.

(AQW 4780/17-22)

Mr Swann: The cancer strategy was being taken forward according to the principles of co-production which seeks to maximise the patient voice and relies heavily on input from key stakeholders, including HSC staff and lived experience patients.

Due to the impact of COVID-19 which saw the redeployment of key staff to meet the pandemic surge and the need for cancer patients to shield, key stakeholders were unable to continue with the development of the strategy and it is therefore unlikely we will meet the target delivery date. Cancer Strategy Sub Group Chairs have been asked for an assessment of the impact of COVID-19 on the development of the strategy including timelines.

In order to continue with our commitment of co-production a further period of time will be required. This additional period will also allow for the effects of the pandemic surge to be taken full account of as we further develop our vision for the provision of cancer services over the next ten years.

Officials continued to liaise with key stakeholders throughout the pandemic surge via teleconference and virtual meetings on a fortnightly basis.

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health (i) to publish the advice given to him from the Chief Dental Officer and Chief Medical Officer regarding dental surgeries during COVID-19; (ii) for an anticipated timeline for the re-opening of dental practices; and (iii) what support will be made available to ensure no dental practice is forced to permanently close due to the pressures of COVID-19.

(AQW 4781/17-22)

Mr Swann: There is a long standing convention that advice to Ministers remains advice to Ministers and is not placed in the public domain.

The Chief Dental Officer wrote to all General Dental Practitioners (GDPs) on 18 June 2020 setting out plans for the phased resumption of non-urgent dental care. In particular, treatments not involving Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs) can resume on 29 June 2020. The available treatments will be extended to include AGPs from 20 July 2020, although some practices will be able to provide all dental services from 1 July 2020 if they are able to meet the necessary standards to safely offer AGPs.

The Department has established the COVID-19: General Dental Services (GDS) Financial Support Scheme (FSS) with the aim of providing financial support to General Dental Practitioners (GDPs) in response to the significant reduction in dental activity levels due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

There has been a very high uptake of the scheme to date with the net activity based payments made to GDPs 25% higher in 2020-21 than in the same period in 2019-20.

Full details on the scheme can be accessed at the link below which includes background to the scheme and a list of Frequently Asked Questions.

<http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/services/3131.htm>

My Department will continue to work closely with the Health and Social Care Board and representatives of the dental profession to identify what additional support will be required as we move through the pathway to recovery and re-establish dental services.

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health what consideration he has given to supporting Cancer Research UK's campaign Safe Spaces for Cancer Services, which calls for the resumption and continuation of cancer services, including screening, in spaces safe from COVID-19 exposure.

(AQW 4782/17-22)

Mr Swann: I am aware of the CRUK campaign and I can assure you that all HSC Trusts have developed service rebuilding plans for all HSC services. The resumption screening, diagnosis and treatment of cancer patients in clinically safe environments is being given the utmost priority and will proceed as quickly as possible, timed to ensure an appropriate match with available capacity across the system.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Health what plans are in place to relocate the COVID-19 testing facility in Newtownards to within the grounds of the MOT centre, or to another location, to allow vehicle testing to resume.

(AQW 4789/17-22)

Mr Swann: The South Eastern Health & Social Care Trust is actively working to develop a testing facility on the Ulster Hospital site and plans to have this in place by the end of September 2020.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health at what stage and date will family members be able to visit loved ones in hospital if the illness is not connected with COVID-19.

(AQW 4799/17-22)

Mr Swann: I recognise the distress and upset for individuals and families when a loved one is admitted to hospital during the restricted visiting period which feels counter-intuitive to how we normally respond in Northern Ireland to family visiting during hospitalisation.

The reduction of visitors to hospitals was a key strategic component of managing the pandemic and it was taken to protect patients, their families, health and social care workers by reducing the risk of infection. This was aligned to the "Stay at Home" message during lockdown.

Please be assured that whilst adhering to the principles of the visiting guidance Trusts in Northern Ireland will always consider individual cases to ensure a person centred approach to our service.

Care providers have been encouraged and supported to make the best use of technology to maintain virtual contact between residents and their families, but I recognise that this is a poor substitute for being able to visit a loved one in person and I do empathise with those who are in this situation

Following Northern Ireland Executive publication of the five step approach to relaxing lockdown restrictions, I am in the process of reviewing the COVID-19 visiting guidance, and will share the revised guidance as soon as is practicably possible.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Health (i) when dentists, including private and NHS practices, will be allowed to fully reopen; and (ii) what financial support is available to enable them to do so safely.

(AQW 4814/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Chief Dental Officer wrote to all General Dental Practitioners (GDPs) on 18 June 2020 setting out plans for the phased resumption of non-urgent dental care. In particular, treatments not involving Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs) can resume on 29 June 2020. My Department will continue to work closely with the Health and Social Care Board and representatives of the dental profession to identify what additional support will be required as we move through the pathway to recovery and re-establish dental services.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health whether he has any plans to recommend an increase of student places to the Department for the Economy for the number of pharmacists being trained.

(AQW 4844/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department has commissioned a review of the pharmacy workforce which is expected to be published in the near future and actions related to the number of undergraduate places will be considered during its implementation.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health whether he will pay (i) carers in care homes; (ii) kitchen staff in care homes; (iii) cleaners in care homes; and (iv) domiciliary care workers, a £500 bonus.

(AQW 4850/17-22)

Mr Swann: I value greatly the tireless efforts of all frontline health and social care staff, and their dedication and care to patients. The issue of any additional remuneration would be an issue for the Executive to consider.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health when he expects dental practices can return to normal service; and, until then, will he permit exceptions for cancer patients to avail of a necessary dental check-up before they embark upon chemotherapy treatment.

(AQW 4855/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Chief Dental Officer wrote to all General Dental Practitioners (GDPs) on 18 June 2020 setting out plans for the phased resumption of non-urgent dental care. In particular, treatments not involving Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs) can resume on 29 June 2020. The available treatments will be extended to include AGPs from 20 July 2020, although some practices will be able to provide all dental services from 1 July 2020 if they are able to meet the necessary standards to safely offer AGPs.

The guidance provided to GDPs by the HSCB includes a list of urgent conditions which dentists are permitted to see during the current phase. This includes "Oro-dental conditions that are likely to exacerbate systemic medical conditions", which would cover a patient about to undergo medical treatment. The full guidance document is available at the link below.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health how he is going to harness the increase in people walking for leisure and exercise during the COVID-19 lockdown, given its links to better mental and physical health; and whether he is going to bring forward a walking strategy.

Mr Swann: "A Fitter Future for All", the obesity prevention strategy for Northern Ireland, seeks to promote greater participation in all forms physical activity, including walking and cycling, as physical activity plays a key role in improving population health and well-being. Through this strategy my Department works closely with Department for Infrastructure and Department for Communities on wider strategies to promote active travel, and sport and physical activity.

In support of "A Fitter Future for All", the Public Health Agency (PHA) commissions a suite of programmes to increase participation in physical activity. In respect of walking, during 19/20 the PHA and Sport NI funded the development of an Economic Appraisal with a view to creating a single co-ordinated and better resourced led-walking programme in Northern Ireland, the "Walking for All" programme. It is anticipated that the programme will operate across Northern Ireland and supersede both Walking for Health and Walking in Your Community (developed by Outdoor Recreation NI) but enabling the activity of these programmes to continue. A key aspiration of the proposed programme is that all areas of NI are served by a regular led walk.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health for an update on the guidance being introduced for social workers to identify incidents of Parental Alienation as part of the cross-party Parenting and Family Support Strategy, particularly given the access difficulties some parents have had during the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4859/17-22)

Mr Swann: Work on the development of Family and Parenting Support Strategy has been temporarily suspended to support the Department's immediate response to the coronavirus pandemic. The Department will progress the development of the Strategy as soon as possible and will consider the impact of the pandemic on parental alienation and separated families.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what has been learned from contact tracing since April 2020 about the behaviour of the coronavirus and how it is being transmitted in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 4860/17-22)

Mr Swann: As far as it has been possible to ascertain, the behaviour of the virus in NI is similar to that which has been the case globally. There is evidence of person to person transmission. There is a risk of transmission to other household members when one member acquires the infection.

The international evidence suggests that maintaining physical distance, frequent hand washing, minimising touching of potentially infected surfaces, good ventilation and early isolation of potentially infected cases and their close contacts can reduce transmission.

Further evidence may emerge in due course.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health how he will financially support dentists to ensure they can operate safely when they resume non-emergency appointments.

(AQW 4896/17-22)

Mr Swann: In light of the risks due to Covid-19, non-urgent dental care had been suspended in Northern Ireland since March 2020. This has resulted in a significant reduction in the normal Item of Service (IoS) payments to General Dental Practitioners (GDPs). In response, the Financial Support Scheme (FSS) was established as a temporary measure to reduce the risk to the financial viability of the service.

FSS payments worth £12 million have been made to GDPs over the past three months in addition to £3 million in IoS payments.

In order to support dentists as they resume non-urgent dental care from 29 June 2020, GDPs will continue to be able to apply for additional FSS support in respect of their July and August 2020 IoS payments. For the remainder of 2020-21 the Department of Health will provide GDPs with ongoing financial support, within the available budget, to support the delivery of dental care.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health (i) to outline reasons why GPs were unable to provide non-emergency care for patients, including remotely via telephone or videoconferencing; (ii) when he expects GPs will be able to resume routine appointments; (iii) for his assessment of the impact of those accessing appointments when routine appointments resume; and (iv) how he will support primary care providers so that patients can access an appointment as soon as possible.

Mr Swann: As independent contractors, who contract with the Health and Social Care Board to provide primary medical services, GPs have a responsibility to provide core services to their registered patients and the current COVID-19 pandemic does not in any way negate this requirement.

General practice has rapidly changed the way it works in order to cope with the current Covid-19 emergency and, as part of their business continuity planning, GP practices are operating a telephone triage led system. Telephone triage allows patients to continue to seek medical advice for both routine and urgent problems from the GP practice. The GP then uses their clinical judgement to decide whether the patient can be safely managed over the telephone or needs a face to face appointment.

GP practices will provide face to face appointments (including home visits) for those patients who are assessed as requiring them and all practices have been provided with a supply of Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) to allow them to safely provide these necessary face to face appointments.

This ensures that patients are only required to visit surgeries where it is absolutely essential.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health how many residential Health and Social Care Trust and private care homes now have measures in place to allow safe visitation.

(AQW 4902/17-22)

Mr Swann: Extant guidance for nursing and residential homes published by my Department on 26 April recommends that all nursing and residential care homes should implement the existing policies they would use if there was an infection control issue at the home, whether or not they have a suspected COVID-19 infection. There should be strict restrictions on visitors, similar to the approach in hospitals.

I am aware that a number of nursing and residential homes have put measures in place to facilitate visits, where they consider it is safe and appropriate to do so. However, this is a matter and a decision for the management of individual homes.

The Chief Nursing Officer is leading work to review guidance on visiting restrictions in all health and social care settings. Any proposals to change the current guidance on visiting restrictions will be informed by the available evidence, and evaluated against the continuing need to prevent and control the transmission of COVID-19 to this particularly vulnerable population.

Background Note

- 1 Input to the answer was sought from HSC Trusts regarding statutory sector homes. Despite reminders, responses have only been received from three out of the five Trusts regarding visiting arrangements in statutory homes. All three have confirmed that there has been no relaxation of visiting restrictions.
- 2 HSC Trusts have advised that a number of independent sector homes in their areas are making arrangements for socially distanced outside visiting, with infection prevention and control measures in place—including physical distancing measures, use of PPE and decontamination before and after visits. Other homes have installed Perspex screens at or near the entrance to the home to allow for visits.
- 3 The Chief Nursing Officer is leading work to review visiting arrangements across all sectors, including care homes, based on the available evidence and practice in the UK and RoI. Any proposed change will be carefully evaluated against the continuing need to prevent and control the transmission of COVID-19 to this particularly vulnerable population.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health (i) how many GP-operated COVID-19 centres there are in Northern Ireland; (ii) how many people have attended them, broken down by centre; and (iii) how much it has cost to operate these centres.

(AQW 4904/17-22)

Mr Swann: There are currently 11 COVID-19 Centres across Northern Ireland. They ensure that patients with COVID symptoms can be assessed and treated by a GP, whilst minimising the risk to patients who do not have COVID symptoms. It is likely that there will be a requirement for COVID-19 Centres until there is a vaccine or appropriate treatment for the disease.

The operational of the centres is managed locally, based on demand. Rotas are developed a number of weeks in advance of each shift and seek to ensure that centres can be staffed to full capacity should the need arise. Where capacity in the Centres exceeds patient demand during particular periods, the number of staff who are on the rota to support a Centre may be reduced. Staff can also be put on standby, allowing them to carry out other duties whilst remaining available to assist patients in the Covid-19 centres should the need arise.

A total of 7,039 people have attended the centres during the period 9 April–10 June 2020. This is broken down by location in the table below:

COVID Centre Location	Total Contacts
BEL: Beech Hall Covid PCC	2114
DUC: COVID Antrim	1171
DUC: COVID Ballymena	1160
DUC: COVID Coleraine*	89
SET: Ards Covid PCC	675
SET: Downe Covid PCC	128
SET: Lagan Covid PCC	256
SHS: Banbridge Covid PCC	411
SHS: Dungannon Covid PCC	373
WUC: Covid AAH	501
WUC: Covid SWAH	161
Total:	7039

* Coleraine Centre opened 11 May 2020

Total expenditure to date for the COVID Centres is £1,538.4k.

The operational of the centres is managed locally, based on demand. Rotas are developed a number of weeks in advance of each shift and seek to ensure that centres can be staffed to full capacity should the need arise. Where capacity in the Centres exceeds patient demand during particular periods, the number of staff who are on the rota to support a Centre may be reduced. Staff can also be put on standby, allowing them to carry out other duties whilst remaining available to assist patients in the Covid-19 centres should the need arise.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister of Health whether a provisional timetable has been prepared for reopening care and residential homes to new admissions meeting the criteria, including those with COVID-19.
(AQW 4912/17-22)

Mr Swann: There has been no direction for care homes to close to new admissions during the COVID-19 pandemic. Guidance published by my Department and available at <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/health/guidance-for-nursing-residential-care-homes.pdf> provides advice to care homes and HSC Trusts on how to safely care for people newly admitted to care homes while protecting existing residents. This includes a requirement that anyone being admitted to a care home from any setting should be tested for COVID-19, ideally 48 hours in advance of admission. The guidance also recommends that all new residents should be subject to isolation for 14 days, in line with infection control advice.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister of Health for an update on discussions regarding the resumption of outpatient services.
(AQW 4913/17-22)

Mr Swann: You will be aware that on 9 June 2020 I published the Strategic Framework for Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services, along with Phase 1 (June 2020) rebuilding plans for each of the six Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts.

The Strategic Framework will underpin the development of incremental service plans by Trusts. The key aim will be to incrementally increase HSC service capacity as quickly as possible across all programmes of care, including outpatient services, within the prevailing COVID-19 conditions. Subsequent phases will see these service activity plans and targets updated in three monthly cycles.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Health when he will provide a timeframe for the reopening of all dental services in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 4930/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Chief Dental Officer wrote to all General Dental Practitioners (GDPs) on 18 June 2020 setting out plans for the phased resumption of non-urgent dental care. In particular, treatments not involving Aerosol Generating Procedures (AGPs) can resume on 29 June 2020. The available treatments will be extended to include AGPs from 20 July 2020, although some practices will be able to provide all dental services from 1 July 2020 if they are able to meet the necessary standards to safely offer AGPs.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health to outline any plans to relax visiting restrictions in hospital wards, including maternity wards.

(AQW 4940/17-22)

Mr Swann: I recognise the distress and upset for individuals and families when a loved one is admitted to hospital during the restricted visiting period. It is counterintuitive to how we normally respond in Northern Ireland to family visiting during hospitalisation.

The reduction of visitors to hospitals was a key strategic component of managing the pandemic and it was taken to protect patients, their families and health and social care workers by reducing the risk of infection. This was aligned to the "Stay at Home" message during lockdown.

Regrettably, many difficult requests from the health service to the public are being made regarding presence within hospitals and clinics during these unprecedented times and I sincerely apologise for this but do hope the public understand. This applies to all hospital wards, including our maternity wards.

Please be assured that whilst adhering to the principles of the visiting guidance Health and Social Care Trusts in Northern Ireland will always consider individual cases to ensure a person centred approach to our service.

Care providers have been encouraged and supported to make the best use of technology to maintain virtual contact between patients and their families, but I recognise that this is a poor substitute for being able to visit a loved one in person and I do empathise with those who are in this situation.

Following publication of the Northern Ireland Executive five-step approach to relaxing lockdown restrictions, my Department is in the process of reviewing the COVID-19 visiting guidance, and will share the revised guidance as soon as possible, with our intention being to publish by the end of June.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health to outline his plans to resume day opportunities for adults with learning disabilities across all Health and Social Care Trusts following the response to COVID-19.

(AQW 4954/17-22)

Mr Swann: Detailed planning is underway for the resumption of services, including day opportunities, for people with learning disabilities. Service recovery will take place in a phased and regionally consistent manner, informed by a range of factors including COVID-19 transmission levels and guidance on infection prevention. Engagement with providers and families across all Trusts on this issue is continuing.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health to update his advice to those who have received shielding letters.

(AQW 4955/17-22)

Mr Swann: I understand that it has been extremely difficult for those who are shielding. As I emphasised in my statement on 18 May, I believe that it is important that shielding lasts no longer than is deemed clinically necessary.

On 18 June, the Executive agreed to my proposal that, if the risk continues to be low, shielding can be paused from 31 July 2020. On 22 June, I announced interim easements to the shielding advice which will take effect from the 6 July. From that date, those who are shielding will be able to meet up to six people outside the home, as long as social distancing is strictly observed; and, in addition, people who are shielding and living alone will be able to form a support bubble with one other household. These easements are based on the continuing reduction in the rate of community transmission of the virus in Northern Ireland.

Further details on these easements are being provided in writing, in the week commencing 22 June, to people who are shielding. This letter also provides further advice and guidance with respect to our plans to put shielding on hold from 31 July.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health how much his Department has spent on producing material in Irish, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4966/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department did not produce any material in Irish in each of the last three years.

Background Note

- 1 Jim Allister, MLA, has asked you how much this Department has spent on producing material in Irish in each of the last three years.
- 2 Mr Allister has issued this request to all NICS Departments.
- 3 This Department has not produced any material in Irish in the last three years.
- 4 Mr Allister previously asked this question in 2016. At that time, again, there was no material produced in Irish by this Department.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister of Health whether he intends to examine the role of each Health and Social Care Trust as part of the review of health provision.

(AQW 4971/17-22)

Mr Swann: In order to achieve the mission set out in the new 'Strategic Framework for Rebuilding HSC Services' launched on 9 June, I felt it necessary to make significant changes to the current governance structures. These changes impact on the responsibilities of the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), the Public Health Agency (PHA) and the HSC Trusts. I have published a Memorandum to the HSC Framework Document (2011) setting out the changes to governance and decision making processes for a period of two years, with effect from June 2020. This will be reviewed on a 6 monthly basis.

One of the changes to governance arrangements is the establishment of a Management Board. The Management board will report directly to me and will provide oversight and direction on the implementation of my priorities as reflected in the Strategic Framework for Rebuilding HSC Services.

This does not diminish the existing delegation of the Department's statutory functions to the relevant bodies, including Trusts, but rather ensures that the direction and oversight of the Department's priorities for the next two years is made clear.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Health to outline (i) when expectant mothers will be able to have their respective partners join them at baby scans; and (ii) an approximate timeframe of when restrictions will be eased to allow partners into the wards to assist mothers post-birth.

Mr Swann: I am aware that current Departmental guidance on partners being allowed to attend ultrasound scan appointments is affecting pregnancy and birth experience for many. I am sorry for this, as that is truly not the experience I would wish for any of the families within our Health and Social Care Trusts.

However, as I'm sure you appreciate, these are extremely challenging times for us all and we are working hard to do the right thing. We must achieve a balance between the safety of women, babies and staff and being inclusive of partners. COVID-19 is a new virus and given the limited information currently available about how it could affect pregnancy, the UK Government has decided that it would be prudent for pregnant women to be placed in the vulnerable group and to stringently engage with social distancing measures to reduce the risk of infection.

It is on that basis that women have been asked to attend all antenatal visits and scan appointments alone. While every effort is made to make provision for the attendance of partners at the actual birth, stricter controls than would normally apply have to be in place before labour is established, and after the baby has been delivered. By doing this we can continue the provision of safe and essential care for women and it is also intended to protect other women, babies, the maternity staff, and families from the risk of infection.

I appreciate this is very difficult for parents, and to exclude partners at this time is counterintuitive to how we normally work within the maternity service. Regrettably, many difficult requests from the health service to the public are being made regarding presence within hospitals and clinics during these unprecedented times and I sincerely apologise for this but do hope you understand.

Following publication of the Northern Ireland Executive five-step approach to relaxing lockdown restrictions, my Department is in the process of reviewing the COVID-19 visiting guidance, and will share the revised guidance as soon as possible, with our intention being to publish by the end of June.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Health for an estimated timeframe of when visitors will be permitted in hospitals again.

(AQW 4982/17-22)

Mr Swann: The restriction of visitors to hospitals was a key strategic component of managing the pandemic and it was introduced to protect patients, their families and health and social care workers by reducing the risk of infection.

Following publication of the Northern Ireland Executive five-step approach to relaxing lockdown restrictions, my Department is in the process of reviewing the COVID-19 visiting guidance. We will share the revised guidance as soon as is practicably possible, with our intention being to publish by the end of June.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health what plans his Department has to help pharmacies with the delivery costs of medication.

(AQW 4987/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department is currently working with Community Pharmacy NI, the representative body for community pharmacists, in developing a commissioning plan for community pharmacy services up to March 2021. This plan will focus on the provision of services to the public during the coronavirus pandemic to ensure access to medicines, treatments for common ailments and support for physical and mental wellbeing. This includes the potential for the commissioning of a prescription delivery service for certain patients later this year.

However, presently the Health and Social Care Board does not commission a prescription delivery service from community pharmacists nor do they currently get remunerated for the provision of such a service. The home delivery of prescription medicines is currently provided at a pharmacy contractors own discretion and also during the pandemic, through a network of community and voluntary groups.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health how many pharmacies availed of loans of up to £60,000 to help during the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 4988/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Department has thus far provided a significant level of additional funding to support community pharmacies during the COVID-19 pandemic including the advancement of £35m in contractual payments and the provision of £10.5m in additional funding for staffing, adaptation of premises, business continuity and for the establishment of a new emergency supply service. A further £1m was also made available for an exceptional Easter rota and to support enhanced palliative care on-call arrangements.

Community pharmacies are independently owned businesses and as such they are free to borrow and invest in their businesses as they see fit. My Department would therefore not be aware of the borrowing practices of independently owned community pharmacies.

I am aware that the UK Government has set out a package of measures to support some businesses through the disruption that has been caused by COVID-19. Businesses in Northern Ireland, including pharmacies, may apply to access financial support through delivery of a number of business grant schemes. However, the administration of these schemes in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Department for the Economy.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Health to outline the pathway for the restoration of emergency department services at Daisy Hill hospital.

(AQW 4990/17-22)

Mr Swann: You will be aware that on 9 June 2020 I published the Strategic Framework for Rebuilding Health and Social Care Services, along with Phase 1 (June 2020) rebuilding plans for each of the six Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts. The Strategic Framework will underpin the development of incremental service plans by Trusts, including for the provision of urgent and emergency care.

The key aim will be to incrementally increase HSC service capacity as quickly as possible across all programmes of care, including emergency care, within the prevailing COVID-19 conditions. Subsequent phases will see these service activity plans and targets updated in three monthly cycles.

The Southern HSC Trust has confirmed that it is committed to the reinstatement of the Emergency Department in Daisy Hill and, in the meantime, options will be developed to further consider interim safe models of service delivery.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health when daycare centres and other respite facilities can reopen to provide support for patients and their families; and how COVID-19 restrictions will affect these services.

(AQW 5008/17-22)

Mr Swann: Detailed planning is underway for the resumption of services, including day opportunities, for people with learning disabilities. Service recovery will take place in a phased and regionally consistent manner, informed by a range of factors including COVID-19 transmission levels and guidance on infection prevention. Engagement with providers and families across all Trusts on this issue is continuing.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health to detail the reasons for the higher recorded infection rate from Pillar 1 testing in the Ards and North Down council area during June 2020; and why this has not been published to provide guidance and reassurance to the public.

(AQW 5018/17-22)

Mr Swann: As of 21 June 2020 the rate of positive cases was recorded as 245 per 100K population in the Ards and North Down area. This is lower than the overall rate for Northern Ireland which on the same date was recorded as 259 positive cases per 100K population. The total number of positive cases in the Ards and North Down area identified during June was 44.

Our contact tracing service (Test, Trace & Protect) was introduced on 18 May 2020. The Public Health Agency has advised that no potential clusters or outbreaks have been identified in the Ards and North Down council area to date by the service.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to outline the reasons for lifting capacity restrictions for nurseries but not for childminders.

(AQW 5031/17-22)

Mr Swann: Although there will be no operating restrictions in terms of minimum or maximum numbers of children daycare and school-age childcare settings can provide childcare to from 15 June, a number of measures have been put in place to make sure, as far as possible, that safety is maintained in infection control terms, including the implementation of play pods in settings. Settings have been asked to organise children and staff in small groups (12 children maximum, although smaller Pods are advised where possible, particularly in connection with younger children). Mixing of play pods within settings is not permitted at this stage.

It is difficult to make a direct comparison between a childminder's household and a daycare setting. They are different spaces, with different dimensions, with different numbers of staff. The aim is to increase capacity gradually within childminding. This will be kept under review and greater easing could be applied more quickly if medical and scientific evidence indicates that it can.

Ms Hunter asked the Minister of Health to outline his Department's position on extending the crisis intervention pilot programmes to other areas, including east Derry.

(AQW 5067/17-22)

Mr Swann: Policy work to consider the optimal delivery of crisis services has been requested by the Chief Medical Officer and is expected to commence imminently under the Protect Life 2 Strategy. This is expected to make recommendations for the future delivery of crisis intervention services and also enhanced co-ordination of a range of associated programmes including the Towards Zero Suicide programme, Lifeline, and the Multi Agency Triage Team. Decisions on future delivery of crisis services will be taken by the Department once that work is completed.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to list the recent resignations from the board of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority.

(AQW 5095/17-22)

Mr Swann: The table below lists the former RQIA Board members who have recently resigned and date of resignation

Position	Name	Date of Resignation
Acting Chair	Professor Mary McColgan OBE	17/06/2020
Member	Mr Robin Mullan	17/06/2020
Member	Mr Seamus Magee OBE	17/06/2020
Member	Mrs Sarah Havlin	09/06/2020
Member	Mr Norman Morrow OBE	17/06/2020
Member	Mr Gerry McCurdy	17/06/2020
Member	Mr Denis Power	17/06/2020
Member	Miss Patricia O'Callaghan	17/06/2020

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health when Health Service staff will receive the salary they lost as a result of the recent strike action.

(AQW 5104/17-22)

Mr Swann: I am on record as to the value I place on the skill, dedication and hard work of health and social care staff. I have seen at first hand the magnificent job that all HSC workers perform, the risks that they take, and the sacrifices that they make.

The Executive agreed at its meeting on 18 May to allocate funding of £1.64m to the Department of Health for the reinstatement of pay lost due to participation in strike action. On 20 May I was asked by the Minister of Finance to bring forward proposals to enable the award of this funding to be made to health staff.

I will be bringing a paper very shortly on the issue to the Executive.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health to detail the pay gap between nurses in Northern Ireland and those in the rest of the UK.

(AQW 5105/17-22)

Mr Swann: With the restoration of pay parity with effect from 1 April 2019, nurses and all Agenda for Change staff in NI are on the same pay rates as their counterparts in England and Wales.

Scotland has its own pay structure. Pay in nursing depends on applicable pay band and years of experience, but for comparison the table below shows the band minima and maxima for Bands 5 and 6 across the regions:

Region	Band 5 Min 2020-21 (£)	Band 5 Max 2020-21 (£)	Band 6 Min 2020-21 (£)	Band 6 Max 2020-21 (£)
NI, England and Wales	24,907	30,615	31,365	37,890
Scotland	25,100	31,649	31,800	39,169

Department for Infrastructure

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of the implications of the Buick judgement on planning decisions.

(AQW 4223/17-22)

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): The Buick judgments were related to the proposal by the arc21 Councils to build a waste treatment facility and energy from waste plant at Hightown Quarry, Mallusk. These judgments quashed the Department of Infrastructure's decision to approve the related planning application in the absence of a Minister.

The Court of Appeal, in July 2018, found that the decision to grant planning permission raised cross cutting issues and was significant and controversial which required the approval of the Executive Committee. My assessment of the judgment is that it gives weight to the contention that most decisions on planning applications before the Department should fall to the Executive to discuss and agree.

This would leave any Minister for Infrastructure both now and in the future without the authority to make the very planning decisions which are the responsibility of their Department. This in my view is an untenable situation and I tabled a paper for discussion at the Executive to discuss a solution. I am pleased to confirm that my assessment was shared by the Executive and at its meeting on 22nd June 2020, a legislative remedy was agreed for progressing via accelerated passage before the NI Assembly recess period.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister for Infrastructure, following the publication of cyclist casualties from 2014-2018, to outline what her Department is doing to address cyclist safety concerns, such as exploring (i) better educational awareness via driving tests; (ii) separated cycling infrastructure; (iii) a new safe passing law; (iv) increased signage; and (v) the promotion of cyclist safety.

Ms Mallon: As Minister for Infrastructure, I take my responsibility for promoting and improving road safety very seriously. I continue to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads.

It is my intention to bring forward Subordinate Legislation to introduce Graduated Driver Licensing (GDL) as provided for in the Road Traffic (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2016. GDL will introduce a revised training, testing and post-test regime for learner drivers (and riders). As part of this, a Programme of Training will be introduced through a modular structure covering a number of areas, including road sharing, vulnerable and other road users and risk and hazard awareness.

I recently announced the creation of a Walking and Cycling Champion in my Department with responsibility for taking forward work to deliver safe routes that give people the freedom and confidence to walk and cycle as part of their everyday routine. I am working with Councils and other stakeholders on developing plans for better walking and cycling infrastructure and this will include consideration of better signage.

While there are no current plans for legislation which prescribes a minimum space to be observed when overtaking a cyclist, I am, however, very keen to continue to make clear the need for drivers to be aware of cyclists and other vulnerable road users on the road and particularly the need to take care when overtaking them. The Highway Code advises drivers to give cyclists at least as much room as you would when overtaking a car.

All drivers have a duty of care and consideration to other road users. The Highway Code contains an entire section entitled "Road users requiring extra care" which aims to educate and remind drivers of the needs of more vulnerable road users such as cyclists.

It is also worth noting that it is an offence under Article 12 of the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1995 to drive without due care and attention, or without reasonable consideration for other persons using the road. On conviction, a person faces a fine of up to £5000, between three and nine penalty points and possible disqualification. Any incidents involving dangerous or careless behaviours should be reported to the police.

My Department has a full programme of road safety public information campaigns including those promoting the safety of people cycling. These campaigns are communicated using multimedia channels including TV, radio, bus rears and social media. The cycling safety campaigns provide advice to both drivers and cyclists to increase cyclist safety awareness, including advice to drivers on leaving space of a minimum of 1.5 meters when passing people cycling.

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether her Department provided land for social housing in North Belfast; (ii) to detail where this land is located; and (iii) if she has not deemed land from her Department available for social housing, when she will do so.

(AQW 4573/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Through the government disposal procedures, any departmental land declared surplus to requirements is available to the NIHE or any Housing Association to acquire for social housing.

There is a pressing need for more social and affordable homes in North Belfast. My department currently has four surplus areas of land in the constituency located at:

- Ballysillan Park/Crumlin Road Junction;

- Clifton Street;
- 295 Whitewell Road; and
- Fortwilliam Interchange.

The NIHE is in the process of acquiring the land at Ballysillan Park/Crumlin Road junction, to construct a new recreational area and viewing platform under the Urban Villages Programme. To date there has been no interest in acquiring the Clifton Street land due to the extensive drainage pipework located under the site. Negotiations are ongoing with adjoining landowners for the other two sites.

In disposing of surplus land all government departments must follow the Department of Finance's "Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland" guidelines. All surplus land is trawled first by the Department of Finance's Central Advisory Unit to the internal market contacts and, if no interest is declared within a specific timeline, the land/property is put on the open market for consideration by the external market. The following groups are consulted during the internal trawl:

- All government departments;
- District Councils;
- NIHE and all Housing Associations (land for social and affordable housing); and
- The Development Trust NI which assists third sector bodies wanting to acquire land/property by way of a Community Asset Transfer.

If no interest is received from the internal market, then the disposal is offered to the external market (e.g. former owner, adjoining owner, open market). If no interest is declared in any site by the NIHE or any Housing Association, they may be purchased by the private sector and used for new housing.

In disposing of all surplus land, my department is mindful of the PfG target of "Improving the Supply of Suitable Housing". Details of my entire department's current surplus land were provided directly to the Department for Communities' Public Land for Housing Working Group and my officials attend this Working Group's inter-departmental meetings. These details were also sent to the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations. To date no interest has been declared in any of the surplus sites by any Housing Association or the NIHE for social housing.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether those who have passed the theory test for a car driving licence will receive an automatic extension for the validity of the test due to the current COVID-19 situation.

Ms Mallon: I am aware that some learner drivers are in the position that, through no fault of their own, their theory test pass certificate is coming close to the end of its two year period of validity, or has expired during the current pandemic.

I have asked officials to engage with colleagues in the Driver and Vehicle Standards Agency in Great Britain to consider what additional measures may be implemented to ensure that those candidates inconvenienced by the current Covid-19 crisis are not further penalised through the expiry of their theory test certificate. It is, however, likely that any extension to the validity period of theory test pass certificates will require an amendment to legislation and this is being explored.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) why those with a theory test booked during the COVID-19 pandemic were not notified individually of test centres being closed; (ii) whether they will be prioritised for a test when centres re-open; and (iii) why the online system is still accepting bookings for theory tests.

Ms Mallon: Before a theory test is cancelled or rescheduled, the candidate is sent a notification by the theory test provider. Where an email address has been provided as part of the booking process, the candidate is notified by email. However, where a candidate has not provided an email address as part of the booking process, any change notifications are issued by post to the address provided.

The Driver and Vehicle Agency is holding a number of applications from key workers whose work is critical to the COVID-19 response. When theory test centres reopen, those candidates who meet this criteria will be prioritised manually in the first instance.

The online booking system is currently accepting bookings for tests beyond 22 June 2020, in line with contractual requirements. If the suspension of theory tests is extended beyond that date, these will be rescheduled and affected candidates will be advised how to change or cancel their booking. Before they enter the booking system, candidates are warned that theory tests are suspended until further notice because of COVID-19. I will provide an update on the resumption of DVA services shortly.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the (i) footpath; (ii) road resurfacing projects; and (iii) new roadways, planned in the Belfast East constituency in (a) this current financial year; and (b) in the 2021/22 financial year.

Ms Mallon: My Department intends to progress a number of footway and road resurfacing schemes and surface dressing schemes in the East Belfast constituency during this financial year. My officials in Roads Eastern Division maintain a priority list of footway and carriageway resurfacing schemes for consideration over a nominal three year period. However as the ranking of schemes within that list can change for a number of reasons throughout a financial year, it is not normal practice to finalise a programme of resurfacing works for future financial years until the end of the current year.

Completion of all schemes on the 2020/21 programme listed below will be dependent upon a number of factors including the availability of funding and the continued availability and productivity of contractor resources, which have been impacted by the Covid-19 pandemic.

Schemes currently programmed for progression in 2020/21 are as follows:

Footway reconstruction schemes

- Marmont Park area;
- Sandhill Parade (Sandhill Gardens to Sandhill Park); and
- Orby Gardens.

New footway schemes

- 180m of new footway and resurfacing 40m of existing footway as part of Barnett's Road improvement scheme.

Road resurfacing schemes

- Hawthornden Way (Parkway to Upper Newtownards Road);
- Cregagh Road (Tildarg Street to Onslow Parade);
- Woodstock Link (Albertbridge Road to Halcombe Street);
- Marmont Park area;
- Sandhill Parade (Sandhill Gardens to Sandhill Park); and
- Orby Gardens.

Surface Dressing Schemes

- Gilnahirk Road West; and
- Ballyregan Road.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Infrastructure for a copy of the full design risk assessment report for the design of the overbridge at Derrygowan Road on the Randalstown to Toome dual carriageway, as carried out under TD19/06 of the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges, to show all the risk factors incorporated in the decision for design.

(AQW 4586/17-22)

Ms Mallon: There is no requirement in TD19/06 of the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges for a "full design risk assessment report". However, the document does refer to the "Road Restraint Risk Assessment Process" (RRRAP) software and I will write to you separately to provide this and place a copy of my response in the Assembly Library.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will introduce a discount voucher scheme for the repair and purchase of bicycles.

(AQW 4587/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My officials have been examining the proposals in England, to introduce a voucher scheme for bicycle servicing and repair. I understand that the proposed scheme is not available for the purchase of bicycles. I will give further consideration to the benefits of a scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she intends to increase funding for active travel projects such as (i) cycle lanes; (ii) greenways; and (iii) the active travel school program.

Ms Mallon: I have recently announced £20m funding for blue/green infrastructure which will support our communities through the transformation from recent lockdown measures, promoting active travel and shaping our places to live in the new normal. This funding will be community led and Departmentally supported. In partnership, we can ensure lasting change for people across the north. This is an increase in funding provided in previous years for cycle lanes and greenways.

The Active School Travel Programme aims to increase the number of children travelling to and from schools by active travel means such as walking, cycling or scooting. It is currently co-funded by my Department and the Public Health Agency to meet the annual running costs of £400,000. Work has already started on exploring options for the way forward when the current contract expires in 2021. I hope to be in a position to make decisions on the way forward for the programme later in the year.

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Infrastructure what recommendations made by the Committee for the Environment's report on their Inquiry into Wind Energy of March 2015 have been implemented.

(AQW 4598/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that the former Environment Committee conducted an inquiry into wind energy in Northern Ireland and published a report containing 20 recommendations which cut across the responsibilities of the former Department of the Environment (DoE), Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI), the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI), the Utility Regulator and developers/individual home owners.

I am currently considering the way forward for a review of strategic planning policy for renewable energy and, as part of this, I will take time to reflect on all relevant matters, including the recommendations of the then Environment Committee's inquiry into wind energy. I will announce my decision on this in the near future.

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in relation to the Committee for the Environment's report on their Inquiry Into Wind Energy in March 2015, which stated that the ETSU-R-97 Noise Guidelines were seriously out of date, not fit for purpose and in urgent need of review, (i) whether a review of ETSU-R-97 Noise Guidelines was completed; (ii) if so, the outcome of the review; (iii) whether ETSU-R-97 Noise Guidelines are still in use; and (iv) if not, what noise guidelines have been used to assess planning permission for industrial wind turbines, since March 2015.

(AQW 4599/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that the Environment Committee's report into Wind Energy in Northern Ireland, included a recommendation "that the Department should review the use of the ETSU-97 guidelines on an urgent basis, with a view to adopting more modern and robust guidance for measurement of wind turbine noise, with particular reference to current guidelines from the World Health Organisation".

The ETSU-97 guidelines are the responsibility of the Department for Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy (BEIS), Westminster therefore my Department is unable to review it.

Furthermore, I am aware that the former Department of the Environment gave a commitment to further investigate and consider the use of the ETSU standard in Northern Ireland as part of an intended review of strategic planning policy for renewable energy when publishing the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS).

Since the publication of the SPPS in September 2015, my Department issued a 'Call for Evidence' in March 2016 and subsequently commissioned independent consultants to undertake research to inform the future direction of strategic planning policy for renewable energy development. I will decide the way forward for a policy review as soon as practicable, taking time to reflect on all relevant matters, including the consultant's report and the use of the ETSU-R-97 standard in Northern Ireland.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) how many applications for road or street adoption have been made in respect of all developments; and (ii) how many were successful, for the periods (a) 1995-2000; (b) 2000-2005; (c) 2005-2010; (d) 2010-2015; and (e) 2015-2020.

(AQW 4609/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Private Streets (NI) Order 1980 and the Private Streets (Amendment) Order 1992 provide the statutory basis for the adoption of roads constructed by developers. The Department will consider adopting any street or part of a street that is eligible under the terms of the Order. The Order details the adoption process and further provides for the Department (DfI Roads) to adopt the determined layout upon full and satisfactory completion by the developer.

The following table provides details of the number of road adoptions for developments or part developments made by the Department since April 2002 (the Department does not hold details of numbers of adoptions in this format for the period before 2002):

Period	No. road adoptions
April 2002 – March 2005	1277
April 2005 – March 2010	2630
April 2010 – March 2015	1567
April 2015 – March 2020	1253

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department permits outdoor seating at cafés in pedestrianised town centres if it is socially distanced.

(AQW 4618/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 empowers District Councils to manage Pavement Café requests. The Department for Communities has prepared guidelines to assist district councils with the implementation of this statutory licensing scheme however my Department takes an active role and is a key partner in that process.

I am committed to working in partnership with councils and the hospitality industry to seek to kick start the economy and plan for recovery and I have written to all of the councils asking them, as planning authorities, to temporarily take a flexible and pragmatic planning approach to the use of on-street seating for cafes and bars, beer gardens and similar outdoor areas to accommodate physical / social distancing. I have made it clear however that, in taking forward proposals, the needs of people with visual impairment or mobility difficulties must be properly considered and addressed.

Ms Rogan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) what preparations are being made for the phased reopening of vehicle test centres, including discussions with trade unions; and (ii) for her assessment as to when testing may resume.

Ms Mallon: On 1 June 2020, following consultation with staff and Trade Unions, the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) safely reinstated a limited number of specialist tests for those vehicles that deliver essential services. This was to ensure that supply chains and the health service continue to be supported during this time of significant challenge.

On 22 June, I announced a timetable for the planned reinstatement of further vehicle testing services, initially prioritising those vehicles that cannot avail of an exemption, such as first time taxis and buses, vehicles not registered in Northern Ireland and due a test and vehicles whose MOT certificates have expired by more than 12 months, which includes SORN'ed vehicles and those sold by car dealerships. As restrictions ease, and the DVA's capacity to test vehicles increases, more services will be reinstated until such times as normal business resumes.

Before any vehicle testing services are reinstated they will be fully risk assessed to ensure the processes comply with all public health and safety guidance and in consultation with staff and Trade Unions, to ensure the safety of staff and customers during the testing process.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she intends to progress the A29 Cookstown bypass.

(AQW 4623/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have set aside funding in 2020/21 to progress the development of a number of strategic road improvement schemes, including the A29 Cookstown By Pass.

I am keen to progress strategic road schemes, to address regional imbalance and deliver multiple benefits for communities across Northern Ireland, consistent with my wider priorities, and to ensure that they are future-proofed and help to stimulate our green recovery.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) how many Department for Infrastructure employees went on long-term sick leave; and (ii) how many of those have since returned to work, in the last three years.

(AQW 4624/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The information requested, in relation to the number of staff within my Department who have had a long-term sick absence in last three financial years, is set out in the table below.

Financial Year	No of Staff who have one or more periods of long term sickness in this financial year	No of long term Absence Spells <sup>1</sup>	No of Spells after which the employee returned to work
2017/2018	430	454	362
2018/19	409	425	331
2019/20 (Estimated)	416	438	329

<sup>1</sup> A long-term spell is any spell of sickness absence that lasts longer than 20 consecutive days. The figure relates to only those periods of sick absence in a financial year that reached 20 consecutive days

A member of staff may have more than one spell of long term sick leave within a financial year and therefore the number of spells is higher than the number of staff. Likewise, the number of spells where a member of staff returned to work is higher than the number of staff who returned to work.

The information set out in the table reflects the position on the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR system as at the end of each financial year.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) when did Translink first approach her Department on the possibility of furloughing staff; and (ii) when did her Department first approach the Department of Finance on this matter.

(AQW 4627/17-22)

Ms Mallon:

- (i) On 17 April, the Department of Finance issued guidance to my Department on the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme (CJRS) which outlined the conditions under which, very exceptionally, it might be appropriate for a public sector organisation to consider use of Scheme. Following consideration of that guidance, on 23 April, Translink's Chief Executive provided the Department with a paper providing his assessment of the applicability of the Scheme to Translink in line with the guidance. That assessment concluded that an application to the CJRS would not be appropriate given the impact on the delivery of services. Following a review of this assessment, I confirmed this position to the Finance Minister on 13 May.

- (ii) I first wrote to the Finance Minister on 23 April regarding furloughing public sector workers and Covid 19 financial pressures, again on 28 April and on 13 May on furloughing. On 22 May, the Finance Minister issued updated guidance on the use of the CJRS by public sector organisations which again emphasised the UK Government's view that the scheme would not be used by public sector organisations other than in some very specific circumstances. This updated guidance also made clear that Accounting Officers were responsible for justifying any application to the scheme. Reflecting this, my Department's Accounting Officer requested that the Chief Executive of Translink, in his role as Designated Accounting Officer, undertake a further review. This further assessment was received by my Department on 2 June. It confirmed that the CJRS was not applicable for the majority of Translink staff but identified a small group of staff in Ulsterbus Tours, a small commercial arm of Translink that the Translink Accounting Officer considered may be eligible.

Following review of this assessment, and in line with the guidance provided to us, my officials approached the Department of Finance regarding access to the CJRS for Ulsterbus Tours staff on 4 June and received confirmation that an application would be appropriate. This was notified to Translink and an application was made.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the expenditure on (i) capital projects; and (ii) maintenance in Mid Ulster District Council area, (a) in the last three years; and (b) planned for the next three years.

(AQW 4628/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Expenditure for Mid Ulster District Council on capital and maintenance has been provided for the three most recent years, 2016-17, 2017-18 and 2018-19 in the table below. Analysis of district council expenditure for 2019-20 is not yet available.

£'k

	2016-17	2017-18	2018-19
Structural Maintenance	10,230	7,528	11,698
Other Maintenance	3,360	3,814	3,370
Capital Projects	22,540	22,069	28,354

DfI Roads officials meet with District Councils bi-annually and present reports to provide detail on projects which benefit the communities who live in their Council area. I have therefore provided you with hyperlinks to the most recent reports presented to Mid Ulster District Council.

<https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications/annual-and-interim-reports-mid-ulster-district-council-2016>

<https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications/interim-report-mid-ulster-district-council-2017>

<https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications/annual-and-interim-reports-mid-ulster-district-council-2018>

<https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications/annual-and-interim-reports-mid-ulster-district-council-2019>

Capital Projects in the three years in the Table above include expenditure on Executive Flagships projects which will benefit the Mid Ulster Council area, namely the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson and the A5 Western Transport Corridor projects. I am happy to confirm that construction work continues on the A6 project with a forecast £27.5m to be spent in 2020-21; the A5 Western Transport Corridor remains at development stage and I have allocated £3.8m to this project in 2020-21.

In addition, I have set aside funding in 2020-21 to progress the development of a number of strategic road improvement schemes, including the A29 Cookstown By Pass. I am keen to progress strategic road schemes, to address regional imbalance and deliver multiple benefits for communities across Northern Ireland, consistent with my wider priorities, and to ensure that they are future-proofed and help to stimulate our green recovery.

I have also maintained the level of investment in Structural Maintenance of the road network at £75m for 2020-21, to help generate regionally balanced growth and to improve connectivity.

As the Executive have agreed a one year budget settlement for 2020-21, planned investment for forward years will be determined as part of future budget settlements.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for Infrastructure when her Department intends to repair the Roscor Bridge, Belleek, Co. Fermanagh.

(AQW 4645/17-22)

Ms Mallon: A detailed inspection of Roscor viaduct was carried out in 2016. This included an examination of the extent of corrosion on the bridge reinforcement and an underwater inspection of the bridge foundations.

An options study to determine the most appropriate means of strengthening the bridge and replacing the missing northern span, currently accommodated by the temporary Bailey bridge, is now nearing completion.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) how many; and (ii) what percentage of pupils accessed on-road cycle training, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4647/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department promotes, funds and supports two cycling initiatives, the Active School Travel Programme (ASTP) and the Cycling Proficiency Scheme (CPS). The knowledge and skills gained in early years will assist young cyclists as they grow and cycle into adulthood.

The ASTP is co-funded by my Department and the Public Health Agency (PHA) and delivered under contract by Sustrans NI. Up to 16 year six pupils, at each of the 60 new schools joining each year, are provided with on-road cycle training in the first year of the three year programme.

The table below shows the numbers and percentages of pupils accessing the on road element of cycling training for ASTP:

Year	Total Primary School Enrolment	Average Year Group Enrolment (Primary School Enrolment Year Groups)	Number of Pupils trained through AST on-road training (Up to 16 no. pupils in 60 schools)	Percentage of Average Year Group Enrolment Trained on-road via AST
2017-18	173,700	24,800	877	3.5%
2018-19	174,500	24,900	844	3.4%
2019-20	173,900	24,800	825	3.3%

The Cycling Proficiency Scheme (CPS) is offered to every primary school in Northern Ireland with 348 schools and 6434 pupils participating on the scheme last year. The scheme is made up of two elements; the off-road and on-road training. As CPS is not a mandatory part of the school curriculum, the decision to participate in one or both elements of training is for each individual school. My Department encourages school principals to take up both elements of the scheme and provides all the necessary administration, risk assessments, training and resources to enable them to do so.

The table below shows the number of pupils who have accessed on-road cycle training element of CPS.

Year	Primary School Enrolment	Average Year Group Enrolment (Primary School Enrolment Year Groups)	Number of Pupils trained in CPS on-road, out of total trained in CPS	Percentage of Average Year Group Enrolment Trained on-road via CPS
2017-18	173,700	24,800	650 out of 7102 total no. trained in CPS	2.6%
2018-19	174,500	24,900	695 out of 6331 total no. trained in CPS	2.8%
2019-20	173,900	24,800	795 out of 6434 total no. trained in CPS	3.2%

It may also be worth noting that between 25% and 29% of the year group receive off-road cycle training through the CPS.

As cycling becomes more popular it is important that children have a full experience of cycling both on and off road. I hope you find this information useful.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure how vehicles, which are currently subject to a Statutory Off Road Notification, can be taxed and obtain an MOT so that they can return to the road.

(AQW 4652/17-22)

Ms Mallon: On 24 March 2020, in the interest of public safety and to tackle the spread of COVID-19, I suspended all vehicle testing at DVA test centres for three months, until 22 June 2020. Since vehicle testing was suspended, DVA has been issuing Temporary Exemption Certificates (TEC) to ensure that vehicles may continue to be driven legally on the road. TEC's will continue to be issued to all eligible vehicles until normal vehicle testing services resume.

Vehicles which are subject to a Statutory Off Road Notification (SORN) and have an MOT certificate which has not expired by 12 months or more will qualify for a TEC. This will allow the owner to tax and insure their vehicle.

Vehicles whose MOT certificate has expired by more than 12 months do not qualify for a TEC. More detailed information on TECs can be found at <https://www.nidirect.gov.uk/articles/coronavirus-covid-19-and-motoring>.

On 22 June, I announced a timetable for the planned reinstatement of further vehicle testing services, initially prioritising those vehicles that cannot avail of an exemption, such as first time taxis and buses, vehicles not registered in Northern Ireland and due a test and vehicles whose MOT certificates have expired by more than 12 months, which includes SORN'ed vehicles and those sold by car dealerships. As restrictions ease, and the DVA's capacity to test vehicles increases, more services will be reinstated until such times as normal business resumes.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department will resurface the B40, Moneyneaney Road, Draperstown, which is considered to be a high priority by departmental engineering officials.

(AQW 4659/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The B40 Moneyneaney Road has been identified as a high priority for resurfacing within the Mid Ulster area and it is anticipated that a resurfacing scheme will be completed before the end of 2020.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 53446/11-16, (i) why local planning authorities can withhold Habitats Regulations Assessments from the planning portal; (ii) for her assessment of the practice being detrimental to enabling public access to the planning system; and (iii) whether she will follow the lead of Ireland's Department of Housing, Planning and Local Government and introduce regulations that require all planning documentation to be uploaded to the planning portal within five days of receipt.

(AQW 4661/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Where an assessment required by the Conservation (Natural Habitats, etc.) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 has been undertaken by a planning authority this must be made available to the public. How this requirement is met is ultimately a matter for the individual planning authority, however, I believe the NI Planning Portal offers a consistent and readily accessible mechanism through which the public can electronically access important environmental information. I am unaware of any local planning authorities withholding such assessments but my officials intend to highlight this important issue with council Heads of Planning.

I do not consider there is a need for a statutory timeframe for uploading documents in Northern Ireland over and above the existing planning process. Nonetheless, my officials will reiterate to all councils the importance of making relevant documents available in a timely manner.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure why Lough Shore Road, Portaferry, has been left unrepaired for the last three months.

(AQW 4663/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The damage at Loughshore Road, Portaferry due to coastal action first came to the attention of my officials in February this year. The road was immediately closed for public safety reasons and has remained closed since then due to the severity of the damage. The site has been monitored and it is regrettable that there has been some disregard for the road closure with signs and cones being removed.

I can also confirm that a design for the repairs was developed and a Marine Licence obtained to carry out work in this environmentally sensitive area on the shores of Strangford Lough. Unfortunately, due to the Covid-19 lockdown restrictions, the contractor was unable to commence repair work as originally planned but it is now expected to commence in July.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline any plans to reduce speed limits to 20mph close to schools in Mid Ulster.

(AQW 4667/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These listings will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's road safety at schools policy document. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure when she plans to reintroduce (i) parking enforcement; and (ii) parking charges for (a) on-street parking; and (b) off-street locations managed by her Department.

(AQW 4675/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I can advise that from Monday 22 June 2020, traffic attendants will be issuing advisory notices to inform and give vehicle owners time to prepare for the introduction of Penalty Charge Notices (PCN's). From Monday 29 June onwards, PCN's will be issued.

Parking charges will be reintroduced at on street locations and in my Department's off-street Park and Ride car parks from Monday 29 June.

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the next stage of the North/South Belfast Rapid Transit route.

(AQW 4704/17-22)

Ms Mallon: A north-south Glider route is one of the projects identified for inclusion in the Belfast Region City Deal, officials have recently completed an Interim Outline Business Case for submission to the BRCD Programme Board and are working closely with the councils and other partners to take forward a feasibility and options appraisal, which will help in identifying route options. We are aiming to have this work completed by the end of this calendar year.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether she would support the use of pavements and public spaces by hospitality businesses to safely open, provided they do not cause inappropriate obstructions and ensure social distancing; and (ii) if so, what measures can be put in place to facilitate this.

Ms Mallon: The Licensing of Pavement Cafés Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 empowers District Councils to manage Pavement Café requests. The Department for Communities has prepared guidelines to assist district councils with the implementation of this statutory licensing scheme however my Department takes an active role and is a key partner in that process.

I am committed to working in partnership with councils and the hospitality industry to seek to kick start the economy and plan for recovery and I have written to all of the councils asking them, as planning authorities, to temporarily take a flexible and pragmatic planning approach to the use of on-street seating for cafes and bars, beer gardens and similar outdoor areas to accommodate physical / social distancing. I have made it clear however that, in taking forward proposals, the needs of people with visual impairment or mobility difficulties must be properly considered and addressed.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will grant the concessionary fare scheme to Belfast Taxi CIC to bring them in line with other modes of public transport.

Ms Mallon: I have requested a meeting with the Finance Minister and the Minister for Communities in relation to the request from Belfast Taxi CIC to join the concessionary fares scheme. In order for me to recommend an operator join the concessionary fare scheme it is important that I am satisfied the audit requirements of the scheme can be met by the operator and that their inclusion in the scheme is affordable within the budget I have available to me.

I have been clear that in its present format the concessionary fares scheme is underfunded. I am mindful that any decision to expand the scheme must be considered in the context of sustained levels of recurrent funding to maintain high quality public transport, a very significant challenge considering the severe constraints on my Department's budgets. For these reasons my officials are continuing to engage with Belfast Taxis CIC, and I am continuing to engage with the Finance Minister and Executive colleagues given the impact that access to public transport has on the economic, social and environmental well-being of the region.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on cycle routes for West Belfast.

Ms Mallon: The £20 million funding for blue / green infrastructure will support our communities through this transformation, promoting active travel and shaping our places to live in the new normal. This funding will be community led and departmentally supported.

I am keen to see progress on better walking and cycling infrastructure in all areas of the city and throughout the North and am currently considering the basis upon which funding may be allocated for cycling infrastructure. My department is working in partnership with Councils and stakeholders, in identifying and taking forward schemes that deliver on our Programme for Government outcomes and ensure lasting change for people across the North.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of the value for money on the £300,000 spent on the award of a consultancy contract to Golder Associates UK.

Ms Mallon: Due to the complex nature of the assignment which is in a highly specialised technical field, the accepted contract sum is considered appropriate and was agreed after a full market procurement. As the consultancy contract has only recently commenced my officials will be monitoring progress closely over the contract period to ensure that the scope of services required is fully delivered for the contract sum.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure how much of the additional funding for park and ride facilities in this year's budget is to be allocated to the Trooperslane Park and Ride site.

(AQW 4725/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have allocated £4m for the development of Park and Ride sites in 20/21 and will shortly be considering my priorities.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the 100 schools which have met the criteria for 20mph speed limit signage, as outlined in her budget statement.

(AQW 4727/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These listings will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's road safety at schools policy document. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure which greenway projects have been identified for funding, as detailed in her budget statement.

Ms Mallon: The £20 million funding for blue / green infrastructure will support our communities through this transformation, promoting active travel and shaping our places to live in the new normal. This funding will be community led and departmentally supported. In partnership we can ensure lasting change for people across Northern Ireland.

I am still considering the basis upon which funding may be allocated to specific greenway projects but it is important that schemes will deliver on our Programme for Government outcomes. I will make a further announcement shortly.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) details of the Blue/Green fund; and (ii) how this will be allocated.

(AQW 4729/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The £20m Blue/Green fund that I have announced will act as a catalyst for positive infrastructure and cultural change in the way citizens live and travel, building on current initiatives that I have already introduced.

I want to make sure that there is an inclusive approach to determining the deployment of this fund with a wide range of stakeholders having had the opportunity to identify innovative solutions that will transform communities for the better.

I therefore intend to meet with a wide range of stakeholders in the coming weeks to swiftly explore and seek support for co-design ideas and initiatives that can be taken forward under the fund immediately.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for Infrastructure which schools in Fermanagh and South Tyrone will have 20mph speed limits on the roads around them.

(AQW 4731/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised and the scheme rolled out at pace.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail how funding for greenway infrastructure will be allocated.

(AQW 4732/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The £20 million funding for blue / green infrastructure will support our communities through this transformation, promoting active travel and shaping our places to live in the new normal. This funding will be community led and departmentally supported. I am still considering the basis upon which funding will be allocated for greenway infrastructure but it is important that schemes will deliver on our Programme for Government outcomes. I will make a further announcement shortly.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether Diamond Primary School, Cullybackey, is included on the list of schools for the 20mph speed limit investment; and (ii) to list all schools in North Antrim that are included.

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. As the budget commitment has only been confirmed, priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These listings will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's road safety at schools policy document. I am happy to confirm that Diamond Primary school, will be included in the assessment process. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Ms Rogan asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will include (i) Holy Family Primary School, Teconnaght; (ii) St. Nicholas' Primary School, Ardglass; (iii) St. Mary's Primary School, Aughlisnafin; and (iv) St. Mary's Primary School, Dunsford, in the £2 million investment to introduce 20mph speed limits outside schools.

I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether Crossroads Primary School, Kilrea, will be included as one of the schools to have a 20mph speed limit outside.

(AQW 4752/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether a pre-application community consultation was conducted on planning applications (a) LA11/2019/1000/F; and (b) LA10/2019/1386/F; (ii) if not, why her Department did not consider it necessary; and (iii) whether these applications have been the subject of a public notice in the press.

(AQW 4753/17-22)

Ms Mallon:

- (i) There is no record of any pre application community consultation being conducted by the applicant, nor any record of a notice, known as a 'proposal of application notice' (PAN), being given to either Fermanagh and Omagh District Council or Derry City and Strabane District Council on submission of either application.
- (ii) Section 27 of Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 places a statutory duty on applicants for planning permission to consult the community in advance of submitting any application if the development falls within the major category as prescribed in the Planning (Development Management) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015. As neither application falls within the major category there is no legislative requirement for the applicant to engage in a pre-application community consultation exercise.
- (iii) To date both applications have not been subject to publicity procedures. The appropriate publicity arrangements are being considered and I can confirm that both applications will then be subject to full statutory consultation, including public notice in the press.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline the extent of the neighbour notification process regarding the planning applications (i) LA10/2019/1386; and (ii) LA11/2019/1000/F.

Ms Mallon: To date both applications have not been subject to neighbour notification procedures. The appropriate publicity arrangements are being considered and I can confirm that both applications will then be subject to full statutory consultation, including neighbour notification.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that her Department had already called in planning application LA10/2017/1249/F at the time NIE submitted the applications (i) LA11/2019/1000/F; and (ii) LA11/2019/1386/F, and in line with Part 3, Section 26 of the Planning Act; whether she can confirm what consultation took place with her Department prior to submission regarding whether the applications should be submitted to her Department or to the local planning authorities. (AQW 4755/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I can advise that LA10/2017/1249/F was not called in by my Department. It was determined that the proposal for the mine was of regional significance and therefore the planning application was made directly to the Department for determination.

Section 26 of the Planning Act 2011 requires a prospective applicant to enter into consultations with the Department for any major application as prescribed in the Planning (Development Management) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015. No consultation took place with the Department prior to submission regarding whether the two powerline applications should be submitted to the Department or to the local planning authorities under the provisions of Section 26(3) of the Planning Act 2011. Consultation was not necessary for the powerline applications as they do not fall within the threshold of major developments as prescribed in the Planning (Development Management) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015. The powerline applications were local applications, submitted to the appropriate local council, prior to call in by the Department.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she maintains the policy position that there should not be new overhead power lines in Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, as per Section 6.250 of the Strategic Planning Policy Statement. (AQW 4756/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that Paragraph 6.250 of the SPPS currently directs that proposals for new overhead power lines "will be considered having regard to potential impact on amenity and should avoid areas of landscape sensitivity, including Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs)". The SPPS also provides that development proposals in AONBs must be sensitive to the distinctive special character of the area and the quality of their landscape, heritage and wildlife, and be in accordance with relevant plan policies' (Paragraph 6.187). This remains my Department's current policy approach.

Any proposal for new overhead power lines will, of course, be considered by the relevant planning authority on a case by case basis taking into account the local development plan, regional planning policy and guidance, including the Regional Development Strategy 2035, the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (the SPPS), local circumstances, and all other material considerations. The relevance and weight to be attached to all material considerations will therefore be a matter of planning judgement for the decision taker.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure for a breakdown of the £4 million budget allocation for greenway infrastructure. (AQW 4758/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The £20 million funding for blue / green infrastructure will support our communities through this transformation, promoting active travel and shaping our places to live in the new normal. This funding will be community led and departmentally supported. Of this amount I identified £4 million for cycling and greenways. I am still considering the basis upon which funding will be allocated to greenway infrastructure but it is important that schemes will deliver on our Programme for Government outcomes. I will make a further announcement shortly.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the purpose; and (ii) the scope of the Blue/Green Fund. (AQW 4760/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The £20m Blue/Green fund that I have announced will act as a catalyst for positive infrastructure and cultural change in the way citizens live and travel, building on current initiatives that I have already introduced.

I want to make sure that there is an inclusive approach to determining the deployment of this fund with a wide range of stakeholders having had the opportunity to identify innovative solutions that will transform communities for the better.

I therefore intend to meet with a wide range of stakeholders in the coming weeks to swiftly explore and seek support for co-design ideas and initiatives that can be taken forward under the fund immediately.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail how the 100 schools will be selected for 20mph restrictions within the vicinity of their premises. (AQW 4761/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail planned (i) structural maintenance works; and (ii) strategic road improvement schemes in the North Down constituency during 2020/21.

(AQW 4763/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Unfortunately my Department has been forced to revise its original programme of structural maintenance works in North Down as a result of the impact of Covid-19. I understand officials from the local Section Office have made the Member aware of this recently and confirmed that two schemes, one in Holywood and one in Bangor, have been deferred until next Spring. I can confirm that the following resurfacing schemes are planned for the current year and additional schemes may be added as finance permits:

- Church Drive, Bangor;
- Manse Road, Bangor; and
- Cultra Avenue, Holywood.

In relation to strategic road improvement (SRI) schemes, I can confirm that there are currently no SRI schemes planned for in the North Down constituency in 2020/21.

Mr Chambers asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that the project was due for completion in 2019/20 having been put back from 2018/19, for an update on the construction of an area of hard standing and 110m of footpath on the A2 Donaghadee Road, Groomsport, near the junction with Lower Balloo Road.

(AQW 4766/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Following a review of pedestrian usage at this location, revised proposals were taken forward and works were completed earlier this year on A2 Donaghadee Road, Groomsport. The works provided hardstandings at two bus stops near the junction with Lower Balloo Road along with a connecting link to the existing footway thus negating the need to construct the previously proposed 110m footway link along Donaghadee Road.

The Department is satisfied that the measures provided adequately cater for the bus stop waiting areas on both sides of the road and for crossing the road at that location improving both road safety and accessibility.

Mr Chambers asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) how many lots and purchasers are involved NI Water's sale of Portavoe Reservoir; (ii) the completion dates of these sales; (iii) whether a purchaser is entitled to make alterations to any aspects of the property prior to the completion date of the sale.

(AQW 4767/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Northern Ireland Water (NI Water) has advised me that:

- (i) Portavoe Reservoir was sold in six lots to four purchasers;
- (ii) the sale of the reservoir to the four purchasers was completed on 11 June 2020; and
- (iii) a purchaser would not be allowed to make any alterations to any aspects of the property prior to the completion of sale without the consent of the seller. NI Water did not give consent to undertake alterations at the reservoir to any of the purchasers prior to completion of the sale.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department plans to offer reduced on-street parking charges to assist the economic recovery of our towns and cities.

(AQW 4771/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have no plans to offer reduced on-street parking charges at this time.

The current tariff for on street parking is set to ensure a turnover of car parking spaces, so that spaces are available for more customers and anyone travelling to our towns and cities.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the schools in North Down that will benefit from the new 20mph zones.

(AQW 4775/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the overtime costs for Department of Infrastructure staff to cut roadside grass verges, including traffic management, in North Down during 2019/20.

(AQW 4776/17-22)

Ms Mallon: DfI Roads activities are undertaken outside of normal hours only when it is deemed operationally necessary to do so. In North Down there are four sections of carriageway where traffic volumes, speed limits and road type are such that it is deemed operationally necessary, for safety reasons and to minimise disruption, to carry out grass cutting outside of normal hours. These locations are at:

- A2 Whinney Hill to Tillysburn Roundabout;
- A2 Ring Road, Bangor;
- A21 Bangor to Comber; and
- A20 Kempstones Road.

The overtime costs for cutting the grass at these locations during 2019/20, including traffic management, were approximately £10,000.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 4317/17-22; (i) to clarify the current policy for frequency of grass cutting; and (ii) the contract cost of grass cutting works on (a) motorways; and (b) the A1 dual carriageway from Sprucefield to Newry.

(AQW 4777/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Motorways and the A1 dual carriageway from Sprucefield to the border are currently maintained through two Design, Build, Finance and Operate contracts. These contracts require a minimum 1.2 metre strip of grass to be cut on verges and on all parts of the central reserve as necessary, to ensure that the grass height does not exceed 300 millimetres. In addition, the DBFO Companies are required to ensure that sight lines at junctions and minimum stopping sight distances are kept clear and that signs, emergency telephones, lights and marker posts are not obstructed.

In 2018 an amended grass cutting specification was introduced for the M1 between Sprucefield and Dungannon and A1 between Sprucefield and the border, which requires the contractor to carry out 2 cuts per annum on all verges and the M1 central reservation. There has been no change to the requirements associated with junction sight lines, stopping sight distances, the A1 central reserve or the remainder of the motorway network, which continue to be maintained such that the grass does not exceed 300mm in height.

The DBFO Contracts were established with a payment mechanism spanning a thirty year contract period. Contract payments are based on the concept of Maximum Annual Availability Payments, whereby an agreed annual payment is made, covering all aspects of the contract including the initial major construction works and the various elements of routine maintenance, including grass cutting, pothole repairs, street lighting maintenance etc. Within this annual payment mechanism, details of individual costs for particular work activities, such as grass cutting, are not available to the Department.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure when the recently approved scheme to provide a park and ride facility at Trooperslane Station will be completed.

(AQW 4779/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have allocated £4m for the development of Park and Ride sites in 20/21 and will shortly be considering my priorities.

Mr McCann asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the number of passengers arriving into ports, including the number of ferry arrivals, each week since the beginning of March 2020.

(AQW 4784/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department does not hold detail on the number of passengers arriving in ports.

In relation to ferry arrivals we are aware that the number of sailings has varied since the beginning of March as operators have had to adapt to the reductions in freight and passenger numbers as a result of covid 19. Ferry operators would be best placed to provide you with this information.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to outline (i) what engagement she or her officials have had with Approved Driving Instructors to support and advise them during the COVID-19 pandemic; and (ii) how the sector will operate post-lockdown.

(AQW 4788/17-22)

Ms Mallon: While my Department is responsible for regulating the Approved Driver Instructor (ADI) industry, through the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA), it does not employ ADIs in the capacity of delivering driving instruction. The Department has no remit to determine how ADIs will operate post-lockdown.

My officials in the DVA notified all ADIs and AMIs of the suspension of all testing services and counter services at the outset of the COVID-19 crisis on 19 and 20 March. Since then they have engaged with the industry, signposting them to a range of advice and guidance from the Public Health Agency NI and Department for the Economy for workers, small businesses and the self-employed on a range of issues such as social distancing, safe working practices and financial support that they may be able to avail of.

The DVA Registrar has provided regular updates to the industry during the suspension of all theory and practical driving tests, confirming the DVA is continuing to explore options to reinstate driving tests safely. The Registrar updated the industry on the resumption of the supply of Compulsory Basic Training (CBT) certificates, the extension of expired driving licences and the reinstatement of the processing of first time driving licences.

On 22 June, I announced a timetable for the reinstatement of further vehicle and driver testing services, including practical driving tests for motorcycles, buses, tractors and Module 4 CPC tests for lorry, bus and coach drivers. In terms of practical driving tests for cars, there are significant issues to be addressed before these can be recommenced. The Registrar wrote to the industry on 22 June outlining these changes.

My officials continue to engage with our colleagues in the Driver and Vehicle Standards Agency (DVSA) regarding the resumption of theory tests and I hope to be in a position to confirm a date for this very soon.

On 23 June, the Registrar met with the industry stakeholder group, the Northern Ireland Approved Instructor Council (NIAIC), to provide further updates, address their queries in relation to the planned reinstatement of services, and listen to their concerns, including dates for resumption of driving and vehicle tests, extension of theory test pass certificates, and safe working practices. This meeting was welcomed by the industry.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given the release of the South Lakes Masterplan in Craigavon, which shows a predetermination in the award of planning permission for the Southern Regional College, whether she will (i) review how planning permission was given; and (ii) investigate whether there was maladministration in awarding planning permission.

(AQW 4793/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The planning permission granted by Armagh City Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council in relation to the Southern Regional College is currently subject to Judicial Review. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further on this council matter whilst the judicial proceedings are ongoing.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure, as local councils develop Local Development Plans with considerable variation in and changes to PPS21, why she allows inconsistent policies governing rural planning across Northern Ireland.

(AQW 4797/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Under the two-tier planning system councils are progressing with the preparation of new Local Development Plans (LDPs). As long as councils take account of policies and advice in guidance issued by my Department, such as the Regional Development Strategy 2035 and the Strategic Planning Policy statement 2015, there is flexibility for them to bring forward detailed operational planning policies, including policies for development in the countryside, tailored to their specific local social, environmental and economic circumstances.

In its role as a statutory consultee, my Department has made representations on each draft Plan Strategy and, where relevant, has highlighted any departures from regional planning policy on development in the countryside. Each draft Plan Strategy will also be subject to scrutiny at independent Examination by the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC), which will take account of representations, counter representations and consultation responses. At this time no Local Development Plans have been through the Independent Examination process.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given her statement on 10 June 2020 regarding the £30 million investment for low emission buses, (i) what plans she has to invest in hydrogen vehicles; and (ii) what support she can provide Wrightbus in creating an innovation and manufacturing hub for hydrogen technology in North Antrim.

(AQW 4798/17-22)

Ms Mallon: In my 2020/21 Budget Statement to the Assembly, I announced that I had added £5m to the already ring-fenced allocation of £25m for Low Emission Buses to Translink in an effort to take further steps towards addressing climate change and making public transport a more attractive and efficient alternative to private cars. The announcement of £30m capital investment will allow for the purchase of zero emission vehicles by Translink over the next 2 years. These vehicles will include both Hydrogen Fuel Cell and Battery Electric Buses.

Earlier this year I announced of the procurement of 3 Hydrogen Buses by Translink from Wrightbus, as part of the Northern Ireland Hydrogen (NIH2) Project which will see the first Hydrogen buses and, in conjunction with Energia, the first Hydrogen refuelling station in Ireland (NI and RoI).

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the report from Belfast City Council identifying six potential alternative sites for the Translink bus depot in Short Strand.
(AQW 4800/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Whilst I am aware of the commissioning of the report by Belfast City Council on this matter, the findings of it have not yet been shared with my Department and I am therefore unable to comment on the report or its recommendations at this point.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that she has indicated that her Department is not responsible for any support package to the taxi sector, despite being its regulator in line with the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, to outline (i) who is responsible for instigating grants to the sector; (ii) what discussions she has had with these relevant persons; and (iii) what were the outcomes.

Ms Mallon: From 20th March and the onset of this crisis I have actively pushed the issue of financial and wider support for the taxi industry with the Minister for the Economy and my Executive Colleagues. Most recently I wrote to the Minister of Finance on 12 June 2020, advising that I remained concerned about the number of taxi drivers who fall outside the remit of the financial assistance schemes, with a number of sole traders not being able to access any assistance presently on offer from DfE, DoF or UK Treasury. I have advised DoF and DfE that as regulator of the industry, my Department has information on taxi drivers that could be used to assist any new scheme available to help those who cannot avail of the current support.

While it is outside the remit of DfI to administer such a scheme, if a scheme were established for taxi drivers by the Department for the Economy in its efforts to provide assistance to sole traders not supported under existing schemes, I am willing to assist in identifying those people who could benefit. The Driver and Vehicle Agency could contact drivers by post to advise them of the schemes availability and direct them to the relevant Department to apply to avail of the scheme on an individual basis.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update to the capital works project on the A6, including details on (i) the right-hand turning lane into Ranaghan Road; and (ii) other works which are required to combat road safety issues in the area.

Ms Mallon: The Covid-19 pandemic has resulted in disruption to many of my Department's activities due to the impact on supply chains, social distancing requirements and workforce availability. We have been working closely with the contractors on both of the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson and Dungiven to Drumahoe Strategic Road Improvement schemes to mitigate these impacts. The situation is now much improved with the re-commencement of many activities, albeit with reduced productivity due to social distancing requirements.

While Covid-19 has impacted construction work on the A6, it is hoped that Randalstown to Castledawson scheme will finish next year, with the Dungiven to Drumahoe scheme completing in 2022, largely as planned.

I am pleased to confirm that the new footbridges over the busy Castledawson Roundabout were completed this spring and now provide a safe route for pedestrians, cyclists and wheelchair users travelling between Magherafelt and Castledawson.

The right-hand turning lane planned for the A6 at Ranaghan and an additional lane on the approach to Castledawson Roundabout from the A6 Glenshane Road remain on Western Division's Local Transport and Safety Measures programme (2020-22) however their delivery is subject to the availability of funding.

Earlier this year my Department renewed all the 'cats eyes' and the road markings on the A6 Glenshane Road between Castledawson Roundabout and the Mid Ulster District Council boundary. It is anticipated that the road signage on this section of carriageway will also be replaced later this financial year.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the schools in the West Tyrone constituency to be included in the forthcoming 20mph scheme.
(AQW 4812/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These listings will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's road safety at schools policy document. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the schools in Mid Ulster that will benefit from the new 20mph zones; and (ii) how schools are selected for the scheme.

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate my commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. As the budget commitment has only been confirmed, priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These listings will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's road safety at schools policy document. I also anticipate further requests from other schools and these will also have to be assessed before any of the listings can be finalised. I am committed to moving at pace in the roll out of these new 20mph zones.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) why her statement on work on strategic roads and flagship road schemes of 12 June 2020 omits to mention the Yorkgate Interchange; and (ii) when the procurement competition for this major road scheme will be re-advertised.

(AQW 4826/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Development work on the York Street Interchange scheme is substantially complete. Officials are currently finalising options for a new procurement strategy. The Member will know from responses to oral questions in the Assembly that I have stated my commitment to Yorkgate Interchange.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure what areas in the Strangford constituency will benefit from the £8 million investment in low energy LED street lights, as announced in her 2020/21 Budget Statement.

(AQW 4836/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I was pleased to announce in my 2020/2021 budget statement, that I have allocated £8m of funding for the replacement of sodium street lights with energy efficient LED units. These units allow energy savings of up to 60% compared to the equivalent sodium lights, as well as savings in maintenance costs and a reduction in the number of outages on the network.

This will allow my Department to replace approximately 30,000 lanterns, however, as the funding has only recently been allocated, programmes for the retrofitting of LED lighting in the Strangford area, and indeed all other areas across Northern Ireland, have still to be finalised.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the proposed Comber park and ride.

(AQW 4837/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I have allocated £4m for the development of Park and Ride sites in 20/21 and will shortly be considering my priorities.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) to outline details of the next stage of the A24 Ballynahinch bypass; and (ii) how much has been allocated to progress the scheme this financial year.

(AQW 4838/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Ballynahinch Bypass is at an advanced stage of development. To complete the development phase, the next stage includes the finalisation of the Business Case for the scheme and consideration of the making of the Direction Order. In conjunction with this work, I wish to examine how the scheme could at the same time kick-start improvements to the town - by reducing traffic travelling through the town, we would create an opportunity to reshape the town centre, providing more space for people and creating a better place for all.

I recognise that many in the community support the provision of a bypass in Ballynahinch and I have allocated £8m capital funding for the development of a range of strategic road improvements in 2020/21. This will allow the completion of development work on the Ballynahinch Bypass this financial year. Progression to construction will depend on the availability of funding in subsequent years.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the criteria to be applied by her Department to determine which 100 schools will qualify for the 20mph speed limits announced in her Written Ministerial Statement on 10 June 2020.

(AQW 4857/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads, particularly those near schools, can help in this regard.

I am delighted to further demonstrate this commitment by allocating funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools in Northern Ireland so that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from school on a daily basis. Priority listings are currently being developed for each Division. These will be based on scores calculated using the assessment framework contained within the Department's current road safety at schools policy document, that allows schools to be individually scored based on various factors pertaining to the school, such as the number of collisions, speed limits, measured speeds etc.

Mr Blair asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department would consider introducing planning permission for slurry tanks.

(AQW 4870/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The building of slurry tanks is a frequent requirement of farming operations and benefits from permitted development rights under Part 7 of Schedule 1 to the Planning (General Permitted Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015 subject to certain limitations and conditions. I have no plans to change the current permitted development rights for agricultural buildings and operations.

Where development is identified in either of the Schedules to the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2017 and Environmental Impact Assessment is applicable based on the details of the proposed development, permitted development rights do not apply and a planning application will be required.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure when Approved Driving Instructors can book lessons with learners.

(AQW 4876/17-22)

Ms Mallon: While my Department is responsible for regulating the Approved Driver Instructor (ADI) industry, through the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA), it does not employ ADIs in the capacity of delivering driving instruction. The Department has no remit to suspend their services or determine when they might return to work.

The Registrar for ADIs/ AMIs in the DVA has advised driving instructors of this position and signposted them to the latest public health advice on social distancing and safe working practices.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure when she will make a decision on the compulsory use of face masks on public transport.

(AQW 4890/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As an Executive, we have been clear that our response to COVID 19, including the relaxation of restrictions through our Recovery Plan, must continue to be firmly grounded in the science, with health protection at its heart. As with our response to COVID 19, the evidence base is not static and has continued to develop. In light of this, the Executive agreed to the establishment of a cross-departmental officials' group to continue discussion and consideration of face coverings. That group meet on 17 June and had a positive and useful discussion.

The evidence suggests that face coverings can provide a degree of protection to other people but limited or no protection to those wearing them. For the benefit of face coverings to be realised, it requires a high proportion of the population to use them routinely in places where social distancing cannot be maintained at all times.

Over recent weeks, as we have moved through the stages of our recovery plan we have seen an increase in passenger numbers on Translink services. Despite that growth in passenger numbers and our current advice to consider wearing face coverings, Translink reports that no more than around 10% of passengers are currently doing so. The further easing of restrictions planned through to 3 July is likely to increase further the level of passenger demand for public transport. This will clearly present challenges for Translink in accommodating social distancing on public transport, even with a fully restored bus and rail timetable.

My officials are continuing discussions on this matter with departmental colleagues, including those from Health and Justice, to explore issues such as enforcement and exclusions in any move to a mandatory position and will update me on the outcome of those deliberations. Any decision on the mandatory use of face coverings will require Executive agreement and I intend to provide a further update to my Executive colleagues in the coming days.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will make public the climate change and air pollution assessments made in the approval of the proposed Belfast Harbour Estate fossil gas power plant.

(AQW 4918/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I understand that the power plant referred to is that approved by the Department in April 2019 at Airport Road West in the Belfast Harbour Estate (Planning Reference LA04/2017/0878/F). Air quality assessments for the power plant are available to view in the Environmental Statement and further environmental information submitted in support of this proposal and can be viewed on the planning portal via the public access website, using the application reference number. The Department's consideration of the air quality issues is contained within the Development Management Report which is also available to view online.

In regard to a climate change assessment, the objectives of government policy are embedded in prevailing planning policy and guidance. This planning decision was made taking account of the regional guidance set out in the Regional Development Strategy 2035 (RDS) and in light of prevailing planning policy as set out in the Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPPS). One of the key aims of the RDS is to reduce our carbon footprint and facilitate mitigation and adaptation to climate change whilst improving air quality. Similarly the SPPS indicates that the planning system should help to mitigate and adapt to climate change by shaping new and existing developments in ways that reduce greenhouse gas emissions and by promoting sustainable patterns of development while working with natural environmental processes.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will make public her Department's rationale for approving the Belfast Harbour Estate fossil gas power plant.

(AQW 4919/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I understand that the power plant referred to is that approved by the Department in April 2019 at Airport Road West in the Belfast Harbour Estate (Planning Reference LA04/2017/0878/F). The Department's full consideration and assessment of the proposal and rationale for granting planning permission is contained within its Development Management Report which is available to view on the planning portal via the public access website, using the application reference number.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether there are plans to pilot public hire schemes for e-Bikes.

(AQW 4927/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As the Member will be aware, I am very keen to increase the proportion of journeys made by walking, cycling and public transport right across Northern Ireland. I want to do what I can to remove barriers for people who want to walk and cycle more as they go about their everyday lives. That is why I introduced legislation in the Assembly to make e-bikes legal in Northern Ireland and help make cycling accessible to more people. It is also why I announced a £20 million fund for blue / green infrastructure.

The current public bike hire scheme in Belfast is run by Belfast City Council although it is temporarily suspended due to the current Covid-19 pandemic. A pilot public hire scheme for e-Bikes might be the kind of project that could be supported from the blue / green infrastructure fund and I would be willing to consider any proposal put forward by Councils.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department classes the York Street Interchange project as (i) a strategic infrastructure scheme; (ii) a flagship scheme; or (iii) an essential infrastructure project.

(AQW 4942/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The York Street Interchange project is a Strategic Road Improvement scheme that will provide a fully grade separated interchange to replace the existing at-grade signal controlled junction of the A12 Westlink, M2 and M3. The importance of the scheme is recognised by its inclusion in the New Decade New Approach document, however it was not included by the previous Executive as one of its Flagship projects identified in the Budget 2016-2017.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Infrastructure what plans her Department has to improve cycle routes and infrastructure in Upper Bann.

(AQW 4949/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Last month I announced the creation of £20 million blue / green infrastructure funding that will act as a catalyst for positive infrastructure and cultural change in the way citizens live and travel, building on current initiatives that I have already introduced.

I want to make sure that there is an inclusive approach to determining the deployment of this fund with a wide range of stakeholders having had the opportunity to identify innovative solutions that will transform communities for the better.

I therefore intend to meet with a wide range of stakeholders in the coming weeks to swiftly explore and seek support for co-design ideas and initiatives that can be taken forward under the fund immediately. Accordingly, it is not yet possible to be specific about investment in any particular constituency.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Infrastructure when work will begin on the A5 road project.

(AQW 4981/17-22)

Ms Mallon: A Public Inquiry administered by the Planning Appeals Commission into the A5 Western Transport Corridor scheme, concluded on 13 March 2020. I am awaiting the Inspector's report, which is scheduled for completion in September 2020.

Subject to a favourable outcome from the Public Inquiry and the successful completion of all statutory procedures and environmental assessments, construction work on the first phase of the scheme, Phase 1A from New Buildings to north of Strabane, could commence during 2021.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she intends to extend the period a driving theory test is valid for those who are currently unable to book a driving test.

(AQW 4998/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I am aware that some learner drivers are in the position that, through no fault of their own, their theory test pass certificate is coming close to the end of its two year period of validity, or has expired during the current pandemic.

I have asked officials to engage with colleagues in the Driver and Vehicle Standards Agency in Great Britain to consider what additional measures may be implemented to ensure that those candidates inconvenienced by the current Covid-19 crisis are not further penalised through the expiry of their theory test certificate. It is, however, likely that any extension to the validity period of theory test pass certificates will require an amendment to legislation and this is being explored.

Department of Justice

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of domestic violence reports from March until June 2020, compared to the same time period in 2019.

(AQW 4769/17-22)

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): There is no official data available for domestic violence reports for this period. The first domestic abuse bulletin for 2020/21 will cover the 12 months to 30th June and will be published by NISRA on 27th August 2020. Therefore, official figures in relation to domestic abuse motivated crime and incidents will not be available until that date. The latest PSNI published information provides that from 1 April 2019 to 31 March 2020, there were 31,817 domestic abuse incidents in Northern Ireland, an increase of 135 (0.4 per cent) on the previous 12 months.

However, since March 2020, PSNI has provided weekly data, by way of exceptional release, on the number of domestic violence and abuse related calls made to the service. This information is not directly comparable to that contained in PSNI's official statistics, recording incidents and crime, which has undergone rigorous quality assurance checking prior to publication. The most up-to-date weekly exceptional release published by PSNI (17 June 2020) shows that for the period 4 March until 16 June 2020, PSNI received 9,303 domestic violence and abuse related calls. This is a percentage increase of 14.75 % (n: 1,196) compared to the same period for the previous year (or an 8.8% increase against the annual weekly average of 570). The table below provides a breakdown of calls made during this period:

Period	Domestic abuse calls received by PSNI in 2019	Domestic abuse calls received by PSNI in 2020
4/3 – 10/3	534	565
11/3 – 17/3	550	555
18/3 – 24/3	532	595
25/3 – 31/3	504	567
1/4 – 7/4	520	583
8/4 – 14/4	537	721
15/4 – 21/4	511	616
22/4 – 28/4	544	657
29/4 – 5/5	521	608
6/5 – 12/5	501	654
13/5 – 19/5	531	633
20/5 – 26/5	608	640
27/5 – 2/6	576	727
3/6 – 9/6	558	599
10/6 – 16/6	580	583
Total	8,107	9,303

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice (i) whether a review of the support mechanisms within the Northern Ireland Prison Service for prison officers will be independent; and (ii) who is proposed to lead this review.

(AQW 4790/17-22)

Mrs Long: I have commissioned the review of support services for frontline prison staff and this will be independent from the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Once I have finalised who should conduct this review, I will write to the Justice Committee with the terms of reference including who will deliver this important piece of work.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, given the matter was heard in May 2019, why there has been a delay in the Court of Appeal giving judgement in the appeal against the ruling of Mrs. Justice Keegan in the case involving the Police Ombudsman's Loughinisland report.

(AQW 4796/17-22)

Mrs Long: The timing and delivery of court judgments are matters for the judiciary. It is an accepted principle that the courts are completely independent and therefore it would be inappropriate for me to become involved in or comment on any aspect of court proceedings.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Justice, in light of the Black Lives Matter protest on 6 June, whether she can confirm that the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 expressly uphold the right to protest in an effective and safe manner as a fundamental human right.

(AQW 4884/17-22)

Mrs Long: I can confirm that regulation 6 of The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, which deals with gatherings in a public place, does not contain an exemption in relation to public protests. The European Convention on Human Rights recognises that the right to peaceful assembly/association may be qualified in the interests of public safety and for the protection of health.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice to provide an update on Prisons 2020: The Way Forward.

(AQW 4956/17-22)

Mrs Long: Since the publication of Prisons 2020: The Way Forward in July 2018, NIPS has driven continuous improvement across the organisation. Years One and Two of Prisons 2020 have seen significant progress made towards the strategic commitments across each of the four strands of the programme (People, Services, Infrastructure and Partnerships). These plans contained over 180 deliverables, of which only 5% were not achieved, which has resulted in improvements for both staff and people in our care.

The programme will run until March 2021 and the Year Three plan has recently been finalised. Copies of the annual delivery plans, along with the corresponding end year reports, are available on the NIPS internet site.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Justice, in light of ongoing concerns around COVID-19 deaths, particularly in care homes, and amid a stand down of Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority inspections, whether she is satisfied the Adult Safeguarding Policy 2015, of which her Department was co-author, has been adhered to during this crisis.

(AQW 4968/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Adult Safeguarding Prevention and Protection in Partnership policy has been in place since 2015. It aims to prevent harm from occurring and sets out approaches, arrangements and responses to protect adults at risk where harm has occurred or is likely to occur without intervention. Partnership is a fundamental principle throughout the policy, which applies across Departments, sectors and agencies.

There are different roles within the arrangements set out in the policy. Decisions relating to the operation of routine RQIA inspections fall to the Minister of Health and are not within my remit as Justice Minister.

The policy clearly aims to reduce the potential for harm to occur to adults at risk. Where a crime has occurred, my Department has put in place arrangements for a range of measures to enable adults at risk, who are victims of crime, to have effective access to justice and to support them through the justice processes. These include:

- Victim and Witness Care Unit provides a single point of contact for victims from the point when the case file is transferred from the PSNI to the Public Prosecution Service.
- Registered Intermediaries facilitate the giving of evidence and assist a vulnerable person, who has a significant communication difficulty, during the criminal justice process if their communication difficulties would diminish the quality of their evidence.
- Special measures at court are in place which aim to assist vulnerable and intimidated witnesses to give their best evidence.
- The Victim Charter provides victims of crime with relevant information and sets out their entitlements together with the standards of service that they can expect to receive as they move through the criminal justice process.
- Support services to victims and witnesses are provided by Victim Support Northern Ireland and funded by my Department. Through these services victims and witnesses can receive emotional support, information, practical help, assistance with compensation, advocacy support, support at court and help with making a victim personal statement.

My Department remains committed to working in partnership with the Department of Health and others to deliver the Adult Safeguarding policy, ensuring that the risk of harm is reduced through effective prevention and protection measures; and that the needs of victims of crime as they navigate criminal justice processes are met with effective support and measures that will assist them in achieving best evidence and accessing justice. This has continued to be the position during the current Covid-19 crisis.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice what action her Department will take to address the issue of one parent refusing to adhere to a child contact order that allows a separated parent to have contact with their child during this pandemic.

(AQW 4978/17-22)

Mrs Long: Contact orders and issues arising from them are matters for the independent judiciary. The Lord Chief Justice has approved guidance for court users which can be found at <https://judiciaryni.uk/coronavirus-covid-19>.

The guidance includes advice regarding contact arrangements and recognises that it is important that children should maintain their usual routine of spending time with each of their parents in compliance with a Contact Order unless to do so would put the child, or others, at risk with regards to Government and Public Health Authority (PHA) guidance.

The decision whether a child is to move between parental homes is for the child's parents to make after a sensible assessment of the circumstances, including the child's present health, the risk of infection and the presence of any recognised vulnerable individuals in one household or the other.

The Lord Chief Justice has suggested that if direct contact cannot be achieved, alternative arrangements should be made to establish and maintain regular contact between the child and the other parent, for example remotely – by Face-Time, WhatsApp Face-Time, Skype, Zoom or other video connection or, if that is not possible, by telephone.

The guidance goes on to state that if any court directed contact arrangements are missed or found to be unreasonable, the court may take this into consideration when making further orders, and it may be possible to 'make up' time with the child after the restrictions are lifted.

Where a party to the proceedings feels a matter of contact is urgent they may request a hearing by lodging the requisite Form. On receipt of the form the judge will determine whether the matter is urgent or necessary and if it can be dealt with administratively or will require a hearing.

Breach of contact orders made under the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 can be dealt with by way of contempt of court proceedings or initiated under enforcement powers in the Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Justice, what preparations are being made to allow for the reopening of rural courthouses, such as Strabane and Omagh, in a safe manner for court staff, practitioners and members of the public.

(AQW 5015/17-22)

Mrs Long: In keeping with the Northern Ireland Executive's plans for recovery, the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is working on a phased recovery from the critical business model implemented as a response to the Covid-19 pandemic and subsequent PHA advice.

It is recognised that the traditional model for courts is very difficult to use in the current circumstances. Members of the public and legal practitioners are advised not to attend court buildings unless directed to do so. The majority of hearings are taking place remotely.

The Lord Chief Justice has initiated a programme of work to commence the incremental recovery of court business. This will see an increase in the number of legal practitioners and court users attending court buildings.

My officials in the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service are currently working through a series of Covid-19 Risk Assessments on our operational buildings to ensure that they comply with PHA guidelines on managing the risk of Covid-19 and are safe for staff, judiciary and court and tribunal users.

Risk assessments have already been completed in the main court venues in Belfast and the operational hubs of Lisburn, Dungannon and Londonderry. Further risk assessments at Newtownards and Craigavon will be completed by 30 June 2020.

Stage 2 of the risk assessment process will encompass the NICTS venues at Newry, Antrim, Coleraine, Downpatrick and Omagh Courthouses. Completion of these risk assessments will allow the buildings to be re-opened for NICTS staff, and for administrative purposes only. Stage 2 is due to be completed by mid-July.

Stage 3 which is due to be completed by the end of July will include assessments of the remaining court venues and Hearing Centres, including Strabane Courthouse.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Justice whether her Department is in receipt of COVID-19 monies which have not been forwarded to the PSNI, and, if so, (i) how much; and (ii) when will it be released.

(AQW 5028/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Department has informed the PSNI of all COVID-19 monies agreed by the NI Executive to date, and these will be formally allocated by the Department of Finance to PSNI as part of June monitoring round.

The outcome of any additional funding at June Monitoring, will be notified to PSNI as soon as it is formally approved by the Executive.

Department for the Economy

Dr Archibald asked the Minister for the Economy to detail (i) what obligations are bestowed on her Department and associated arm's-length bodies by the the Protocol to the Withdrawal Agreement, entitled Protocol on Ireland/Northern Ireland; (ii) what steps she is taking to ensure these obligations are fulfilled; and (iii) when will each of these obligations be met.

(AQW 3614/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy):

- (i) The UK Government has not yet made clear how it intends to implement the Protocol and whether it will require NI authorities to make any of the necessary regulations in devolved areas. The responsibility for enacting the terms of the Protocol lies primarily with the United Kingdom Government (UKG) as many of the requirements, such as those on goods regulation and customs, are reserved matters.
- (ii) There are likely to be some implications for devolved matters in the remit of my Department and its Arm's Length Bodies. My officials are working to seek clarity from UKG and consider all of the Department's legislation, services, policies and strategies to ensure they can respond to the new circumstances resulting from the implementation of the Protocol.
- (iii) The extent and timing of our preparations will depend on clarity being secured on the practical implementation of the Protocol.

Ms Rogan asked the Minister for the Economy what steps her Department will take to financially support qualified nurses re-entering the profession, who incur considerable costs in terms of resources for study.

(AQW 3618/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: This is not within the remit of my Department. Policy responsibility for financial support for qualified nurses re-entering the profession lies with the Department of Health."

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will (i) urgently issue sector-specific guidance for taxi drivers; and (ii) provide financial support to the sector during COVID-19.

(AQW 4066/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Schedules 1 and 3 to the Budget Act 2020 allocate funding to the Department for Infrastructure for "transport licensing, enforcement and regulation", as well as "support for transport services including grants in respect of rail and road passenger services including fare concessions". Taxis are clearly regarded as "transport services".

Within this context I have set out below my own Department's actions, as well as those of the Executive and UK government, in providing guidance and financial support to this industry.

Health and Safety Guidance, including social distancing

Neither the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI) nor my Department are responsible for providing specific advice or direction on the application of the public health guidance on social distancing and safe working practice for the transport industry, which includes taxi companies, owners and drivers. To reiterate, these are public health matters, with specific policy responsibility for this industry residing with the Department for Infrastructure.

A safety guidance document, Covid-19: Working Through This Together, A Practical Guide to Making Workplaces Safer', is available on the NI Business Info website and has been informed by input from the Public Health Authority (PHA) and HSENI:

<https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/sites/default/files/Covid-19-Working-Through-This-Together.pdf>

There are a large number and wide variety of businesses and working environments, and an assessment of each has to be fact-specific. It is, therefore, for each business, in light of its own legal advice, to determine whether it can continue to, or start to operate in accordance with the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 and the guidance that has been produced.

Financial Support measures for the Taxi Industry

The Executive and UK Government has introduced an unprecedented number of interventions and packages of financial support to help those who have been affected by the consequences of Covid-19.

Information on current and evolving support options are being updated continuously on the NI Business Info website:

<https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/campaign/coronavirus-updates-support-your-business>

I understand that over 30 taxi firms which met the eligibility criteria, were able to access the business support grants available in Northern Ireland. In addition taxi firms and self-employed taxi drivers who met the relevant criteria are able to access national support packages including the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme (CJRS) and the Self-Employment Income Support Scheme (SEISS), which have both been extended to October 2020.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy to outline the number of students from a Roman Catholic and Protestant background who have enrolled at (i) Queen's University, Belfast; (ii) each campus of Ulster University; (iii) St Mary's University College; and (iv) Stranmillis University College, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 4227/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The table below sets out the number of Northern Ireland domiciled students enrolled at Northern Ireland's higher education institutions by institution, campus and religion for academic years 2016/17 to 2018/19.

Institution/Campus	Academic Year
	2016/17		2017/18		2018/19
	Catholic	Protestant	Catholic	Protestant	Catholic	Protestant
QUB	8,425	6,045	8,505	6,045	8,675	6,210
UU Belfast	730	490	700	465	725	480
UU Coleraine	1,390	1,575	1,310	1,390	1,300	1,375
UU Jordanstown	6,030	3,210	5,975	3,110	6,135	3,330
UU Magee	2,500	780	2,460	820	2,475	890
Stranmillis	515	835	525	855	550	850
St. Mary's	940	10	950	10	1,000	10

To prevent the identification of individuals, figures in the attached table are rounded to the nearest 5, with 0, 1 and 2 rounded to 0.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for the Economy to detail what guidance she has have given the taxi industry on social distancing.

(AQW 4399/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Health and Safety Guidance, including social distancing

Neither the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI) nor my Department are responsible for providing specific advice or direction on the application of the public health guidance on social distancing and safe working practice for the transport industry, which includes taxi companies, owners and drivers. To reiterate, these are public health matters, with specific policy responsibility for this industry residing with the Department for Infrastructure.

A safety guidance document, Covid-19: Working Through This Together, A Practical Guide to Making Workplaces Safer', is available on the NI Business Info website and has been informed by input from the Public Health Authority (PHA) and HSENI:

<https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/sites/default/files/Covid-19-Working-Through-This-Together.pdf>

There are a large number and wide variety of businesses and working environments, and an assessment of each has to be fact-specific. It is, therefore, for each business, in light of its own legal advice, to determine whether it can continue to, or start to operate in accordance with the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 and the guidance that has been produced.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for the Economy whether any financial assistance will be provided to accommodation providers registered for domestic rates and required to close due to the COVID-19 Pandemic.

(AQW 4424/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Although, the Business Support Grant schemes were only available to businesses who paid business rates, the NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund had no such criteria. The scheme was open to accommodation providers that employ between one and nine people paid via PAYE. Further information is available at <https://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk/content/coronavirus-ni-micro-business-hardship-fund>.

This is an evolving situation and my Department, along with Executive colleagues, will continue to explore all potential options to identify further means of offering support to as many local businesses as possible, including accommodation providers, during the Covid-19 pandemic.

I welcome the reopening for certain businesses within the tourism sector, dependent upon scientific and medical advice. This is an important step on the road to recovery and enabling the sector to plan ahead. My Department is working with Tourism NI to bring forward the necessary support and guidance to help tourism and hospitality sector businesses plan for social distancing and hygiene measures and aid further recovery of the sectors.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy what steps, if any, her Department and Invest NI are taking to support and strengthen the business rescue sector, in order to minimise the economic and employment damage from the economic crisis resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic and to help build a more sustainable economy for the future.

(AQW 4533/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The impact of Covid-19 is unprecedented and has had an immediate and significant impact on the Northern Ireland economy. In response to the crisis, my Department launched three schemes to support businesses during the Covid-19 pandemic with the aim of protecting jobs, preventing business closures and promoting economic recovery.

The £10,000 Small Business Support Grant Scheme provided a £10,000 grant to businesses who are in receipt of Small Business Rates Relief or Industrial Derating, and who have a Total Net Annual Value (NAV) of £15,000 or below. This scheme closed on 20 May 2020.

The £25,000 Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure Grant Scheme provided a grant of £25,000 to businesses in those sectors who have a Total NAV of between £15,001 and £51,000. This scheme closed on 20 May 2020.

The NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund opened on 20 May 2020 offering up to £10,000 of support to businesses with one to nine employees facing immediate cash flow difficulties due to Covid-19. To date over 3,500 applications have been submitted and are under consideration. Applications for this scheme closed on 12 June 2020.

To support businesses facing significant financial difficulty or insolvency the Northern Ireland Assembly passed a Legislative Consent Motion on 2 June 2020 which allowed provisions that amend Northern Ireland's insolvency and company legislation to be included in the Corporate Insolvency and Governance Bill. The amendments made by this bill will provide relief and support for companies facing financial difficulty to explore rescue and restructuring options.

Invest NI have been the key provider of advice and guidance on support available to all businesses in Northern Ireland during this difficult period with its dedicated business support helpline and management of the nibusinessinfo website. They also work closely with my Department considering a range of other support which can help feed into our recovery plan going forward. Key aspects include the potential of adopting greater digital technology through automation and e-commerce.

Our economy is now beginning to gradually, and safely, reopen. However, we now need to be clear that simply reopening the economy is not enough. We need to rebuild our economy.

The document 'Rebuilding a Stronger Economy' published by my department, sets out a framework for how this recovery can be achieved. The aims I have set for the economy will not be surprising: we need more people working in higher paying jobs. We need to build the skills of our work force and ensure that we have a regionally balanced economy where every part of NI prospers.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for the Economy what engagement there has been between her Department, or InvestNI, and Thompson Aerospace in relation to the recent job losses at the company and securing its future.

(AQW 4558/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Invest NI has maintained regular contact with Thompson Aero Seating since February 2020 on the challenges resulting from the Covid-19 pandemic. The job losses are regrettable and our thoughts remain with those workers that may lose their jobs.

Unfortunately, the current global conditions has resulted in Thompson Aero Seating having to reduce headcount. The focus remains on securing the long term success of the business and Invest NI is fully engaged with Thompson Aero Seating on process improvements of the assembly lines as well as new product concepts and skills developments, all aimed at securing the long term future of this highly innovative business.

I was in direct contact with the Company on 9 June 2020 and Invest NI will work with the local Council and the Department for Communities to establish redundancy clinics in conjunction with the company. My Career's Service will also provide support, as appropriate.

I will be meeting with a representative group of companies, large and small, from the Northern Ireland Aerospace sector on 24 June to hear from them the challenges they face in relation to COVID-19, the support required from Government, and also to discuss matters related to EU Exit that may affect the sector.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy how much income the South Eastern Regional College has received from activities within the training centre in Dublin since it commenced operation, broken down by month.

(AQW 4570/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The commercial income received to date by South Eastern Regional College from programmes at the Professional Skills Centre in Dublin has been £26,210.

A monthly breakdown of this and courses to which it relates is shown below.

Month	Programmes Delivered	Income
August 2019	DGA (Domestic Gas)	£3,463

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister for the Economy to detail (i) how many businesses within the Causeway Coast and Glens council area have been granted the £10k business support grant; and (ii) how many are still awaiting payment.

(AQW 4617/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: As of 12 June 2020, 1,925 grants under the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant scheme have been issued to businesses within the Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council area.

There are 299 small businesses in the Causeway Coast & Glens District Council area that are still awaiting a decision on their application. The remaining applications will be processed as soon as possible.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will bring forward a grant assistance scheme to support businesses with costs arising as a result of public health requirements and social distancing guidelines due to COVID-19.

(AQW 4625/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: My Department, along with Executive colleagues, continue to explore all potential options to identify further means of offering support to as many local businesses as possible during the Covid-19 pandemic.

However, to date the NI Executive and the UK Government have introduced an unprecedented number of interventions and packages of financial support to help those who have been affected by the consequences of Covid-19. These interventions have included three grant schemes brought forward by my Department.

The money provided by these schemes was provided with no stipulation on their usage and could therefore be used to offset the costs arising from following social distancing guidelines.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for the Economy to outline when activity in the housing market, including the buying and selling process, can restart.

(AQW 4649/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Minister Dodds transferred this question to the Department for Communities. This is because my Department led on work to develop proposals to amend 'The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020', to allow house moves and associated activities to take place.

I can confirm that my Department's proposals to amend the legislation were approved at the Executive meeting of the 11th June 2020 and came into effect at 11pm on the 14th June 2020.

My Department has also produced a guidance document that provides public health information to ensure that the re-opening of the housing market and key activities around this, such as viewing property, can happen safely.

The press release announcing the legislative change and providing a link to the guidance can be found here: <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/news/hargey-confirms-re-opening-housing-market>

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for the Economy, in light of the latest NISRA Women in NI findings, what steps she will take to improve employment rates amongst women.

(AQW 4678/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The “Women in Northern Ireland 2020” publication considers the different labour market experiences of women and men. A consistent feature of the labour market is higher employment and unemployment rates for males and higher inactivity rates for females. The most common reason for inactivity among women was family and home commitments.

My Department currently has a range of services and support available to help support women into employment.

- The Work Experience Programme provides funding for childcare while mothers undertake work experience placements.
- The Adviser Discretion Fund helps remove a barrier to employment by providing up to £300 for matters such as clothing for interview, tools for use in a specific occupation and Access NI checks.
- The Travel to Interview Scheme provides financial assistance to cover travel costs to attend job interviews.
- Work Coaches can provide assistance with job search activity, providing upskilling opportunities, assistance with CV development, interview skills and general confidence building to help women move into employment.
- Women may also be able to claim back up to 85% of registered childcare costs if working or having secured a job offer. Costs of £646 for one child and £1108 for 2 or more children may be reimbursed per month.

My Department has also been working on the Employability NI Initiative which will deliver a flexible new offer that addresses current labour market needs with a particular emphasis on tackling the barriers to employment faced by those who are economically inactive – this includes those with family/caring commitments. The Employability NI Initiative will deliver flexible, tailored support and labour market interventions for each individual to help them on their work and wellbeing journey. Everyone will benefit from this flexible and person centred support and ultimately it will help women (as well as others) move closer to and into employment.

My Department is currently considering its wider Post Covid-19 Recovery Plan which focuses on Labour Market Interventions using the Employability NI Initiative as a flexible delivery model.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for the Economy (i) whether her Department, as a matter of course, provided the Renewable Heat Incentive Inquiry with departmental emails which were not on the TRIM system; (ii) in what circumstances was the RHI Inquiry supplied with departmental emails which were not on the TRIM system; (iii) whether Civil Service witnesses to the RHI Inquiry, retired or otherwise, were afforded access to their emails which had not been retained on the TRIM system; and (iv) whether staff and advisers of the RHI Inquiry were advised that departmental emails may not have been retained on the TRIM system, and told that such nonetheless could be accessed, if that was the case.

(AQW 4739/17-22)

Mrs Dodds:

- (i) The Department for the Economy (DfE) as a corporate witness provided the RHI Inquiry with emails which were not on the HPRM (Hewlett Packard Records Manager, formerly known as TRIM) system.
- (ii) All Departmental officials were required to identify and provide any and all records held in relation to RHI, which included documents not on the HPRM system. These were supplied to the RHI Inquiry.
- (iii) Retired witnesses were granted access to relevant records stored on HPRM. Witnesses still working within the NICS who had personal departmental mailboxes had the facility to request that their mailboxes be restored as far back as back-up servers allowed. Some did avail of this facility.
- (iv) DfE provided the RHI Inquiry with all records held in relation to RHI, this included documents not on HPRM. Records provided which were not extracted from HPRM were marked as such.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for the Economy to detail the planned marketing budget allocation to (i) Tourism NI; and (ii) Tourism Ireland for 2020/21 in order to attract tourists following the easing of COVID-19 restrictions.

(AQW 4762/17-22)
