Mr B McCrea: It has been a long night. I note that some of the Benches are emptying. I have to say it is a great disappointment to me that the DUP, having spoken once, would not speak again, because I know there are people on the Benches who have heartfelt opinions on the matter. I also think it is disappointing that, on a matter that is discussed widely, no interventions would be taken. In fact, there was a time when the Speaker had to say, “Would the people in the back corner stop talking amongst themselves? We have to speak to the entire Chamber”.

This is an important debate. I was disappointed with some elements — maybe that is the way — but heartened by others. Actually, for what it is worth, I think it is progress that the DUP is considering some form of working party. I will look forward to seeing how that comes forward. I think it is a change in position. Yes, it may well be to do with elections, but this is a political place, so why would it not?

There are some other contributions that I want to lead on to. I thought there was a very balanced view from the UUP — from Mr Kennedy and Mr Nesbitt. I detected that, whilst it was not a change of opinion, it was certainly a consideration of the point and was put forward particularly well. When it comes to those in the SDLP, a party that is looking to bring forward new and younger people and to show some way that Northern Ireland is moving forward, I say to you that I suspect you will be disappointed in how your message is received by your younger voters. Of course, you do not care what I think, but I am entitled to give you my opinion.

When it comes to Mr Allister, this is where I start to have an issue. This is a man who undoubtedly has a great grasp of legal parlance and argument. Instead of engaging in the substance of what we are talking about, he sought to shred the amendment. He went through it saying, “This would not work”, “That would not work”, and, “That is not the correct way”, yet, time and time again, he is asked —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: Yes. In principle, would you support that stance if it could be drafted correctly?

Mr Allister: Will you give way?

Mr B McCrea: I am quite happy to let you intervene, but I will ask that question, through you, Mr Speaker, because we did not finish on it. We talked about rape. He argued that it was not possible in many cases to decide whether or not there was rape and that it would not be possible to do that within the term.

I wanted to ask him, from a legal position, whether he accepts that, if it was subsequently established that there was rape, that would be a defence for a consultant who carried out an abortion? Does he accept Regina v Bourne? Does he accept that, in 1938, when a 14-year-old girl was gang-raped by five soldiers, the eminent consultant who carried out the abortion was not convicted because of that defence. Does he accept that, if rape is established, that is a defence? It is not about whether we are able to establish it or how it is drafted because that is for the courts. In an instance where there is rape or incest, is that not a defence?

I have to say —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: I am happy to give way.

9.45 pm

Mr Allister: With respect, the confusion that is evident comes in the contradictory sentences: if there is rape, but we cannot prove it, we still call it rape. Either it is rape or it is not, and how do you know that it is rape but by due process. There is no other way of knowing that it is rape other than by due process. Otherwise, you are reduced, as Ms Lo’s amendment is, to setting the bar at an allegation of rape. So, really the only viable way forward for those of that point of view is to do what Ms Lo suggests and have an allegation of rape as being sufficient. I think that that is preposterous, but that is where your undefined amendments are taking you.

Mr B McCrea: No, you are not answering the question put to you. In the Bourne case — the Bourne exceptions — this was a legal finding. This was a finding that rape was committed. This was the definitive case in 1938, and Dr Bourne was not convicted. That was a legal finding. The rape was a legal finding. Do you accept that, in those circumstances, that finding was correct? That is what you have to decide.

Mr Allister: The Bourne —

Mr Speaker: Excuse me. Mr McCrea, I think that you might find it extremely difficult to tie down a man with the experience of Mr Allister if he does not want to be tied down. [Laughter.] I think that you are on much surer ground in this debate if you express your view. You have given us an example of an indisputable rape case and an outcome in legal terms where a termination had been carried out. I think that a ping-pong between you and Mr Allister is not going to help you, and it is certainly not going to help this debate.

Mr B McCrea: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your direction, but I will say to you that I think that I can put forward an argument. I accept that I do not have the legal training —

Mr Speaker: We are debating the amendments —

Mr B McCrea: Absolutely, Mr Speaker, but I think that I can put forward an argument on the amendment. The point that I was dealing with on the amendment was that the Member argued that this is not properly defined, and I am trying to establish whether, if it could be amended at the next stage of the Bill, that would be acceptable. I will move on having made my point.

In putting forward some other arguments, I will say that what happens in this place is that contentious debates tend to go nowhere, because they tend to be argued from black and white positions. What we have to recognise is that, in real life, there are no black and white positions: there are people; and there are tragedies. This is our responsibility. A certain Member — I think that it was this Member anyway — talked at the start about the fact that hard cases do not make good laws. Yet, on earlier amendments to the Bill, we talked about Clare’s law — I think that the Member brought forward that as well — and that is an example of where individual cases make a difference. Earlier, I heard Mr Frew talk at length about the stories of domestic violence that affected him and how that formed his opinions.

I will talk not about Sarah Ewart or her mother Jane, whom I have spoken to — I do not know whether others have done so — but about Chris and Laura, constituents of mine, who, after their 20-week scan in my local hospital, Lagan Valley, got told this rather unwelcome news: we think that there may be a problem. This is what nobody wants to hear. You are going through to your second trimester scan, and you think that everything is fine. You are getting excited, and you are told that there may be a problem.

You go to another hospital — let us call it the Ulster — and you are told, after a few days, “Actually, we think that there is a problem”. You ask, “What are the options?”. The answer is, “We cannot give you advice”. It is now 21 weeks, and you only have three weeks before you can go and get a termination within the 24-week limit. Who is going to give you advice? Who do you turn to? Nobody will give you advice, so you end up, as a mother of some children, having to get time off, having to find the money to go across to England and having to find somebody who will give you a hospital to go to, because late abortions are not that easy to find.

When you go across, and you do eventually get help, and you do have a termination because of anencephaly, you then say, "I would like to bring back my twins". Ms Lo brought the point up that the question that you are asked is, "Why do you want to bring them back?". The answer is, "Because I want to bury my children". That is why they want to bring them back. What question does the airline ask? The airline asks, "Are they in formaldehyde?". What sort of a question is that?

The only way that the couple could bring back their babies was by dressing them and putting them in a suitcase. Do you know what happened when they went to pick up that suitcase as it was going round the carousel? The suitcase fell off. Can you imagine the distress and the trauma? Do you know what would have happened if she had not gone to the Lagan Valley and the Ulster but had gone to the Royal? She would have got a termination. It would not have been an emergency position. I look at that case, and that informs me about how I would try to deal with matters humanely and sensitively.

For those of you who have declared yourselves to be Presbyterians, like Sarah Ewart and her mother, Jane, I have to say that I have never met two people who look more like Presbyterians than the two of them. They are stalwarts of the church; good people in a horrible situation. They came to this place asking for help. They came along and said, "Look, this is horrendous". It is not just a case of saying, "You can carry it for another three or four months. What does it matter?". This is deeply traumatising and an absolutely awful position to be in, and we ought to be a more humane society.

Some of the arguments that were put forward included, "We are not going to introduce the 1967 Act" and "This would be the slippery slope that we will be on". The evidence in front of the court says that there is no evidence that the law in Northern Ireland has resulted in any reduction in the number of abortions obtained by women from Northern Ireland. There are no reductions. This law in this place does not stop abortions. What it does is that it makes it more dangerous. It forces people to go and take other steps that they should not have to take. This is not the correct way forward, and it disproportionately affects people who are on lower incomes or who are from disadvantaged backgrounds. That is not the right way to go forward either.

When I look at what we might do in this place, I think of a famous comment from Mr Nesbitt. I am not chiding him, but I will just put this back to him. I suspect that this place will find itself on "the wrong side of history". This is not what the younger generation of our place wants. They look around and they see us making decisions that, frankly, they do not agree with.

You always get a little bit reluctant when you are talking about these issues, but there is an age-old saying, since we are talking about age-old sayings, and I am forced to ask myself, "I wonder what the debate would be like if men could get pregnant?". We are all standing here pontificating, saying that you can do this and can do that. It is a really serious issue, and I do not think that we are doing it properly.

On the issue about fatal foetal abnormalities, I know that I have said it before, but let me read out the judgement. This is what we are talking about. This is a legal position.

It may be challenged, but this is what we have at the moment:

"The doctors know when a foetus has an FFA. This is primarily a medical diagnosis not a legal judgment."

So for those of you who say, as I think —

Mrs McKevitt: I thank the Member, through you, Mr Speaker, for giving way.

Mr Speaker: Through me, please.

Mrs McKevitt: Yes. What is the Member's opinion of a parent given a diagnosis that their child would not survive outside the womb, but they got it wrong, and the parent is looking at and nursing their child on their knee today?

Mr B McCrea: The Member may have the advantage over me of having medical training. All that I am doing is reading from paragraph 160 from Justice Horner's judgement. If she has got an issue with his judgement that the doctors know when a foetus has got an FFA, that is something that should be taken up through the Justice Department.

My argument — the argument that was put in front of the courts; the argument that Sarah Ewart brings forward — is that there is no life to defend. That is something that is absolutely testified by medical professionals. Some people suggest, "If you don't like one doctor, you can go to another". I do not know how you do that; maybe that is what happens in the legal profession. I trust medical practitioners. If a medical practitioner says, "This is the condition", all I want is for the person to have choice. Mr McNarry made a heartfelt plea concerning a person who decides that they should carry the baby to term, and maybe it lives for one minute or maybe it does not, or whatever. Those are choices that people should have. Equally, people should have choice if they do not want to carry the baby — a baby who does not have life. The humane thing to do is not to put them on a boat to England and say, "Look after yourself"; the humane thing is to give them care and attention in their local facilities, with their family and friends around them, treat them with respect, treat them as human beings and try to make life better for them in what is a terrible, terrible situation.

I come now to the other point that we are talking about. I signed Mr Agnew's amendment, although it seems to have gone unnoticed by just about everybody, so maybe I should have kept quiet about it. I signed it just to say that we should not be standing alone. There is a lady who makes huge arguments that she is going to highlight — "expose", I think, is her terminology — those MLAs who dare to vote for fatal foetal abnormality or any of these issues at the election. Let me tell you: I am standing up here, and that is the way I am voting, because I do not think that that type of language is a good way to go forward about such a sensitive situation. If you want to put a point of view across, you are entitled to put a point of view across, but such language is destructive, uncaring, unfortunate and simply not right.

On the current law, the judgement states:

"the current law places a disproportionate burden on the victim of sexual crime. She has to face all the dangers and problems, emotional or otherwise, of carrying a foetus for which she bears no moral responsibility but is merely a receptacle to carry the child of a rapist and/or a person who has committed incest ... For many weeks after the unlawful impregnation the foetus remains incapable of an existence outside the ... womb. The law makes no attempt in those particular circumstances to balance the rights of the woman. In doing so, the law is enforcing the prohibition of abortion against an innocent victim of a crime".

That is what we should be addressing. Those are very real issues. Those are not things that should be ducked. When it comes to that in the debate, one of the things that the judge opined was that, sometimes, when it comes to these difficult decisions, we as legislators are not capable of making appropriate decisions, because we adopt fixed positions. What they say is, "Maybe the independence of the judiciary is the right way forward. Maybe we will go to the Supreme Court. Maybe we will go to the European Court of Human Rights. Maybe that is where we will sort it out". But is it not something of an indictment on us all that we cannot deal with a situation that just affects a relatively small number of people who are in distress? Would it not be better if we could argue for people's human rights to try and find a better way forward and to take on board people's concerns? I absolutely understand that people have certain objections, and they want to make sure that there are safeguards in place, but would it not be better if we could find a composite way forward?

In conclusion, I think that it is a good thing that we have had the debate. I know that some people have argued that we should not have introduced amendments at this late stage. In fact, I seem to recall in this Bill that there was that discussion early on, but, on balance, I think that it is good to talk. It is good to have the debate, and I really wish that the DUP, which, I am quite sure, has the ability to argue its case, would take part in the debate in this place. I think that we would all be the better for it.

Mr Lyttle: I echo the words of Mr McCrea in saying that I welcome the opportunity for this debate to take place this evening. It is not an issue that we get to discuss or debate often in this Assembly, yet it is an extremely important one to many people in our community. I am grateful for the opportunity to speak because I believe that people expect to hear where we stand on these matters, however difficult it is for us to adopt positions on them.

I speak this evening with the women affected by these traumatic situations that we are considering tonight close in mind. They are some of the most difficult and incomprehensible issues faced by any women and families in our community. There are difficult circumstances in which termination is permitted: when the life of the mother is at risk; and when there are risks of long-term injury to the physical or mental health of a woman. I believe that there are a significant number of people in our community who believe that fatal conditions, rape and incest should be included in that criteria. The challenge, therefore, is how do we respond to those situations?

I have not heard too many alternatives to the amendments that have been put forward this evening mentioned tonight.

We have heard from the DUP that a working group is to be formed. We await the terms of reference, membership and work plan of that working group, and we hope against hope that that will lead to positive action and outcomes on these issues. However, it is my understanding that a Department of Health termination of pregnancy working group has been in place since around 2004, and we know that, in five years of the DUP ownership of the Health Ministry, we have yet to receive clear guidelines on the issues. I think that the frustration in relation to that is exacerbated by the fact —

Mr Hamilton: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Hamilton: I heard the Member's comment or criticism, in fact, about guidelines not coming forward from the Department of Health. Will the Member reflect on the fact that, when new guidelines on the termination of pregnancy were issued by me in December 2015, one of the Ministers who replied to those guidelines was his party colleague the Minister of Justice, who said that he did not support those guidelines? Perhaps he will reflect on that fact when he is standing in the Chamber chastising me for not bringing guidelines forward.

Mr Lyttle: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am glad that —

Mr Ford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Yes, I will give way shortly. [Laughter.] Briefly, Mr Speaker, in all seriousness, I am glad that the Health Minister has found his voice on this particular issue and that we have had a response from him. The guidelines would be open to challenge and engagement from any Member of this House in order that we ensure that they are as robust as possible. Maybe if we had those published, we could engage with that. I am happy to give way to the Minister of Justice.

Mr Ford: I appreciate the Member giving way. You see what happens, Mr Speaker, when a liberal party gives freedom of conscience on an issue like this? I reassure the Member that the draft guidelines were circulated a few hours after the judgement of Mr Justice Horner, which meant that guidelines that reflected the law as it existed prior to that judgement could hardly then be said to be valid. [Interruption.]

Mr Allister: It is the law.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister of Justice for his helpful intervention. As we see from the exchanges, we need clarity on the issue. As I said, we have yet to see that in the five years that the DUP has held the Health Ministry.

I was endeavouring to be positive about the establishment of the working group. We await the terms of reference, the membership and the work plan for it, and we hope it will be able to deal with some of these issues.

In looking for alternative ways to deal with an issue that has not been addressed, despite people having the authority and responsibility to do so, we can look to the position of the Northern Ireland Committee of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. It set that out in its response to the Department of Justice's consultation on abortion, despite what some Members said this evening about a lack of consultation on the issue. As I understand it, the position set out by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists was that abortion should be a statutory option if two registered medical practitioners are of the opinion, formed in good faith, that a foetal condition has been assessed as lethal and that, yes, continuance of the pregnancy would be likely to have a detrimental impact on the health of the mother. I believe that the amendment put forward by Mr Dickson and Mr Lunn — amendment No 61 — proposes that type of statute, save a reference to the health of the mother. I have heard from the proposer of the amendment that it would be possible to consider the viability of that type of reference at Further Consideration Stage. Indeed, the Bill continues to provide scope for wider consultation on the issue, despite what some Members said.

I do not believe in the extension of the 1967 Abortion Act-style legislation. I am particularly concerned about and opposed to the provision of abortion in the case of disability. I am, like, I believe, many people in our community, sincerely sympathetic to the position that, in fatal conditions, rape and incest, abortion should be permitted. This is a significant problem. A problem appears to be that the Department of Health guidelines, which are necessary for providing medical practitioners, women and families with the clarity and care that they need and deserve, have been in abeyance since at least 2010.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Member for making reference to guidelines. Does he agree with me that, once guidelines were withdrawn and challenged, the genie was out of the bottle and that what we now need are legislative foundations to build future guidelines?

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for his intervention. It brings me back to a comment that was made, I believe, by Mrs Kelly from the SDLP. She said that the position of clinicians and experts on this was that we needed guidelines when, indeed, the opinion of experts such as the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, in its response to the DOJ consultation, was that statutory definition — the Member referred to a legislative framework — is now needed for this matter. That is an expert opinion on the issue. The time before Further Consideration Stage would allow us further engagement with that type of body on that type of issue.

Therefore, given the undue and inordinate delay in dealing with this, I will vote for amendment No 61, which was brought by Mr Dickson and Mr Lunn, on the uniquely challenging matter of fatal foetal abnormality. That is given the narrow and careful nature of the amendment and the sincere commitment to wider consultation on it.

I have said already that I am sincerely sympathetic, as I believe many in our community are, to the position that abortion should be an option available in cases of rape and incest. I think that Mr McCrea outlined how, even under the current law, abortions have been provided in cases of rape.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: I would like to make some progress and then I will give way. Whilst I am voting for the narrow and carefully detailed amendments on fatal foetal abnormality and the wider consideration given to that, I do not yet feel fully able to vote for the amendments with regard to the grave circumstances of rape and incest. I must give credit to my colleague Ms Lo for the way in which she put forward her contribution on that issue this evening. I think that it places a responsibility on all of us, as Members of the Assembly, to continue to work together with our community and our professional bodies to ensure that our law and guidelines better respond to those most serious circumstances. I am happy to give way.

Mr Allister: The Member referred to the evolution of the law. Of course, in the Bourne case — we did not quite get that discussion finished — the defence was not based on the fact that it was rape; in fact, it was a gang rape. The defence was based on the abortion being justified because of the resulting impact on the health of the mother, which, of course, fits very neatly with our existing law, which states that it is not an offence if the life or the long-term health of the mother is at severe risk. That is what Bourne was about. It was not because it was a rape; it was about the effect on the health of the mother.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for his intervention. There are other serious conditions that our clinicians clearly do not feel that they have been provided with the clarity and the tools to respond to at this time. I believe that we have a responsibility to act rather than to delay any further, and that is why I have taken the position that I have outlined today.

Mr McCallister: In looking at this issue and listening to the debate, I have huge respect for colleagues. This tests all our consciences because of personal circumstances or issues of faith. I think that it is important — in fact, it is hugely significant — that we are having this debate without a petition of concern. In the UK, we have a great tradition in parliamentary democracy of having votes on issues of conscience like this, and I think that this is an important marker to set down.

This is an issue that I think about and reflect on. This month six years ago, my wife and I got the great news that we were expecting our first child. We have subsequently gone on to have three pregnancies and three healthy children. We had midwife-led care through the NHS, and everything went very well. That was our experience. Like many colleagues in the House, we know the huge joy that children bring to our lives and, for some of us, the huge joy that grandchildren bring to the lives of colleagues here. However, the debate and the amendments that we are talking about relate to times when individuals or families are faced with what can only be described as absolute human tragedy, when you are given a diagnosis and your joy turns to great alarm and sadness. I would not wish that on anyone. I just hope that I am never faced with that set of circumstances or ever have to even think about what our reaction as a family would be. I do not want to have to do that and I do not want anyone else to have to do that.

We listened to the stories of women, who, like Sarah Ewart, came forward to tell their stories. That is an incredibly courageous thing to do. There are few things that you will ever talk about in the public square that are more personal than that experience. There are few things that are more personal that you will have to deal with and truly bare your soul on. That is why the amendment on fatal foetal abnormality is hugely important.

The one thing that I recognise and say to colleagues who oppose to the amendment is that it is about giving a choice to a family in a very difficult set of circumstances. It is not saying that they must do one thing or the other, and it builds in support that we would want to see. Many families might take the option of going to full term and might find some crumb of comfort in having a minute, two minutes or 10 minutes with their child. That might help with the grieving process for that family. All that Mr Dickson and Mr Lunn's amendment is suggesting is that, for some people, we might offer that choice, that support and that ability to deal with it here, at home, in a hospital that is close to their family, and not have to move the problem. That would be a huge step forward in dealing with a tragedy in as compassionate a way as we can and building in the supports that all of us would want to see, whatever choice that mother or that family might make. That is something that we have to recognise.

Like Mr Agnew, I would have preferred for it to be seen as a health issue rather than through the criminal law. I find it somewhat disturbing that the laws that we are seeking to amend are 150 and 70 years old. They seem so far removed from life in 2016, not just in Northern Ireland but probably anywhere in the world.

We are addressing tragedies, no more so than in the case of rape and incest. If we cast our minds back to a number of years ago, there was a case in the Republic of Ireland — I think that it was called the x case — of a young woman, who was maybe 14 years of age and who the state, at one time, was going to force to stay. I find that a difficult thing to defend or to say that that was the right decision. I accept that there are concerns, as Mr Allister said, about how you prove it. I, for one, am prepared to trust women on that. That is something that we have to do.

Standing here, I am acutely aware that I am a 40-something man who is talking about the rights of women. I do not have hugely liberal views on abortion on demand; I am not a supporter of it. I would much prefer to see our Departments working much harder on sex education and making sure that we drive down unplanned pregnancies and the need for abortions. What the amendments are about is us showing, in very limited circumstances, some compassion to people who are at an absolutely heart-wrenching point in their lives. That is why we have to support them.

As for the arguments that it is not the right way of doing it and that it is not the right time, we have had the debate for many years and have wrestled with it. Mr McGimpsey was the Minister of Health when the Department first brought in guidelines. Those guidelines were judicially reviewed, and the Department lost on two quite minor issues. Then we went into a new Administration, and more guidelines were produced. When the judgement came out there were even more guidelines. This is a crisis of governance in Northern Ireland. We have, to his credit, a Minister of Justice who has tried to get some of these issues through the Executive. I think that this deserves to come before the House as stand-alone legislation with Committee scrutiny through which we could bring all the experts, clinicians and legal people together to give evidence. So far, however, in the Executive, we have had a collective inability to agree legislation, and indeed can barely agree on much more than a consultation. In addition, we have a collective inability to get guidelines out or to get agreement on what they should be.

The First Minister and the Minister of Health have announced that a working group is to be set up. I am prepared to count that as a genuine effort to find a way forward, and I hope that I am not proven wrong. I hope that it is a genuine effort. If these amendments are to fall tonight, I would regret it, but if it is a genuine effort, let us all set ourselves the task of finding some way to deal with these issues that lie at the core of circumstances that have limited outcomes. Let us see how we can find a way to deal with that in our health service.

Some people are worried that this will open the floodgates. This crisis has been created in Northern Ireland by a combination of previous guidelines, court cases and the fact that, 10 to 12 years ago, these cases were being dealt with in a way that still met the current view of the law. We trusted our clinicians to do that, but we got to a point by the 2013 guidelines, whereby we had closed the doors on clinicians making any decisions on this. That is something that we need to address. I am supportive of Mr Dickson and Mr Lunn's amendment on the very specific issue of fatal foetal abnormality.

It is very hard to defend cases involving rape and incest, such as that which occurred in the Republic of Ireland a number of years ago, or the case of a 14-year-old who became pregnant by a relative. I say that as someone who has three children. I know the joy that children bring to a family home, and this is not something that I ever want to be faced with. I am, however, aware that I am a man speaking about the rights of women. Let us all set ourselves the task of engaging meaningfully with Mr Hamilton's working group so that, if it does report in six months, maybe this time next year we can look at creating meaningful legislation that will help some other families not to have to face the agony and public exposure that Sarah Ewart had to.

Ms Sugden: This is probably the hardest decision that I will ever make as a politician. Certainly, up until this point, it will be the hardest decision that I have ever made. My journey to making this decision began a year ago when these proposals were put on the table by the Justice Minister. Initially I did not know what it was or really understand it, but a constituent came into my office — she was a girl whom I had worked with when we were younger — and explained that the child she had conceived had been diagnosed with encephalopathy. I was not sure what that was.

The way in which she put the argument to me, and I will put it to Members, is that she had a child — a son who she brought to me — and that the child that she conceived was very much wanted in order to give her son a brother or a sister. At her 20-week scan, anencephaly was diagnosed, and she asked what it was, because it is something that many young women would not have known about. The doctor told her that, essentially, her child did not have a head. She immediately took it as a miscarriage, and she was prepared to deal with it in that way. However, the doctor told her that she would have to carry the child to term or make the trip across the water to have an abortion. She could not believe that; she could not understand that the country that she lived in and the Government that was supposed to protect her rights and interests was not there to support her in this decision.

That is where the failure is. Tonight, I do not think that we should be asking MLAs to trust women; we should be asking women to trust MLAs. If a woman came to me and asked, "Can we trust our MLAs?", as one, I would say, "No, we cannot, because we are failing you". We are failing them on both sides of the argument, to be fair.

One of the arguments that I took on board when I was lobbied by the Evangelical Alliance is that, when a woman is faced with this decision, because there is such a fear among the medical profession, it is almost directed towards the clinical way of going, so there is no psychological support around that. It is probably skewed a little bit towards having an abortion. That is the only option, because right now in our health system — I am willing to be corrected on this — we do not have any support for that decision.

Equally, women who feel that they can carry to term a child with a condition as severe as a fatal foetal abnormality should be very much supported in doing that. However, women who, with all the support in the world, have said that they cannot carry that child to term, for whatever reason, should be supported too, but they are not. Whether you agree with abortion or not, women are travelling from Northern Ireland across the water to have terminations. In my constituent's personal experience, she said that she was made to feel like she was doing something wrong. She was wheeled in and out like a number, and the whole process and experience took less than a couple of hours. She had to get on a plane back to Northern Ireland that night, and she did not have any opportunity to grieve in the way that she should have been allowed to had this facility been available over here. So, we failed her; we really did. Equally, we are failing people who want to carry the child to term, and that is not good enough.

I commend the proponents of all the amendments for bringing them tonight, because we are talking about it. I have no doubt in my mind that the First Minister would not have proposed a working group had this amendment not been tabled. This is a reaction; it is not an action —

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Ms Sugden: — but it is getting us talking. Contrary to all of the above, I am disappointed that we have had to do it in this way. I understand the argument that we have been discussing this for a year and that the Justice Minister tried to table it at the Executive. However, probably because of the lack of being brave, the Executive did not want to push this issue. So it has been tabled by party colleagues. Do I agree with it? Not entirely; I do not really like the wording. I have significant reservations, particularly in relation to the comments that Mr Allister made. Further to his information, I looked it up, and I discovered that disability is defined as a condition that will be life-limiting up to 12 months or is one whereby children are severely deformed. That rationale suggests that this could be contrary to our disability legislation.

10.30 pm

That concerns me. It concerns me that we are going to find ourselves back here again, debating this, because we did not get it right, and we did not do it by the right vehicle. I will be really honest; in the year of my journey, most particularly in the past two weeks, I have changed my mind so often on this. I have changed my mind throughout the debate, to the extent that I do not know what to do. I do not know what to do that is right, and that leads me to say that I will probably not support this amendment.

Not because I do not agree that we should be supporting women; we should. I welcome the fact that this debate has been put on the table, and the largest party has said that it will try to bring forward a working group on it, but I need a better commitment than that. Ideally, I would like a Programme for Government commitment on that. The junior Minister is here, and if she wishes to do that, or if any of the political parties in here want to do that, then to me, that is the solid proof that you are actually going to tackle this and you are not going to put it on the back burner because it is too dirty an issue to tackle. We have to be brave because it is our job to be brave, and we are the voice of the people of Northern Ireland.

People ask me, "Claire, you are a young woman, what would you do?". Honestly? I cannot really answer that. I imagine that I probably would not terminate the child, if I am really honest, but I cannot say that without being in that situation and knowing that feeling. But that is me. It is not about me; it is about the people of Northern Ireland. I am here as a representative, and if a woman says to me that she really cannot carry a child to term, who am I to say that she has to? So that is why I think we need to be realistic about changing the law in this respect. I will be honest, I do not like these amendments because I do not think it is the right vehicle to do it. But I do think that we should do it as soon as possible, and I really do look forward to doing that.

Mr Speaker: Order Members. I think it may now be appropriate to take a short comfort break. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 10:45 pm. The next speaker will be the Minister. The sitting is, by leave, suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 10.32 pm.

The sitting resumed at 10.45 pm.

Mr Ford: In December 2013, I said in public that we needed to consider whether it should be lawful for women to have an abortion in circumstances where there is no chance of a foetus being delivered and having a viable life. I said that after the Health Minister announced that guidance under the current law could not address abortion for fatal foetal abnormality. I said that I would conduct a full and proper consultation on changes to the criminal law and, in 2014, I launched such a consultation. In 2015, I responded in some detail to that and published proposals to change the law. In June last year, I asked the Executive for agreement to introduce those legislative proposals. I asked again in July, and then in December at the very first opportunity following suspension of the structures during the talks. Last month, I offered a further paper in response to a request from Executive colleagues for updated information. That was ostensibly to inform discussion at a future Executive meeting.

That clearly illustrates where I stand in relation to progressing my policy objective to change the law on fatal foetal abnormality. That is also why we are here today debating Back-Bench amendments, rather than scrutinising an agreed legislative proposal from a Minister that represents over two years of departmental work.

I hardly need to restate my position, which I have stated many times in the past few years. The law needs to change to allow women to consider the option of an abortion when faced with the devastating circumstances of carrying a foetus that has no prospect of independent survival. Clearly, that is only an option based on the opinion of two doctors. It is not an issue of disability; it is an issue of independent survival.

I am glad that the Assembly has finally been allowed an opportunity to debate the issue — well, at least to discuss it. I am also glad to have the chance to dispel some of the myths surrounding what the amendment proposed by Trevor Lunn and Stewart Dickson would do and what my policy would aim to do. Frankly, we need to expose some of the more unrealistic interpretations for what they are, which is nonsense. We need to stop the rhetoric, stop the posturing and start engaging positively and actually look at the facts.

First, the amendment that stands in the names of my colleagues and my departmental policy position will never allow for termination unless the condition is fatal. That does not include Down's syndrome, cleft palate, club foot or a disability of any nature unless the condition is incompatible with life outside the womb.

Secondly, doctors can and do diagnose when a foetal condition is fatal on a daily basis. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists assured me of that and, indeed, the chair of the Northern Ireland committee of the college referred in an interview with the BBC last year to patients who have a fatal foetal abnormality. So much for the suggestion that they do not recognise the term.

Thirdly, there will be no pressure put on women to agree to have a termination. That is just scaremongering and, frankly, it is an insult to doctors, nurses and midwives.

Fourthly, no guidelines on the current law will provide the necessary provision for any doctor to terminate a pregnancy for reasons of fatal foetal abnormality. That can be achieved only by making a change to the law similar to that proposed in amendment No 61. Guidelines must reflect what the law says, which, in line with the Bourne judgement, is that termination is an option only to save the life of the mother or to prevent risk of serious long-term mental or physical damage.

Those are the facts. They are not opinions, party lines or skewed interpretations. Those are the simple facts. I believe that we owe it to the women whose stories have come to light over the past few years to treat this issue with honesty, sincerity, compassion, truthfulness and reason.

Mr Agnew has indicated that he will not move his amendments so, in effect, we are discussing amendment Nos 61 and 68. The principle behind amendment No 61 is clear. The proposers of amendment No 61 believe that the law should exempt from prosecution any medical professional who performs a termination or any woman who has a termination in the case of a fatal foetal abnormality, and I agree with them.

Some questions have been raised during the debate regarding the detail of the proposal and how the clause would operate in practice. With some of those questions in mind, and with a number of more technical drafting issues that have been pointed out to me, I intend, if the clause stands part of the Bill, and with the advice of legislative counsel, to bring at Further Consideration Stage amendments to ensure legislative clarity. I have been assured that that is quite possible. Part of the proposed clause contains provision for matters that are not strictly for the Justice Minister but which deal with health issues and the delivery of services to women. I want to hear from the Health Minister on that.

I want to touch on amendment No 68, tabled by Anna Lo. My consultation considered the issue of access to termination for women who were victims of rape or incest. It sought views and responses to 16 questions relating to whether the law should be changed in this regard and how such a change might be made. Those questions remained largely unanswered, and the Department is of the view that the complexities are such that it is not possible to make proposals to exempt cases of rape and incest. Therefore, I cannot support the amendment on rape and incest at this time.

I notified the First Minister and the deputy First Minister that I intend to support the modest but vital change to the law proposed by amendment No 61. I want to ensure that Sarah Ewart, and others in her circumstances, will never again have to face the prospect, potentially at over 20 weeks of pregnancy, of travelling to England, possibly alone and unsupported, without the medical team that cared for them, for an inevitably late-term abortion, with all the complication that that brings. I hope that others will share that aim.

I recognise that this is a difficult issue. I believe that it is a difficult issue for many who will walk through the Ayes Lobby with me this evening, and we should not underestimate that. We heard significant personal contributions from Members. It is an issue that many of us would have wished never to have to consider, just as, frankly, it is an issue that some women, and their husbands, partners and families wished had never come to their door.

During the departmental consultation, I received personal letters, and some made a significant impression on me. There were heartfelt statements from women who faced a diagnosis of fatal foetal abnormality, continued to full term and felt a measure of comfort because they delivered a baby, even if it survived for only a few minutes. Nothing in what I seek to do would stop that being made available to a woman who wishes to proceed to full term, and there must be full medical care for those who are in those circumstances.

I also received two letters from members of the clergy, each describing the pastoral care of a woman who faced a diagnosis of fatal foetal abnormality and felt that she could not contemplate continuing with the pregnancy. Those two sides illustrate the sensitivity of this issue for many people.

In opening this section of the debate, Mrs Pengelly talked about compassion and love. She also talked about consultation, so I think that we should look at the history of where we have been over the last few years. On 12 March 2013, an amendment was proposed at Further Consideration Stage of the Criminal Justice Bill — the last conceivable stage — to make pregnancy terminated in premises not operated by a Health and Social Care trust a criminal offence. There was no consultation whatsoever and no opportunity, had it passed, to make any further amendments had there been issues with it.

On 23 April, following discussions on that, I met the Minister of Health to discuss the issue of termination of pregnancy and the regulation of private clinics. I wrote to him on 2 August suggesting a joint consultation on issues relating to termination of pregnancy. On 8 October, I wrote again with a summary outline for a joint consultation. Ironically, that was one day before the story of Sarah Ewart featured in the media.

On 16 October, one week after the issue became public through Sarah Ewart, the Health Minister announced that he would bring revised draft guidelines to the Executive within a matter of weeks to deal with the issue of termination of pregnancy in the case of fatal foetal abnormality. On 2 December, he wrote to the Executive stating that that issue could not be addressed by guidance, and that guidance could only reflect the law — a point that I made a few minutes ago — and that would require amendment to the criminal law.

On 5 December 2013, I announced my intention to consult on changes to abortion law. From January onwards, there were discussions between various people on how that might be defined. On 28 March 2014, I shared a first draft of the consultation paper with officials in DHSSPS. There were responses from them. On 16 May, I wrote to the Health Minister with a draft consultation paper suggesting that it would be best done as a joint consultation paper by the two Departments, given that there were issues which spanned Health and Justice. On 1 October 2014, I shared a draft consultation with a justice paper, having had no reply from the Health Minister about doing a consultation. On 8 October, that consultation paper was issued. The consultation closed on 17 January 2015.

On 16 April, I issued the response to the consultation and policy proposals. On 1 June, that was conveyed in an Executive paper seeking approval to draft a Bill on the law on fatal foetal abnormality. That Executive paper was refreshed on 1 July. After lengthy delays through the summer and autumn, I invoked the three-meeting rule to request that it be tabled at the next available Executive meeting, which was 10 December. I am grateful to Stephen Farry and Carál Ní Chuilín for supporting me in that request. On 30 November, we had the ruling in the High Court from Mr Justice Horner about incompatibility with article 8 of the ECHR. That afternoon, a further draft paper was issued about guidelines from DHSSPS. On 10 December, the Executive discussed my paper and agreed to give it further consideration after final determination. On 25 January, I sent a further paper to the Executive responding to a request for an update. Yesterday, on 9 February, the day before this debate, there was an announcement by the DUP of a commission to look at the issue.

Mr Speaker, we have had a long period of time in which any genuine consultation or discussion of the issues was rejected by the Health Minister and other DUP Ministers. I must say that the coincidence of timing with regard to a number of factors and the way in which these things have been addressed suggests to me that there is little to assure us that there is a genuine intention to consult. That could have been done at any time over the last year-plus, and it has not happened. I really have some doubts as to why it was proposed yesterday.

I noticed that Mrs Pengelly said that we should listen to the experts. Then, she said that there was no such term as “FFA”, despite the fact that I have already highlighted that it is a term used by the Northern Ireland chair of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. It is clear that it covers a number of conditions. It is not a single medical condition. She also said that we should take time to be informed. How long does it take? It has taken from late 2013 for people to be informed enough to produce a specious argument like that today.

Mrs Kelly, in her contribution, quoted extensively around the 1967 Act as it applies in GB, but amendment No 61 is far more precise, and offers were made by the proposer to make it more precise. I have made it clear that I believe that it would need to be made more precise at Further Consideration Stage if it were to pass. Nonetheless, it sets the basic tone, which is solely around fatal foetal abnormality and nothing else. Again, to talk about guidelines is talking only about defining the current law.

I notice that Mr Kennedy, in his contribution, started off by referring to his membership of the Presbyterian Church, which I should, perhaps, also declare. To the best of my knowledge, the last time that this issue was considered by the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church was as far back as 1982, when there was reference to accepting the concept of abortion in what I believe was termed “gross malformation of the foetus”. That sounds to me actually extraordinarily like what is currently being proposed in amendment No 61 and ties in with the policy proposals that I had made. Indeed, my feelings that I was in line with the stated position of the Church were reinforced by a recent conversation that I had with a former moderator, though I must say that I do agree with the specific point that Mr Kennedy ended on, which was that the issue of a foetus that is conceived by sexual crime and has a prospect of viable life is very different from the concept of a foetus with fatal abnormality.

11.00 pm

I do not know whether I need to repeat the point I made in my intervention to Mr McKinney about the consultation process, but I probably should, just to get it clearly on the record at this stage. The consultation process from the Department had recommendations on fatal foetal abnormality and sought opinions on sexual crime. On the basis of that, I made further recommendations on FFA and there were no easy recommendations to make on sexual crime.

Some examples were given, and although I accept that the words “likely to prove fatal” are perhaps problematic and should be addressed at Further Consideration Stage, things like the use of a ventilator, which is not necessarily relevant in all the conditions we are talking about, do not improve the chances of survival. It may prolong the brief time, but it does not improve the chances. It was also quoted that the Royal College said that it is not possible to draw a line around the survival time. Yes, I accept that. If Members had looked at the detail of the consultation that was done by my Department, they would have seen that that was one of the issues that was considered. It was considered that it is not a realistic option, but it is realistic for two doctors to say that there is no prospect of a viable life and that the precise timing, whether it is minutes, hours or a day or two, is not relevant to that.

Again, in the spirit of agreement, just as I agreed with Danny Kennedy, I will agree with Fearghal McKinney that there are major problems with establishing whether a crime has taken place if we are talking about sexual crime. That is why I have to say to Anna Lo, Steven Agnew and Basil McCrea that I cannot agree with them on the amendments that they sought to table on sexual crime. I also say to Anna that, whilst I fully accept the graphic description she gave of the work she did with the police as an interpreter some time ago, as a result of an initiative by the PSNI and the Department of Health, at least the Rowan sexual assault referral centre is operating in Antrim hospital. One of the key treatments there is to allow somebody access to emergency contraception in whatever circumstances they are in, and that at least ensures that pregnancy is less likely.

I think I probably answered most of the points that Mr Allister made, to my satisfaction if not to his, though he did suggest that I had perhaps shopped around for legal advice. I do not think that comment is particularly worthy of a barrister and a QC to boot. He knows how these matters are accessed.

Mr McNarry concerned me when he referred significantly to the concept of the slippery slope. Let me make it absolutely clear: there is no slippery slope as far as I am concerned, nor do I believe that amendment No 61 will lead to one. From my discussions with Stewart Dickson and Trevor Lunn, I know that is not their intention. The slippery slope is a concept that some people wish to flag up as though it is an inevitable consequence. This is a modest significant change. One might say that, when the Bourne judgement was delivered in the court — technically the Bourne direction to the jury — that might have been interpreted as a slippery slope because, prior to that, it might have been said that only an imminent risk to the mother’s life was grounds for abortion. The Bourne judgement extended that to risk to long-term health and welfare. It did not open up the floodgates or create a slippery slope. It was not the thin end of the wedge. It was a narrow definition that dealt with a small number of cases, just as amendment No 61 is a narrow definition that deals with a small number of cases of FFA. It is not, as Mr McNarry and Claire Sugden said, about imperfection. It is about fatal abnormality with no prospect of viable life. I think that those who talked about imperfections as though this is seeking to provide abortion in the case of any disability have not read the amendment and are doing a significant disservice to the limited proposal that is being made.

Mr McNarry: In your opinion.

Mr Ford: Like most people in the House, I give my opinion, but I give it honestly after a period of detailed consideration with the resources of the Department of Justice behind me.

I welcome the comments made by a number of Members. I did not name them because they were largely agreeing with me, at least on amendment No 61, though some would have gone further. For the sake of the record, I should thank Caitriona Ruane, Mike Nesbitt, Kieran McCarthy, Chris Lyttle, Basil McCrea, Steven Agnew, Anna Lo and John McCallister for their support on at least amendment No 61.

The fact that the Ulster Unionist Party was able to provide two Members who eloquently argued contradictory positions is at least something for which that party should be complimented on — its ability to allow freedom of conscience.

In closing, I must make my position clear and emphasise that it is my personal position, although it does appear to coincide with at least the majority, if not the unanimity, of my party colleagues. I favour legislation to allow for abortion in cases of fatal foetal abnormality. I accept that amendment No 61 is not the finished article. It was drafted with assistance in the Assembly by private Members, not with the normal process of legislative counsel, but my advice is that it requires minor amendment by legislative counsel, which can be made relatively easily, to make it fully competent and that the principle of what is in amendment No 61 is absolutely correct and can be turned into a finely crafted amendment at a later stage. I must also say that I believe that the consultation carried out by my Department aired all the issues for those who wished to engage in it, and I must also make it clear that I will not be supporting amendment No 68 and would not have supported any of the other amendments that seek to deal with sexual crime.

This is, I accept, a serious moral issue for Members. It has kept us much longer than any other group of amendments to the Bill, and it taken us to a late hour. I would like to see Members in a few minutes’ time deciding this issue by exercising their individual right of conscience and walking through whatever Lobby is right for them and not be subject to a whip, either for or against. There are people who tonight will go through the Noes Lobby as I go through the Ayes Lobby for whom I have significant respect. I will respect them because I will know that they are voting in line with their conscience, but I find it very difficult to hear talk about yet another consultation from those who have refused the opportunities to engage in consultation up to now over a period of years.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Minister give way for one second?

Mr Ford: Sure.

Mrs D Kelly: I want to make it clear that our party has not been whipped. The Members here will be going through the Lobbies on the matter of their conscience.

Mr Lunn: What about the Members who are not here?

Mr Ford: As Mr Lunn said, we will see about the Members who are not here. I note what Mrs Kelly has said.

I also find it very difficult to take talk about due process from those who, on a previous occasion, produced an equally significant amendment at Further Consideration Stage, where there had been no consultation whatsoever as opposed to amendment No 61, based on the consultation of the Department of Justice. I find it quite difficult to take the serious misrepresentation being made that a modest amendment dealing solely with fatal foetal abnormality is being dressed up by some Members as if it were the 1967 Act by the back door.

I believe that amendment No 61 provides compassion for women, their partners and their families who find themselves in dreadful circumstances, including, I have no doubt, some who are facing that in Northern Ireland at this moment as we talk. I believe that it is entirely within our competence, and I am quite happy for that competence to be tested by the Supreme Court if necessary. I believe that, with a minor amendment at Further Consideration Stage, it could provide legislation that would improve the welfare of women who feel incapable of carrying to full term foetuses with fatal abnormality whilst also providing full support to those women who wish to carry to full term. I commend amendment No 61 to the House.

Mr Lunn: The hour is late, and we have all had a long sit. I do not intend to detain you unnecessarily for too long, but I do have a few things to say, although the Minister has stolen my thunder to some extent. That is fine; he is my boss.

First, I thank all the Members who contributed to the debate. It has been quite calm. I know that there have been some disagreements, but it has been reflective and constructive. We clearly have major differences of opinion across the House, but that is OK. It has also demonstrated that this is an issue of conscience for the Alliance Party, because so many of my colleagues wanted to speak. They have expressed, to greater or lesser degrees, some reservations about this matter, but I think that they are, probably, all on board and would like to go forward with, as many people have said, a few minor alterations, because, frankly, that is all that amendment No 61 needs. I think that it is competent as it stands, but there are differences of opinion over a word here and a word there, particularly "likely", which I notice was mentioned quite a bit. We have been advised by legal counsel that "likely", in these circumstances, is the most suitable word to use. It is the most suitable to give the medical profession the small degree of flexibility that it would need in these circumstances, because medical diagnosis, as surely we all know, is not an exact science. Every day, clinicians make decisions, which could sometimes be wrong, but, mostly, I hope, are right; I am sure they are. All of them are made genuinely and, as the amendment refers to, made "in good faith". I will come back to that shortly.

Mr Dickson, when he so ably presented the amendment, demonstrated a case of a young lady, as we all know, Sarah Ewart. I want to give brief details of another case. Forgive me if some of you have had the same letter that I have. I will not make it too graphic. I will pick out bits of the letter that came from a couple. The couple stated:

"It was clearly visible on the screen that our baby's internal organs, the stomach, the liver and the intestines, were growing outside of his body, a condition called exomphalos. We also learned that our child had cysts on the brain and that there was a strong chance that this could be linked to a severe chromosomal defect. We then learned that our son had Edwards syndrome full trisomy 18. This condition in itself is incompatible with life, and together with the other condition, the cysts on the brain and the fact that his lungs could not develop because of a lack of space created in his abdomen, and the fact that he had already shown signs of reduced growth, meant his outlook was devastating and inevitable. The only option that was given to us by the Ulster Hospital was to continue on with the pregnancy, even knowing that the prognosis was fatal."

The couple went on to say:

"I'd say that choice was the only simple part, because even getting information about accessing a termination was near impossible. I watched the tortured expression on our midwife's face as she told us that she could not give us any details about accessing a termination, not even a phone number. She and a consultant expressed their own disgust at the situation we found ourselves in but told us that she could not legally give us any help."

To cut a long story short, the inevitable happened, and the couple had to travel to England, at huge expense, to have a procedure that should have been done here. That is the point of our amendment.

There has been a lot of talk about compassion here tonight. A lot of Members have used the word "compassion". Some of them, I believe, used it in the correct way. Ms Ruane, Mr Nesbitt and others have expressed compassion. Others, and I mean no disrespect to Mrs Kelly or Mrs Pengelly, have expressed heartfelt sympathy and compassion, I think, in one case. Mrs Pengelly started her address with the assertion that the DUP is a compassionate party. Demonstrate it. Demonstrate it. It is one thing to say it, but it is another thing to demonstrate it. When you hold the view that what happened to the lady I have just described is what you want, show me the compassion in that. I do not get it. I do not see it. I do not believe it. It is not a compassionate attitude — [Interruption.] If anybody wants to intervene at any time, please, just say so. I really have difficulty with that.

Our amendment has been well trawled over. I do not wish to go through it again. I am tempted to, but I am not going to. Let us look at one part of the amendment.

Two medical practitioners have formed an opinion as described in subsection 1. This is a diagnosis that there is virtually no hope of life outside the womb, and if a live birth should occur, there is no medical treatment that could be offered to alter the fatal nature or improve the chance of survival. That poor woman in that situation must be given a clinical assessment of the potential impact on her life of continuing or terminating the pregnancy.

11.15 pm

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lunn: Yes.

Mr McKinney: I have been sitting for a moment thinking about your words, and I feel that the two people that you refer to probably feel unable to speak on their own behalf in that regard because it is difficult to talk about and defend your compassion. I have to say that, when people come to this Chamber and they reflect their opinions, they come with their bona fides intact. We can take political views from that, but, in this context and given the nature of the remarks that Mrs Kelly and Mrs Pengelly made, I think that the House should accept that they spoke with compassion.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Lunn: I hear some “hear, hears”. I do not agree. I do not doubt for one minute that, in their normal lives, Mrs Pengelly and Mrs Kelly — one of whom I know very well, the other less so — are normally compassionate people. I am talking about their —

Mr Weir: You are very gracious.

Mr Lunn: I am. What I am doing is contrasting what they have said tonight with the attitude of their parties. Let me put it that way, if that helps. Their parties are not showing compassion to people in a desperate situation.

Let me move on. I want to talk about the guidelines, or the fact that there are no guidelines. The Minister gave us the chronological order of all that has happened in this respect. Basically, after all these years, we do not have guidelines. I believe that there may be draft guidelines, but I have not seen them and the House has not seen them. They were circulated to Executive Ministers on a confidential basis.

Mr Hamilton: Are you on the Executive?

Mr Lunn: If you want to intervene, stand up. They were circulated on a confidential basis to Executive Ministers. I have not seen them. Frankly, I doubt if they are worth the paper that they are written on, because of where they are coming from. I will link that to the suggestion, which miraculously appeared yesterday, that we are going to have a commission to look at all the issues on this matter. The commission, apparently, will be composed of people outside this Assembly who will be charged to report back within six months, which is conveniently past the election date. I am not the first one to surmise that there is some connection there. It will also be charged to perhaps come back with draft legislation. Who are the legislators here? Is it some civilian group set up under the auspices of the Health Minister to come back with draft legislation on a matter that is more to do with the criminal law? Other people have said that they are prepared to give this a fair run to see what the outcome is. I have to take that view as well. [Laughter.] I know that it sounds cynical, but really —

Mr Dickson: I thank Mr Lunn for giving way. We really have to examine the whole issue of what was proposed yesterday. If my memory serves me right, the press statement from the leader of the DUP — not from the First Minister — said that the DUP had requested the Health Minister to convene that. That seems to me to be a rather party political decision, rather than a decision of the First Minister. It does not seem to me to hold a great deal of validity, and it would have validity if it were this Assembly voting tonight to set that up and for us and this Assembly to be setting the terms of reference. I am certainly uncomfortable with the DUP setting the terms of reference.

Mr Lunn: The Member makes the point for me, so I will move on to something else.

Mr Dickson: Sorry.

Mr Lunn: No, it is fine. I do not mind.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lunn: Yes.

Mrs D Kelly: I just have one question for the Alliance Party. If it was so keen and adamant in wanting to bring forward legislation around abortion, why did it not put it in the Bill? Why has it done it by the back door, through amendments?

Mr Lunn: I thank Mrs Kelly for her intervention. The back-door reference is complete nonsense, as everybody else knows. We are perfectly entitled to bring forward an amendment. The Minister has already made the point that, on the previous Justice (No. 1) Bill two years ago, the DUP did exactly the same thing at Further Consideration Stage. Do not lecture us about that. If we dug down far enough, we would find that every party in the House — [Interruption.] — I wish that people behind me would shut up. [Laughter.] I hope that it is not my party.

If we trawl through the records, we would find that every party, at one time or another, has been guilty of doing exactly the same thing.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. Is that not exactly what the Consideration Stage and Further Consideration Stage are for? They are for those of us who are not in the Government to bring forward amendments to legislation. Otherwise, we might as well do everything by accelerated passage.

Mr Lunn: Again, I am getting well used to people making my point for me. It is grand.

I will move on to Mr Allister’s point. I do not generally lock horns with barristers; they are far too clever for me. I always listen with respect and interest when Mr Maginness, Mr Allister or the First Minister, as a solicitor, speaks. I have to take notice. However, I can remember an occasion, when we were discussing the Education and Skills Authority (ESA) Bill a couple of years ago, when a very learned barrister told me that that Bill contained a clause that meant that the Irish language would have to be taught in every grammar school in Northern Ireland. He could not point it out to me, but he said that it was there. That tempered my respect, slightly; but I respect the two gentlemen, one of whom is before me and the other behind. I say that, with respect to what could happen to a foetus with a disability. The notion has been put about tonight that the amendment could somehow lead to the destruction of children who would be capable of a healthy life. Do you trust doctors or not? How many people asked that question tonight? Doctors would be charged, in the terms of the amendment, to make a diagnosis that there is no chance of healthy life. Suddenly, however, we have talk about eugenics.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lunn: Yes.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr A Maginness: The day before yesterday, I met senior clinicians who deal with these specific issues. They said to me directly —

Mr Speaker: Will you share your learned comments —

Mr A Maginness: They said to me directly that they cannot possibly predict. It is simple as that; they cannot predict. They are the top people and that is what they are saying. They said that they are opposed to these clauses, particularly clause 61. It is as simple as that.

Mr Speaker: Will you clarify for me, given that we have to consider what others are saying, was that describing the precise moment when life would expire, or was that a determination that, in fact, there could not be sustainable life? There seems to be a substantial difference.

Mr A Maginness: In terms of diagnosis, they said that they could not predict; that it was not an accurate science.

Mr Speaker: When life would end?

Mr A Maginness: Or end. It is as simple as that. That is the way in which they approached it. They said, "You are putting us into a most difficult position if you pass this legislation".

Mr Lunn: I thank Mr Maginness. I will come to Mr Allister in just a moment. I would be more impressed by that intervention if the senior clinicians had said that they could not predict in every case.

Mr A Maginness: That is what they were saying.

Mr Lunn: Well, they are different clinicians from the ones I have been talking to. They make an honest judgement. All medical judgements are made with honesty and integrity, but they do not always get it right.

They do not always get it right about heart attacks.

A Member: That is the point.

Mr Lunn: I know, but it is not an exact science. Anyway, they are only — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Lunn: Thank you, Mr Speaker. Everybody else got quiet to speak.

They are making the best judgement that they can, as they do every single day. They make judgements like that 20 times a day. They are not forcing anybody towards one decision or another. They are giving, in the terms of the amendment:

"a clinical assessment of the potential impact on her health of either continuing or terminating the pregnancy".

The amendment also makes it clear that the mother must have all the available help, be it medical, physical, psychological or psychiatric. Everything should be there, including postnatal, prenatal and palliative care. That would be a step forward, certainly compared to what the poor mothers who have to travel across the water ever get when they do that. That really is the crux of this, Members. There are two decisions: whether you agree that the woman has a right to choose, and whether you agree that she has the right to have the medical treatment that she deserves and needs close to the place of her residence, and not this awful traffic across the water by easyJet or Stena Line. It is absolutely disgraceful. It has been going on for years, and it has to stop.

I do not believe that what I am hearing tonight, certainly from two parties, if it came to it, I would be hearing from all the individual members of those parties. There is such a thing as body language, and, given what has been said outside the House, it is plain to see that not everybody in the DUP agrees with the line that is being taken over there. Frankly, I think that it is the same with the SDLP. I stand to be corrected, but we have had discussions with individual Members who have given different indications. We have been told that the SDLP might support FFA but that it would not support wholesale abortion. That is no different to my position. And so it goes on. The other parties have taken different views. At least the Ulster Unionists got a free vote, and I admire them for that.

I do not want to repeat everything that others have said, but, on the definition of fatal foetal abnormality, people say that it is not a defined condition. That is absolutely correct; it is not a condition. It is an umbrella term to cover a lot of conditions that are very clearly defined, and those are the conditions that affect the women and produce these situations.

I have talked to women who have different views on this. I talked at length in the Senate Chamber one day with a group of women. They were the group who had decided to carry their babies to full term even though the diagnosis was almost hopeless. There was a lady who was delivered of a dead baby but was still delighted. There was pain, but she was delighted because she had the opportunity to hold the baby, take a photograph, give it a name and arrange a burial. With others, the baby only lasted a few minutes or a few hours — in one case, I think that it was 26 days — but they made their decision. Nothing in our amendment is prompting those ladies to make a different decision.

I have also had the experience of speaking to women who just could not face going down that road. I have equal sympathy and equal admiration for them. Either decision is very difficult. A couple came in to see me two years ago. They were literally on their way to the Liverpool boat, because that was the route that they had to take. Their baby was suffering from anencephaly and there was no hope. That is what they had to do. They did not have the money to do it, and they did not have any backup to do it. They did not travel with anybody else. And so it goes on.

Mr McNarry was interesting when he spoke. You will be glad to know, Mr Speaker, that I will not review what everybody said. Mr McNarry said that we cannot do this and asked what had altered. What has altered, in the timescale that he is talking about, is that the world has moved on. We are far more able to deal with these situations now. We do not ignore them — and we should not ignore them — in the way that we did 50 years ago, when women who had children out of wedlock were locked away in laundries. We have moved on from that. The world moves on.

11.30 pm

Mr McNarry and others said that the amendment is part of the slippery slope to acceptance of the 1967 Act. That is complete nonsense. Where do you get that from? You can read into it what you want to, but you have to show me the connection between a simple, narrowly defined amendment and how that could possibly lead to the 1967 Act, which I do not think any Member would want to see invoked in Northern Ireland.

Mr McNarry seems to think that the amendment is a short track to abortion on demand. I would point out to him that his boss, Mr Farage, on behalf of UKIP, supports abortion. UKIP policy is to support abortion.

Mr McNarry: That is rubbish.

Mr Lunn: It is not rubbish.

Mr McNarry: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Maybe you might give a ruling. When a Member speaks in debates such as this he should do factually and should not introduce matters that are not factual and that I contradict. My leader may have those views, but UKIP, as a party, does not.

Mr Speaker: I think it may be difficult for practising politicians to utter absolute facts on every occasion.

[Laughter.] I think that we are all replete with opinions. That is precisely why we are here. I invite Mr Lunn to respond.

Mr Lunn: Mr Farage made those remarks in the Crown Bar with a pint in his hand when he was over here. There may be a slight doubt about whether he was speaking on his own behalf or that of UKIP, but, frankly, it would be the first time that I heard Farage saying anything that was not on behalf of UKIP. He runs the party. It is a one-man band and is becoming smaller.

I will not go on about it all night. It is a question of compassion and sympathy. As I said, I have spoken to women on both sides of the argument.

I consider the procedure that we enforce on our women at the moment as a stain on our national character. When you go to England, as I do occasionally, it comes up, and people over there just cannot understand what is going on over here. That is not purely on terminations, but in a whole lot of ways. This is a serious issue and it really is time that we did something about it.

The other thing that I would say — and I think that somebody else mentioned it — is that it is not purely a decision for women; it is a decision for couples. It is pretty basic stuff, is it not? There is no baby without a man. Most couples, and most men, take a responsible attitude and would want to be involved in these decisions. It is important that we state that.

I will say the following with some trepidation. Some of us have had some experience of it. About 30 years ago, we should have had our third child. Mrs Kelly is not listening to me; it does not matter. About 29 years ago, we should have had our fourth child. The reason why we did not have our third child — and I have two lovely daughters — was because there were serious problems during the pregnancy. We were advised that the baby probably would not go full term, and it did not. The second time, a year later, things seemed to be OK, and then we suddenly hit the same problems.

Bear in mind how long ago this was. The doctors advised us that the baby was not likely to survive. In those days, you did not have the benefit of an amendment like ours, and you did not have the level of pastoral care, advice and support that you have now. We were advised that we would have to make a decision about that pregnancy. Our decision was to obtain a termination. In the period before we were able to organise that termination, I would like to think that either the good Lord or Mother Nature intervened, because the baby came away of its own accord. I do not like talking about this, because I get emotional, but, believe me, the pain of that decision lives with us to this day.

I have had long discussions at times with Mr Ó hOisín, who made a different decision — he does not mind me talking about this — which was to allow the pregnancy to go to full term even though the prognosis was terrible. Both those decisions are extremely difficult to make. I do not mention this so as to get sympathy but rather to point out that, as a man, it gives you an insight that you would not otherwise have.

I am going to have to stop now, Mr Speaker, because you can see what is happening to me. This amendment is important. It is important to Northern Ireland. It is important to women in Northern Ireland, and to men, and it is important for the self-respect of this little country. Sooner or later, we will have to do something about it. I implore Members, as others have done, to think about voting with both your conscience and your own opinion, not particularly that of your party. I hear that there is no Whip. If that is the case, you can vote according to your own thoughts, so do. Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am finished.

Mr Speaker: Thank you very much. Given that this is a very sensitive and difficult topic, this has been a good day for the Assembly. Parties and individual Members all contributed to the debate with a sense of dignity and with an awareness that their words were impacting on others, some of them possibly in very desperate personal circumstances. Irrespective of the outcome, which will not satisfy everybody, the Assembly is demonstrating that we can reflect all those diverse views in our society. As Speaker, it was my privilege to preside over so much of the debate, because Members, and some of the contributions in particular, distinguished this Assembly as a representative body. Thank you all for that.

Committee Business

Public Services Ombudsman Bill: Final Stage

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I have cleared bigger halls, Mr Speaker, but not as quickly.

Mr Speaker: Not as quickly as that, no. [Laughter.]

Mr Nesbitt: I beg to move

That the Public Services Ombudsman Bill [NIA 47/11-16] do now pass.

This has been the first Bill to be brought through the Assembly by a Statutory Committee. It is the result of work done by the present OFMDFM Committee, building on work begun by that Committee in the previous mandate. In fact, I believe that the Bill is 11 years in the making, which means that, when we started, nobody here had heard of Barack Obama, and we are going to get it over the line just before he finishes his second term as president of the United States.

It is a project commenced at the request of the current Ombudsman, Dr Tom Frawley, and undertaken with support from him and his deputy, Marie Anderson, and their staff. The project has enjoyed the support of the Department, and, through it, we had the benefit of input from Ministers and the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC). The Committee's work was very much informed by the views of a wide range of stakeholders who engaged with the OFMDFM Committee and the Ad Hoc Committee that undertook the Committee Stage scrutiny.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

On behalf of the current OFMDFM Committee, I thank all of them for the valuable contribution that they made to the development of the Bill. In particular, I thank the Ad Hoc Committee for its amendments and scrutiny — scrutiny that contributed to some of the specific reforming measures that I will highlight to the House.

In broad terms, the Bill merges and reforms the offices of Assembly Ombudsman and Commissioner for Complaints into a new office of the Northern Ireland Public Services Ombudsman, or NIPSO. The key responsibility of investigating complaints of maladministration by public-service providers will continue. I will limit my remarks to highlighting the areas in which the Bill reforms and develops the current arrangements.

The Bill will enhance the NIPSO's independence, in part through a closer relationship between the ombudsman and the Assembly, reflecting their complementary and shared responsibility for holding the Executive and public-service providers to account. The Assembly rather than OFMDFM will put forward a candidate for formal appointment as the NIPSO, with the Assembly Commission undertaking the competition to identify a candidate and set that candidate's salary.

There is an explicit statement of the NIPSO's independence in clause 2, and a motion to remove the NIPSO on grounds of health or misconduct will require the approval of two thirds of MLAs. A single, seven-year term of office will be long enough to allow a new NIPSO to have real impact and avoid any perception that an investigation might be swayed by thoughts of reappointment.

The Audit Committee will consider the ombudsman's budget estimate and lay it in the Assembly. The NIPSO will lay an annual report in the Assembly, as at present, but there will be greater clarity and the power to report to the Assembly in certain circumstances.

A number of measures in the Bill will simplify citizens' access to the NIPSO. A complaint about any listed authority may be directed to this new single office. A member of the public may approach the NIPSO directly and need not go through an MLA, and the ombudsman may specify the form in which complaints must be made so as to adapt to developments in communications technology. A member of the public making a complaint will enjoy absolute privilege from defamation in respect of statements made in the course of communication with the ombudsman about that complaint.

The Bill follows the existing legislation by listing, in schedule 3, all the bodies that are within the NIPSO's investigative remit. The Bill will bring some new bodies within remit. These include Queen's University and the University of Ulster, which now trades as Ulster University, for complaints of maladministration by students. The schedule also lists further education institutions, grant-aided schools, the Comptroller and Auditor General, and the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission.

The Bill removes the right of public-sector employees to complain to the ombudsman about employment disputes. The Committee considered that the NIPSO should focus on the citizen as the user of public services and not on those providing public services. The Committee was satisfied that the legal framework of employment rights and redress mechanisms, which have developed since 1969, removed the necessity for an additional layer of complaint mechanism available only to public-sector employees.

The Committee decided to remove the bar on the investigation of contractual or commercial transactions in the current Assembly Ombudsman Order. While the parties to such transactions will normally not be able to complain to the NIPSO because they could have recourse to the courts, the Committee preferred to leave it to the NIPSO's discretion to provide a mechanism whereby smaller providers seeking to do business with the public sector that are without the resources to bring a High Court challenge could seek redress.

The power of investigation will be extended from April 2018 to allow the NIPSO to initiate an investigation where systemic maladministration or injustice is suspected. This is a power used by the Irish ombudsman and which has not been previously available to any UK ombudsman.

Members will be aware that the current Commissioner for Complaints has the power to investigate complaints arising from the exercise of clinical judgment in the field of health. The Bill will extend that power to include investigation of complaints arising from the exercise of professional judgment in the closely related field of social care.

The Bill also makes a number of changes with a view to encouraging earlier resolution of complaints. These are as follows: providing the explicit power for the ombudsman to take informal action to resolve a complaint; giving the NIPSO discretion to accept complaints referred by a public body; requiring that complaints be brought to NIPSO within six months of the public body's complaints process being exhausted; and requiring the public body to signpost, by way of written notice, the option of referral to the NIPSO, the time limit for referral and how to contact the NIPSO.

Investigation by the ombudsman is enhanced in a number of ways. Under the current Ombudsman Order, a listed authority is not entitled to rely on privilege to withhold documents such as relevant legal advice from the ombudsman. The Bill makes provision for disclosure of legal advice by all listed authorities to the NIPSO, subject to certain safeguards to prevent privileged information from being revealed in reports or used against the public body in legal proceedings.

The Committee considered a provision in the Ombudsman Order that disapples, for the purposes of an ombudsman's investigation, any obligation on persons in the service of the Crown to maintain secrecy or other restrictions as regards disclosure of information. The Committee agreed that the Bill should make similar provision across all listed authorities.

The Committee was divided on the need to provide a power for Ministers and the Secretary of State to issue non-disclosure notices where they consider that disclosure would be prejudicial to the safety of Northern Ireland or the United Kingdom or otherwise contrary to public interest.

12.15 am

While some members were consistent in their opposition in principle to such powers, the Committee agreed by a majority that the NIPSO Bill should make similar provision. Following engagement with the Attorney General, the Committee agreed that the power should be exercisable where disclosure would be prejudicial to public safety or otherwise contrary to the public interest. The amendment agreed by the Assembly at Exceptional Further Consideration Stage underscored that provision. Members will recall that the retention of that power and the provision for the Secretary of State and the ombudsman to agree a code of conduct in relation to its exercise were key to securing the Secretary of State's consent to the Assembly considering the Bill.

The Committee was keen to minimise any duplication of investigation by public bodies whose remits might overlap. Provision for cooperation was welcomed; it includes other UK ombudsmen, the Irish ombudsman, bodies such as the Equality Commission, the Human Rights Commission and the commissioners for older people and for children and young people. In merging the offices, the Committee decided not to replicate the automatic right to legal representation in the Commissioner for Complaints Order where a report might be critical. The Bill will provide that the NIPSO may determine whether any person may be represented in the investigation by counsel, solicitor or otherwise.

While reports of an investigation will normally be sent to only the parties involved, the Bill includes a new power to publish an investigation report where the NIPSO considers that it would be in the public interest so to do. The rationale for publication must be set out in a notice served on those involved. If it appears to the ombudsman to be desirable, having carried out an investigation, to bring about a settlement of a complaint, explicit provision is made for the ombudsman to recommend that a payment be made by the listed authority to the person aggrieved or that the parties take certain actions.

The Bill also makes provision for those rare occasions when the ombudsman's recommendations are not followed. One mechanism is a special report by the NIPSO to the Assembly so that we are informed and can consider what further action may be appropriate. Another mechanism is the extension to all public service providers of the provision in the Commissioner for Complaints Order for the person aggrieved to use the NIPSO's investigation report as the basis for a claim for damages from the County Court. In those proceedings, a report of the NIPSO is to be accepted as evidence of the facts stated, unless the contrary is proven. A further option is provision for the NIPSO to request the Attorney General for Northern Ireland to seek relief in the High Court in cases where the NIPSO is of the opinion, following an investigation, that there is systemic maladministration in a listed authority and that that is likely to continue unless the High Court grants relief. Where the NIPSO launches an own-initiative investigation into systemic maladministration, he or she must lay the report on that investigation in the Assembly and publish it.

Other key features of the Bill include a new responsibility to establish standards for complaints handling by public service providers. That is in Part 3 of the Bill. The amendment was brought forward by the Committee in response to evidence and submissions received from the Ad Hoc Committee, particularly the submission of the Scottish ombudsman and the evidence of the Irish ombudsman, which highlighted the value of similar provision in improving public service complaints resolution in Scotland. The Bill also provides, at the request of the Department of Justice, for the office of the Northern Ireland Judicial Appointments Ombudsman to be held by the person holding office of NIPSO. The provisions in the Local Government Act 2014 for the investigation and adjudication of local government code of conduct complaints by the Commissioner for Complaints are updated to refer to the corresponding provisions in the NIPSO Bill.

On the question of compatibility of the Bill with the Human Rights Act 1998, the Committee welcomed the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, which carefully considered a number of stakeholder submissions on the issue, including the right to legal representation and provision for disclosure to the NIPSO of relevant legal advice. The Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister believes that it has explored that issue thoroughly and is satisfied that the provisions of the Bill are compatible with the Human Rights Act.

The Committee, in developing its policy and bringing forward the Bill, has been mindful of the difficult public expenditure climate in which it is proposing change. It commissioned Assembly research, with the cooperation of the ombudsman's office, to prepare an assessment of the financial implications of the proposals.

While the Bill will produce some savings, it will increase the NIPSO's remit overall and the Committee is conscious that, in the short term, the NIPSO will probably have to do more with less.

The Committee has staggered commencement of some extensions of the remit. For example, the power of own-initiative investigation will not commence until 1 April 2018, and the complaints standards role in Part 3 will not commence until the Assembly Commission appoints.

The Bill represents evolutionary, progressive reform. It retains the strengths of the existing legislation. In some areas, we have learned from developments elsewhere in the UK and Ireland, and, in other areas, the Bill leads the way. It reconciles differences in our current legislation and levels up, where possible, protection for the citizen as a consumer of public services. It provides for and encourages cooperation with other public oversight bodies to increase effectiveness and avoid waste. It brings the ombudsman into a closer relationship with the Assembly, reflecting our shared responsibility for holding Ministers, Departments and other public bodies to account.

On behalf of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, I recommend the Bill to the Assembly.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr David Hilditch, who is speaking on behalf of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Mr Hilditch: I rise as a member of the former Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill. I would like to thank my fellow members who came together to form the Ad Hoc Committee for their duties, which were in addition to their obligations to other Committees. I would also like to thank my colleagues on the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their positive communications and willingness to heed the concerns of the Ad Hoc Committee.

This was a highly unusual, cross-cutting Committee Bill, which the House does not see very often. It required the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee to consider and report on it. Indeed, it was a Bill with an extraordinary number of amendments — one of the largest that the Assembly has ever had to deal with — during its Further Consideration Stage. That resulted in a robust Consideration Stage, which left the Bill markedly different from its introduction. It now addresses and reflects issues that the Ad Hoc Committee had considered at great length, even at Further Consideration Stage, which, for many, is a much briefer affair.

I welcome the opportunity to briefly reflect on the Ad Hoc Committee's work on the Bill. While the Committee did not oppose any clauses in or schedules to the Bill in its consideration, and was content with the amendments that were put forward by the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister prior to its formal clause-by-clause scrutiny, members did express concerns on a number of issues. The Committee's report on the Bill outlined these issues and made recommendations to the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, as the sponsor of the Bill, to take steps to address the Committee's concerns.

In particular, members of the Committee expressed their reservations that the Bill's provisions for the NIPSO to lay a special report before the Assembly could be construed as coercive and that such a report had the potential to have a detrimental impact on a medical practitioner. During Consideration Stage, the Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister reminded us that the power can be exercised only when the NIPSO finds that the aggrieved person has sustained an injustice and that it has not or will not be remedied. He advised us that the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister had taken its own advice on the matter and had concluded that it was content that it would be a matter for the NIPSO, as a public authority, to exercise the power in a manner that is compatible with the convention rights of the listed authority.

The Committee also strongly recommended that the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, as the Bill's sponsor, take steps to address concerns that were raised by the Audit Committee to ensure that there is sufficient protection from the Executive's controlling or directing the NIPSO's access to resources. The Ad Hoc Committee recommended that a memorandum of understanding acknowledging the safeguarding of the NIPSO's financial independence should be agreed at the earliest opportunity. I note that, during Consideration Stage, the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister gave an undertaking to explore the matter again with both the Committee for Finance and Personnel and the Audit Committee to identify how best to conclude the memorandum of understanding.

A number of other clauses of the Bill proved to be contentious. The Committee sought its own legal advice before agreeing that it was content with these clauses, notwithstanding the concerns that were also recorded by individual members. These included clause 18, which provides for the inclusion of universities within the NIPSO's remit. That supersedes the existing power of the board of visitors to investigate complaints by students. The Committee considered the concerns that were raised by student bodies, Queen's University Belfast and the Ulster University. Following consideration of its legal advice, the Committee was satisfied that clause 18 did not interfere with the limits on the availability of the judicial review in relation to the jurisdiction of the board of visitors. The Committee noted concerns raised by one member in respect of the inclusion of universities in the remit of the Public Services Ombudsman.

The Committee raised concerns about the number of clauses relating to legal representation, legal privilege, court proceedings and privileged information. The Committee considered those clauses at length and sought legal advice in respect of the issues raised by the stakeholders. Accordingly, the Committee was satisfied that the provisions of those clauses did not breach convention rights or interfere with privilege, and was content with the clauses. Again, the Committee noted the concerns of a number of members in respect of the provisions of the Bill on privileged and confidential information.

The Committee also sought legal advice in respect of concerns raised about the power in clause 11(b) for the ombudsman to recommend:

“the listed authority make a payment to the person aggrieved”, where it appears to be desirable in order to bring about a settlement. Following consideration of the evidence received and the legal advice in respect of the issues raised by stakeholders, the Committee was content with the provisions of clause 11.

During its deliberation on the Bill, the Committee considered in some detail the new power in clause 8 for the NIPSO to launch an investigation without waiting for a complaint from the person aggrieved. The Committee noted that that power is common to most European ombudsmen and those in Australia and New Zealand.

The Committee noted that while a number of stakeholders welcomed the power of own-initiative, others expressed concern about a perceived lack of clarity in respect of the criteria to be used by the NIPSO. The Committee noted the safeguards provided in clauses 9 and 42 to address those concerns and was content with the provisions of clause 8.

Finally, it would be remiss of me not to refer to the Ad Hoc Committee's amendment to change the title of the new office from Public Services Ombudsperson to Public Services Ombudsman. I know that individual members of the Committee had differing views on that change of title, and these were aired during the Bill's Committee and Consideration Stages. In agreeing to make the change, the Committee noted that the intention of the Bill's sponsor, the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, was that the name be unambiguously gender-neutral. Although, initially, some members of the Committee preferred “ombudsperson” as an explicitly gender-neutral form, following consideration of a research paper on the etymology of the term, the Committee agreed the proposed amendments to change “ombudsperson” to “ombudsman”. These amendments were accepted by the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and the Assembly.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, on behalf of the Committee, we support the Bill.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. On behalf of Sinn Féin, I rise to support the Final Stage of the Bill, and gladly do so. First, I thank the Chair of the Committee, Mike Nesbitt, for his professional conduct in chairing the very lengthy process of taking the Committee through all of the wheels and turns of the provisions within the Bill. It has been quite a complex Bill. As I said, I want to place on record our thanks, as a party grouping, to the Chair and acknowledge his ability to manage the business to get us to this point. I also thank all the Committee officials who, again, worked very, very hard, tirelessly and professionally to help us all through our deliberations on what were a lot of complex issues.

In his presentation, the Chairperson highlighted the complexity of the Bill. We tried to maximise the benefits from the merger of the two offices. I think that some of us said that, when we merged them, we did not want to dumb anything down. We wanted to maximise the strength of the offices of the commissioner and the ombudsman, and I think that we have managed to do that. Again, as the Chairperson has highlighted, it is important that we have brought the role, which, essentially, is to maximise protection for citizens and consumers — people who are availing themselves of very important services on a day-to-day basis.

It is a good Bill and an important piece of legislation — one which I think will add comfort and, more importantly, protection to a wider range of citizens. The work that has been put in so far has been very important and, ultimately, will be beneficial for the citizens whom we represent. Clearly, the Bill provides for the maximisation of protections for citizens. I think that it gives people better access to redress where they have complaints and criticisms. A lot of concerns were raised by members and other contributors in terms of evidence that we might have been opening the floodgates for more complaints and additional litigation. We are satisfied as a Committee that that is not the case.

Quite clearly, it extends the range of access that people will have if they have a justifiable complaint. So, we believe that there are sufficient mechanisms built in to make sure that there is no abuse of the system, but it was fundamental to all of us on the Committee to make sure that the citizens out there have the maximum protection that they require as citizens availing themselves of public services. Go raibh maith agat.

Sorry, I want to place on record — and the Chairperson, thankfully, has done it — that our party has consistently taken the view, in Committee and in the Chamber, during the passage of the legislation, that we saw no necessary or justifiable role whatsoever for the Secretary of State or to introduce provisions around what was termed national security or public interest. I want to put on the record that we still see no role for a Secretary of State and, as I have said, any provisions relating to national security, but, notwithstanding the fact that we have taken a principled stand on that, made objections about that matter and voted against it consistently, we support the Bill overall.

Mr Attwood: One of the essential principles of any deepening democracy is the ability of the citizen to have accountability for the actions of public institutions. The fact that the Bill is now going through its Final Stage will, in the fullness of time, deepen in our own democracy that principle of the citizen having accountability for the actions of public officials and public bodies. In that way, the Assembly is doing a service to the citizens and communities of Northern Ireland.

This is an exceptional Bill in a lot of ways. The gestation period for the Bill was exceptionally long, as the Chair indicated in his opening remarks. There was an Exceptional Further Consideration Stage. It is not the first time, but it is one of the few times, that that has happened. It is exceptional because this is the first time that a Committee of the House has sponsored legislation, and that legislation has got to Final Stage. It is exceptional also in the diligence of not only Members but, more particularly, those in this House who serve the interests of Members and, therefore, serve the interests of citizens across Northern Ireland. It is also exceptional in the diligence of a number of phases of Committee staff and other people in this Building who assisted the Committee to manage the Bill. Legal Services was heavily involved, not least because of the belated intervention of the Attorney General. The Bill Office was heavily involved, and a lot of other specialist individuals in the life of this Building were involved. All those should be acknowledged, as Mr Maskey and the Chair did, but, in many terms, this is a product of their work, not just a product of the work of those on the political side.

Mr Lyttle: I welcome the opportunity, on behalf of the Alliance Party, to support the passage of the Bill to Final Stage. As other Members have said, it is a historic moment for the Assembly, as it is the first Bill to be passed by a Committee. Like other Members, I congratulate the Chair of the Committee, Mr Nesbitt, for the work that he undertook in relation to this important Bill. I also extend my sincere thanks to the Committee officials. I have rarely seen the level of work that went into the Bill on any other range of issues by officials in this Assembly. They can take a large amount of credit for the passage of the Bill.

I hope that the Bill ensures that every citizen in Northern Ireland has access to fair and efficient public administration that is based on accountability, openness and quality of service. To that end, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Lyons: The Chairman of the Committee mentioned that this has been a very long, slow, drawn-out process over many years. Perhaps then, it is fitting that it is at this time of the morning that we are debating its Final Stage.

I have not been on the Committee for very long — only a few months — but I place on record my thanks to the Committee staff for the work they have done. An awful lot of work has been involved in this, and there has been an awful lot of back-and-forth, seeking legal advice and ensuring that everything is in place so that we can get to this stage.

Mr Nesbitt and Mr Hilditch gave a very comprehensive overview of the Bill, and I certainly support what they said. At this stage in the debate, there is not much to say other than that I concur with what the other Members have said. I am sure that Members are looking forward to getting home, so I will finish by saying that I am very glad that we have got to this stage and that we will be, of course, supporting the Bill.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank Mr Hilditch, Mr Maskey, Mr Attwood, Mr Lyttle and Mr Lyons. Because of my almost supernatural powers of shorthand, I managed to note down just about every word they said. If it pleases them, I will read those remarks into the record again — or perhaps we will just stop.

Mr Weir: The Bill might fall. [Laughter.]

Mr Nesbitt: Yes, at risk of the Bill falling, let me give heartfelt thanks to Mr Hilditch and the Ad Hoc Committee, which did great work at the scrutiny stage. To all my colleagues on the Committee, I say this: it has taken a long time, but it was incredibly complex. Sometimes, when we thought we had just a little technicality to get over, a whole new can of worms opened up and we had to put in an awful lot more work.

My final thanks go to the Bill team and the staff of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, who did all the heavy lifting and made it possible to finally get to this great point, where the Committee has brought a Bill to its Final Stage, the first since 1998 to do so.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Public Services Ombudsman Bill [NIA 47/11-16] do now pass.

Adjourned at 12.38 am.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 15 February 2016

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Weir: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: A point of order.

Mr Weir: Thank you, Mr Speaker. Over the last couple of days, there have been some erroneous and mischievous allegations against the Assembly that strike at its integrity. May I ask the Speaker questions on a couple of points? First, there has been an allegation of a secret appeal mechanism in terms of expenses. Can the Speaker confirm that no such appeal mechanism exists or has ever existed; that there has never been any challenge to the determination of the panel; that the only query that any Member can make is directly with the finance office, which has been published and in existence since the first Members' handbook in 1998; and that, during that period, no query has been brought to the Commission in that regard?

Secondly, can the Speaker confirm that when the determination was made by the panel, in March 2012, one of the provisions concerned payments to other connected parties but that the initial determination referred to contracts on or after 1 April 2012; that that mistake in the drafting was clearly noticed by the panel, which issued, in December 2012, in their own words, a fresh determination to deal with the apparent ambiguity of their first one, which, from 1 January 2013, banned any payments to parties other than those employees or pooled employees; and that, from that date, no payment was made to anybody other than employees or pooled employees?

Ms Ruane: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Allister: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I am not absolutely convinced that that is a point of order. I understand, however, that Members may have questions arising. Given the significance of it, I will respond and will take further points. I have also been exercised by this, and I can confirm the facts as you have outlined them. I think that that will be a matter of record. It is of significant concern and regret to me that the chief executive was working directly with the panel on these issues. I am extremely disappointed at the publicity that has been generated, apparently at the behest of the two senior members of the independent panel.

Mr Allister: Interesting as it is that it is the DUP that rides to the rescue of Sinn Féin on the issue, given the nature of the matter and the abuse of public money, is it not time that the Assembly Commission came to the House with a statement explaining how it conducted itself and how it carried on making payments after the independent panel apparently told it to stop? When will we get a statement from the Commission?

Mr Speaker: It is of no help at all for Members, including one with the legal background that you have, to put information on the record that is clearly wrong.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Speaker: We are talking here about the entire Assembly. The fantastical theory that parties would combine and collude to give money to Sinn Féin is, I think, something that would cause even you to have second thoughts.

Ms Ruane: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker, can you confirm that the Assembly Commission's finances are audited internally by internal auditors and externally by the NI Audit Office?

Mr Speaker: I can confirm that on the basis of personal experience and having double- and treble-checked it this morning before the sitting. We will now move on to other business.

Mr Campbell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Is it further to that point of order, Mr Campbell?

Mr Campbell: No, it is a completely separate one. Last week, the Education Minister took a topical question from me in which I raised the issue of rebuilding schools in my constituency. In his reply, he stated:

"I do not recall the Member lobbying that strongly for any schools in his constituency". — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 112, p109, col 1].

Immediately after those comments were made, I checked the record of the House, which reveals that there were 17 such occasions on which I lobbied the Minister for schools in my constituency. I wrote to him immediately afterwards asking him to correct his inaccurate assertion. I then wrote to him on Thursday and asked him whether he was planning to do that in the House. Can you, Mr Speaker, confirm or otherwise whether the Education Minister has applied to you to rectify what appears to be his politically prejudiced, inaccurate comment to me last week?

Mr Speaker: In the first instance, I am sure that the Member is aware, because he is one of the most experienced Members here, that it is not for me to query how Ministers answer questions. On the latter point, I can confirm that I have had no information whatsoever — that is not to say that it has not happened — in the affirmative on any arrangements that the Minister wishes to make.

Public Petition: Better Care for Children with Autism Spectrum Disorder in Northern Ireland

Mr Speaker: Mr Kieran McCarthy has sought leave to present a public petition in accordance with Standing Order 22. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak.

Mr McCarthy: My petition pleads with the Health Minister and the Education Minister for much better care for children with autism spectrum disorder (ASD). Of course, those children grow into adults and continue to need that special attention. The increasing number of children with autism who are being forced to wait 20 months and longer for assessment and statements, and the further delay in specialist care and educational support, is pretty scandalous. It is simply not good enough. As this is the final petition that I will present to you in the Chamber, Mr Speaker, and having had personal family experience of a child, now an adult, requiring special needs provision, I am extremely passionate and totally committed to the Assembly delivering on the Autism Act 2011. The last thing that a parent needs after a child's diagnosis is to have to spend time running around Departments looking for help. I appeal to both Ministers to act immediately and help all children with autism; indeed, both children and adults with autism.

I am extremely proud, along with other MLAs, to have served for many years on the all-party group on autism here at Stormont under, I may say, the excellent chairmanship of Dominic Bradley, who is in the Chamber with us. Along with Autism NI, the National Autistic Society and other parent groups, we assist, inform and help parents. We have championed the Autism Act 2011, which was new legislation to end the desperate waiting and uncertainty for parents. I have to say that progress has been very slow since 2011, and that has given rise to frustration, anxiety and, sometimes, total breakdown.

Our petition is begging for swift enactment of the legislation, the autism strategy and, indeed, the action plan. All children with autism must be treated as equal citizens and must have equal access to rights and opportunities, which have to be protected and enforced.

Over 8,271 people have signed this petition. Many are in the Public Gallery today and many have put heart-stopping comments on the petition. I pay tribute to all the parents and friends who have faced lengthy delays and waits. Their expectation in signing this petition has to be realised, and the Assembly, which is their Assembly, must deliver now. I acknowledge that the Special Educational Needs and Disability Bill is going through Stormont at present, and I also acknowledge the positive nature of the health board, the Public Health Agency and the early support team in each trust, but action speaks louder than words.

In conclusion, the 130% increase in calls for help to the Autism Northern Ireland helpline indicates a huge problem for us all. It is no wonder that parents are crying out for help and guidance. Let all Ministers hear that cry for help, play their part and end the nightmare for children with ASD and their parents now.

Mr McCarthy moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr McCarthy: One is for the Health Minister and one is for the Education Minister.

Mr Speaker: Thank you very much. Congratulations to you and to those who helped you to compile the petition.

I will forward it to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, the Minister of Education and the Committees.

Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4): Suspension

Mr Swann: I beg to move

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 15 February 2016.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that this motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 15 February 2016.

Ministerial Statement

North/South Ministerial Council: Health and Food Safety

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I wish to make a statement on the twentieth North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) meeting in the health and food safety sectoral format, which was held in the NSMC joint secretariat offices in Armagh on Wednesday 20 January 2016. Minister Michelle O'Neill MLA and I represented the Northern Ireland Executive at the meeting, while the Irish Government were represented by Leo Varadkar TD, Minister for Health, and Dr James Reilly TD, Minister for Children and Youth Affairs. Minister Varadkar chaired the meeting. This statement has been agreed with Minister O'Neill, and I am making it on behalf of us both.

We agreed that our respective officials will progress deliberations on potential additions to the current work programme and noted that officials have already commenced a review of the child protection agenda work programme. The Council received an update on the ongoing collaboration to maximise the drawdown of EU funding in the health sector and noted that our respective officials continue to seek to identify opportunities to collaborate on the drawdown of EU funds. We also welcomed a presentation from the Health Research Board on Horizon 2020 funding streams in the health sector. The Council was informed that legislation to introduce standardised packaging of tobacco products and to transpose the EU tobacco products directive is expected to come into force in May 2016.

Ministers welcomed the update on suicide prevention initiatives in both jurisdictions. The Council noted that construction of the radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin hospital is on target and that it is planned that the unit will open and be in operational use by late autumn 2016. We also received updates on the work of the US-Ireland R&D Partnership and on the ongoing work of the All Ireland Institute for Hospice and Palliative Care.

Ministers noted that the child protection work programme agreed at the NSMC meeting in July 2012 continues to be progressed and that a review of the current child protection work programme will be reported at a future NSMC meeting in that sector.

The Council noted the Safefood chief executive officer's report and, in particular, the launch of Safefood's weight-loss app. The Council also noted the Safefood annual report and accounts 2014 and approved the appointment of four new members and one reappointment to Safefood's scientific advisory committee, as well as the appointment of Professor Margaret Patterson as chair of the committee.

Finally, we agreed that the next NSMC health and food safety meeting will be held in the autumn.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement. I very much welcome the progress on the radiotherapy unit as someone who visited the site last Friday. It is incredible to have it on site, and it will have a huge impact in relation to patients in the northwest who have made horrendous journeys for their cancer treatment.

Will the Minister provide a bit more detail on the work around suicide prevention? Is he thinking about the zero-suicide model being targeted, specifically when we look at the desperate need across our communities? Are we likely to see an all-Ireland approach?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Chair of the Committee for her question. This is an issue that, sadly, affects Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland and, indeed, all countries and regions. We have particularly seen the shadow cast by suicide in this part of the world in recent times. Even though the number of people taking their lives has fallen, we are still by some distance the region with the highest number of suicides in the United Kingdom. From talking to counterparts from the Irish Republic, I know that they are having similar problems, if not, perhaps, at the same level.

The Council acknowledged and supported the work being done by some organisations that have an all-Ireland focus. For example, the four main Christian Church denominations have been working through the Flourish project. Sporting organisations, including the GAA for example, have been raising awareness among their members on both sides of the border. As with many issues in health and social care, we have services in place to deal with the particular problems in Northern Ireland. While there is, perhaps, a higher prevalence in some communities than others of people taking their lives, we will always have to target our resources and attention at those. There is certainly no monopoly on wisdom and ideas to deal with suicide in this part of the world. We will learn from, and share with, others, including the Government of the Irish Republic, any good practice we have, and seek to learn from their best practice as well.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his statement. What other areas have been identified for North/South cooperation?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for her question. Some see North/South cooperation as something for the optics or just for the sake of it. It does not necessarily need to be of any substance. I have to say, with some pride, that the area of health is full of substance in what we have developed on a cross-border basis. It is absolutely not the case in health that we are doing things just for the sake of it or to say that we are doing them on a cross-border basis. There are lots of positive and practical examples of both jurisdictions working together to identify and meet need in a way that is mutually beneficial.

The Chair of the Committee mentioned the good example of the radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin, which will be on-stream towards the end of the year, we hope, treating patients from both sides of the border. I was also at Altnagelvin Hospital just before Christmas and saw for myself the 24/7 cath lab, which is providing primary percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) and coronary care for patients in the Western and Northern Trust areas, and in other parts of Northern Ireland. It will not be too long before it is also providing support for people from County Donegal.

It is estimated that around 500 patients will receive catheterisation in the cath labs in Altnagelvin.

There is scope for further development, and there are opportunities in two areas. One of those is deep brain stimulation for Parkinson's patients, which we are very good at in Northern Ireland, and there is an opportunity for us to provide that support for patients from the South. Another area that was discussed at the North/South Ministerial Council meeting was human transplantation. There are two transplantation centres, one in Belfast and one in Dublin, which have operated with very little contact between each other over the last 25 or 30 years. That started to break down with informal contacts, and I have asked officials to formalise that more so that we can try to develop a corridor between Belfast and Dublin to increase the opportunities for human transplantation right across the island of Ireland.

Mr McKinney: The Minister will be aware of the extent of suicide in Northern Ireland. In fact, since 1998, almost as many people have died from suicide as died in the Troubles. The Minister may also be aware that Jeremy Hunt has now announced further funding for mental health throughout the UK. Will the Minister give some assurances that he will write to Minister Hunt about any Barnett consequential that flow from that and that that money will be ring-fenced and used for mental health in Northern Ireland?

Mr Hamilton: I noticed the comments from the Secretary of State for Health and NHS England on increasing mental health spend in England. We still have a lot of work to do to get our emphasis right on mental health versus physical health. We have had lots of debates and discussions on that in the Chamber, even in my time as Minister. There is a record of good improvement from the Department over the last number of years, particularly post publication of the Bamford report. That saw not just a 25% increase in the amount of funding for mental health in the subsequent years, with more than £250 million a year being spent on mental health, but a shift away from such care being provided mostly in institutions, which, in many cases, were inappropriate and not helpful, to a more community-based type of care. That care has now switched to around 60% in the community and 40% in institutions, which is a positive move.

I noticed a report over the weekend that was aired by the BBC about mental health spending across the UK. It is interesting to note that the only country in the United Kingdom that has increased expenditure on mental health in each of the last two years is Northern Ireland, where we increased it by 1% last year and by around 2.5% or 2.6% this year. All other jurisdictions in the United Kingdom have not been able to increase that expenditure over the last two years. The Member knows the pressures that the Health budget faces, and the limitations and many demands on that spend, but he and the House have an assurance from me that I am deeply committed to promoting better mental health.

Mrs Dobson: I also thank the Minister for his statement. Given the North/South Ministerial Council's arrangements for surgical treatment of children with congenital heart conditions, will he update the House on when Our Lady's Children's Hospital in Crumlin will have the capacity to treat our children from Northern Ireland?

Mr Hamilton: That is another very good example of cross-border cooperation having practical benefits for people from Northern Ireland. The Member will be well versed in progress over the last number of years on the decision to set up the network and the funding that has been provided for it, particularly, in recent years, through the Executive's change fund. It is fair to say that the progress has probably been slower than many of us would like in getting the network fully established. That has not been for any want of trying on this side of the border. I can update the House that we recently received a costed implementation plan and business case for the full establishment of the network. It was received in the Department around 1 February, but we need, in particular, to develop sufficient intensive care unit capacity in Dublin at Our Lady's Children's Hospital in Crumlin for the approximately 140 Northern Ireland patients who would have to use those facilities annually.

There has been an issue, I understand, with opening up two further beds in the intensive care unit. I understand that the beds and the attendant equipment are there, but the issue is the staffing complement. You need six nurses for each bed, and, at this stage, there has not been the ability to provide them. If they were provided, that would allow us to move the next cohort of patients: 30, 35 or 40 urgent cases per annum could move there. That issue was raised formally with the Irish Health Minister at the NSMC meeting, and he indicated that they hoped to make some positive progress in the not too distant future. It is still moving forward. I commend all those who have been involved in the work, particularly the board and the work that it has been doing to try to make this a reality. I am still hopeful that it will be up and running very soon.

Mr Buchanan: I, too, thank the Minister for his statement to the House. I notice, Minister, that, at the meeting, there was a presentation from the Health Research Board on Horizon 2020 funding. Will you advise what success Northern Ireland has had thus far in bidding for Horizon 2020?

Mr Hamilton: As the Member knows, Horizon 2020 is a huge fund. I think that around €80 billion is available across the whole of the European Union, and aspects of that are available for health and social care. So far, Northern Ireland has had a pretty good success rate in converting applications into successful bids. I think that about 12% of bids are successful. That might not sound like a terrible lot, but it is up there with the best conversion rates for turning applications into successful bids. Long may that continue, and hopefully it will. Some very good projects are getting through and getting Horizon 2020 funding, and Northern Ireland is taking a lead on those.

I was at the launch of one such project a couple of weeks ago at the Ulster University, Jordanstown. A project to provide mobile assistance for groups and individuals in the community — project MAGIC — has received €3.6 million and is focused on improving after-stroke care. It works in conjunction with other European regions, but Northern Ireland is very much taking the lead. Another one, project NEPHSTROM, looks at novel stromal cell therapy for diabetic kidney disease. I think that Queen's University has been involved in that project, which has received €6 million. Northern Ireland is doing well with Horizon 2020 funding.

There is a suite of funding through INTERREG IVa as well, with around €50 million available for health and social care projects, particularly those focused on older people, disability and R&D. The first call for that received some 21 applications. Whether it is INTERREG funding or Horizon 2020 funding, there are huge opportunities for Northern Ireland and the health and social care system here, working in conjunction with our universities and, indeed, the private sector to avail themselves of the sizeable funding that is out there.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for his statement today and for his statement over the weekend about the £2 million for autism. The people who were here this morning very much welcomed that announcement, and I hope that it will be the start of a process.

My question on today's statement relates to the standardised packaging of tobacco products. The Minister mentioned legislation:

"to transpose the EU tobacco products directive".

Can he explain what exactly that means? Does it mean that something is happening within the EU directive? Are we going against that directive?

Mr Hamilton: I begin by thanking the Member for his words of thanks on the package of additional funding for autism services in Northern Ireland. That is another area in which there has been work on a North/South basis in the past, and I hope that the additional £2 million of funding that I announced will go some significant way towards reducing the unacceptably long waiting times that have developed over the last number of years.

The knock-on impact that tobacco use has on health and social care is an issue and a problem that has afflicted every region and state. In Northern Ireland, it is estimated that we spend around £160 million a year — I think that that is a very conservative figure — on treating tobacco-related illnesses.

12.30 pm

The Member will be aware that standardised packaging will roll out right across the UK in May 2016. The transposition of the EU tobacco products directive that I talked about means that a range of measures will be brought into domestic law, including our own law. Those are things like a ban on flavours of tobacco, an increase in the size of the health warnings that appear on cigarette packets, a minimum size of 20 in a pack and the regulation of e-cigarettes. The Member will be familiar with the Health and Personal Social Services (Amendment) Bill — I think that I have got that right — which is going through the House. It contains clauses to regulate the sale of e-cigarettes in Northern Ireland. That is an example of how we are putting that directive into practice here.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his statement. Will the Minister give an indication of how many patients from Northern Ireland will be treated in the new radiotherapy centre at Altnagelvin?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. It is an issue that I know he is very close to. In fact, the Member and I visited the construction site just before Christmas. We got our hard hats on and looked around what is going to be an absolutely fantastic facility for people in that part of the world. As the Chair said earlier, it is impossible for us to make it easy for people to get cancer treatment; it is a very difficult time in their lives. However, the fact that so many people have had to travel so far for so many years to get the treatment that they need will now be addressed by the fact that we are opening this absolute state-of-the-art radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin. We should be proud of having taken that forward in this Assembly mandate.

The Member asked specifically how many people from Northern Ireland will benefit from the centre. It is estimated that around 1,150 or so patients from Northern Ireland will use it annually. Around 385 patients from the Republic of Ireland will also benefit from the facility. I think that it is an absolutely great project. It is a good example of us working in a practical way on a cross-border basis for mutual benefit, and it will significantly improve the standard of cancer care for patients in the north-west of Northern Ireland.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I will go back to something that is near and dear to your own heart, which is Horizon 2020. Will the Minister advise how many applications the Department or trusts in his remit have submitted in relation to those streams of funding? What has the drawdown figure been so far specifically on Horizon 2020?

Mr Hamilton: I am looking here for information. I do not think that I have the precise numbers. I have figures for INTERREG Va but I do not have the full figures for Horizon 2020. I am happy to come back to the Member in writing with more specifics around that.

I recall the figure of around 12% of a success rate for applications that have a Northern Ireland lead, which, the Member will appreciate, is a reasonably good success rate. Even though it sounds like quite a low figure, the Member will know that these are hugely competitive funds and you need to be at the top of your game to get anything out of them. That is why the two projects that I highlighted to Mr Buchanan — project MAGIC, which is looking at stroke care; and project NEPHSTROM, which I think I said was with Queen's University but is actually with the National University of Ireland at Galway, but it involves the Belfast Trust, and it is looking at kidney disease — have acquired nearly €10 million between them. There is also another project — project MERCuRIC — which is led by Queen's University. It partners with the Belfast Trust and the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and that got €6 million to research bowel cancer.

A lot of projects from FP7 and Horizon 2020 are working their way through the system. My message is that I think Northern Ireland is exceptionally well placed to benefit from Horizon 2020 funding. We have a very vibrant research and development sector in health and social care and in partnership with our universities. Our universities are very clued in and switched on to the potential, particularly around health and social care, of availing themselves of some of the vast amount of Horizon 2020 funding that is out there.

Mr Swann: The Minister referred to the drawdown of EU funding. Will he clarify whether he has had any requests or whether his officials are looking at any collaborative approach across the borders in regard to Duchenne muscular dystrophy?

Mr Hamilton: I am not aware of any, but I will contact the Member with any particular details to clarify that. Indeed, if the Member is aware of any projects or potential projects where charities or others are working in that space and think that there is an opportunity, he should please let us know, and we will certainly get them in contact with the right people to try to take forward their ideas.

Mr G Robinson: I thank the Minister for his statement. Have all the various staff members been appointed to the very welcome radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin?

Mr Hamilton: The Member will know that there have been issues across Northern Ireland, particularly sometimes in the Western Trust, in getting the requisite staff to look after the various services that are provided. It has been a challenge to get the appropriate numbers of staff, particularly at consultant level, into Altnagelvin to be able to look after the radiotherapy centre properly. My understanding from the Western Trust — I will clarify it with the Member if I am inaccurate — is that it has been running a fairly aggressive recruitment programme — indeed, it is an international recruitment programme — to try to get people in to staff the radiotherapy unit. From speaking to the chief executive of the trust a few weeks ago, my understanding is that that has been successful.

The fact that we have invested so much in a state-of-the-art radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin, which has all the best equipment and a fantastic team that is well networked and is international in its focus, is something that, in and of itself, attracts the best people to it. That is something that I want to see in Northern Ireland, not just in cancer care but across a range of different specialisms.

Mr Allister: Although it was not mentioned in the statement, I note that, in the communiqué, there was discussion about the European Court of Justice's decision to strike down the Scottish Government's attempts at minimum pricing for alcohol. Does that mean that the Department's proposals in that regard are now dead in the water? Does the Minister agree with me that, if the people of the United Kingdom were wise enough to exit the EU, we would be freed from the shackles and restraints of the European Court of Justice and could pass our own legislation on these issues without interference?

Mr Hamilton: That was a very admirable attempt by the Member to get that subject matter into the questions on the statement. Minimum unit pricing has been considered carefully by my Department for some time. We have obviously looked at it in a broader UK context, but we have particularly looked at it in a cross-border context to see what impact it would have on one jurisdiction if the other moved ahead with it, and so on and so forth. To that end, a study was carried out by, I think, Sheffield Hallam University, and its outcomes have been published recently.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

The Irish Government have indicated their desire to move ahead with minimum unit pricing for alcohol, and we continue to monitor that. We do so in the context of the judgement in the recent Scottish case. That was an interesting judgement in that it was not clear one way or the other whether it was legal. It pushed it back to the Scottish Court of Session to take a decision, and I am not sure where it is in its consideration.

It is an issue that we have carefully considered and that we have to carefully consider. It is worth noting that, whether it is a minimum unit pricing on alcohol or a sugar tax on sugary drinks that some are calling for, none of those interventions are, in and of themselves, a silver bullet that will resolve all the issues with the overconsumption of alcohol or sugary drinks. We have to be very careful about moving forward with policies like that and to make sure that they are grounded firmly, or else there is a risk in some cases of doing more damage than of achieving positive outcomes.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes questions on the statement.

Executive Committee Business

Housing (Amendment) Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call on the Minister for Social Development, Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley, to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Housing (Amendment) Bill.

Moved. — [Lord Morrow (The Minister for Social Development).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As no amendments have been tabled, there is no opportunity to discuss the Housing (Amendment) Bill today. Members will, of course, be able to have a full debate at Final Stage.

The Further Consideration Stage of the Bill is therefore concluded. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

Budget Bill: Consideration Stage

Moved. — [Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No amendments have been tabled to the Bill. I propose, therefore, by leave of the Assembly, to group the eight clauses for the Question on stand part followed by the five schedules and the long title. There are no objections.

Clauses 1 to 8 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Schedules 1 to 5 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes the Consideration Stage of the Budget Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

I invite Members to take their ease for a moment before we commence the next item of business.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Rural Needs Bill: Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: Good afternoon again. I call the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to move the Consideration Stage of the Rural Needs Bill.

Moved. — [Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development).]

Mr Speaker: I must inform the House that a valid petition of concern was presented today in relation to amendment No 5 for the Consideration Stage of the Rural Needs Bill. Under Standing Order 28, the vote cannot take place until at least one day has passed. The vote will therefore be taken at the beginning of business tomorrow, Tuesday 16 February. I would also like to remind Members that the vote on amendment No 5 will be on a cross-community basis.

Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There is a single group of amendments — amendment Nos 1 to 14 — dealing with the duty on the public authority, including defining “public authority”; due regard; training and monitoring; and reporting. We will debate the amendments in turn. Once the debate on the group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. The Questions on stand part will be taken at the appropriate points in the Bill. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clause 1 (Duty of public authorities to consider rural needs)

Mr Speaker: We now come to the group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 1, it will be convenient to debate amendments Nos 2 to 14. Members should note that amendment No 3 is consequential to amendment No 2; amendment No 4 is consequential to amendment No 3; amendment No 13 is consequential to amendment No 2; and amendment No 14 is consequential to amendment No 1.

No 14: In the long title, leave out “consider” and insert “have due regard to”.— [Mr Irwin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development).]

Mr Irwin: It is my pleasure to speak today as the Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development. Before I present the Committee’s position on the amendments, I will take the opportunity to outline the work that the Committee did in its scrutiny of the Bill and highlight some of the issues that came out of that scrutiny. I thank the Committee members for all the work that they did on the Bill. Considerable hours of Committee time and dedication of members went into the scrutiny, and the Committee Clerk and her staff put in a big effort.

I also want to mention the previous Deputy Chairperson, Mr Joe Byrne, who has since retired from the Assembly. He was heavily involved in the initial scrutiny of the Bill and took a deep and very informed interest in its provisions.

Following the Bill’s introduction on 9 November 2015, the Committee wrote to key stakeholders and inserted public notices in the ‘Belfast Telegraph’, ‘The Irish News’ and the ‘News Letter’. A total of 19 organisations responded to the request for written evidence, and a copy of the submissions that were received is included in the Committee’s report. The Committee also commissioned the Assembly’s Research and Information Service (RiSe) to provide research on the content and implications of the Bill. Those papers are also included in the Committee’s report.

On Tuesday 24 November, the Committee held an all-day meeting to take oral evidence on the Bill from relevant stakeholders and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. On that day, the Committee heard from the Department; local rural support networks; the Rural Community Network (RCN) and the Rural Development Council (RDC); the Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA) and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives NI (SOLACE NI); and the Ulster Farmers’ Union (UFU) and the Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers Association (NIAPA). The Committee also agreed a motion to extend the Bill’s Committee Stage until 26 January 2016.

The Committee had discussions with departmental officials on the Bill’s key issues at its meeting on 1 December 2015. As a result of the evidence gathered and its consideration of a range of issues, the Committee agreed to ask the Minister to bring forward amendments on certain matters. Those matters were, first, the strengthening of the duty to consider rural needs and, secondly, the inclusion of public bodies other than Departments and local government in the Bill. The third matter was an amendment to clause 2 to leave out the word “may” and insert the word “will”. The fourth and final matter was in connection with transparency and accountability on reporting arrangements in clause 3.

I will speak about all those matters in more depth later. For now, I wish to note that the Minister agreed with the Committee on the need for those amendments. She forwarded the text of amendments to the Committee but made the Committee aware that the amendments in connection with the strengthening of the statutory duty and the inclusion of additional public bodies represented a policy change and therefore needed the agreement of the Executive. To be clear, that concerns amendment Nos 1, 2, 3, 4, 13 and 14. At our meeting on 9 February 2016, the Committee received a letter from the Minister indicating that Executive agreement had not been obtained for those amendments. Officials could not explain in detail why that was the case. The Committee debated and ultimately agreed that, as it had initially sought the amendments about strengthening of the duty and the additional public bodies, it would table them in its name. The letter from the Minister indicated that she would table the amendments that did not require Executive approval.

Before I complete this introduction, I wish to make a very brief reference to some of the other issues that were discussed but on which the Committee decided that no amendments were required. The Committee, aware that there were concerns regarding the apparent lack of teeth in the Bill, explored the issue of sanctions and enforcement. It is a central provision of the Bill that public authorities comply with the new duties that are imposed by it. To that end, there will be monitoring and reporting arrangements on how public authorities comply with that duty. However, as was pointed out by stakeholders, there is no means of enforcing the provision, nor is there any sanction for non-compliance. The Committee deliberated on the issue, and it reflected on the fact that it had achieved amendments to clause 1 in connection with the strengthening of the duty on public authorities to have due regard to rural needs and on the naming of additional public bodies.

The deliberation took account of the amendment to clause 2 that would strengthen the duty of the Department regarding the provision of guidance, advice and information. Reference was also made to the amendments to clause 3 to strengthen the transparency of the reporting arrangements. The Committee agreed that, together, the amendments, if accepted by the Assembly at Consideration Stage, would strengthen the Bill. This would address some of the concerns around lack of enforcement, while not imposing a separate and potentially costly enforcement mechanism.

Another matter discussed by the Committee was clarification of the definitions and terminology used in the Bill. Many of the stakeholders who provided evidence to the Committee expressed reservations regarding the definitions in the Bill, with a focus on clause 6 and the definition of rural needs. The Committee deliberated on the issue, noting that it was highly desirable that DARD would work closely with all relevant public bodies on definitions. The Committee noted a letter from the Minister that confirmed the intentions of the Department in that regard. The Committee was therefore content that DARD would provide supplementary advice and guidance on definitions to public bodies.

Other matters raised and discussed by the Committee included the need for training and the provision of baseline information to be used to review the effectiveness of the Bill. The nature of the cooperation arrangements was also discussed. The issue of whether the Bill should make provision for decisions relating to the closure of rural schools was raised as well. However, after due consideration and deliberation, the Committee decided that it would not pursue those matters by way of amendments or other means.

I now move to discuss the amendments dealing with the “due regard” matter — amendment Nos 1 and 14. I want to make it clear that I speak as Chairperson and represent the views of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development. After its initial consideration of the Bill, the Committee had concerns about clause 1. The issues identified were also reflected in many of the responses received to the Committee’s call for evidence. The principal issue was the need to strengthen the statutory duty that the Bill would place on certain public authorities. As drafted, the Bill imposed a duty on public authorities to consider rural needs. The evidence presented to the Committee suggested that this was quite weak. There was concern that it would not result in any action being taken to protect rural communities from the adverse impacts of policy decisions. Practically all of the voluntary and community groups that we heard from voiced the same concern. Many of those who responded suggested that the duty to consider should be replaced by a duty to give due regard. The Committee considered the two aspects of, first, strengthening the due duty and, secondly, dealing with adverse impacts identified as a result of undertaking a consideration of rural needs.

After detailed discussions with DARD officials and amongst members, the Committee decided not to look to amend the Bill to address the issue of mitigating adverse impacts. When it came to considering the strengthening of the duty, the Committee obtained further information on the section 75 duties. The duty to have or give due regard has the advantage of having been legally tested in the context of Section 75 equality and good relations duties in the courts. Broadly speaking, a “due regard” duty means that consideration must be given in advance of a final decision being made, not afterwards, and it must be done with an open mind to achieve the goals set out in statute. The Committee deliberated on the matter and, after some debate, agreed that it supported the inclusion of this higher threshold of statutory duty in the Bill. It will require public authorities to take rural needs into account and give the duty the required weight when making policy. However, it will not impose a requirement on authorities to undertake their functions in a particular way or to achieve a specific outcome or result.

The Committee succeeded in securing an amendment from the Department to strengthen the duty. However, as the amendment would have resulted in a change from the original policy proposals agreed, it required Executive approval. As I indicated, the Committee heard at its meeting on 9 February that the Minister had not obtained the approval of the Executive, and, after a fair amount of debate, the Committee voted to table the amendments. As Chairperson, I fulfilled my duty and put my name to the amendments.

I now present the Committee’s position on the amendments dealing with adding other public bodies or persons: amendment Nos 2, 3, 4 and 13.

The Committee was concerned about the provision in clause 1 that will allow the Department to impose a statutory duty on other bodies. As it stands, only central and local government will fall immediately under the remit of the Bill once it is commenced. However, the Bill gives the Department the power to specify, through subordinate legislation, the bodies to which a duty will extend in the future.

The Committee considered the Department's rationale for adopting the phased approach to extending the duty. The Department provided a two-part explanation: first, it allows time for further consultation with the bodies that will be subject to the duty; and, secondly, the Department stated, it was difficult to know which bodies should be listed in the Bill and time was needed to refine and clarify that. However, the Committee remained concerned at the omission of named non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) from the Bill, especially given the fact that so many of our public services are delivered by those arm's-length bodies. During the discussions about which bodies should be listed in the Bill, reference was made by various stakeholders to the Local Government (Community Planning Partners) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. Draft regulation is being considered by the MLAs on the Committee for the Environment. It contains a schedule listing organisations that will be required to participate in the local government community planning process. Stakeholders indicated that it would be appropriate to adopt that list and include the organisations named in the schedule in the Rural Needs Bill.

The Committee considered the list, which includes the PSNI, the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, the Education Authority, health and social care trusts, Invest Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service board, the Housing Executive, the Northern Ireland Library Authority, the Tourist Board, the Regional Agency for Public Health and Social Well-being, the Regional Health and Social Care Board and the Sports Council. The Committee also commissioned the Assembly Research and Information Service to produce other lists of potential bodies that could be included. The lists of every NDPB in Northern Ireland proved to be very extensive and long. It was apparent that picking and choosing public bodies from such lists would present its own difficulties. I should point out that the Committee considered other ways of addressing the issue and noted that the Bill, as it stood, allows for other public bodies to be added at a later date.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Irwin: OK.

Mr Allister: Can the Member explain why the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, which can be very intrusive in rural life, is not included in the list? Is it not the case that amendment No 2 removes, at line 9, the catch-all capacity to add further bodies to the list?

Mr Irwin: As far as I am aware, other agencies can be added to the list. The Member reads it differently, but I am told that they can be added. The planning agency is one that could be added, and maybe it should be. The Member makes a valid point in that regard.

The Committee acknowledged that this approach would have certain advantages, namely that it would allow proper thought to be given to what bodies could be added. It would also allow time for such bodies to prepare for taking on the additional duty.

One other area that caused minor difficulties for some members of the Committee was the lack of consultation with the public bodies that may be added to the Bill. There was discussion of whether it was fair to add public bodies to the Bill and not give them any warning or time to prepare for that duty. It was asked whether it was fair not to take time to talk and get opinions on the pros and cons of having a duty to consider rural needs; for example, such bodies might need to consider whether any additional financial or administrative resource was required to comply with the duty.

I should make it clear that the Committee probed the issue of the cost of the Bill to central and local government. In our questioning of both DARD and local government representatives, we asked questions around the additional financial or administrative resource that might be required.

DARD officials informed the Committee that, overall, it was not expected that the duty would be very onerous or expensive to carry out.

1.00 pm

The Committee also considered the use of a mechanism that named those public bodies in the Bill but allowed a gap of one to two years before the provisions of the Bill applied to them. After significant discussion, the Committee decided to go back to the list suggested by the majority of those who provided evidence to the Committee. This list, as I mentioned, was taken from the Local Government (Community Planning Partners) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. The list has the merit of creating a cross-cutting element. It would bring together the bodies that expect to work together in a local government community planning process. There is, after all, an expectation that all those involved in the community planning process would have to consider the needs of rural dwellers in a council district.

The Committee, therefore, requested that the Minister bring forward an amendment to add those bodies to the Bill. The Committee did not request any delay in the application of the provisions of the Bill to those bodies. The Minister concurred and provided the amendment, which the Committee considered and subsequently agreed.

The current Bill names Departments and local government as falling immediately under its remit. It has provision for other public bodies or persons to be added at a later date by subordinate legislation. The amendments would act to remove the reference to central and local government and other persons specified at clause 1(2). The amendments would then create a schedule to the Bill naming Departments, local government and the additional bodies that I referred to, such as the PSNI, education bodies, health trusts and Invest Northern Ireland. For members' information, these are all listed in amendment No 13.

The Committee was also conscious of the need to retain flexibility to adapt to changes in the future. The Committee felt that it was important that any list of bodies added to the Bill should be subject to regular review. This would allow public bodies to be added to the list and defunct NDPBs to be removed as appropriate. So, in addition to adding named organisations, the Committee requested an amendment requiring that the list be reviewed and amended as necessary at given intervals. This is amendment No 3.

The Minister agreed and provided the amendment to the Committee. She suggested one further amendment to make transitional provision for these bodies. This is amendment No. 4. The Minister indicated that she was willing to provide these amendments but that, as was the case with the previous amendments inserting “have due regard to”, Executive approval was required. At its meeting on 9 February, the Committee heard that the Minister had not obtained Executive approval for these amendments, and, after a fair amount of debate, the Committee voted to table the amendments on additional public bodies. As Chairperson, I fulfilled my duty in putting my name to the amendments on behalf of the Committee.

I will now move on to present the Committee’s position on amendment No 5. When the Committee considered evidence from stakeholders, there was a concern relating to the need to strengthen the wording of clause 2. Many stakeholders suggested that the first line of clause 2 be amended from:

“The Department may take such steps”

— as originally drafted — to:

“The Department will take such steps”.

The main reason appeared to be a concern that there was nothing in the legislation to compel anyone to have regard to the guidance, advice or information.

The Committee discussed this with DARD officials, who asked the Committee to note that the intention is that clause 2 provide an enabling power, which will have a broad scope. Nevertheless, after due consideration, the Committee agreed that it required an amendment to clause 2 with the effect of deleting “may” and inserting “will”. The departmental officials indicated that the Minister was content to take this amendment forward. The Committee noted that the amendment will strengthen the role of the Department in providing support for rural proofing and the implementation of the Bill. The Committee noted and had no concerns with the advice that the wording of such an amendment be “must” rather than “will”. The Committee, therefore, supported that amendment.

I will now present the Committee’s position on amendment Nos 8 and 10, which relate to clause 3, “Monitoring and reporting”. Clause 3 imposes a statutory duty on public authorities to compile information on the exercise of its functions under clause 1 and provide that information to the Department. In addition, it places a statutory duty on the Department to prepare an annual report. This report will contain the information sent to it by the other public authorities and details of the exercise of DARD’s functions under the Bill. Clause 3 also requires that the report be laid before the Assembly.

In consideration of the evidence provided, it became clear that many stakeholders agreed that the provisions under clause 3 required strengthening in order to ensure accountability and transparency. There was a suggestion from several organisations, including the Rural Community Network, the Rural Development Council, the Northern Ireland Rural Women’s Network, the Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA) and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and Senior Managers (SOLACE) NI, that the clause be amended to require the Minister to make an annual statement to the Assembly assessing the impact of the Rural Needs Bill. The Department’s report informed the Committee that, in principle, the amendment could be made to provide for a ministerial statement on the monitoring report. However, legal advice provided to the Department indicated that it would not be appropriate for such a statement to cover the impact of the Bill, as this would require a judgement to be made on the extent to which public authorities had discharged their duties. The Department felt that making such an amendment would go beyond the intended monitoring and reporting arrangements and create a false sense of the accountability of public authorities to DARD. The Committee deliberated on the matter and agreed that the amendment that required the Minister to provide an annual statement was desirable. However, the Committee did not want such a provision to be prescriptive and felt that it should read:

That would allow the Assembly to receive an account of how rural needs were being considered by Departments and other public bodies in the policymaking process. It could also act as an incentive to encourage Assembly Statutory Committees to undertake scrutiny of the issue. Having clarified this position, the Committee requested that the Department consider such amendments. We were pleased that the Minister agreed to the amendments requiring the Minister to give an annual statement to the Assembly. The Assembly will, therefore, have the opportunity to question the Minister every year on the whole range of issues relating to the Rural Needs Bill and its operation in practice. It will also open up the opportunity for Statutory Committees of the Assembly to hold their Department and appropriate arm’s-length bodies to account. A further amendment was proposed to require the Department to publish the annual monitoring report. The Committee indicated that it was content with the two amendments.

I have presented the Committee’s position on those amendments agreed by the Committee and tabled in the name of the Committee and the Minister. The Committee has no position on any of the other amendments.

I will say, as spokesperson for the Democratic Unionist Party, that we have some concerns. We have concern with amendment No 5. Replacing the word “may” with “must” creates a problem for us. We believe that it goes too far and is too prescriptive. We also have issues —

Mr Swann: I thank the Member very much for giving way. I realise that he is speaking now as a member of the DUP. In the Committee deliberations on this amendment, it was the Committee that asked it to be strengthened by moving from “may” to “will”. The Department came back looking for it to be strengthened from “will” to “must”. Why does the Member’s party have such a concern about strengthening what the Bill will deliver? It is perverse that the DUP is using a petition of concern, which was originally envisaged as something to protect minorities. I am concerned that there is a perception from that side of the House that the rural community is no longer a minority that needs protection, which is the basis of the Bill.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Member for his comments. As a party, we looked at that in detail and feel that it creates an issue for us. That is the decision we have made. The Member may have another opinion, but that is the opinion of my party.

We also have concerns about amendment No 6, in the names of Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann. It could create a very heavy financial commitment so we have concerns about that and will not be agreeing to it.

Mr McGlone: I thank the Member for giving way. The whole issue around some of the amendments — I have looked at them — is to give more and stronger protections to rural communities and people living in rural areas. I, like you, am one of them. I would like to hear more on what the DUP rationale is. It appears that we are going to a point of being anti-rural. I am sure that that is not your logic, but that seems to be the conclusion.

Mr Irwin: That is certainly not the case. I have been a rural person all my life. We are absolutely not anti-rural. The situation is this: when we look at amendment No 6 in the names of Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann, we believe that it could be very expensive and it is not necessary. We also feel that amendment No 9, which is in the name of the same two Members, creates a considerable duty that could be very costly. That is the position of my party on those issues and we will be voting against those amendments. I look forward to hearing from my fellow MLAs on the Bill.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. A key concern for many of our rural stakeholder organisations over the years has been the sustainability of our rural communities. We have witnessed, on a continual basis, the pressures on our public finances, which have put this issue centre stage. There is a growing sense of concern in rural communities that further potential cuts or reductions in services could end up having a disproportionate effect on those communities and how they are serviced.

At present, the cost of living in the countryside is much higher than in urban areas. Wages, travel to work, fuel, house prices, rates and some of the planning laws are just a few of the issues that continue to stifle rural life on a weekly basis. We continue to lose more and more of our young people to emigration, either out of the country or to the cities, due to the lack of continuous employment, suitable public transport or suitable inward investment. One of the biggest drivers of our rural life going into the future will be the new councils. They now have powers over planning, community well-being and community plans. Councils must now put rural proofing in their future plans and policies. Indeed, councils have, in the consultation, supported the proposed Bill.

The Executive adopted rural proofing in their second Programme for Government in 2002, including a commitment to:

“ensure that the rural dimension is routinely considered as part of the making and implementation of policy, by a new process of ‘rural proofing’.”

Since then, DARD has played a key role in supporting rural proofing actively across the Executive. In 2005, DARD commissioned a study of rural policy. The final report highlighted:

“a level of disappointment with the application of rural proofing and the extent to which it has been able to effectively influence decision-making ... In particular there are concerns regarding the lack of resources/funds to address issues identified as a result of undertaking the rural proofing process coupled with perceived difficulties”.

The Agriculture and Rural Development Minister, Michelle O'Neill, introduced a public consultation on the proposed Bill for the introduction of rural-proofing legislation. Between February and March 2015, nine public consultation meetings were held across the North of Ireland in key areas. There were written responses, and representatives of public bodies and individuals came before the Committee to give their views.

1.15 pm

As a result, the Rural Needs Bill was introduced in the Assembly on 9 November 2015. It completed its Second Stage on 17 November 2015 and was referred to the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee. The Committee Stage was finished, and the Committee ordered its report to be printed at its meeting on Tuesday 26 January 2016.

The content of the Bill was framed by the information that was given by the public at all the public meetings, in the written submissions and by the representatives of public bodies who came to give evidence at the Committee. So, nobody can say that the consultation or the Bill was framed by one party or two parties; it was framed around the public. It was informed by the public meetings that we had, not only the ones that we had at the Assembly but those that my party had publicly over the last two years.

We had coming before the Committee representatives of public bodies, such as the Rural Community Network, NILGA, SOLACE, the Ulster Farmers' Union and NIAPA to name but a few. Those are people who are at the coalface of rural life and know what it is like to make a living and live every day with the cuts to budgets and with austerity. Those are the people who took the stories to us, and we have to be thankful to each and every one who came to the Committee to give that information and to the people who made written submissions. Those people cannot be thanked enough. Their knowledge and support for the Rural Needs Bill is very clear; it is something that is needed.

In all of the consultations, there were no objections from anyone or any public body. There were times when people questioned different aspects of the proposed Bill, but when the issues were all teased out, there was genuine support for the Bill.

The Bill should unite the Assembly. We are putting together a framework that will see better regulation of government funding and public services and will give a better quality of life to those who choose to live in a rural environment. That is something that we have looked for for years. I said earlier that it is more expensive to live in a rural area than an urban area, and that is borne out by all the costs. If anybody wants to question that, you can answer them quite well.

Young people from rural areas who are on benefits are made to travel 18 and 20 miles to sign on. They have to take public transport to do that, which comes out of their benefits. There is a raft of examples like that. Even for those who are disabled, we have very little in our local areas. Everything is centralised. The centralisation of services and sporting facilities means that we have to travel. The disability group in my area has to travel 42 miles, and those who have been chosen for the Special Olympics team have to travel a 75-mile round trip just to train.

Sinn Féin will support all of the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee's amendments. Also, we will support Michelle O'Neill's amendments. Whilst recognising the good intentions of Mrs Dobson and Mr Swann in their attempt to strengthen the Bill, Sinn Féin will oppose UUP amendment Nos 6, 7, 9 and 11. The reasons for that will be explained by my colleague Mr Milne. As I said, the Bill should unite the Assembly.

Mr Swann: What is the Member doing on amendment No 12?

Mr McMullan: My colleague Mr Milne will come back on that.

I ask the Assembly to keep it in mind that we must unite on the Bill. We cannot use it as a form of politics in any way. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Rogers: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Consideration Stage of the Rural Needs Bill. I look forward to working alongside the Committee for the remainder of the mandate as Deputy Chair. Unfortunately, I was not in that position during Second Stage, but, fortunately, my colleague Joe Byrne was able to voice the SDLP's position on the Bill.

If I may, I will give a brief idea of my overall feelings on the purpose of the Bill. I assure the Chamber that that will be relevant to my thoughts on the proposed amendments. The Rural Needs Bill seeks to ensure that public authorities and central and local government consider rural needs when making policy decisions. That is in keeping with the Assembly's belief that policy decisions must be properly proofed to consider their impact on rural areas and communities and, when appropriate, be adjusted to mitigate any damaging outcomes. At the previous stage, my colleague outlined the SDLP position, and today I will echo that and state my belief that there should be a strict adherence to rural-proofing policies and that the Assembly, through legislation, must ensure that every Department considers adverse impacts on rural communities when deciding policy.

Mr McGlone: Will the Member give way?

Mr Rogers: I will, yes.

Mr McGlone: Does the Member accept that that has been the big issue and problem with rural proofing, in that, before, it was like grandma and apple pie, as it considered it but did not really do anything about it? The major point in and the nub of the issue for those living in rural communities is that we do not want another wish list. We do not want more grandma and apple pie; we want to see productive delivery.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Member for his contribution, and I reiterate that point. As the previous Member mentioned, our youth have either migrated or emigrated in their hundreds and thousands. In times of austerity, it seems to be the rural areas that get the biggest pinch, whether that is through the closure of our rural schools or of accident and emergency facilities at night, which is the case in my local hospital, the Downe. Rural areas get hit very hard.

The Bill is relatively short and, in broad strokes, seeks to enforce the duty on government and public authorities to consider that rural needs be enshrined in the guidance required to ensure that the duty is upheld and that the data is compiled to assist in determining rural-proofing progress. I believe that the amendments go some distance to modify the Bill to guarantee that those intentions are met.

At the previous stage, the SDLP voiced its concern about the availability of rural research and how subsequent databases can be used to ensure accountability and improvements in rural proofing. In that regard, I welcome the Minister's amendments, such as amendment No 8, which will ensure that annual reports are published for the public's benefit. Without an annual report, it becomes difficult to evaluate services on offer. If you cannot evaluate services, how can you improve them?

Regardless of the outcome of this stage today, I reiterate that clear communication from DARD is vital for the success of rural proofing and to ensure that communities are protected. DARD must be willing to step forward to enforce rural proofing so that it is not simply given lip-service but that all Departments and bodies fully respect it in policy formulation.

Moving on to the amendments, let me say that I do not believe that they are in any way controversial. In many ways, they serve to secure accountability, create greater clarity and overall improve the operation of the future Act. There are 14 amendments, six from the Agriculture Committee, three from the Minister, and five from our UUP colleagues. Amendment Nos 1 to 4 have been put forward by the Committee and seek to modify clause 1. Clause 1 relates to the duty of public authorities to consider rural needs, and amendment No 1 will replace the word "consider" with the words "due regard" and should ensure that public authorities place appropriate weight on determining rural needs.

Amendment No 2 will replace the original outline of a public authority so that the schedule can determine what will be considered a public authority under the Act. That will help to determine specific organisations and people.

Amendment No 3 will introduce a review mechanism under clause 1(2) for what constitutes an appropriate public authority under the schedule, to be enacted at least every three years. It will give the power to amend the schedule to replace, remove or modify any entry in it. The amendment will ensure that the Bill will contain all relevant organisations and people necessary for its operation and will ensure that any future Act is not constrained.

Amendment No 4 relates to the previous amendment to allow for any transitional provision that the Department may find appropriate to the operation of clause 1(2). Amendment No 5 has been proposed by the Minister and is an amendment to clause 2, which seeks to provide guidance, advice and information on rural needs and the proper implementation of rural-proofing policy. The amendment will change the wording from "may" to "must", bringing in tighter language and placing a direct duty on the Department to provide guidance, advice and information on rural needs.

Amendment No 6, tabled by Mrs Dobson and Mr Swann, relates to clause 2 and seeks to replace the entirety of clause 2(a). In operation, it is similar to the Minister's amendment but instead places an emphasis on the need for the Department to provide training on identifying and meeting rural needs to all staff who develop and implement policies related to rural proofing. There is therefore a bit of a conflict between amendment Nos 5 and 6. Amendment No 5 will place a harder duty on the Department to provide a person with guidance, advice and information on rural needs. However, it remains broad, and presumably guidance, advice and training could manifest themselves as training. The UUP amendment uses softer language but is more specific on who needs guidance — the relevant policymakers — and introduces the need for appropriate training.

Training would clear up the confusion on how to develop, implement and review rural-proofing policies. Arguably, the UUP amendment is superior, as it includes a specific need for training, which is crucial to ensuring that rural needs are being identified and dealt with appropriately.

Clause 3 imposes a statutory duty on public authorities to compile information and develop reports based on the data. The UUP's amendment No 7 relates to clause 3 and, I believe, seeks to ensure that the information compiled by public authorities on their duty to consider rural needs appears in their annual reports, which will subsequently appear in the Department's own annual report.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

The Minister's amendment No 8 further seeks to ensure that such information under clause 3 is in the public domain. The amendment clears up language — the wording is to change from "prepare" to "publish" — to ensure that material is compiled and brought forward publicly.

Amendment No 9 would place a new duty on the Department to prepare an annual report assessing how each public authority has considered rural needs. In combination with the Minister's amendment No 8, that would mean that the Department must publish that assessment. That would be useful, as it would allow public authorities to review their practices and see where they are succeeding or failing to meet rural needs and where they can improve their facilitation of such needs. The operation of those amendments will ensure greater consideration from organisations and greater progress in rural needs development.

The Minister's amendment No 10 will place a direct duty on the Minister to make a statement to the Assembly following publication of the rural needs annual report. That will allow the Minister to outline the content of the report and demonstrate the strengths and weaknesses in policy development. That will ensure greater accountability and give a greater level of recognition to rural needs.

Amendment No 11 refers to clause 4, which relates to the cooperation between the Department and other bodies. The amendment would create tighter language in that regard. It would place a clear duty on the Department to secure cooperation and exchange of information between public authorities.

Amendment No 12 relates to clause 5 and the commencement of the legislation. It seeks to ensure that the legislation is in operation no later than 1 June 2017. I agree with the amendment's sentiments, which are to ensure that the legislation is not left to wallow and will be in operation to serve the needs of rural communities as soon as possible. That clearly shows that the Assembly is dedicated to rural proofing and recognises the importance of rural needs.

The final two amendments were tabled by the Committee and relate to two of the earlier amendments. As such, I have already spoken on their general function.

Amendment No 13 would introduce a new schedule that states that the Act will consider the organisations listed as being public authorities. They include Departments, district councils, the Chief Constable of the PSNI and health and social care trusts. As discussed earlier, those will be changeable through amendment No 3. Amendment No 14 would alter the long title of the Bill, along the same lines as amendment No 1. As such, it would change the phrasing of "consider" to "have due regard to". As with previous amendments, I support those two amendments.

The SDLP supports the majority of the amendments, but we reserve the right to consider future amendments at the next stage.

Mrs Dobson: I welcome the opportunity to speak in this stage of the Rural Needs Bill. As I said in the Second Stage debate, it is essential that the Bill carry weight and be much more than a mere box-ticking exercise. Although the previous rural White Paper action plan included a lot of positive sentiments, unfortunately, I, like many, felt that it focused more on show than on substance.

The lack of targets and measurable outcomes meant that it always had the potential to become just another dormant Executive strategy.

1.30 pm

I, like many Members, know at first hand that living in the countryside has many wonderful benefits, not least the tranquility, but it has, undoubtedly, its challenges. Public transport and access to essential public services are very often much reduced, compared with that available to our urban-dwelling neighbours. People in the countryside do not expect to have a GP clinic in every small village, but, when changes are being made to existing provisions, they should expect that their additional challenges are at least considered. On a side note, that certainly did not happen in my home village of Waringstown, where the branch surgery was, first, temporarily and then permanently closed without any notice to patients. The same goes for schools. Whilst our amendment to the Bill on a presumption against rural school closures was not accepted, it is my hope that it will be, in some other legislation.

I am glad, however, that the Minister has taken the Bill forward. Whilst it is difficult to see anything in the Bill that anyone would disagree with — I may refer to that in closing — I felt that parts of it could have been improved and strengthened. As a result, Robin Swann and I tabled a number of amendments, several of which, I was glad to see, appear in the Marshalled List. Those amendments, as we know, are amendment Nos 6, 7, 9, 11 and 12. I will take each of them in order. However, given that none of them is particularly technical, I hope that they will be fairly self-explanatory to Members.

Amendment No 6 is probably one of the most important amendments. Therefore, I was somewhat bemused by Mr Irwin's comments that it was, he felt, expensive and not necessary. In my opinion, if staff are going to have a role in identifying and meeting rural needs, it is essential that they have the capacity and the awareness to allow them to generally understand the challenges that our rural communities experience. The training does not necessarily need to be that onerous or burdensome — or expensive, Mr Irwin — but it does need to be wide enough to ensure that staff in positions of importance are properly informed on the issues relating to the impact on rural areas of Northern Ireland that they will be addressing.

Amendment No 7 places a duty on public authorities to include in their annual reports information on how they have complied with the legislation. It will not be good enough to say simply that they have considered the needs of our rural population; they will need to detail how.

Amendment No 9 places a duty on the Department of Agriculture to give its assessment on how each public authority has met its obligations under the legislation. As the sponsor of the Bill, and the Department with lead responsibility for implementing it, DARD must surely be prepared to take some responsibility for enforcing it. The first step of that must be to keep an overview on how public authorities are responding to it in practice. In addition, I hope that it will be a clear desire of the House to ensure that when a public authority falls below expected standards, DARD will not be found wanting in its criticism of it.

Amendment No 11 is fairly minor but important. It proposes a change of emphasis from hoping to secure cooperation between public authorities to placing a duty on the Department to secure it. There have been too many instances over recent years of Departments and arm's-length bodies working in isolation from each other. A typical example was the widely discredited area planning and viability audit processes in our school sector. The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) continues to operate within its individual area of interest, showing no regard whatsoever for anything that the Education Authority or the previous boards were doing. My amendment will place a responsibility on DARD to try to coordinate and handle the sharing of information.

Our last amendment, amendment No 12, simply puts in the Bill a date, 1 June 2017, by which these new responsibilities will commence. I fully trust that the Bill will come into operation well in advance of that date, but the amendment will act as a safeguard, just in case.

In addition to our amendments, I, unlike other Members, support those that have been tabled by the Chair of the Committee and the Minister. Amendment No 1, for instance, will place a higher threshold on statutory duty, and despite the Department's protestations, I hope that it will appreciate why a general duty to consider was not sufficient in this case.

I am disappointed that the DUP decided that it was necessary to table a petition of concern against amendment No 5. I am still waiting to hear a credible reason for that. The purpose of the amendment was to tighten some of the language and indeed, when the Minister herself advised the Committee that she would support it, she acknowledged that it further strengthened the Bill.

The only other amendment that I want to comment on is amendment No 13, which lists the public authorities. It is an important one. Bodies such as the Education Authority and the Health and Social Care Board provide absolutely key public services. Whilst they may operate outside the Department, I believe that it is important that they are named in the Bill.

In closing, I want to say that I am disappointed that the Minister's party cannot support our amendments, given the fact that Oliver McMullan recognised that they were designed to strengthen the Bill. Finally, in trying to strengthen the Rural Needs Bill for our rural communities, you just cannot win with the DUP: 'A Fresh Start', but the same old "say no" DUP.

Mr McCarthy: I very much welcome the Rural Needs Bill. There is no doubt that rural dwellers, whilst enjoying our wonderful green and fresh environment, face many drawbacks and endure extra expense and, indeed, inconvenience. I will speak briefly, as there is not a great deal of controversy about the Bill — at least, there ought not to be. We all want to see rural dwellers enjoy life and, indeed, continue to contribute to ensuring that our landscape and farmland are preserved for generations to come. I do not intend to oppose any of the amendments, as I am of the view that they contribute to improving the outcome of the Bill.

I do have to express my dismay at the DUP's use of the petition of concern on the Bill. Surely rural needs affect all of us regardless of our community, where we are from or where we go to church on a Sunday. They affect everyone living in the community. Coming from a rural community, I know the challenges which face all rural areas. I know that they do not happen on the basis of religion. Surely that is a total misuse of the petition of concern. There may be a debate about whether "may" or "must" is appropriate, but I do not believe that it warrants a petition of concern.

I simply want to pass comment on one of the amendments, amendment No 3, which puts in place a reporting mechanism. That is essential for ensuring that we correctly assess rural needs. As that is a new process, it will provide a valuable learning experience. I hope that it will inform not just the Assembly but the various Departments and public bodies which are required to assess those needs. I hope that the report will spread best practice.

Other amendments make smaller but equally important changes, and I will support them as well. Hopefully it will be a relatively simple process. I hope that the Bill will continue its progress through the House.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I would like to take the opportunity to speak in support of a number of the amendments and on the broad thrust of the Bill.

Six hundred and seventy thousand people live in rural areas. We feel very strongly that the Rural Needs Bill will go a long way to help to address their needs. Living in a rural area has a lot of issues and challenges. Those have been well talked about today, and I have no need to go into them in any great detail. I will say that during the course of deliberations on the Bill in the Committee, and indeed in our stakeholder engagement, we heard a very strong view from rural stakeholders that whilst rural proofing has been an Executive commitment since 2002, it did not really work: it was a bolt-on or something like a tick-box exercise, and there was a need for it to be included in legislation.

They feel very strongly about and are very excited by the fact that the Bill has come into place.

It is important to point out that our bringing in such legislation is a first for Europe. Indeed, our counterpart in Leinster House, Martin Ferris TD, is simultaneously bringing in a rural needs Bill. This will be the first country in Europe to have Rural Needs Bills to provide legal protection for people who live in rural areas.

During the process, we spent hundreds and hundreds of hours deliberating, discussing and negotiating. Indeed, on 24 November, we spent an entire day taking evidence. It is important to reiterate the thanks to Stella and the team in the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development for helping to facilitate that. Indeed, thanks very much to the organisations that responded to the consultation and to groups like the local rural support networks, the RCN, the RDC, NILGA, SOLACE, the UFU, NIAPA and, indeed, to the DARD officials who made themselves available to the Committee to answer questions and to provide clarity as and when required. The organisations that came before us to make presentations represent thousands of people who live in rural areas, such as farmers, rural dwellers and non-farmers.

I will recap on some of our positions on the amendments. All the amendments — certainly all those that have come through the Committee — came from the grass roots. They came through rural stakeholder organisations. They did not come from political parties, individual MLAs or any section of the community; they came from the grass roots and from people who are on the ground working every single day for the betterment of rural areas. We felt that the people are having their say on the Bill, and that is the way we moved on. There was consensus in the Committee on how we moved through the amendments.

With amendment Nos 1 and 2, there was a strong unanimous view from all rural stakeholder organisations that we met that “consider” should be replaced with “have due regard to” and that groups should be listed in the schedule. The local rural support networks felt strongly that groups should be listed in the schedule. Indeed, during a previous debate in the Chamber, Mr Allister said that groups should be referenced. There was a suggestion — it may have been from SOLACE — that we should refer to the draft local government order 2015, which specifies the community planning partners, and those are the groups that are listed in the amendment. Of course, amendment No 3 allows that to be reviewed every three years.

Amendment Nos 6 and 7 have been tabled for debate today by the Ulster Unionists. Amendment No 6 requires DARD to train all staff. Is that all staff in the Civil Service or all staff in public authorities? That needs to be clarified. I should also point out that DARD provides training —

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr McAleer: Go ahead, yes.

Mr Swann: The amendment states that it is:

“all staff who develop, adopt, implement or revise policies, strategies and plans”.

It is very detailed as to whom we think the Department may take steps to train. While a lot of attention has been paid to the good work that the Bill will deliver, it is important that all staff at all levels throughout the bodies and organisations that will now be named in schedule 1 have the ability to understand the implications and requirements of the legislation.

Mr McAleer: I thank the Member for that clarification. I am reading the amendment: it refers to “all staff”. There will be severe resource implications if the Department is required to train all staff.

On amendment No 7, we feel strongly enough that the duty to report and the monitoring arrangements are included in clause 3.

Amendment No 9 calls for DARD to assess how each public authority considers rural needs. There may be an implication for DARD standing in judgement of other Departments. We do not want to create anything like a false sense of accountability, as William Irwin mentioned.

1.45 pm

In amendment No 12, the time limit for the commencement of the Bill —

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr McAleer: Yes, go ahead.

Mr Swann: Our desire in amendment No 9 was to give to the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development an appropriate duty to have due regard to other Departments to make sure that they live up to what it requires of them. The Bill was brought about by the Minister’s desire to make sure that rural communities are looked after and developed by all public bodies. This amendment was to give DARD the ability to make sure that other Departments and organisations fulfil their commitments and roles — as already required, although not in legislation, in the rural White Paper action plan. That is the requirement behind the amendment, and the Member and his party have been asking for that. Mr McMullan said that our amendments strengthened the Bill, so I am slightly surprised and disappointed that the Member’s party is not supporting this amendment.

Mr McAleer: The point about amendment No 9 is that it places quite a high duty on the Department. The Minister will, no doubt, pick up on that. You do not want to create the false expectation that DARD has the legislative power to stand over other Departments and hold them to account.

Amendment No 12 concerns the time limit for the commencement of the Bill. We are content to support that amendment, but stakeholders — I believe that it was SOLACE — made the point that it would be desirable to give public authorities a lead-in time to get themselves ready to implement rural proofing so that you could stagger it. I was one of those during the Committee briefings who said that rural proofing was not a new phenomenon. It has been around for a long time, so it should not be new to public authorities. In that respect, we are content to support amendment No 12.

Amendment No 13 lists the public authorities in the Bill. That is the useful thing about having a debate: the last time this issue was raised, it was brought back to the Committee, this suggestion was made and now we have it in front of us.

We feel that the Bill is good news for rural communities. It is very much informed and driven by the grass roots, and it is important for the Chamber to reflect on that. It is good news for the 37% of the people of the North of Ireland who live in rural areas. A point that I made during the last debate is that we see the Bill as part of a package of measures to improve their quality of life, including CAP reform, the £623 million rural development programme and, indeed, the protection of the tackling rural poverty and social isolation (TRPSI) budget.

We see the Bill as a huge step forward to achieving a fair and equitable rural society. It is incumbent upon us as legislators to make and shape the Bill to make it as effective as we can for the people whom we represent.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Like the Chair of the Committee, I thank the DARD staff and Committee members for their hard work. I thank the stakeholders, who gave up a tremendous amount of time and produced a lot of good, valuable stuff for the Committee in helping it to make its decisions.

I am in favour of all the amendments tabled by the Committee and amendment No 5 tabled by the Minister, Michelle O'Neill. We are against amendment Nos 6, 9 and 11, which were tabled by Mrs Jo-Anne Dobson and Mr Robin Swann. I am content that the amendments put forward by the Committee and the Minister will enhance the Bill, particularly amendment No 2, which seeks the inclusion of public bodies and persons, as opposed to just Departments and public authorities.

I recognise the intention of Mrs Dobson and Mr Swann to strengthen the Bill, but, after scrutiny, I feel that their amendments would lead to duplication, sometimes confusion, and impose a duty on DARD that is unrealistic.

We are against amendment No 6, which calls for training for all staff subject to the Bill, on the grounds that it is already covered in clause 2, as explained by my colleague Declan McAleer. In fact, it is enhanced by amendment No 5 from the Minister. Although we are content that amendment No 6 is covered in the Bill, we do not feel that we could go against Mr Swann and Mrs Dobson on it.

Potentially, amendment —

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Milne: Yes.

Mr Swann: This is a technical point. I know that I will not convince you on this, but I want to point out the difference between what is in the Bill and what is in the amendment. Clause 2(a) says that the Department can "provide any person with guidance". The provision of guidance is not the same as training. That is where we were going specifically with amendment No 6 and the new clause. It is all right being given the piece of paper that says what rural needs are about, but our amendment involves somebody sitting down with the officials and explaining to them what their duty is.

Mr Milne: I thank the Member for his intervention. You make your point well, but we are of the opinion that amendment No 6 is superfluous. We feel that we can go ahead and support amendment No 7.

Amendment No 9 potentially makes all those subject to the Bill accountable to DARD, and, as it does not have the power to impose sanctions, it would become meaningless. Amendment No 11 proposes that DARD must secure, rather than make arrangements with a view to securing, the cooperation and exchange of information from all of those subject to the Bill. This, however, raises its responsibility to an unrealistic level and has the potential to change the focus from a failure to comply with the legislation to DARD's inability to make them comply.

The Bill, as others have said, is necessary to ensure that the needs of rural dwellers are considered when policy and public services are being developed, implemented and delivered. As my colleague Oliver McMullan outlined, rural dwellers' experience of public services differs in many ways and in many areas to that of their urban counterparts. During this process, the contributions made by the various stakeholders have highlighted difficulties faced by rural dwellers when it comes to assessing services and opportunities, employment and the cost of living, to name but a few. They also raised the negative impact that the current model of measuring deprivation has when it is applied to rural areas. That subject was debated at length in the House a few months ago.

The Minister, the Department and the Committee have put a focused effort into identifying and tackling poverty, social isolation and disadvantage in rural areas. This Bill will be a welcome addition to all who are engaged in that work. The legislation builds significantly on the commitment made by the Executive in 2002, and I hope that it will give confidence to those working and living in rural areas.

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Before I speak on the amendments in the group, I will start by taking the opportunity to thank the Chairperson and the members of the Committee for their very detailed scrutiny of the Bill. I am very grateful to the whole Committee for its support to secure the Bill's passage through the Assembly within the current mandate. I also want to pay particular thanks to the many stakeholders who have contributed to the Bill and its development. As many Members have said, their advice and contributions have been invaluable. I also want to thank and acknowledge other Executive Ministers for the positive support that I have received for what I believe is a really important Bill.

Following its scrutiny of the Bill, the Committee has tabled a number of amendments that I believe will strengthen this legislation and will help to ensure that consideration of rural needs becomes an integral part of policy development and service delivery across all sectors of government.

With your indulgence, Deputy Speaker, before I address the amendments in detail, I would like to remind the Assembly why this legislation is necessary. As a rural dweller, I am acutely aware of the difficulties facing our rural communities. In meetings with farmers and other rural dwellers, I often hear about the plight of the most vulnerable, be they elderly people who can often feel isolated and alone, young people who feel that they have limited opportunities because of where they live, or people with disabilities who face challenges that are exacerbated by living in a rural area. I am conscious that our rural communities are facing even greater challenges due to the impact of reduced budgets on the delivery of public services. It is therefore crucial that government continues to focus on the needs of rural dwellers to ensure they are not unfairly disadvantaged.

Although the Executive first committed to rural proofing in 2002, the existing requirement for Departments to assess whether their policy proposals are likely to have any adverse impacts on rural dwellers is non-statutory. While there is evidence of some good practice in rural proofing, the consistent message we have heard from rural stakeholders is that rural proofing is not currently undertaken in a consistent or systematic way. There are also concerns about a lack of transparency in the process. I firmly believe that this legislation will address the issues that have been highlighted by stakeholders, both by placing a statutory duty on public authorities to take rural needs into account when developing and implementing government policies and strategies and delivering public services, and by providing the appropriate mechanisms to support and monitor the exercise of that duty. The legislation will not only provide a firm basis for the effective and consistent consideration of rural needs but demonstrate our commitment to the fair and equitable treatment of people in rural areas.

I will now turn to the proposed amendments to the Bill. Amendment No 1 deals with the nature of the duty in clause 1. Clause 1, as introduced, places a statutory duty on public authorities to consider rural needs when developing, adopting or implementing policies, strategies and plans and when designing and delivering public services. Amendment No 1 changes that to a duty for public authorities to “have due regard to” rural needs in relation to their policy development and service delivery. A duty to “have due regard to” rural needs is a higher level of duty than one to “consider” rural needs. It would require public authorities to give an appropriate and proportionate level of consideration to rural needs in carrying out their policy development and service delivery functions, without restricting their ability to take decisions on the exercise of those functions or prescribing the outcome of any policy or strategy.

Although a “due regard” duty would have some additional resource implications for public authorities, I believe that any additional resource commitment would be proportionate to the better outcomes that it can achieve. The exercise of a “due regard” duty does not have to be an overly bureaucratic process, and the guidance that DARD issues, under clause 2, will assist public authorities in understanding and discharging their obligations. I also believe that a “due regard” duty strengthens the rural proofing process, which is about the systematic consideration of whether any given policy or strategy is likely to have a different impact in rural areas because of particular circumstances or needs; the proper assessment of those impacts, if they are likely to be significant; and consideration of whether to adjust a policy or strategy to meet those particular rural needs and circumstances. Let me be absolutely clear: the amendment strengthens the process of consideration; it does not affect the autonomy of the final decision maker.

I welcome the amendment tabled by the Committee Chair. I know that, in deciding to table that amendment, the Committee had listened to the wide range of stakeholders who wanted the Bill to be as robust as possible. I believe that it and the related amendment — amendment No 14 — which would change the long title of the Bill to reflect the change to the nature of the primary duty in clause 1, will achieve that aim. As I have indicated, I wish to support the amendment; I have indicated that to the Committee on a number of occasions. I have sought agreement from the Executive on the proposed amendment. However, that agreement is yet to be obtained.

Amendment No 2 and the related amendments — amendment Nos 3, 4 and 13 — each concern the application of the Bill to public authorities. Clause 1, as currently drafted, defines “public authority” for the purposes of the Bill as Departments, district councils and any other person appearing to DARD to exercise functions of a public nature that DARD may specify in subordinate legislation. Amendment No 2 proposes to change the definition of “public authority” to be those persons included in a schedule to the Bill, to be inserted by amendment No 13. That would mean that all those public bodies that are listed in the draft local government order, as well as Departments and district councils, would be included in the Bill. Those bodies are the PSNI; CCMS; the Education Authority; health and social care trusts; Invest NI; the Fire and Rescue Service; the Housing Executive; Libraries NI; Tourism NI; the Public Health Agency; the Health and Social Care Board; and Sport NI.

Responses to my Department’s public consultation on the policy proposals for the Bill indicated unanimous support for extending the scope of the legislation beyond Departments and councils. The importance of including arm’s-length bodies that discharge public functions was also highlighted by key stakeholders and by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee during the Bill’s Committee Stage. I believe that extending the provisions of the Bill to all the public bodies that are listed in the schedule will provide consistency and cohesion in the application of rural proofing across government, particularly given the new community planning arrangements.

The commencement provisions in the Bill, as currently drafted, provide flexibility in relation to when its various provisions would come into force. That will allow for sufficient time for the additional public authorities that would be included as a result of those amendments to prepare for their new statutory duties coming into force.

Mr Speaker: Minister, I am very sorry for interrupting you at this time. As you know, Question Time is scheduled to begin at 2.00 pm. This debate will continue after Question Time, when you will have the opportunity to complete your contribution.

Oral Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Employment: Fermanagh

1. Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the ministerial subgroup on regional opportunities in relation to creating employment opportunities and infrastructural improvements in County Fermanagh. (AQO 9639/11-16)

Mrs Foster (The First Minister): The focus of the ministerial subgroup on regional opportunities has, to date, been on the north-west, but it has always been our intention that, as its work progresses, it should consider the measures required to promote economic opportunity across other areas of Northern Ireland. That will include, in due course, infrastructural and economic needs and opportunities in the south-west, including County Fermanagh.

Mr Flanagan: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a freagra. I thank the Minister for her answer. I take the opportunity to congratulate her on her elevation to the position of First Minister and wish her well in the time ahead.

Will the First Minister accept that it would make some sense for the next meeting of the regional opportunities subgroup to take place when the Executive come to Fermanagh for their meeting and that the focus of that meeting should be about potential infrastructural and other economic interventions that the Executive could make to create economic opportunities in the county?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question and, indeed, for his acknowledgement that the next Executive meeting will be in Enniskillen in the town hall on 25 February. The fact that we are bringing the whole Executive to County Fermanagh is even better than bringing the regional opportunities subgroup of the Executive to Fermanagh. We will have the whole Executive there. I hope that they take the opportunity to get out and about in County Fermanagh to make some visits. Who knows? We may even have some announcements made when they are there as well. I hope that the initiative of bringing the Executive closer to the people who elect us will make it more relevant to people on the ground and will allow some of my colleagues from the east of the Province to visit the most beautiful county in Northern Ireland.

Mr Campbell: As part of the regional opportunities group, will the First Minister endeavour to make sure that Northern Ireland has the best possible mobile phone network across all parts of rural Northern Ireland so that people can communicate by phone, text and other social media outlets, such as Twitter and Facebook, and can do so effectively, safely and without the prospect of running up a huge bill, directly or indirectly?

Mrs Foster: Absolutely. As the Member is probably aware, in my previous work in the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, we made a number of interventions in relation to mobile phone and broadband coverage. I very much welcome the fact that my colleague the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment recently announced another broadband intervention. Two pilot areas have been identified, one of which is County Fermanagh. I encourage everyone to look at the broadband pilot and to take advantage of what is available to them.

Social Investment Fund: Upper Bann

2. Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many groups in Upper Bann are still waiting to receive funds from the social investment fund. (AQO 9640/11-16)

10. Mr Anderson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress of social investment fund projects in Upper Bann. (AQO 9648/11-16)

Mrs Foster: With your permission, Mr Speaker, I will ask junior Minister Pengelly to answer the question.

Mrs Pengelly (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): Mr Speaker, with your permission, I will answer questions 2 and 10 together.

Social investment fund momentum is growing. Some 25 projects valued at £37 million have commenced, 10 projects are operational, and many hundreds of participants are already benefiting from early intervention and employment projects. It is making life-changing differences to people and communities facing disadvantage. No groups in Upper Bann are waiting for SIF funding from OFMDFM; indeed, there are four projects, with commitments of around £6.3 million, expected to impact on Upper Bann residents. They have all received a letter of offer from OFMDFM, and it is now over to the lead partner to progress further.

Good progress is being made. For example, Work IT has recruited participants, sustaining infrastructure and new directions of appointed design teams, and the community sports programme has received a letter of offer.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the junior Minister for the answer and update. I note that the southern steering group last met on Tuesday 1 December. Will the junior Minister explain, given the long delays with the fund and the impending end of the Assembly mandate, whether the groups will meet more frequently to move processes along?

Mrs Pengelly: I thank the Member for her question. I am not sure whether the Member is aware, but the steering groups are independent of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. The hallmark of the scheme was that it was a community-up scheme; it is not dictated to or influenced by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. It is up to the local steering group to meet, and I presume that it meets when it feels that it needs to meet. The Member may want to raise the issue of the local steering group with her party colleague and other members of the group.

Mr Anderson: Junior Minister, now that all the projects are being progressed, can you confirm that the social investment fund objective of ensuring a wider benefit for all the traditional schemes, such as DSD's neighbourhood renewal scheme, has been achieved?

Mrs Pengelly: I thank the Member for his question. When we were designing the social investment fund, we listened to the frustrations of many people — community organisations and communities — who felt excluded from the very tight criteria of a number of schemes, such as the neighbourhood renewal scheme in the Department for Social Development. They made it absolutely clear, in particular to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister, that there were considerable needs around dereliction, community halls, employment, childcare and educational underachievement that were much wider than simply the 10% most deprived areas in the multiple deprivation indexes. Therefore, now that we have looked at all the projects that have come through under the scheme, I am glad that there will be a much wider impact. I am glad that places such as Portadown, Banbridge, Fermanagh, Markethill and large parts of my constituency of South Belfast can now benefit from the scheme, when before they were excluded. It has taken time to achieve that, because it is a different way of working, but I am glad that those areas will benefit and will see progress made on the ground.

Brexit: Referendum Discussions

3. Mr Murphy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on any discussions they have had with the British Government on the proposed referendum on an exit from the European Union. (AQO 9641/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The renegotiation of the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union is being taken forward by the Prime Minister and a select group of Ministers in Whitehall. The deputy First Minister and I will meet the Foreign Secretary on 1 March 2016 and will raise matters with him face-to-face. The issue directly affects everyone in Northern Ireland, so we have specifically requested engagement from the UK Government. Unfortunately, the request has not secured a meaningful response on the detail. We have been kept informed of developments but have not been involved.

Mr Murphy: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the First Minister for her response, and I share her obvious frustration at the dismissal of concerns, not just those of the people in the North. The people in Scotland and Wales are suffering from the same sense of being ignored and, to a certain extent, being treated with contempt by the British Government.

Given that the proposal seems to be for a referendum fairly close on the other side of our Assembly election, does she share my concern that there has not been a proper debate about the disastrous consequences of the British Government and, essentially, the people of England deciding to leave the European Union, particularly for here and for people in our farming communities, people along the border area and people in business? Those very serious consequences have not been debated properly and will not get the opportunity to be debated if we are forced into a referendum soon after our election.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. Our concern with the date of the referendum being so close to the Assembly election is that all the issues relating to the European referendum would come on top of the Assembly election issues and there would be a lack of clarity on those issues. I accept that people have said to me, "Do you not think that we can make up our mind about the Assembly elections and the European referendum?". That is absolutely right. However, I have to take cognisance of the fact that the European Union referendum campaign will be a national campaign. Therefore, it will get national attention and will be on our screens a lot of the time at the same time as we are fighting an Assembly election, when we no doubt want to set out our visions of where we would like to see the Assembly and Northern Ireland going in the next four years. It is a problem and is something that we will have an opportunity to discuss with the Foreign Secretary. It may be too late at that stage, because, of course, we are very aware that the Prime Minister hopes to close off the negotiations this coming weekend. I regret that: if the Government are to give respect to the devolved Administrations, they should be listening carefully to what we have to say.

I hear what the Member says about the substance — we probably have differing views on that — but I think that we can all agree that we need a very clear debate about the referendum. Unfortunately, I do not think that that will happen.

Mr Nesbitt: The Minister's colleague the Enterprise Minister spoke in the House recently about the options that could be available if the United Kingdom were to withdraw from Europe. The Norwegian, Swiss and Turkish models were discussed.

Can the First Minister share with the House her assessment of the pros and cons of those various options for Northern Ireland?

Mrs Foster: I think it is important that we have a very clear referendum. The Member may prefer different types of models, and it is up to him whether he prefers a Swedish model as opposed to a Turkish model, and I cannot comment in relation to those issues. What I can comment on is the fact that we need a very clear debate on the implications of remaining and the implications of leaving. Unfortunately, we have not been able to have that debate yet. Of course, we have to wait for the conclusion of the negotiations, but it looks very likely that the negotiations will be completed this weekend, and then things will become very clear.

Mr Givan: Will the First Minister confirm that, whatever the United Kingdom's relationship is with the European Union, she will ensure that we continue to benefit from the most important relationship of all, that being Northern Ireland's place within the United Kingdom?

Mrs Foster: Of course I will continue to make sure that the union between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom is to the fore of all that I do. As the UK is the fifth largest economy in the world, the union is critical to our future, and we must make the most of it. Indeed, when we go across the world, part of our selling point is that we are part of the United Kingdom and benefit from the regulatory system that the United Kingdom gives to us. That includes the currency issues as well. Absolutely, I agree with the Member that, going forward, this is a critical relationship and will remain so.

Delivering Social Change

4. Mr Lyons asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the success of the Delivering Social Change signature programmes. (AQO 9642/11-16)

5. Mr D McIlveen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the value of the Delivering Social Change programme. (AQO 9643/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Mr Speaker, with your permission, I will answer Questions 4 and 5 together.

Lead Departments are undertaking an outcomes-based approach to the individual success of the initial six programmes announced in October 2012. More detailed reports on particular projects are anticipated from lead Departments in due course.

Three further signature programmes, jointly funded with Atlantic Philanthropies, are progressing well. These are in the areas of early intervention transformation, dementia services and shared education. In line with the Programme for Government commitment, OFMDFM is currently evaluating the success of the Delivering Social Change framework. It is hoped that the evaluation findings will be available in the near future.

Mr Lyons: I thank the First Minister for her answer so far. Can she give me her specific assessment of the success of the literacy and numeracy programme?

Mrs Foster: The literacy and numeracy programme is a critical part of the Delivering Social Change framework and was completed in June of 2015. It is hoped that we will have the full evaluation very soon, but already we know that some 18,653 — a very specific figure, I know, Mr Speaker — primary and post-primary children have received additional maths and English support as a result of this programme. I think it has made a phenomenal impact in terms of additional help and support. On average, 85% of those pupils have achieved or, indeed, exceeded their individual target level in literacy and numeracy. So we have made a big impact with the literacy and numeracy programme. I also very much welcome the fact that we were able to employ over 300 recently graduated teachers to assist with that programme.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the First Minister for her answers so far. The Minister will also be aware that another central component of the Delivering Social Change initiative was the nurture unit programme. Can the Minister give us an indication of the impact so far of the nurture unit programme?

Mrs Foster: This is another fundamental part of what we were trying to achieve. In the short time that I have been in this post, I have had the opportunity to visit a couple of these nurture units, which are placed in primary schools. They have made a big impact for the children who have been able to avail themselves of them. Over 400 children have attended a Delivering Social Change nurture group. There are other children as well, in the 20 schools, who can benefit from the short-term support available in the nurture room. Indeed, when I was going around the various nurture units, I was lobbied very hard to make sure that these nurture groups continue.

2.15 pm

I know that the Department of Education is looking at funding to allow that to happen, because it recognises that this early intervention has made a big impact on getting kids ready for schooling. Before this, there was a real difficulty with that and, in fact, many children were being presented for school who were not ready for it at all. These nurture units have made a real difference to those children.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat. How will any review or evaluation of the Delivering Social Change programme help to inform any new Programme for Government process?

Mrs Foster: As I have indicated, we are hoping that the evaluation is looking at the outcomes. I have mentioned a couple of figures relating to the number of children we have been able to interact with, either through the nurture groups or through literacy and numeracy. We are looking at the impact that those schemes have had on the children and whether the children have improved since they were involved in those schemes. The early evidence indicates that they have benefited from the interventions. You have to understand and remember that the framework approach under Delivering Social Change was a completely new way of bringing these projects to fruition. The idea was to make an intervention and, if the intervention was a positive one, that it would be mainstreamed, perhaps through other Departments. I hope that that is what is going to happen in this case.

Mr Dallat: I welcome the First Minister's responses so far, particularly in relation to the improvements that she has indicated in literacy and numeracy. Does she agree, given that we have 250,000 people between the ages of 16 and 64 with serious literacy and numeracy problems, that this particular issue should not be dependent on charities, even ones as noble as Atlantic Philanthropies?

Mrs Foster: The way in which we are working with Atlantic Philanthropies is to have a co-design, so that it comes in and works with us and then we design a programme that is good for society. We have talked a lot recently about the fact that government cannot do everything, but we need to identify what we can do along with partners, perhaps in the private sector or the third sector, that can make a real difference, and this is a good example of that. Atlantic Philanthropies is an absolutely marvellous organisation that does a lot of good in our society. The fact that it is working with us, through OFMDFM, will make a real difference, and I welcome the approach.

Mrs Overend: I thank the First Minister for the detail that she has provided this afternoon. Given the success of the literacy and numeracy programme, can the First Minister indicate whether the Minister of Education made a case for it to be streamlined rather than closed down last year?

Mrs Foster: As I have already indicated, the whole idea behind these programmes was that we would have an intervention and evaluate whether that had made a positive impact and then, hopefully, other Departments would come alongside and take them up. It was never intended that OFMDFM would continue to fund literacy and numeracy or, indeed, nurture units, because there is a recognition, of course, that those belong in another Department. Once the evaluation has been completed overall on Delivering Social Change, it will then be a matter for the Minister of Education as to whether he wants to take the issue forward.

Paramilitary Organisations

6. Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any discussions they have had with the Department of Justice or others on the disbanding of paramilitary organisations since 'A Fresh Start' was published. (AQO 9644/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The former First Minister, Peter Robinson, and the deputy First Minister wrote to Lord Alderdice, Professor Monica McWilliams and John McBurney in December 2015 with the terms of reference for the three-person panel which is to bring forward a strategy for disbanding paramilitary groups before the end of May. The deputy First Minister and I subsequently discussed the matter during our quarterly review meeting on 14 January with the Secretary of State, Theresa Villiers, and the Irish Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade. On Tuesday 9 February, the deputy First Minister and I met Lord Alderdice, Professor Monica Mc Williams and Mr John McBurney to discuss their work to date.

Mr Allister: Does the First Minister still think that one of the signatories to 'A Fresh Start', namely her partner, Sinn Féin, is inextricably linked to the still-active IRA, as she said in September? If she does still think that, does that amount to an acknowledgement that she is in government with the IRA, Army Council and all?

Mrs Foster: The last time I looked, my partner was somebody completely different, but that is another matter. I refer the Member to various parts of the Fresh Start Agreement; I do not know whether he has had the opportunity to read it yet. That agreement clearly states that no party to the agreement will accept:

"authority, direction or control on our political activities other than our democratic mandate alongside our own personal and party judgment."

It is clear to me that we have set out a very good road map to deal with paramilitarism, which has not been dealt with to date and which I regret. In Fresh Start, we have set out a clear road map to deal with the issues, including a strategy to disband the paramilitary organisations that have been referred to. A task force has been put in place, and a Pledge of Office, which, I understand, is being put into legislation at Westminster as we speak. As far as I am concerned, there is a very clear road map ahead. The Member may want to go backwards, but I want to move forwards.

Mr Allister: With the IRA.

Mr Speaker: Thank you. Order.

Mr I McCrea: The Secretary of State recently made a speech about the role of paramilitary groups during the Troubles. Does the First Minister agree with the sentiments expressed by the Secretary of State and that it is time that paramilitary organisations went out of business once and for all?

Mrs Foster: I could not agree more with the Member, and I welcome the Secretary of State's speech last week. Over the past couple of months if not years, there have been attempts to try to rewrite what happened here over the past 35 to 40 years. It is important that the facts remain, which are that 90% of those who were murdered in Northern Ireland were murdered by terrorist organisations. It was not the state that caused those terrible deaths, and it is important that we remember that when we have a narrative about what happened in the past. Certainly, as far as I am concerned, there will be no amnesty and no rewriting of the past, and we will provide support for victims in their search for justice.

Mr Attwood: The Minister referred to the legislation at Westminster and the Pledge of Office. Clause 7 states:

"to support the rule of law unequivocally in word and deed and to support all efforts to uphold it;"

Given the new Pledge of Office, does she agree that there should be no doubt whatsoever that that includes endorsing, in word and deed, the activities of the National Crime Agency in the North and the Criminal Assets Bureau in Ireland?

Mrs Foster: I can give a very short answer to that: of course it does. Indeed, the Member refers to paragraph 2.5 of the 'A Fresh Start', and those words will be faithfully translated into the legislation, which, I understand, is to get its Second Reading next week.

Mr Beggs: It was of course as a result of the actions of the Ulster Unionist Party that paramilitarism made its way to the highest point of the agenda. Following the paramilitary murders last autumn — and just last week in Dublin, there were murders involving paramilitaries from this part of the world — does the First Minister agree that the community wants more concerted and concrete action to show how paramilitarism is being undermined and removed from our society?

Mrs Foster: I find it absolutely bizarre that a member of the Ulster Unionist Party can stand up, without laughing, and say that that party brought the issue to a conclusion when it was not even there. The Fresh Start Agreement is a good start to dealing with paramilitarism and criminality, and I look forward to the time when the Ulster Unionist Party admits that it made a mistake and should have stayed and dealt with the issue instead of walking away.

Urban Villages: Funding

7. Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how funding for Urban Villages will be allocated during 2016-17. (AQO 9645/11-16)

Mrs Foster: With your permission, Mr Speaker, I will ask junior Minister Pengelly to answer this question.

Mrs Pengelly: The Urban Villages team is undertaking a programme of engagement in each of the five urban villages. Stakeholder engagement workshops are taking place until March 2016. The outcome of the engagement will be the creation of integrated development frameworks for each urban village, which will detail, in priority order, the capital and revenue projects identified from the extensive stakeholder engagement. Funding for Urban Villages in 2016-17 will be allocated following consultation with all Departments to identify the funding required to progress headline actions, of which Urban Villages is one.

Mr Lunn: I thank the junior Minister for her answer. Will she perhaps give us a bit more detail about the timescale for all that, particularly in view of the intervention of the election and the summer recess? It could be Christmas before we know it.

Mrs Pengelly: I thank the Member for his question. Through the Strategic Investment Board, we have appointed a team and a director to coordinate the work, which will continue regardless of the election. It is led by a professional team comprising construction experts, urban experts and regeneration experts. They have been involved in detailed engagement with community organisations and have held community consultation events to really talk to residents, retailers and businesses.

I am confident that this work will continue regardless of the election cycle. The aim is to have the development frameworks produced by the end of March, so we are about six weeks away from having those draft plans. There will be an extensive process of consultation. We want the communities to own those plans and see their ideas reflected in them. We want the plans to be workable and be able to be phased in. Once we get the plans, they will inform funding decisions on the way forward, probably scheduled over the next two, three and five years, to give us some indication of the drawdown that we need. We expect this to be a largely capital programme. However, at the very heart of this is, under Together: Building a United Community, building the social capital of these communities, so there will be a project or revenue element on encouraging identity, confidence and community spirit within it.

We are already working on some projects, including those on events, cultural identity, education and capacity building, while consulting on what capital works are required. In many of these areas, there is a need for capital investment.

Mr Dunne: I thank the junior Minister for her answers. Will she advise what plans other Ministers have to maximise support for Urban Villages from other funds that may be available?

Mrs Pengelly: I thank the Member for his question. There are two very distinct elements of the Urban Villages programme. One is the additional funds that will be given centrally through the Together: Building a United Community fund, particularly in support of tackling dereliction, physical regeneration and some of the project support that I mentioned. The second element of it, though, is to help many of those communities to be better coordinated and to maximise existing external funds. That may be identifying a plan of action and looking at where the most appropriate fund for that may be. It could, for example, be European funding, funds from the Department for Social Development, or the Department for Communities as it will become. It could be from local government, or perhaps funding entirely external to government. We want to be able to support these communities directly, through the Northern Ireland Executive, and maximise the benefit through better coordination and the identification of other opportunities.

Mr Speaker: That is the end of time for listed questions. We move to topical questions.

Dealing with the Past: Chief Constable's Comments

T1. Mr Kennedy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their reaction to the Chief Constable's recent comments on dealing with the past. (AQT 3481/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I have to say that, when we comment on the past, we all need to be very careful that we are not adding to the trauma that many live with daily. Some of those whom I met recently recounted to me that, when something is said — it may not be a big moment to the person who said it — the victims who hear it are deeply hurt, and many can be re-traumatised. I certainly do not agree that a line should be drawn under the past.

We have to deal with the issues. We have to go through the processes and we will continue, as I have said over the past couple of days, to support the victims in getting justice if that is what they want to do. Indeed, the Member knows, having dealt with victims' families at close quarters, that some want the truth, others want justice, and others simply want it all to go away. For those who want to continue the search for justice, we must continue to support them.

2.30 pm

Mr Kennedy: I thank the First Minister for her answer. Can the First Minister confirm that no discussions or negotiations are taking place at present with any other parties on the issue of dealing with the past?

Mrs Foster: We indicated after the Fresh Start Agreement that we would continue to discuss issues, particularly with victims' families and various groups. Those discussions continue; indeed, I have a number of meetings today with families and victims' groups. We want to listen to what they have to say to us, so it would be wrong to say that no discussions are taking place. The outstanding issue that prevented agreement in Fresh Start on dealing with the past is one for discussion between Sinn Féin and our Government, as I understand it. Those discussions may well be continuing but, as far as I am concerned, I am engaging with and listening to the various victims' groups.

Mr Speaker: Mr Chris Hazzard is not in his place. I call Mr Trevor Clarke.

Corporation Tax: Jobs

T3. Mr Clarke asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given the First Minister's work on the reduction of corporation tax, what they will do to attract jobs to Northern Ireland when the rate is lowered. (AQT 3483/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. It is not a question of waiting until April 2018, which, as he knows, is the date set for the devolution and reduction of corporate tax in Northern Ireland; we have to start selling the proposition now. Invest Northern Ireland is currently setting about a programme to let the rest of the world know what is happening here in April 2018 and, when I go to the United States in March with the deputy First Minister, we will undertake some visits in relation to this very positive story for Northern Ireland. We will speak to companies that, heretofore, we have not been able to attract, not just about the proposition that we already have but about the fact that we are going to have a lower rate of corporate tax. Those meetings will take place in March in and around the St Patrick's Day events.

Mr Clarke: I thank the First Minister for her answer. I am sure that the First Minister will use the opportunity in America to demonstrate, through the lower corporation tax and other incentives, that Northern Ireland is the best place in Europe for investors to come to.

Mrs Foster: We will not just talk about corporate tax, although that is a new tool, but about the fact that we have a low cost base in comparison with other parts of the United Kingdom and, indeed, the Republic of Ireland; the fact that we have a very young, able and skilled population; and the fact that, when companies come, staff are very loyal and work very hard for them. We have a very good story to tell, and that is why we have been able to attract the number of jobs that we have over the past five years — indeed more jobs at any time than under any other Administration here. We have a good story to tell, but now we have an even better story to tell, and I look forward to telling it.

OFMDFM Budget

T4. Mr Maskey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that, last week, the SDLP proposed taking £800,000 from the OFMDFM budget to be allocated elsewhere, to outline what the removal of that £800,000 would mean to services provided by OFMDFM. (AQT 3484/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I did not hear that last week. People always want to dip into the budget of OFMDFM but you have to understand, as I am sure the Member does, that our budget in OFMDFM has been cut by 5% from its baseline last year and that our resource is therefore just a little over £59 million. Taking close on £1 million out of that would certainly have an impact on other services.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Minister for her response. Will she join me in reminding people that the Department provides essential services to asylum seekers and refugees, as well as to people who are reliant on the Department's very important services, for example the Victims and Survivors Service?

Mrs Foster: Absolutely. He will know that we have allocated more money to, and indeed protected, the Victims and Survivors Service, so that is certainly not one that we would be entertaining. It goes back to the point that I used to make frequently when I was Finance Minister. We have a fixed Budget. If you take money from the pot that we have, understandably enough, money will have to be cut from another service that is delivered. People should remember that when they make pleas for more finance for x, y or z. That is all very good, but could you tell me where you want the cut to fall? That is the key issue when you are arguing about a fixed Budget.

He mentioned ethnic minorities. I am very pleased to say that the ethnic minority fund is now open for applications. That issue was raised at my last Question Time. I am glad to say that, as of last Friday, that fund is now open for applications.

Executive Places

T5. Ms Hanna asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to confirm when parties would be required to notify or to confirm their intention to take up Executive places, given that paragraph 1 of 'A Fresh Start' states, "and before the FM-DFM are selected and the d'Hondt process runs, representatives of the parties who are entitled to take up places in the Executive and who confirm their intention to do so will meet to resolve the draft Programme for Government". (AQT 3485/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Certainly. In recognition of that commitment, in the past, d'Hondt had to run within seven days of the election as far as I can recall. Under the legislation that is going through Westminster, it will be 14 days. That will give us a little bit more time to come together and decide on the way forward. So, 14 days will be the period before we run d'Hondt. We will need to know in that period whether or not parties are going to take up positions in the Executive.

Ms Hanna: Do you intend this provision to be in place in the next mandate; ie this May? If so, will that be reflected by amendments in the legislation going through Westminster?

Mrs Foster: The 14 days is actually in the legislation, so, yes, I intend that that will be operative after the Assembly election. The thinking is that it will give us time to have conversations and look at the Programme for Government work. As you know, work in relation to that is ongoing, but obviously it would be disrespectful of the new mandate if that were finished before the election. That work will be completed during that period as well. It will be 14 days, and then we will have our new Government in place.

Mr Speaker: Mr Jonathan Craig is not in his place. I call Mr Gerry Kelly.

Arlene Arkinson

T7. Mr G Kelly asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for the First Minister's views on the news that the NIO approved a request from the PSNI to withhold documents relevant to the murder of 15-year-old Arlene Arkinson, bearing in mind that this murder has never been described as a conflict-related death. (AQT 3487/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I am very conscious of my answer to Mr Kennedy's question at the start of topical questions. I certainly do not want to add to the very obvious distress and trauma that the Arkinson family is going through. It was one of the most horrific murders, made all the worse by the fact that Arlene's body was never found. Here we are having the inquest nearly 22 years later. It is a very difficult time for the family. I hear what the Member says about the public-interest immunity (PII) certificate. I am a little unclear as to whether the coroner has the right to make a judgement on the appropriateness of that PII certificate. I am reading conflicting reports on that, but I know that it is causing a lot of distress.

Mr G Kelly: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire le haghaidh a freagra. I thank the Minister for her answer. I agree with her about the sensitivity of this. However, it has come to public attention in a very dramatic way. I also agree with her about the family, but it is on having listened to the family on the radio this morning that I am asking about this. Does she believe that the refusal of access to these documents could compound the family's difficulties and grief?

Mrs Foster: The Member understands that I do not have sight of any of the documents that he is referring to, so it is impossible for me to make a determination on that issue. Obviously, it is a matter for the Northern Ireland Office and the Minister who made the determination as to why he made that determination. Therefore, I advise the Member to raise those issues with him.

A5: Future Funding

T8. Mr McCrossan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the First Minister is confident that future funding will be secured for the development of the A5 beyond this year's Budget and to state whether this project will be a top priority in the next Programme for Government. (AQT 3488/11-16)

Mrs Foster: As the Member is probably aware, we identified seven strategic capital projects in our Budget for 2016-17, recognising, of course, that we could not set the Budget for those strategic projects because we were dealing with only a single year. One of those strategic projects is the A5.

Mr McCrossan: Thank you for your answers so far, First Minister. During the transport Minister's announcement of the consultation, she said that the development of the A5 would be subject to the successful completion of statutory procedures. How confident is the Minister that such procedures will be overcome and that the A5 will be delivered for the people of the west?

Mrs Foster: I hear my colleagues saying “DRD”. It is a matter for the Department for Regional Development. Obviously, I am not au fait with all the statutory processes that have to be gone through to allow the road to proceed. All I can say to the Member is that that is a commitment that all of the Executive have signed up to. It is in our Budget as a strategic proposal, along with the A6 and a whole list of other issues. I think that it is something that will happen for the people of the west. We want to see all of Northern Ireland benefiting from good infrastructure, which means good roads, good broadband and all the other elements that some people in this country take for granted.

Mr Speaker: Mr Paul Frew is not in his place.

FM/DFM American Trip

T10. Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what sort of meetings they intend to have with political and business leaders during their trip to America in March. (AQT 3490/11-16)

Mrs Foster: It is Mr Flanagan’s lucky day: he starts and finishes today’s Question Time with me.

We intend to have meetings organised by Invest Northern Ireland on the issue that I was speaking about: corporation tax. We will have some political meetings as well. We will have the Northern Ireland Bureau breakfast, which is always a highlight. I am very much looking forward to that and to bringing the good news from Northern Ireland that we have stable government that is looking forward to and planning for the future and that people should look to us to invest.

Mr Flanagan: I thank the First Minister for her answer. I applaud her efforts to send out the positive message that we now have stable government. Will she give me a commitment that, as part of her meetings with political leaders in America, she and the deputy First Minister will raise the plight of citizens from this part of Ireland who are living in America and are deemed to be undocumented and highlight the continuing campaign to get them the ability to travel back to Ireland and then go back to America legally?

Mrs Foster: If there are any residents of Northern Ireland who have difficulties in the USA, I am certainly happy to speak about those matters. If the Member will share the information with me, I will be able to take the issue up.

Mr Speaker: Time is up. Well done, Minister, on getting through them all. Members should take their ease until we change the top Table.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

Environment

Cyclists: Road Safety

1. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what his Department is doing to encourage road safety amongst young cyclists. (AQO 9653/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The road safety strategy recognises cyclists of any age as vulnerable road users and includes a range of actions that relates to cyclist safety. A new cyclist safety television campaign, titled “Don’t forget”, was launched in April 2014, where cyclists and drivers are encouraged to take personal responsibility for their behaviour on the roads and to give other road users due consideration. The core message of the campaign is this: “Respect everyone’s journey”.

The campaign messages are addressed more fully in the online campaign, which is available on the NI Direct website, where each scenario in the ad is developed, and more detailed advice is provided to drivers and cyclists alike. The campaign has been supported by outdoor, digital and social media activity. A cyclist safety education pack that is based on the television campaign has been developed and made available to all schools and other interested organisations. It includes an eight-minute DVD, which provides a wealth of advice for cyclists. Some clips from the DVD are also available on YouTube; namely, on the use of cycle lanes and on HGV and cyclist blind spots.

Each year, my Department offers the cycling proficiency scheme (CPS) to every school in Northern Ireland. This year will be the second year of the new enhanced CPS being delivered in primary schools. During the most recent CPS season, approximately 400 schools and over 7,000 pupils participated.

A cycling skills and cycling safety guide, developed jointly by DOE and DRD, is available in hard copy and online and provides information on the benefits of cycling, basic safety requirements and the rules of the road. I recognise the continuing challenges of reducing casualties on our roads and will take forward further actions as appropriate from my Department’s ongoing analysis and research of road safety issues.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive response. I was in the wonderful Victoria Park in east Belfast recently to support Sustrans Northern Ireland in its cycling proficiency and safety scheme for children with autism, which is a wonderful scheme. The Minister mentioned schoolchildren going through some of the safety training. Only in some schools — not all — are P6 pupils afforded that opportunity. Is the Minister interested in looking at the potential for widening the scheme to include all P6 pupils in Northern Ireland?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the question. Cycling is something that he is very passionate about, and I had the pleasure — well, the experience — of being out on the bike with Mr Douglas and trying to keep up with him as he cycled through his constituency one afternoon. It is important that we make the cycling proficiency scheme available to anyone, or to any school that wishes to avail itself of it. Therefore, I will certainly look into the issue. I will look at who is being denied access to the scheme and why they are being denied access. It is vital that we get all our road safety messages out to as wide an audience as possible. Where there are keen learners, it is important that we take advantage of that.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his response and his keenness for cycling, which I very much support. What impact will the recent budgetary allocations and reductions have on road safety programmes?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for her question. I have to confess that my keenness for cycling pales in comparison to that of her party colleague the former Minister for Regional Development.

Undoubtedly, the budgetary constraints that have been faced by my Department, the Executive and the Assembly have had, and will continue to have, an impact on the amount of money available to me, as the current Minister, or to any future Minister with responsibility for road safety, to spend on road safety. One thing that those constraints has caused us to do, however, is to look at how we are spending the money that we get for road safety. Doing that has enabled us to be a bit more inventive. We have increasingly looked at social media as a means of getting out our road safety messages to the traditionally hard-to-reach audience; namely, young people who are less inclined to sit and watch 'Coronation Street' and are more likely to be up in their room online.

That is proving to be very successful so far, and the feedback that we are getting from young people shows that it is proving to be quite popular. Time will tell how effective it proves to be. We should continue to look at new media as a means of getting out the messages.

The Member asked specifically about the impact of last year's Budget cuts on our road safety spend. I saw a reduction in the £1.8 million that I was able to spend on road safety to £1.1 million.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his answer and readily accept that my bicycle is gathering rust in the garage, which is a pity. Does the Minister agree that the safety of cyclists on the roads is so serious that studying it should not be an option in schools but should be compulsory, so that every child who attends a school should have an opportunity, by right, to participate in road safety studies?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. As I said, I do not think that anyone should be denied the opportunity to learn how to stay safe on our roads. It is important that we explore every avenue to get the message to as many people as possible about how they can stay safe on our roads. It is shocking to think that some people are being denied that. Unfortunately, there are many children across our school estate who do not have access to bicycles. That is something else we should look at.

The safety of cyclists is extremely important, as is, as I said, the safety of all road users. While, a couple of years ago, we saw an increase in casualties and fatalities involving cyclists — that was perhaps attributable to the huge increase in the number of people choosing to cycle on our roads — in the last couple of years, we seem, fingers crossed, to be seeing a downward trend in that. That suggests that motorists are more aware of cyclists on the roads and, indeed, that cyclists may be becoming more aware of their responsibilities as road users.

Taxis: Dead Miles

2. Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department intends to bring additional regulations, or amend current regulations on taxis, to address the issue of dead miles. (AQO 9654/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department has undertaken some further research into the matter, and I have accepted that there is an issue to address. Therefore, my officials are examining this in conjunction with the Department's legal advisers. I have made a commitment to the Environment Committee that a legislative amendment will be made within this Assembly mandate to ensure that no negative impact is experienced by taxi operators or customers in rural areas. I expect to be able to advise the Committee of my intended course of action before the end of this month.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for his response. It is good to see that there will be a response within this mandate. Getting the detail right on a lot of the regulations as well as the implementation for the taxi industry has been very difficult at times. What monitoring arrangements are being put in place to make sure that what we have is fit for purpose so that we may need to look at whether any tweaking needs to happen in the future?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question, and I think his description of this process as "very difficult" is perhaps the understatement of the day.

It is important that we monitor it, and the Member will be aware of the timelines that have been set out for the implementation of regulations. That monitoring has started already. Over the past week or more, I have been inundated with calls and have had several meetings with people at various levels of the taxi industry: drivers, taxi company owners and the providers and manufacturers of meters. I am already looking at some of the dates we set out to see what room there might be to push them back to ensure that this transition, important as it is, is managed and carried out in a way that does not make it too difficult or impossible, as, in fact, has been the case many times, for drivers to comply with what is being asked of them.

Mr Patterson: I thank the Minister for his responses so far. In relation to the taxi regulations — as he is aware, they have generated much heated debate at times — one area that has received little attention is how they will work on a cross-border basis. Can the Minister explain whether taxis coming from the Republic will have to conform to the modifications being forced on Northern Ireland taxi firms?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. He has pointed to one of the aspects that makes this such a complicated area to legislate in and for. Currently, the cross-border arrangement for taxis is, in my opinion, unacceptable. That applies across all vehicles that might be classed as taxis, including wedding cars, for example, which are classified as taxis under the legislation, albeit as class C taxis.

For many years and with just cause, I believe, a blind eye has been turned by the authorities on both sides of the border to cross-border taxi journeys. I have raised the issue with the Transport Minister in the South previously, and I would like to see something in legislation to enable the smooth carrying out of this business across borders for our constituents. I know that many of my constituents — well, they are not my constituents any more because they live maybe five minutes away in County Donegal — would be inclined to lift the phone and ring a taxi office in Derry to come and get them and bring them into Derry, which is, strictly speaking, not permissible. However, it is what people do, and it is what works for them. It is also what works for drivers, and it is ridiculous that it should not be allowed.

Ms Lo: I appreciate that the issue of dead miles came about only recently and the Minister has agreed to bring an SL1 to the Committee by the end of the month. I also understand that he has just had a meeting with the Consumer Council on the issue. Maybe he can brief us on the steps he is taking between now and the end of the month to bring forward the SL1. Will there be an option for taxi drivers to opt out of the dead miles regulations?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Chair of the Environment Committee for that question. I have not yet had the meeting with the Consumer Council to which she refers; it is possible that I may meet the council in the near future on the issue as we try to get a robust and workable way forward. I am aware — I alluded to it in my initial answer to Mr Weir — of the difficulty that this will cause for drivers and, ultimately, passengers and customers, particularly in rural areas. That is why I have given the commitment to bring something to the Committee in the next couple of weeks on how this can and should be resolved.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for his answers. Only a Minister like Mr Durkan, who has the patience of Job, could have successfully concluded this legislation. I welcome the dead miles recommendations and look forward to them. Will the Minister outline the net benefit to the consumer in relation to the overall taxi changes?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Maginness for that question and for the compliment. However, I point out that the process is far from concluded, and I believe that the legislation, which was initially passed by the House in 2008, will soon be due to be reviewed. It ought to be reviewed as soon as possible once the regulations are in.

Throughout the long development of the new legislation, the driving force was a desire to improve the experience of the taxi-using public here by bringing our taxi law up to date. You will recall that the original raft of subordinate legislation included provision for a single-tier system. This meant that any taxi could be hailed at any time by anyone across the North. Following the annulment of that legislation last February, my officials worked closely with the Environment Committee to establish common ground on which to base new draft legislation, which has now passed successfully through the Assembly and will become operative at the end of May.

Key aims of the reform of the industry are improved accountability, so that taxi users can be sure that they are being charged an appropriate rate, and improved access to taxis in general for ordinary taxi users, wheelchair users and other customers with a disability. I am happy to say that the new regulations will go a long way towards achieving those aims. It also means that passengers will be protected by the introduction of a mandatory maximum fare, and the introduction of meters into all cars will mean that passengers can see what they are being charged, safe in the knowledge that it will not be above the maximum fare stipulated.

3.00 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call the next Member, I remind the Minister to speak through the Chair and through the mic so that Hansard can pick up all the remarks.

Fish Kills: South Antrim

3. Mr Girvan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on prosecutions in relation to fish kills in South Antrim since February 2014. (AQO 9655/11-16)

Mr Durkan: There have been three fish kills on the Glenavy river: in June 2014, in October 2015 and in December 2015. The offender in the June 2014 incident received a formal caution and paid compensation to the local angling club. The 2015 incidents are under ongoing investigation concerning a recurrent pollution source.

A file is being prepared for submission to the Public Prosecution Service regarding polluting premises discovered in follow-up investigations to the October 2014 fish kill on the Sixmilewater at Ballyclare. It was not possible to link fish mortalities conclusively to those premises.

Investigation of the major fish kill on the Ballymartin water in August 2015 is nearing completion.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his answer. I also thank him for his continued support and his endeavours to get to the bottom of some of the issues. Government bodies could be the inadvertent cause of pollution, because they have no control over what comes into their site but do have control over what happens going out of the site. Will they also be subject to major investigation by the Department?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the question and, indeed, for raising the issue again. I have worked closely with him and his constituency colleagues on the issue. I like to think that the work that we have done with local elected representatives and, most importantly, anglers in that area could be replicated across the North, because it is important that the NIEA and other government agencies build relationships with angling groups. It should not be a gamekeeper/poacher-type relationship, if you pardon the analogy. There is a lot to be gained through working in partnership. Let me assure the Member and the House that no person or organisation, be that government or otherwise, will be immune from investigation or punishment should they be found to be the cause of fish kills or any pollution-type incident.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: Minister, thank you for your answers to date. Unfortunately, there is a long history of fish kill and pollution incidents in South Antrim, particularly in the Sixmilewater, and industrial sites have allegedly been the culprits. Have there been prosecutions, and has investment in the infrastructure, particularly in the industrial sites in the Mallusk area, been encouraged, supported and overseen by the Department?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. First and foremost, it is not within the remit or gift of my Department to provide financial support for infrastructural improvements. However, we can and do provide advice to people in that regard. While I am on the subject of providing advice and education, let me say that that is precisely what my Department and officials have been doing over recent weeks and will be doing for months to come with regard to the industrial estates that the Member referred to. My officials are visiting premises to examine how they do things and to point out where and how they could do things better. Hopefully, that will reduce the risk of potential future pollution incidents. A similar exercise had been carried out in the area a few years ago, but it is always good to refresh memories and remind people of their responsibilities and the simple actions that they can take that can have major environmental benefits.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call Mr Rogers, I remind the Member that this is a constituency-specific question.

Mr Rogers: It is about fish kills. Thanks for your answer, Minister. What do you see as the main cause of fish kills, and, following on from what the previous Member said, what action is there, beyond issuing advice, to minimise them?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question on fish kills in that constituency. Fish kills can have several causes. It could be natural causes, which include post-spawning stress or the deoxygenation of the water due to the breakdown of naturally occurring organic matter and the stirring up of anoxic sediments during stormy weather. Fish kills can be caused by human impacts on the natural environment, including the release of organic materials such as slurry, silage, effluent, sewage or even milk. Disease causes fish kills, as can stress following the restocking of a river.

The Northern Ireland Environment Agency is committed to preventing pollution and fish kills throughout the North and is looking critically at its previous and current pollution prevention programmes with a view to identifying whether anything extra can be done. Following the most recent fish kill on the Ballymartin river, an extensive resurvey of Mallusk industrial estate, which I referred to in the previous answer, is under way. Work is also being undertaken on business premises adjacent to the Glenavy river.

NIEA continues to pursue robustly polluters throughout Northern Ireland through enforcement action. A core reality, however, is that, regardless of how much pollution prevention or enforcement work is undertaken by the agency and, indeed, other agencies, there will remain a small risk of some catastrophic failure, accident or criminal act leading to pollution, so there cannot be an absolute guarantee that pollution or fish kills will never happen again.

Derelict Houses: Malone

4. Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the steps his Department has taken to address the concerns of residents of lower Malone in relation to the issue of derelict houses in the Malone conservation area. (AQO 9656/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Responsibility for dereliction spans a number of organisations in central and local government. In particular, district councils have powers under the Pollution Control and Local Government Order 1978 and other local legislation to deal with dilapidated and dangerous structures. They also have primary responsibility under planning legislation to deal with listed or historic buildings in conservation areas that have deteriorated to the extent that their preservation may be at risk.

DOE has specifically addressed some of the concerns raised by residents of the Malone area by producing supplementary planning guidance, 'A Design Guide for the Malone Conservation Area'. That non-statutory guidance was prepared with the aim of encouraging a well cared for historic environment by promoting the retention of authentic historic fabric and the use of appropriate materials and historic construction methods for repairs and alterations. It also seeks to promote development that will reinforce the character of the area and townscape to safeguard the landscaping of the area.

In more general terms, I have also initiated a review of the legislation and powers available to district councils to deal with dilapidation. Much of this legislation dates back to the 19th century and is often restricted to a specific geographical area, leading to inconsistency in the powers available to councils across the North. It is a very complex area of legislation, and I am considering a range of options to make it easier for district councils to carry out this important function effectively. While much of the responsibility for direct action on dereliction falls to the relevant district council, I am committed to supporting that action wherever and whenever that is appropriate.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Mo bhuíochas fosta leis an Aire as na geallúintí sin, go háirid as an athbhreithniú atá beartaithe aige. I thank the Minister, especially for the review that is promised and for underlining his commitment.

I think, Minister, you will agree that there are some parts of Belfast, including the Malone conservation area, where dereliction is really spoiling the entire environment. I came out of St Bride's Church on Saturday and saw beautiful listed homes derelict at Sans Souci Park and Wellington Park. As we come to the end of the mandate, Minister, will you meet some of the residents of that area to discuss your ideas and your commitment and to perhaps put together their ideas and those of other Departments to see what could be done in the time ahead about that dreadful dereliction?

Mr Durkan: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Chomhalta. I thank the Member for the question. I also thank him for the virtual tour of his constituency. I would be happy to take him up on his offer to meet groups or individuals from the constituency who have an interest in preserving the rich built heritage that they are so blessed to have there. It is vital that we take what steps we can collectively to ensure its conservation. I am happy to have that meeting.

Some Members will be aware that a second survey is ongoing of the whole of Belfast. We are now three quarters of the way through that, and the final quarter that has not been commenced yet is south Belfast. Work will commence on that surveying exercise in the coming months. That will give those with an interest in our built heritage in south Belfast a very good opportunity to engage with my officials and the expertise that is retained in the NIEA.

Gold-mining: Sperrins

5. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of the Environment how he will address community concerns regarding the environmental impact of gold-mining in the Sperrins. (AQO 9657/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department's objectives for minerals development are set out in the strategic planning policy statement for Northern Ireland. The objectives seek to facilitate sustainable minerals development through balancing the need for specific minerals development proposals against the need to safeguard the environment. My Department will seek to minimise the impacts of minerals development on local communities, landscape quality, built and natural heritage and the water environment, and, where development occurs, secure restoration of the site at the earliest opportunity.

I am aware that Dalradian Gold Ltd is in the process of developing a proposal for a gold mine outside Greencastle in County Tyrone. Since July 2015, I have introduced a statutory obligation on prospective developers to consult with the community before any major planning application is submitted to my Department. I consider that engagement an essential component in addressing community concerns and environmental impacts at an early stage in developing a project. When an application is submitted to my Department, it will also be subject to the normal procedures of consultation, and any representations received will be taken into account in determining the application.

Proposals for minerals developments, including proposals for gold-mining, will also be subject to a wide range of consultation to assess the impacts on the environment, including on air, soil, water quality, wildlife habitats, landscape, sites of archaeological and historic interest, and on people. Applications for planning permission will be expected to be accompanied by robust environmental information to allow an assessment of the impacts of mining and, where required, by an environmental statement. Whilst there are clearly a number of environmental challenges in developing such mining proposals, those are matters that fall to be addressed through the planning system. I am satisfied that the system will allow community concerns to be highlighted and addressed through the range of measures highlighted.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We have time for a short supplementary question and a short answer.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answer. First of all, I should say that the recent proposal by Dalradian to develop a processing plant at Greencastle using cyanide has caused huge local concern. I welcome the local group here today. In other examples throughout the world where these things have gone wrong, there have been devastating consequences, not just for the local area but much further afield. Does the Minister share the concerns of the local people from that area?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Sorry, Minister, time is up. We need to move on. [Laughter.]

Mr Durkan: Yes. Yes.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Road Infrastructure/Road Safety: Department for Infrastructure

T1. Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the effect that the new Department for Infrastructure will have on road infrastructure and road safety and to state whether he agrees that there are potential benefits for road safety. (AQT 3491/11-16)

3.15 pm

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. The functions carried out by DOE will be split across three new Departments. I am on record, as are party colleagues of Mr Lunn, voicing concern about where some of those functions might end up and the fear that maybe our classic environmental protection function might be subsumed into another Department rather than amalgamated with one.

On the issue that Mr Lunn is referring to, its new home in the Department for Infrastructure is where it truly belongs.

It is nonsensical — Mr McCarthy might recall me referring to this in a previous Question Time — that the Department with responsibility for road safety has been separate from the Department with responsibility for implementing road safety measures. Those being realigned in the new Department for Infrastructure is only a good thing and can and should lead to improved safety on our roads.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answer. Would he then agree with me that this initiative might give impetus to the obvious desire to do away with gap junctions on our existing dual carriageways? I notice that the new dual carriageways are being constructed without gap junctions.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question, but he is proceeding before the light is green. The Departments have not changed yet, and, as of yet, I am Minister of the Department of the Environment and it is not within my remit to answer questions on measures that are the responsibility of the Department or Minister for Regional Development. That does not normally stop people from asking me about them, be they Assembly Members, colleagues in here or members of the public.

However, it is important and will allow us to look at and establish the causation factors for many of the collisions on our roads — many of the casualties and, sadly, fatalities — and maybe work more closely not just within the new Department but with our road safety partners and emergency services to get a more collegiate and collective approach to dealing with these issues.

Wedding Cars: Regulations

T2. Mr Dickson asked the Minister of the Environment why, for vintage wedding cars, he did not introduce conditions similar to those in England and Wales, with exemptions for vintage wedding cars, given that, at a meeting with representatives of the wedding car industry, he agreed that he would be light-touch when it came to the regulation of the use of vintage vehicles, which are perhaps driven only a couple of times a year, albeit that the new regulations require the drivers of such cars to be fully PSV'd taxi drivers. (AQT 3492/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. I know that this issue is close to the Member's heart. My personal experience of wedding cars has been a negative one — a joke. However, I do recall meeting the Member and representatives of the wedding car industry. A lot of exemptions in the legislation have been introduced for wedding car drivers. They are classed as class C taxis. Indeed, some of them are very classy when you have Rolls-Royces, Jaguars and what not.

I do, though, agree that there are still concerns. For example, part-time wedding car drivers who might drive 20 days a year in their profession are expected to undertake continuous professional development or training as well as pay the full price of a licence. I said earlier that this legislation will be due a review. It was passed in 2008, and it is a sad indictment of the Assembly that the regulations are being implemented only now. I imagine that the review will commence as soon as this summer. I think that wedding cars will be looked at, especially as we do not have to reinvent the wheel: we can just look at other jurisdictions and see how they dealt with this matter.

Mr Dickson: Minister, the reality is that the regulations came in only a couple of weeks ago. You have completely and utterly failed the wedding car industry, and, much further than that, you have disappointed many brides and grooms. Quite simply, you have driven the wedding car business out of business, particularly when it comes to the use of vintage cars. Will you agree, yet again, to meet me and the industry to see whether we can hammer out a solution and a settlement of the issue?

Mr Durkan: Oh. I am happy to meet any Member and representatives from any industry. I am conscious that this is the second successive Question Time in which a Member from Alliance has accused me of failing something. He must be dying to get into the press with something. I know that it has been a quiet four or five years for the Member. [Laughter.] However, I am certainly happy to meet him. I do not accept that I have failed; I think that I have succeeded where others have failed in getting this through. I will be the first to put my hand up, as I did during Question Time proper, and say that this is not perfect. However, I will work with Members and with the industry to get it as close to perfect as it can be.

Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme

T3. Mr McKinney asked the Minister of the Environment to comment on the recently announced termination of the renewable heat incentive scheme. (AQT 3493/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. I think that all Members will probably have been inundated with correspondence about the announcement by the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment of the termination of the scheme. Like, I am sure, most Members, I have concerns about it. I have particular concerns as Minister of the Environment about potential impacts on our ability as an Assembly to meet our emissions reduction targets. That is something that I have reflected on, and I will make direct representation to the Minister on it.

Mr McKinney: Of course, this is not the first time that we have had implications around those targets affected by action by the Department of Enterprise. Combined with the earlier ending of the ROC support scheme, there will be a further impact, so what conversations can the Minister now have to ensure that we make a meaningful contribution to mitigating climate change against this backdrop?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the questions. While I have responsibility for our climate change policy and for meeting the targets in the Programme for Government and elsewhere, including by the UK and by Europe regarding emissions reductions, energy policy is the responsibility of the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. I spoke to Mr Lunn about my inability to speak for other Ministers, and the same will apply here. However, I will take the opportunity to give some sort of overview of where we stand with regard to our targets. Current projections indicate that we are close to the target of a 35% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2025, and that was agreed in the Programme for Government. However, its achievement remains challenging, and decisions such as the two referred to by the Member on the renewable heat incentives and the ROCs will make it even more challenging. It is something that we need to look at again collectively as an Executive.

Road Safety: DOE Campaigns

T4. Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of the Environment for an overview of the traffic safety campaigns the Department is involved in, not just for bicycle safety, in light of the fact that, on 20 December 2015, he received a phone call to inform him of a fatal traffic collision in which a pedestrian was killed, and, unfortunately, he knew the pedestrian and the driver, with talking to both families one of the most difficult things he has had to do. (AQT 3494/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. He recounted his experience as a community or elected representative of dealing first-hand with a grieving family who had just lost someone on our roads. The key message across all road safety campaigns coming out of my Department has to be — I used the phrase earlier — “Respect everyone’s journey”. Everyone has to respect everyone else’s journey. When I say “everyone”, I mean all road users, be they drivers, cyclists or passengers in vehicles, who need to know not to distract the person behind the wheel. Indeed, pedestrians have a responsibility, too. We had a campaign on that in the not so distant past. Pedestrians have a duty to ensure that they are seen, for example. If people are out walking or running on these dark evenings, as many are, they have a responsibility to wear high-vis gear, for example, to make life easy for motorists and so forth to see them.

In the next couple of weeks, I will launch another couple of road safety campaigns. I spoke to the Member’s colleague earlier about the use of social media: there will be a couple of social media campaigns targeted, again, primarily at young people. We have been looking at a couple of the major causation factors of collisions involving young people, one of which is the use of handheld devices or mobile phones while driving. The other one is in-car distraction, when a younger driver has passengers on board, and how easy it is to become distracted. You need only be distracted for a split second for there to be disastrous consequences on the road.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: Thank you for your answer to date, Minister. Have you got a commitment or an understanding in the financial programme that you have that the money to promote and highlight road safety and to educate the community will be ring-fenced so that that work can be carried on by the new Department?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question and, again, for his interest in the subject. It is fair to say that everyone from every party and none in the Chamber would like to see that money protected. Although I have not had or even sought that assurance to date, I think that I or whoever the new Minister in the new Department is will be able to count on support from Executive colleagues and, indeed, the Assembly for that.

Let us not forget that over the past number of years — say, 30 years — we have had tremendous success in driving down the number of fatalities on our roads. Three years ago, we had a record low. However, unfortunately, we are seeing the figures creep up again, and that is not where we want to be. We need to redouble our efforts in that regard and take every action possible to ensure that as few lives as possible are lost and that fewer families are left devastated as a result of death on our roads.

Mining: Rousky, Gortin

T5. Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment, in the light of Mr McAleer's question about the mine at Rousky in Gortin, whether DOE has sufficient experience and knowledge to deal with the complexities of mining, including intricacies such as those at Rousky and the use of cyanide. (AQT 3495/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. He lost out on the opportunity to ask a supplementary to Mr McAleer's question.

I am satisfied that my Department has the experience, skills and capability to deal with any proposal that may be submitted for a gold-mining project. Any application for planning permission will be expected to be accompanied by, as I said earlier, robust environmental information; to demonstrate application of best available technology; and to meet recognised international mining industry standards. My Department will also engage in specialist consultation with an extensive number of agencies and rigorously scrutinise all the information that is submitted in assessing all impacts of the project.

Mr Hussey: I thank the Minister for his response so far. I am sure that he is aware of the concerns of the people of Cavanacaw, where a similar mine was granted permission, including concerns about a lake of poisonous liquids. Can you again give me an assurance that that will be followed up on robustly?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: You have time for a quick answer, Minister.

Mr Durkan: OK. I give the Member the assurance that any such concerns that are raised with me or my Department are looked into and dealt with robustly.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

Mr Craig: Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I am almost tempted to call you Father Newton because, for the second time this month, I find myself confessing to not being in my seat. I apologise to you and the House. Unfortunately, I was in a meeting with Lord Morrow, which overran, and I did not get back in time, so I apologise to you and the House, and I hope that you can absolve me of my sin.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the Speaker will note your remarks. I ask Members to take their ease for a moment before we move on to the next item of business.

Rural Needs Bill: Consideration Stage

Clause 1 (Duty of public authorities to consider rural needs)

Debate resumed on amendment No 1, which amendment was:

In page 1, line 2, leave out "consider" and insert "have due regard to".— [Mr Irwin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development).]

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List: Nos 2 to 14.

Ms O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Amendment No 3 makes provision for DARD to review the list of bodies and persons included within the definition of "public authority" for the purposes of this legislation. DARD would be required to undertake a review at least every three years and would also have a power to amend the list if it considered it appropriate to do so. That would ensure that the list of public authorities is kept under review and that there is scope to extend the Rural Needs Act to other public authorities in the future.

Amendment No 4 is consequential to amendment No 3 and allows DARD to include transitional provision in any order that would amend the list of public authorities and would facilitate the extension of the Act to other bodies. I support amendment Nos 3 and 4.

Amendment No 5, which I have tabled, concerns DARD's proposed statutory role in providing support for matters connected with rural needs, which is set out in clause 2. The clause, as introduced, makes provision for DARD to have a power to take such steps as appear to it to be appropriate to provide guidance, advice and information about issues connected with rural needs, and to undertake, commission or support research into matters concerning rural needs. Amendment No 5, which was suggested by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee to further strengthen DARD's role, changes that to a duty on DARD rather than an enabling power.

I have listened to the debate today, and based on the petition of concern that has been lodged, I am minded to not move amendment No 5. However, I believe that the issue, as identified by the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development, identifies that DARD has the enabling power.

I come now to the first of the amendments tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann. I am grateful to the Members for their contribution and for their detailed scrutiny of the Bill, which has resulted in a number of amendments being proposed. I welcome the spirit in which those amendments have been tabled, aimed at building capacity across government for undertaking rural proofing and improving the transparency and availability of information on rural proofing. However, for a number of reasons, I do not intend to support some of the amendments.

Amendment No 6, tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann, proposes a new clause to provide DARD with a power to take such steps as appear to it to be appropriate to ensure that all staff involved in the activities set out in the clause receive training. The current rural proofing training was developed by DARD and is available to officials in Departments who are involved in policymaking. It is my intention that my Department will review and update that training for staff in all public authorities to which the legislation extends to reflect the obligations under the Bill when it is enacted. It is my view that the amendment is unnecessary as it gives DARD a power that it already has. Therefore, I will not support that amendment.

Amendments Nos 7, 8, 9 and 10 all relate to clause 3, which sets out the proposed arrangements for monitoring and reporting on how public authorities have discharged their duties under the legislation.

Amendment No 7 would require public authorities to include information on how they have exercised their duty under clause 1 in their annual reports. This amendment appears to be aimed at maximising the availability and transparency of information on rural proofing. However, I have concerns that it is unnecessary and could lead to some duplication of effort, as clause 3 already contains a requirement for DARD to publish information that is provided by all public authorities in an annual report. It is my view that a single report containing information on all public authorities is the simplest way of achieving the aim of making information available in a transparent and consistent way. Amendment No 8, which I will come onto in a moment, will help achieve that aim by requiring the publication of the annual monitoring report.

Amendment No 10 will place a duty on the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement in the Assembly on the content of the annual monitoring report. I believe that those requirements, combined with the requirement to lay the report before the Assembly, will provide the required level of transparency. Therefore, I intend to oppose amendment No 7.

Amendment No 9, which has also been tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann, would require DARD to include in its annual monitoring report its assessment of how each public authority considered rural needs. This amendment seems to be aimed at ensuring that there are appropriate accountability mechanisms in place in relation to rural proofing. Whilst I support the principle of ensuring that public authorities are properly accountable for fulfilling their duties under the Bill, I have concerns that the amendment could potentially create a false accountability of public authorities to DARD. That would be an undesirable and unintended consequence when the intention of the monitoring and reporting arrangements is to enhance transparency and accountability. Therefore, I oppose amendment No 9.

Amendment No 8, which I tabled and have briefly mentioned already, places a duty on DARD to publish the proposed annual monitoring report, as well as laying it before the Assembly. I believe that this amendment, which was suggested by the Committee, will address the concerns expressed by some stakeholders during the Committee Stage that the arrangements currently set out in the Bill do not offer enough transparency. Amendment No 10, which I tabled, was suggested by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee. Again, as I have already mentioned, it places a duty on the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement in the Assembly on the content of the annual monitoring report. I believe that this would enhance the monitoring and reporting arrangements and would help raise awareness of the importance of taking account of rural needs and of the availability of information concerning how public authorities have done that. I call on Members to support amendment Nos 8 and 10.

Amendment No 11, which has been tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann, relates to clause 4, which provides for DARD to make arrangements for cooperation and the exchange of information. The amendment proposes to change the wording in clause 4 from "with a view to securing" to "to secure". The intention here, I believe, is to strengthen the arrangements for cooperation and exchange of information. Cooperation and exchange of information, including, for example, sharing good practice, is in the interests of all the public authorities that will be subject to the Bill. I hope that we can work collaboratively to ensure equitable treatment for our rural dwellers. However, the proposed amendment raises the level of duty on DARD, and it would be impossible for DARD alone to absolutely secure cooperation and exchange of information. DARD cannot do that alone. My Department does not have sole responsibility for rural areas, nor will it have all of the solutions. It is therefore vital that we all work together, both within and outside of Government, to seek to deliver better outcomes for rural dwellers. Therefore, I intend to oppose amendment No 11.

Amendment No 12, again tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson and Robin Swann, requires that the provisions of the Bill are commenced no later than 1 June 2017. I, too, am keen to see the legislation brought into force at an early stage. It will be important to ensure that the necessary supporting framework, such as guidance and training, as well as the new monitoring and reporting arrangements, are in place prior to the new duties coming into force for the public authorities affected.

I envisage that the provisions of the Bill can be commenced for Departments and councils approximately a year after Royal Assent. During the Committee Stage of the Bill, there was discussion on a later roll-out date for other public authorities to allow them sufficient time to prepare. If amendments No 2 and 13, which relate to the inclusion of additional public authorities in the Bill, are passed today, as I hope they are, the effect of amendment No 12 would be that it would apply to all the public authorities listed by 1 June 2017 at the latest. That would limit the scope for a phased approach to implementation.

If amendment Nos 2 and 13 are not passed, the Bill will be commenced for Departments and councils by 1 June 2017 at the latest, and DARD can bring forward subordinate legislation at a later date for other public authorities. I am not opposed in principle to a time limit for the Bill's commencement; however, the precise date of this time limit will have implications for my Department and other public bodies.

I am willing to support the proposed amendment on the understanding that I may wish to bring forward a further amendment at Further Consideration Stage to change the specified date, depending on the outcome of today's proceedings.

I have spoken about amendment Nos 13 and 14, which are consequential to amendment Nos 2 and 1 respectively.

That concludes my comments on the amendments. Once again, I thank the Chair and members of the Committee not only for their contributions to the debate and but for their contributions throughout the legislative process of the Bill.

Mr Irwin: I thank Members and the Minister for their contributions, which have been wide-ranging and covered all aspects of the Bill. It has been interesting and informative to sit here today and listen to the views and opinions.

In light of the manner in which Members presented their position on the amendments and the detail covered in the debate, I will try to be relatively brief. I will try to cover broadly the topics discussed and make particular reference to the amendments.

There are 14 amendments, and the Bill has seven clauses. The Bill is relatively short and has a somewhat modest objective. That objective is to impose a duty on certain public authorities to consider rural needs, and that is the crux of the two fundamental matters that Members have debated and on which we are about to vote: the nature of the duty to consider rural needs and the authorities that should be covered by it.

Amendment Nos 1 and 14, which is consequential, will, if voted through the Assembly, change the nature of the duty on public authorities from that by which they “consider” rural needs to that by which they “have due regard to” rural needs. That amendment would impose a higher duty on public authorities

Many Members spoke in support of the amendments that would strengthen the duty from “consider” to “due regard”. Those included Oliver McMullan, who talked about the ineffectiveness of rural proofing to date and the importance of putting the practice on a legislative footing. Strengthening the duty to “due regard” is an important step in ensuring an improved quality of life for those living in rural areas. Mr McGlone echoed those sentiments, noting the weaknesses of the current rural-proofing process and the need to ensure that the new statutory duty will prove productive. Mr Seán Rogers also commented on the importance of rural proofing but added that he would like mitigation for adverse impacts to be included in the Bill. Mrs Dobson spoke about the need to strengthen the Bill in this way, as it is important to ensure that rural proofing is no longer simply a tick-box exercise. Mr McCarthy also supported the amendment, believing that it will ultimately serve to improve the outcome of the Bill. Finally, Declan McAleer made an important point, highlighting the fact that the amendments reflect the call made by many of the grass-roots organisations that gave evidence to the Committee that the duty be strengthened.

The second substantive set of amendments — amendment Nos 2, 3, 4 and 13 — deal with adding specified public bodies to the Bill. There has been good discussion on this issue in the Chamber, including by Mr Allister, who wanted to know why the NIEA had not been included in the list of additional bodies to be added. Mr McAleer noted that the list of bodies in amendment No 13 was suggested by stakeholders, with particular reference to SOLACE. Mr McMullan referred to the new role of councils in community planning and how rural proofing would fit with that role. Mrs Dobson also spoke to this set of amendments, noting that all public bodies listed in amendment No 13 provide key public services, and, as such, they needed to be included in the Bill. Mr Milne and Mr McMullan also spoke in favour of adding these additional bodies, and Mr McCarthy indicated that he was content with the list.

Other Members spoke ably about the amendments in the names of Mrs Dobson and Mr Swann. Those amendments cover a new provision on training staff to identify and meet rural needs. They also cover the inclusion of information required to demonstrate that public authorities have fulfilled their duty to consider rural needs in their annual report.

A further amendment would place a duty on the Department to make an assessment of how each public authority considers rural needs. Mrs Dobson also spoke clearly about the need to cooperate and quoted many examples of public bodies not doing so. She said that this lack of cooperation was not in the interests of rural communities.

3.45 pm

These matters were brought to the Committee’s attention during Committee Stage, and the Committee decided not to move forward with amendments. Mrs Dobson put forward a clear rationale for why she and Mr Swann believe that these amendments are necessary. In summary, she stated that they will strengthen the Bill and ensure that it carries weight and that DARD must take some responsibility for how public authorities carry out their duties. She also noted that it is essential that those involved in rural proofing are trained so that they are informed of the impact that decisions may have on rural communities.

Mr Milne and Mr McAleer put across their party’s position on why they do not support these amendments. Mr Milne, in particular, wanted to recognise the good intentions behind them, but he believed that there was some duplication with existing provisions. He also noted that some of these amendments had potential resource implications that had not been allowed for. He made specific mention of amendment No 9, stating that it took DARD in the direction of having to sit in judgement on other Departments, which could ultimately create an expectation that DARD would stand over and make other Departments behave in certain ways.

I hope that I have provided a fair representation of all the views expressed today. That concludes my remarks, and I look forward to the outcome of Consideration Stage.

Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill: Final Stage

Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move

That the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill [NIA 50/11-16] do now pass.

I welcome this final opportunity to speak about the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill, which relates to certain aspects of the regulation of lawyers, particularly how complaints against lawyers are handled and overseen. The new statutory framework for legal complaints set out in the Bill, coupled with the enhanced oversight by a Legal Services Oversight Commissioner, will be of considerable value to consumers in Northern Ireland and those who avail themselves of legal services.

The scheme set out in the Bill will shift the responsibility for complaints away from professionals — lawyers — and more into the hands of laypersons. That was the key message that came out of the Bain report. That group found that the system here was working quite well but that it would benefit from a copper-bottoming of various aspects, most particularly in relation to complaints. In doing so, the group, and, with the Bill, we, as lawmakers in the Assembly, have recognised that devolved Administrations are best placed to make decisions about issues at a local level. Bain could have easily followed the recommendations and reforms that were occurring elsewhere but instead adopted proposals that he considered to be tailored for the issues arising here. That approach has been commended by many in the Assembly throughout the progress of the Bill. I, once again, place on record my thanks to Professor Bain and his team for that work. It has, as has been noted at various junctures, been a long wait for the proposals to be enshrined in law. I am pleased that we have arrived today at a stage where that journey has almost ended and that we have a statute that is appropriate, proportionate and has our stamp on it.

It was the now First Minister, my colleague Arlene Foster, who introduced the Bill in the Assembly in June of last year. At the time, she indicated that the Bill would help to raise the profile of regulation and enhance how complaints are handled. The Bill was referred to the Committee, and I place on record again my thanks to its members for their work on the Bill. The Committee Chair welcomed the Bill at its Second Stage but indicated that the Committee would look closely at how it could be improved. That process, which was undertaken mainly in the autumn, was a very constructive one, and it has led to the Bill we have in front of us today.

4.15 pm

The work of the Committee led to a number of amendments that I was content to bring forward at Consideration Stage and which have helped to improve the Bill. With those additions, we will have an Act that is strong and fair and will greatly assist anyone who has a problem with their lawyer and help them to get a satisfactory resolution. The Committee came back to the issue of first-tier complaints. The Bill, as amended, has reflected on that issue and will lead to improved outcomes in that area. I commend the work of the Committee and the interaction it has had with my Department, which serves as another good example of how a Department and a Committee can work together in a constructive manner in the delivery of good legislation.

I draw my comments to a close by welcoming the Bill. At times, the process has been lengthy and frustrating, but the journey has, nonetheless, been worthwhile. Its final destination will see it become what the Member for North Belfast Alban Maginness described at an earlier stage as a good piece of law. It will lead to an improved complaints handling regime for lawyers, bring more openness and transparency and deliver a proportionate and fair outcome to all involved in the process. Accordingly, I commend the Bill to the Assembly.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. As Members are aware, this Bill will bring about significant and long-awaited reform of the existing system for handling complaints against solicitors and barristers. What has been described as a “copper-bottoming” of the complaints handling arrangements here will include, amongst other things, a shift to layperson-led control, with enhanced powers and oversight, including through the establishment of the post of Legal Services Oversight Commissioner. The commissioner will, therefore, play a key role in overseeing the complaints process and, through this legislation, will hopefully have sufficient powers and the necessary teeth to take further action where the required standards have not been lived up to.

A fundamental concern of the Committee throughout its scrutiny was on the need to capture information on complaints against solicitors made at the “first tier” and whether the published figures represent only the tip of the iceberg and do not present a full picture. As the Minister said, arising from the Committee’s concern, the Bill was amended to take account of that and empower the oversight commissioner and the Law Society to require members of the profession to provide reliable data on the number of complaints. Whilst I suspect that that may mean an increase in the number of recorded complaints, that will equalise over time and provide a reliable baseline of information. This primary legislation will also lead to important subordinate legislation, including on the levy that will be payable by barristers and solicitors, who will fund the costs of the oversight commissioner’s office. That will require close scrutiny in order to ensure that the costs are proportionate and do not needlessly overburden the legal profession, particularly small practices.

The Committee acknowledges the contribution of all stakeholders, particularly the responsiveness of the responsible DFP official, Mr Michael Foster, in providing clarification, explanation and assurances on issues that arose from the evidence. In this particular example, as the Minister said, the Department took into account the views of the Committee and made some reasonable and worthwhile amendments, which is not, unfortunately, always the case when it comes to departmental officials and Committees. This instance is a very good example of how the Department and the Committee should work together.

Whilst the Committee was prepared to bring forward a number of amendments to strengthen the Bill, the productive relationship between it and the Department resulted in the necessary amendments being tabled by the Minister. I believe that the additional amendment from the Committee to provide for a statutory review mechanism will also offer a further element of assurance.

The Bill also reflects changes that will support and facilitate the legal profession by placing a greater emphasis on client care. Arising from the evidence from the Law Society, for instance, the Bill will address the concern about the ability for any apology to be used as evidence of liability in civil proceedings. That will make it easier for lawyers to apologise to their clients when things have gone wrong and when the necessary standards have not been met. I am sure that Members will accept that, in many cases when something has gone wrong, a genuine apology at an early stage is often enough to satisfy the complainant.

Finally, where effective scrutiny is concerned, I consider that the experience with the Bill demonstrates how constructive engagement assists the legislative process and provides better laws for our citizens. That should be seen as another example of how this locally elected institution is delivering solutions tailored to local circumstances.

I acknowledge that the new arrangements provided for in the Bill will take time to bed in. I look forward, therefore, with a keen interest to the implementation of the legislation and to the outworkings of the statutory review, which will provide a further opportunity for the Assembly to scrutinise progress in this important area.

Mr I McCrea: Like the Chair, I will be brief, if not briefer than him, perhaps because I have less to say, given that it is his function, as Chair, to go through the details. I will resist doing that, but it is important to say that, in joining the Chair in his comments, I have no doubt that the scrutiny of the Bill — this has been the case, certainly as long as I have been in the Assembly — is evidence of the good relationship between the Department and the Committee and of the work to ensure that any concerns that the Committee and the stakeholders that came before it had were listened to and addressed by the Department. It is important that we put that on record to show how the Committee and the Department can work together to deliver good legislation.

I do not want to repeat things, but I liked what Alban Maginness said in a previous debate about this being a local Bill with a local tailor-made solution for dealing with legal complaints in Northern Ireland. That is an important aspect of the Bill.

All in all, I have no doubt that, when the Bill is enacted, it will make a major difference to the way in which legal complaints are dealt with in Northern Ireland. I hope that it passes Final Stage.

Mr Cree: I am pleased to be able to speak at the Final Stage of the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill. Much of what is pertinent has been said. This is not a root-and-branch reform, but it will bring significant change to the system and establish the new position of the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner.

The Committee took evidence from interested stakeholders and published its report on the Bill last December. As I said at Consideration Stage, the Committee’s detailed scrutiny resulted in a range of issues being raised with the Department for clarification and improvement. Satisfactory amendments were made that improved and, indeed, strengthened the Bill. One such amendment, which has been referred to, was that on the discovery of information on first-tier complaints. I believe that that is very necessary.

The Committee's scrutiny is an excellent example of how a Department has worked with a Statutory Committee to improve legislation. I record my thanks to the Committee staff and the departmental officials for the excellent way in which differences of opinion were resolved. On behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, let me say that we will support the Final Stage of the Bill.

Mr Storey: I would like to express a word of appreciation and thanks to the Committee members who contributed to the debate this afternoon. I also thank, in particular, the Chair and members for the work that they have done, alongside my officials, which ensured that the legislation reached this stage today.

It is an example — I have said this on other occasions when we set ourselves to legislate — of the relationship between the Department and the Committee in ensuring that we have an outcome. I take Mr Cree's point that this is not root-and-branch reform, but it is a good start. We have commenced at the right place in relation to what was needed, and I look forward to the Bill being given Royal Assent and becoming law. I would like to express a word of appreciation to my officials for the work that they brought to the Committee and for doing all the preparation necessary to bring the Bill to the House. I personally thank them for their work. I thank all concerned and commend the Bill to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill [NIA 50/11-16] do now pass.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask Members to take their ease for a moment before we move on to the next item of business.

Renewable Heat Incentive Schemes (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): I beg to move

That the draft Renewable Heat Incentive Schemes (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved.

This statutory rule is being made under section 113 of the Energy Act 2011, which prescribes that these regulations must be laid in draft for approval by affirmative resolution of the Assembly.

I will begin with the technicalities of the legislation. These regulations amend the Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012, which I will refer to as the 2012 regulations, and the Domestic Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014, which I will refer to as the 2014 regulations. The 2012 regulations established a renewable heat incentive (RHI) scheme for the non-domestic sector, and the 2014 regulations established a renewable heat incentive scheme for the domestic sector.

The amendments to the 2012 and 2014 regulations give the Department power to issue a notice suspending the schemes to new applications. The power arises where it appears to the Department that it does not have, or is not likely to have, sufficient funds available to it for the purpose of meeting the full cost of payments under both schemes. It is important to highlight that the purpose of these regulations is to establish the power for the Department to suspend the RHI schemes in the circumstances that I have described. They do not, in themselves, close the schemes. Closure requires a notice to be issued suspending the schemes from a particular date.

I appreciate that the majority of those involved in the schemes will be anxious for clarity on their closure, so I confirm that the position is that, if the Assembly passes this legislation, I will issue a notice closing both schemes to new applications from 29 February.

The period since I announced my intention to close the schemes on 5 February gives those who are in the process of installing renewable heat equipment the month of February, effectively, to complete installation before the scheme closes. That reflects a reasonable balance between the need to manage scheme expenditure and giving those who are in the process of installation time to make decisions on whether to proceed. I have listened to the concerns raised about immediate closure of the scheme: that is why, with the agreement of the First Minister and deputy Minister, I have decided to defer closure for a further two weeks.

I have no doubt that there are a range of views on closure. At one end of the spectrum, there are those who are not convinced that we should subsidise expensive renewable technologies. On the other hand, there are those who believe that we should invest more in the future of renewables. The speed of closure of the RHI can be debated either way. However, to anyone who intends to oppose the legislation, I have to sound an important warning: opposing the legislation means opposing the ability to suspend the scheme at all. That means continuing with an open-ended commitment to fund renewable heat, no matter what the cost. I cannot believe that, given the competing priorities for funding that we face, it is tenable that we give open-ended funding commitments. I apologise for repeating the point, but I want to make it absolutely clear that anyone who opposes this legislation is voting for an open-ended funding commitment.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Bell: The nature of legislation, Mr Allister, is that you get unlimited time, I understand, to make your points. You will have your time, and I will answer those —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I ask everyone to address the Chair.

Mr Bell: Mr Deputy Speaker, the Member should be aware that he will have his period to make whatever points he wishes to make, and I will have my period to consult on what he has to say and come back to him at the end of the debate.

As I was saying, let me apologise for repeating the point, but I want to make it absolutely clear that anyone who opposes this legislation is voting for an open-ended funding commitment.

The RHI scheme currently works to require government to fund all properly made applications for renewable heat installations. There is no choice but to make those payments and no way of turning off, slowing down or phasing out payments if we do not pass this legislation. We can debate when the scheme should close but, unless we pass the legislation, that debate would be pointless. We would have no choice but to keep making payments, regardless of the budgetary position.

I turn now to why we need to close the scheme. The renewable heat incentive, introduced in November 2012 to the non-domestic sector and in December 2014 to the domestic sector, has been taken up very successfully. The non-domestic RHI incentivises the uptake of renewable heat technologies such as biomass, heat pumps and solar thermal installations. It provides payments for 20 years on the basis of heat energy generated. The tariff is dependent on the size and type of technology and is calculated to cover capital costs, operating costs and non-financial hassle costs over the lifetime of the technology. The domestic scheme provides for upfront capital grants and seven years' support thereafter.

Overall, with over 3,900 renewable heating installations incentivised to date, uptake has been higher than in GB. We have exceeded the Executive's PFG target of 4%, with around 6% of Northern Ireland's heating needs now provided through renewable heating technologies. We are well on the way to attaining the Executive-endorsed target of 10% renewable heat set out in the strategic energy framework. That will contribute to the UK's target of 15% renewable energy by 2020 as required by the EU renewables directive.

The focus during the initial period of the scheme was on trying to improve the performance of the RHI scheme to achieve the Executive's PFG target and ensure that the renewable heating sector and the wider Northern Ireland economy benefited from the investment. To that end, advertising campaigns were conducted during 2013-14 and 2014-15, and the domestic scheme was introduced at the end of 2014. That has resulted in increased scheme uptake, particularly over recent months. The total number of renewable heating installations under the non-domestic scheme increased from just over 250 to over 1,800 during the last 14 months. A significant and unexpected surge in applications occurred in the six-week run-up to scheme changes in November 2015 that were intended to help manage demand. Over 900 applications were made in that short period. That, together with reductions in available funding, means that we now face significant budgetary pressures.

Both RHI schemes — non-domestic and domestic — are paid out of annually managed expenditure (AME), which is in addition to Northern Ireland block grant funding. Normally, it would not have an impact on the Northern Ireland departmental expenditure limit (DEL) block funding. However, even though total renewable heating capacity through the NI RHI equates to over 6% of total capacity in the GB scheme, the Chancellor's autumn statement confirmed that an AME cap for Northern Ireland would be set at the Barnett share of circa 3%. That means that the block DEL will have to meet any funding in excess of that.

Total application numbers for the Northern Ireland non-domestic scheme now exceed our highest estimates. That means that the available AME budget for the next five years is now already committed to meeting payments for existing RHI installations. Therefore, in the circumstances, I have no choice but to move to close the RHI scheme to minimise further costs and impact on the Northern Ireland block.

In bringing this course of action to the Assembly, I want to be clear how reluctant I am to close a scheme that brings such benefits in jobs, investment, environmental protection and meeting our renewable targets. Ensuring a more competitive and diverse heating market in Northern Ireland is therefore a key priority for me. We need to reduce our current reliance on fossil fuels. Heat from indigenous and renewable sources must therefore be promoted.

Despite my support for RHI and however beneficial the scheme, I have to acknowledge that we cannot manage an Executive Budget on the basis of individual schemes taking off or incurring costs that were formerly funded from the UK without agreement.

The Executive have many other priorities that demand funding, and if we do not move to close the RHI, those will be put at increased risk.

I want to make the point, however, that some of the reaction to the closure of the RHI implies that money has been squandered or investment lost. That is not the case. The RHI has seen over £50 million brought in to Northern Ireland over the last four years. That has gone to help some of our most important local industries, to bolster the rural economy and to provide much needed jobs. Existing scheme participants will continue to receive support for 20 years. Those who hoped to avail themselves of the scheme will, naturally, be disappointed, but let us not forget what benefits the scheme has brought.

There have been allegations of abuse of the scheme in some cases. I take those allegations very seriously. The evidence is not clear at the moment. I have asked officials to work with Ofgem, which administers the non-domestic scheme across the UK, to undertake extra checks and to look at existing processes to make sure that the scheme is operating in compliance with the legislation. An audit of internal procedures is also under way to assess management of the scheme and how it was set up to see where things could have been improved. However, we need to be careful when talking about abuse of how the scheme is operating. Many hard-working and committed households and businesses will have properly complied with the scheme, and it would be quite wrong to suggest that abuse is common without any evidence to back that up.

To conclude, by looking to the future, I believe that the renewables sector can play a part in helping to reduce our CO2 emissions and bringing investment to our economy. I am open to suggestions on how we might engage with developers, installers and others to see where we might go in the future on renewable heat. That might involve consulting on the long-term position, looking at developments in other jurisdictions or considering options. However, any debate on the future must take place in an environment where costs are controlled. The only way to ensure that is to support, however reluctantly, the suspension of the scheme at this time. I ask Members to support the regulations.

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Mo bhuíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas sin. I thank the Minister for his contribution.

The first official notification that the Committee had of these proposals was through papers from the Department that were tabled at last week's Committee meeting on Tuesday 9 February. The proposals were for an immediate closure of the scheme following the agreement of the Assembly today. As the Committee had no prior notification of the proposals, it could not engage in proper scrutiny and was only able to note the statutory rule. Therefore, the statutory rule comes to the House without proper scrutiny of the proposals as laid down in Standing Order 43(1). It is important, however, that I provide the House with details of the Committee's scrutiny of the renewable heat incentive and of the Committee's limited consideration of the SR.

I want to start by putting on the record a very brief history of the Committee's consideration of the renewable heat incentive. On 11 April 2013, the Committee asked the Department to provide biannual updates on the implementation of the scheme. That resulted in an update being received more than one year later on 5 June 2014 and a further written briefing five months after that on 4 November 2014. Since that time, the Department has not considered it necessary to provide further progress reports or updates to the Committee, despite requests for updates on a twice-yearly basis.

It is important to make it clear from the outset how the renewable incentive works. The point of application is after the installation is complete. Once a valid application is received, it must be supported. Therefore, the supplier and the customer have already invested considerable amounts of money, often taking out loans, in the expectation that they will be able to complete their installations and make an application before 31 March. Although the latest proposal to close the scheme on 29 February may alleviate the problem for some people, this question remains: how many businesses and individuals who have already invested considerable sums will be affected, and to what extent, by the decision to close the scheme early? As MLAs, we have all received those details in our emails and in phone calls to our constituency offices.

4.45 pm

The Minister's letter that accompanied the draft regulations referred to the serious and urgent risk to public finances, and we have heard more about that today. However, questions remain for the Committee whether the problem should have been recognised sooner and whether steps could have been taken earlier to manage those risks?

The briefing to the Committee in June 2014 stated:

"the current NI uptake compares favourably with the GB uptake at the same point in time on a pro-rata basis."

It also stated:

"this suggests that the NI RHI could experience a higher volume of applications but for smaller installations. Projecting forward it could be expected that around 300 applications could be received by end March 2015."

I am quoting from departmental documents, and I have them with me. The briefing to the Committee six months later, in November 2014, stated:

"as of 15 October 2014 [Ofgem] have received 308 applications."

Therefore, in November 2014, applications had already exceeded expectations for March 2015. Should that have started alarm bells ringing?

Officials informed the Committee last week that the process of thinking about the issue and asking questions began in March 2015, when it was noticed that the level of applications was rising. That was three months after the Department informed the Committee of the very same fact. Officials said that the Minister was formally made aware of the problem in July last year. That was followed by a consultation, issued on 22 July, that contained proposals to introduce, among other things, demand management measures from November 2015. Given the fact that demand exceeded expectations, and that that was apparent from as far back as at least November 2014, did anyone in the Department try to work out the impact of the announcement or think at least to ask this question: what impact will this July announcement have on the level of applications between now and the introduction of new measures in November?

There were 900 applications in the six weeks running up to the introduction of the legislation. Last week, officials acknowledged that, although a spike in applications was expected, its extent was not known until later. Was it not reasonable to assume that there would have been a considerable spike? How much time and effort did the Department put into calculating what that spike could conceivably be? Although the Department was aware in September past that it had a financial problem, it said that it committed to a course of action that could not be changed until November because that is the way in which the legislative process works. However, that is not the way in which the legislative process has worked in this instance, as we see this evening.

The Committee raised the issue that there was a belief in the industry that tariffs would be in place until 31 March 2016. Officials dismissed that as speculation, however, stating that there was no announcement to that effect. The legislation introduced in November past — and Committee members were shown it at the meeting — stated that the tariffs would be in place until 31 March 2016. That suggests more than mere speculation. It is in the text of the statutory rule at paragraph 10(3): “31st March 2016”. Not 15 February 2016, not 29 February 2016, but 31 March 2016. Would that deadline, in the text of the legislation, not have raised a reasonable expectation in the industry, and, indeed, among householders, that that was the deadline to which they could work in order to avail themselves of the current tariff levels?

Can the Department explain how the tariff runs until 31 March but the scheme ends on 29 February? It is bizarre.

When it was put to officials last week, they agreed that it would be reasonable to infer that the reference in the statutory rule would raise the expectation that applications at this level would be received until that date. They said that it would be reasonable to expect it to run until that date. However, as officials put it, there was the overriding issue of preventing a further increase in the financial pressure faced by the Department. When questioned about the failure to follow proper procedures, officials stated that the Department had been looking at how to resolve the issue since December and that to have opened the problem up at an earlier stage would, in itself, have carried the risk of increased applications. They said it; I did not. They said that the previous spike had occurred because people had had time to consider and make applications. That is usually the whole idea behind a scheme.

When the legislation came into effect last November, announcing that the tariffs would apply until 31 March 2016, would it not have been reasonable to assume, given recent history, that there would be a further spike in applications before the 31 March deadline? Officials said that, if they had gone through proper procedures and had come to the Committee, that would have allowed time for a spike — a spike that was coming because people had been anticipating the March deadline anyway since a consultation had been brought forward last July for legislation that was introduced last November. They knew about the date. Is it the case that the Department has only now anticipated a further spike during March and has decided, without regard to the consequences for jobs, businesses, homes and the environment, to close the renewable heat incentive to avoid facing that spike? As I said, the Department acknowledged that it was reasonable for homeowners and the industry to expect that the scheme would run until 31 March, given that that was the date until which the tariffs were valid.

The Committee has received considerable correspondence from industry representatives, as we all have as individual MLAs, about the impact of the legislation on their businesses and on jobs. I was listening to the Minister speak about this earlier, and I will give him a few examples that he obviously has not heard. One business has indicated that, if it stops work now, it will lose over £100,000 in committed supplies and equipment, but, if it keeps working on jobs that are already in place but will not be covered by the scheme, it stands to lose over £1 million and 25 jobs. Another business informed the Committee that it has a large number of clients who have borrowed money for investing in renewable heating systems that are part way through installation and repayments have been calculated to banks and other lending institutions on the strength of obtaining payments under the scheme. The businesses say that the clients will not pay for work currently being installed if they cannot obtain the RHI. As other Members will be aware, one supplier company has invested over £600,000 in stock for projects that will probably be cancelled as a result of closure, and the business is now under threat of going into administration. That is the harsh reality of this unusual decision.

When officials were questioned about the impact of closure on people who took business decisions to buy stock to develop schemes on the strength of the renewable heat incentive, the Committee was told, “That would be a matter for themselves”. When they were asked if any consideration had been given to the economic implications and whether any consideration had been given to putting the proposals out to consultation, the Committee was informed that the options were considered and a judgement made that the need to stem the flow of uncovered expenditure was the overriding consideration. When asked about the uncovered liabilities for businesses that had already invested in stock for unfinished projects and whether they had been left high and dry, officials stated that the potential consequences were part of the analysis, that all factors had been considered and that there was no provision to compensate any business or individual affected.

When questioned in more detail about the Department’s assessment of the economic implications of the proposals, the officials said that they had limited information on this because it was hard to predict the number of applications. However, officials were able to say that, if the scheme were left open until the end of March, it would roughly double the pressure over the next five years; in other words, they were predicting the level of applications. The Department must therefore have made some assessment of the number of applications that it could have anticipated until the end of March. How difficult would it have been to use that measure to estimate the impact of early closure on jobs, businesses and the economy? When questioned about the risk of a legal challenge to the legislation, officials informed the Committee that the Minister was aware of the risk of challenge and that the analysis presented to the Minister included analysis of the risk. My question is this: what was the analysis of the risk that the decision would be challenged? Was the view taken that it would be less expensive to face legal challenge than to continue with the scheme? That is a risky one.

Committee members also questioned officials about any safeguards that could or should have been put in place to protect businesses and the Department’s budget. The Department provides preliminary accreditation for very large applications; however, there have been few of those. Preliminary accreditation is provided before the plant is built, but it applies only to plants over 200 kilowatts, which take a lot longer to plan and involve a lot more finance. Officials said that smaller installations did not have that facility because they did not need it. I bet you there is a whole lot of them out there today — hundreds of them — who wish they had that protection. These questions arise: how many people out there now wish they had exactly that facility to avail themselves of, and would such a facility or even a facility for preliminary notification, which would give advance warning that an application is coming, have given the Department some earlier indication of what it could expect?

That leads me on to the next part of the process, which is about exactly that type of management. Officials were questioned on the demand management measures that had been put in place in GB and asked why similar measures had not been put in place here. In GB, in a process known as digression, an assessment of applications is set out against a budgetary position, and, if applications approach certain budgetary levels, the tariff is automatically lowered to dampen demand. However, that was not implemented here. Officials said that it was not considered because the scheme was underperforming and resources were limited. There you are; not exactly that now. These questions need to be asked: why was that option not revisited in November 2014 when it was seen that the applications were over three months ahead of expectations, and why was it not —

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGlone: Sure.

Mr Agnew: When the original consideration on the digression model took place, the Department stated to the Committee that it had other priorities and the domestic scheme was the priority. That suggests that it cannot manage two priorities.

Mr McGlone: I thank the Member. He is well across this, and I thank him for his expertise in the area. Obviously it raises that question too. Why? What was going on over there? Again, why was it not revisited when an increase in demand became evident in March 2015? Why was it not included in the consultation that issued on 22 July 2015? The need for it was actually mentioned in the document that it issued in September 2015. Gone; not there.

The permanent secretary outlined the details of an audit of the scheme that the Department would undertake. It will consider whether the scheme was adequately designed to cope with an unprecedented increase in demand, look at whether there were administrative errors and examine whether the budget situation may have been clarified at an earlier stage. There is also the issue of DFP approval, which was missed for a deadline to seek re-approval for the non-domestic scheme, and the audit will check that there has been no breach in obligation of the scheme there too. So we are not seeing a happy picture over at the Department. The permanent secretary informed the Committee that, as accounting officer, he has concerns about the scheme and will make sure that it is examined objectively and transparently, which is why the audit is being conducted on his behalf. Given the short time until dissolution, the Committee for the Economy will no doubt wish to consider the outcome of the audit, and the Committee will want to include the matter in its legacy report.

As I said at the outset, the Committee was given very little time to consider this highly complex and very controversial issue. It is also evident from my contribution that the evidence from the Department has raised many more questions for the Committee and, indeed, others outwith the Chamber than it has answered, which is why the Committee was only able to note the statutory rule.

5.00 pm

In summation, I will say a few words in my capacity as an SDLP Member for a constituency where a number of the businesses are located. Many feel deeply let down. Indeed, some of the business organisations that have been in touch with me feel that it is an issue of honour. If they cannot plan with certainty on government decisions, why depend on an Executive? Why rely on an Executive? Why even make those decisions on investment if the commitments that have been given on behalf of government — DETI, in this case — are fly-by-night commitments that disappear like snow off a ditch without any notification to those people?

Trust is lost with businesses and others who wanted to engage in the scheme and contribute to the protection of the environment, as well as people who took out loans and invested in stock because they were committed to the environment. Who will compensate those people for the investment? Who will compensate them for job losses as a consequence? Who will compensate people who took out loans in good faith? It really is an unmitigated mess.

Mr Dunne: The renewable heat incentive scheme, which was established in 2012 for the non-domestic sector and in 2014 for the domestic sector, was designed to encourage the use of renewable energy. It was also designed to help Northern Ireland not only to meet its targets as set out in the Programme for Government but to meet the 10% European target by 2020. In November 2015, new tariffs were introduced for combined heat and power to coincide with the changes to the NIRO and the ROCs. With that change in tariffs, the demand spiked in November, with 900 applications in six weeks. The success of the scheme is underlined by the fact that the Programme for Government target of 4% of our total heating needs being provided through renewable technologies has been exceeded and is now estimated to be around 6%.

Both those RHI schemes have been paid out of annually managed expenditure, which does not normally impact on our block funding. However, the Chancellor's autumn statement in November confirmed that the AME cap for us would be set out of the Barnett formula at around 3%, meaning that the block DEL would be penalised for any excessive spend. Total expenditure by Northern Ireland for both schemes in 2015-16 is now forecast to exceed £30 million, plus £18.2 million from the AME, which is a considerable investment. The success of those schemes has resulted in the budget being exceeded. Those issues raise a number of questions on how the scheme was managed when tariffs were changed in November.

I question why DETI officials did not bring a submission to the Minister when price controls were established in GB. That would have enabled us to manage the budget in the way that GB has managed it. DETI officials put in place a scheme to manage tariffs against demand, but fund limits were soon exceeded. Perhaps the Minister could advise us as to when the Department had confirmation that it was not going to be met out of the AME budget.

We also have two bodies: Ofgem, which is based on the mainland and is responsible for managing the operation on the ground in Northern Ireland, and DETI, which is responsible for managing the strategy, policy and administration of the scheme. Two separate bodies creates a risk in itself. We also understand that the regulators, Ofgem, did not have inspectors based in Northern Ireland and relied instead on subcontractors, which, to my mind, creates a potential risk.

At last week's Committee meeting, departmental officials stated that they were aware of a number of issues with control and verification, so they planned to review and audit the processes and procedures to establish any evidence of non-compliance or otherwise.

As outlined by the previous Member who spoke, there is no doubt that there has been genuine concern in the renewables sector about the enforced early closure, particularly for those who planned new schemes and were working towards the end of March deadline. However, it is important that the Department does what it can to support those businesses in this difficult time, which results from the proposed closure on 29 February.

Mr Murphy: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I endorse the account given by our Committee Chair, Patsy McGlone, about the Committee's treatment in the matter: the way that the announcement and its consequences were bounced on it at very short notice, and the restrictions that that placed on its ability properly to scrutinise the decision and any process by which the scheme would be suspended.

I will add to the Chair's commentary on the notion of some irregularities or some abuse of the scheme and the system, which was also floated in general terms by the Minister in his opening contribution. The Minister said that there was no "clear" evidence of that, but the senior officials who came before the Committee were questioned about this, and they said that they had no evidence whatsoever of any abuses. Maybe complaints were made and there might be inquiries, but I would not like the suggestion that something untoward was going on to hang as a backdrop to or rationale for the decision taken today. There was a clear statement from the most senior officials in the Department that they had heard no evidence that any abuse was going on.

There is absolutely no doubt that the scheme has been very badly handled by the Department. Its operation has run very seriously over budget, which threatens not only the Department's finances and core function of growing the economy but the Executive's finances to the tune of, we are told, some £95 million over the next five years and tens of millions of pounds in future years. That is money that the Executive have not budgeted for. That money has to be found, which will undoubtedly impact their priorities, such as protecting front-line services.

I acknowledge and appreciate Mr Dunne's point about the sudden announcement by the British Chancellor, George Osborne, on the cap on AME. That was obviously a serious blow to the Department's ability to finance the scheme.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. When Arlene Foster first announced the scheme in 2012, she described it as a £25 million scheme. That suggests to me that there was always a cap and that this was not news.

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his point. The officials put forward the notion that the Chancellor's announcement in November contributed to the difficulty that the Department found in managing the scheme. I was going on to say was that it was very clear from their evidence to the Committee — the Member was there last Tuesday morning — that the scheme was already being run in a way that was not sustainable. As I said, I acknowledge that that decision contributed to the difficulties, but the way that the scheme was run, managed and conceived made it unsustainable. Over the last week, we have all been consulting people in the industry, and they told us that they had made it clear to the Department that it was not a sustainable scheme.

I acknowledge the Minister's decision to provide a variation from his original plan, which was a proposal to shut down the scheme immediately, and that, after representation, he has given it a further two weeks. I have spoken to people in the industry who said that that will allow a number of schemes to be completed and applications to be processed. However, it is clear, and many Members will have evidence of it, that there are still those who were operating on the basis that the scheme would continue until the end of March and who stand to lose investments already made. Potentially, jobs will also be put at risk or lost as a consequence of the Department's action. I ask the Minister and the Department to undertake an assessment of all the schemes that have already begun work to see whether they can be honoured within the system proposed for suspension and closure. We in the Assembly are now faced with a Hobson's choice between potentially damaging some companies that have invested in the renewable heat initiative scheme, as was mentioned, or creating an even larger hole in the Executive's finances for years to come, which could damage all sectors of the economy and impact the delivery of public services.

As I said, the departmental officials were in front of the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee last week. They gave a commitment to examine what went wrong with the scheme. I sincerely hope that a very long and hard look at this is taken within the Department and that appropriate lessons are learnt. I had the opportunity at a Public Accounts Committee meeting to speak to the Comptroller and Auditor General, and I understand that the Audit Office has an interest in how this was managed.

The renewables industry now faces a very dismal and uncertain future as a consequence not just of the actions of DETI in relation to this scheme but because of what is potentially coming down the tracks in relation to the wind energy schemes. Undoubtedly, the incoming Executive in the new mandate will have the responsibility to devise new schemes that are sustainable and meet the Executive's targets for renewable energy. I hope that we can, in doing that, give some degree of hope and certainty to those involved in the renewables industry because there is a huge amount of frustration and dismay out there due to the potential cost and the way that these schemes are being handled. People have said to us that the industry is, in effect, closed down now.

We have a responsibility in this House to try to clean up the mess that is at the tail end of this scheme and to offer some hope that we can, in new mandate and with a new Executive, put together proper sustainable schemes for renewable energy. We have a responsibility to deliver those schemes in a way that not only supports our targets for a cleaner and greener energy supply but that supports those who are involved in that industry and sustains economic development.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: DETI's enterprise policy states that its focus is on:

"promoting enterprise and entrepreneurship and creating the necessary conditions that will enable businesses across all sectors of the economy to start and grow."

What we have in front of us today is a story of failure, incompetence and ignorance within devolved Government for which there must be consequences. I agree entirely with the Committee Chair, Mr Patsy McGlone, who very clearly took us through the detail of the embarrassment we witnessed last Tuesday.

It is worth reflecting on how we got to where we are today. RHI is a UK Government scheme set up to encourage the uptake of renewable heat technologies through financial incentives. The UK Government expect RHI to contribute 12% by 2020. Our devolved Government, through the Programme for Government, set a target of 10%. The scheme was launched on 1 November through the non-domestic sector. In October 2012, the then Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister Foster, introducing RHI through the non-domestic sector, said:

“Financial incentives have already been successful in the local renewable electricity market. Since the introduction of the Northern Ireland renewables obligation (NIRO) in 2005, the level of electricity generated from renewable resources has increased from 3% to 14%. It is now vital that a similar commitment is made for the renewable heat market. It is expected that the RHI will support the installation of over 20,000 technologies by 2020, as well as securing our target to have a level of 10% renewable heat.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 78, p298, col 2].

Minister Foster announced the extension of RHI to domestic customers on 3 October. That is the background.

Minister Bell took up office in May 2015. On 17 November last year, the Minister brought to the House an amendment to the regulations introducing a second tier of lower payments for small and medium biomass systems. The targets were clearly set for a period beginning on 18 November and ending on 31 March. That was a clear commitment to this sector. This led to a predictable and significant increase in applications in the run-up to the date of the new targets being introduced, which locked DETI into a commitment over many years. However, we heard nothing until the Friday before last. At 6.02 pm on 5 February, a press release was issued in Minister Bell's name stating that the scheme had become massively oversubscribed and had to close almost immediately. Nothing happened between the middle of November, when the spike happened, and that Friday evening in February.

5.15 pm

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he agree that the spike was entirely predictable, which means that it is worse than nothing happening from November? Every time there was a tariff reduction in GB, there was a spike; why would we anticipate anything different here?

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I thank the Member for his intervention, and I agree with him. Of course, we knew that there would be a predicted spike on those applications that were trying to beat the change in tariff. Among the questions that the Minister must answer today are these: when did he first become aware that the scheme was massively oversubscribed and the money was running out? How did he and his Department get the figures so wrong? Did the scheme initially involve too many incentives? Why did he announce the sudden closure in a press release after 6.00 pm on a Friday evening? Last Tuesday, at Question Time, yet again he blamed someone else; it was the Chancellor of the Exchequer's fault for moving the goalposts. Again, in November, we heard nothing; but, last Tuesday, he stated:

“My Department faces a huge budgetary pressure, given the Chancellor of the Exchequer's decision to limit the amount of money paid to Northern Ireland out of the UK pot for renewable heat.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 112, p193, col 1].

However, detail included in the autumn statement also indicated that the original allocated £860 million was to increase to £1.15 billion, but there have been no details as yet as to how that scheme would be reformed and a consultation is expected soon. So, will the Minister please explain why he is blaming Westminster, or is he just doing what the DUP's partner in Government, Sinn Féin, does so well, which is to blame the Brits?

A Fermanagh firm that I have been talking to, and which plans to install biomass boilers, is saying that it is currently struggling to compete with other UK-based manufacturers. They are receiving up to 5.6p per kilowatt RHI payment on similar boilers, yet the RHI tariff for Northern Ireland is 1.5p per kilowatt, which is less than a third, and the scheme is still open in GB.

The Minister also said last week that:

“there will be an investigation into why we have found ourselves in this position. I have, as a matter of urgency, asked my own officials to ensure that the scheme is running to the letter and spirit of the law.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 112, p197, col 2].

If he is saying that the scheme was wide open to fraudulent activity, is that what we are now going to be told? The Ulster Unionist Party will not support the statutory rule; the situation has arisen because of incompetence and ignorance of this sector. If government sets the rules on something, the public expect those rules to be adhered to, not changed at the drop of a ministerial hat.

The Minister needs to take responsibility and sort it out. The original 31 March deadline for the sector should be reinstated and honoured. He needs to agree, through consultation with the industry groups such as the Federation of Master Builders, a phased winding-down period, which will allow businesses the opportunity to plan for the change in their revenue stream. In the longer term, we also need to give some clarity and certainty to the whole area of renewable energy. Does he have a plan to replace RHI and the NIRO, or is the fledging renewables sector in Northern Ireland going to be allowed to go to the wall? How are we going to meet the 2020 renewables target of 10%? Will the Minister recognise that DETI has made a mess of this issue? DETI has been shown to be incompetent and ignorant of business in Northern Ireland, and you, Minister, need to take responsibility because the buck stops with you. Minister, will you do the decent thing and consider your position?

Mr Lunn: I do not have a place on the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, so I have not been privy to all the discussions and the limited information that it has been given. However, I listened with interest to Mr McGlone, who has given me a pretty fair outline of what has happened over the last year or year and a half, and it does not make for pretty listening. Somebody here has been asleep at the wheel. I do not know who to blame, but there appears to have been a complete lack of any forward planning or anticipation of what was going on here.

It is a pity, because it is actually a good news/bad news story. It is good news because it is an excellent scheme. A lot of people have already benefited from it, and a few more may do so before the thing closes. However, it is bad news because of all the concerns that people have about employment prospects in the industry for a start. I must confess, although I may be naive, but I cannot think of a scheme in my experience where you make an application after the work has been completed. Am I reading this right? You do not actually have to notify that you are going to commit the Department to spending to £10,000, £20,000 or £30,000-worth of expenditure in advance? You just throw in the bills after completion. It is hard to believe, frankly.

If I read what the Minister said correctly, there are enough applications already in the pipeline to deal with the budget or whatever money has been set aside as manageable for the next five years. If no more comes in, we are still committed to spending all this money for five years. As other Members have said, companies have ordered equipment in. I am getting the same emails as everybody else here. Will householders who have perhaps part-paid for a contract be compensated? Will companies that have spent money obtaining the necessary microgeneration certification scheme (MCS) approval to do this work be compensated? Although not on the £1 million scale that Mr McGlone talked about, a small company in Lisburn, in my constituency, has eight employees and an order book of £185,000 that they expect to disappear. None of that work will happen, and the company anticipates having to go to Scotland and elsewhere to look for work where it is still available.

Another point that I do not think has been mentioned is the fact that DETI — the Department involved — has given considerable support to companies such as Dimplex, Warmflow and Kingspan that are heavily involved in supplying equipment with support from Invest NI. And so it goes on. It has been — I think that if I said the word that is on my mind, I would probably get slung out, Mr Speaker. It is, as the Member said, an unmitigated mess. That will do; that is as far as I can go.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Member. Will he also agree that it puts smaller businesses, in particular, in a precarious place when it comes to managing and ordering in stock when they think that a scheme will last for a certain time? Even single traders and plumbers — it leaves all those businesses in a very difficult state in which to plan and budget for the future.

Mr Lunn: Yes, I completely agree. I think that we have all received something from Action Renewables today that indicates an immediate potential loss of about 140 jobs. You might think that that was bearable in the overall scheme of things, but the knock-on effect across all the service and support industries is about 2,000 jobs. All this because the Department did not do its work in anticipating properly. It set up a scheme that, by the sound of it, was too successful for its own good. I wonder where we go from here.

The Minister has given us a dire warning that, if we do not support the regulation today, the scheme will run on out of control, with catastrophic effects on forward planning, on the budget and on the Executive's whole expenditure plans. I take that on board. Frankly, however, if he wants support from us in the longer term — he will not get it today — he would have to assure my party colleagues and me that some sort of transitional arrangement or compensation scheme will be set up. We have to ensure that nobody — companies supplying, companies performing the contracts, householders, businesses or anybody else who has committed money to the scheme — is left out of pocket by government action or inaction.

Mr McGlone: Thanks very much for giving way, Mr Lunn. The scheme does not trundle on interminably, as the Minister said. It is for the Minister to bring in fresh legislation on this. What most of us are arguing this evening is that the Minister should stick to what he said. He should live up to the commitments given and live up to the — [Interruption.] That must be a few of those firms waiting for us outside. The Minister should live up to commitments given and comply with the date that the Department gave. That is what people worked to and committed their businesses to.

Mr Lunn: I thank Mr McGlone for that. If that means sticking to the date of 31 March instead of changing to 29 February, it does not sound to me as though it is sufficient. Companies plan and commit forward. It sounds like a very short timescale. My concern is that companies, on the back of this, will do what they can to mitigate their loss, but their loss could still be considerable if they have a signed contract. I really want to hear from the Minister, when he responds, what his plans are to let people down gently — let me put it that way. You cannot just close this down and walk away. You cannot just say, "It is too bad. It was a good scheme, but it was too good for its own good". We cannot operate like that. I will reserve judgement, but, frankly, I do not know what the Minister can say today that would make us vote in support of his proposition.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Éirím go tromchroíoch, nó níl romhainn inniu ach rogha an dá dhíogha, mar a thuigfeas an Cathaoirleach.

I rise with a heavy heart, because it really is, as they say in Irish, rogha an dá dhíogha — the lesser of two evils or Hobson's choice. Whatever decision we take today will ensure that some people lose out. Small companies have brought in orders hoping to install renewable heating; some people are waiting to bring it into their business. However, if we do not take a decision today, the hole in the budget gets bigger, and the money available to us in the future from the block grant to build the economy is less.

I want to make one point that, I think, has come out in all the contributions of members of the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee. It is that there is a pattern of the Committee not being informed and not being properly brought up to date with what is happening in the Department. This is not the only issue on which it happens, but it is the most egregious example of us being kept in the dark. For me, it is not good enough. At meeting after meeting over the past six or seven months, the Chair has had to tell us that he has not received information in a timely fashion or has not received information at all. For me, that shows a disrespect to the Committee that we really need to get beyond. I am not happy with that, and, even though I may go into a different Division Lobby from the Chair later, when the debate finishes, that disrespect towards the Chair needs sorted out. I implore the Minister to sort it out, because it infects the entire relationship between the Committee and the Department.

That relationship should be vigorous, vibrant, constructive and positive, even though, of course, we have a duty to scrutinise what the Minister does.

Over recent days, I, too, have been lobbied by all sorts of people, including the social enterprise sector. Aisling Brady of the Donaghmore District Community Association has been lobbying, because that community association decided that going into renewables was a good idea. As government money retracts, they thought that perhaps they could have other enterprises, and they will be hit by this. Gavin McGuire of the Federation of Master Builders was on to me as well, as was a private nursing home in north Belfast that had planned to install renewable heating. We are not blind to the pain that is out there or to the real consequences of this.

When I spoke to the Minister last Tuesday, after we had gone through a full two-hour meeting about this debacle in the Enterprise Committee, I implored him not to close the scheme today. In fact, he has not done that, and there has been a compromise. We are getting until the end of the month. While that is not satisfactory for everyone, it represents a compromise.

Three points sum it up for those of us in Sinn Féin. One is that, without a doubt, this is a dog's dinner. The situation should never have been allowed to get to this point. The renewable heat initiative was a scheme that got totally out of control. It seems to me that there was no one at the wheel. There was no one watching or giving advice in a timely fashion.

The Committee and the Minister should have been told much earlier that we had a funding crisis and that, if we did not act immediately, it would just get worse. I hope that we can learn from this and, if the scheme is suspended today, come back in a new mandate for a fresh look at not only the renewable heat incentive but ROCs and the problems with the renewable obligations.

5.30 pm

All I can say to those in the sector who have been in touch with me over recent days is that we have fought for the compromise of two weeks but the sums are huge. We are told that the difference to the Budget is £95 million over five years, or almost £20 million a year extra, because the scheme has grown so much bigger than was ever intended. That represents such a blow to the Executive and to our Budget, especially the economic development budget, that we have to make that Hobson's choice of finishing the scheme at the end of February or suspending it in order to look at it again, so that we have the money to stimulate the economy in the time ahead. The renewables sector has been a boon to the entire economy, and we hope that it will be improved and do well. However, when it comes down to that Hobson's choice of either continuing to spend money just in this sector on a scheme that has been mismanaged and has got out of control or cap it and rein it in, then we have to vote for its suspension.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Finally, and I know that he will come back when we finish, the fact that the Minister has had to come today shows the seriousness of the situation, and I really hope that lessons have been learned and will be learned through the review that he mentioned. Without being cruel, I hope that those responsible for monitoring this scheme are not responsible for monitoring any other renewables schemes. I hope that, when we come forward with alternatives to the renewable heat incentive scheme in the time ahead, we can look back at this mess — this dog's dinner — having ensured that it will not happen again and that those responsible have been brought to account.

There has been talk about something having been skewed in the applications, but, for me, the blame lies, and I hate saying this — I hate saying this — in the Department. People were in over their head and did not let us know in time. I do not like criticising officials, but where the public purse is involved, we have to insist that lessons are learned and that the Minister comes back in future to assure us that this will not happen again.

Mr McKinney: I endorse the account of the Committee's lack of awareness of this situation as reflected by my colleague Mr Patsy McGlone. I also welcome the outlining of some of the issues as they reflect on individuals.

Mr Lunn referred to what Action Renewables has done to inform Members, and it is important to remember that Action Renewables is a respected institution, which gave evidence to the Committee when that was sought. Indeed, it is worthwhile putting on record in the House just what it said. It sampled 14 different companies — Members will have this, but I think that it is important to read it into the record — and, basically, it says that, next year, £22 million of pipeline work may not now go ahead. To break that down for three of the headline constituencies: that is over £5 million in Upper Bann, £6 million in South Down and maybe £16 million in Mid Ulster. As I said, 14 companies were surveyed, but the organisation underscored that there was a potential impact of 140 lost jobs. That could rise to 2,000 overall, or so it claims. It also talked about working capital, and the stock that is either held or in transit here is around £3.6 million.

It is also important to consider the implications for renewable energy policy here. In particular, what drivers will there be to allow us to achieve the 2020 10% target if the ROCs are gone and this renewable heat incentive scheme is gone as well? There was reflection earlier of the contradictory implications of other companies that we were encouraging to do this work and sell, both internally here and for export, being in receipt of Invest NI grants. It is important that we ask some of those questions as well.

The Chair reflected very well the concerns that we should all have about how this scheme increased but nothing was done. In England, when they experienced an increase, they took action to try to mitigate those increases. However, nothing was done here. I do not know whether that was during the time that the Minister was in and out of his seat, but certainly that was not helpful.

I have to say that I take issue with the Minister talking about abuse of this scheme and then saying, in the same sentence, that he does not have any evidence. If he is going to bring people to the Chamber and ask us to endorse an allegation about abuse when he does not have any evidence of that nature at all, and in fact admits that he does not have any evidence and may now start searching for that evidence, I think that he will get a different response from us than the one that he would like.

We are not going to accept a gun-to-our-head proposition from the Minister on this issue. Work was not done. More explanations are needed. More mitigation should be forthcoming. The SDLP will not respond to dire warnings. We want to see further mitigation action taken, potentially sliding-scale propositions, but certainly not a gun to our head on a Monday afternoon in the Chamber. This was brought late. The Department, the Minister and others should have known so much more about it and alerted us at a much earlier stage.

Mr Allister: What a shambles. It is hard to look at this matter otherwise than to acknowledge the gross departmental, and thus ministerial, mismanagement. If this situation had evolved under direct rule, can you imagine the outcry and allegations from those, namely the DUP and Sinn Féin, who will seek tonight to brush it all under the carpet by voting through what the Minister wants? Can you imagine the outcry about Ministers being asleep at the wheel, taking their eye off the ball, having no interest in the job, being more interested in something else, allowing things to get out of control and having no thought for the people or the economy of Northern Ireland? Can you not hear it all? Yet every one of those things could be said in a situation where we are supposed to have caring, local, responsive devolution. It is under that regime of supposedly caring, local, responsible devolution that this shambles has come to fruition.

This was a scheme that, in many ways, was a win-win. The Westminster authorities were paying for it. It was coming out of the AME funding. However, it was so mismanaged that, instead of following the provisions wisely taken elsewhere in GB where you adjusted the tariffs with demand, it was simply allowed to run out of control. Then someone wakes up and decides, "Oh, this cannot go on," as if it had nothing to do with them; as if they were not the ones in charge of this scheme; as if they were not the ones who were told last July that it was running in the wrong direction with demand; and as if they were not the ones who, in November, with tariffs reducing, issued an indication that it would run to the end of March.

It was not some third party in some distant place that failed to control this; it was a supposedly hands-on local Minister. Whatever he was doing, he did not have his eye on this ball. Wherever he was — China or wherever — he was not looking after the shop as far as the scheme is concerned. Now he comes along, almost as if it has nothing to do with him, but it has everything to do with him. Sadly, as far as the consequences are concerned, it has everything to do with many of our constituents, who will pay the price for the incompetence that has been manifested.

I am sure that we have all been inundated with difficulties from constituents. I think of two families who, because of the peculiar nature of their scheme, have to wait for custom-built stoves, which will not be available until the middle of March. The work has started and expenditure has been committed, but the custom-built stoves cannot be provided until the middle of March. Courtesy of a unilateral drawing of a pen across a page and saying, "Nothing from the end of February", they are simply expected to bear all that loss.

When government conducts itself in the manner in which this scheme evolved, it creates a reasonable expectation for those who come to avail themselves of the scheme that it will be there to be availed of. When the Minister reaffirmed the deadline of 31 March, he created such a reasonable expectation. Now he wants to pull it away unilaterally. I suspect that some of this will end up before the courts because, in public law, the creation of reasonable expectation is a very important principle. I suspect that he may learn more about that as matters unfold.

I think of a supplier in the Ballymena area who, in forward planning, as businesses are meant to do, looked at the orders he had and ordered in the stoves, and he will be left sitting with them. That is a huge outlay because of the incompetence of a Department and a Minister. All the stock that that supplier will have to pay for is lost to him. We then wonder why small and medium-sized businesses find it so tough. We hear all the platitudes and sound bites from DETI about how it is the friend of business and is there to help SMEs. It is crucifying SMEs with that measure. That is what is happening.

The very least that the Minister can do to make some amends for that which has been mishandled to date is to have transitional arrangements in place so that those who have not contributed to this but will suffer greatly in consequence of it have their situation ameliorated. He really needs to put in place transitional arrangements and funding to cover that.

5.45 pm

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I thank the Member for giving way. The Department informed the Committee last week that it had had no consultation with the sector and did not know how many jobs and businesses were at risk. The Department does not have a clue about the sector. Does the Minister agree that that is totally unacceptable and shows a lack of leadership and vision in the Department?

Mr Allister: This Member agrees, but I doubt that the Minister will agree.

It is one of the worst manifestations that we have seen of the mismanagement and bungling of a scheme at departmental level. Those who took up the scheme did so in good faith, believing that they were working with responsible government and that they could trust what was said in the small print, which was that the scheme would be open until 31 March. They now find that they cannot do that and that it will cost them hugely. I trust that they will well remember whom to blame for that. The people to blame for that are those in the two parties that will, evidently, ram through this proposal tonight.

Mr Agnew: In front of us today is the latest in a list of renewable energy failures by this Department and successive Enterprise, Trade and Investment Ministers.

First, in 2014, we had the loss of a £1 billion offshore wind development under the previous Minister, Arlene Foster. That would have produced 400MW of renewable energy. It was only for Northern Ireland, but it was bigger than anything proposed across the rest of the UK. We lost that because the then Minister and her Department did not fight to save it, and we accepted that that scheme, that investment and those jobs were lost.

Then, we had a new Minister who was going to stand up for the renewable energy industry. When DECC introduced changes to the renewables obligation certificate, our Minister said, "No, we will not have those changes in Northern Ireland". He gave a commitment to businesses in Northern Ireland that there would be no early closure of the scheme here. Then, the DECC Minister stepped in and said, "Yes, you will", the Minister buckled and the scheme is to close early.

We had another commitment to a reduction in RHI tariffs. That was acceptable, and there was no huge outcry about it. He said that the new tariffs would be in place until 31 March. We have had a rollback on that commitment, too. We have to wonder whether, when this Minister makes a commitment to the renewables industry, we should take heed of it at all.

It is almost as if we were coming down with jobs in Northern Ireland and could, therefore, afford to play fast and loose with the one industry that grew throughout the recession. It is the one industry whose needs Northern Ireland has the skills and tools to meet. We in Northern Ireland are steeped in engineering and manufacturing.

Mr McGlone: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will give way.

Mr McGlone: Does the Member also accept that, with the downturn in the construction industry, many associated with that industry sought gainful employment in the renewables sector, carved out a niche for themselves and became specialists?

Mr Agnew: The Member is absolutely right. Many have retrained, and the South Eastern Regional College's Ards campus focuses on many of the skills needed to work in the sector.

People have retrained because of the commitment from government — I go back to the word "commitment" because that is what was given — to the sector, to those workers and, indeed, to those in education who saw the future in renewables and invested their time and energy in retraining to take part in the industry. Now that commitment is being withdrawn, and we are asked to support that withdrawal here today.

The RHI was about ending our dependence on fossil fuels, which are polluting and depleting and have ever-fluctuating costs. We were told in Committee, "It is OK to close this now. We have overreached our target for 4% in 2015". That again ignores the commitment that was made to reach a 10% renewable heat target by 2020.

The scheme was announced by Arlene Foster in 2012, and we were told then that it was a £25 million investment. That was money that was coming directly from the Westminster Government at no cost to our block grant. All we had to do in Northern Ireland was effectively administer a scheme that had been established and was being funded by the Westminster Government. We simply had to administer it. Despite that, we still managed to have, in a £25 million scheme, a £30 million overspend. That is a shambles. It is serious financial mismanagement. I questioned the officials in Committee and asked when the decision was made and why we did not follow the model that will continue in the rest of the UK. We will be the only part of the UK not to have a renewable heat incentive. I asked these questions: "Why is it continuing to operate there and not here? What did they do differently? Why is their scheme sustainable and ours unsustainable?". I was told, "They had this system whereby, if demand went up, they reduced the tariffs to manage demand and keep it sustainable". I asked, "Why did we not do that? It seems sensible". I was told, "Our priority was to introduce the domestic scheme". This Department can cope with only one priority. Where is the capacity? Where was the management from the then Minister, Mrs Foster, to meet the workload of the Department with the resources that were required? That model would have saved our scheme and prevented the £30 million overspend, and we would not be in the crisis we are in today.

It is worrying that the Department can manage only one priority with this scheme, but there are many priorities coming forward. There is the review of the strategic energy framework as well as the need to resolve the issue of the renewables obligation certificates and to work out what we do when they come to an end. There is the energy Bill that did not come forward in this mandate but is expected in the next. Does the Department have the capacity to deal with those issues effectively? Does it have the capacity to deal with them competently? That is a question that we are perfectly entitled to ask.

The announcement was made late on a Friday — it was early on a Friday evening, late in the afternoon — that the scheme would close with immediate effect. We then had a further announcement that said, "Well, we'll extend it for two weeks". I wonder whether it was always the plan to give the worst-case scenario and then say, "It's OK; we will give you two weeks and hope that that will dissipate some of your anger, frustration and annoyance". It is too late for that. Given the way people have been treated, I do not think any resolution will quell the disquiet. The commitment was given that the tariffs would be in place until 31 March, and people had a reasonable expectation that that was what would happen.

The Minister also tells us that, if we vote no today, there is no other option. When I am told that there is no other option, I will find that other option. There are always alternatives; there are always options. One option for the Minister would have been to put a date on the statutory rule, so that we could debate that date. If it was rejected, he could come back with an alternative proposal; indeed, he still has that option, should this be rejected today. There are options; there is a choice. I certainly cannot choose the option being presented by the Minister.

Further, the Minister exposed his and, I suspect, the Executive's ambivalence in supporting renewables. He said, "Well, some people think we support renewables too much, and some people think that we do not support them enough. So we have supported them a bit. If we close this now, isn't that meeting everybody in the middle?". That is one way to look at it. However, the Minister could show leadership. He could adhere to his commitments and those of his predecessor to the renewables industry and say, "No. There are two sides to the argument, but I will stand with one side, which is that renewables are the way forward for our heat and electricity production and the way forward for creating jobs and backing a growing industry in this society". He has exposed the lack of commitment.

All along, I have this said about the RHI scheme: it was funded by the UK Government. It was not, in itself, a case of the Executive showing commitment; it was simply a case of saying, "Well, if there is free money, then, yes, we will take it". A commitment would be the Executive saying, "This scheme has been successful. This scheme has overreached the demand". I maintain that it has been badly managed and we should not have this degree of overspend. However, a commitment would be to say, "We have made a commitment to 31 March, and we will fund those schemes and see out the renewable heat incentive scheme. We will spend the extra money in renewables. Thank you for the £25 million from the UK Government, but we will invest Northern Ireland money in renewables”.

Thirty million pounds is a lot of money. It was also a lot of money when we committed £32.5 million to gas infrastructure to bring gas to the west. It is not unheard of that we will invest such sums in energy infrastructure. Whilst the Minister might point to “costly renewables”, as he put it, just remember how costly the gas industry has been in terms of subsidies for gas to the west, for the gas network and for the boiler replacement scheme. It is not all about renewables. We subsidise energy because it is part of our infrastructure, and renewables are a key part of that.

I call on the Minister to withdraw his proposal, meet the commitment and continue the scheme until, at least, 31 March. I call for a deep, exhaustive review of the scheme, assuming there is the capacity to do so, and for it to come back. Absolutely, there are flaws in how the scheme has been run, but its principles are right. The technology is right. Those businesses deserve to be supported. That review must take place, and the scheme must be reinstated in a sustainable way. This is about sustainable energy, and we need sustainable funding.

Alternatively, the Minister will have to compensate those companies. It will likely take the form of legal proceedings; that was clear. Indeed, I asked that question of the officials when they came to the Committee, and they accepted that legal proceedings were likely.

So why ask our small businesses to go through those hoops? Meet your commitments, Minister. Whilst I will not call on the Minister to go today because, as I said, it was this Minister and his predecessor, Mrs Foster, who have collective responsibility for this shambles, I call for him to apologise for the mess that he has brought to the Chamber.

Mr McCallister: I represent one of the constituencies that will be very heavily affected by this. Part of the Minister’s remit is to, very often, travel round the world and sell Northern Ireland as a place to invest and as a place where there is a skilled workforce and to talk about all the things that we can do. Here, we have a scheme that, as Mr Agnew said, was very successful in creating skilled employment and local jobs yet also in meeting an environmental obligation. We have all those. We have small companies, some of which are subcontractors; perhaps they are self-employed plumbers, working on other smaller businesses. Mr Allister talked about one in his constituency. I have one in south Down that has £1 million of equipment on order, knowing — in the sure and certain knowledge, they thought — that the Government had guaranteed the scheme until 31 March. Where does that business go? When does it start to lay people off? If it is as bad as many Members think, where are we going to stop with redundancies? Will it be at 1,000? Will it be at 1,500? Will it be at 2,000?

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I thank the Member for giving way. Does the Member agree with me that it is totally unacceptable that he is talking about job redundancies in businesses in south Down but that there will be no job redundancies in DETI? No one in DETI will be held to account through this investigation. The senior civil servants who have been mismanaged by the Minister will get off the hook.

Mr McCallister: Not only off the hook, I suspect; maybe out on the voluntary exit scheme. That is the problem that we face. Many colleagues here ran or were involved in small businesses in a previous life. How do you manage that? Very often, it is cash flow that takes businesses down. How do you order £1 million of equipment and then find out that it is not by 31 March but by 29 February that the work has to be done? It is impossible to manage and deal with the scheme that way.

The frustrating thing is related to the points that Mr Agnew made. We look across the water at the rest of the country and see that it is managing it and doing it properly. Where there is supply and demand, a balance has to be struck on where, perhaps, a limit has to be placed on what can be used. Most of us would probably say, “That seems reasonably sensible. That seems as if we could make and use this scheme and stretch it far beyond and get the maximum benefit out of it”. We end up being the only part of the UK that has to call time on this — even earlier than we had hoped to. Of course, we end up with all the problems associated with that, such as the possibility of businesses running into financial hardship, or businesses not knowing whether they should have been putting workers on notice last Friday, this Friday or whatever Friday. It creates uncertainty for the subcontractors. It makes doing business on a government scheme very difficult. This is exactly the type of business that we want to support: home-grown business that is not going to move to a lower cost base at some point in the future, because it has to be here. The scheme is therefore something that we should have been supporting.

From the perspective of the agrifood sector, it could have a huge impact.

Mr McGlone: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: Certainly.

Mr McGlone: I am glad that the Member has referred to the agrifood sector. I am sure that he is aware of the fact that the Ulster Farmers’ Union has been in touch about the potential risk to upwards of 50 projects if the scheme is denied to them.

Will the Member also accept that, for many of those SMEs, what this does dissipates and crashes public confidence in the ability of the Department and Executive to do things effectively and efficiently and with some degree of dignity and honour? It just crashes it. I trust that the Member will take that point.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful. I do take that point, because why on earth would you, at a point in the future, enter into or believe in a Government commitment or project? You would have to have a fair degree of suspicion when you entered into such an agreement. It reminds me of the old saying, “I’m from the Government, and I’m here to help”. That level of suspicion around what would happen would be created. Not only is this hugely damaging to DETI’s reputation in Northern Ireland but it deals a huge blow to confidence.

The agrifood sector availed itself of the scheme, which was helping to deliver on some of its targets, and it could have been used and managed every bit as well as it is being done in England. If only the Minister could see whether there was any way of tapping into some more of that resource in the national target and build on the successes. To stop the scheme effectively a week from now is putting huge pressure on businesses in my constituency and across Northern Ireland, and that is huge source of regret.

Mr Bell: I thank all those who have contributed to the debate. Energy matters are a major issue for the Assembly, local households and businesses. A number of issues were raised today, and I will go through them forensically. Everyone has had their say. Let me try to address some of the points that have been made.

The Committee Chair, Mr McGlone, raised the issue of 31 March 2016. I hope that everyone will take away, if they take away nothing else, that the date of 31 March applied only to tariffs. It did not apply to scheme closure. Anybody who examines this or looks at the legislation will understand that the only way in which the scheme can be suspended is through legislation. The date of 31 March applied to the tariffs, not to the suspension and ending of the scheme. I want to be clear on that, because I have heard people say that the legislation refers to 31 March as a closure date. I am surprised that the Chairman of the Committee does not know that that is simply not the case. One would have thought that he, the QC, Mr Agnew or anybody who had read the legislation would have known that. Let me say that what people are referring to as a closure date in the legislation is simply not that. The date of 31 March is referred to simply as the point at which the existing tariff changes to take account of inflation. The legislation provides for the scheme to be ongoing. That is why we need the legislation; otherwise, the scheme would stay open indefinitely.

The question was raised by Conor Murphy, Adrian Cochrane-Watson and others about investment and about RHI money being wasted.

We need to be clear: the RHI scheme has already brought over £50 million of investment into Northern Ireland. We now face a significant pressure going forward because Treasury will no longer fund the entire RHI. Let me say that again: we face a significant pressure going forward because Treasury will no longer fund the entire RHI. Nonetheless, the RHI will still bring something like £130 million into the Northern Ireland economy over the next five years. We will have to contribute around £100 million over the next five years, but the £130 million is additional investment over and above our block grant.

People have asked about timings. I want to refer to a letter dated 21 December 2015 that went to the Department and that I received through officials. That letter is very clear. It states:

Some of arguments that have been made will go off like snow out of a ditch when you refer to the facts and to the letter of 21 December 2015, which states:

“However, while her Majesty’s Treasury are still considering the funding issue”.

For those who want to be precisely clear on the energy issue and on the fact that March refers to tariffs, let me refer them to the Renewable Heat Incentive Schemes (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015. Section 10(3) states:

It is in black and white in the legislation that you should have read. If you have not read it, you should have read it, even in the previous years. You will see that, at every stage, even in the 2012 legislation, it refers to tariffs changing on 31 March. Anybody who did even a cursory examination of the legislation would realise that that does not amount to suspension on 31 March. The legislation is very clear. It only refers to tariffs.

Members have made a number of statements, and I do not intend to engage in any of the silly politicking or personal abuse. I refer Members to the Hansard report of 17 November. I will read it into the record. It states:

“That investment brings benefits in terms of job retention and creation in the energy services sector.”

Listen to what I said verbatim in November 2015:

“Unfortunately, however, all that success comes at a cost. Total applications for the Northern Ireland non-domestic scheme are now exceeding our highest estimates. Therefore, we need to look at the full range of cost-control measures that have been introduced in GB. Of necessity, that will include measures to curtail the scheme should Treasury funding be restricted. I will take a decision in the light of any announcements in the spending review.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 109, p267, col 2].

That is the statement that I made to the House on 17 November 2015. It appears to not have been well understood.

Mr Dunne asked some questions about timing. During the debate on 17 November 2015, I talked about bringing forward the legislation to limit the RHI tariffs. I will reiterate what I said at the time and what I have read into the record:

“I will take a decision in the light of any announcements in the spending review.” — [Official Report, (Hansard), Bound Volume 109, p267, col 2].

Given my statement on 17 November, no one should be surprised today that the scheme is being suspended.

6.15 pm

The November spending review in the UK sought to curtail spending, as is now well known. The letter from the Treasury that I referred to was dated 13 January 2016, and received by the Department on 15 January 2016. Official-to-official engagement ended on 22 December, and the Chief Secretary to the Treasury wrote to our Finance Minister on 13 January 2016 to fully outline what the November statement meant for the application of the RHI to Northern Ireland. As we know today, the scheme has enormous budgetary pressures, and must be suspended. We simply have no option. My officials and officials in DFP have exhausted all options in negotiating with the Treasury, and the scheme must now be suspended.

People raised the issue of fraud. I thought I had made that clear in my opening remarks. However, it is clear that the unprecedented increase in demand does require special scrutiny. My Department has initiated procurement of additional auditing and checks to supplement the programme of audits that are already completed by Ofgem, which administers the non-domestic scheme. Measures will be taken to ensure that the operation of the scheme is in compliance with the scheme requirements and the underpinning legislation. I do not think that the general public would expect anything less.

Conor Murphy raised the issue of allegations of fraud, as did others, including Fearghal McKinney. Let me put it on the record that we have received anonymous correspondence alleging abuse of the non-domestic scheme. I want to confirm to the House that I have brought that to the attention of the scheme administrator, Ofgem.

Look at the management of the scheme — Members have raised that issue. The low levels of uptake initially created a £15 million underspend in the first three years. Uptake improved in 2015 following promotional campaigns and the introduction of the domestic scheme in December 2014. A sustained increase in applications in the spring was the catalyst for the demand control measures brought forward for the non-domestic scheme in November 2015. However, in the run-up to those changes, there was an unprecedented surge in applications, with over 900 received in six weeks. That doubled the number of installations on the non-domestic scheme. The increased costs associated with the surge in applications, together with budgetary reductions arising from the November spending review, mean that the available budgets for new applications have been exceeded. Meeting existing RHI commitments, let alone new ones, would have a significant impact on the Northern Ireland Budget, and that is why both schemes must close.

We should not necessarily look away from the success of those schemes. The RHI has provided homes, businesses, hotels, leisure centres, churches and schools with the opportunity to receive ongoing financial assistance to cover the costs incurred when switching to renewable heating. The RHI has been very successful. It is supporting 3,500 renewable heating installations. The RHI is an innovative scheme designed to support the achievement of 10% renewable heat by 2020. That is a challenging target, considering the baseline position of 1.7%. The Programme for Government interim target of renewable heat by 2015 has not only been met; it has been exceeded. The current estimate suggests that 6% has been achieved. By securing increased levels of renewable heating, Northern Ireland becomes more self-sufficient and more energy-secure, and it reduces our carbon footprint. The RHI is a positive news story for the Northern Ireland energy market as consumers embrace new technologies, reduce their carbon emissions and help to support the development of this new sector.

The issue of seeking the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee's approval has been raised, and I want Members to understand that, given the urgency of the situation, I am seeking the Assembly's approval of the necessary legislation to close both RHI schemes. Regrettably, the situation did not allow time to follow the established convention of seeking the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee's approval of the policy and draft legislation. I recognise the importance of the Committee's role, but I must take the course of action that addresses the risk to public finances and seek to progress the necessary legislation that I have laid before you today.

Mr Agnew said that we have a very poor record on renewables. He and others say that we have done badly, but we have exceeded our Programme for Government targets on heat and on renewable electricity. As I said, 4% was set for heat renewables by 2015, and we are at 6%. The target that was set for us on renewable electricity was 20%, and we have hit 23%. Now that we have exceeded the targets that the Programme for Government set for us on renewables, it is the time for us to bring our collective wisdom together to look at how these schemes and others can be progressed in an affordable way.

In conclusion, everyone should consider why the RHI is closing. The renewable heat incentive was introduced in November 2012 to the non-domestic sector and in December 2014 to the domestic sector, and it has been taken up very successfully. As I pointed out, with over 3,500 renewable heating installations incentivised to date, uptake has been higher than in GB. We have exceeded the target of 4%, with around 6% of Northern Ireland's heating now provided through renewable heating technology. Over the last 18 months, the number of non-domestic RHI applications has grown from around 200 to over 1,800. Over 900 applications were received in the run-up to the scheme changes of 18 November 2015. This, however, together with reductions in available funding, means that we all have to face up to the significant budgetary pressures.

In the circumstances, I have no choice but to propose closure of the scheme to prevent further overspend. The urgent need to manage the financial risk means that legislation must be brought forward at the earliest possible juncture. I commend the motion to the House.

Committee Business

Commissioner for Standards: Appointment of an Acting Commissioner

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the motion and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Order. If Members are leaving the Chamber, they should do so quietly. Otherwise, they should resume their seats so that we can be heard.

Mr Givan (The Chairperson of the Committee on Standards and Privileges): I beg to move

That this Assembly notes that the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards is unable to act in relation to a complaint from Mr Sammy Wilson MP dated 15 December 2015; appoints Mr Gerard Elias as an acting commissioner, in accordance with section 23(1) of the Assembly Members (Independent Financial Review and Standards) Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, to investigate all such complaints; directs that this appointment shall cease when Mr Elias has reported on all such complaints; and further directs that the terms of his appointment, in particular his remuneration, will, subject to any necessary modification, be the same as those of the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards.

On 6 January 2016, Douglas Bain, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards, wrote to inform the Committee on Standards and Privileges that he did not consider that he was able to act in respect of complaints by Mr Sammy Wilson MP because of a significant risk that any decision that he would take could be perceived to be biased. These complaints relate to an issue of declaring interests in a meeting of a Committee.

Mr Bain informed the Committee that, in the course of an interview in June 2015, Mr Wilson made comments about the commissioner that he considered defamatory and that they have been the subject of a pre-action to Mr Wilson from Mr Bain's solicitors. The commissioner therefore believes that whatever the outcome of his consideration it could be perceived as being biased and that, to retain the integrity of the process, it would be appropriate to appoint an acting commissioner who is perceived to be impartial.

The Assembly has always recognised that there may be circumstances in which the commissioner is unable to act. That is why section 23(1) of the Assembly Members (Independent Financial Review and Standards) Act 2011 states:

"When the office of the Commissioner is vacant or the Commissioner is, for any reason, unable to act, the Assembly may appoint a person to discharge any function of that office until such time as may be specified by the terms and conditions of such appointment; and a person so appointed is referred to in this section as an 'Acting Commissioner'."

What we seek to do today, Mr Deputy Speaker, is exactly that: to appoint an acting commissioner in relation to these particular complaints because the commissioner has told us that he is unable to act.

This is the second occasion when the Committee has had to seek to appoint an acting commissioner. The first was in 2013, when the Assembly appointed the then Scottish Commissioner for Ethical Standards in Public Life, Mr Stuart Allan, to consider complaints following a declared interest by the commissioner.

The question of how the Assembly might use this power was considered in 2013 during the Standards Network conference, which brought together the various commissioners and standards officials from across the UK and the Republic of Ireland. It was recognised at the time that there was statutory provision to appoint an acting commissioner not only here at the Assembly but at the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales. It was also acknowledged that the respective commissioners would be well placed to carry out the role of acting commissioner in the other jurisdictions, should the need ever arise.

Mr Deputy Speaker, I was pleased when the Standards Commissioner for Wales, Mr Gerard Elias, indicated that he would be willing to carry out the role of acting commissioner in this instance if the Assembly wished him to do so. Gerard Elias QC is a leading criminal QC with over 40 years' legal experience who has been involved in many of the most important criminal cases on the Welsh circuit in recent years. He also has many years' experience in the field of professional discipline at a high-profile UK level, particularly in sport. Mr Elias is a highly qualified and experienced public office holder with considerable experience in the investigation of complaints against elected representatives. It is also important to point out that Mr Elias has confirmed that he is not disqualified from being appointed as an acting commissioner.

Mr Deputy Speaker, the motion before the Assembly today provides for Mr Elias to be able to investigate these specific complaints and any further related complaints. That means that, should further related complaints be submitted, Mr Elias would be able to investigate them without our needing to bring forward a further motion. The motion directs that this appointment shall cease when Mr Elias has reported on all such complaints. The motion also directs that the terms of Mr Elias's appointment, in particular his remuneration, will, subject to any necessary modification, be the same as those of the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards.

That is an important point, particularly for those who may have had concerns about the costs of appointing an acting commissioner.

6.45 pm

Under the terms of his appointment, the commissioner is not paid a salary; rather, he is paid for those pieces of work that he undertakes. If he does not undertake a particular piece of work, he does not get paid for it. Of course, that means that, where an acting commissioner investigates a complaint instead of the commissioner, and where his remuneration is the same as the commissioner's, there is no additional cost to the public purse for the time taken to carry out that investigation. I want to emphasise the point: save for perhaps some travel costs, there is no additional cost to the Assembly as a result of this appointment.

That brings to a close my remarks in my capacity as Chairperson of the Committee on Standards and Privileges. I will now make some comments as a Democratic Unionist Party MLA. It is somewhat disappointing for the party that Mr Bain has felt the need to recuse himself in these circumstances. Mr Wilson made very significant complaints, and we believe that there is no reason that Mr Bain could not carry out this investigation. However, as I have already indicated, the 2011 Act provides him with the power, for any reason, to recuse himself. There have been some exchanges of correspondence between Mr Wilson and Mr Bain on the issue, and we are, as a party, surprised that Mr Bain felt it necessary to seek clarification from Mr Wilson as to whether he was content for Mr Bain to be the person to carry out this investigation.

I will quote from a letter from Mr Wilson, which the Committee had sight of, in response to Mr Bain's request as to whether he would be content for Mr Bain to carry out the investigation. Mr Wilson wrote:

"To date, I am unaware that any other complainant has been asked to meet conditions imposed by yourself prior to your agreement to proceed with their complaint. If you do make this a regular requirement, perhaps you could furnish me with examples of others who have had some sort of filter applied to their issue before you decided to act. I trust that your letter is not some ham-fisted attempt to carry out a vendetta against someone who had the temerity to stand up to you. I will give you the benefit of the doubt on that and will look forward to an early indication as to how you intend to deal with the very serious matters which I have drawn to your attention and which I am sure the public would expect you to investigate without preconditions."

Therefore, Mr Wilson has been making it very clear that he is content for Mr Bain to carry out this investigation. He is not aware that either of the individuals complained of have expressed any dissatisfaction with Mr Bain being the investigator to do that. Therefore, we are surprised that Mr Bain has felt the need to recuse himself. In a recent piece of correspondence from Mr Bain to Mr Wilson, he explained that his decision was based on paragraph 6.3 of the general procedures direction to justify his decision. That direction states that the commissioner:

"must at all times act in accordance with the principles of natural justice and fairness."

The direction goes on to state that it includes the right of the complainant and the Member about whose conduct the complaint has been made to have the matter determined by a commissioner who is impartial or who is perceived as being impartial.

Mr Wilson, in this most recent letter, dated 9 February, back to Mr Bain, responded:

"Since I have not asked for the matter to be dealt with by another commissioner, and since I understand you have not sought the view of the person about whom I complained, it is clear that the paragraph to which you refer cannot and does not give the opportunity for you to evade your responsibilities on this matter."

Suffice it to say, we are putting on the record that we are not satisfied with the reasons that have been given by Mr Bain. That having been said, there is a recognition that the power rests with him to recuse himself. He has decided to do that, and, as such, we are left with no alternative in these circumstances but to agree with the motion, as we did at the Committee, that we will appoint the acting commissioner to take the complaint forward. Therefore, the party will support the motion.

Mr Diver: The Committee Chairperson has outlined his position on the matter. However, given the commissioner's thoughts on the matter, which are that he feels that it is inappropriate that he should oversee the complaint, it is only right that we proceed along these lines. We will support the motion.

Mr Givan: I thank Mr Diver for his contribution. [Laughter.] He is one of our new members to the Committee, and he has been very diligent in his attendance and the scrutiny role that he has carried out, so I welcome his contribution today. Given that this is a very straightforward motion today, I am happy to commend the motion to the house.

Question put and agreed to.

Inquiry into Inclusion in the Arts of Working-class Communities Report

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to two hours for this debate. The proposer will have ten minutes to propose the motion, and 10 minutes to wind up the debate. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr McCausland (The Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure): I beg to move

That this Assembly approves the report of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure on its inquiry into inclusion in the arts of working-class communities [NIA 298/11–16]; and calls on the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to implement the recommendations contained in the report.

It is a great pleasure to rise today as the Chairperson to move this motion on the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee's inquiry into inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. I would like to thank the other members of the Committee and the Committee staff for the considerable work that they have put into an important inquiry report. Additionally, I want to thank the Minister for agreeing to respond today. I would also like to thank all the individuals and groups who contributed to the inquiry, through written submissions or by giving evidence before the Committee, and to those who attended the discussion events held by the Committee at the Flowerfield Arts Centre in Portstewart and the Lyric Theatre in Belfast.

I am sure that all the Members here this afternoon will agree that it is vital that everyone in Northern Ireland has equal access to the arts, irrespective of their socio-economic status. The arts and culture can and do enrich all our lives. The Committee's core motivation for undertaking this inquiry is the Members' strong belief in the benefits that participation and inclusion in arts activity can bring to individuals and communities. Such benefits include health and wellbeing; the development of personal and community capacity and skills; and a range of other socio-economic benefits.

There has been much said about the Committee's use of the phrase "working-class communities" in the title of the inquiry. It has been suggested that a more technical term should have been used, however, the Committee agreed that the term "working class" still has great resonance and meaning. Therefore, Members felt that it was appropriate to use it when referring to disadvantaged, marginalised or deprived communities. It is also a phrase that people can identify with regarding their origins. They may no longer live in a working-class community, however, those origins shaped their attitudes towards the arts and culture. The Committee has also not used any specific index or matrix to measure deprivation, as Members wanted the inquiry to be more about people's views and ideas than where they fitted in on an index.

The Committee believes that everyone in the community should have regular access to the arts and the benefits these provide. The Committee does not believe that access to the arts and culture should be diluted for working-class communities. The arts should be part of the everyday lives of all of the people who live in Northern Ireland. However, the Committee also acknowledges that people cannot, and should not, be forced to engage with the arts and culture. The ideal is that people are exposed to arts and culture from an early age and can then see what aspects they are particularly drawn to.

The Committee is firmly of the belief that the best way to ensure that everyone has access to, and an understanding of, the arts is to develop a wide-ranging Executive strategy that cuts across a range of Departments and provides an access point to the arts and culture through an individual's life and in a variety of contexts. To this end, the Committee welcomes the Minister for Culture, Arts and Leisure's consultation on a culture and arts strategy, and the inquiry report's recommendations were written with such a strategy in mind.

Research that the Committee commissioned strongly suggests that inclusion in the arts is lower for those in disadvantaged communities; however, the evidence provided to the inquiry suggests that the situation is much more complex. Research has tended to focus on ticketed events, where information can be more easily gathered, and does not deal with more informal, unticketed arts events. The Committee believes that working-class communities are often more likely to engage with informal, unticketed arts and culture events and that members of those communities would not necessarily regard those events as the arts but rather see them as part of their cultural identity.

Members are clear that there is a great deal of arts and cultural activity going on in those communities. However, the inquiry has a greater focus on how working-class communities are engaged by arts and cultural venues. The inquiry examined the accessibility and outreach activity of arts venues and bodies and how those impact on inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. We sought to pinpoint and understand the barriers to inclusion in the arts faced by folk from those communities and to seek ways to overcome them. As I have indicated, the Committee heard from a wide range of bodies and organisations, including key arts venues across Northern Ireland. We also heard from our arts establishment, as well as Departments, on what they are doing to widen access to the arts and include the communities that we are referring to. Obviously, a key part of the inquiry was about hearing from arts and culture practitioners in disadvantaged communities, and the Committee is grateful to them for sharing their insight and experiences.

The Committee has identified a number of broad barriers to communities' being included in the arts. Those were economic and financial barriers; barriers linked to geography or location; educational barriers; barriers around the availability and structure of funding for the sector; barriers with respect to awareness and information; lack of value placed on the arts; and community, cultural or psychological barriers. That is not an exhaustive list, and it is clear that some barriers are beyond the control of the communities and, therefore, government intervention is required. There are also many barriers that can be eroded only with the active cooperation of the communities and individuals in question. While it is clear that there is a vibrant arts and culture scene in Northern Ireland, both in rural and urban areas, the Committee believes that arts and culture can and should be part of the work carried out by government on a daily basis centrally and locally. That is why the creation of an Executive arts and culture strategy is the key recommendation of the inquiry and why the majority of the other recommendations are based on the development of such a strategy.

While there are complex sets of barriers to inclusion, the Committee believes that it is important that the issue is considered and that rural proofing takes place to provide greater opportunities for inclusion in arts and culture activities in rural areas. In the same vein, the Committee is conscious that those with special needs and/or disabilities face particular challenges in accessing and engaging with the arts, and that is another issue that needs to be taken forward.

The Committee is aware that there is a great deal of publicly owned art that is never accessible to view. The evidence received from the inquiry showed the Committee that there is a need for art to be brought to people and to be available in places that they access on a daily basis, such as schools, libraries or other public buildings. We recognise the difficulties that we will face in that, but we think it is an important opportunity.

Partnership is necessary to ensure that access to and participation in the arts and culture is widened as much as possible through partnerships between the Departments and so on. All those partnerships must be based on clearly understood aims, objectives and outcomes. Exposure to the arts and cultural activity from an early age is key, and the Committee is clear that children and young people must have regular and planned access to the arts and to cultural experiences. Access at an early age is more likely to allow an interest to develop and more likely to provide mitigation of family or community antipathy or apathy towards the arts.

In essence, the Committee believes that the arts must be democratised to maximise inclusion. As I have already outlined, the strategy that we encourage the Executive to bring forward should seek to creatively bring publicly owned art to public buildings and spaces, to allow all communities to enjoy and be inspired by art. Particular focus should be given to schools, libraries and other cultural and community hubs. There are a number of very detailed and specific recommendations in the report: we encourage the Minister to consider them in detail and to incorporate them into her strategy. As the executive summary states, there are no simple answers.

I have spoken as Chair of the Committee, but I want to make some personal observations as a DUP representative. As a party, we were disappointed by the cancellation of funding for musical instruments for bands. We believe that it is one of the most important sectors in many working-class communities, in that 20,000 to 25,000 people are learning and practising music week by week in bands. Yet, the Minister abandoned the opportunity to support the sector through funding for instruments. That was a wrong decision and a retrograde step that was totally unjustified. There was always a very good take-up and a good geographical spread for the allocation, including rural areas.

I will make two observations on the Minister's strategy for culture and arts, which is out for consultation. First, the document seems somewhat vague and vacuous. A more substantial document could have gone out to consultation. Secondly, as a party, we believe that it is important that cultural rights and equality are embedded in the strategy, and there is not sufficient evidence that they have been taken into account.

I commend the report to the House and look forward to the debate.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an deis labhairt ar an rún seo inniu. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion today.

The motion comes from the Committee inquiry into inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. It arose from a sense that people living in areas of deprivation were less likely to have access to or participate in activity that came under the broad description of arts. Mar sin de, le teist a dhéanamh agus le torthaí deafacha a bhaint amach, chuaidh an Coiste i mbun fiosrúcháin. To test that and to seek some positive outcomes, the Committee inquiry was undertaken.

It is a fairly widely held opinion that participation in the arts, whatever the arts might mean for an individual, can make a positive contribution to a person's sense of well-being and good health. It is certainly my view that no one should be excluded from the arts. The arts should be available to be enjoyed by everyone, regardless of background, gender or, indeed, any of the section 75 categories.

Throughout the inquiry, evidence was taken from a wide range of individuals and organisations — statutory, voluntary and community. Agus mo bhúochas do na daoine agus na grúpaí a ghlac páirt san fhiosrúchán. I thank the people who participated in and contributed to the inquiry. The presentations about what is being done to promote the arts were comprehensive and impressive. We heard from the main theatres as well as community theatre. We learned about all the musical genres and the numerous enterprises and community organisations that make artistic contributions to our society.

Some of the main themes that emerged from the inquiry were not surprising. They included the barriers that came under the general headings of financial, geographical, educational and funding. Other issues related to disabilities and special needs, rural-specific concerns and general awareness.

Mr Ó hOisín: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as mo ligean isteach. I thank the Member for giving way. Does she agree that, in the case of funding bodies such as the Arts Council, there is a geographical barrier to funding? I think of the Ulster fleadh a couple of years ago. It was held in Dungiven two years in a row, and the organisers really had a struggle to have their case for funding recognised. It was not seen as important, despite the fact that over 30,000 people attended, including the Minister on both occasions.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member has an extra minute.

Ms McCorley: Mo bhúochas leis an Chomhalta as sin. I thank the Member for his input. I agree that one issue that needs to be addressed is the different understandings and perceptions of what happens to be regarded as the arts and how they are supported.

The Committee has produced a report and is asking the Assembly to approve it today. While I endorse the report, I have to express my disappointment over one regrettable aspect.

During one evidence session, I was prevented by the Chairperson from asking questions that I believe were very pertinent. I sought to have the incident specified in the report, but the majority of the Committee voted against this. As a result, I have had to settle for an amendment in the appendix. I will read out that amendment:

“As part of the inquiry, the Confederation of Ulster Bands gave evidence to the Committee. During their presentation, they raised the issue that the media tended to present them in a negative way. Some members wished to explore this issue with them to see if perhaps they agreed that there were perceptions of them which arose as a result of the actions of some of their bands. A total of three Committee members were prevented by the Chairperson from pursuing this line of questioning, and, as a result, we feel we have missed out on some very valuable information which would have added to the report. We would have appreciated hearing the confederation's opinions on the behaviour of some specific bands over recent years, which leads many people, not just the media, to take a negative view of them. This may have a bearing on the feelings of some bands that they are excluded from the arts.”

The incidents that I referred to were the disgraceful behaviour of some marching band members who provocatively sang the notorious famine song outside St Patrick's Church, and incidents that occurred at Twaddell Avenue, showing band members involved —

Mr McCausland: Will the Member give way?

Ms McCorley: — in serious rioting and violent attacks.

Mr McCausland: Will the Member give way? No, the Member does not want to give way.

Ms McCorley: No.

These were all shown in the media. I wished to ask the Confederation of Ulster Bands for its views on that behaviour and how it may have contributed to a negative media perception and a feeling of being excluded from the arts. However, as I said, we were prevented from asking those pertinent questions.

Notwithstanding that, the Committee report contains a total of 22 recommendations that, if implemented, could go some way to increasing the inclusion of working-class communities in the arts. I wish to emphasise the first of these, which calls for an Executive arts and culture strategy that has the full support of all Departments. The strategy would be comprehensive and have coordinated targets, key performance indicators and a monitoring and review process. A consultation on an arts and culture strategy is under way in the Department. We hope that this will provide a vehicle to achieve the requirements of recommendation 1 of the report. Some of the recommendations focus on the need to address transport issues, the provision of musical instruments for all genres of music and the idea of making art accessible and available for all to enjoy by bringing it into public spaces and places.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Will the Member bring her remarks to a close?

Ms McCorley: In conclusion, I believe that exclusion from the arts should not be felt by any community, working class or otherwise, and that the recommendations in the Committee report will help to address that. Molaim an rún.

Mrs McKeivitt: As a member of the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee, I support the report and hope that the Minister will take the necessary measures to ensure that the recommendations are implemented in full.

The benefits of participating or engaging in the arts are universally recognised. From tackling social exclusion to promoting mental and emotional well-being, the arts make a positive contribution to our society and the lives of individuals. The inquiry was undertaken to address inequalities faced by those who live in deprived areas. Research has shown that adult participation rates in the arts are 31% lower in the most deprived areas. The research also confirmed that participation is lower amongst those who have never worked, have no qualifications or have a limiting or long-term illness. I, along with my party's members, welcome all initiatives to ensure that the arts can be accessed and enjoyed by every individual.

Implementation of the main recommendation for an Executive arts and culture strategy, with targets and measurable outcomes similar to the Programme for Government, would be a positive step. I am sure that this would be welcomed by arts and cultural organisations across the region. The purpose of an Executive-led strategy is to ensure that it will be meaningful and get sufficient support and resources from all Departments. Throughout the inquiry, Committee members had the opportunity to engage with organisations and individuals involved in the arts and listen to their needs, concerns, hopes and aspirations. It is important that any strategy is backed and guided by experts who know the industry best.

I strongly support the need for such a strategy to be rural proofed to ensure that the arts are performed in rural societies, particularly disadvantaged rural areas. The report recognises that the lack of affordable and suitable transport provision can be a barrier to individuals. The transport barrier can, of course, apply to people who live in urban zones, but it is a particular challenge for those who live in a rural community.

I am pleased that the report identifies the role that our libraries can play in delivering arts and cultural experiences to rural audiences. Libraries need to be used as multipurpose art spaces. Indeed, many already house arts and cultural events, including the annually run March creativity month, but there are opportunities to develop that further. I hope that the ever-expanding potential of our libraries is recognised by the Minister and her Executive colleagues so that, going forward, we will not see any further reductions in services or opening hours.

There are many public buildings that should continue to be used for arts and cultural purposes, including our museums, schools, town halls and more. Using those public buildings as multipurpose centres will inevitably increase the number of people, young and old, using the buildings. I again repeat my call to have automated external defibrillators present in all public buildings; we should be working towards that goal. It is also vital that those buildings cater for people with disabilities to ensure that everyone can get involved in the arts. Servicing a building for people with disabilities not only means ensuring that it is fully wheelchair accessible; it should have aids for people who are blind, those who suffer from hearing loss, people who are autistic and more. The purpose of the inquiry and the report is to bring about a positive change that would see working-class communities have easy access to the arts. We also need to make the arts available to absolutely everyone.

Another recommendation in the report, if implemented, would see publicly owned art brought to public buildings and spaces so that all communities can enjoy it. That welcome initiative would help to develop the stock of the art displayed in cities, towns and hamlets across the region, while giving communities access to locally relevant art. The report further recommends the need for the funding structure for the sector to be changed, particularly the use of short-length funding styles, which can be beneficial for one-off projects but fail to protect the long-term health and well-being of arts and cultural organisations.

It would be remiss of me not to pay tribute to the hard work and dedication of the Committee Clerk and the whole Committee support team throughout the inquiry. They are a constant support to all members of the Committee. I also put on record the dedication of the previous Chairperson of the CAL Committee in introducing the inquiry.

Mr Cree: In October 2013, the Committee agreed to conduct an inquiry into the inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. That followed on from the Committee's inquiry into maximising the potential of the creative industries. Disadvantage was of particular concern. Much evidence was taken from a wide range of stakeholders over a considerable period. In 2015, the Committee agreed to include the rural development programme with respect to how the arts and culture can be supported in rural communities. Targeted visits and focus groups were also used to understand the nature of the problems and the relationship between poverty and the arts. The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, during her briefing, fully supported the value of the arts. She stated:

"The arts are not a luxury to be enjoyed by an elite few, they should be enjoyed by all who wish to enjoy them regardless of community background, age, gender, disability, race, sexual orientation, political opinion or income level."

That sums it up pretty well.

It has to be said that all the existing bodies involved in arts and culture perform well, but everyone accepts that an overall strategy is necessary at Executive level to cater for the arts and culture going forward. That strategy needs to be thoroughly rural-proofed and adequately resourced to ensure that disadvantaged rural communities are able to participate fully. Disability is also a major issue.

There are 22 recommendations in the Committee's report and I commend them fully to the House. There are a number of barriers — they have been referred to — to working-class communities being included in the arts. Those include economic and financial barriers, educational barriers, awareness and information, and community, cultural or psychological barriers. However, there is no shortage of arts and cultural activity going on, and it is often first class.

It is also spread across Northern Ireland in rural and urban areas. There is a need for a coordinated and overarching approach to the arts and culture, and that must come from the Executive.

The Committee's findings identify the need to have professional arts practitioners going into communities to engage directly with groups and individuals. That is labour- and resource-intensive and must be funded over a reasonable period to allow it to be embedded and for a worthwhile legacy to be achieved. There is also a need to provide recognisable careers in those sectors, which in turn would assist the creative industries.

Whilst the Committee has produced a good report, it is not the end of the matter. More work will be necessary to improve culture and arts in Northern Ireland. It is a continuing process. I close by paying credit to the Committee staff for their excellent work in producing the report, which I commend to the House.

Ms Lo: I am not a member of the CAL Committee, but I wish to speak on behalf of the Alliance Party in support of the motion.

In 2012, I was delighted to help the Arts Council launch the first ever intercultural arts strategy. That was a significant step in addressing the barriers facing ethnic minority groups in Northern Ireland. I have witnessed at first hand the positive impact that arts initiatives can have at grass-roots level.

Whilst I welcome the report's overarching recommendation that an Executive arts and culture strategy be brought forward, I have some reservations about how that will work, given the potential difficulties in getting the buy-in from Departments. It is essential that, as recommended, the strategy does not duplicate existing arts strategies. It should have coordinated targets, key performance indicators and a monitoring and review process to evaluate outcomes. It also needs to be rural proofed and adequately funded.

I particularly welcome the recommendation that the strategy should seek to bring publicly owned arts to public buildings and spaces like libraries and schools, so that all communities can enjoy and be inspired by local art. On the recent Environment Committee visit to the warehouse of the Ulster Museum, we saw thousands of pieces of archived artwork stored away. They should see the light of day whenever possible.

I welcome the recommendation that the strategy seeks to forge partnerships with theatres and theatre companies to facilitate them in working with disadvantaged communities. The suggestion that the strategy will facilitate research and address the specific difficulties that those communities face in accessing the arts and cultural activities is a good one. I agree that proper consultation with community groups in disadvantaged areas must be made and that that should be aimed at rural and urban areas.

It is reasonable that the report proposes exploring the idea of social clauses for publicly funded performance venues to facilitate young people and musical groups or bands in disadvantaged communities. It is also important to look at how the provision of costly equipment, such as musical instruments, might be aided.

I welcome this comprehensive report, which has considered barriers to the arts from many angles. In it are recommendations that the strategy address transportation, education, technology, data gathering and volunteering. It is timely that there is a recommendation that the strategy be underpinned by a strategic partnership with local councils to ensure a more joined-up approach regarding the arts, as councils are in the process of developing their community plans.

Short-term funding has been a problem for voluntary organisations when planning and developing in recent years. The report made a valid point about the short cycles of funding that make planning and developing projects difficult. I support the Committee's suggestion that the strategy examine the use of tiered funding periods that take account of the level of deprivation in the target community and of the need for legacy work. The strategy supporting the development of funding between business and arts is vital, particularly for those in disadvantaged communities. Consideration must be given to how Invest NI might encourage participation when providing foreign direct investment and other grants.

I support the Committee's view that having representation from disadvantaged communities on board should also be looked at, as those communities are often not heard in the development of public policies.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is up.

Mr Dunne: I too welcome the opportunity to speak to the House on this important report on the inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. There is no doubt of the value of the arts in Northern Ireland today, and I believe that that value has not yet reached its full potential. I commend the efforts of my colleague Mr William Humphrey, who was keen to get the inquiry under way. He was certainly one of those who initiated it long before my time on the Committee.

The arts provide a sense of social inclusion, engagement and community cohesion and can provide many lasting health and well-being improvements for any community or individual. This was a very useful inquiry, and I welcome the publication of the report, including the key summary of recommendations. Throughout the inquiry, we heard from a wide range of stakeholders and agencies in the arts sector, and I thank them for taking part in the inquiry. I also thank the Committee staff for collating the information and putting together the report.

All of us, as Members from across Northern Ireland, can point to valuable examples of where the arts are an important part of civic life. I have only to look at the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum in my constituency to see a centre of excellence that showcases the very best of what we have to offer. It has historical artefacts that are complemented by artists' displays throughout. Other examples in my constituency include the new SPACE facility at the South Eastern Regional College. We, as a Committee, visited it and saw that it is a top-class facility that focuses on the performing arts. It has a seated theatre with multiple uses and a full range of recording studios; indeed, it is the first public facility in north Down that acts as a theatre. That type of facility is most welcome and broadens outreach by trying to get right across all the various communities.

Events such as Culture Night are a great way of mobilising communities to get engaged in the arts. We even have local success in our area with Hollywood Culture Night, where thousands of people descend on High Street and enjoy a full range of culture, arts performances and live music from early afternoon through to the early hours. We have Ulster-Scots music, and we even have Irish dancing and folk music. We have the full range in north Down. The event has become a highlight of the local calendar and showcases the very best of local talent. One of the ingredients that make it such a success is the involvement of the community, as it is organised from the ground up by the community, for the community.

One of the main themes to come through in our inquiry was the valuable role of volunteers. Many organisations, clubs and societies would not flourish, let alone survive, were it not for the dedication and commitment of volunteers from all classes and backgrounds. Volunteers must be supported and cherished, and they must be given their place. There is also a key role for our schools and libraries, as other Members mentioned, in making sure that young people are properly engaged and understand what the arts are about.

Our libraries are very much part of our community, and they provide space for such events. Again in north Down — in Bangor and Holywood — the libraries do an excellent job, and the staff are most helpful for such events, with arts displays and community outreach for activities for young people. People of all ages visit our libraries and engage in many arts-based events.

There is no doubt that there is a level of disengagement by some of our working-class communities from what are known as the arts. More needs to be done to encourage and educate children from an early age about what the arts really are.

Another example is how the Ulster Orchestra has broadened its appeal by bringing music out to communities, different venues and smaller venues, and by engaging, as part of its marketing and outreach, with schools and various groups, fairs and organisations. That is something to be commended.

There is some confusion around what exactly is included in the arts. There needs to be real leadership shown to deal with the disconnect that is felt in some of our communities.

Marching bands were mentioned earlier —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is up.

Mr Dunne: I fully support the role that they play.

Mr B McCrea: Worthy although it is, a Committee motion and report, even if it were about the discovery of life on Mars, could be made to sound dull. The thing that I like about the arts is that they are so fantastic. The highlight for me — I do not know whether it was the same for others — was when we went to see rice being cooked on the stage. Do you remember that, with all of the drummers — 12 out of 15 of in the world — and we sat mesmerised for an hour and a half, and we did not even know the tune? Fantastic.

I see that Mr Dunne is laughing. I was down at his great theatre to see a play by Laurence McKeown called 'Those You Pass on the Street'. Fantastic. Absolutely thought-provoking. This is what we want to see. I have also seen 'Fly Me to the Moon'. That was good. That play was by Marie Jones, and it raised really interesting moral questions about how we deal with these things. That is what it is about the arts. They unite, they inspire, they innovate and they bring us together. We should do more of them. We should look at the jobs that they give and the things that they do to bring us all together and at how they enhance tourism: all of those good things.

Some other things that I enjoyed in my tour through this was that I got to see 'All Through the House'. That was good. That was at the Crescent Arts Centre. I enjoyed that. Just recently, we had the Lilliput Theatre Company down from the Playhouse in Derry/Londonderry. That was brilliant. It was what you can expect when you are in a hospital if you have learning disabilities. The company put it on and produced it itself. It was absolutely fantastic, and it just shows you how the arts really inspire us about what we can do.

What other things did I see? Burns Night at the Ulster Hall. The only thing that put me off slightly was that our Chairman was sitting in front of me. He was getting in the way of my view. Apart from that, it was really good, and some of us even tried to take photographs — I am not sure whether you tried to take photographs, Chairman — but it was wonderful. This is what we should be expressing to people: look at how good the arts are.

Therefore, when you get to the issue of inclusion, I think that the biggest thing that I found — this probably shows what a minnow I am when it comes to these things — is that so many people were doing so much already. I went to see the Belfast Community Circus School. I have to say to you that I did not think that the circus was really art. Boy, did I have my eyes opened when I went down and saw it and all of the things that it could do. Anything that inspires young people, gives them confidence and lets them believe in themselves, whether it be riding a unicycle or being able to go up and down one of those ropes is fantastic. I really think that we should be champions for the arts. They are not party political. They are not even from one culture.

Mr Ó hOisín: I thank the Member for giving way. I share his enthusiasm for many of the events that he talks about. Will he agree that all arts venues should have a relatively neutral name attached to them so that they can be shared by all. I refer to an attempt to change the name of the Roe Valley Arts and Cultural Centre in Limavady.

7.30 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member has an additional minute.

Mr B McCrea: The Member may be surprised to know that I am aware of the issue. Maybe we should name the big hall beside it, and call it the Alexander whatever. I do not care. Do you know what really matters to me? It is not about buildings; you need to have buildings, but it is about people engaging, whether on a voluntary or a professional basis. One of the best things that I was ever involved with — the thing that got me started in this — was a show called 'The 25th Annual Putnam Country Spelling Bee'. A great actor from this place — from Belfast Met, actually — came through; Gerard McCabe got me up on the stage and made me look an ass. [Laughter.] Nicely. It was brilliant. You get engagement and you get people involved.

Of course, there will be different cultural interpretations. I spoke to the Minister about Laurence McKeown's play. I did not even know who Laurence McKeown was, but I thought his play was good. I understood that he knew what he was talking about, and I thought that it was challenging.

Do you know what? There are other things. Just before I came down, I saw that Queen's is putting on a fusion play. It is going to involve people from a flute band mixing with people involved in traditional music. All of these issues are good. You are not trying to supplant somebody else's culture. You are trying to get involved in it, to understand it and be part of it.

I think that I owe some Members an apology, because it was me who put a hand up and said, "I think we should have two hours for this debate, because I don't get in all the time". Looking around me, I realise that my concern was, perhaps, a little exaggerated. I need not have worried about being able to get a chance to speak. Do you know what? One of the greatest things that I heard was something that the Minister said. I think I am right in saying this — she can correct me if I am wrong — but, when we had the rally in defence of the arts, she said, "Isn't it good that we get cross-party support?". I want to have cross-party support for the arts. It should be neutral; it should be inclusive; it should be for everybody. The biggest problem that we have is that we have to get people who may not think that arts is for them to go along, because if they go along, they absolutely enjoy it. They feel that it is part of them —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is almost up.

Mr B McCrea: — and they will do more. On that basis, I commend the Clerk and his team for the excellent, if slightly lengthy, report that they have produced.

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an deis freagra a thabhairt ar an díospóireacht seo. I welcome the opportunity to respond to the debate, maybe less energetically than Basil, though it was certainly refreshing. I think that it was heartfelt. Let me also place on the record my thanks to the Chair, the members and, indeed, the staff of the Committee for the lengthy work that they have done to bring the report forward. I very much welcome the report. The fact that the report's publication coincides with the ongoing work in my Department on a strategy offers a great opportunity. I certainly will carefully consider the report's recommendations. I have read some, but I will make a commitment to feed them into the development of the strategy.

It also goes without saying, but I will put it on the record, that arts are, and should be, part of everyday life, and I think that we all mean everyone's life. It is not to say that anyone is forced to engage in the arts, as has been mentioned; it is quite the opposite. The opportunity for engagement should be available to everyone so that they can exercise their choice.

The idea of quality arts or excellence is often viewed as a contentious subject, and I believe that the quality of arts engagement is a subjective and, indeed, personal experience for each individual. The role of the Government, in my opinion, is to ensure that we have a properly funded and resourced arts and cultural sector that is capable of delivering quality arts and culture.

I have often acknowledged, as does the inquiry report, that there is a great deal of arts and cultural activity going on in working-class communities and, indeed, across the North and this island. I also suggest that that is true of many communities, should it be communities in rural areas, ethnic minorities, the LGBT community or Irish or Ulster Scots. I appreciate however that the Committee inquiry focused on working-class communities.

It has explained its reasons for doing so and acknowledges the limitations of that scope. I note the Committee's comments that it is for those who are developing the strategy to decide on specific indices to gauge deprivation and disadvantage.

The inquiry's focus on understanding the barriers to and exclusion from the arts and indeed, more importantly, inclusion into the arts has been very helpful. It has been a vexed question for a long time and was one of the focuses of the consultation on the strategy for culture and arts. I also found it interesting to note that some of the barriers identified in the Committee's report were around economic and financial areas; geographical location; education; availability and structure of funding; awareness and information. It is too early to report on any considered analysis of the consultation responses to the strategy, as it closed only on Friday past. However, I can say that those particular barriers certainly resonate with many people with whom I have had discussions and a lot of the feedback that I have received when meeting groups in the community, and indeed arts and cultural organisations. I am delighted that all that evidence, in my view, lends great support and impetus to ensuring that a strategy for culture and arts is taken forward and embedded in future Programmes for Government.

I welcome the Committee's endorsement of a need for an overarching culture and arts strategy, supported and resourced by the Executive, Departments and arm's-length bodies. I look forward to doing all that I can to make that happen before I leave the Department.

The Committee puts forward the case for the need for rural proofing in any culture and arts strategy. I will take this opportunity to confirm to Members that I have already received a commitment from the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to facilitate any assessment of the impact on rural areas. I recognise that rural proofing is a key component to ensuring equality for everyone.

The Committee also highlighted the challenges that are faced by those with special needs and disabilities. Fundamental to the culture and arts strategy is the principle of equality. I will ensure that all that I can do will be done to help to fulfil that principle and many others.

As the Committee also points out, partnerships with councils are essential to ensure effective delivery of the strategy. Again, I support the principle of partnership and agree that it must be inherent in the future delivery of the strategy. I also take the opportunity to clarify ownership of the strategy. I think that we all should own it. Essentially, it will be an overarching departmental Executive-owned strategy. The effective delivery of the strategy will require collaborative partnerships throughout government and, indeed, the arm's-length bodies and beyond.

I will turn briefly now to the concept of publicly owned art. I do not particularly want to give the impression of valuing one particular genre of arts and culture over another, but I have noted with interest the Committee's views on the accessibility of publicly owned art. I also believe that Museums has a particular obligation to make as much of its holdings accessible to the public as possible, provided that the environmental, safety and security conditions are met. I think that we would all agree that that is a responsible step. It is my view that libraries, schools and other public venues at the heart of local communities can and should be used for exhibiting Museums' items. That is why I welcomed the Out and About programme, which opens up access to Museums' collections. It launched in September last year, in collaboration with Libraries. That innovative programme widens access to some fascinating collections and brings them directly into communities. That is a great step forward.

The Committee also talks a lot about partnership in the report: partnerships between Departments, government, arts and cultural sectors, venues and communities, local government and arts and businesses. I concur entirely with that view. It is critical that those who are charged with government funding can ensure that it is dispersed strategically through the appropriate funding structures. The underpinning objective and duty is to obtain value for money. In my opinion, that can be best achieved by effective partnerships.

One of the critical findings in the Committee's report — again, a theme that I believe is central to a culture and arts strategy — is the theme that revolves around exposure to arts and culture from an early age. Certainly, that notion echoes strongly with discussions that have been held as part of the consultation. The role of education as one example in introducing children to culture and arts from an early age, delivering value and benefits to society and facilitating the opportunity to engage through lifelong learning cannot, in my opinion, be underestimated. Establishing and respecting the core foundation of the value of arts and culture will help in the transition to career pathways for our young people. For those reasons, I believe that integration and investment in our arts and culture throughout the education curriculum is essential.

The Committee report also touches on the availability of information and data and the accessibility of information, and I agree that those are important areas that will require further examination in developing a culture and arts strategy. Volunteering has been mentioned by all Members and is recognised in the Committee's inquiry. I absolutely agree that a culture and arts strategy needs to recognise fully the importance of the third sector.

I will return to the focus of the Committee's inquiry. Like the Committee, I accept that there are no simple answers to ensuring greater social inclusion in the arts. I firmly believe that an agreed Executive strategy for culture and arts is an essential step in ensuring that government policy and funding is brought forward, and it will be brought forward on the basis that it will improve our society, as set out in the report. Indeed, there will be consultation for everyone. As I said at the outset, I will give careful consideration to all the report's recommendations in taking forward the strategy.

This is my last remark. I assume that there is a typo on page 11, where it states:

"It is only through this carefully considered framework and through taking a strategic approach that disadvantaged communities will be presented with greater opportunities with respect to arts and cultural activity."

I assume that it is as dull as a typo rather than opening up a new departure for some of our Committee members.

I support the motion and the amendment in the Committee report, and I believe that it is an excellent job. Maith sibhse.

Mr Humphrey: I have looked to the side of the House, and the colour of Mr Hall's face suggests that it is not "tarts".

I am pleased to make the winding-up speech on this Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee debate on its inquiry into the inclusion in the arts of working-class communities. I start by thanking Committee members for their contribution to today's debate and throughout the process over the last year and a half. I also thank the Minister for responding to the debate. It has been a measured, constructive and most useful debate. I also echo the Chair's remarks in thanking the Committee Clerk and his team and, of course, Dan Hull, the Committee's researcher. Thank you very much to Mr Hall and his team.

It is clear that the Committee's inquiry has proved to be very valuable work. I know that the Committee will work hard with the Minister to ensure that all 22 of its recommendations are implemented.

I want to make a few points about the inquiry. The Committee Chairman is absolutely right to state that the Committee believes that the best way to ensure that working-class communities are included in the arts is through a comprehensive arts and culture strategy that is owned, supported, facilitated and resourced by all the Executive Departments. It should operate in a similar way to the Programme for Government, with coordinated targets, key performance indicators and a monitoring and review process.

Another key point to stress is the need to bring publicly owned art to places where disadvantaged communities can enjoy it and be inspired by it. Schools and libraries would make excellent exhibition spaces, as would arts clubs and cultural hubs. I will throw in there that hospitals would also be a very good location for art to be placed. Partnerships can be created between museums, schools and libraries to bring arts and culture to all our young people. It is clear that theatres and theatre companies must work with disadvantaged communities to support their inclusion in the arts. However, that work needs to be properly resourced and should have agreed outcomes. Community groups have a vital role to play in the development of the Executive arts and culture strategy.

On many occasions, the Committee has considered the important role of councils and what they can do to bring arts and culture to disadvantaged communities. A coordinated strategy for the arts and culture must see a better, more considered partnership being established between central and local government and between the councils themselves.

It is the Committee's belief that an early introduction to the arts and culture is essential for our young people. That introduction should be sustained by the school curriculum at all Key Stages. Education has a key role to play in any Executive arts and culture strategy.

Once our young people have developed a taste for the arts and culture, it is important that they are provided with clear pathways to careers with that focus through the expansion of existing apprenticeships and the creation of new ones. We must examine creative ways to use digital technology and gaming, the bodies that promote the application of technology and the existing activity in the creative industries here to further develop employment in the sector.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Humphrey: I will, yes.

Mr B McCrea: I wonder whether his use of technology includes Periscope.

Mr Humphrey: I leave that to the expert, Basil.

The Committee found that funding was a key issue, particularly the short funding cycles that make the development of project legacy difficult, and believes that there should be tiered funding periods that take into account levels of deprivation in the target community and the need for legacy work.

The Committee suggests that an Executive arts and culture strategy supports the development of funding and in-kind relationships between business and arts and culture organisations, particularly those in disadvantaged communities. Invest Northern Ireland should encourage participation in those relationships when providing foreign direct investment and other grants to their clients.

I would like to reflect on Members' contributions. The Chairman, Mr McCausland, talked about the term "working class". We were determined at the outset that working class would be used in this work. He said that the arts should be part of everyday life for all people, that exposure to the arts at an early age was key and that public access to the arts, because much of it is hidden, was essential. He talked about the democratisation of the arts and appealed to the Minister to restore funding for musical instruments for bands.

Ms McCorley endorsed the report and raised the issue of being unable, along with two colleagues, to ask questions about their concerns about marching bands. From my perspective, the view that the majority of members of the Committee took was that the line of questioning being pursued was not relevant to the work of the Committee or this report.

Mrs McKeivitt talked about rural proofing and about the lack of transportation being a barrier. She talked about libraries being important in the cultural approach to including all in the community.

Mr Cree talked about the recommendations, and he, too, mentioned, the barriers to participation in the arts. He also talked about professional arts practitioners.

Ms Lo talked about libraries and schools and said that a full consultation, joined up with local government, was necessary.

Gordon Dunne welcomed the report. He talked about the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum and gave us a virtual tour of north Down, including Culture Night in Holywood. Basically, he said that, if you were not going away on holiday this year, you should holiday in north Down. He mentioned the Ulster Orchestra and how important it was.

Mr McCrea talked about how the arts unite communities and enhance tourism, and he made a clear pitch for more tickets for Members to attend events. He said that there was cross-party support for the arts.

The Minister said that the arts should be part of everyone's everyday life and that the inquiry was helpful in its inclusivity. She welcomed the Committee's recommendations and said that she would do all that she could to make them happen. She talked about rural proofing and the need to be accountable for publicly owned art by putting it on display. She talked about the inclusion of arts in the curriculum.

I will make some remarks as a member of the Democratic Unionist Party. I pay tribute to Michelle McIlveen, our former Chair, and thank her for her support when I approached her about this work. I thank the Committee for supporting the work as we went forward.

A number of contributions from practitioners who came in front of the Committee stood out for me, which suggested that we were doing the right thing. East Belfast Arts talked about people not wanting to cross the river to attend venues in the city centre.

New Lodge Arts talked about people from that area in the lower part of north Belfast feeling detached and needing transportation to go to the MAC. Bobby Foster from the Spectrum Centre on the Shankill talked about the Protestant community not recognising its culture as arts but recognising it as culture. Again, on that note, I appeal to the Minister to restore funding for instruments for marching bands.

I congratulate the MAC, the Lyric, the Ulster Orchestra and Flowerfield in Portstewart on their work in connecting with the community and encouraging people to get involved using various routes to reach out to working-class communities and young people in those communities. When I initially called for this inquiry, I was criticised by some of the great and the good in the arts world. I was criticised by some key arts organisations in this city. However, I have met and spoken to others who were very supportive and most encouraging. Indeed, when I heard of the Ulster Orchestra and the Arts Council making approaches to organisations on the Shankill in my constituency, practising in schools and working and rehearsing in the Spectrum Centre, I knew that a nerve had been touched.

Going back a number of years, significant investments were made in the culture and arts infrastructure of this city by regional government and Belfast City Council. That includes the MAC, the Lyric, the Ulster Hall etc. It is important that all our people have the opportunity to benefit from these multimillion-pound investments. I hope that this inquiry will ensure that those living in areas such as Ballygomartin, Ballymacarrett, Ballymurphy, Shankill, Woodvale, Ardoyne, New Lodge etc will have access to these facilities on an ongoing and regular basis. For too long, working-class communities have been not part of the arts but apart from them.

I thank everyone for their contribution. I commend the work that has been done and the 22 recommendations in the report. I welcome the report, which is comprehensive, wide-ranging and inclusive. It is a report for all. If we are serious about building a united community and a tolerant society, the implementation of this report is essential.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Humphrey: I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly approves the report of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure on its inquiry into inclusion in the arts of working-class communities [NIA 298/11–16]; and calls on the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to implement the recommendations contained in the report

Adjourned at 7.52 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 16 February 2016

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Plenary Business: 15 February 2016

Mr Speaker: The first item of business is the consideration of business not concluded on Monday 15 February. As all the business in yesterday's Order Paper was considered, we will move on.

Executive Committee Business

Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 (Search, Seizure and Detention of Property: Code of Practice) Order (Northern Ireland) 2016

Mr Speaker: The next three motions are to approve statutory rules relating to the Proceeds of Crime Act (POCA) 2002. The Business Committee agreed that there should be a single debate during which the Minister and Members should address all three motions. I shall ask the Clerk to read the first motion and call on the Minister to move it. The debate on all three motions will then begin. When all who wish to speak have done so, I shall put the Question on the first motion. The second motion will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on that motion. After the Question is put on the second motion, the third motion will be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on that motion. If that is clear, I shall proceed.

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I beg to move

That the draft Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 (Search, Seizure and Detention of Property: Code of Practice) Order (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved.

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

That the draft Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 (Cash Searches: Code of Practice) Order (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved. — [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

That the draft Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 (Investigations: Code of Practice) Order (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved. — [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

The Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 is designed to provide law enforcement agencies with tools to recover the proceeds of crime and deny criminals the opportunity to accumulate assets secured by illegal means. The Act empowers law enforcement officers to seize cash that they believe is crime-related and to secure its forfeiture in court proceedings and enables courts to freeze a suspect's assets at the start of a criminal investigation. POCA gives investigators the power to seek court orders directing financial institutions in certain cases and places an onus on any professional person working in regulated industries to immediately report any suspicion of crime.

The purpose of the orders before the Assembly today is to give effect to the first Northern Ireland-specific codes of practice. They tailor guidance on the use of POCA powers to this jurisdiction rather than previous arrangements under which guidance was issued on a UK-wide basis in UK-wide codes of practice. I believe that it is only proper that local codes of practice should apply where the functions fall under devolved responsibilities, as is the case in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The Northern Ireland codes under scrutiny today mirror previous guidance that continues to apply in codes issued by the Secretary of State, with appropriate updates and modifications for Northern Ireland. They also closely follow codes with which we are perhaps more familiar under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE). The codes provide important safeguards to ensure that powers are used appropriately in a targeted, effective and consistent way.

POCA has been subject to review and amendment to strengthen its powers. The codes have been updated with all the changes and, in that way, form a consistent and consolidated manual for those using the powers. They provide reassurance to the general public and provide information for those who may be affected by the powers.

POCA stipulates that my Department must prepare and publish a draft of any new or revised code of practice. Consultation on that was undertaken over a 12-week period between August and November 2015. Representations were considered, and the codes were subsequently amended where the Department thought it appropriate. The consultation did not recommend policy changes or raise any equality or other impact issues. The updated codes were laid before the Assembly in draft. I will outline briefly the content of the three codes.

The search, seizure and detention of property code of practice provides guidance to constables and accredited financial investigators on the exercise of powers to search, seize and detain property that may be needed to satisfy a future confiscation order. Those new powers will be introduced to Northern Ireland on 1 March 2016.

The recovery of cash search powers code of practice provides guidance on the operation of the powers to search for cash where there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that it is obtained through, or intended for use in, unlawful conduct.

On 1 March 2016, POCA amendments will be commenced in Northern Ireland, including the following: powers to allow the search of a vehicle for criminal cash, similar to searching a person or property; powers to prevent the dissipation of property that may subsequently be used to satisfy a confiscation order; expanded civil recovery powers; and the change of court jurisdiction for detained cash investigations from the High Court to the Crown Court.

Those changes will be introduced by secondary legislation at Westminster, as the responsibility has not been devolved. My Department has worked closely with the Home Office, and the changes have been reflected in the Northern Ireland codes.

Removing the profits that fund crime serves to disrupt the cycle that sustains criminal enterprises and fraudsters. The strengthening of the POCA regime, reflected in the codes of practice, will help to disrupt, deter and reduce organised crime and will, ultimately, help to protect the public from the serious harm that it causes.

In the UK, between 2010 and 2014, criminal assets worth more than £746 million were seized across all methods of recovery, and assets worth more than £2.5 billion were frozen. In Northern Ireland, in 2014-15, £2 million was recovered through confiscation orders. There is still more to do to reclaim the proceeds of crime and facilitate more effective enforcement. The changes being addressed today are a step in that direction.

In conclusion, POCA removes criminal assets that could be used to support further criminality; it stifles criminal activity and sends a clear message that crime does not pay. Used to its maximum effect, it will, ultimately, disrupt and deter criminality, and the Northern Ireland codes of practice are an important part of that. I commend the three orders to the House.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): I will speak very briefly on behalf of the Committee. As the Minister has already outlined, the rules before us today will bring three distinct Northern Ireland codes of practice into the operation of powers under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002. The codes of practice will provide necessary guidance for constables and officers with responsibility in that area and specifically in relation to cash searches, investigations, and the search, seizure and detention of property.

At its meeting on 28 January, the Committee noted that the draft codes of practice form part of a wider POCA commencement programme and that the Department has been working closely with the Home Office in scrutinising proposed legislation, engaging in consultation and providing consent where required.

The Department has consulted and kept the Committee updated on the development of the three codes of practice throughout the past year.

I will briefly highlight the Committee's consideration of those matters. In June 2015, the Department wrote to the Committee to outline its intention to hold a public consultation on the three draft codes of practice. At its meeting on 11 June, the Committee agreed that it was content for the consultation to take place and to consider the matter further when the results of the consultation were available. At the meeting on 19 November, the Committee noted the outcome of the consultation and agreed that it was content with the draft codes of practice, which it noted would bring the POCA regime up to date and into line with England, Wales and Scotland, subject to jurisdictional variations. In December, the Committee agreed that it was content with the Department's proposal to bring forward the statutory rules required to bring the codes of practice into operation. At the meeting on 18 January 2016, the Committee noted that the Examiner of Statutory Rules had raised no issues with the technical aspect of the rules. The Committee therefore agreed to recommend that the statutory rules be affirmed by the Assembly, and it supports all three motions that have been laid.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to say that the draft orders are consistent, good and sensible, and I am happy to indicate support for them. They are consistent with UK-wide codes of practice but are now perhaps made more local because of devolution.

In welcoming the orders being put in place by the Minister and the House, I ask the Minister to reflect on what memorandums of understanding or issues we have with the Republic of Ireland, given the high propensity for cross-border criminality. Of course, the very unedifying events in the criminal world in Dublin at present give rise to concern as to whether we have memorandums of understanding and similar codes of practice that can be worked to the benefit of the justice authorities in Northern Ireland.

Mr Ford: Once again, the debate satisfies Ford's rule of Assembly business. It has been a brief debate, but it has covered very significant issues. As I frequently do, I thank the Committee Chair, but in a genuine way, for his comments and for the consideration by the Committee of the necessity of getting the codes of practice into place.

In response to the very specific points made by Mr Kennedy, I say that it seems to me that he has put his finger on it: we now have codes that are consistent across the UK but that are tailored to match devolution. Given that POCA is purely a UK piece of legislation, there are clearly limitations on its applicability to our cross-border relationships, but, as the Member will know, the new cross-border task force that is being led by the two police services will be a key way of ensuring that cross-border criminality is addressed. In the near future, I hope that we will be launching the revision of the cross-border policing arrangements. That will show that good work can continue across the border. Certainly, when assets are being seized, which is a key part of the draft orders, there is very significant cooperation between the various agencies involved, including the two police services and the National Crime Agency, to ensure that work is coordinated as far as possible. Although it is not directly part of today's discussion, I think that I can give Mr Kennedy the assurances that he wants.

I condemn all three codes to the House in the terms in which I and the Chair outlined them. [Interruption.]

Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning):
I beg to move.

That the draft Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved.

I am seeking the Assembly's approval for The Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016. They will not come into operation until approved by this Assembly. They will consolidate and replace the provisions of the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998 and ten statutory rules which amended it from 1998 to 2009. A reduction in the administrative burden to employers will be achieved through the consolidation of a number of separate statutory rules into a single set of regulations. This will make navigation of the provisions of the regulations easier for users.

The Working Time Regulations, as amended, implement European Council directives on working time and the protection of young people at work. They lay down minimum conditions relating to weekly working time, rest entitlements and annual leave, and make special provision for working hours and health assessment in relation to night workers.

Under the Executive's economic strategy, my Department committed to a review of employment legislation in seeking to stimulate business confidence while maintaining the rights of individual employees. As part of the review my Department initiated pilot reviews of a number of substantial sets of employment regulations. The overall aim was to seek to reduce the administrative and financial burden of regulations without impinging on individual employment rights.

The working time regulations were chosen for review because they are substantial in content; they impact on a significant number of employers and employees; and they afford the opportunity to cover all elements of better regulation principles. One of the key desired outcomes of the pilot was a reduction in the administrative burden for the regulations, which was to be achieved through a combination of better regulation measures including removal of outdated legislation; updating some legislative references, including making the regulations gender-neutral; consolidating a number of separate legal provisions into a single regulation; and strengthening of existing guidance and support.

I am grateful to the project team, representative of employee and employer interests, that reviewed the regulations. This mix of interests helped to ensure that the review was informed by the knowledge and expertise of practitioners and key stakeholders. The project team achieved consensus on a number of actions, including the reduction in administrative burden through consolidation of the regulations.

The provisions of the 1998 regulations and the regulations amending it have previously been the subject of public consultation. As the draft regulations largely consolidate and replace the provisions currently contained in those existing regulations, no further public consultation was deemed necessary.

I am most grateful to the Committee for Employment and Learning for their detailed scrutiny of the regulations.

I hope that I have provided sufficient explanation of the purpose of these regulations and will, of course, respond to any points made by Members in my closing remarks.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr David Hilditch, who will be speaking on behalf of the Committee for Employment and Learning.

Mr Hilditch: Thank you Mr Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to outline the views of the Committee for Employment and Learning on the statutory rules relating to the working time directive. This statutory rule is made under powers conferred by section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 and article 15 of the Work and Families (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 and is subject to the draft affirmative resolution procedure before the Assembly.

The Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998 were designed to protect the health and safety of workers by providing them with rights such as daily and weekly working time limits, health assessments for night workers, in-work rest breaks and paid annual leave.

This statutory rule will consolidate and replace the provisions of the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998, referred to as the 1998 regulations, and the ten statutory rules which amended it from 1998 to 2009. A reduction in the administrative burden to employers will be achieved through the consolidation of a number of separate statutory rules into a single set of regulations. This will make navigation of the regulations easier for users.

The departmental officials briefed the Committee at its meeting on 10 December 2014 on the better regulation pilot reviews of employment regulations.

At the briefing, it was agreed that the document 'At a Glance Guide to the Working Time Regulations' would be forwarded to the Committee. The guide was intended for use by employers and was drafted and agreed in conjunction with members of the working time stakeholder group. The Committee noted that correspondence from the Department on 14 January 2015.

The Department advised the Committee on 20 January about the proposed SR 2016-000, the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016. The Department later contacted the Committee on 26 January with a technical amendment to the statutory rule (SR). The Committee considered the SR, including the technical amendment, at its meeting on 27 January and agreed that it was content. The Committee agreed to recommend that the rule be affirmed by the Assembly.

Dr Farry: I thank Mr Hilditch, who spoke on the Committee's behalf, as the sole contributor to the debate. I put on record my thanks, once again, to the Committee for its detailed scrutiny, as always, of the business we put before it.

In closing, I reiterate that this does not mark a change in the effect of working time regulations in Northern Ireland but is a simplification, in that we are consolidating a host of different regulations. That should be something that is very much in the interests of employers and employees, and it is a reflection of the overall commitment of the Executive to address regulation and the principles of better regulation as a whole. I commend the motion to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the draft Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 be approved.

Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: I call junior Minister Ms Jennifer McCann to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill.

Moved. — [Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

Mr Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in my provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There is a single group of amendments — amendment Nos 1 to 3 — dealing with the coming into effect of the reduction in the number of Members and a review of and report on the effect of a reduction. We will debate the amendments in turn. Once the group debate is completed, any further amendments will be moved formally. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clause 1 (Reduction of number of members returned for each constituency)

Mr Speaker: We now come to the single group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 1, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 2 and 3.

Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I beg to move amendment No 1: In page 1, line 5, leave out “next Assembly” and insert “2016”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 2: In page 1, line 7, at end insert

“2016 election” means the election held in 2016 in accordance with section 31(1) of that Act.”— [Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

No 3: After clause 1 insert

“Review of number of members of the Assembly
1A. Standing orders shall provide that the committee established in accordance with section 29A of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 shall—
(a) review the impact section 1 would have on the total number of Assembly members, should changes be made to the number of constituencies; and
(b) report on its review, including in relation to the desirability of reducing the number of Assembly members below 90, by 1 December 2018.”— [Mr McCallister.]

Ms J McCann: Amendment No 1, together with amendment No 2, makes a technical adjustment to the Bill that does not change its substance or affect the policy behind it. The policy intent of the Bill is to reduce the number of MLAs elected to the first Assembly after the next election, that is, the 2016 Assembly election. For the Bill to achieve that, it must be enacted before the Assembly election on 5 May 2016; otherwise, the next election to which the reduction will apply will be the 2026 election, rather than the anticipated 2021 election.

We are grateful to the Assembly for agreeing to accelerated passage for the Bill, but even with that, there remains a risk that, at this late stage, Royal Assent may not be obtained in time because of the need to complete subsequent stages after Final Stage. As the Bill deals with a reserved matter that is not ancillary to a transferred matter, the Speaker is, therefore, required to refer it to the Secretary of State before it enters Final Stage. The Secretary of State is subsequently obliged to lay it before Parliament for 20 sitting days before it can be submitted for Royal Assent.

To address that potential problem, we have, therefore, brought forward two technical amendments to the Bill. Amendment No 1 makes a minor change to clause 1(2) to refer to the 2016 election. Linked to that is an amendment to clause 1(3), which provides a definition of the term “2016 election” by referring to section 31(1) of the NI Act 1998. These amendments will guarantee that, should Royal Assent not be obtained before the election on 5 May, the reduction in the number of MLAs will still apply to the next election held after the forthcoming election in May.

As the previous debates on the Bill focused mainly on the question of an earlier date than 2021 for it to come into effect, we think it unlikely that any Member would want a situation where it was deferred until 2026. Therefore, I ask Members to support these amendments, which preserve the policy objective of the Bill.

We note the provisions in John McCallister’s amendment No 3 that, should there be a change to the number of constituencies as a result of the 2018 parliamentary boundary review, the Assembly and Executive Review Committee (AERC) would be legislatively mandated to review the proposed reduction in the number of Members returned for each constituency. We further note that the amendment also calls for AERC to report on the findings of its review before 1 December 2018 and give consideration to the desirability of reducing the number of Assembly Members to below 90.

The Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill has a very specific objective: to reduce by one the number of Members returned by each constituency and for this change to have effect from the first Assembly election after that of 2016. While Mr McCallister’s amendment goes beyond the scope of the institutional reform provisions outlined in the Fresh Start Agreement, it is the view of Ministers that the question of whether the Assembly needs to place on itself a legislative imperative for such a review, in addition to its existing power to commission one from AERC, and, therefore, whether to accept or reject this amendment are matters that should be left to the judgement of Members.

Mr Attwood: There is a passing temptation to oppose the technical amendments so that the reduction in the number of MLAs is pushed to 2026. On this occasion, however, I will resist that temptation and say that we are content to support the amendments outlined by the junior Minister in order to create certainty on the matter. I was anxious to hear from Mr McCallister about his amendment, because the SDLP was prepared to be persuaded by an argument on the terms in the amendment to have a review in 2018. Maybe we will yet hear that argument. The junior Minister indicated that it is a matter for Members to consider, but it would be interesting to know whether there is anything more than that from the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that the Bill, inter alia, arises from political discussions. In one way, it arises from Fresh Start, so it would be interesting to know whether the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in the context of Fresh Start, on the amendment that was to have been proposed by Mr McCallister.

Mr Frew: I speak in support of the Bill. It was forged out of agreement, and I am glad that that agreement has come about. One of my party's objectives is to reduce the number of Assembly Members. We did not get everything that we wanted, but we are making progress. That must be welcomed, and we are certainly going in the right direction. That is all that I have to say on the matter.

Mr Allen: The Ulster Unionist Party has been clear and consistent on this issue. We support the reduction in the number of Members and the timeline. We did not support it earlier, because we felt that we should not be hasty or rush these decisions. We need to make sure that the Assembly is inclusive and diverse, and that it provides proper government for our people. To that end, we support the reduction in the number of Members and the First Minister and deputy First Minister technical amendments. I would like to hear more from Mr McCallister on his amendment. That is all that I have to say on the matter at the moment.

Ms J McCann: I thank Members for their contributions and for the issues that they raised. As I said, amendment Nos 1 and 2 make small technical adjustments to the Bill. They do not change the substance or affect the policy. They are necessary so that, should Royal Assent not be obtained before the election on 5 May 2016, the reduction in the number of MLAs will still apply to the next election held after the forthcoming election in May. I ask Members to support amendment Nos 1 and 2.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

Concerning amendment No 3, tabled by Mr McCallister, as I have also previously said, it is the view of Ministers that the question of whether the Assembly needs to place on itself a legislative imperative for such a review, in addition to its existing power to commission one from AERC, and, therefore, whether to accept or reject this amendment, should be left to the judgement of Members. I hope that that answers Mr Attwood's request.

Again, I thank Members. In conclusion, the Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill is important legislation, and I am glad to see it progress through the Assembly.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the House to take its ease for a few minutes, please.

Amendment No 1 agreed to.

Amendment No 2 made:

In page 1, line 7, at end insert

"2016 election" means the election held in 2016 in accordance with section 31(1) of that Act."—
[Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr McCallister is not in the Chamber to move formally amendment No 3.

Amendment No 3 not moved.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes Further Consideration Stage of the Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

I ask the House to take its ease for a few moments.

Budget Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Moved. — [Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As no amendments have been tabled, there is no opportunity to discuss the Budget Bill today. Members will, of course, be able to have a full debate at Final Stage. Further Consideration Stage is, therefore, concluded. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

I ask the House to take its ease for a few minutes.

Order. As the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is not in his place to move the next item of business, which is the Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland) 2016, the item falls. The House should take its ease for a few minutes to allow us to proceed with other business.

Mental Capacity Bill: Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order, Members. The sitting will now resume. I call the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Mr Simon Hamilton, to move the Consideration Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There are five groups of amendments. I remind Members intending to speak during the debate on a group of amendments that they should address all the amendments in the group on which they wish to comment. Once the debate on the group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill and the Question on each will be put without debate. The Questions on stand part will be taken at the appropriate points in the Bill. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Notice taken that 10 Members were not present.

House counted, and, there being fewer than 10 Members present, the Principal Deputy Speaker ordered the Division Bells to be rung.

Upon 10 Members being present —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No amendments have been tabled to clauses 1 to 3. I propose by leave of the Assembly to group these clauses for the Question on stand part.

Clauses 1 to 3 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now come to the first group of amendments for debate. These amendments will deal with principles, safeguards and protection from liability. Members should note that amendment No 10 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 9; amendment No 31 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 30; amendment Nos 230 to 232 are mutually exclusive with amendment No 229; amendment No 432 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 431; and amendment Nos 438 and 439 are mutually exclusive with amendment No 437.

11.15 am

I call the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Mr Simon Hamilton, to move amendment No 1 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Clause 4 (Meaning of “unable to make a decision”)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to move amendment No 1: In page 2, line 41, after “means.” insert

“and references to enabling or helping a person to make a decision about a matter are to be read accordingly.”

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

Amendment Nos 2, 7, 8, 10, 11, 14, 16-26, 29, 31, 39-41, 43, 46, 48, 49, 57, 59-63, 75, 76, 82, 94, 137, 140, 145, 146, 176-180, 183-186, 189, 196-202, 204-207, 209-214, 216-221, 230-232, 234-238, 244, 246-248, 331, 369-378, 403, 409-412, 421-423, 425-429, 431-457, 459-462.

Just another 500 or so to go. With your indulgence, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I will begin by placing on record my thanks to the Chair, members and staff of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee for the extremely thorough and efficient manner in which they conducted their scrutiny of the Bill. The Committee's report, which was published on 28 January, is testament to their hard work, and it speaks to the magnitude of the task before them. Not only is the Bill one of the largest, if not the largest, to come before the Assembly, it is also one of the most complex. Added to that the pressing nature of the timetable as we fast approach the end of the mandate, the conclusion of the Committee Stage is a significant achievement. It would be remiss of me not to acknowledge that today.

I will start with amendment Nos 1, 2 and 177, which relate to clauses 4, 5 and 158 respectively. Together, the amendments address a point raised by the Royal College of Speech and Language Therapists and by the Committee about the important role of communication support. The amendments make it clear in the Bill that help and support must be given to enable a person to communicate his or her decision, for example, by involving someone who can provide communication support, such as a speech and language therapist. I am pleased that we were able to address that point to the satisfaction of the Committee, as noted in its report.

I will now deal with amendment Nos 7, 8, 10, 11 and 31, which have been tabled by Ms McCorley, Mr McCartney and Mr Lynch. Amendment No 7 adds the words "or injury" to clause 10(1)(a), which provides that the protection from liability in clause 9 does not extend to any:

"civil liability for loss or damage resulting from a person's negligence in doing an act".

I am advised that, strictly speaking, the amendment is unnecessary as personal injury would already be caught by the wording of clause 10(1)(a) as it stands. I do not, therefore, support the amendment to clause 10.

Amendment No 8 seeks to replace the word "threat" in clause 12(4)(b) with the phrase:

"an expressed intention to use force"

I confess that I am not clear as to the motivation behind that amendment. Perhaps the Members proposing it will enlighten us when speaking to it during the debate, but, at this point, I do not see what it adds to the clause or what objective it aims to achieve other than to create a drafting issue with the repetition of the words "to use force". That would have to be corrected at Further Consideration Stage if made by the Assembly today. Therefore, I do not support the amendment to clause 12.

Amendment No 10 is to clause 14(4). It would make sense to cover that with amendment No 31 to clause 31(3), both of which are tabled by Ms McCorley, Mr McCartney and Mr Lynch. The intended effect of those amendments would appear to place a duty on my Department to make regulations prescribing the types of people who are suitably qualified to carry out formal assessments of capacity for the purposes of clause 14 and who can gain access to the home of a person, subject to a community residence requirement for the purposes of clause 31. It is already the case that neither clause 14 nor clause 31 can come into operation before the relevant regulations are made. In other words, the proposed amendments are unnecessary.

However, when reviewing those clauses following their introduction, the Office of the Legislative Counsel suggested rewording the relevant subsections in recognition that the word "may" could cause confusion. Amendment Nos 9 and 30 resulted. Those were accepted by the Committee, as noted in its report. Those amendments fall into the second group of amendments to be debated today. They better address the perceived problem that perhaps motivated the Members' amendments.

I also do not support amendment No 11 to clause 16, the effect of which is to remove electroconvulsive therapy (ECT) from the list of serious treatments requiring a second opinion under the Bill. While it is for the Members proposing the amendment to explain their rationale, I suspect that it might have been prompted by the view expressed by some stakeholders during the public consultation and Committee Stage that to single out ECT goes against the underlying aim of the Bill to destigmatise mental health.

Although I am sympathetic to that view, I am more persuaded by the counterargument that, if it is not expressly mentioned in clause 16, the Bill could be perceived to be weakening protections for persons who are undergoing ECT. ECT is specified as requiring a second opinion in the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, which is to be replaced for over-16s by the Bill.

Amendment Nos 14, 16 and 17, all of which amend clause 18, also relate to the issue of second opinions. Among other things, clause 18 requires the doctor giving the second opinion to do certain things before he or she gives it in the form of a certificate. For example, the doctor must consult with those treating a person generally. The effect of amendment No 14, which I am proposing on foot of points raised by some stakeholders during Committee Stage and agreed by the Committee in its report, is to require the doctor to examine a person who is lacking capacity and any relevant health records before providing a certificate.

Amendment No 16 further strengthens the second-opinion safeguard by making it clear in the Bill that the doctor providing the second opinion should be independent of the doctor providing the treatment. Amendment No 17 is a technical amendment that is consequential to that.

I now turn to amendment Nos 18, 22, 23, 24 and 25, tabled by the Chair of the Committee, which relate to what is referred in the Bill as the "prevention of serious harm condition". Although I fully understand the motivation behind the amendments, which were prompted by evidence from the Law Centre during the Committee's deliberations, when you work them through, they could produce some very perverse outcomes for the very people whom the Bill is trying to protect, and that would be difficult to justify. It could, for example, result in people not receiving treatment because they are unable to consent to themselves even though it is clearly in their best interests. For example, a fear of needles or a belief that the doctor is trying to poison them may cause them to resist that treatment. There is already a power in the Bill to prescribe circumstances in which a trust's authorisation would be required where a person is resisting the provision of serious treatment. That is proportionate and workable, but also to require a doctor to be satisfied that, in all such cases, the treatment is necessary to prevent serious harm would not be. I would therefore be concerned if those amendments were to be supported today. As I said, although well-intentioned, they may do more harm than good, which is not the outcome that any of us wants for those who require the protections that the Bill aims to give them.

That brings me to amendment Nos 19, 20 and 21, which were tabled by Ms McCorley and others and which also relate to the prevention of serious harm condition. It is perhaps worth explaining that, as it stands, the Bill requires that condition to be met where it is proposed to deprive people of their liberty or to treat people on a compulsory basis. It means that the person proposing the interventions must reasonably believe that they are necessary to prevent serious harm coming to the person who is unable to consent to the care or treatment required or to prevent serious physical harm coming to others. That is a very high bar, and rightly so.

The effect of the proposed amendments would be to permit the detention of, or the provision of serious treatment on a compulsory basis to, vulnerable individuals who have not done anything unlawful, never mind illegal or criminal, on the basis of there being a risk of something less than serious physical harm to another person. Specifically, it would permit such serious infringements of a person's liberty on the basis of a risk of psychological harm to another person, which is notoriously difficult to prove. Such a lowering of the threshold for detention is not something that we as elected Members should countenance without a full and open debate, particularly when it is not advocated by stakeholders who are deeply committed to the Bill and when the reasoning that I just outlined was explained to, and accepted by, the Committee.

Before dealing with the issue giving rise to the largest number of amendments in this group — again, tabled by Ms McCorley and others — I briefly refer to amendment No 26. That amendment relates to the proposed new schedule 7A, which provides for supervision and assessment orders. I will say more about those orders when debating the fourth group of amendments, but, in essence, amendment No 26 seeks to align the protections available to people, subject to a supervision and assessment order, where it is proposed to treat them, and that treatment is serious, with the protections available to people who are being similarly treated when subject to a measure of a compulsory nature under Part 2 of the Bill. That means that authorisation by a health and social care trust must be sought under schedule 1 in such cases in prescribed circumstances. I hope that Members will support that amendment, which has been accepted by the Committee, as is noted in its report.

Amendment No 29 is the first of 101 amendments that add “approved clinician” or “approved responsible clinician” to references in the Bill to “medical practitioner” or that replace “medical” with “clinical” to describe reports that must be made for very specific purposes in the Bill. The amendments in question are amendment Nos 29, 39 to 41, 43, 46, 57, 59 to 63, 137, 140, 145, 146, 176, 178 to 180, 183 to 186, 189, 196 to 202, 204 to 207, 209 to 214, 216 to 221, 230 to 232, 234 to 238, 244, 246 to 248, 369 to 378, 409 to 412, 421 to 423, 425 to 429, 432, 434 to 436, 438 to 440, 442 to 449, and 459 to 462. Now that should fill somebody's bingo card.

You will all be glad to hear that I propose to deal with all those amendments together as they all appear to be motivated by the same aim. I hope that others follow suit. [Laughter.] That aim is to widen out the professional roles provided for in the Bill. This is not a new issue; it came up in the consultation phase and at Committee Stage. The main difficulty with those amendments, as I see it, is that the term “clinician” is very wide and, based on our legal advice, could capture practitioners who would not be suitably qualified to perform the functions and duties envisaged in the Bill. Those functions and duties relate to some of the most serious interventions that might be made in a person's life and require objective medical evidence in order to comply with the relevant legal obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).

There is a real risk, therefore, that those amendments might negatively impact on the Bill's compatibility with the ECHR, particularly when it comes to the provisions relating to deprivations of liberty and the associated authorisation process in schedule 1. As I said, this issue has been on our radar for some time and was raised by the Committee, which accepted the Department's position.

I should also make Members aware that, from a technical standpoint, the proposed amendments are likely to necessitate further changes to the Bill, which would have to be identified before and then made at Further Consideration Stage. With limited time available, there is a risk that not all of those further amendments would be identified in time, increasing the risk of needing a further Bill in the next mandate to deal with the issue.

I now turn to the issue of automatic referrals to the review tribunal, which is the subject of amendment Nos 48 and 49. Those amendments would change the duty on health and social care trusts to refer a person's case to the tribunal, where it has not been considered, from two years to one year, or, if the person is under 16, from one year to six months. In my view, those amendments are unnecessary because there are other mechanisms in the Bill that can be used to bring a person's case to the tribunal. First, the person in respect of whom an authorisation has been granted under schedule 1 or schedule 2, or his nominated person, can apply to the tribunal at various times during the authorisation period. Secondly, at any time during an authorisation period, various people can refer the person's case to the tribunal to consider whether the criteria for that authorisation are still met. Those referrals can be made by the Attorney General and the Department, as well as the Master of the Office of Care and Protection, if directed to do so by the court. There is an additional duty on the trust to notify the Attorney General if somebody in its care lacks the capacity to make an application to the tribunal. The Attorney General can then decide to make an application to the tribunal if not to do so would be a breach of that person's rights.

Taking into account all those various access routes to the tribunal, I do not believe these amendments are necessary. Furthermore, they would have an obvious cost implication that cannot be ignored in the current financial climate. Tribunals would be convened more frequently, requiring significant additional resources and an accompanying increase in the legal aid bill.

Amendment No 75 relates to clause 73, which deals with the nominated person additional safeguard in Part 2. Clause 73 currently provides that, where a person is unable to appoint his nominated person himself or herself, and one must be appointed, the default nominated person cannot be somebody who lives outside the UK, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or Ireland. I believe that this is a reasonable, sensible and proportionate restriction that the proposed amendment would remove, creating what I consider unnecessary practical difficulties. For example, what if the default nominated person lives in Australia and the person who lacks capacity is here in Northern Ireland? Surely it is preferable to have someone close by who may be consulted as frequently and freely as necessary. I do not, therefore, support that amendment to clause 73.

11.30 am

Amendment Nos 76 and 94 are related. They aim to clarify the nature of information that may be disclosed to a nominated person and the independent advocate, and they serve to align the language in the Bill with that in the Data Protection Act 1998.

Amendment No 82 addresses a concern raised by the Law Centre and the Committee about the independence of independent advocates, which is a further safeguard provided for in Part 2. It removes the words “so far as practicable” from clause 84, with the aim of strengthening the requirement for independence. The amendment was endorsed by the Committee, as noted in its report.

That brings me to amendment No 331, which inserts a new clause into the Bill relating to advance decisions. This is a significant policy amendment that I have agreed to make in light of the Committee's scrutiny of the Bill. I should like to begin my brief comments on this by saying that the Committee was right to devote time to it. It is not straightforward, as I hope I will explain, and the conclusion ultimately reached by the Committee reflects that. As Members may be aware, an advance decision is a decision that a person makes when they have capacity to refuse a specific treatment in the future should they lose capacity. Clause 11 gives statutory recognition to advance decisions but does not include provisions on how they should be made or operate. That will continue to be governed by common law.

The main reason for adopting this approach is flexibility. The common law can continue to evolve, as the provisions are not set in stone. That is different from the approach taken in the English Mental Capacity Act 2005, which codified the common-law rules, although Scotland did not go down that route. Perhaps influenced by the position in England, some stakeholders argued that the Bill here should include similar provisions. However, my Department has consistently maintained that fusing mental health and mental capacity legislation will create a radically different legal framework to that in which the common-law rules were developed and which has not yet been attempted anywhere else. Simply following the English approach is not the answer in our circumstances. The more prudent course, which I am convinced is the right one for now, is to give this Bill time to bed in before deciding what the rules on advance decisions should be. As far as I can see, there just is not the consensus or the certainty to be able to legislate for it now. We, as an Assembly, are better taking the time to get it right, and the Bill allows us to do that.

However, I also accept that it is our responsibility to set the policy in matters such as these, which the Committee rightly reflects in its report. I want to be absolutely clear that the position adopted in the Bill is in no way an attempt to shirk that responsibility, which is why I had no difficulty in agreeing to the Committee's very reasonable suggestion to look again at this within a set time frame and to commit my Department to that in the Bill. That is reflected in new clause 272A, which is covered by amendment No 403 and which I hope will find support in the Chamber.

Before I conclude my remarks on the first group, I want to briefly refer to the remaining amendments in it. None of them changes the policy intent of the relevant provisions; they simply clarify that intent. Amendment Nos 431, 433, 437 and 441 relate to paragraph 11 of schedule 2, which deals with short-term detention in hospital and the requirement to examine, on admission, the person being detained. Amendment No 431 makes it clear that the examination must be done immediately on admission. That mirrors the approach in the equivalent article 9 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. Amendment Nos 433, 437 and 441 are technical amendments consequential to amendment No 431.

Finally in this group, amendment Nos 450 to 457 relate to reports made under schedule 2 to the Bill that are found to be defective or incorrect. Amendment Nos 450 and 451 limit the type of errors that can be corrected under paragraph 20 of schedule 2 to administrative errors only. Amendment Nos 452 to 456, which are to paragraph 21, allow the medical report required for the authorisation granted under schedule 2 to be corrected within the permitted period. Amendment No 457 inserts new paragraph 22, which allows for a new report to be issued if the original report does not comply with the requirements of the Bill. The amendment also requires a new examination of the person and a statement that the detention conditions have been met at all times since the original report. As I mentioned, these amendments do not change the policy intent, but they do ensure that errors can be corrected without putting the person being detained at risk.

I am very glad to say that I thank Members for bearing with me, and I look forward to hearing their views on the amendments in this group.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee on the Mental Capacity Bill): I will endeavour to be as quick in getting through my speech as the Minister was. I speak on behalf of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee, which is the first Ad Hoc Joint Committee to be established by the Assembly. Its membership was drawn from the Health Committee and the Justice Committee. We began our work in May 2015, with the task of looking at the Committee Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill, which is, as the Minister acknowledged, one of the largest Bills to have ever come before the Assembly.

Members will be aware that the background to the Bill is the Bamford review, which concluded in 2007 that, for the first time, there should be a single legislative framework to reform the existing mental health legislation and to introduce capacity legislation to Northern Ireland. Mental health law is broadly concerned with the reduction of the risks flowing from the mental disorder to the patient and to other people, whilst mental capacity law is designed to empower people to make decisions for themselves, whenever possible, and to protect people who lack capacity.

The key purpose of developing a single legislative framework to cover mental ill health and mental capacity is to attempt to reduce the stigma and inequalities that can sometimes flow from having specific mental health legislation. However, the production of such legislation is in no way a straightforward task, and, indeed, Northern Ireland is the only place in the world to attempt such an approach. England and Wales passed the Mental Capacity Act in 2005, for example, but it does not cover the treatment of mental illness. They have maintained two distinct legislative frameworks. The closest that anywhere has come to contemplating the approach is Victoria, Australia. In 2012, it considered bringing together mental health law and mental capacity law and produced a report. It decided, however, not to proceed further and concluded that it was a matter for ongoing debate. Given that we are leading the world in this regard and that it is such groundbreaking legislation, one would imagine that every Member would want to speak. Given that very few Members will contribute, I suggest that that perhaps reflects the complexity and difficulty in getting your head round such a complex Bill. It is important to note up front the complexity of the task that we faced in scrutinising a Bill that fuses mental health and mental capacity legislation, given that it will bring about a fundamental change to the way in which people with a mental illness receive treatment.

As I said, the Ad Hoc Joint Committee was established in May. We considered the Bill each week until we reported on 25 January. It is a long Bill, comprising 295 clauses, which are divided into 15 Parts and 11 schedules. The Committee worked its way through the Bill, starting off with introductory briefings with the Departments during June. Towards the end of June, we also held a round-table evidence session with international experts and academics in the fields of mental health and mental capacity to provide us with another perspective on the key issues in the Bill. The Committee received 53 submissions in written evidence and, during September and October 2015, took oral evidence from a wide range of interested parties. The remainder of our time was spent deliberating on the Bill, including fairly detailed negotiations with the Department of Health on a number of clauses.

The Committee's scrutiny led to its recommending to the Department of Health that it make a number of significant amendments to the Bill. The majority of the recommendations have been accepted by the Minister and are reflected in the amendments that we are considering today. I thank the Minister for his cooperative approach and for taking on board the Committee's views. I am sure that my Committee colleagues will support me in noting the good working relationship that was established between the Committee and the Bill teams, which were composed of officials from the Department of Health and the Department of Justice. Officials made themselves available to answer our queries, in writing and in person, when required. That certainly helped us to come to an agreed position on many issues in the Bill.

Before I speak specifically about the amendments in the first group, I will provide a brief overview of the key issues that we identified as we went through the scrutiny process. First, the Department's decision to recognise but not codify advance decisions in the Bill and to leave it to common law; secondly, the Department's approach to the future role of enduring powers of attorney; thirdly, whether criminal justice disposals provided for in the Bill were sufficiently broad to deal with offenders who pose a risk of serious psychological harm to others; and, fourthly, the extent of the powers in the Bill to allow the Department to amend primary legislation by means of secondary legislation. I will return to those issues later in the debate.

There was also the financial cost of the Bill, which I want to focus on for a few minutes before I turn my remarks to the detail of the amendments. There are major questions on how and when the legislation will be implemented. The introduction of the Bill will require a substantial change to practice and culture across the health and social care and justice sectors. Major change, which will necessitate staff training, additional staffing, an increased legal aid budget, the establishment and operation of a review tribunal and an Office of the Public Guardian, comes with a hefty price tag. The Departments have estimated that between £76 million and £84 million will be required for year 1 implementation costs and between £68 million and £76 million for recurrent costs on an annual basis.

Therefore, the outworkings of the Bill would cost the Executive an additional £70 million each year, and every year going forward. If the Health and Justice Departments were required to find that money from their existing baseline, it would place significant pressure on both budgets.

Given the current financial climate and the likely financial climate over the four or five years, the question genuinely arises of whether Northern Ireland will be able to afford the implementation of this substantial legislation. If we cannot afford it, what happens then? Will we have passed legislation that could end up being out of date by the time that it is commenced five or 10 years down the line? These are serious questions, and I am interested to hear the Minister's thoughts on the Bill's affordability as the debate progresses throughout the day.

I will now comment specifically on the first group of amendments. All the amendments in the group that were tabled by the Minister were supported by the Committee. Given the sheer number of ministerial amendments, I will not go into detail on every single one. Rather, I will focus my remarks on those that are, from the Committee's point of view, most significant.

Amendment Nos 1 and 2, tabled by the Minister, relate to one of the key elements of the Bill, which is that people must be supported to make their own decisions wherever possible. Clause 5 sets out the steps that must be taken to allow that to happen. Stakeholders welcomed clause 5. However, some organisations believed that it could be strengthened further. The Royal College of Speech and Language Therapists was keen to ensure that the clause made clear that communication support must be given to those who require it. The Committee supported that view and asked the Department to consider amendments to address the issue. The Department tabled amendments to clauses 4 and 5, which are before us today as amendment Nos 1 and 2.

Amendment No 1 makes clear in the Bill that help and support must be given to enable a person to communicate his or her decision. Amendment No 2 amplifies the point that help and support must be given to enable a person to communicate his or her decision, without affecting the generality of clause 5(2). Those amendments were welcomed by the Committee.

Amendment No 14 also came about as a result of Committee scrutiny. The RQIA and the Commissioner for Older People queried the way in which clause 18 was drafted as it implied that a second opinion could be made without a doctor being obliged to visit patients or obtain their medical records. The Committee agreed that the clause should make absolutely clear that both would be required in the course of producing a second opinion. The Department agreed to amend clause 18, and the Committee welcomes amendment No 14, which requires a medical practitioner to make at least one visit to a patient and to have made at least one request for their records before he or she can issue a certificate.

Amendment No 82, tabled by the Minister, was also in response to an issue raised by the Committee. It relates to clause 84 and the matter of independent advocates. Under the Bill, people have a right to an independent advocate in certain circumstances. These circumstances are set out in clauses 35 and 36 and are referred to as “relevant acts”. A relevant act is defined as one of the following: deprivation of liberty; a requirement to attend a certain place to receive treatment with serious consequences; the imposition of a community residence requirement; or the provision of serious compulsory treatment. Therefore, it is clear that independent advocates have a role to play when people find themselves at a point in their life when serious decisions about their future treatment or care are to be made.

Clause 84 sets out the arrangements for instructing independent advocates. As drafted, clause 84(3) requires that the health and social care trust must have regard to the principle that the advocate must be independent of the person who proposes to do the act or give the treatment, so far as practicable. As the Minister mentioned, the Law Centre flagged its concern at the use of the phrase “so far as practicable” and suggested that it be removed from the clause for what the Committee viewed as very sound reasons. The Law Centre argued that independent should mean independent and that it should be entirely possible to appoint an advocate who is completely independent of the decision-maker. Given that independent advocates are instructed only when the most serious interventions are proposed — those that will have a major impact on a person’s life — the Committee felt that it was right and proper that the independence of the advocate should be without doubt. The Department accepted that rationale and tabled amendment No 82, which was also welcomed by the Committee.

Amendment No 331, tabled by the Minister, concerns one of the key issues that the Committee focused on during its scrutiny. Clause 11 deals with advance decisions and states that protection from liability does not apply if, for example, a doctor carries out treatment:

“that conflicts with an effective advance decision to refuse treatment” that has been made by the patient. A range of stakeholders was concerned that, whilst clause 11 recognises effective advance decisions, it does not set out the rules for what constitutes an effective advance decision or how people can go about making one. Instead, the Department is leaving those issues to common law.

Stakeholders pointed out that, in contrast, advance decisions are codified in the English Mental Capacity Act 2005. The concerns about the Department’s approach to advance decisions were flagged up by the Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health, the Commissioner for Older People, the Children’s Law Centre, Compassion in Dying, the Medical Protection Society, Disability Action and the Alzheimer’s Society. For example, Compassion in Dying was concerned that the Bill has the potential to create confusion for people who would like to plan ahead for their future treatment in the event of loss of capacity; and for healthcare professionals who may be faced with an advance decision but are unsure as to whether it is “effective” and are therefore unsure of their obligations to respect it. However, other stakeholders, such as the Northern Ireland Association of Social Workers and the Royal College of Psychiatrists, took the position that case law and the wider societal debate about advance decisions was still developing. They suggested that the code of practice should contain guidance on how advance decisions should be drafted.

The Committee explored the issues involved with the Department in some detail. We wanted to understand its rationale for relying on case law rather than using the Bill to provide clarity and direction on advance decisions. The Department’s position was based on a number of arguments. One of its key points was that because the Mental Capacity Bill fuses mental health and mental capacity legislation, there could be a wider range of treatments covered by advance decisions than is the case in England and Wales. The courts have not yet considered those issues. In the Department’s view, the courts should have the opportunity to develop common law rules further. The Department also suggested that it would be preferable to allow for greater public debate on advance decisions once the Bill is in operation rather than setting the rules in law at this point. Officials advised that consultation on the Bill had demonstrated that there is not enough evidence or consensus to allow the rules around advance decisions to be set down in the Bill and that there are still key policy issues to be determined, such as, for example, whether the rules should be the same for all treatments or for people of all ages.

The Committee was concerned that an issue of such significance was going to be left to the courts to determine rather than the policy being developed by the Department and approved by the Assembly through the Bill. Members questioned the Department further on existing case law. Officials revealed that, in fact, there had been no cases on advance decisions to date in the courts in Northern Ireland. They then stated that public awareness raising, as part of the implementation phase of the Bill, might result in people being more aware of advance decisions and that that could generate more court cases. The Committee did not accept the notion that people being forced to take court cases because of a lack of clarity in the law was somehow a positive thing in that it would help to develop case law. In the Committee’s view, that would be evidence of failure, not success. In addition, it would leave healthcare professionals and patients in a vulnerable and uncertain position, particularly in connection to advance decisions for mental health conditions.

The Committee acknowledged that not enough policy work has been done by the Department to allow the rules around advance decisions to be put in the Bill. For example, a range of issues would need careful consideration, such as whether advance decisions should be limited to refusal of a specific treatment or should allow for positive statements requesting a specific treatment; whether children and adults should be allowed to make advance decisions; and whether an advance decision could be confined to an already diagnosed condition or extended to a future condition or future circumstances. The Committee therefore agreed to ask the Department to bring forward an amendment to provide for a “review and report” clause, which would require the Department to review the law on advance decisions within a certain period from the Act becoming law and lay a report before the Assembly. The Department agreed to make such an amendment to require it to review the law on advance decisions and produce a report to be laid in the Assembly within three years of the Bill coming into operation. That is amendment No 331, and it has been welcomed by the Committee.

I will now turn to the Committee amendments in this group. Amendment Nos 18, 22, 23, 24 and 25 are Committee amendments and relate to clauses 21 and 22. Clauses 21 and 22 come under Part 2 of the Bill, which deals with additional safeguards for what is called “treatment with serious consequences”. This is defined in clause 20 and broadly means treatment that causes the person serious pain, distress or side effects, is major surgery or has a serious impact on their day-to-day life. Under the Bill as drafted, a nominated person can object to a proposed treatment with serious consequences. In most cases, the nominated person would be a family member or carer. In those instances, the treatment can proceed only if the prevention of serious harm condition is met. That condition is that failure to provide the treatment would create a risk of serious harm to the individual in question or to other persons. However, if the individual who lacks capacity resists the treatment with serious consequences, that does not trigger the prevention of serious harm condition. The Law Centre had significant concerns about what it saw as that discrepancy. It argued that it is unfair that resistance from the person who was actually the subject of the treatment did not have the same weight as an objection from a nominated person. The Law Centre was of the view that clause 22 should be amended so that the prevention of serious harm condition applies.

The Committee sought the Department’s view on this proposed amendment. Its response, much like the Minister outlined earlier, was that the prevention of serious harm condition is a high bar that a decision maker must be satisfied is met before providing certain types of treatment. In the Department’s view, that high bar is proportionate when a nominated person is objecting but not when the person themselves is resisting. The rationale is that the person’s resistance could be unexpected or unrelated to the treatment itself.

The Committee was not convinced that that was a sound rationale. For example, it might be convenient to say that the person’s resistance is due to some other factor and not the treatment that they are about to receive but that is a subjective judgement call. The Committee therefore agreed to bring forward its own amendments to require the prevention of harm condition to be met where a person resists treatment, so that the same standard is required as when a nominated person objects to treatment.

I ask the House to support these amendments.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an deis labhairt ar an Bhille seo inniu. I welcome the opportunity to speak at the Consideration Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill. At the outset, I state that I support the general principles of the Bill, including its safeguards and protections from liabilities.

Issues around mental capacity could affect any one of us directly or indirectly in our lifetime. It is important that robust legislation is in place that outlines the rights of individuals and the roles and responsibilities of statutory agencies. The principles of this Bill will transform mental health legislation here in the North, and I believe that —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Can I just interrupt the Member? Could you just move your mic forward for the sake of Hansard?

Ms McCorley: Sorry about that. The Bill’s passage will benefit hugely those who lack capacity or may lack capacity in the future.

We proposed a number of amendments, and I would like to refer to some of them. Amendment No 8 to clause 12 relates to acts of constraint. The amendment proposes:

“Leave out ‘a threat’ and insert ‘an expressed intention to use force.’”

In evidence at Committee Stage, a lot of concerns were raised about using restraint and the terminology of how it was physical and an invasive act. It provoked a lot of comment. Clause 12(4)(b) states that an act restraining a person:

“is a use of force or a threat to use force”.

We believe that a better form of words would be “an expressed intention to use force” so that someone would not be restrained without proper grounds. We need to be clearer about an expressed intention to use force so that people are not going to be restrained unnecessarily. That is the rationale behind that amendment.

Amendment No 11 to clause 16 is in relation to electroconvulsive therapy. Again, that was an issue that came up at Committee Stage. We listened to what we were hearing from people, and as part of our responsibility we raised the issue and put forward the amendment. However, having listened to the Minister’s explanation of why it needs to be there, we are happy enough not to move that amendment.

Amendment Nos 19 and 20 to clause 21 relate to treatment with serious consequences. They concern the prevention of serious harm condition under additional safeguards. The Bill says that the prevention of serious harm condition is where:

“failure to provide the treatment in question to P would create a risk of serious harm to P or of serious physical harm to other persons”.

During the Committee Stage, it was expressed that serious physical harm is included but that that leaves out the fact that serious psychological harm could be caused to a person and that limiting it to physical harm meant that the type of psychological harm that could result from whatever could happen would not be considered. That is why we feel that “physical” should be left out so that the definition is “serious harm”. That would have the capacity to include physical or psychological harm.

I move on to amendment No 29. The Minister went on to list all the ensuing amendments that would be affected by this one. I will be honest and say that I was not exactly clear about what the Minister was saying. We had very robust evidence at the Committee as to why we needed to have approved clinicians as part of the decision-making process. I can go into that in detail, but is the Minister prepared to confirm what he said? I did not hear what he said; it was a wee bit unclear. I am happy to listen to him if it that is appropriate. If you could maybe —

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to intervene if the Member wishes to give way, or I will do it in my summation.

Ms McCorley: In amendment No 29, we seek to insert “approved clinician” after “medical practitioner” on the basis that it would allow other therapists and clinicians to be part of the decision-making process rather than limiting it to just a medical practitioner. That is people who are involved in psychological assessments and that. The Minister said that, because there are several amendments that ensue from amendment No 29, he would deal with all those amendments together, but I did not quite catch what the Minister said.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Are you asking the Minister to respond now or when he makes a winding up speech? He is happy to do it now.

Ms McCorley: Ok.

Mr Hamilton: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. There are several concerns that flow from the raft of amendments, of which there are 101. I am glad that you did not read all the numbers out as well; I did that courtesy for you. The first issue comes from the fact that “clinician” is quite a wide term and runs the risk of including and capturing practitioners who are not suitably qualified to make important and difficult decisions. They are some of the most difficult decisions that might have to be taken in a person’s life. I do not think that any of us want to be in a position where we have people who are not suitably qualified to perform the important functions and duties envisaged in the Bill having to take those decisions. That is why I think that a much narrower term is required.

Moreover, there is a risk that, by doing that, we could stumble over European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) obligations, as the Bill could be incompatible because of the breadth of that definition. Those are the issues that we are concerned about. When it comes to the provisions that relate to the deprivation of somebody’s liberty and the associated authorisation process, which is set out in schedule 1, there are those concerns around the European Convention on Human Rights. In such circumstances, I think and hope that the House will agree that, on one hand, we do not want to fall foul of the ECHR and that, on the other hand, we want to have the right, suitably qualified people taking the very difficult and life-changing decisions envisaged in the Bill.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to continue.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat. Can I maybe ask whether that would include suitably qualified registered psychologists? Can that be written into the Bill in some way?

12.00 noon

Mr Hamilton: I will perhaps reflect on that and come to it in my winding-up remarks. If we are unable to do that, we will reflect on the issue and perhaps discuss it at Further Consideration Stage. I am happy, however, to reflect on it and come back to it in my winding-up remarks.

Ms McCorley: Thank you very much. I accept that. On the basis of what the Minister has said, we will not now move those amendments.

I move on to amendment Nos 48 and 49. Again, we tabled those amendments because of issues and concerns raised during Committee Stage about the period before a case could be considered again. The Minister has laid out the rationale for that and given us some explanation of how safeguards will be put in place to address the concerns. Therefore, we are happy not to move those amendments.

Finally, clause 73 states that the default nominated person has to be somebody who is resident in the Channel Islands, the UK, the Isle of Man or Ireland. We believe that there is no strong reason that it cannot be someone who is resident in another country, and we feel that there is no need to have that limitation. I do not believe that there is a strong reason why that needs to be there, so I am content to move amendment No 75.

Mr McKinney: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the Consideration Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill. Before getting on to the group 1 amendments, it is worthwhile sketching out some of the broader issues underpinning the need for change. It is worthwhile reiterating some stark statistics on the number of people whom today’s Bill will impact on. We have almost 20,000 people living with dementia in Northern Ireland, and that number is likely to rise. We have 1% of the population suffering from schizophrenia, 13% suffering from depression and almost 214,000 carers for people who may lack capacity. All those people and many others may need important decisions to be made on their behalf, or they may need to make decisions for other people. It is in that context that we see how important the Bill will be for those with mental illness, their families and extended families.

The development of the Bill, as we all know, has been a long process, starting back in 2002 with the Bamford review, which was commissioned to examine the best possible way to provide services to people with mental health issues or a learning disability. Finalised in 2007, it recommended having a single piece of legislation that would provide a framework for the reform of mental health legislation.

I welcome the group 1 amendments, which, as I said, have the aim of empowering vulnerable adults with impaired mental capacity to make as many of their own decisions as possible. I welcome the fact that adequate legislative measures and safeguards are tightened through the amendments to ensure that individuals are protected when decisions have to be made on their behalf. It is worth underscoring the point that we really have an opportunity with the Bill to be world leaders in setting the best standards achievable for vulnerable adults who may lack, even intermittently, the capacity to make important decisions for themselves.

The Bill has been described as representing a paradigm shift in the approach to the care and treatment of individuals with mental disorders. No longer will they be treated or seen as a separate class of individual. Capacity will no longer be defined differently among people, and that has to be recognised as a positive move.

The Bill calls for suitable and adequate support to be given to individuals when all decisions relating to capacity are taken. I welcome the approach taken by the Minister in tabling amendments in that regard to ensure that there is a clear measure of support available, whether that be through minimum standards or otherwise. We also need to ensure that, when older people make important decisions about their future, which often happens in urgent or time-critical situations, they are given the best opportunity to make their own choices.

I will touch on the practicalities of the Bill. There is an obvious need to ensure at the outset that the bodies and individuals operating under the Bill are adequately funded and resourced. It is important to mention that the SDLP previously noted its concerns over the Bamford action plans and asked that the appropriate funding be made available to implement them. I will touch on that later.

There is a broad spectrum of individuals who do not receive the care or support that they need, and it is important that the Assembly reflects on that. However, it is positive, in the context of today's debate, to see some outcome from the Bamford action plans.

At Second Stage, the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee referred to finance and the extra cost. I am sure that it would be beneficial to have some sort of economic audit carried out of that. While some people see everything as cost, there could be savings as well.

I turn to the group of amendments. The Committee received a large amount of correspondence and briefings and undertook significant discussion of safeguards and protections from the liability section of the Bill. The SDLP made clear at Second Stage that, while we support the principles of the Bill, as I have underscored, we have lagged behind in the UK for decades in not having that fully tailored legislative framework for mental capacity, and we have relied on the antiquated Mental Health Order, which wraps mental capacity around mental health disorder in the common law, relying on the outdated principle of necessity. The concerns of those with mental illness have historically been separated from the treatment of capacity in general. That remains the case in England, Wales and Scotland, which have proceeded with developing legislation that has been enacted for a number of years. We have been lagging behind due to the absence of an exhaustive framework.

The SDLP recognises that advance decisions can be a useful tool with which patients and professionals can work together to draw up a plan of what to do when a patient is unwell. That means that their wishes can be respected. The Alzheimer's Society related to the Committee that the Bill must operate as a stimulus to encourage the practice of making advance decisions, but it had significant concerns about who triggers the practice and how that happens so as to maximise the capacity of people with dementia at an early stage. They stated that their voice must be clearly audible in decisions being made close to the end of their life when they cannot make those decisions. Amendment No 331 is the new clause on advance decisions. It provides for a review, after three years, of the law relating to advance decisions to refuse treatment. We welcome that and will support it.

Clauses 35 and 36 provide for the inclusion of the independent advocate as an additional safeguard in all cases where the individual lacks capacity. We support the technical amendments in that regard.

Clauses 45 to 51 provide for rights of review of authorisation, that is to say a right to apply to a tribunal to review decisions relating to capacity. There are significant amendments to the tribunal section in Part 6 of the Bill, but, first, I would like to note some of the points made to the Committee on the tribunal.

The Law Society noted the expanding remit of the tribunal but sought confirmation that there would be a corresponding increase in resources.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Can I just ask you to confirm that you are speaking to the group 1 amendments?

Mr McKinney: Yes, though I have to say that that inclusion may have drifted beyond the — [Laughter.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Not for the first time. I draw you back to the group 1 amendments.

Mr McKinney: I was about to conclude my remarks on the general issue of budget. Departments have estimated that between £75 million and £129 million is required —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr McKinney, the budget is not part of this debate.

Mr McKinney: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Mrs Dobson: I also welcome the opportunity to speak on the first group of amendments. I am glad that the Bill has reached this stage, as, for a time, there was concern about whether it would get caught up in the dissolution of the Assembly. I, again, express my disappointment at how long it took for the Bill to come to the Floor, especially considering that it and the wider single legislative framework were first proposed as far back as 2009 following the Bamford review. Nevertheless, as the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee explained, it is a very important Bill, and I believe that all members of the Committee showed a willingness to see it reach this stage. There was, understandably, significant stakeholder interest in the Bill, and I was impressed by the quality of the evidence that we heard. It was important, however, that the bodies that will, ultimately, implement the Bill had sufficient opportunity to feed into it.

I support the first group of amendments. The Minister has reflected many of the issues that we heard in Committee.

I also support the amendments that have been tabled by Sinn Féin. Those that would insert the term "approved practitioners" into the Bill should hopefully ensure that it will remain flexible to changes in service provision in years to come.

The only other comment that I have at this stage is that, while I note that the Sinn Féin amendments would tighten the language in some areas of the Bill, such as clause 14, it was disappointing that they did not show the same consistency with my amendments yesterday.

Mr McCarthy: Like others, I am pleased to contribute briefly to the debate on this important legislation. On this occasion, I will take the advice of the Minister and, indeed, the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee and not repeat things that have been said. I place on record my thanks to the Committee staff, officials from both Departments and all the stakeholders who gave evidence during the process. I also thank, of course, our officials, who helped to get the Committee through this important work.

It has been an extraordinarily complex piece of legislation. It has involved detailed scrutiny by the Ad Hoc Committee for the best part of six months and two Departments — Health and Justice — which are to be commended for working together on this important legislation. Of course, the Bill has long been under development and has been necessary for a considerable time. Therefore, it is particularly important that we complete its remaining stages before the end of the mandate. We must not let it fail and, in doing so, lose all the work to date and, moreover, the reforms that it will deliver. It is important that we press on and make good progress in the time that remains.

The Assembly will be pleased to note that I do not intend to go systematically through each amendment in the group, but I pass my admiration on to the Minister and the Chair of the Committee for seeking to do so.

I put on record my support for the amendments from the Minister and the Committee. They reflect the detailed work that has been conducted by both Departments and the Committee over the past months to ensure that a robust and informed exchange took place so that there was a balanced outcome. The amendments in the group reflect the importance of the underlying principles and the need for adequate and appropriate safeguards in their application.

The Bill will hopefully improve the lot of people who suffer from mental illness. Mental health and learning disability have always been regarded as the Cinderella of the health service. Hopefully, this work will now bring them to a level playing field. That is what we are all striving to attain. All the work comes on the foundation of the sterling work of the Bamford working group on mental health and learning disability. As others have stated, by offering a single, integrated Mental Capacity Act, the Bill is groundbreaking and, in fact, world-beating in best practice by international standards.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to come back to the amendments.

Mr McCarthy: OK, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I am, therefore, sceptical about the many amendments tabled by Sinn Féin at the eleventh hour outside the context of the structured scrutiny that was offered through the Ad Hoc Committee, where proposed amendments could be tested and the full implications taken into account. In particular, the amendments that introduce the term “clinician” alongside “medical practitioner”, while maybe well-intentioned, may have the unintended consequence of not being compliant with the European Convention on Human Rights, in that they dilute the standard of evidence used in any intervention.

In conclusion, I will comment on the point of finance, which was raised by the Chair of the Committee. Not least given the huge volume of work that has been conducted to date, it is vital that we now place the Bill on the statute book. Obviously, in the context of some very tight public finances and pressures on the health budget, consideration will have to be given to resourcing, but that can be for another day. Nevertheless, the direction of travel should be clear so that the Bill can be passed and implemented in full as soon as possible.

Mr Hamilton: I thank all Members for their contribution to the debate on group 1.

It will be abundantly clear to everyone listening to the debate just how much consideration the Committee and members have given to the Bill. It is also clear how many important issues the Bill touches on, and there is still a lot more to go. It is important, therefore, that we get it all right.

What we are talking about today will affect the lives of many people in Northern Ireland. One small change to a clause could have a massive impact on someone's life. We should not forget that as we debate and take decisions on amendments. With that message to the front of my mind, it is apt that I turn to the amendments tabled by Sinn Féin, which account for the vast majority in the group. It is apt, because, although a significant number of amendments were tabled, they relate to only four or five issues or concepts. Crucially, all of them were raised with my officials during Committee Stage, either in evidence sessions or in correspondence. As noted in the Committee's report, the Department's explanation or position on them, which I reflected in my opening remarks, was noted or accepted by the Committee, so it should not be surprising that I am opposed to the amendments today.

Ms McCorley made a specific point on the 101 amendments relating to definitional changes. In general, I welcome the fact that several amendments tabled by Sinn Féin will not be moved. I noted the ECHR concerns that Mr McCarthy raised regarding amendment No 29 and subsequent amendments about diluting the standards of those making very important assessments, as well as the suitability of the qualifications of the people making those assessments. I will give the Member a fuller explanation in writing on the issue of psychologists, but there is a role for other professions in other areas of the Bill, particularly in the formal assessment of capacity. I will give the Member a much fuller explanation in correspondence of the issue she raises between now and Further Consideration Stage.

I turn briefly to the Committee amendment relating to the prevention of serious harm. I listened carefully to the contributions, particularly that of the Chair. It is clear that this is well intentioned, but I fear that there is a problem because of the way in which the condition works, and its potential extension to a much wider group of people, as proposed by the amendment, could up end up doing more harm than good. Put bluntly, none of us wants to end up in a position in which people would be worse off than they would otherwise have been as a result of the Bill. There is a real risk of that happening if the relevant amendments to clauses 21 and 22 are made today.

The Chair raised the issue of costs, and other Members touched on it. From the outset, we have acknowledged that, because of the complexity of the Bill and the scale of the legislation, this would be expensive to implement. Initially, there were some very high cost estimates that we were not content with. We looked at the cost estimates again and have significantly reduced them to between £76 million and £85 million for the first full year of implementation and, for each year thereafter, between £68 million and £77 million. The costs have significantly reduced, but it is still a sizeable amount, particularly in the current budgetary climate. To be fair, we have been honest about that from the start.

The best course of action is to pass the Bill into law. Many Members have asked where the money is for this and why we have not put money aside, but it would not be proper to start to put resources against a Bill that has not been passed into law. The appropriate time to look at an implementation timetable is when the Bill passes into law, after which funding can be accordingly applied. Clearly, we can do that in a way that would, for want of a better phrase, phase in the implementation of the Bill. We will need to consider that when implementing the Bill in the future.

I again place on record my thanks to the Committee for its work on advance decisions. The Chair tackled the issue with his customary enthusiasm. As he noted, the strength of the views of stakeholders on advance decisions rightly dictated that the Department's position required close scrutiny.

I take issue with the view expressed that the position adopted in the Bill leaves patients and healthcare professionals in a vulnerable and uncertain position. I argue that the Bill, as a whole, does the exact opposite. As I said in my opening remarks, I am pleased to table an amendment that commits the Department to review this area of law and report in three years' time. That brings me to the end of my concluding remarks on the group 1 amendments.

Amendment No 1 agreed to.

(3B) The reference in subsection (2)(c) to persons whose involvement is likely to help the person to make a decision may, in particular, include a person who provides support to help the person communicate his or her decision."— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Clause 5, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 7 (Best interests)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now come to the second group of amendments for debate, which deal with subordinate legislation-making power, amendments to the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 and technical changes.

Mr Hamilton: I beg to move amendment No 3: In page 5, line 17, after "independent" insert "mental capacity".

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

Amendment Nos 4, 6, 9, 12-13, 15, 27-28, 30, 32-38, 42, 44-45, 47, 50, 52-55, 58, 64, 65-74, 78-81, 83-93, 95-115,

With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I propose to deal with this group's technical amendments together. They are minor and do not, in my view, require a great deal of explanation. I will deal first with amendment Nos 3 and 4, which relate to clause 7. As introduced, clause 7 makes further provision in relation to the best interests principle. I have been asked by the Committee, following a suggestion made by the Law Centre, to replace the term "independent advocate", which appears twice in that clause, with "independent mental capacity advocate". The change will help to differentiate between advocates who will be instructed under the Bill and advocates who will be commissioned by the health and social care trusts for other purposes. It in no way affects their role. Amendment Nos 6, 33-37, 44, 58, 64-67, 73, 79-81, 83-89, 91-93, 95-115, 334, 339, 392-393, 413, 430 and 436 make the same change to references to independent advocates throughout the rest of the Bill. I am pleased that we were able to address this point to the satisfaction of the Committee.

Amendment Nos 12, 13, 15, 55, 70-72, 78, 90, 124, 126, 127, 129, 130-132, 134-136, 143, 144, 152-171, 175, 181, 190, 194, 222, 225, 226, 250, 252, 255, 256, 261-262, 264 — I am about halfway through — 268, 269, 273, 274, 278, 281, 290-291, 297, 299, 301, 315, 320, 328-329, 332, 333, 335, 336-338, 343-353, 355-358, 360, 364, 365-368, 394, 396, 397, 399-401, 414, 419, 420, 465, 466-468, 469, 483 and 484 — I will repeat those in case anybody did not hear them — [Laughter.] — are simply drafting improvements or clarify policy intent. Thankfully, they do not, I think, require any explanation. I have done them enough justice already.

Moving on to amendment Nos 27 and 28, which amend clause 28. These amendments are to avoid any potential confusion around the use of the word "likely". They aim to simply clarify that the doctor needs to be satisfied that the chances of the treatment turning out to be serious are more than negligible. The word "likely" suggests that the doctor needs to be satisfied that the proposed treatment will probably be serious, which is not what is intended. Amendment Nos 32, 38, 74, 406 to 408, and 415 carry this change through to other provisions in the Bill where the word "likely" is used in the same context. Consequential to these amendments is my opposition to clause 65. Clause 65 explains what is meant by references in the Bill to treatment likely to be treatment with serious consequences, and will be made redundant if the amendments that I have just outlined are made.

I turn now to amendment No 42, which affects clause 39. This clause sets out requirements around extension reports; that is, reports that extend a period of authorisation, one of the additional safeguards provided for in Part 2 of the Bill. One such requirement is to make an assessment of a person's capacity to apply to the tribunal to seek a review of the authorisation. The amendment clarifies that this assessment should be at the time that the extension report is being made. In other words, it is not a speculative assessment. No change in effect is intended. Amendment Nos 45, 52, 221, 280, 286, 408, 416, 418, 424, 458, and 464 carry this change in wording to other provisions in the Bill where necessary.

Amendment No 47 relates to clause 48. Clause 48 imposes a duty on the relevant health and social care trust to refer a person's case to the review tribunal if an authorisation has been granted and extended. The aim of the amendment is to make it clear that the policy is that the authorisation must have been in force for at least two years, or one year for under-18s, at the time of the extension for the clause to apply. Amendment Nos 50, 282, 283, 284, and 285 are consequential to this amendment.

Amendment No 68 clarifies that Part 2 of the Bill is not applicable where there is a legal obligation to act under other legislation. Amendment 120 clarifies that it is the court that specifies the individuals who the person lacking capacity may have contact with rather than their deputies.

Amendment Nos 121 and 122 are related.

Amendment Nos 124, 126 and 127, 129 to 132, 134 and 135 are technical amendments to align the language used in the Bill with the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.

Amendment No 327 clarifies that proceedings in relation to an offence under clause 266 may be brought by the Director of Public Prosecutions in addition to a person who has the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA).

Amendment No 384 is a consequential technical amendment on foot of the amendment to clause 205, which I will discuss in more detail when the debate on group 4 arises.

Amendment 417 to paragraph 20 in schedule 1, clarifies the circumstances in which an interim authorisation may be made. Amendment Nos 53 and 54 are consequential to that amendment.

I now want to turn to the amendments in this group that relate to subordinate legislation-making powers. Amendment No 9 relates to clause 14. Clause 14 defines what is meant by formal capacity assessment and includes a regulation-making power to prescribe in regulations who is deemed to be suitably qualified to undertake that assessment. The amendment clarifies that only someone prescribed by the regulations can carry out the assessment. Any ambiguity over whether those regulations will be made is, therefore, removed. With this in mind, I would like to draw Members' attention to amendment No 10 again, which has been tabled by Ms McCorley and others. I referred to this during the debate on the first group of amendments. It should now be clear to the House that amendment No 10 is not required. I would, therefore, ask for amendment No 9 to be supported and for amendment No 10 to be opposed.

A similar issue arises in relation to amendment Nos 30 and 31, which relate to prescribing healthcare professionals permitted access to someone who is subject to a community residence requirement. Again, my tabled amendment No 30, removes any ambiguity around the need to make these regulations: they must be made. Amendment No 31 is, therefore, not required, and I urge Members to oppose it and instead support amendment No 30, which already deals appropriately with the issue.

I now want to turn to one of the more significant amendments that I propose to make. The Committee made it clear to the Department that it was not prepared to support clause 288, which confers powers on the Department to make further provision in regulations. Members were concerned that the powers conferred were too wide.

12.30 pm

I have, therefore, been asked by the Committee to bring forward a more limited version of clause 288. Before turning to my proposals, I want it to be clear that the rationale for clause 288, in its original form, was to deal with the unknown unknowns, that is, any unintended consequences that the introduction of such an innovative framework might have.

The amendments that I now propose provide a compromise, given the Committee's clear stance on that issue. However, I should make Members aware, as I did the Committee, that they will increase the risk of needing a further Bill in the future. The relevant amendments are amendment Nos 69, 379 to 383, 385, 387, 388, 398, 404 and 405, all of which are consequential to my opposition to clause 288. In summary, those amendments insert a new clause 58A to replace — but to mirror the effect of — subsection (3) of clause 288, as originally drafted. That power continues to be required. My Department must be able to modify provisions in Part 2 of the Bill to deal with cases where an intervention is proposed in relation to a child under 16, who will actually be 16 when the intervention is carried out. It also gives my Department a power to make regulations for the rectification of reports made under Part 2 that have been found to be incorrect or defective, within a prescribed period. It is important that that power be retained.

A power to make regulations amending other primary legislation in consequence of the Bill only is now contained in clause 290. A power to make transitional, transitory or a saving provision, by regulations in connection with the commencement of the Bill, has been moved to clause 294 and does not now include a power to amend or modify other primary legislation.

Amendment Nos 379 to 385 and 387 to clause 289, are largely consequential on the changes to clause 288, and the Department's acceptance of the recommendations in the report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules.

Moving on to other subordinate legislation-making powers, amendment No 138 gives effect to comments made by the Examiner of Statutory Rules on clause 131, which deals with research. I thank the Examiner for that advice. The aim of the amendment is to ensure that any regulations relating to clinical trials that are not to be treated as research for the purposes of Part 8 must be prescribed by regulation, subject to negative resolution rather than by way of an administrative designation.

Amendment Nos 322, 323, 325, 326 and 402 are purely technical in nature, clarifying policy intent, which we will not go into.

Amendment No 386 makes the regulation-making power in paragraph 14 of schedule 7A, which deals with supervision and assessment orders, subject to affirmative resolution, as some regulations could have a significant policy impact.

Amendment No 402 clarifies that the principles in Part 1 apply to regulations made under the Bill.

It is also worth pointing out that amendment No 395, although minor, ensures that any references in the Bill to “prescribed” attracts the same definition as that for regulations.

I conclude my comments on the second group by detailing those amendments that relate to the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. Again, there are some minor technical changes brought forward by amendment Nos 471, 474, 475 and 482. Amendment No 472 relates to the repeal of Part 6 of the Mental Health Order, which sets out the functions of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority. Those functions were transferred from the Mental Health Commission to the RQIA in 2009 but, at that time, were not amended to take account of the wider functions conferred on the RQIA by the Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003.

The purpose of repealing Part 6 of the Mental Health Order is to address overlaps and to make provision for all of RQIA’s functions in one piece of legislation, that is, in the RQIA 2003 Order. Amendment No 472 addresses a dual registration problem relating to private mental health hospitals. Currently, they must be registered under Part 7 of the Mental Health Order and Part 3 of the RQIA 2003 Order. The effect of the amendment is that any future registration and inspection of private hospitals must be done in accordance with the provisions of the RQIA 2003 Order. Members will wish to note that there are currently no private mental health hospitals in Northern Ireland. I am simply tidying up provisions so that they are dealt with under one piece of legislation.

That is also the intention behind amendment No 473, which is in part linked to the new clause 277A, which is amendment No 341 in group 3. We will discuss that amendment in more detail when the debate on group 3 arises. What is worth mentioning now, however, is that amendment No 473 ensures that the duty in article 118(4) of the Mental Health Order to maintain a register of people: applies to people under 18 and not under 16, as requested by the Committee.

Amendment No 476 replaces references to “a place of safety” in article 129 of the Mental Health Order with the term “an appropriate place”, in order to avoid confusion with the new “place of safety” regime in Part 9 of the Bill. Amendment Nos 477 to 480 are consequential. Amendment No 487 removes the words “any police station” from article 129(7) of the Mental Health Order so that it will no longer be possible to take a child under 16 to a police station, as both stakeholders and professionals alike agreed that that is not appropriate and, indeed, that the provision is rarely used.

Other minor consequential amendments are brought forward by amendment Nos 485 and 488.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, you and Members will be glad to hear that that concludes my contribution on the second group of amendments regarding subordinate legislation-making powers, changes to the Mental Health Order and technical matters. I look forward to hearing Members’ views.

Mr Ross: I think that the Minister used more numbers in that speech than in any speech that he made during his time as Finance Minister. That perhaps reflects the number of amendments tabled to the Bill. Again, I will not comment on all of them; rather, I will focus on those that were of most interest to the Committee.

Amendment No 3 is the first of many amendments that will bring about a change of terminology throughout the Bill. Part 4 of the Bill deals with independent advocates. Under the Bill, people have a right to an independent advocate in certain circumstances, which are set out in clauses 35 and 36 and referred to as “relevant acts”. A “relevant act” is defined as being one of the following: a deprivation of liberty; a requirement to attend a certain place to receive treatment with serious consequences; the imposition of a community residence requirement; or the provision of serious compulsory treatment.

In its evidence to the Committee, the Law Centre proposed that the term “independent advocate” should be changed to “independent mental capacity advocate” so that there is no confusion between general advocacy services and an advocate appointed under the Bill. It argued that, given the extensive independent advocacy work already taking place in Northern Ireland — for example, for children in care and people with learning disabilities — there is a concern that the use of the phrase “independent advocate” in the Bill could lead to confusion about what is a very specific statutory role. The Law Centre further advised that in England, Wales and Scotland the equivalent term in legislation is “independent mental capacity advocate”. It proposed that that would be a better term to use in the Bill in order to make it clear that a very specific kind of advocacy function is being carried out.

The Law Centre’s view was backed up by the written evidence that the Committee received on the Bill. Looking at that evidence, it was clear that some organisations misunderstood the role of the independent advocate in the legislation. Some stakeholders were of the impression that independent advocates provided for by the Bill play a part in giving general support to people who lack capacity, in assessing capacity, or in the best-interests decision-making process for all decisions, whether routine or serious.

The Committee asked the Department for its views on changing the terminology. Initially, the Department was opposed to the suggestion and contended that the term “independent mental capacity advocate” would cause confusion, because it is used in the English Mental Capacity Act 2005. The Committee was not convinced by the argument that somehow people in Northern Ireland would be thrown by the term “independent mental capacity advocate” because it is also used in English legislation in a slightly different way. Health and Social Care staff in Northern Ireland will operate according to this Bill and not in accordance with the English legislation, and it would be likely that a very small number of staff would even be aware of the terminology used in the English system. The Department eventually came round to the Committee’s view and agreed to bring forward a raft of amendments to rename “independent advocates” as “independent mental capacity advocates” throughout the Bill. The Committee therefore supports all those amendments.

There are a number of amendments tabled by the Minister that emanate from the Committee’s opposition to clause 288. Those are amendment Nos 69, 379-388, 404 and

405. The Committee has given notice that it is opposed to clause 288. The Minister has also given notice that he opposes clause 288, and I welcome the fact that he has agreed to adopt that position. As he said, clause 288 gives the Department the power to amend or modify by way of secondary legislation any primary legislation in connection with the Bill. To be clear, that means that it could make amendments to the Bill itself when enacted or to any other primary legislation, and not through, for example, a miscellaneous provisions Bill but through regulations.

In the Committee's view, such powers could not be justified. We are fully aware that secondary legislation comes before Committees for consideration, but the crucial difference is that a Committee or a Member cannot put down an amendment to a regulation — our only option is to pray against it. Furthermore, regulations are often brought in quite a number of years after the primary legislation has been passed. The collective knowledge of the Committee that scrutinised the original Bill may not be there, and therefore the House is not as fully attuned to the context and background of the secondary legislation being considered.

The Committee requested that the Department prepare a more limited version of clause 288 for its consideration.

In response, the Department submitted a range of linked amendments to clauses 289, 290 and 294 and a new clause 58A to address the Committee's concerns.

Amendment Nos 69, 379-388, and 404 and 405 are based on the premise that clause 288 will be removed from the Bill. In effect, the powers to make consequential amendments to the Act are now restricted to Part 11, and the powers to modify the Act in relation to children transitioning from being under 16 to over 16 and in relation to correcting errors in documents are now clearly limited to Part 2 of the Bill. Residual powers to amend other primary legislation in consequence of the Bill once enacted is provided for in the amendment to clause 290. It will be used to, for example, amend and substitute references to the "Mental Health Order (NI) 1986" in other primary legislation with the "Mental Capacity Act", where appropriate. The Committee accepts that the need for this sort of tidying-up power is inevitable with a Bill of this size and complexity.

Whilst the Department will argue that the removal of clause 288 and its replacement with more limited powers will increase the chance of a further Bill being required in the future to supplement or amend the Act, the Committee is of a view that there has to be a cut-off point in giving Departments free rein to amend primary legislation by way of regulations. We think that the amendments before the House today bring an appropriate balance of flexibility and accountability. Given that there may be significant time lags in bringing the key provisions of the Bill into effect, there may actually be time for the Department to bring an amending Bill, if required.

I am grateful that the Minister gave a more rational response to this position at the Committee than the Justice Minister did when we took a similar view on the Justice (No. 1) Bill and the Justice (No. 2) Bill. It is an important function of Committees to make sure that we do not give Departments free rein to introduce significant policy issues through secondary legislation. I think that it is important that, at times, Committees flex their muscles in that regard, and the Committee was in agreement with that. It is something that is increasingly creeping into all Bills being brought forward by all Ministers in the Executive, and it is something that we need to be alert to.

Amendment No 473, tabled by the Minister, came about, again, through Committee scrutiny. The RQIA advised the Committee that, under the Mental Health Order 1986, the health trusts are required to maintain a register of all persons under 18 who are receiving medical treatment for a mental disorder as inpatients in hospital in an adult ward. A Department of Health circular requires the trusts to send that register to the RQIA so that it can do unannounced inspections to review the effectiveness of the safeguarding provisions put in place by the trusts for under-18s on adult wards. However, under the Bill as drafted, the amendments to the 1986 Order will mean that the children recorded in the register by the trusts will only be those under the age of 16. As a result, the RQIA will not receive information in relation to 16- and 17-year-olds being treated in adult wards. The RQIA suggested that the Bill be amended to require the trusts to notify the RQIA of any 16- or 17-year-old accommodated in an adult psychiatric facility. The Committee believed that this was a sensible approach and asked the Department if it would be prepared to make such an amendment. The Department provided a proposed amendment, namely amendment No 473.

That concludes my comments on the group 2 amendments.

Mrs Dobson: We are content to support the amendments in group 2. Again, these reflect many of the issues that came up during the Committee deliberations. Several of the amendments in this group, such as amendment Nos 403, 404 and 405, relate to commencement. I am aware that the Minister has indicated in response to a written question that the Bill's timetable still allows for Royal Assent by the end of the current mandate and has further indicated that the commencement date is to be confirmed subject to progress on implementation arrangements. Given the considerable efforts and, indeed, hope of those who presented evidence to the Committee, is the Minister able, at Consideration Stage, to provide us with an update on the implementation arrangements and on when those who will fall under this important legislation will begin to see a positive change in their daily lives as a result?

Finally, I do not think that we would be able to have this debate without mentioning the costs. This is an issue on which the Committee regularly sought information, not least because the costs provided by the Department were pretty vague. Even as we stand here today, the Department is unable to say how much this Bill will cost and how it is going to pay for it. The Minister said earlier that it would not be proper to put money against a Bill that had not been passed into law. Today, we are passing the next stage of this legislation, and it appears that the Department is no more equipped than it was when this was first proposed by Bamford. I feel it is very important for us to pass legislation in this Building that makes a real change to the lives of our constituents. However, it is equally important that the Government are ready and prepared to act once the ink is dry.

Mr McCarthy: I, like Mrs Dobson, am happy to go along with the Minister and, indeed, the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee on this occasion. I was somewhat taken aback by some comments that were made by the Chair of the Ad

Hoc Committee when he seemed to be slightly critical of the Justice Department. I will not allow Mr Ross to criticise the Minister of Justice, because I know that the Minister is, and has been from day one, totally and absolutely committed to working with the Health Minister on this issue. I hope that that was just a blip in —

Mr Ross: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCarthy: As long as you are not going to further criticise the Minister, I will give way for a second.

Mr Ross: I would not dream of it, nor would I criticise the Member. If he reviews what I said, he will see that I said that all Ministers in all parties in all Departments are falling into the bad habit of introducing what is known as the Henry VIII clause. I am sure that the Member, who takes his scrutiny role very seriously in the House and in the Committees he is on, would be concerned if we were giving powers to Departments to make regulations through secondary legislation. We, as legislators, do not have the same ability to scrutinise that. That is the point I was making, and I am sure that the Member would want to agree with me about that.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Member for his clarification. Yes, I accept what you say. Perhaps I misunderstood. We are all trying to move forward and keep going on this. I will not, in this instance, concede any drawback from the Justice Minister's contribution. As I said, I know that he is totally and absolutely committed.

Mr Hamilton: That was a bit of light relief for a moment or two in this very heavy debate. I was starting to enjoy that a little too much.

I thank all the Members who contributed to the debate on the second group of amendments. The amendments are largely technical and consequential and have not, therefore, required a great deal of explanation, with the exception of perhaps clause 288. I thought there was a risk that we would get through this group of amendments without the Chair of the Committee referring to such a clause as a Henry VIII clause. He has known me long enough, and he knows me well enough, to know that I have no autocratic tendencies at all. It would not be the sort of thing that I would be looking to do, which is why I am content that clause 288 should not stand part of the Bill. We are going to oppose it. I am also bringing forward a number of other amendments that will collectively limit the powers conferred on the Department to make further provision in regulations. I will take this opportunity to remind the Chamber once again that that approach will increase the risk of needing a further Bill to amend what, hopefully, will be the Mental Capacity Act.

Mrs Dobson raised cost. I refer to the comments that I made in response to the group 1 debate. We have significantly reduced the cost of implementing the Bill from original estimates to estimates that are much lower but still quite high. Yes, it is an expensive Bill to implement, and I have been clear about that from the very outset. But I think it is right that we continue to press ahead with the legislation. I do not think it is appropriate for any Minister to presume the mind of the Assembly when they start to apply resources — in my case, those are limited resources, and I am sure the Justice Minister would agree that they are limited in his Department — without having the Bill passed. I assure the Member and the House, as I did in group 1, that, when the Bill is passed, we will consider putting in place an implementation timetable and to start to apply resources to it accordingly, perhaps in a phased way, to make sure that we get aspects of the Bill implemented as quickly as possible.

I am pleased to commend the amendments tabled in my name in group 2 to the House.

Amendment No 3 agreed to.

Amendment No 4 made:

In page 5, line 19, after “independent” insert “mental capacity” — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am reluctant to move on to the group 3 amendments as the Business Committee has arranged to meet at 1.00 pm today. I propose, therefore, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The first item of business when we return will be Question Time.

The debate stood suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 12.49 pm.

On resuming (Mr Speaker in the Chair) —

Oral Answers to Questions

Finance and Personnel

Strategic Policy and Reform Directorate

1. Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the work of the strategic policy and reform directorate. (AQO 9609/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):

The work of the strategic policy and reform directorate is very wide and varied. The directorate comprises four divisions. Some of the key work areas that have recently been progressed include the following: preparations for the transfer of corporation tax powers to the Northern Ireland Assembly from April 2018; finalisation of the OECD review; a review of the non-domestic rating system; implementation of the Peace IV and INTERREG Va programmes; and leading on public-sector reform, including delivery of innovation labs and implementation of the cross-cutting review programme.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Minister for his answer and I note the wide and varied range of activity by the strategic policy and reform directorate. As the Minister will be aware, it is proposed that the new Executive Office will have a strategic policy and innovation unit. Will the Minister inform the House where he sees the difference, and will he ensure that there will be no overlap?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. He asks a valid question. Since I came into post, while I was making myself aware of all the various elements of the reform division, I certainly became aware that its work is wide and varied. In fact, I just got some information, for example, in relation to the cross-cutting reform programme and the summary of projects involved in that. I am quite happy to share that with the Member. What needs to be done in the ongoing work of the division and the Executive is the point that he makes; that there is no duplication and that they are working together for the same objective. What is that objective? It is about ensuring that we have a streamlined system and that delivery of public services across a range of issues is done in a way that is efficient, effective and gives us the best possible value for money.

Mr Speaker: Before we move on, I inform Members that questions 7 and 15 have been withdrawn.

Financial Process in Northern Ireland

2. Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why the report on the review of the financial process in Northern Ireland, which was approved by both the Committee for Finance and Personnel and the Assembly, has not been acted upon. (AQO 9610/11-16)

Mr Storey: The report on the review of financial processes in Northern Ireland has not been discussed by the Executive, and without the Executive's agreement the proposals it contains cannot be implemented. Of course, one of the proposals in the paper related to departmental structures and, with the move to a nine-Department structure, this will have to be revisited.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Minister for his initial response, but he will know that it is now over six years since the report was forwarded to the Executive for action. Surely, by any standard, action should have been taken by now to improve a very cumbersome system that does not provide read-across and proper accountability. What steps is the Minister prepared to outline? He has indicated that, with the new number of Departments, there may be some changes. Change is necessary for proper accountability, and I think that the entire House will be anxious to see that.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. When the House debated the Committee for Finance and Personnel motion on the review of the financial process some time ago, there was widespread support for the overall aims of the review, as the Member alluded to. That included Members from all the main political parties in the House.

As for the way in which we move this issue forward, some of that has been superseded by the creation of the new nine Departments. However, as we discussed regarding the Budget process, I want to see, in my time in office — and I trust that it would be the same for my predecessor — that we have a budgetary and financial process in the Assembly that is fit for purpose and gives us an overall view of what is going on in each Department in a way that gives us, as I said to the Member who asked the first question, efficient and effective delivery of government.

When I came into post, I was made aware that this issue had been around, as the Member rightly said, for a number of years. I would like to see progress on it, but I have to re-evaluate what has been done to date and see how best we can, if necessary, salvage many of the points raised when the issue was first brought to the House.

Mr Murphy: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I share the sentiments expressed by my neighbour Mr Kennedy in his supplementary question. I think that it is widely accepted that we have an unnecessarily convoluted and complicated budgetary process. Now the Minister seems to share that sense that things can be improved, and now that we have moved to nine Departments — if that was an obstacle at all, it is out of the way — can he perhaps consider giving some time frame for when there will be a serious look at the budgetary process? Let us get a streamlined one that Members can engage in more readily than the unnecessarily convoluted one that we have at the moment.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. Obviously, that will require not only myself as Finance Minister but also Members and the parties in the Executive to take collective responsibility, so that if the paper was to be put back to the Executive it would be given the due consideration that I believe it deserves. However, I take the view that, before that happens, we need to look at it again to see how it can be refined and how we can give the assurance, or at least the commitment, that we are creating a process that is transparent, gives us accountability, and delivers for us in the way that we have intended.

I also have to say that I do not want in any way to bring forward something that Ministers in the new Executive feel is an interference; I think that that may have been one of the issues that was to the fore in the past. Ministers who come to the Executive table should come with the attitude that we need to change the processes that we have and that we need more transparency across all Departments on how those financial processes operate, as that will give great confidence not only to the House but, more importantly, to the people who elect us to serve in this Chamber.

Mr A Maginness: I note what the Minister has said. I also note the neighbourliness between Mr Murphy and Mr Kennedy, and long may it reign. In relation to the current financial process, the Minister talks about transparency. I do not see much transparency; I see a lot of opaqueness. Having been here for 18 years, I would like to see an improvement. Can the Minister guarantee that?

Mr Storey: There may be some who will say that the Member should go to Specsavers, and then he might be able to have a bit more transparency. Maybe our budgetary process is a bit like the advert where the person responsible for clipping the sheep ends up clipping the dogs. However, I do agree, and I genuinely take the point. I saw this question when it was tabled, and it does raise serious issues about the entire process that we use. It has been raised, as I said, in terms of the budgetary process.

I came into post four weeks ago, and the way that we have to work through the budgetary process, as well as having all the arrangements with regard to the financial situation, is extremely challenging. I would say, however, that much of that is governed, of course, by Treasury rules. I always want to ensure that I tread carefully when dealing with the Treasury. Of course, your colleague from west Belfast always reminded me, when I was at DSD, that I was an employee of DWP, and I am sure that I do not want now to be accused of being a member of, or associated with, the Treasury in London. The serious point is this: now is the time for us to look at how we can make improvements, but it will depend on the commitment of all those parties that will be in the Executive post the election on 5 May.

Construction Sector: Financial Assistance

3. Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the financial assistance that the Executive are giving to the construction sector to increase the supply of domestic houses and high-quality office accommodation. (AQO 9611/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development plans to deliver some 1,500 social homes in this financial year, at a cost to the public purse of £101 million. That funding is expected to lever in around £80 million of private sector funding. Support for affordable homes is also provided, primarily through the co-ownership scheme, with £95 million of financial transactions capital (FTC) being allocated in this financial year. That is expected to support up to 700 homes in each of the next four years.

As the Member will be aware, my officials are in the process of establishing an investment fund. The overall aim of the proposed fund is to promote investment, economic growth and jobs in Northern Ireland. The fund will seek to address access to finance markets where there has been failure. It is also expected that the fund's initial focus will be on urban regeneration projects, including grade A property, but energy efficiency and housing projects are also under consideration.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his answer thus far. Will the Northern Ireland investment fund support office and private housing development?

Mr Storey: In how we envisage this being rolled out, the Member will be aware that, when I was in DSD, I gave a commitment to ensuring that we would keep our focus clearly and specifically on the benefits that we would generate as a result of housing. Indeed, I was at the meeting of the all-party working group on construction today, at which I reiterated my personal view — in fact, I think that it needs to become a collective view of the Assembly — that, if we could unlock the potential that there is for housing, social and in the private sector, across Northern Ireland, we would make an invaluable contribution to our communities and to the construction sector.

The Member also asked about investment fund support for private housing. Housing is still under consideration in the context that the Executive are already providing significant support through the Department for Social Development's social and affordable housing schemes.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. What steps is the Minister taking to protect subcontractors who are involved in public-sector contracts, especially those working on projects that do not fall within the project bank account range?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. In consultation with the construction industry, through the Construction Industry Forum for Northern Ireland (CIFNI), my Department has implemented a range of measures to promote access to small- and medium-sized government opportunities. Those include breaking larger contracts into lots to bring them within the scope of smaller businesses; requiring contracts that have a value above the EU threshold to have a procurement strategy that includes engagement with the supply base; increasing the opportunities for SMEs to bid for government contracts by setting proportionate minimum standards; and accommodating applications from consortia. We are doing a number of things.

I take the Member's point. As I reiterated today at the all-party working group, we can always do more. The focus needs to remain on trying to make legislation, EU rules and the rest of the suite of legislation for the sector as simple as possible, recognising the challenges that are out there. As we know, the construction industry has undoubtedly seen a particular challenge over the last number of years because of the downturn. It is not my place, nor do I think that it is the place of government, to put any more impediments in the sector's way. Rather, we need to continue to work with it and get positive outcomes that will help to sustain and grow what is a vital industry for Northern Ireland.

2.15 pm

Mr Dallat: I acknowledge the Minister's commitment to housing in his previous post and his present post. Can he give an outline of the extent of departmental assistance for those who want to avail themselves of the help-to-buy scheme in 2015-16?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Obviously, there are a number of schemes. I almost sound as though I have resorted to type here and am now the Minister for Social Development again. However, if you look at co-ownership, you will see that we used FTC money extensively to support that sector because that was the right thing to do. It was the right financial vehicle that we were able to use. I would, however, reiterate my concern. It really follows on from the Office for National Statistics (ONS), given what has happened on the mainland in relation to reclassification. That will bring a particular challenge to bear over the next number of months, as I believe that it is the intention of ONS to come to Northern Ireland as its first port of call when looking at the devolved regions. Clearly, I, along with my colleague Lord Morrow, will want to deal sensitively with that issue, but that is a reality that we will have to face, amongst many others, when it comes to the challenging environment that housing brings in Northern Ireland.

Mr Patterson: I thank the Minister for his responses so far. As someone who comes from a construction background, it was good to hear that we will give the assistance that is needed to the construction sector. I understand that financial transaction capital has been included in the Budget for the housing sector. Can the Minister advise whether that option is more favourable than the use of conventional capital for new housebuilding?

Mr Storey: When you look at the financial resource that is available to us, you see that there will always be a challenge for the Executive and Assembly around maximising what is available and getting the best possible outcome. Clearly, FTC has come at a time when we are able to capitalise on it and use it. The investment fund and the work that we are doing with the European Bank to have that fund established will give us somewhere in the region of £100 million and will, I believe, focus specifically on the delivery of grade-A property in cities such as Belfast and other parts of Northern Ireland.

Those two financial tools are not the only ones. We should not restrict ourselves solely to two particular funds. We need to be innovative and look at what else we could do. The Member was present at the meeting earlier. He heard the concerns that were raised. We will continue to listen to the construction industry and others to see whether we have the right models in place and what else could be done to help that particular sector.

Non-domestic Rating Review

4. Mr Lyons asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the review of the non-domestic rating system. (AQO 9612/11-16)

Mr Storey: The review of the non-domestic rating system consultation exercise officially closed on 25 January. The Department did, however, allow respondents until the end of January, with the final response accepted by 5 February. The Department considers the consultation process to have gone well, with some 113 responses from organisations and individual ratepayers presenting a good outcome in the level of engagement.

DFP officials have also participated in a series of events organised by NICVA, NILGA and the Federation of Small Businesses. Officials have also held a number of individual meetings with key stakeholders throughout the consultation period. The Department is compiling a consultation report, summarising the responses. The report will be independently validated by the economic policy centre at the Ulster University. At the moment, I am reading my way through the responses. If you saw a particular file that sits on my desk with 113 tabs on it, you would know that that is my nightly homework.

Mr Speaker: Who marks his homework? [Laughter.]

Mr Lyons: We will all be glad to hear that the Minister is keeping himself busy and has lots of work to get on with. Charity shops play a very important role in our country. However, many will argue that they dominate our high streets and main streets across Northern Ireland. What steps, if any, can be taken to ensure that that imbalance is addressed?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Let me say that we have to deal with the issue sensitively. I am well aware of correspondence that I have had and of the lobbying that there has been. When you come to this issue and begin to change the rules that govern rating, in particular, there is always the tendency to in some way go after one element that seems to be the easiest. However, my approach to this will be cautious and equitable. I have listened to the concerns of other retailers who have said that there are undoubtedly disparities and differences that need to be addressed. My commitment to the House today is that this will be looked at sensitively, given the nature of what we are dealing with in relation to charity shops.

Ms Hanna: I thank the Minister for his responses. I am glad you are enjoying the consultation responses. I have been reading some of them, and one disparity that people have noticed is between the rates bill for businesses here and comparable businesses across the water in Scotland, where many do not pay rates at all, and in the Republic, where a hotel, for example, might pay about a third of the rate it would pay here. What is the Minister's assessment of that differential, and is there anything that might be done to support traders here?

Mr Storey: In making decisions on our system, we have to make them fit the circumstances in Northern Ireland. While there are many occasions when it is right to look at exemptions in other jurisdictions for certain reasons, I still think that we always need to remember that, in Northern Ireland, we are still, per head of population, in a better position with regard to the overall taxation of our people than other parts of the United Kingdom. However, that brings challenges. There are those who argue that we should maybe increase that burden. My party has taken the view that we are a low-taxation party, and we want to find a way — I underscore this — that is fair. It has to be fair.

There are many who came out of the revaluation recently who raised serious concerns about the way it was done. Part of the reason for that was the long time it took us to get to a revaluation. We have to now look at whether three years is the proper time. Is four years? Those are the things that are now all part of the mix when we look at our rating system. I will give serious thought to how it is done in other jurisdictions, but I will make the caveat that it has to be suitable to the needs of the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Minister, it is midterm break, so there is no homework this week. That is the good news.

You mentioned the Ulster University Economic Policy Centre. Neil Gibson was with the Enterprise Committee this morning, and he is very strong on the concept that derelict land should be taxed and rated on the basis that it will spur economic regeneration. He used the example of Crossgar, where I do not go often enough, where there is an empty site in the centre of town that inhibits economic development in other shops. Are you minded at this stage to give any direction to the incoming Executive about derelict sites on our main streets and in our city centres?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. He raises a valid point about how we tackle the issue. We all know of locations in our constituencies where there are problems. The difficulty that we face and that the incoming Executive will face is that, as soon as you make a proposal to deal with it, there will be those who will be very inventive in finding a way around it. We have to give a broader view of the way in which that could be done so that we do not introduce a policy that has the right intent but ends up with unintended consequences. We saw that with vacant properties, when some went to extreme lengths to avoid paying the revenue due on those properties. It is a valid point and should be given consideration, but, as I said about charity shops, we have to deal with it sensitively and wisely so that the outcome reflects the intended policy.

Rates: Amateur Sports Clubs

5. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether structures for spectators within the grounds of a community amateur sports club, that does not have a licensed premises, will be exempt from rates. (AQO 9613/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Exemption from rates under the legislation would apply only to the parts valued as sporting facilities and used by persons engaged in a prescribed recreation. That is set out in primary legislation and cannot be adjusted through the new regulations being made by my Department in the area. That principle applies to the existing level of relief and to the proposed enhancement under my preferred policy of using the new enabling power in the Rates (Amendment) Bill.

It has been noted in exchanges with the Committee that the term "sports facilities" was unlikely to include stands. There is an exemption to that general rule where areas other than sporting facilities make up less than 20% of the total NAV. In such cases, that element of the NAV will be treated as de minimis and relief will be awarded on that area. In very general terms, it would be rare for unlicensed clubs to exceed that threshold. These issues will be outlined in greater detail in the Department's forthcoming consultation.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Minister for his answer and look forward to the consultation. Does he agree that the consultation provides an opportunity to tackle the issue, especially when so many rural clubs have smaller stands that could be part of the changes?

Mr Storey: Members and, maybe, the general public are always suspicious and sceptical of consultations because they believe that we have a predetermined outcome and are only ticking a box. In the Departments that I have had responsibility for, I have always believed that a consultation should be just that: genuinely listening to views and then evaluating the response.

The consultation will seek views on my preferred policy and aim to address the gaps in the consultation on the private Member's Bill. There were gaps — the Member is well aware of the process that we had to engage in — and they included seeking views from the wider business community, such as the hospitality sector. Those strongly held views were largely omitted from the private Member's Bill consultation, so I want to ensure that this consultation is as wide and as informed as possible. That will give us the opportunity to ensure that we get the right outcome.

Mr Cree: The Minister will be aware that spectator space is currently rated, but certain sports clubs appear to enjoy rates relief despite the fact that they are licensed. Is that correct?

Mr Storey: Yes, some relief is given. The Member will be glad to know that, later this afternoon, I am meeting a variety of clubs and organisations that want to talk to us specifically about this issue. As soon as you move to look at a particular element of the rating system, you can be absolutely sure, as the Member knows from his colleagues in the pigeon fraternity, that a gathering, a collective or a flock will circle you and ask, "What does this mean for us? Why are we not included?". I want to ensure that we listen to the consultation. I will, I trust, be able to give the Member a more informed answer after my meeting with clubs and federations this afternoon and, ultimately, when we get the consultation responses.

2.30 pm

Mr Speaker: That brings us to the end of the period for listed questions. We now move on to topical questions.

A5: Legislative Progress

T1. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he is satisfied that enough legislative progress has been made on the A5 scheme to allow for its projected spend, following the very welcome news in the recent Fresh Start Agreement, which announced it as a flagship project, with £229 million allocated over the next number of years. (AQT 3501/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question, and he is right. The Minister for Regional Development announced the start of the consultations on the new draft statutory orders and a new environmental statement for the A5 western transport corridor dual carriageway scheme just a few days ago. Subject to successful completion of the statutory procedures, construction work is due to commence next year on the £150 million Newbuildings to north of Strabane section of the road. I think that that is a clear indication. The Executive and Assembly have been criticised in the past for not making decisions, and we are criticised when we make decisions. However, here is a clear example of a considerable degree of investment that is being made. We also have identified this particular route in relation to one of the flagships, and we have profiled the capital over the next number of years. Am I satisfied? As the Member will know, there were particular problems that were outside of our control, however we have now given a commencement and, I believe, the green light to this process. I think that that is evidence that, when you have a DUP Minister in charge of the roads, there is progress.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for that answer. No doubt the Minister will welcome the proposals for the land acquisition Bill. He referred to the fact that phase 1 will cost in the region of £150 million.

That leaves a surplus of £79 million. Is it envisaged that that will be used to commence some of the future phases?

Mr Storey: We have to get the current process under way. This is important, so I want to place it on the record of the House, and I am quite happy to make this available to Members: Land and Property Services has published three very helpful booklets on compensation in regard to domestic, agricultural and other classes of property. These are available online via my Department's website or in hard copies that can be obtained by contacting LPS. I am sure that the Member, like other Members in the locality, will be asked questions around the issue, particularly regarding compensation. It is an issue that is associated with projects such as this, and, as Minister with responsibility for Land and Property Services, I want to ensure that this is done in an effective and efficient way and that landowners' rights are protected under statute when property is vested and they will receive full compensation for their loss based on the principles that are set out in those documents. I encourage Members to become aware of those and to make them available to landowners in the area and to the general public who have an interest in this issue. I trust that we will continue to see progress on what is an important infrastructure project for Northern Ireland.

Industrial Derating: Benefits

T2. Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given that he will know that his party is a low-tax party, for an update on the benefits of industrial derating to Northern Ireland businesses. (AQT 3502/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question, and he is right. I have already alluded to that in an earlier answer. The Member will also be aware that my predecessor previously stated on a number of occasions that industrial derating will continue and that there are no plans to remove that support for manufacturing. That support provides a valuable boost to manufacturing; a sector that, while growing in Northern Ireland, has had its particular problems and difficulties in the past. To put it into some context, the relief is of the magnitude of some £58 million a year, helping some 4,300 businesses a year, and is already committed to in the 2016-17 Budget.

Mr I McCrea: That is certainly welcome news, and it will no doubt be more than welcome news for the business fraternity. Whilst the Minister has said that that is the case, can he give a 100% assurance — it is maybe difficult to do that — that there will be no changes to industrial derating and that, as this party is a low-tax party, as I have said, that assurance will go forward into the new Assembly term?

Mr Storey: I am glad that it is a colleague asking that question and not one of my political opponents. I can say without fear, favour or contradiction that, as far as we are concerned, there are no plans to remove that support, which I see as being key; I can confirm that. I underscore this: industrial derating is a key element in sustaining our manufacturing base in Northern Ireland. I have no doubt that, should there be any move to remove it, there would rightly be opposition from many in the manufacturing sector. I want to allay any concerns, doubts or fears: there are no plans to remove that support.

Flagship Projects: Capital Funding

T3. Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to list the flagship projects that received capital funding in the latest Budget. (AQT 3503/11-16)

Mr G Robinson: The Minister may have touched on my question in his response to the first topical question.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. The Budget, which is still going through the House, sets out a number of elements in relation to spending plans for 2016-17. The nature of some capital projects means that it is important to provide funding certainty to Departments. I think that that may have been an issue of concern in the past. The seven projects and the amounts to be allocated over five years are as follows: £229 million for the A5; £258 million for the A6; £59 million for the Belfast rapid transit project; £122 million for the Belfast transport hub; £243 million for the mother and children's hospital; £79 million for Desertcreat training college; and £91 million for regional and subregional stadia. I think that that gives a clear commitment to capital investment and shows how the Executive will spend capital money in a planned and focused way.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr Robinson for a supplementary question. Can you use the microphone please, as that would help us?

Mr G Robinson: I thank the Minister for his answer. I want to ask him about the A6, which will reduce commuting times between East Londonderry and Belfast and, indeed, eventually provide a much-needed bypass for Dungiven. When does he expect that project to go ahead?

Mr Storey: Well, they say that all politics is local. The two major elements of the road project to improve the A6 are the Randalstown to Castledawson section and the Londonderry to Dungiven section. The A6 Randalstown to Castledawson dualling scheme is a significant project and will help to remove a major bottleneck, improving safety and journey times on that strategically important route. The development of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven section, which includes a bypass at Dungiven, is well advanced. It has been through a public inquiry, and the inspector has produced a report embracing various recommendations. DRD has prepared a report addressing those recommendations, and the Minister for Regional Development is considering them in full and will then take a decision on how the scheme should proceed.

Dormant Bank Accounts: Distribution of Funds

T4. Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the creation of a fund to distribute money from dormant bank accounts. (AQT 3504/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. The issue has been raised in the House in the past. The name will change. It was originally known as the dormant bank accounts scheme, but it will become the community finance fund. I think that that is the trajectory that we are setting for ourselves.

I wish to inform the House and the Member that I have written to Executive colleagues, advising that I will now publish a Northern Ireland community finance fund. The fund will utilise moneys made available to Northern Ireland from the UK-wide reclaim fund and will be utilised and distributed as set out in the Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Act 2008. The intention to establish a fund was announced as part of the Budget in 2015-16 under the working title of the social innovation fund. Through the creation of a community finance fund, I believe that the Northern Ireland Executive can improve access to finance for a range of organisations across the third sector, including social enterprises, church groups and smaller community-based organisations to make further investment in their activities, grow their organisations and, more importantly, become self-sustaining. The investment will enable such organisations to increase their relevance, revenue and capability of resource, as well as the level of social benefit that they deliver to their communities.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his answer. In relation to the information that we have received, can we have a timetable as to when we would expect to have some of those funds rolled out?

Mr Storey: As required under the Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Act 2008, my Department will now direct the Big Lottery to develop a strategic plan for the utilisation of the funds in Northern Ireland. The strategic plan will be laid before the Assembly, and the fund will be distributed by a third party appointed by the Big Lottery. However, it should be noted that the dormant accounts funding is separate and distinct from Big Lottery funding. I expect the fund to be operational by late 2016.

I want to pick up on that point in relation to the use of the Big Lottery. There are many organisations that, in the past, have felt that, for the right reasons, they could not access lottery funding. This will only be administered through the way that it has been set up nationally, which is through the Big Lottery, but we will have a third party, and I believe that that will give confidence to many organisations that they will now have additional access to a funding stream that, in the past, they might have felt they could not access.

Mr Speaker: Question 5 has been withdrawn within the appropriate timescale.

Unemployment: North Belfast

T6. Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether there has been any improvement in the unemployment figures in the North Belfast constituency. (AQT 3506/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Unemployment figures are always a challenge for all of us in the House. We all have to realise that it is a challenge, and none of us knows the intention of organisations or companies in the employment market. Many factors are brought to bear on that issue. I recognise that North Belfast is an area where there are particular economic and social challenges, but the number of individuals claiming unemployment benefit in North Belfast peaked at over 5,700 in February 2013. However, over the last three years, there have been steady improvements in the local labour market, with the number of individuals claiming unemployment benefit there cut by almost half by the end of 2015, which is down some 42%. I welcome that positive progress. However, we need to remain focused and vigilant on that issue.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for that good news in relation to unemployment in North Belfast, but we still have a particular problem with economic inactivity. Does the Minister have any indications as to the level of economic inactivity in North Belfast? Has there been an improvement? What is the situation?

2.45 pm

Mr Storey: I do not have the specific figures with me, but I will quite happily provide them to the Member. What I will say is that we have endeavoured to address the issue in a number of ways. One way in particular has been to look at how we can encourage further and higher education to focus on skills, and I committed an additional £20 million to ensuring that the issue of skills is looked at. We need to continue to work with our education system and other government agencies in a very coordinated way to address the very challenging situation that is the overall figure for young people who are in neither full-time employment nor training. We have to address that problem. Some steps have been taken, but more progress needs to be made.

Mr Speaker: Thank you very much, Minister. That is the end of questions to the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Waiting Lists

1. Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what proportion of patients waiting longer than 13 weeks to access psychological therapies were waiting to access adult mental health services. (AQO 9624/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): As at 31 December 2015, 50% of patients who had waited longer than 13 weeks to access psychological therapies were waiting to be seen by adult mental health services. The equivalent figure on 31 December 2014 was 64%. Therefore, although the figure is clearly too high and further work is needed, I am pleased to say that we have been able to make some progress in addressing the pressures on our adult mental health services waiting lists. As part of that work, I recently allocated £1.6 million to the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB). That will provide a much-needed boost to the provision of specialist mental health/psychological services for individuals with complex mental health problems and directly enhance services to help general practitioners avail themselves of talking therapies for patients with depression.

Mrs Overend: Thank you. The available figures are very concerning, and the Minister referred to them. I could ask half a dozen questions about the figures. Almost half of all patients — some 569 patients — who were waiting longer than 13 weeks to access psychological therapies at the end of November 2015 were in the South Eastern Trust area; 92% were waiting longer than 13 weeks for mental health services in the Southern Trust area; and 56% were waiting longer than 13 weeks in the Northern Trust area. It is difficult to define those figures for Mid Ulster specifically, but they are concerning. Will the Minister advise whether he has identified specific problems in various trust areas?

Mr Hamilton: I agree and accept the point that the figures for the length of time over 13 weeks that people are having to wait for psychological therapies and adult mental health services that the Member has specifically enquired about are not acceptable and are worrying. I am happy to look at whether we can furnish the Member with more specific information about her constituency or, indeed, some subset of the Western Trust area.

Mrs Overend: The Northern Trust as well.

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Trust area as well. There is obviously a range of pressures, not just in that area of the Department and the health service's work but in a range of different areas.

It is not that I do not recognise that there is an issue or that I am saying that there is not a problem in the area. It is also not the case that we are not seeing some improvement year-on-year. As I mentioned in my answer, 64% of patients were waiting longer than 13 weeks in December last year, and that has now fallen to 50%. I am not saying that that is in any way an acceptable level, but it is a measure of some improvement and reflects some additional investment that has gone into the area, particularly through the creation of talking-therapy hubs in many parts of Northern Ireland, including in areas that cover the Member's constituency.

I mentioned some investment, particularly the £1.6 million that went into making sure that we were delivering what are referred to as directly enhanced services, which are about 12,000 sessions that are done a year, particularly counselling sessions with those who are suffering from depression. There are a lot of things going on.

The Member asked specifically about spaces and perhaps blind spots in particular trusts areas. I am happy to reflect on that and come back to her with any details that I might have.

Mr Douglas: By how much has spending on mental health services in Northern Ireland increased since the publication of the Bamford report?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. Over the last number of days, as a result of both criticism of mental health services in England and investment in mental health services in England, an interesting public debate, led in part by the Prime Minister, has been going on. This has, again, brought to the fore the need to discuss mental health and try to destigmatise it. In an earlier debate today, Mr McCarthy referred to mental health services as having been for many years the "Cinderella service" of the health service. That is a reasonable description.

I am not saying that we have, by any means, made everything perfect or right, but the Bamford review and report and the recommendations that flowed from it were a watershed moment, in many respects, for mental health in Northern Ireland. It will be a long and probably quite slow and, at times, frustrating journey to make the vision in the Bamford report into a reality. What is significant is that, since that report, we have increased expenditure on mental health services by over a quarter, from roughly £200 million annually to a quarter of a billion pounds. It is significant that there has been a switch away from spending money on looking after people in hospitals or in institutions, many of which were no longer fit for purpose, to spending it in communities. Before Bamford, in 2004-05, we were spending 46% of that money in a community setting, but that has now increased to about 57%. That is as significant as any increase in expenditure would be. We are spending the money looking after people in their community and close to their home and their family.

Mr Sheehan: Does the Minister agree that the appointment of a mental health champion, as recommended by Action Mental Health and others, to promote the rights and the interests of people with mental health problems here in the North would go a long way to improving the affairs of those with mental health problems? Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. I am aware of the suggestion that has been made by Action Mental Health and other mental health charities in recent times. To be honest, I have not met the range of charities to discuss the proposal and hollow out what they mean by a "mental health champion" and what that person might specifically do. I am happy to have that discussion and am sure that Members will encourage me in doing that. We need to be careful of appointing someone into a role that would cover everybody with mental health conditions in Northern Ireland. There is a breadth of mental health conditions for which people are already receiving support through, for example, the work of the Victims' Commissioner, the Commissioner for Older People or other public bodies and appointees. We need to make sure that this would improve the situation rather than confusing things and adding to the myriad commissioners and champions that we already have across the public sector.

Waiting Lists

2. Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many outpatients have been waiting longer than 52 weeks for their first consultant-led appointment. (AQO 9625/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Provisionally, at the end of December 2015, 32,544 patients were waiting longer than 52 weeks for a first outpatient appointment. I wish to make it clear that I find those figures totally unacceptable. It is regrettable that more people are waiting longer due to the financial constraints that led to the decision to suspend independent sector and additional in-house activity last year. It was extremely frustrating that, this year, £9.5 million from Northern Ireland's public finances was being lost to Westminster each and every month as a result of welfare reform being blocked. Such a sum could have funded many thousands of assessments and procedures. However, I welcome the allocation of an additional £40 million from the November monitoring round that will go towards tackling waiting lists. I expect this to benefit the many thousands of patients who would otherwise be waiting.

Since November, significant efforts have been made across the health and social care system, within a very tight time frame, to secure additional outpatient clinics and treatments in trusts and to put in place appropriate arrangements with independent sector organisations to transfer suitable patients for assessment and/or treatment. Of course, this is just a start, and much more additional funding will be needed to get us back to where we were. However, we are now moving in the right direction, and I hope that patients, particularly those waiting the longest, will see the benefit of this as soon as possible.

Mr Allen: I thank the Minister for his answer. The number of patients waiting beyond the maximum of 18 weeks is shocking, so those waiting longer than 52 weeks are being wholly failed. Does the Minister share my concern that the patients waiting longer than the 18 weeks are being forced into a situation where they may be put at greater risk?

Mr Hamilton: I repeat the point that I made in my original answer to the Member: I do not find the waiting lists acceptable. They are far too long, and I look to the board and particularly the trusts to deal with the very long waiting lists that they have. To be fair, this has been occurring against the backdrop of various things that have been happening, not least the pretty significant increase of 14% in the last number of years in referrals for outpatient appointments. There has been a huge increase in that at the same time as the budget of my Department has been under pressure.

I do not find the waiting lists acceptable, but neither did I find acceptable the fact that we were losing tens of millions of pounds every month because of our failure — I am sorry: the failure of some to move forward with welfare reform. The Executive lost around £200 million from their coffers over the last three years because of our inability to agree welfare reform legislation in this place. Whilst I do not think that my Department would have had dibs on all that money, if we had had our share commensurate with the rest of the Budget, which would have been close to half, we would have made a significant dent in those waiting lists.

It is interesting, when you look at the figures, to note that we had been making significant and positive progress on eating into waiting lists over the last number of years. They went decisively in the wrong direction, I have to say, around the time when the tap for the independent sector contract and the ability to fund more in-house activity was turned off by my predecessor because of the difficult financial circumstances he found the Department to be in.

I do not find the waiting lists acceptable, but they are another example, I hope, of where we are now thankfully investing some £40 million to help between 60,000 and 70,000 patients. I expect the Member and his constituents and, indeed, other Members and their constituents to start seeing the benefits of that. If they have not already started to see them, they should start to very soon.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I take issue with the Minister's analysis of the impact of welfare reform; indeed, the ultimate result of the approach of some in his party is that they would make more people sick. I want to ask specifically about waiting times: will the Minister consider the imposition of the referral-to-treatment targets that have been put in place in other countries?

Mr Hamilton: The Member may take exception to what I said, but I certainly take exception to what she said about the approach of the DUP or, indeed, that of any other party in the House in seeking to move forward on welfare reform legislation that we were not necessarily happy with either. We fought the fight at Westminster against it when others were absent and then sought to deliver the best possible deal for Northern Ireland. I do not accept the criticism that that has made people sick. I do not want to get into some sort of argument with the Member opposite about the fact that they ultimately signed up to that welfare reform legislation. We have at least now moved forward and beyond that, hopefully, and that has freed up a welcome injection of £40 million into waiting lists in Northern Ireland, which, as I said, will ensure that some have already got their treatment, some are getting their treatment and some will get their treatment in the next number of weeks. Between 60,000 to 70,000 patients across a range of specialisms will get the help and care that they need.

I am content to consider ways in which we can look at targets. Targets are important, but sometimes we focus a little too much on them and not enough on the qualitative rather than the quantitative aspects. I am content to have a conversation and to consider targets that other jurisdictions have to see what they have put in place, what impact they have had and whether they are a more accurate measure of the reality of the situation. I am not saying specifically that that is the case in this instance, but a lot of the targets that the health and social care system has to achieve are not always up to date or clinically that beneficial. I am more than happy to have a conversation and to look at other ways in which we might measure targets for waiting times.

3.00 pm

Mr Easton: How many patients are being helped by the investment of £40 million in waiting lists, and does the Minister feel that the work of the expert panel will result in more timely access to procedures and appointments?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. I think that, in my initial public pronouncements on the £40 million of expenditure, I underestimated the number of people who would receive outpatient appointments, as well as the number of inpatients, day cases and other treatments. I said that up to 40,000 people might get outpatient appointments, with about 15,000 getting treatments, but it looks like it will be a much higher number: between 60,000 and 70,000 patients across a range of specialisms. As I said, it will include outpatients, inpatients and day cases.

There will also be allied health professional activity, so people will get appointments with physiotherapists, occupational therapists and others, and there will be many diagnostic tests, scans and so forth. There is a range of specialisms and activities that some 60,000 to 70,000 people will benefit from. That will by no means solve the problem, but a sizeable chunk of it will be dealt with. Obviously, more people will join waiting lists in the intervening period, and that is why it is incredibly important that we continue to keep up that level of investment in elective care into the next Budget period.

The expert panel will not look at this issue particularly. This is a significant week for the panel and its work: we have our summit tomorrow, and I hope that that might find a way forward through an agreed set of principles. I hope that the outcome of all that work is that we agree to create not only a better but a more efficient health service in Northern Ireland. I think that the panel, in looking for efficiencies, should look at how we can better deliver the elective care that our population needs. If we had a more efficient system, it could be done much better.

Cervical Screening

3. Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the uptake of cervical screening. (AQO 9626/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I am pleased to say that, over the past 10 years, there has been an increase in cervical screening coverage rates in Northern Ireland. In 2005, the coverage rate was 71%; by 31 March 2015, the rate was 77%. The target coverage for cervical screening is 80%, and, for some age groups, that is being met. Work is ongoing to improve the uptake in all age groups by promoting and supporting informed decision-making. It is vital that people participate in cancer screening programmes when invited, because they are important public health initiatives aimed at reducing deaths from cancer in our population.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his answer and welcome the statistics. Will the Minister introduce HPV testing as a primary screening test for cervical cancer? Will he outline his position on women under the age of 25 who present at their GP with concerns and, perhaps, symptoms, and request a cervical smear test?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for her question. I know that she has long taken an interest in and been a champion of this issue. In January, the UK National Screening Committee, from which we take advice on screening matters, recommended the introduction of human papillomavirus testing as the primary screening test for cervical cancer, and the Public Health Agency in Northern Ireland has undertaken a scoping exercise on its introduction. We will assess its findings as part of the scoping exercise, and I hope that this work will come forward with conclusions very soon. I hope that we will also introduce the HPV test, which would be good news for people in Northern Ireland.

I think that the position of women under the age of 25 has changed recently, although the Member will be more familiar with this than me. It used to be that those aged 20 or over would get a smear test, but that rose to 25. Scotland reduced the age to 20, but I understand that it is also going back up to 25. It may be worth saying that, if GPs are worried about exceptional cases — there will always be exceptional cases of people who present with abnormalities — they can and should, if they deem it clinically appropriate, contact their local screening laboratory to arrange a screening test. In essence, what I am saying is that no one under the age of 25 who has concerns about abnormalities should fear going to their GP and presenting their symptoms. They can get cervical smear tests performed, even though they are under 25, because the doctor has clinically decided that that is appropriate given their set of circumstances. It is just the case that we will not be doing that, universally, for everybody under 25. However, in cases where people present themselves and their GP thinks it appropriate, they can get smear tests.

Mr Speaker: Brilliant timing, Minister, just on the two minutes.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The Minister referred to raising public awareness, which is very important in cases like this, as in all cases. Will the Minister give us some more detail about what the public awareness campaign might look like?

Mr Hamilton: When I saw the question come forward from Mrs Cameron, I was interested in that as well. How well are we advertising the need for people to go for their tests when called for? It is good to see that there has been an increase, but we are still not quite at the 80% target. There are some age groups that are well in excess of that target; in particular, younger people of around the ages 25, 30 and 35 are now exceeding the 80% target.

A range of advertising and promotional work goes on, which is monitored on a regular basis by the Public Health Agency (PHA). It involves the usual things that you would expect: information leaflets, videos and a dedicated website. Focus-group work has been carried out with those who attend and also with those who do not, particularly, to find out why they do not attend and what we can do to further tailor the service and make sure that any fears or concerns that they might have are alleviated. One interesting piece of work that the Member might be interested in is that the PHA has been working with the Women's Resource and Development Agency to particularly target those groups that have lower rates of attendance for tests, in order to see what the particular issues are and what can be done, through that network, to get more people to come forward.

At the end of the day, this is an exceptionally important public health message. We are not doing these tests just for the sake of it; this is about saving people's lives, and we will make every effort that we possibly and reasonably can to increase the uptake of the tests because they are so critical.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for his answer, and I am sure that, like me, he laments the loss of the late Una Crudden who was a great advocate of cervical screening. In relation to the vaccination programme in schools, what has the uptake been like among young women?

Mr Hamilton: I do not think that I have information about what is happening in schools. It may be something that the Minister of Education has better information on. I am certainly happy to go away, get that information and give it to the Member in due course.

As with a lot of public health messages, the earlier, the sooner and the younger people get the message — in an appropriate manner, because we do not want to scare people unnecessarily, particularly young people — that looking after your health in every aspect is incredibly important, the better. I am very keen to work with schools, and the Public Health Agency does that in a range of ways, as do the board and the trusts as well. I am happy to come back to the Member with any information that I might have, or, if it is in the domain of the Minister of Education, I will ensure that he passes it to the Member.

Zika Virus

4. Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what advice he is providing in relation to the Zika virus. (AQO 9627/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Public Health Agency is leading the response to the Zika virus in Northern Ireland. It issued advice to health professionals in December 2015 and again in February of this year. The PHA also issued a press release in early February giving advice to pregnant women, as well as providing up-to-date information on its website.

It is important to note that the Zika virus is an infection transmitted by mosquitoes that are not native to Northern Ireland and, therefore, the public health risk posed by the Zika virus in Northern Ireland is extremely low. It is no greater than the risks posed by other mosquito-borne infections such as malaria, for example. Almost all cases of the virus are acquired through mosquito bites and not through human-to-human contact, although a very small number of cases have occurred through sexual transmission. At the moment, the key actions for Northern Ireland are to ensure that travellers to and from infected areas, especially pregnant women, receive appropriate advice and that clinicians are aware of the symptoms and, where appropriate, the actions to be taken for returning travellers.

Mr Ross: Obviously, it is something that has caused a great deal of concern across the world, and we have seen the images of the horrific outcomes of the virus. What specific advice is the Department offering those who find themselves travelling to South America on the steps they can take to make sure that they are protected?

Mr Hamilton: The Public Health Agency is understandably and rightly advising people, in particular pregnant women and those planning pregnancy, to consider avoiding travel to any country or area where Zika virus outbreaks are reported. Outbreaks have been reported in a number of countries in south and central America, and all travellers to affected countries should ensure that they seek travel health advice from their GP or, indeed, a travel clinic well in advance of their trip.

A possible link between exposure to the Zika virus during pregnancy and microcephaly and other congenital malformations has been identified and is being investigated. Women returning from the affected countries should avoid getting pregnant for 28 days. Anyone who has been in an affected country needs to be particularly mindful of the signs and symptoms of the infection and, if necessary, contact their GP, who will offer the appropriate advice. Updated advice on the Zika virus can also be accessed through the Northern Ireland Direct and PHA websites, and I encourage anybody who is travelling to those areas to consider that advice very carefully.

Mr McKinney: Of course, there were two cases in the Republic. What conversations is his Department having with colleagues in the Department of Health in the South to ensure full protection on the island?

Mr Hamilton: It is standard practice in such situations — it does not matter what the virus, condition or illness might be — for officials in my Department to be in touch, as they have been in this case, with their counterparts in the Department of Health in Ireland to ensure that any queries regarding the issue are discussed as required. It is important to stress that it is not a Northern Ireland response or an Ireland-wide response that is required: this is international. The response of the UK, as a whole, is being led by Public Health England (PHE). The Public Health Agency's health protection service is working very closely with colleagues in Public Health England and contributes to the twice-weekly teleconferences organised by Public Health England. The Public Health Agency, as I said, has also been in touch with the Health Service Executive in the Republic of Ireland to ensure that appropriate guidance and information is disseminated on both sides of the border.

Care Homes Review

5. Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the terms of reference of his Department's review of the statutory care homes process. (AQO 9628/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Following the decision made by Four Seasons Health Care to close some nursing homes, I asked the Health and Social Care Board to halt and review the current process examining the future role and function of statutory residential care homes as a precautionary measure. I want to develop a broader understanding of the issues facing the residential and nursing home sector and their implications before making any final decision on the future of statutory homes. It is also right to pause, reflect and give careful consideration to issues arising in the independent sector.

The terms of reference for the review are as follows: to re-examine the proposals for closures in the light of the emerging challenges facing the adult care sector in particular; to consider issues around capacity, accessibility, quality and sustainability, which will include reconsideration of the local needs assessment exercises that informed the original proposals for change; to consider whether sufficient independent sector capacity can be identified to ensure a secure supply of appropriate places on a regional basis to meet demand; to consider the timing of any proposed closures, with particular reference to the current perceived instability in the market; and, finally, to consider whether there is a requirement to review the current position on admissions as a means of addressing current challenges in the care sector.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for his helpful update. Can he go into any more detail on his review of the sustainability of the independent residential and nursing home sector, including issues such as trust aid, staff costs and nurse shortage? Can he also advise the House when he will report on the review and how many of the 254 older people affected by the closures have been appropriately resettled to date?

Mr Hamilton: There were quite a few questions asked in that one. The Member beside him might welcome the fact that I am on to question 5, although I am now being held back by the seven or eight questions asked by Mr Lyttle.

The last issue — how it directly affects individuals — is probably the most important one. Our trusts have done quite good work in coordinating with residents and their families to ensure that their transition to new accommodation is smooth. Everyone has now moved from one of the homes in the Member's constituency — I think it is the Victoria Park Care Home — to appropriate accommodation. I am sure that nobody wanted to move away so I am unwilling to say that they were content to move, but everybody has found appropriate accommodation. Work is ongoing in many of the other homes as well.

It is critical that, as well as looking at statutory residential care homes and doing the work that I outlined in my initial response, we take some time to look at the independent sector and what is happening there. That is why I commissioned work to look at the market stability of the sector and any threats to it. That will examine a range of issues including nursing and the overall viability of many of those businesses. I have responded to those pressures in recent times by announcing a further investment of £1.6 million in the care sector in this financial year. That goes in two ways: a 2% increase in the rates paid to domiciliary care companies and £11 a week more for every resident who has been placed in a home by a trust. I know that that will not solve all the problems, but, hopefully, it will bring further stability to the market, deal with some issues, particularly staff retention, and move us to a more stable position in the future.

Mr Speaker: We now move on to topical questions.

Waiting Lists: Private Sector Usage

T1. Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the impact that his usage of the private sector will have on reducing waiting lists for people who are in pain and awaiting a hospital procedure. (AQT 3511/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. Some in the House and in this country turn their nose up at the use of the independent sector to help to deal with issues such as our unacceptably long waiting lists. I know that the Member is not one of those, and neither am I. As I said in response to an earlier question, we have been using the £40 million that we got through the November monitoring round to treat 60,000 to 70,000 more patients in a range of ways. Obviously, we want to maximise the output from inside the health and social care sector. There will be 9,000 more outpatient appointments, around 1,000 more inpatient day cases, 15,000 more allied health professional physiotherapy and occupational health appointments and 13,000 more diagnostic tests.

We have, however, been relying quite significantly on the independent sector. It has been awarded 27,000 contracts for outpatient appointments and 8,000 inpatient appointments. Patients have now been referred for all of those, so all those appointments are being taken up. Many people have been seen already, some are being seen and some will be seen in the weeks ahead. Whatever people might think about using the independent sector, the fact is this: without that additional capacity, over 30,000 people who required outpatient appointments or inpatient procedures would not have been able to get them. I do not think, in the circumstances in which we find ourselves, that it would have been acceptable to do anything other than use the independent sector to deliver those much-needed appointments for over 30,000 people in Northern Ireland.

Mr McNarry: I suspect that most if not all people in pain do not give a toss or care who does the procedure at the end of the day. Will the Minister tell the House what the cost differences between the private sector and the public sector work out as? Will he say why, he believes, the spare capacity in the private sector is sitting there and not being matched by the NHS? Minister, why do we have the worst record for stillbirths, as reported on the news today? Is that anything to do with a lack of resources?

Mr Hamilton: I will deal with the first points first and then come on to the other issue. Sometimes, there is a misconception: people who are opposed to using the independent sector will use words like “profiteering” as if it is a bad thing to make a profit in this society. However, in these circumstances, the independent sector is not paid any more for an operation than what it would cost to provide the same operation in the health and social care system. That important point is very often missed or ignored by some who criticise the use of the independent sector. Clearly, the independent sector has a much more efficient model.

There are particular pressures on the health and social care system that make it difficult to get to that level of efficiency, but, as I said in response to Mr Easton, I hope that some of the changes and reforms that we envisage through the work of the panel will allow us to produce an even more efficient system that allows us to get up towards the level of efficiency that the independent sector provides.

The issue of stillbirths has been in the media for the last number of days. It has not been treated in all areas of the media with the sensitivity that it should be. Every stillbirth, whatever the circumstances, is a tragedy for the family and parents involved. Some sort of contrived league table has been produced by some in the media. There is no joy to be had, whether you are at the top or the bottom of that league table, because of the individual tragedies that each of them adds up to. Some in the media did not reflect on Northern Ireland’s particular circumstances. I do not want to invite upon the House another debate like the one that we had last Wednesday night, but it has been recognised by many midwives, in some of the comments that they made in the press, that we are not comparing like with like when we look at Northern Ireland stillbirth figures because of issues around termination and abortion in Northern Ireland.

Antrim Area Hospital: Emergency Department

T2. Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can offer any help and support to the emergency department (ED) at Antrim Area Hospital, which Mr Cochrane-Watson was privileged to tour last Friday, when he was humbled to meet and talk to its staff, albeit that, on Friday, the department was forecasting the admission of 270 people over the subsequent 24-hour period, making it the busiest ED in Northern Ireland — it is consistently the first, second or third busiest ED — even though it was commissioned originally to comfortably cope with about 240 admissions and is, unfortunately, dealing with admission numbers that overwhelm its staff. (AQT 3512/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I echo what the Member said about the dedication of the staff in Antrim Area Hospital. I visited Antrim Area Hospital’s ED during the week of very high pressures on the service at the start of the year. I noticed that, although it was incredibly busy, the staff were deeply committed to what they were doing, really dedicated to their work and absolutely in control of a very difficult situation. I commend them for the work that they put in not just over the Christmas or early new year period, when it is always very busy, but the whole year.

There have been issues in the past at Antrim Area Hospital, but I recognise the efforts that have been put in by the trust under new leadership. I have every faith in that leadership and in the work that it is doing. It is slowly but surely starting to turn the situation around. It is far from perfect, and they are under pressure. That reflects a pressure right across the service. In the last five years, there has been an increase of nearly 14% in unplanned admissions across Northern Ireland. Places like Antrim Area Hospital have perhaps borne the brunt of that. In recognition of that, I have invested an additional £8 million in winter pressures this year. A share of that — over £1 million — will have gone to the Northern Trust to deal with the pressures that it faces. I hope that, in spite of the pressures that it is facing, it continues with the improvements that it has made in recent times.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: Minister, I agree with you about the commitment of the staff, leadership and senior management team of the trust. One of the concerns raised by senior staff and doctors at the ED was about what they termed the back end of the service, where people were being bed-blocked and care packages were not being put in place. They were looking at the availability of beds. As they highlighted, people were waiting on trolleys, but they were being treated; drugs were being administered and there were MRI scans and X-rays. However, there was still the wait time, which was all down to the back end, as they termed it, of the service.

Mr Hamilton: I always listen to the experiences of people on the front line. That is certainly the message that I received in Antrim when I was there in January and from talking to two other emergency departments about the pressures that they are facing. I was in the emergency department in the South West Acute Hospital on Friday and received a similar message. Looking back over our performance in the past number of years, particularly around this time of the year when there is a spike in activity, I can say that our emergency departments have been able to cope with the range of pressures that they have been facing. However, different, broad problems appeared in each year that we sought to address in the subsequent year through funding and various innovations. This year, the pressure that was quite acute was that of the “back end”, as the Member described it.

People are getting treated quite quickly in many instances. I sat and reviewed the website that updates the times that it takes for people to get treated over the Christmas period, and it was interesting to see that, in many cases, the times taken for people to be seen were quite short. Therefore, looking at it superficially, you would say that there should not have been a problem in the emergency department. The problem was coming from the fact that people could not leave and get the care package that they required or get a bed in the hospital. We have identified that as a problem, and it is something that we are going to have to address next year.

That fits in with the question that Mr Lyttle asked about the independent care sector and the pressures that it is facing. That is why I am keen to support, bolster and ensure the stability of that sector so that we can use it to alleviate some of the pressures that our emergency departments and our hospitals in general are facing.

H1N1 Cases

T3. Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm the number of cases referred to his Department of persons infected with the H1N1 virus and to state whether he is satisfied that the trusts and other health authorities are putting into the public domain all possible information in relation to the risk of H1N1 and the number of confirmed cases. (AQT 3513/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. It is a bit like the question that Mr Ross asked, in that there is concern among our community when we hear some of the stories and about some of the deaths possibly connected to a virus. In this case, the virus is what is colloquially referred to as swine flu.

During the 2015-16 flu season, there have been 303 lab-confirmed cases of seasonal flu in Northern Ireland, with 239 of them being the H1N1 strain. The main defence in place for seasonal flu, including the H1N1 strain, is the annual vaccination programme. We procured 675,000 doses of the vaccine in Northern Ireland this year. Protection against H1N1 is contained within that seasonal flu vaccination. There have, of course, been some issues and problems, and, without being able to speak authoritatively about every case, many of those will involve people who have underlying health conditions that mean that the vaccination has not been able to work in the full way that we had hoped that it would.

Mr Attwood: Following up on the last point that the Minister made, can he confirm the number of cases in which H1N1 has been the cause of death or a contributory factor? To go back to my substantive question, are you satisfied that, regarding the scale of the threat, all that can be done is being done to bring information to the attention of the public and to make interventions to protect the public?

Mr Hamilton: I do not have the information related to the first question. I suspect that that may be because analysis is still going on to make sure that, if we say that something is the case, it absolutely is the case. That way, we will not scare people in Northern Ireland unnecessarily.

We have to be very sensitive of the need to provide timely and accurate information. Everybody in the system is open and honest about the fact that there are issues with H1N1 — swine flu — but the vaccination programme that we have in place is the best defence against that. That is why we procure so many doses of the vaccine each year and why vaccination is promoted so heavily. We encourage so many people to have the vaccination to act as a defence against influenza, of whatever type it might be.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr Mike Nesbitt. I am sorry that there will not be time for a supplementary question.

Mr Nesbitt: Not your fault, Mr Speaker.

Mental Health: Funding

T4. Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can assure sufferers of mental ill health in Northern Ireland that they will not be the poor cousins within the United Kingdom in light of the Prime Minister's promise of £1 billion in England to end discrimination between physical and mental illness. (AQT 3514/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I very much welcome the Prime Minister's announcement, not just because of the monetary aspect, which I will come back to, but because of the fact that someone as senior as the Prime Minister said what he said. I think that it is incredibly important that all of us in public life, particularly those in positions like the Prime Minister, talk about the importance of mental health — not versus physical health but alongside it — and the impact that poor mental health can have on one's physical health.

3.30 pm

The additional resources are very welcome. The Member will know that, in my position and in this Department, we welcome resources, wherever they come from. We are still analysing exactly what the Prime Minister means by an additional £1 billion and whether that is an additional sum or whether it is included in the £8 billion increase. I have seen one recent report that states that it is part of the overall £8 billion increase by the end of the decade.

I am not saying that we are absolutely where we need to be in our levels of expenditure in Northern Ireland. The Member is well versed in the acuity of the problem in Northern Ireland and some of the particular circumstances causing that, especially those related to our past. However, I was pleased to see and note that a BBC report over the weekend, which helped to spark some of this debate, showed that, of all regions of the United Kingdom, the only one to have increased expenditure on mental health in the past two years was Northern Ireland. We increased it by 1% last year and by around 2.5% this year. While that does not resolve all the problems and is not a full answer, it does show the commitment of me, this Department and the Executive to invest further in mental health because of the particular problems that we face in Northern Ireland, never mind the general problems that people in Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK are facing in respect of poor mental health.

Mr Speaker: Time is up. Before we return to the Consideration Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill, Members will wish to take their ease while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Executive Committee Business

Mental Capacity Bill: Consideration Stage

Debate resumed.

Clause 7 (Best interests)

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): We now come to the third group of amendments for debate. These amendments deal with enduring powers of attorney, lasting powers of attorney and the oversight bodies, including the Public Guardian, the review tribunal and the Attorney General. A valid petition of concern has been tabled in relation to amendment No 116, so cross-community support is required for that amendment. I call the Minister to move amendment No 5 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to move amendment No 5: In page 5, line 23, after second "attorney" insert

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

Amendment Nos 51, 56, 77, 116-119, 123, 125, 128, 133, 139, 287, 289, 293, 313, 324, 330, 340-342, 361-363, 486.

The third group of amendments relates to enduring powers of attorney, lasting powers of attorney and the oversight bodies. Amendment No 5 inserts a reference to "an enduring power of attorney" into the list of relevant people to be consulted as part of the best-interests determination. This amendment to clause 7 has been put forward with the agreement of the Committee, as noted in its report. Similar amendments adding reference to "an enduring power of attorney" to clauses, which, as introduced, provided the lasting power of attorney with a particular role but not the enduring power of attorney, are also proposed where appropriate throughout the Bill, as recommended by the Committee. The relevant amendments are amendment Nos 77, 123, 125, 139, 313, 324, 330 and 340.

At this point, I propose to move on to amendments relating to Part 5 of the Bill on lasting powers of attorney. I will return to the Committee's opposition to clause 110 and schedule 5, as well as amendment No 119, at the end of my remarks on this group.

Amendment No 116 has been tabled by Ms McCorley, Mr McCartney and Mr Lynch. Its effect would be to lower the age at which a person can execute a lasting power of attorney from 18 to 16. A lasting power of attorney is a legal document that gives an attorney the power to make decisions about the donor's care, treatment or finances when the donor has lost the capacity to do so. I will not leave any room for doubt about my stance on this amendment. I strongly caution the Chamber against supporting it today for two reasons. First, it is a rather crude attempt to extend to children a system predicated on the law on capacity and consent that applies to adults, with no consideration whatsoever of the implications of what the law says about children and decision-making. Those implications extend well beyond the scope of this Bill to other significant pieces of legislation, such as the Age of Majority Act (Northern Ireland) 1969. The second reason why I urge Members not to support the amendment is that work is under way within the Department of Finance and Personnel to examine those implications. The more prudent course of action would be to let that work conclude before the Chamber takes a vote on a matter of such importance.

I will now turn to amendment No 117, which has also been tabled by Ms McCorley and others. Clause 98 allows an attorney acting under a lasting power of attorney to make gifts to the donor's relatives or associates on customary occasions, such as birthdays, as long as the value of the gift is not unreasonable. The clause allows the attorney to be included in the list of persons who can receive gifts, so effectively the attorney could buy a gift for themselves. The effect of amendment No 117 would be to prohibit an attorney from being able to gift themselves. I am sure that the Members will clarify their intentions when speaking to this amendment. However, my assumption is that it has most likely been motivated by a concern that an attorney may abuse their power in some way. I understand that possible argument, but the problem with it is twofold. First, the amendment would not have the desired effect. If the attorney is a relative or associate of the donor, the clause as amended would still allow the attorney to receive gifts. Secondly, donors making lasting powers of attorney are likely to appoint family members as their attorney. Therefore, to exclude that family member from receiving gifts on behalf of the donor just because they are acting as an attorney could have the perverse effect of deterring a donor from making that close family member an attorney. Furthermore, any concern regarding the potential to abuse that power is already addressed by the fact that the clause states that the gift must not be:

For all those reasons, I do not support this amendment to clause 98.

Amendment No 118 has also been tabled by Ms McCorley, Mr McCartney and Mr Lynch. It relates to clause 99, which sets out certain requirements for attorneys. For example, anyone who is bankrupt may not be appointed as a property and affairs attorney. The effect of the amendment would be to insert a new requirement that any person convicted of fraud be subject to a risk assessment for suitability for the post of attorney.

Again, there are difficulties with this amendment. For example, it raises a number of unanswered questions. Who or what body would undertake the assessment? What criteria would be applied to determine suitability? What would be the consequences of such a risk assessment? There is also the fundamental point that the Bill is about respecting people's decisions, even if unwise, provided they have the capacity to make them. To put it bluntly, if the donor has capacity and wishes to appoint an attorney who has been convicted of fraud, that is his or her prerogative, however unwise that decision might seem. In any event, there are already safeguards built into the lasting power of attorney system specifically to deal with situations in which there may be concerns about an attorney. For example, persons other than the donor can object to the registering of a lasting power of attorney on prescribed grounds. I believe that those safeguards are sufficient and proportionate. For those reasons, it is my view that amendment No 118 is insufficiently precise and unnecessary.

I will now turn to the amendments relating to the oversight bodies. Amendment Nos 51 and 56, which create new clauses 48A and 51A, relate to the review tribunal. New clause 48A will introduce a referral mechanism to the tribunal for young people once they reach the age of 16. It will ensure that a young person's case will be referred to the tribunal if the detention was renewed under article 13 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 and a year has elapsed since the case was last considered by the tribunal. New clause 51A will provide an additional power for the review tribunal, when considering a person's case, to recommend the taking of specific actions and to allow it to further consider the case in the event that the recommendations are not complied with. Those new clauses will ensure that the tribunal adequately reviews the cases of all individuals subject to the Bill.

Amendment No 128 inserts new clause 121A, the effect of which is to ensure that, when an application is made to the court under Part 6, the Attorney General is notified of the application and can intervene in proceedings where he considers it appropriate to do so. That is a protective measure for those who lack capacity to make decisions that may result in Part 6 being utilised in their case.

Amendment No 133 amends clause 125(5)(a) and addresses the Committee's concerns that the Public Guardian can access healthcare records held by not only the health and social care trusts but agents and employees of the trusts. As a result of this amendment, the Public Guardian will be able to access records held by, for example, providers of domiciliary care and supported living arrangements.

Amendment No 287 amends clause 228 to clarify that a person can be detained under Part 2 or, if aged under 16, the Mental Health Order, even if he or she is discharged under Part 10.

Amendment No 289 inserts new clause 230A, which contains additional powers for the review tribunal when considering the issue of detention under a public protection order. It allows the tribunal, where it has decided not to release a person, to recommend taking specified actions with a view to a future release, and further considering a person's case if those actions are not complied with.

Amendment No 293 inserts new clause 234A. This provision contains additional powers for the review tribunal when it is considering continued detention under a hospital direction or hospital transfer direction. The clause allows the tribunal, where it has decided not to release a person, to recommend taking specified actions with a view to a future release, and further considering a person's case if those actions are not complied with.

Amendment No 341 creates new clause 277A, which places a duty on my Department and the health and social care trusts to furnish such returns, reports and other information about an individual who is the subject of proceedings under the Bill as the High Court, the review tribunal and the Public Guardian may require for the exercise of functions under the Bill. Associated amendment No 486 is a repeal consequential to amendment No 341.

Amendment No 342 creates new clause 277B, which places a duty on my Department and the health and social care trusts to provide facilities, such as a room, for example, as the High Court, the review tribunal and the Public Guardian may require for the exercise of functions under the Bill.

Amendment Nos 342 and 343 ensure that the bodies providing judicial oversight of interventions under the Bill have adequate access to all of the necessary resources and information required to perform their role.

Amendment Nos 361, 362 and 363 relate to clause 283, "Panels". In response to a concern raised by the Committee, amendment No 361 provides that all panel members must be in attendance during proceedings of the panel. Amendment Nos 362 and 363 are technical amendments that subsume two subsections into one to improve the drafting of the clause.

Finally, I propose to address amendment No 119 to clause 110. It was tabled by Ms McCorley, Mr McCartney and Mr Lynch and is somewhat at odds with the Committee's opposition to clause 110 and related schedule 5, which I will also address. I will start by providing Members with background to the issue at hand. As Members are aware, the Bill creates a new scheme of lasting power of attorney to replace the existing outdated enduring power of attorney scheme. Under the new lasting power of attorney system, an attorney can be appointed to deal with not just property and affairs decisions but decisions relating to the donor's care, treatment and personal welfare. Importantly, the lasting power of attorney system builds on the safeguards in the enduring power of attorney scheme, offering more protection for donors and attorneys. On that basis, the effect of clause 110, as introduced, would be to repeal the Enduring Powers of Attorney (Northern Ireland) Order 1987, with the effect that no further enduring powers of attorney could be made once clause 110 was commenced. Enduring powers of attorney already made under the current law, however, would be preserved through the savings provisions in schedule 5.

The Committee has made it clear that it is not content with the approach outlined. During its deliberations, the question was raised of why the enduring power of attorney system could not run alongside the new lasting power of attorney system. My officials, with input from the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service, argued that running two systems would be confusing, costly and operationally difficult, and that, ultimately, the new lasting power of attorney system provides better safeguards than the enduring power of attorney system. The Committee did not accept those arguments and proposes to oppose clause 110 and schedule 5. That will have the effect of allowing enduring powers of attorney to continue to be made alongside the new lasting powers of attorney.

My own view is that, should the Chamber agree with the Committee stance, the more prudent course of action would be to retain the relevant provisions but make their commencement subject to the approval of the Assembly rather than removing them entirely from the Bill. Doing that would place a constraint on the Department's ability to remove the enduring power of attorney system, so enduring powers of attorney could continue to be made for the foreseeable future as the Committee desires, but would avoid the need for new primary legislation and associated resources if difficulties were to arise in the future or a decision were to be taken to remove the enduring power of attorney system following a review in, say, three years' time, which was also suggested by the Committee in its report.

To be clear: that compromise option would require Members to support clause 110 and schedule 5 as they stand, on the basis that I commit to bringing forward an amendment at Further Consideration Stage to make their commencement subject to the approval of the Assembly. That will allow the two systems to run alongside each other until such time as the Assembly decides otherwise.

Finally, I will briefly address the related amendment No 119, tabled by Ms McCorley and others. The key point to make is that the compromise option would make the proposed amendment redundant, as would the Committee's opposition to clause 110. In essence, they all seek to achieve the same objective. However, as I have said, my strong preference, if the Chamber agrees with the Committee that the enduring power of attorney system should be retained, would be to proceed along the lines of the compromise that I have outlined.

That concludes my remarks on the third group of amendments regarding enduring powers of attorney, lasting powers of attorney and oversight bodies. I look forward to the debate that will ensue.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee on the Mental Capacity Bill): Again, as with the previous groups, all the amendments that have been tabled by the Minister are accepted and supported by the Committee. Therefore, I will not go over the detail of every amendment that has been tabled, but rather focus again on particular areas of concern or significance to the Committee deliberations.

Amendment No 5 is tabled by the Minister. Again, it came about as a result of an issue that was raised by the Committee. Clause 7 deals with the process for determining the best interests of a person who falls under the Bill's remit. The Law Society pointed out that an attorney acting under an enduring power of attorney, known as an EPA, was not included in the list of relevant people in clause 7 who would be consulted on what was in someone's best interests. That appeared to be an omission. The Department advised the Committee that it could foresee situations where it would be useful to consult the EPA and agreed therefore to make the amendment.

The Department, on reviewing the Bill, made note of other clauses where there should have been reference to an enduring power of attorney and rectified the situation; for example, through amendment Nos 77, 123, 125, 139, 313, 324, 330, and 340. The Committee welcomes those amendments and the fact that they recognise the important role that an attorney acting under an EPA has in making decisions on behalf of a person who comes under the Bill's remit.

Amendment Nos 361, 362 and 363, which have been tabled by the Minister, were in response to an issue that was raised, again, by the Committee. Clause 283 deals with the panels that will consider applications to authorise detentions and extensions of public protection orders made without restrictions. Given the seriousness of the decisions that these panels will take in terms of the impact on an individual's liberty, the Committee was concerned that clause 283 does not specify quorum requirements, but simply states that the panel has three members. The Committee also queried the fact that the clause states that provision for cases where the panel cannot reach a unanimous decision will be provided for in regulations.

Firstly, we wrote to the Department and advised that we favoured a quorum of three being specified in the Bill. The Department responded positively to that suggestion and proposed the amendment that is before us today that clarifies that all three panel members must be in attendance during proceedings of the panel, which includes when a decision is to be made.

We also asked the Department for its views on the suggestion that, in cases where the panel cannot reach a unanimous decision, the decision be taken on a majority vote. The Department identified a number of drawbacks. For example, it could be the case that the panel member in the minority may indeed be the person with the most relevant experience and expertise in that particular subject area. It is fair to say that the Committee was not entirely convinced by that logic, given that the assumption would be that anyone who sat on the panel should surely be there because they had the necessary knowledge and expertise in the first instance. However, we ultimately accepted that there are a number of unknowns still at play and that it would therefore be more sensible to allow the matter to be consulted on further in the process of the Department's putting together the necessary regulations in the future. Therefore, the Committee was content that the Department restricted its amendments to clause 283 to the issue of quorum.

I will now turn to the key issue for the Committee within this group of amendments. The Committee has given notice that we are opposed to clause 110 and the related schedule 5 standing part of the Bill.

As the Minister has outlined, Part 5 of the Bill creates a new system for lasting powers of attorney. I will say up front that the Committee supported the introduction of LPAs and we can see the rationale behind them in that they give people an opportunity to put powers of attorney in place in relation to future decisions that have to be made about their health, welfare and finance. However, we diverged from the Department on the future role of EPAs under the Bill.

To set the context; at present, only EPAs are available to people in Northern Ireland, and they can be made by a person in relation to decisions about their property and affairs. Under the Bill as drafted, through clause 110, no further EPAs could be made once the legislation comes into operation. A range of stakeholders, including the Law Society, are fundamentally opposed to that suggestion. In their view, there are serious drawbacks in having a system that only permits the making of lasting powers of attorney (LPA), which is what the Bill proposes to do.

Experience from England and Wales has shown that the forms required for making an LPA are lengthy and complex and that, when legal services are employed, it typically costs the client around £500 plus VAT in addition to a £110 registration fee that is payable immediately. The Law Society believes that those high costs have discouraged people from making lasting powers of attorney.

In contrast, the cost of making an enduring power of attorney is relatively modest at around £100 for legal services and a registration fee of £115 that is payable only when there is a need to bring the power of attorney into effect. The Law Society believes that the modest costs and relatively straightforward nature of making an EPA — for example, at the same time as somebody is making a will — means that there are fewer barriers to people making an EPA.

The Law Society put it to the Committee that the current EPA system could run alongside the new LPA system that is created by the Bill. It suggested that this would provide people with more flexibility and accessibility in planning for their future needs. Its key concern was that, if the only option available to people was to make a lasting power of attorney, with all the associated complexity and expense, many of them would simply do nothing. When that happens and someone loses capacity to make certain decisions, it can create serious bureaucratic obstacles for the person's family or carers, particularly in being able to manage their finances for them. However, if an EPA is in place, the management of a person's property and financial affairs is a lot more straightforward and you avoid getting into situations where, for example, someone's household bills cannot be paid.

The Committee put it to the Department that it seemed logical and sensible to maintain the EPA system alongside the new LPA system. As Members have heard from the Minister, the Department was not in favour of that proposal. We listened to its arguments carefully, but I must say that we were not convinced by the logic of some of them. For example, the Department stated that, in practical terms, managing two systems would be unworkable. However, under the Bill, existing EPAs will not become invalid; it is simply that no more can be made. Therefore, as soon as the Bill becomes operational, the Department will be managing two separate systems automatically, irrespective of the Committee's opposition to clause 110. The Department has not given us the facts and figures, but one can only assume that there are thousands of EPAs already in existence in Northern Ireland. Some will have been made by people who are now in their 70s or 80s, but others will have been made by those who are in their 40s, 50s and 60s and who will be able to legally rely on those EPAs for the next number of decades, up to maybe 40 or 50 years. Therefore, it simply does not add up as an argument to state that no further EPAs should be made because it is too difficult to run two systems.

The Committee bought into the argument that we should give people choice and that, for those who could not afford, or are not willing to pay, the amount for an LPA, we should at least offer them some protection in the form of an EPA. I listened to the Minister's attempt at a compromise. My view and, I think, that of the Committee is that we should assess how things operate over the next number of years and, if it is proven to be creating a significant difficulty, we could return to it at that point. I am not sure that we would be satisfied with passing the Bill and putting some sort of commencement order around getting rid of the EPA system. I will have no difficulty if new primary legislation is required in five years to deal with the issue. It comes back to the point on the Henry VIII clause and ensuring that we have maximum scrutiny for the Assembly. Therefore, if, in five years' time, the Departments were able to prove that there is a significant issue with running LPAs and EPAs in tandem, legislation could perhaps be brought forward at that point by the Department, given that we will at least have an evidence base to work on. The Committee position is that we will maintain our opposition to clause 110, and we believe that we should be able to offer people the option of either an LPA or an EPA.

Concerns were raised about the potential complexity of the forms required to make an LPA, and the Minister of Justice provided a written assurance that they would be kept as straightforward as possible. Whilst the Committee appreciates that assurance, it did not alter our position on maintaining EPAs. Fundamentally, our position is to give people choice and flexibility, taking into account how much they are willing to pay for the future.

I will make some personal comments about the two Sinn Féin amendments. The Minister outlined his views on amendment No 119. Given the Committee opposition to clause 110, I do not think that amendment No 119 is required. Effectively, it is trying to do the same thing but in a different way, so, hopefully, Sinn Féin will not move it.

Whether somebody convicted of an offence, particularly fraud, should be allowed to be an attorney provoked discussion at the Ad Hoc Joint Committee, and amendment No 118 references the issue. I understand why it was an issue. I agree with the Minister that, if somebody is of sound mind and has capacity to make a decision, it is up to that person whether to appoint somebody who has such a conviction. It may be a husband or relative who may have a conviction, but that person still feels it appropriate to have him or her as attorney. On that basis, I do not support the amendment. We have to give individuals the option to make choices when they have capacity to do so, whether or not, as the Minister said, they are choices that we think sensible.

I hope that the House will support the Committee position on clause 110.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will speak on the amendments tabled in our names in group 3. We will support the amendments tabled by the Minister and the Committee amendments as outlined by the Chair.

A petition of concern has been lodged on amendment No 116. The Minister outlined two reasons why he opposed the amendment. The second reason is to do with a process that is taking place in DFP, and we want to allow that to go forward. The amendment has its origins in concerns raised by the Children's Commissioner and the Children's Law Centre. The issue might come back at Further Consideration Stage or at some other time. There are 16- and 17-year olds who should be allowed to make those types of decisions for themselves, but, given what the Minister said about DFP, we will not move the amendment today.

Amendment No 117 is about preventing an attorney from giving himself or herself a gift from an estate or carrying out work. In fairness, the Minister accepted that there could be a perceived conflict of interest. That is what we are trying to address. I accept that, as the Minister said, if the attorney happened to be a relative, that in itself is a complication. Perhaps we could tighten that at Further Consideration Stage, but we note the Minister's comments.

I note the Minister's comments, and the Chair speaking as an individual and on behalf of his party, on amendment No

118. We tabled that amendment in case the appointment of an attorney was contested by other family members, or that the attorney later had a power but that the other person was incapable of changing or altering the decision. In those cases, when a person has been convicted of fraud, we need some protection. We are not saying that it should be automatic, because we do not believe in debarring somebody simply because of a conviction. If, however, the fraud is directly related to the person concerned, there should be some measure to assess the suitability of the person acting as attorney.

The last amendment that we have tabled in the group is amendment No 119 to clause 110. In response to the comments made by the Minister and, indeed, by the Chair of the Committee, we accept that the Committee's opposition to clause 110 no longer necessitates amendment No 119, which we will not move.

4.00 pm

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to address the group 3 amendments considering EPAs, LPAs and oversight bodies. Clauses 95 to 110 set out lasting powers of attorney in the Bill. In evidence sessions, there were numerous representations on enduring power of attorney and lasting power of attorney. The Law Society broadly welcomed the majority of the proposals in the Bill. In particular, it welcomed the proposal to introduce the health and welfare lasting power of attorney, which will give attorneys the ability to make decisions on health and welfare matters. We too welcome that proposal because, if used correctly, it can provide more certainty for people when deciding their future.

The society noted with concern, however, that the Bill proposes to abolish enduring powers of attorney entirely. It is the society's view that EPAs have brought benefits to Northern Ireland and that the current system of EPAs should be retained. Retention of enduring powers of attorney alongside the new lasting power of attorney would give, it says, the client maximum flexibility and accessibility to meet their legal needs. It is for that reason that we welcome the Sinn Féin amendment No 119 and the Minister's intention to oppose clause 110. To remove EPA would be a premature attempt to reduce potential fraud and make the system more efficient.

Most of the rest of the amendments, bar amendment No 116, on which a petition of concern has been put down, are technical. The simplicity of the current EPA system has led to its widespread use by members of the public. It has also meant that the legal cost of putting an EPA in place from assisting with the completion of the prescribed forms and the court fees for registration of the EPA has been kept low. Many related to the Committee that an LPA introduction without EPA would see costs increase and act as a barrier to some utilising the service.

One of the main drivers for the introduction of the LPA is the intention to decrease fraud and to provide more protection for the patient. However, in England and Wales, much larger numbers of fraud cases are being prosecuted than under the previous EPA system. There were 2,200 safeguarding referrals to the Office of the Public Guardian (OPG) in England and Wales in 2013-14. According to the KPMG fraud barometer published this month, fraud on families perpetrated by one of their own grew by 384% in the first half of 2015 compared with the same period in 2014. It was KPMG's view that that was largely due to the frustration of family members having to wait longer for their inheritance as a result of increased life expectancy. There you go. By value, 72% of family fraud was committed by fraudsters aged over 45.

It was the view of the Law Centre, and of many other stakeholders, that the EPA system has operated very effectively in the North without any evidence of widespread fraud and that the introduction of LPA alone will not solve the problems that exist. That is not to say that the introduction of LPAs is a bad thing in itself; the opposite is true. For example, the Commissioner for Older People made some very interesting points about LPAs, indicating that the introduction of lasting powers of attorney will have a significant impact on the lives of many older people. The LPA may influence where an older person lives; what care home they reside in; how they are looked after, including the provision of care; and the types of care, including top-up fees that have to be paid.

The legislative framework extends existing powers to allow the attorney the authority to make decisions not just on financial but on welfare and health matters. We in the SDLP stress, however, that the LPA process should be made as simple as possible for those who wish to use it. In the House of Lords post-legislative scrutiny review of the Mental Capacity Act, witnesses provided evidence that the process of applying for an LPA was complex and that the paperwork was considered onerous. We must avoid that.

A petition of concern has been tabled to amendment No 116, which attempts to reduce the age at which a donor may appoint an attorney. We will support that Sinn Féin amendment. We voted for 16-year-olds to be able to vote, yet we would deny them the opportunity to appoint an attorney should a situation arise in which they might need to do that. That would be entirely inconsistent, so we will support the amendment and the other group 3 amendments on EPAs, LPAs and oversight bodies.

Mrs Dobson: I welcome the opportunity to comment on the third group of amendments. I start by expressing my disappointment that, for the second day running, a petition of concern that could not have any detrimental impact on one community or the other has been tabled to important Executive legislation. It would have been much better for the House to consider amendment No 116 in a genuine manner rather than it effectively being vetoed by a single party. Nevertheless, I and my party also oppose the amendment. Committee members received some stakeholder evidence on the issue, and, although I am sympathetic to the principle of giving 16- and 17-year-olds the power to make a lasting power of attorney, I am aware that the Department of Finance and Personnel is currently reviewing that. Given the sensitivity of the issue, my party would rather wait until that review is complete. We will therefore be opposing amendment No 116.

Mr Hamilton: I thank all the Members who have contributed to the debate. As I did with groups 1 and 2, I will try to keep my closing remarks very brief. I think that it is fair to say that the amendments that I tabled in group 3 relating to oversight bodies are straightforward and sensible, and Members appear from their comments not to have any issues with them today, which is encouraging. That allows me to concentrate my closing remarks on the key issues in the group, which relate to lasting powers of attorney and enduring powers of attorney.

My view remains unchanged on the amendment proposed by Sinn Féin to extend the lasting power of attorney system to 16- and 17-year-olds, although I welcome the fact that it is now not going to move the amendment. I think that that is right, in order to give everybody time to reflect on the work that the Department of Finance and Personnel is doing on the issue. That does not do any damage to the ability of the Members opposite or, indeed, any other Member to come back to the issue at a later stage, if they so wish.

As anticipated, the debate largely focused on the effect of the Bill as introduced on the existing enduring power of attorney system. Although the position adopted by the Committee on the issue would cause us, I believe, to miss a timely opportunity to draw a line under a piece of legislation based on outdated concepts, the strength of views on the retention of the enduring power of attorney system seems clear. I need to emphasise, however — I think that other Members, including the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee, mentioned this point — that those views persist in spite of Minister Ford's reassurances that the new lasting power of attorney forms will be kept short and straightforward, despite the fact that the costs of making a lasting power of attorney have yet to be determined, and despite the substantial year-on-year increases in the numbers of lasting powers of attorney being made in England and Wales over recent years. Moreover, we cannot ignore the potential for confusion for the general public that will arise from having two systems that cover the same ground but in very different ways, not to mention the operational difficulties of running them alongside each other.

Mr Ross: I thank the Minister for giving way. Perhaps I did not mention another issue around that potential confusion. It is the case that the vast majority of people who will be getting either an EPA or an LPA will go to a solicitor in order to do that. It is a solicitor's job to explain to those individuals the options that they have. Therefore, again, I am not sure that I have bought the argument that it will cause confusion, given that members of the public will have explained to them the differences between the two and the options that they have. I just do not get where this confusion will come from.

Mr Hamilton: I and other Members have used the word "confusion", but that is possibly the wrong word. It does present people with a choice, and the Chair and I will be keen to offer people choice, particularly when purchasing such products that offer people choice. I do take on board his point that it is absolutely the job of a solicitor to explain to people what they should be going for. However, I hope that he and, indeed, others accept that there is at least a risk that, when presented with the choice, given that one may be more expensive — even though that has not been set yet, but let us take the English example as something to go on — individuals may have a propensity to go, "Yes, I've heard the explanation of the choice, but the price difference is so stark that I'm going to go for the cheaper one". That may not be appropriate in every case.

I have put forward a possible compromise that would allow EPAs to remain in place until the Assembly decided otherwise. I am not sure from listening to Members that that will find a terrible lot of favour. I have never been a politician not to understand and appreciate the direction in which the wind is blowing, and I will reflect on that as we move through the stages of the Bill.

The issue has been well aired in the debate and through the deliberations of the Ad Hoc Committee. That concludes my remarks on group 3.

Clause 137 (Power of police to remove person from public place to place of safety)

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): We now come to the fourth group of amendments for debate. The amendments deal with criminal justice aspects of the Bill, including supervision and assessment orders, psychological harm, detention in hospital and restraining orders. I call the Minister to move amendment No 141 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Hamilton: I beg to move amendment No 141: In page 76, line 39, after first “serious” insert “physical or psychological”

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

Amendment Nos 142, 147-151, 172-174, 182,187,188,191-193, 195, 203, 208, 215, 223-224, 227-229, 233, 239-243, 245, 249, 251, 253-254, 257-260, 263, 265-267, 270-272, 275-277, 279, 288, 292, 294-296, 298, 359, 390, 391 and 470.

Mr Hamilton: Part 9 contains powers for the police to remove a person from a public place to a place of safety. That power can be exercised by the Police Service of Northern Ireland in circumstances where failure to remove the person from a public place poses a risk of serious harm to the person or serious physical harm to others. It is a protective power, but the provisions also recognise a key feature of the recommendations of the Bamford review: the importance of a person’s autonomy to make decisions where he or she is able to do so. Therefore, the power cannot be exercised if the person is able to make a decision about whether or not they are removed to a place of safety.

At this point, I thank stakeholders for their input in the development of Part 9, particularly the Police Service of Northern Ireland, who have given great assistance to the Department of Justice in this respect. I also acknowledge the support of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee and commend the approach that it has taken to Part 9, which has been of particular interest to members of that Committee.

I consider that the amendments that I have tabled today will further improve these provisions and ensure that this important power to take a person to a place of safety so that he or she can obtain medical assistance acts to protect some of the most vulnerable people in our society. I now turn to the amendments, many of which I intend to group together, with your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Amendment No 141 is intended to clarify what is meant by "serious harm" to a person in clause 137. The amendment makes it clear that the purpose of the power for the Police Service of Northern Ireland to remove a person from a public place to a place of safety is to prevent serious physical or psychological harm to that person. The amendment was tabled as a consequence of amendment Nos 187 and 188, which were tabled in response to the concerns of the Committee, whose thorough scrutiny identified a potential gap in clause 166. The Committee had expressed concern that, although a public protection order could be made on the basis of the risk of physical harm posed by an offender to other persons, it would not take account of the risk of psychological harm that the person posed to others. Therefore, amendment No 187 amends clause 166(2)(c) by including it as a criterion for the making of a public protection order that the court must be satisfied that dealing with the offender in any way not involving detention would create a risk of serious psychological as well as serious physical harm to other persons. Amendment No 188 amends clause 166(3)(d) by adding a reference to physical or psychological harm, reflecting the former amendment and clarifying the meaning of harm in that context. The amendments ensure that this healthcare disposal is available in all the circumstances in which it may be needed.

As a consequence of the proposed changes to the criteria for a public protection order in clause 166, in much the same manner as amendment No 141, the Department of Justice has chosen to clarify the meaning of "harm" in Parts 9 and 10 through a series of amendments. In respect of Part 9, I also highlight amendment Nos 147, 148 and 150, all of which propose similar changes to clauses 141, 142 and 143 in Part 9 in order to clarify that the harm in question may be physical or psychological. In addition, there are 19 further amendments in the group to amend the definition of harm for certain clauses in Part 10.

I will speak to the remaining "harm" amendments shortly. First, however, I would like to address the remaining amendments tabled to Part 9 and the police place of safety power. Amendment Nos 142, 149 and 151 have all been tabled in order to simplify the drafting of the clauses for the benefit of the reader. Amendment No 142 simplifies the current drafting of clause 137(2)(b) but does not change the effect of the provision, which is designed to limit the circumstances in which the power can be used. Removal of the person from a public place by the Police Service must still be proportionate to the likelihood and seriousness of the harm caused, either to the person or to others. Similarly, amendment No 149 amends clause 142(2)(b) by simplifying the draft; however, that amendment does not change the effect of the provision, which requires the detention of a person in a place of safety to be a proportionate response to the likelihood and seriousness of the harm caused to the person or other people. Amendment No 151 also simplifies the current drafting of clause 143 but does not affect its meaning. The final departmental amendment to Part 9 that I will speak to in this group is amendment No 172, which amends clause 153(c) of the Bill. The effect is to ensure that article 56(12)(a)(iii) of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 does not apply if a person who is detained in a place of safety is subject to an intimate search. Article 56(12)(a)(iii) allows a custody officer to seize and retain any item found during an intimate search of a person, if that person may use the item in question to interfere with evidence. That is not a provision that has relevance in a place of safety context, and therefore the amendment disapplies it.

I turn to the amendments relating to Part 10, which deals with criminal justice matters. Once again, it is important to highlight that those matters fall within the responsibility of Minister Ford and the Department of Justice. I thank him for the great deal of work that has been undertaken to ensure that the Bill contains a package of criminal justice measures that adequately reflect the Bamford review recommendations.

I will deal first with the remaining amendments tabled in order to clarify what is meant by "harm" in certain clauses in Part 10. Amendment No 182, for example, amends clause 163(1)(a)(ii), clarifying that, when it is considering remanding a person to hospital for medical treatment, a court must be satisfied that failure to provide treatment would result in serious physical or psychological harm to that person. Amendment Nos 195, 251, 263, 279, 288 and 292 make similar amendments to disposals and powers in Part 10, in order to clarify that consideration must be given to the risk that failure to provide treatment to a person as an inpatient in a hospital would be more likely than not to result in serious physical or psychological harm to that person.

Amendment Nos 191 and 192 amend clause 167 by clarifying the meaning of "harm" in clause 167(1) and (2)(c). Amendment Nos 193, 203, 208, 215, 227, 257, 270 and 275 all make comparable changes to clauses in Part 10. The remaining amendments relating to the definition of "harm" in Parts 9 and 10 are amendment Nos 359, 390 and 391. Amendment Nos 390 and 391 amend clause 292, which defines particular terms for the purposes of the Bill. Those amendments will change the definition of "harm" in the clause to reflect the changes made in Parts 9 and 10. All those amendments are a consequence of the amendments to clause 166 that I mentioned previously.

I now turn to the remaining amendments in the group that relate to Part 10. In the Bill, there is a regulation-making power for the Department of Justice to make provision for a community disposal that would be available if a person were unfit to be tried and had done the act with which he or she had been charged. The supervision and treatment order was provided for in clause 205(8). It was never the intention of the Department of Justice to make provision for those orders in secondary legislation. That was a pragmatic decision taken to allow for the progress of the Bill. The Department of Justice has therefore proposed a series of amendments that would make provision for a community disposal in the Bill. The Department of Justice has also decided to rename the order to call it a "supervision and assessment order", and amendment Nos 243, 245, 294, 295 and 298 are all technical amendments to reflect that change in terminology. Regarding the detail of the scheme itself, amendment Nos 239 to 242 have the effect of providing for a new schedule to the Bill that contains the detail of the supervision and assessment order, as renamed. Related to those amendments, amendment No 470 inserts new schedule 7A into the Bill. It provides the detail of how the supervision and assessment order scheme will operate. That includes how the orders will be made and their effect, as well as the procedure if an order is breached.

Moving on, amendment No 249 will insert new clause 207A, which amends article 7 of the Protection from Harassment (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, referred to henceforth as the 1997 Order. The Department of Justice has brought forward this amendment to the Bill following discussions with the Committee. The Committee asked the Department of Justice to consider whether restraining orders under article 7 of the 1997 Order are available to the court following a determination of unfitness to plead. Legal advice confirmed that a restraining order was not available following a finding of unfitness and that carrying an amendment to the 1997 Order in the Mental Capacity Bill would be within its scope. Therefore, amendment No 249 creates a new clause 207A, which amends articles 7 and 7A of the 1997 Order to address the lacuna identified by the Committee. That concludes the substantive policy amendments to Parts 9 and 10 of the Bill.

I now turn to the remaining amendments, which primarily concern criminal justice powers relating to detention in hospital. Amendment Nos 223, 224, 228 and 229 all amend clause 196 of the Bill. Amendment No 223 places a duty rather than a power on the Department of Justice to direct that a prisoner be returned from hospital if he or she can no longer be detained there. Amendment No 224, however, inserts a new provision that does not require the Department to exercise that duty if a new intervening reason for a person to remain in hospital arises, despite there no longer being authority for the hospital direction to continue in effect.

Amendment No 228 is a technical amendment and has the effect of omitting "where A is detained" in clause 196(3)(c), as the words are superfluous.

Amendment No 229 is another technical amendment and refines clause 196(4) to 196(6).

Amendment Nos 253, 254, 258, 259 and 260 relate to clause 213, on the Department of Justice's power to transfer a civil prisoner or immigration detainee to hospital for treatment.

Amendment Nos 265, 266, 267, 271, 272, 276 and 277 to clause 219, relating to the transfer of other detainees within the criminal justice system from prison to a healthcare setting for treatment, make equivalent changes to that clause.

Amendment No 233 amends clause 198(2) by including reference to the powers to apply to the Sentence Review Commissioners under the Northern Ireland (Sentences Act) 1998. This has the effect of ensuring that a prisoner who is subject to that Act can apply to the Sentence Review Commissioners to have his or her sentence considered, regardless of whether they are in hospital rather than in custody at the time of the application.

Finally, amendment No 296 inserts a new clause 242A. This amendment makes provision for an appeal against a hospital direction that is made by the Magistrates' Court.

Parts 9 and 10 of the Bill, as amended, will provide the criminal justice system with an important framework to compassionately and appropriately manage persons lacking capacity. The power of the police to remove a person from a public place to a place of safety is an important one. When a person is in a vulnerable state and in need of assistance, this power allows him or her to be taken to a safe place where medical expertise can be accessed. It is a power that can save lives. With this new approach in the Bill as introduced, together with the amendments moved today, it is fair to say that we can be confident that we have created, or will create, a scheme that promotes the well-being of people at a time in their life when they most need help. It ensures that we respect their autonomy to make decisions about whether to be taken to a place of safety, if they can make that decision. The scheme is clearly in line with the principles of the Bamford review, and I commend these amendments to the Assembly.

Furthermore, I believe that Part 10 of the Bill will be significantly improved as a consequence of the amendments tabled today. On behalf of Minister Ford, I once again commend the Chair and the Committee for their positive engagement with this Part of the Bill.

Several of the amendments to Part 10 of the Bill, specifically those in relation to the definition of "serious harm" and the proposed new clause 207A, have been drafted following interaction between the Department of Justice and the Committee. In addition, I am of the view that the new provisions in Part 10 and new schedule 7A relating to supervision and assessment orders will provide the courts with an important disposal to manage offenders suffering disorders in a community setting. Therefore, on behalf of Minister Ford, I commend these amendments to the Assembly.

I will conclude by speaking to amendment Nos 173 and 174, which have been tabled by the Chair of the Committee. These amendments relate to clause 154 of the Bill, which sets out the annual records and statistics to be collected by the Police Service of Northern Ireland regarding persons detained at places of safety. The proposed amendments would place specific obligations on the Police Service of Northern Ireland to record statistics on the use of place-of-safety powers in relation to young people and on the ultimate disposal of the young person. Along with Minister Ford, I am opposing those amendments on the grounds that they are unnecessary, given that the PSNI currently collects data relating to the age of persons detained at a place of safety and it is not anticipated that that will change once the Bill is introduced. That being said, we understand the motivation behind the amendments and accept that, if it is the will of the Assembly, they may be made.

I am very glad to say that that concludes my opening remarks on this group of amendments.

6.15 pm

Mr Ross: Again, we as a Committee support the amendments in this group tabled by the Minister.

Amendment No 141 is the first of many amendments to clauses in Parts 9 and 10 that are the result of Committee scrutiny into a very specific but significant issue. On the criminal justice provisions, public protection orders are being introduced for people who are judged to have been not culpable enough at the time of committing the offence to be deserving of a prison sentence, people who are unfit to plead and people who are guilty by reason of insanity. The idea behind public protection orders is that, if those people pose a danger to the public, they cannot be released, even though they are not culpable for their actions. However, public protection orders can be used only if the detention conditions set out in clause 166 are met. Specifically, clause 166(2)(c) requires that there would be a risk of:

“serious physical harm to other persons”,

if the offender was not detained.

The Royal College of Psychiatrists advised the Committee that the criteria for making a public protection order might not be met in cases where the person had been found to have committed a rape when the rape had not resulted in “serious physical harm” to the victim. The implication of that is that the person may be given an absolute discharge. The Royal College of Psychiatrists was of the view that the exclusion of consideration of serious psychological harm within the Bill is indefensible in the 21st century. In its view, the key question is whether the risk of harm was serious and there was a risk of serious physical or serious psychological harm.

When the Committee initially raised that with the Department of Justice, its view was that psychological harm is outwith compliance with article 5 of the European Convention on Human Rights. However, the Department agreed to go back and look at the issue more closely and to take further legal advice. After further consideration, the Department came back to the Committee to advise us that it was prepared to make amendments to clause 166 that deal with the detention conditions for a public protection order so that reference to “psychological harm” is inserted, provided it is of a serious nature. In effect, that means that the detention conditions for a public protection order include the potential of the individual to create a risk of serious physical or psychological harm to other persons. Those amendments are amendment Nos 187 and 188 and are supported by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Amendments were also proposed by the Department to clauses 167, 170, 178, 183 and 190. They deal with various aspects of public protection orders so that the potential of the individual to create a risk of serious physical or psychological harm to other persons must be considered. Those amendments are in this group and, again, are all supported by the Ad Hoc Committee. Similarly, an amendment was proposed by the Department to clause 230 to provide an explanation of the “prevention of serious harm condition” for the purposes of clauses 228 and 229 so that the potential of the individual to create a risk of serious physical or psychological harm to other persons must be considered.

On a related issue, the Department proposed amendments to clauses 282 and 293 in Part 15. It proposed to amend clause 282, which deals with the provision of special accommodation for persons that require care or treatment in conditions of special security for the protection of other persons to allow for the detention of individuals who may pose a risk of serious physical or psychological harm. The Department also proposed amendments to clause 293 that provide a definition of “harm” for the purposes of the Bill so that the potential of the individual to create a risk of serious psychological harm is included in the scope of the definition. The Committee supports the proposed amendments.

Furthermore, the Department proposed a range of additional amendments to Part 10 to clarify what is meant by “harm” in various clauses and whether it means physical or psychological harm or both. That resulted in the Department tabling amendments to clauses 163, 173, 196, 209, 213, 216, 219, 220 and 234. The Committee supports those amendments as well. On the same theme, the Department proposed a range of amendments to Part 9, which deals with the power of police to remove a person to a place of safety. Those amendments clarify that the potential of the individual to create a risk of serious “physical or psychological harm” to themselves must be considered.

The Committee supports those amendments.

Amendment No 249 is on a slightly different but related issue from the raft of amendments that I have just referred to. The Committee, as part of our consideration of the criminal justice provisions, asked whether restraining orders were available for individuals found to be unfit to plead. The Department initially advised us that it was not sure of the law in that area and agreed to examine the matter further. The Department subsequently advised the Committee that a restraining order was not currently available under article 7 of the Protection from Harassment Order 1997 when an individual has been found unfit to plead. That is a similar provision to the one in England and Wales highlighted by a recent decision of the Court of Appeal, which held that a finding of unfitness was neither a conviction nor an acquittal, so no power was available to make a restraining order under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997. The Department, therefore, proposed amendment No 249 to insert new clause 207A, which would amend articles 7 and 7A of the 1997 Order to allow the courts to sentence an individual to a restraining order where that individual has been found unfit to plead. The Committee supports the proposed amendment.

Ministerial amendment Nos 242 and 470 relate to supervision and assessment orders. In June 2015, the Department advised the Committee that it intended to amend clause 205, which provides powers to deal with persons who are found to be unfit to be tried or not guilty by reason of insanity. In such cases, the court must make one of a number of disposals as provided by clause 205(2). One of the disposals is a supervision and treatment order. Clause 205(8) provides that the Department of Justice may make regulations about supervision and treatment orders. However, the Department advised that its intention was to remove that provision at Consideration Stage and instead make provision for such orders in the Bill, and it proposes to do that through amendment No 242. In November 2015, the Department advised that it had decided to rename supervision and treatment orders “supervision and assessment orders” and, therefore, any references in the Bill would be amended to reflect that change. That change in terminology is reflected in a range of amendments before us today, such as amendment No 243. The Committee also supports those amendments.

The Department further advised that it had drafted new schedule 7A, which sets out the detail of the proposed scheme for supervision and assessment orders. That is before us today as amendment No 470. On 30 November, the Department provided oral evidence to the Committee on its proposals for the renamed supervision and assessment orders, explaining that it had not been possible to provide those clauses in the Bill as introduced because of the timescales involved. Whilst the Committee took the view that that was not an ideal approach to legislation, it was content in principle that clause 205(8) be removed from the Bill and that supervision and assessment orders be dealt with in the Bill. However, the Committee agreed simply to note the detail of proposed new schedule 7A, given that it had not had the opportunity to seek written or oral evidence from stakeholders.

I turn to Committee amendment Nos 173 and 174. Clause 154 is in Part 9, which deals with the power of the police to remove people to a place of safety. Under Part 9, the police can remove a person of any age to a hospital or police station in situations in which that person is in need of immediate care or control and where failure to remove them would create a risk of serious harm to themselves or others. Stakeholders, including the Children's Law Centre and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People, expressed concern at the use of a police station as a place of safety for a young person. They argued that bringing a young person who is vulnerable and frightened to a police station was not appropriate because it sent out the message that a criminal justice response was necessary when no crime had been committed.

The Committee was sympathetic to the concerns but did not think that the Bill should ban a police station from ever being used as a place of safety for a young person, particularly if they were at risk of harming themselves or others and the emergency department at that time was particularly busy. Our view was that there needed to be flexibility for officers on the ground in determining the most suitable place of safety for an individual at a particular time. However, we entirely agreed with stakeholders that using a police station as a place of safety for young people should be the exception rather than the norm. We believe that an amendment to clause 154 is the best way to monitor that situation. Clause 154 as drafted requires that the PSNI keep and publish annual records of the number of persons detained in hospitals and police stations. The Children's Law Centre and the Commissioner for Children and Young People suggested that the Bill place an obligation on the police specifically to record statistics on the use of place of safety powers in relation to young people and on the ultimate disposal of those young people. The Committee was of the view that, if separate statistics were not collected on young people, there would be a risk that such statistics would not be easily extrapolated from the data available and thus it would be difficult for the Department and others to monitor whether the police powers of safety were being used appropriately in relation to young people.

The Committee asked the Department if it would make an amendment to clause 154. Its response was that the clause as drafted was wide enough to facilitate the collection of specific information on age and disposal outcomes, as well as other characteristics such as gender. The Department was unwilling to specify that particular statistics be collected, stating that areas of interest may change over time. That might well be the case, but, at this time, the key concern is about the use of police powers of safety in relation to young people and not, for example, gender or ethnicity. The other point is that specifying that statistics must be collected on young people does not preclude the collection of statistics on, for example, gender.

The Committee's view was that, whilst clause 154 might facilitate the collection of statistics, it did not require it. We noted the Department's intention for data to be collected on the age of people detained under police powers of safety. However, that is very different from it being a statutory requirement, and intentions can change over time, depending on, for example, available resources and competing priorities. The Committee therefore tabled amendment Nos 173 and 174, which would require that statistics are collected on under-18s detained under these powers and their ultimate disposal. I ask the House to consider the amendments tabled by the Committee.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will speak only briefly to group 4, as the Chair has covered a considerable amount.

Whilst most amendments in the group are technical, a considerable number of the Minister's amendments are welcome. As most of the amendments came after Committee Stage, members sought clarification from officials in the Department on them.

The main point I want to deal with is the Minister's inclusion of the points raised by the Committee members and other key stakeholders, including the use of the word "psychological", which he has covered. In Committee, concerns were raised regarding the limited understanding that harm, as considered in the Bill, relates just to physical harm. The concerns filtered around some of the cases that were highlighted. In particular, I draw attention to a comment by a representative of the Royal College of Psychiatrists, which was covered by the Chair:

"the failure to identify serious psychological harm by focusing only on serious physical harm is indefensible in the 21st century."

It also covers the risk a person poses to themselves. Although they may not be in danger of physical harm, their psychological well-being may well be at risk or be neglected.

The amendments also worthy of note relate to the technical changes to clause 205 on supervision and treatment orders. That is being amended to reflect the need for assessment. That clause provides for cases where somebody has been found by a court to be unfit for trial. If so, it stands to good reason that the person concerned is in need of an assessment of their capacity.

Mr Kennedy: I will not delay the House on such an important evening. The majority of this group of amendments are from the Minister, and they largely form part of a tidying-up exercise. Therefore, there is no great difficulty with them.

In terms of the criminal justice issues, including supervision and assessment orders, psychological harm, detention in a hospital and restraining orders, in amendment No 141, as others have said, the Minister is moving to close a loophole. The amendment is the template for a further 20 amendments in the group that we are content to support. In those amendments, there is the change of language from “may” to “must”, which we are content to support.

6.30 pm

Amendment No 239 changes the word “treatment” in “supervision and treatment order” to “assessment”. That is the template for a further three amendments. The main change in amendment No 470, brought forward by the Minister, is the introduction of a new schedule to deal with the supervision and assessment orders. We are satisfied that this will help the situation and we are content to support it. The Committee amendments were all pretty much unanimously agreed. In that spirit, we are happy to continue our support for them.

Mr Hamilton: Parts 9 and 10 of the Bill, as amended, will provide the criminal justice system with an important framework to compassionately and appropriately manage persons lacking capacity. On behalf of Minister Ford and me — we are starting to sound like a married couple — I commend the Committee for its positive contribution and I thank Members for their various contributions this evening. There is a lot of support for the amendments in this group. Again, I thank all Members for their contributions to the debate and I commend the amendments in this group to the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): As no specific time has been allocated by the Business Committee for a break, this would seem to be a reasonable point at which to suspend the sitting for a short time. I propose, by leave of the House, to suspend the sitting until 7.00 pm.

The sitting was suspended at 6.32 pm.

The sitting resumed at 7.05 pm.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now come to the fifth and final group of amendments for debate. These amendments deal with offences, warrants and transfers between jurisdictions.

Mr Hamilton: I beg to move amendment No 300: In page 134, line 22, leave out subsection (5).

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

I never thought I would say that I was glad to get to a debate for a bit of a break. Part 11 will give you a far more deserved break than me, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Part 11 deals with powers to transfer patients between jurisdictions within the United Kingdom, along with a number of technical amendments, of which amendment No 300 is one. Part 11 has been amended to insert new clauses concerning the transfer of patients within the criminal justice system between Northern Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales for the purpose of receiving treatment.

It is important to note that the transfer powers available in the new clauses are equivalent to and will replace powers currently available under the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. Patients in the criminal justice system may require treatment in other jurisdictions for several reasons. The foremost reason is the absence of a high-security treatment facility in Northern Ireland. In these circumstances, where a patient is too violent or dangerous to be treated in this jurisdiction, they will be transferred for treatment to the State Hospital at Carstairs in Scotland until their condition improves to the point at which they can be managed in a less secure environment in Northern Ireland. In other circumstances, the family or friends of patients may also request that they be moved elsewhere, or a patient may require specialist treatment for a rare condition that is best provided in another jurisdiction. The amendments proposed by the Department of Justice to Part 11 are, therefore, vital to ensure that all patients in the criminal justice system can receive appropriate treatment in all circumstances.

There are also amendments included in the group to the offences in Part 13. While some of the amendments are technical in nature, amendment Nos 312 and 316 are designed to include persons subject to the criminal justice provisions in Parts 9 and 10 within the scope of the offences of ill treatment or neglect and unlawful detention. The amendments will ensure that persons in the criminal justice system are afforded a similar level of protection to everyone else.

I now turn to amendment Nos 300 and 302. The first two amendments in the group make changes to clauses 248 and 249 that are designed to improve the drafting of the clauses. Amendment Nos 305 and 306 make similar changes to clauses 250 and 251 in order to provide greater clarity as to their meaning. Several additional technical amendments are proposed to other clauses as a consequence of the changes to Part 11, including amendment Nos 354, 389, 481 and 489.

Amendment Nos 303 and 304 will create new clauses concerning the transfer of patients in the criminal justice system between jurisdictions for the purpose of receiving treatment. Amendment No 303 will create new clause 249A, which provides the Department of Justice with the power to transfer certain persons detained under Part 10 to England and Wales for treatment. Similarly, amendment No 304 will create new clause 249B, which provides the Department of Justice with the power to transfer certain persons detained under Part 10 to Scotland for treatment. Furthermore, amendment No 307 will create new clause 251A, which provides for how persons who have been transferred from England and Wales to Northern Ireland will be managed under Part 10. Amendment No 308 will create new clause 251B to provide for how persons who have been transferred from Scotland to Northern Ireland will be managed. The powers are akin to those currently available under existing legislation and will allow for greater flexibility when managing the treatment of patients in the criminal justice system.

I intend to oppose clauses 252 and 253 and instead insert by way of amendment Nos 309 and 310 new clauses 252A and 253A. Amendment No 309 will create new clause 252A, replacing clause 252 with a new version that takes account of the insertion of new powers in relation to Part 10 transfers from Northern Ireland. Amendment No 310 will create new clause 253A, replacing clause 253 with a new version that takes account of the insertion of new powers in relation to Part 10 transfers to Northern Ireland. Amendment No 311 will create new clause 253B, which has been drafted to provide definitions of certain terms for the purposes of Part 11. All the amendments are technical in nature to ensure consistency of drafting in Part 11.

I now turn to the amendments relating to Part 13, which contains the offences specific to the Bill. Amendment Nos 312 and 316, which will amend clauses 256 and 258, are designed to include persons subject to the criminal justice provisions in Parts 9 and 10 within the scope of the offences of ill treatment or neglect and unlawful detention. The amendments will provide an equal level of protection for all individuals who lack capacity and who are detained under or are subject to interventions in the Bill.

Amendment Nos 314 and 317 will also amend clauses 256 and 258 to ensure alignment with the consent requirements for the equivalent offence under article 121 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 and minimise the potential for vexatious prosecutions. Amendment No 317 also clarifies that the offence of unlawful detention does not interfere with the common-law offence of false imprisonment. Amendment Nos 318 and 319 will amend clauses 259 and 260 to address a concern about the mens rea required for the offences in those clauses. The amendments provide that a person can be guilty of an offence under the clause only if they know that the person whom they are assisting is liable to be detained under the Bill. Although clauses 259 and 260 have been substantially redrafted as a result, no other change in effect is intended.

8.00 pm

Amendment No 321 is proposed to ensure alignment with the consent requirements for offences by bodies corporate, as set out in section 20 of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954, and minimises the potential for vexatious prosecutions. Finally, I turn to amendment No 347, which allows an approved social worker to accompany a constable, as well as a medical practitioner, when entering premises following the issue of a warrant under clause 278. The amendment was requested by the Committee and supported by a number of stakeholders.

Patients who are difficult to manage are present in all psychiatric hospitals in Northern Ireland, and every effort is made to look after those patients locally. However, some patients may require care in a high-security facility or access to specialist treatment that is not currently available in Northern Ireland. Therefore, I believe that the amendments to Part 11 are necessary in order to ensure that patients in the criminal justice system always receive the appropriate treatment. The amendments to the offences in Part 13 strengthen the protections that they provide to vulnerable individuals by broadening their scope to include individuals lacking capacity who are detained in the criminal justice system. The additional amendments tabled to the offences clauses and warrant powers address concerns raised by the Ad Hoc Committee and by stakeholders as well as ensuring that the relevant clauses are technically sound. I am confident that, as a consequence of the proposed amendments, the relevant clauses and Parts of the Bill will be improved. I am, therefore, pleased to commend the amendments to the House.

Mr Ross: I will endeavour to be incredibly brief on this group. All the amendments tabled by the Minister, which the Committee had sight of before it did its clause-by-clause scrutiny, were supported by the Committee. However, revised amendments were sent to the Committee at a later date, and we simply agreed to note them. They were amendment Nos 303, 304, 307, 308 and 309. Amendment No 347, which is a ministerial amendment, came about as a result of an issue that was originally raised by the Committee. The Southern Health and Social Care Trust and the Northern Ireland approved social worker training programme suggested an amendment to clause 278 to permit an approved social worker to accompany the medical practitioner and constable when entering premises by means of a warrant when there was concern about a person's well-being. The Department's response was that it could see merit in the suggestion and proposed an amendment that was supported by the Committee. I have no further comment to make on group 5. Hopefully, we will get through it relatively quickly.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the group 5 amendments, and I do so as a member of the Ad Hoc Committee. One of the first things to consider in the group is the removal of subsection (5) from clauses 248 and 249 and the inclusion of new clauses 303, 304 and 305. The SDLP is content with the Minister's new clauses, as they represent a better realisation of the Committee's intentions and those of stakeholders.

We have heard through evidence that situations can occasionally arise when people, both EU and non-EU citizens, need to be moved between countries, and, as we know, those arrangements are managed by the Department here in the North. However, as the Southern Trust and the Western Trust have a jurisdictional border with the Republic, and, as movement occurs across the border, the Mental Capacity Bill represents the opportune time to agree procedures in statute for transfers of persons who are either detained or deprived of their liberty under the law in either jurisdiction. Agreeing the roles and responsibilities of social workers concerned etc is an important aspect of that. Once an individual is transferred to Britain, the responsibility for care and treatment is devolved, and there appear to be few or no routes to appeal or to revoke a decision should the individual or family be unhappy with their treatment.

It may be difficult to have the decision revoked. I hope that the new clauses in the Bill can help address that potential difficulty.

Clause 256 will make it an offence to ill-treat or wilfully neglect a person who lacks capacity. The clause largely reflects section 44 of the Mental Capacity Act 2005. In its report on the 2005 Act, the House of Lords noted that the number of prosecutions brought under section 44 was low. Stakeholders have considered that that may be a consequence of the requirement to prove that a person who has been neglected or ill-treated lacks capacity. In particular, the decision-specific and time-specific nature of the capacity assessment in the 2005 Act was considered to present a difficulty. The Lords asked the Government to carry out a review of section 44, and we understand that that has not yet commenced. Owing to the wording of section 44, which is the same as our clause 256, a situation could arise in which two patients are mistreated and neglected by the same individual with the same intent but a prosecution for ill-treatment and wilful neglect can be brought only in respect of the treatment of the person who lacked capacity. That was brought up during evidence and seemed extremely disconcerting. Nevertheless, I welcome the relatively technical amendments to clause 256 and support it as amended.

Mr Hamilton: Patients who are difficult to manage are present in all hospitals and psychiatric hospitals in Northern Ireland. As I said before, every effort is made to look after those patients in Northern Ireland. However, some patients require to be in a high-security facility or to access treatment that we are unable to provide in Northern Ireland. I therefore believe that the amendments to Part 11 are very necessary to ensure that patients in our criminal justice system in Northern Ireland get the appropriate treatment.

Similarly, the amendments to the offences that are in Part 13 strengthen protections that are provided to vulnerable individuals by broadening their scope to include individuals lacking capacity who are detained in our criminal justice system. The additional amendments tabled to the offences, clauses and warrant powers, I hope, address the concerns raised by the Committee.

I thank the Committee again for its scrutiny of the Bill and the stakeholders who raised issues during the Committee's deliberations. I hope that the amendments ensure that the relevant clauses are now technically sound. Again, I thank Members for their contributions, not so sweet as they were, but short as they were. In this, my last contribution to the debate this evening, I thank everybody, particularly the Chair and members of the Ad Hoc Committee for all the good work and effort that they have put into the relatively smooth passage of the Bill through the House.

- (b) make himself or herself available at a specified place at a specified time or times, for assessment by or under the direction of a medical practitioner.

(2) The assessment period may be the whole or any part of the supervision period.

(3) Assessment under sub-paragraph (1) is to be assessment of such of the following as the medical practitioner considers appropriate at the time of the assessment—

- (a) the supervised person’s condition;
- (b) either or both of the matters mentioned in paragraph 2(3)(a) and (b).

(4) In sub-paragraph (1) “specified” means specified in the order.

RESIDENCE ELEMENT

5.—(1) A residence element is any requirement as to the residence of the supervised person during a period specified in the order (“the residence period”).

(2) The residence period may be the whole or any part of the supervision period.

(3) Before including a residence element, the court must consider the home surroundings of the supervised person.

(4) A residence element may not require the supervised person to reside as an in-patient or resident in a hospital or care home.

PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO THE MAKING OF THE ORDER

6.—(1) Before making a supervision and assessment order, the court must explain to the supervised person in ordinary language—

- (a) the effect of each of the elements included in the order, and

(b) that a court of summary jurisdiction, and the court making the order, have power under paragraphs 8 to 10, 11 and 13 to review the order on the application either of the supervised person or the supervising officer.

(2) After making an order, the court must as soon as practicable—

(a) give at least 2 copies of the order to the supervising officer, and

(b) if the supervising officer is a social worker, send at least 1 copy of the order to the Probation Board.

(3) The supervising officer must give a copy of the order to the supervised person.

PART 3

EFFECT OF ORDER

7. Where an order is made, the supervised person must (as well as complying with the assessment element and any residence element) keep in touch with the supervising officer in accordance with such instructions as that officer may from time to time give, and must notify the supervising officer of any change of address.

PART 4

AMENDMENT OR REVOCATION OF ORDER

AMENDMENT OF ORDER: GENERAL

8.—(1) A court of summary jurisdiction may, on the application of the supervised person or the supervising officer, amend a supervision and assessment order—

(a) by cancelling any of the requirements of the order; or

(b) by inserting in the order (either in addition to or in substitution for any such requirement) any requirement which the court could include if it were the court by which the order was made and were then making it.

(2) The power of a court under sub-paragraph (1) does not include power to amend an order by extending any period specified in it beyond the end of 3 years from the date of the original order.

AMENDMENT OF ORDER: CHANGE OF AREA OF RESIDENCE

9.—(1) This paragraph applies where—

(a) a supervision and assessment order requires the supervised person to be under the supervision of a social worker, and

(b) (in accordance with paragraph 3(4)) the order specifies the HSC trust for the area in which the person resides (“the current trust”).

(2) If a court of summary jurisdiction is satisfied that the supervised person proposes to change, or has changed, his residence to the area of another HSC trust, the court may amend the order by substituting, for the current trust, the other HSC trust.

(3) The court must amend the order as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) if the supervising officer applies for it to do so.

(4) Where—

(a) the court amends a supervision and assessment order under this paragraph, and

(b) the order contains requirements which in the opinion of the court cannot be complied with if the supervised person ceases to reside in the area of the current trust, the court must either cancel those requirements or substitute for them other requirements which can be complied with if the supervised person ceases to reside in that area.

MEDICAL REPORTS

10.—(1) In this paragraph “relevant medical practitioner” means a medical practitioner by whom or under whose direction the supervised person—

(a) has been assessed in pursuance of a supervision and assessment order, or

(b) is being treated for a disorder in pursuance of such an order.

(2) Sub-paragraph (3) applies where any of the following conditions is met—

(a) the order requires the supervised person to attend or make himself or herself available for assessment at specified intervals, but a relevant medical practitioner considers that assessment at longer intervals is sufficient for the purposes mentioned in paragraph 2(3) (a) and (b);

(b) a relevant medical practitioner considers that it is necessary or desirable, for the purposes mentioned in paragraph 2(3)(a) and (b), to assess the supervised person more frequently than specified in the order;

(c) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the supervised person no longer requires treatment for his or her disorder;

(d) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the supervised person’s disorder is not (or is no longer) susceptible to treatment;

(e) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the assessment period should be extended (subject to sub-paragraph (5));

(f) a relevant medical practitioner is for any reason unwilling to continue to assess or treat, or direct the assessment or treatment of, the supervised person;

(g) a relevant medical practitioner becomes aware that the supervised person has been admitted to hospital as an in-patient.

(3) The relevant medical practitioner must make a report in writing to that effect to the supervising officer.

(4) The supervising officer must—

(a) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(a), inform the court which made the order;

(b) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(b) to (f), apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for the order to be amended as the court considers appropriate (including by cancelling the assessment element);

(c) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(g), apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for the assessment element to be suspended whilst the supervised person remains an in-patient.

(5) On an application made in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(e)—

(a) if the court considers it appropriate for the assessment period to end later than the end of the existing supervision period, the court may extend the supervision period;

(b) the assessment period (as extended) must not end later than the end of the supervision period (as extended); and

(c) neither period may be extended beyond the end of 3 years from the date of the original order.

REVOCATION OF ORDER

11.—(1) A court that has made a supervision and assessment order may, on the application of the supervised person or the supervising officer, revoke the order under this paragraph.

(2) The court may do so only if the court is satisfied that, having regard to circumstances which have arisen since the order was made, it would be in the interests of the health or welfare of the supervised person to revoke the order.

PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS ON AMENDMENT OR REVOCATION OF ORDER

12.—(1) On the making under any of paragraphs 8 to 11 of an order amending or revoking a supervision and assessment order, the court must as soon as practicable give to the supervising officer at least 2 copies of the amending or revoking order.

(2) The supervising officer, when given copies under sub-paragraph (1), must give a copy of the amending or revoking order to—

(a) the supervised person, and

(b) if the supervised person is receiving in-patient treatment or is residing in a hospital, the person in charge of that hospital.

PART 5

BREACH OF ORDER

13.—(1) This paragraph applies where—

(a) a supervision and assessment order is in force, and

(b) the supervising officer applies to the court that made the order for the order to be revoked under this paragraph.

(2) If—

(a) it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the supervised person (“S”) has, without reasonable excuse, failed to comply with any of the requirements of the order, and

(b) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to do so, the court may revoke the order and deal with S, for the matter in respect of which the order was made, in any manner in which the court could deal with S if a finding mentioned in section 205(1) had just been recorded by it in respect of that matter.

(3) In doing so, the court must take into account the extent to which S has complied with the requirements of the order.

(4) In proceedings under this paragraph any question as to whether S has failed to comply with the requirements of the order is to be determined by the court and not by the verdict of a jury.

(5) Where the court proposes to exercise its powers under this paragraph, it must summon S to appear before the court and, if S does not appear in answer to the summons, may issue a warrant for the arrest of S.

SUPPLEMENTARY

POWER TO VARY PERIOD FOR WHICH SUPERVISION ELEMENT MAY BE MADE

14.—(1) The Department of Justice may make regulations substituting, for the period of 3 years mentioned in paragraph 3(1), such other period (exceeding 6 months) as may be specified in the regulations.

(2) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make in paragraph 8(2) any amendment which the Department thinks necessary in consequence of the substitution made by the regulations.

TRANSITIONAL PROVISION RELATING TO THE ABOLITION OF PETTY SESSIONS DISTRICTS

15.—(1) Until the day on which section 1 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2015 comes into operation, this Schedule is to be read with the following modifications.

(2) If the supervising officer is a probation officer—

(a) the supervision and assessment order must specify the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside, and

(b) the supervising officer must be a probation officer appointed for or assigned to that district.

(3) If the supervising officer is a social worker—

(a) paragraph 6(2)(b) does not apply, but

(b) the court must, as soon as practicable after making the order, give to the probation officer assigned to the court at least 1 copy of the order.

(4) After making an order, the court must send to the clerk of petty sessions for the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside—

(a) a copy of the order; and

(b) such documents and information relating to the case as it considers likely to be of assistance to a court acting for that district in the exercise of its functions in relation to the order.

(5) The functions conferred by paragraphs 8 to 10 are to be exercised by a court for the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside.

(6) In paragraph 9—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1)(a), the reference to supervision by a social worker includes supervision by a probation officer appointed for or assigned to a petty sessions district;

(b) the references to an HSC trust or to the area of such a trust include a petty sessions district.

(7) If the court amends a supervision and assessment order so as to substitute one petty session district for another, the court which amends the order must send to the clerk of petty sessions for the new petty sessions district—

(a) at least 2 copies of the amending order; and
(b) such documents and information relating to the case as it considers likely to be of assistance to a court acting for that district in the exercise of its functions in relation to the order.

(8) The clerk of petty sessions for the new petty sessions district, when given copies under subparagraph (7), must give a copy of the amending order to the supervising officer.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Long title agreed to.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes the Consideration Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker. I ask Members to take their ease for a few minutes.

Private Members' Business

Assembly and Executive Reform (Assembly Opposition) Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr John McCallister to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Assembly and Executive Reform (Assembly Opposition) Bill.

Moved.—[Mr McCallister.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There is a single group of amendments for debate. The debate will be on amendment Nos 4 to 28 and the three amendments to the long title, which deal with motions, schedules and the long title.

Members intending to speak should address all the amendments on which they wish to comment. Once the debate is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clause 2 (Formation of the Opposition)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: With amendment No 4, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 5 to 28 and the three amendments to the long title. The amendments deal with motions, schedules and the long title. Three motions, three schedules and three long titles are proposed.

Amendment No 6 is mutually exclusive with amendment Nos 25 and 28. Amendment Nos 11 and 13 are mutually exclusive. Amendment Nos 20 and 23 are mutually exclusive. Amendment Nos 14, 17, 20 and 21 are consequential to amendment No 11. Amendment No 22 is consequential to amendment No 12. Amendment Nos 15, 16, 23 and 24 to 28 are consequential to amendment No 13. Amendment Nos LT1, LT2 and LT3 are mutually exclusive to one another and consequential to decisions on amendment Nos 11 and 13.

I call Mr John McCallister to move amendment No 4 and to address the other amendments in the group. The three amendments to the long title shall be decided at the end.

Mr McCallister: I beg to move amendment No 4: In page 1, line 20, after subsection (3) insert

“; or whose members comprise 8% or more of the total number of members of the Assembly, and which does not contain a member who is a Minister.”— [Mr McCallister.]

Amendment Nos 5 to 28, LT1, LT2 and LT3.

Given the length of the day that we have had, I will be as brief as possible, although I am always aware that, when people say that, they then go on and speak for an hour. In guiding the amendments in my name, I have been in constant consultation with other parties, reflecting not only on the Committee Stage and some of the changes suggested there but listening to the debate at Consideration Stage and the parties' views.

I turn to amendment No 4 and the issue of 8% forming the basis for an opposition. Debates at Committee Stage and Consideration Stage showed that we had to find a balance somewhere. Originally, I proposed 5% of the Assembly membership, and, in 'A Fresh Start', it was moved to the d'Hondt threshold. No one is ever quite sure what the d'Hondt level is, but it is probably around 11% or 12%, maybe even 13% with the changes to the number of Departments. I hope that we can find some agreement around the 8% level and that amendment No 4 will be made. It strikes the balance between having an opposition of a reasonable size and not setting the bar so high that you have to meet the d'Hondt level. Hopefully, the 8% level will find favour with Members.

Amendment Nos 5 and 19 are very technical in nature. They are about addressing any possibility of dealing with things like Royal Assent coming late and d'Hondt being run before we have fitted in the time. That allows time for the Assembly to change its Standing Orders to meet those needs if a party were opting to take up its role as opposition after the 5 May Assembly election. That simply gives us to 30 June 2016. Amendment No 19 means that the Bill becomes law the day after Royal Assent. It, again, is technical in nature.

9.00 pm

I will deal with my amendments first. I will link amendment Nos 10 and 18. On amendment No 18, in the Consideration Stage debate I felt that there was widespread support for how we, as an Assembly, should have a debate around an Executive's legislative timetable. I think that even the Speaker, in his writings and correspondence on the Bill, talked about how we could create some family-friendly hours. There are many Members with young families, and it is a question of how we deal with that and make this place more family-friendly and easier for people to balance work and family commitments. That is important. It also is an important dynamic to make sure that we do not end up in the situation that we had in the last two mandates with a rush of legislation in the last few weeks and months.

Amendment No 10 addresses an issue relating to private Members' Bills. Our colleagues in the Scottish Parliament designate a Bill Clerk and give total support for private Members' Bills. It has been hard for our Bill Office to manage to do that because it is dealing with so many things. It has been unfair on staff, and the amendment is simply a reflection of how we could best deal with that. Amendment No 18, which is on the legislative timetable, found broad support from the Assembly and is aimed at finding a way of writing it into the main body of the Bill. I think that that is to be encouraged.

Amendment No 11 came about from reflecting on the Committee Stage and the Consideration Stage of the Bill. It was very much about asking how we find a mechanism to start the process of political maturation here. What are the items on which we could get broad agreement in the Assembly to say that we should at least start the process of moving from excepted to reserved matters? That is why amendment No 11 is important. It is set in with amendment No 20, which proposes a new schedule that would put in the time frame for agreeing the terms of a Programme for Government. There seems to be broad agreement amongst the parties that it is desirable that we have control of that and that more responsibility is devolved as the Assembly continues its journey to maturity.

When I reflected on the Consideration Stage, I knew that we were not in a position to go as far as I would have liked with designations, petitions of concern or moving to weighted-majority voting. This proposal on the Programme for Government and amendment No 21 say that we should at least, at a future point, given cross-community support, have the ability and the power in the Assembly to decide how we or a future Assembly might elect its presiding officer or Speaker. That is all that this does; it does not set out how we would do it. You know from the original Bill what my views are on how that should be done, but that is not in these amendments. The amendments simply state that we should devolve those two powers to the Northern Ireland Assembly, with all the safeguards built in around cross-community support.

Amendment Nos 14 and 17 are technical amendments to tidy up the language in the Bill if amendment No 11 is made. Amendment No 11 gives you the mechanism to take those small but important steps on the road to maturity. It sends out a very important message to the public that we are starting on that road. We have just finished a lengthy debate on something that is crucial to many people. I wish to see the continuing process of how the Assembly matures and evolves over time reflected in the Bill through my amendment.

I now turn to amendments tabled by colleagues. The SDLP has proposed various amendments to the Bill and a new schedule on leaving the opposition and rejoining the Executive. I originally had a similar provision in the Bill, but my policy intent — I seek some clarification from Mr Attwood on this if he is speaking to it — was always that you would broadly make your decision at the start of a mandate: either you are in the Government or you are in the opposition. The reason I had written in a similar provision — it was not completely the same — was that, if you hit a crisis or needed to negotiate someone in, you could do that. Indeed, the reason I dropped it was that there is provision there to rerun d'Hondt. However, I am interested in and am not unsympathetic to that amendment.

On the SDLP's other amendments, amendment No 13 is mutually exclusive with my amendment No 11. I am not unsympathetic to the new schedule that it would create. Personally, I would certainly support moving back to the d'Hondt system for the election of the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Justice Minister, but it would be wrong of me not to point out to Members that we have a chance at getting agreement on amendment No 11 and at taking those small steps towards political maturity here. I very much welcome the engagement that I have had with Mr Attwood and his party colleagues on the Bill over recent weeks. I think that there is much merit in the new schedule, but I do not think that we will get support for it. I support, of course, his amendments on a motion to request a Programme for Government and on the function of Statutory Committees, which got some support in the last debate. However, I would probably pitch this around amendment Nos 11, 20 and 21, in saying that I think I can get enough support in the Assembly to take those steps towards that all-important political maturity.

I turn to the SDLP amendment on the establishment of a welfare reform and measures Committee. I am broadly supportive of a measure like that, although it would probably have been better to do it before we gave some welfare powers back to Westminster. If it were to look at things like how we are spending the money or to hold to account how we might use the £585 million on welfare, it would be worth looking at that. Indeed, is that where we want to spend that money? Today, I got a response back from the Employment and Learning Minister in which he said that he effectively has no money to deliver an economic inactivity strategy. Those are the points that a Committee like that could certainly look at, so I am not unsympathetic to that amendment.

On the UUP amendments, I just worry that amendment Nos 7 and 8 are slightly contradictory. If one party formed the opposition, taking out the provision for a deputy leader of a non-Executive group could limit you in what is written into Standing Orders on a future occasion. However, I am very supportive of adding, through amendment No 8, "oral questions and statements". That is important.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. He seems to have an unhealthy fixation with the term "deputy leader". Given the difficult experience he had in both the posts that he held in different political parties, I wonder at the wisdom. We are not particularly stuck on titles, particularly "deputy leader". I have been deputy leader too.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful. I replaced the honourable Member as deputy leader of that party at that time, and I will not go into which of us performed the role better. I know that he certainly got to perform it for longer.

I accept his point that he is not fixated on titles: I simply make the point that, if the leader were not available, it might somehow limit things further down, or you would be depending on Standing Orders making more provision. I would simply say that, if it is in the Bill and your party was the party in opposition, you would not have to use the title but might be glad of having the position at the point when it comes to asking questions of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. That is the point. I support your amendment No 8; it is a sensible amendment.

I turn to the amendments in the names of Steven Agnew and Claire Sugden. Amendment No 12 is a stand-alone amendment and would effectively create a second schedule to the Bill. There are important issues, and I know that Mr Agnew and Ms Sugden have spoken before about what Assembly processes there are for holding Ministers to account or keeping within the ministerial code. They are good, sensible amendments that we should look favourably on.

Mr Ross: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he not think that there may be some confusion around that amendment, given that there is a distinction between the ministerial code and the ministerial code of conduct? The ministerial code is directly from the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act 2006. Therefore, it is entirely appropriate that the courts would be the ultimate decision-maker regarding whether the code has been broken. The code of conduct for Ministers is something quite separate and contained within the ministerial code. That may be able to be decided in the Assembly or some other structure, but does he not see that there is a shortcoming in the way that the amendment has been drafted in that there is no distinction made between the two?

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Member for those points. It is up to those who tabled the amendments to speak more fully to them, but the general frustration in the Assembly is how we hold Ministers to account when things go wrong? We usually end up with a vote that breaks down into a petition of concern, which does not seem to get us anywhere. Sanction has been passed on very few Ministers. I suspect that some of that frustration is probably coming out in the amendments.

In conclusion, I hope that the amendments standing in my name find favour with the Assembly as I have tried to speak to every party on many occasions on this and have worked with them. If my amendments, including amendment No 11, are made, I will propose to move amendment LT1, which is the amendment to put the long title back in, with the transfer of responsibilities motion. I urge Members to support the amendments standing in my name because we have a chance to shape the Bill, move in the direction of political maturity for the greater good and improve the delivery and accountability of the Assembly and Executive.

9.15 pm

Mr Sheehan (The Deputy Chairperson of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. The amendments under consideration cover a range of issues, some of which were not considered by the Committee. I should point out that the Committee did not have sight of or consider the amendments tabled at Further Consideration Stage and, therefore, does not have a Committee position on them. I will confine my remarks to the amendments that deal with issues that the Committee considered during Committee Stage.

With regard to amendment No 4, the Committee had considered the Bill sponsor's previous amendment to the criteria for a qualifying party, which set a threshold of 5%, as opposed to the 8% proposed by him today. The Committee divided and agreed that it did not support it. In its deliberations on the matter, the Committee had before it the evidence of Professor John Coakley, who reminded the Committee of the need to be mindful of changes in the electoral support base for political parties with the proposed reduction in the number of MLAs from 2021.

Although the Committee did not have sight of amendment No 6 prior to formal clause-by-clause scrutiny, it considered the issue of Members leaving the opposition and joining the Executive, as provided for in that amendment. The amendment, which has been tabled by the SDLP, allows for Standing Orders to provide that a Member or Members, having previously declined ministerial office, could leave the opposition and join the Executive. Paragraph 12 of the schedule to the Bill as introduced had a similar provision for Members to leave the opposition and join the Executive. During Committee Stage, the Bill sponsor advised members that he would oppose that provision at Consideration Stage, and the Committee unanimously agreed that it was content for him to do so.

Amendment No 7, which has been tabled by the Ulster Unionist Party, removes the requirement for the nomination of a deputy leader of the non-Executive party when the opposition is formed by one qualifying party only. The Committee considered the titles proposed for the leadership of the opposition in some detail during Committee Stage. The Committee heard that, in Scotland and Wales, there are no titles of leader of the opposition or deputy leader; there is only the designation "leaders of parties not in government". The Committee divided and did not agree on the clause and the amendments relating to the titles of the leadership of the opposition.

Amendment No 22, which has been tabled by Steven Agnew and Claire Sugden, proposes a provision in the new schedule that provides for a procedure for the investigation of alleged breaches of the ministerial code. During its deliberations on paragraph 9 of the schedule to the Bill as introduced, the Committee considered a submission from Mr Steven Agnew that called for the introduction of a mechanism to investigate breaches of the ministerial code as proposed in amendment No 22 today. The Committee did not seek an amendment to the Bill to that effect. However, in a previous Committee report on the review of Parts III and IV of the NI Act 1998, Committee members agreed that, subject to Assembly approval, the Assembly and Executive Review Committee may return to consider section 28A of the 1998 Act relating to the ministerial code.

Finally, I wish to address the amendments relating to a new schedule and the long title. I remind Members that the Committee divided and agreed that it was not content with the schedule and the long title of the Bill as introduced. The Committee did not have sight of any of the amendments relating to the new schedule and the long title and, therefore, does not have a position on them.

Ms P Bradley: I do not intend to prolong the proceedings any longer than I have to. I will simply outline the clauses that we intend to support and those that we will oppose. At this hour on a Tuesday evening, I do not know whether I should thank Mr McCallister for listening to the concerns that have been voiced by Members and producing yet another set of amendments. I suppose that we can be thankful that we have only one group to speak to this evening. Mr McCallister got up earlier and said that he would not speak for very long. For some, that means an hour, but, for him, it did not mean very long. Many of us are now into our seventh hour today in the Chamber, so I thank him for that.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I will begin with amendment No 4 to clause 2. In the previous debate we opposed the amendment that a qualifying party be made up of 5% of the total number of MLAs. In the revised amendment to clause 2 we are happy to support the Bill sponsor and his increase to 8%, and we are happy to support amendment No 5 to clause 3.

With reference to amendment No 6 — the new clause — I look forward to the explanation from the Member opposite in deciding whether we support it or not. We will also be happy to support amendment No 7 to clause 5, but we will not support amendment Nos 8, 9, and 10.

On the subject of the new clause in amendment No 9 — "Establishment of Welfare Reform and Measures Committee" — I understand the sentiments behind the new clause and, like many others in the Chamber, I share those concerns. I know that, when we had a lengthy debate about the Welfare Reform Bill, this came up several times, so I share the Members' concerns, although I will not support their amendment as I do not believe that this is necessarily the right place for it. However, I want to put it on record that I understand the sentiments behind it.

We will support the Bill's sponsor in inserting a new clause through amendment No 11 but will not support amendment Nos 12 or 13. In clause 12 we are minded to support amendment No 14 as opposed to amendment No 15 and will oppose amendment No 16. Amendment Nos 17, 18, and 19 make small changes, and we are happy to support the Bill's sponsor on them. Turning to the schedule, we will support the Bill's sponsor on amendment Nos 20 and 21. At this stage, we will oppose the remainder of the amendments to the schedule — amendment Nos 22 to 28. Finally, we will support amendment LT1 to the long title.

Mr Attwood: I again acknowledge the immense contribution of both John McCallister and the Bill Office. In a frenzied end of mandate period, that office in particular has been very supportive of Members from all parties across the range of legislation, including this Bill.

I will commence my comments by addressing amendment No 6 and other SDLP amendments and will then, very quickly, address the amendments tabled by other parties.

We have proposed a welfare reform and measures Committee. I note that Ms Bradley said that she supported the sentiment but did not, from what I can conclude, support the method. Taking a step back from the wider politics around this issue and this place, I would like to advance a number of reasons why this is the time and place to introduce this mechanism. The first is that, if the history of the last two or three years demonstrates anything, it proves that we should try to build better mechanisms into the architecture of devolution so that we can better manage the welfare issue. The history of the past two or three years and the contention and turbulence around welfare suggest to us that the more we try to manage it, the better it is for the authority of devolution.

The second reason is that, at times, I wonder whether there is a full appreciation of the scale of what is happening in welfare reform, arising from the passage of the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Act 2015 in Westminster before Christmas and the forthcoming passing of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill, which is going through Westminster and is the consequence of the legislative consent motion (LCM) passed in November in this place. Sometimes I wonder if the full scale of that is appreciated and how it will work through in the lives of the citizens and communities of this part of Ireland. A welfare reform and measures Committee would enable the Assembly, in recognition of the scale of what is happening and what is to come, to have an institutional mechanism to monitor and look at all of that.

I will not have the opportunity tonight to read into the record all that I intended to, but the SDLP leader will lodge a commentary in the Library on the scale of what the Assembly agreed in November by way of the LCM and what it will mean for people in Northern Ireland, the highlight of which is benefit freezes for four years. That is what we gave London the power to do. There will be benefit freezes for four years in jobseekers' allowance, employment and support allowance (ESA), income support, child benefit, applicable amounts of housing benefit and so on and so forth. The Work and Pensions Minister will have unilateral powers, when national circumstances require him to do so, to vary the benefits rate. There are enormous changes for people on work-related ESA and major cuts to their entitlements. Support for mortgage interest will now be treated as a loan. Those are the powers that the Assembly gave to London through the LCM.

We owe it to our citizens that, given what London is doing and what London is going to impose, we in this place have an institutional mechanism to try to manage, monitor and mitigate all of that. We are now in the surprising position where it was Members of the House of Lords last week who voted down the London welfare proposals to reduce people's entitlement to ESA by £30 a week. We are relying on London to make the argument that the Assembly should have been making in terms of its own authority. Is there not a responsibility to our citizens and communities to manage all of that?

The reason why I say that it seems to me that some people do not understand this or pretend not to understand it is the comments that were made by two Ministers. On 7 December 2015, the deputy First Minister said that the vote on the LCM that took place in the House:

"was to deal with what I regarded as a technicality".

He added:

"I regard it as a technicality that saved us £40 million." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 110, p76, col 2].

It is not a technicality to hand powers to London that see benefit freezes for four years. It is not a technicality to hand to London unilateral power to reduce the benefit cap when national circumstances, as London deem them to be, prevail. It is not a technicality that the House of Lords last week voted down the ESA proposals that form part of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill. Similarly, on 24 January, Mr O'Dowd said that London was:

"passing a piece of legislation which has more to do with timing than it has to do with policy."

What has freezing benefits for four years got to do with timing? It is all about hitting in the pocket people in Northern Ireland who will have, unlike in the couple of years since 2011, no uprating of their benefit.

There is a change coming, and there will be real timeline impacts as a result of what London is proposing in that people here will have to live with the consequences of the LCM for four years. For those three reasons, the SDLP again makes the argument that we should have a welfare reform and measures Committee.

Ms Bradley rightly pointed out that, this time last year, we made this proposal. When we made the proposal, this is what the then leader of the DUP and First Minister said:

"I say to the Member ... that I have no difficulty in supporting that kind of Committee, though it is not a matter for this legislation." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 101, p429, col 1].

He added:

"You do not [have to] set up an Assembly Committee through DSD legislation. I have no difficulty in having continual monitoring and observation of how the welfare ... proposals are working out, and that will inform any future decisions that we have to take." [Official Report Vol101, No8, p48, col 1].

9.30 pm

A lot of water has passed under the bridge since that time, and I would argue that, given the nature of this issue, the surrender of welfare responsibility to London with the LCM in November and the severe impacts in real time and much more than a technicality that the current Bill in London will have upon our citizens, then people should think again about building into the institutions of this Assembly a mechanism that can, as the amendment suggests, keep under review the 2015 Act; keep under review the Bill that is going through the Chambers in Westminster at the moment; monitor the implementation of both; and consider all consequential welfare measures and absence of mitigation. We owe it to our citizens to build that into the architecture and, through that mechanism, come up with proposals that, through a motion in this Chamber, we put to London to try to mitigate their future thinking, not least when it comes to those matters that have not been devolved and are the responsibility of HMRC.

I say to the DUP in particular, have the circumstances not sufficiently changed in the last year for the DUP to take the natural conclusion of what Mr Robinson said a year ago and agree to establish a Committee here to influence what happens over the coming months and into the next mandate?

I now move to paragraph 3 in the schedule, which is a very simple proposal to revert to the process that governed the election of the First Minister and deputy First Minister further to the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the Good Friday Agreement. That required of the Assembly a procedure to elect, in this Chamber, the First Minister and deputy First Minister by a majority of Unionists voting and Nationalists voting on a joint ticket. The reasons for that, at that time, were self-evident, and I do not intend to rehearse them.

We think that it is time now, nine years since that was undone at St Andrews and by the subsequent St Andrews Act, to revert back to the processes that were in place further to the agreement and the Northern Ireland Act, and to reverse from the process of the St Andrews negotiations and the St Andrews Act, whereby there was a process of nomination by envelope, rather than election under the rules of the Assembly prior to that time. I urge Members to consider whether this is not the time and place to return to that mechanism.

Similarly, amendment No 36, again reverts to the d'Hondt principle, laid down in section 18 of the Northern Ireland Act —

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will, yes.

Mr Weir: Just to confirm, unless I misheard the Member, he mentioned amendment No 36, but this only goes up to amendment No 28.

Mr Attwood: I stand corrected on that and correct the record, but the appropriate amendment, which the Member knows, even if I do not know its correct number —

Mr Agnew: No 26.

Mr Attwood: Amendment No 26. I thank the Member behind me. Amendment No 26 reintroduces the d'Hondt principle for the nomination of all other Ministers, per the provisions of the Northern Ireland Act and the Good Friday Agreement. On the bespoke arrangement that the SDLP opposed and that was introduced to the House further to legislation in 2010 whereby the election of the Justice Minister was to be by a cross-community vote, we think that we are in a place and in a phase of politics where we should revert to the proposals that were in the Northern Ireland Act governing the nomination of all Ministers.

I will now touch on all the other amendments, including other amendments in the SDLP's name. In respect of amendment No 4, tabled by Mr McCallister, subject to what we hear in the debate, we are inclined to support it and amendment No 5 in relation to the timeline for the formation of an opposition. That is in the event that any opposition is formed because, whilst there may be a statutory provision further to the passage of this legislation for that to happen, there is no presumption that there will be an opposition. It may be that those parties entitled under democratic mandate and the d'Hondt principle to take up their entitlements in the Executive will do so. I am sure that that is the intention of all parties going into the election.

I will not speak on amendment No 6 because I do not intend to move it. We are against amendment No 7 in respect of the removal of the "Deputy Leader" reference. We support amendment Nos 8 and 10, both for the entitlements on the Floor of the opposition leader and deputy leader but, more crucially even than that, a review of the support for private Member's bills, as proposed by Mr Allister. This is a minimum amendment. It calls for a review on an occasional basis. It does no violence to anybody in the Chamber; in fact, it serves the interests of all parties and all private Members to have an occasional review about what support is necessary for private Members bringing forward a private Member's Bill. The character of devolution, in many instances, has been defined by the character and quality of private Member's Bills. I look behind me to people who have sponsored such legislation, and Northern Ireland is a better place because of it. Therefore, I ask Members to support that. I do not know the position of Sinn Féin on it. Ms Bradley said that she would oppose amendment Nos 8 and 10. Surely those amendments, especially amendment No 10, are a minimum intervention to serve the interests of everybody, including Ms Bradley, and I urge that the DUP to consider that further.

We listened closely to what the proposer of amendment No 11 said about the transfer of responsibilities. It brings me to make this point: the SDLP is minded to support the proposals tabled by Mr McCallister in respect of the change from excepted to reserved matters. We do that in a quite delicate way; we restrict it to the issue of the Programme for Government, even though that matter is already, in one way, addressed by the legislation that is about to be tabled in Westminster arising from A Fresh Start. We also do it in order to encourage a debate about the role and authority of the presiding officer or Speaker. We think that there is time and place to have a wider conversation about that issue and all the principles that were articulated in an earlier amendment from Mr McCallister in relation to the nomination of a Speaker and, thereafter, how a Speaker would conduct his affairs and whether the Speaker or presiding officer would stand for election in the future. On this occasion, we are minded to support amendment No 11 in order to test the waters.

We are not anxious about further powers being transferred to the Assembly or for mechanisms to be created whereby, in the fullness of time, the powers, role or character of devolution might be enhanced. It might be useful to test the waters in a moderate way through the amendments proposed by Mr McCallister, both on the presiding officer and in respect of the issue of the PFG.

We listened closely to what Mr Agnew and his colleague had to say in relation to his schedule about breaches of the ministerial code, because, let us be frank, this Chamber has not covered itself in glory when it comes to claimed breaches of the ministerial code. Without going into detail, Ministers have escaped proper remedy, censure or intervention by the Assembly because people have not thought independently and objectively about the failure of Ministers to live up to the ministerial code. We listened closely to what has been said in that regard.

Finally, I ask Members to support amendment No 13, tabled by the SDLP. As the Deputy Speaker indicated, amendment Nos 11 and 13 are mutually exclusive. Members can, therefore, pass amendment No 11 and amendment No 13. By doing so, they can create further mechanisms for motions to come forward to the Chamber in relation to those matters identified in the schedule. I encourage Members to support that mechanism for bringing about further reform of the Assembly in future.

Mr Kennedy: The day is far spent, and some are far from home. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Bill at Further Consideration Stage. It is always a pleasure to follow Mr Attwood. Neither I nor my party always agree with what he says, but at least he makes a contribution to the House in a very thought-provoking way, as he has tonight.

There were a huge number of amendments at the previous stage, and there are quite a few at this stage that, if made, will, once again, totally change the shape of the Bill from what we saw when it was introduced. Clearly, the sponsor of the Bill is keen to salvage whatever he can in the circumstances that he finds himself in.

My party's support for the establishment of an opposition in this House has long been on the record. It is the norm in pretty much every democracy, yet we are still waiting patiently to see those structures put in place in this House. We have seen the disengagement between this House and the public outside these walls. Offering them an alternative, or the chance to change their Government, could be a transformational way of reengaging the wider population and the electorate. There also needs to be better governance and increased delivery. We are seeing other measures, including a reduction in the number of Departments and MLAs, which, hopefully, will lead to improved governance in Northern Ireland. I am also hopeful that a number of the amendments tabled today that I will touch on will help to address public apathy towards this House.

I will now look specifically at some of the amendments, beginning with amendment No 4 on qualifying parties. We thought through who should be eligible for the rights and entitlements that will come with forming an opposition, as well as the differentials between parties that are in opposition to Government and parties that are not in the Government. In this amendment, the threshold has been heightened since the previous stage, but it still seems, broadly, a pragmatic approach that recognises that the institutions should evolve. It provides better future-proofing mechanisms than if the threshold were at the other end of the scale and parties were excluded at the point that they no longer qualified for a Ministry. It gives more space for any future size or shape of the Assembly. It should also encourage a more dynamic democracy in this House.

9.45 pm

We have seen the lack of delivery since 2007. We have seen the relationship between the larger, more dominant parties in the Executive and the smaller ones. Indeed, we have seen Executive parties voting against the Budget, the Programme for Government and other issues. Rather than continuing to see, effectively, an opposition within the Government, hopefully we can create a robust enough space for those parties that decide that they do not wish to be part of the Government, for one reason or another, to provide an effective opposition voice.

Amendment Nos 5 and 19 are on the timing of the Bill's coming into effect. We can support those proposals to prevent a situation where parties still cannot form an official opposition following successful passage of the Bill. I do not think that, after all this time, we want to come back after the election and have parties unable to form an official opposition.

Amendment Nos 7 and 8, tabled by my party, are the removal of the need for deputy leader and opposition leader questioning rights. The first is to tidy up something on which I had an exchange earlier with Mr McCallister, who loves terms like deputy leader. We have always felt that any titles within the opposition should be informal. Deputy leader seems to be a party position. We are not convinced of the need to have that formal position within the opposition, especially given that, in this scenario, it would be formed by just one party.

On amendment No 8, it is vital that any opposition has adequate opportunity to question, scrutinise and debate in the House. This amendment is an attempt to broaden out the opportunities for the leaders of parties making up opposition to question the First Minister and deputy First Minister. It seems right that they should take up the first two questions in response to questions for oral answer and statements — alongside topical questions, as is already outlined in the Bill. There is not a great deal of detail on what enhancements the opposition will receive to their contributions in the House. This is a fairly modest adjustment and is compatible with what should be the natural order of things in a Government and opposition model of democracy.

We support the amendments tabled in the names of Ms Sugden and Mr Agnew on alleged breaches of the ministerial code. The current situation, where we have a process for independent investigation and reporting for MLAs but not for Ministers, is in many ways ridiculous and unsustainable. To continue to fail to take action on this will only serve to undermine public confidence in this House.

Mr Ross: I thank the Member for giving way. Of course, the MLA code of conduct is not a legal requirement, whereas the ministerial code is. That is where the distinction has to be made. I made the point to Mr McCallister earlier that, whilst the ministerial code of conduct may have some sort of mechanism for investigation within the Assembly or by an independent commissioner, surely the ministerial code, as a legal requirement, has to be settled ultimately in the courts.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the member for his intervention. The improvement that is outlined in this amendment will at least satisfy some of the public concerns about Executive Ministers being at loggerheads or capable of going on solo runs. It is outrageous that we do not have a process of independent investigation of any alleged breaches of the ministerial code.

Mr Ross: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kennedy: Yes.

Mr Ross: I really hate to labour the point but, of course, we do have an independent arbiter of the ministerial code. Two Ministers have been sanctioned in the courts around breaching the ministerial code. It is misleading to say that there is no mechanism there. That mechanism may be far from perfect and members of the public may be frustrated with it, but we have to acknowledge that there is an independent mechanism there to ensure that the ministerial code is enforced.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the member for giving that information.

My memory of Ministers taking each other to court was that it was fairly unedifying for the Assembly and Executive generally and for local politics.

As indicated at Consideration Stage, we are happy to support amendment No 18, which concerns the legislative timetable. There has to be a better way of passing legislation through the House than the tidal wave that we have seen arriving in the latter part of this mandate. There has been a rush to the gate. This late sitting, other late sittings in recent days and predicted late sittings are part of that. Putting an onus on the Executive to lay a legislative timetable can provide a better and steadier flow of legislation through the House, allowing more time for scrutiny and proper debate.

Amendment No 23 has been referred to, particularly by Mr Attwood and less so by others. It concerns the joint election of FM and dFM. In moving away from the joint election by cross-community vote that was put in place in 1998, we have seen the compounding of sectarian headcounts at Assembly elections. Since the changes made at St Andrews, we have seen the DUP and Sinn Féin using it, during elections in particular, to go to the doors either scaremongering about the possibility of a member of Sinn Féin taking up the role of First Minister or to rally people behind the cause of beating unionism to the post.

Dr Farry: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kennedy: Yes.

Dr Farry: I appreciate the sentiments of the Member, and I probably concur with him on the amendment. However, is it not a little strange to make those comments in light of what happened during the general election in a number of constituencies, including his constituency of Newry and Armagh, as well as East Belfast and Fermanagh and South Tyrone?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his intervention. It is clear that the Alliance Party is still sore at having lost East Belfast to the agreed unionist candidate on that occasion. Sour grapes do not contribute meaningfully to the debate.

We should return to joint election and, indeed, a shared future, if it is to mean anything. The largest parties agreed a shared future strategy on their own. I do not think that any of the other parties signed up to that. If it is to be truly shared and not simply shared out, there should be a joint election. OFMDFM and its future reincarnation — the Executive Office — will have to be inhabited by a unionist party and a nationalist party. A joint election, with a majority of unionists and a majority of nationalists voting in it, would best reflect that.

The debate will not be that lengthy, but the votes and the consequence of those votes will be more telling in how the Bill emerges at Final Stage. That outcome is one that we look to with great interest.

Mr Lunn: I join others in congratulating John McCallister on his perseverance, fortitude and patience. He has managed to get the Bill through to this stage. Bits have fallen off it at every stage, but it is still a worthwhile Bill. There is useful stuff in it for us to pass tonight, so I hope that we will pass most of it.

So far, Sinn Féin has been very reticent about what it is going to do about the Bill. Mr Sheehan spoke as Deputy Chair of the Committee and reiterated some of the Committee decisions. I think that, at the last stage, Sinn Féin voted against everything, so, unless another Sinn Féin Member speaks, we will have to wait and see what way that party will vote.

Mr Kennedy made the point about the gradual transformation of this place. I agree with him that it is slow, but at least it is sure. We will have fewer MLAs and fewer Departments, and, if things go according to plan, either through this Bill or through 'A Fresh Start', we will eventually have some sort of opposition, which cannot be a bad thing.

I will go through the amendments, but I will not spend very much time on them. We agree with amendment No 4. The figure of 8% is a good compromise between what was originally proposed and what was threatened, and it is a useful addition to clause 2 as another option. It follows from amendment No 5 that there will be time for the qualifying parties to get their act together.

I would have had plenty to say about amendment No 6, except that Mr Attwood has said that he will not move it. That is a relief, because I certainly could not have voted for it.

Amendment No 7 in the name of Mr Kennedy and Mr Swann leaves out the paragraph that refers to the need for a deputy leader of the main opposition party. I would have thought that the main opposition party would have a deputy leader to start with, unless it happened to be NI21. [Laughter.] We are not going to object to that part of clause 5; it is not one of the most important features of what is left of the Bill.

We agree with amendment No 8 totally. Inserting "oral questions and statements" is a useful addition to the good workings of the Assembly.

I listened carefully to what Mr Attwood said about amendment No 9. He ranged far and wide on the reasons why we needed a Committee like the one proposed in the amendment, and he is clearly very sore about having to rely on London for some decisions. He talked about the scale of change and the breadth and effect of welfare reform, and I tend to agree with him about the new clause; it would be a good addition to our structure. I cannot help thinking that it would mostly discuss human rights and equality. I remember the Ad Hoc Committee talking about that before the Bill was passed. I have said it many times, and I will say it again: in Westminster, they have a Standing Committee that looks at these issues across the board. Maybe we will get to that some day, but this would be a good start on a very important subject.

I am surprised that the DUP has indicated that it might vote against amendment No 10, because, frankly, I cannot imagine an argument against something that would provide support for the development of private Members' Bills at least once every three years. We have seen the difficulties that Members have had in trying to force private Members' Bills through the House. Those difficulties are not entirely due to the House not agreeing with them; it is a big job. Somebody mentioned that, in Scotland, a Bill officer is designated to deal with a private Member's Bill. Some of the private Members' Bills that have been proposed here have been at least as valuable as some of the government Bills.

Dr Farry: More.

Mr Lunn: Perhaps more, as somebody has whispered to me. The amendment has value.

Amendment No 11 inserts a new clause for the Executive's transfer of responsibilities motion. Maybe I misunderstood Mr Attwood, but it is mutually exclusive with amendment No 13, so it is interesting that the SDLP will support amendment No 11. It would have gone to the vote anyway. If amendment No 11 does not pass, we will support amendment No 13, because they are not vastly different. By the sounds of it, amendment No 11 will be the one to pass.

Amendment No 12 is on breaches of the ministerial code. I will not repeat what others have said about breaches of the ministerial code, but it is certainly something that needs tidied up. I am not satisfied that recourse to the courts of the land is the way to settle disputes between Ministers in the same Executive or Government. Perhaps we need amendment No 12, and we will certainly vote for it.

10.00 pm

As for amendment No 13, let us see where we go with amendment No 11. I do not think that we need to dwell on amendment Nos 14, 15, 16 and 17 because they are consequential. Amendment No 18 proposes:

"an annual debate on the Executive legislative timetable".

What a good idea, Mr Speaker; let us go for it. That would be a step forward. Amendment No 19 proposes to:

"Leave out 'one month after the day' and insert 'the day after'"

— Royal Assent. I imagine that that is the norm. I have never studied the subject but I thought that a Bill would come into effect on the day after Royal Assent. However, I am still learning here.

I move now to the schedules, or what I might call the wish list. There is not much in the schedules that I disagree with. On the issue of reserved rather than excepted matters, I must confess that I had to look up what that meant. I understand now that, if a matter is reserved, and if Westminster agrees, it may be passed to the Assembly to deal with, whereas if it is an excepted matter, Westminster has to deal with it. If we are maturing as an Assembly, surely we can manage those matters ourselves.

I am absolutely on board with the bit on the ministerial code. Amendment No 23 relates to the election of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. We agree with the SDLP and the Ulster Unionists on that. Amendment No 23 proposes that the Assembly shall elect the First Minister and deputy First Minister or joint First Ministers:

“with the support of a majority of the designated Nationalists voting,”

— it is a pity that we have designations, but there we are —

“a majority of the designated Unionists voting and a majority of Assembly members voting.”

That might give us some clout in the matter. Amendment No 24 proposes that political parties be required to establish a Programme for Government no later than two weeks after an Assembly election. That was discussed at Consideration Stage. It could be two, three or four weeks. I think that it started off at four weeks, and now it is two, or else the other way round. Two weeks is probably sufficient.

I do not know whether Mr Attwood will move amendment No 25. He is indicating that he will not, so I will not berate him about it.

Amendment No 26 proposes that all Ministers be nominated under the d'Hondt system. Let me put it this way: frankly, I doubt that Sinn Féin or the DUP will wear that one, so it is probably not going to have legs. It is purely symbolic; it is in the wish list of things that we might ask Westminster to rule on. I do not think that, in the present circumstances, it will pass tonight. At the minute, it is entirely up to the Assembly who gets the Justice Ministry, and I fancy that it will stay that way.

Amendment No 27 relates to the function of Committees to scrutinise Ministers, propose legislation and so on. I have no problem with that whatsoever. You can word it whatever way you want, but Committees will continue to scrutinise, criticise, support and propose legislation, as they always have.

I think that is about it, Mr Speaker. We instinctively support Mr McCallister's Amendment No LT1 as the long title to go for. We will see what way the votes go, Mr Speaker, but that is all that I have to say.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I do not want to delay the House tonight because we laid out our stall to John McCallister and the House at Consideration Stage, when we stated that we believed that the need and demand for opposition had been realised and satisfied in the Fresh Start Agreement. That remains our position. There is nothing in any of these amendments that changes that opinion. It remains our belief that the content of the amendments could be steered through by convention or by amending Standing Orders, or a combination of both. Sinn Féin will be registering its opposition to all the amendments.

Mr Agnew: I will not speak to all the amendments. Rather, I will focus on amendment Nos 12 and 22 on the ministerial code; amendment No 26 on the appointment of Ministers; and amendment No 24 on agreeing a Programme for Government.

It was necessary to table amendment Nos 12 and 22 in my name and that of Ms Claire Sugden to correct an anomaly that has existed for as long as these institutions have been up and running: MLAs are held to a ministerial code that is independently investigated when breaches are alleged, with published reports and full transparency around that process, but complaints against Ministers cannot be investigated in such a way. There is no transparency. Indeed, there is not even a procedure for dealing with complaints other than to appeal to the particular party leader to rein in that Minister. Unfortunately, in Northern Ireland, that has not taken place: no Minister has been disciplined by their party leader, and neither the ministerial code nor the code of conduct has been upheld.

At previous stages of the Bill and in other debates, I have talked about how we need to move beyond the institutions simply surviving to their producing good governance. This is another opportunity to show that we are serious about that, but I fear that it will be wasted.

Mr Ross: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will. I suspect that I know the point.

Mr Ross: I will take you up on the other point. You heard the points that I made earlier, and I am sure that you will want to respond on the definitions of and distinctions between the two codes. I know that, in the past, the Member has been quite critical about how the investigation of the MLAs' code of conduct works and said that he is not entirely satisfied with that process. I wonder what process he suggests. In amendment No 22, it is not entirely clear who would do the investigation and whether it would be any different from the investigation of MLAs' conduct. How would it be an improvement on the current system for investigating MLAs, of which he has been quite critical in the past?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention, but I am somewhat confused by it. The only thing that I have been critical of is the scope of the code of conduct, in that it applies to MLAs only in their role as an MLA. It is quite strictly defined. An all too common defence is, "Well, even though I was in the Building and in my MLA office, I was at a party meeting and not acting as an MLA." That seems to be a reasonable defence to make a breach inadmissible, and I have criticised that. The scope should extend to all political acts. It is reasonable to assume that an MLA is being an MLA when he attends a political rally or party meeting. It is reasonable that the public expect MLAs to adhere to the code of conduct. The process itself is one that I support. I will give way to the Member if I have said anything different in the past, but that has been my only criticism. I made those points during the Committee's review of the code of conduct and was voted down by other parties. I accept that and move on.

The process that I envisage is similar. The Member is right that the detail is not in the amendment, nor is it intended to be there or in much of what is proposed in the schedules. It is about agreeing principles, and the principle that I ask the Assembly to agree today is that Ministers should be held to a code of conduct. The Member makes the distinction between the ministerial code and the code of conduct. Of course, the code of conduct is contained within the ministerial code. If the Member feels so compelled, and if there were a genuine will by the party opposite to correct that anomaly and open the code of conduct to full public scrutiny and a complaints procedure, we could agree the amendment because it is simply a compulsion on AERC to table an Assembly motion. The amendment does not give the detail; it agrees a principle and allows some flexibility.

If the Member is saying that he is agreed in principle to an independent investigation of the code of conduct, articulates that and votes on that basis, AERC, in acting on this, can look not just at the content of the amendment but at the content of the debate.

Mr Ross: I appreciate the Member giving way. My point is that there is an independent mechanism for the ministerial code, which is a legal requirement, and that is, appropriately, in the courts. The House deserves a little more information in that we are beyond debating the principles of the Bill, which is Second Stage, and are now looking for detail. If you are asking somebody to support an amendment, it is appropriate that we ask for the detail of how you think it will work in practical terms. The Member's amendments are lacking in that regard. The House is due the courtesy of a little more information about how the mechanism would work in practice.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member again. In this case, I would distinguish between legislation in the main body of the Bill and the mechanism that Mr McCallister has devised to get around issues that are not within the competence of the Assembly. There is a different nature to the schedules, and it is clear that the intent of the motion is about agreeing a principle. I am not making a point about Second Stage as opposed to Further Consideration Stage; it is about the Assembly stating its intent that it wants independent investigation. I accept the Member making a distinction with the code of conduct. If we were to agree that, the matter could be resolved to the Member's and my satisfaction if he were minded to support independent investigation of the code of conduct. I do not accept that legal recourse is sufficient. You should not have to have the means.

Ministers and the Assembly have been brought into disrepute. Ministers have been ill served, and the public have been ill served. When Arlene Foster was Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, for example, it was alleged that she had breached the code by not declaring that her husband owned land in an area licensed for fracking. I was close to that one. The public were ill served because that was never independently investigated. She said that she had not breached the code, and we were expected to take her word for it. Equally, the Minister was ill served because she did not have the opportunity to have an independent investigator declare that she had made no breach. It was left up in the air, left undetermined and left to the court of public opinion and to trial by media. That ill serves Ministers, the public and these institutions in terms of respect as we go forward.

Whilst I respect the Member and the role that he played on the Standards and Privileges Committee — he was a very strong, fair and conscientious Chair — with all due respect, his argument is a smokescreen to hide the fact that the DUP and Sinn Féin have held the positions of First Minister and deputy First Minister since 2007. They have been the two largest parties, and there has been no desire or willingness to have their Ministers held up to the code of conduct, public scrutiny, transparency and independent investigation. That needs to be put right. As I say, it is part of the good governance of the Assembly and part of moving forward on good governance. I call on Members, including Members opposite, to support the amendment. I hope that they will accept my explanation. Sinn Féin has made its position clear on all the amendments, and I will come to that presently. I call on Members to support this and to make Ministers subject to some accountability for how they conduct themselves.

I move on to amendment No 26. I want to speak on the appointment of Ministers and about bringing the Minister of Justice into d'Hondt. I think that my first contribution to the Assembly was when we debated the appointment of the Justice Minister. I said then — I hold to it now — that the current mechanism for appointing a Justice Minister effectively propped up a sectarian system. That was the whole rationale in 2010 for separating the Justice Minister from the others. I have no loyalty to d'Hondt: if we want to debate how we appoint Ministers on the whole, that is fine, but making special provision for the Justice Minister was purely and simply about one thing. It was about saying, "We have to keep them uns out of Justice". I do not know whether that was the DUP saying, "We have to keep Sinn Féin out of Justice". The spectre of Gerry Kelly being Justice Minister was often brought up — not by me, Mr Kelly, but by others. It was deemed equally unacceptable that the DUP should hold the post of Justice Minister. That mechanism was created to continue the sectarian attitudes of keeping the other out. Surely these institutions, when they were created, were about moving on from that.

I find it ironic that it is Alliance that holds that position. That is not even to criticise, because, if we go back to 2010, we see that it was a case of it taking the position or there was the potential that the institutions would collapse. I do not say that as an attack; it is simply an observation that, in doing that, we give justification to the argument that we must keep "them uns" out. It is time to move on. We talk about moving on and normalisation, and treating the position of Justice Minister like any other Minister is another step in doing that. If a party is capable of holding the position of Minister of Education or of taking up the role of Finance Minister or of First Minister and deputy First Minister, I see no reason why we should make an exception for the Minister of Justice.

A lot has been said about the need to agree a Programme for Government before running d'Hondt. The one point I will reiterate is the need for collective responsibility in government in Northern Ireland. I have made that point time and time again. Unfortunately, Mr McCallister's proposal to make the Executive a single legal entity was rejected. However, that measure, along with this proposal, would have helped to move us towards good offering governance.

I turn to Sinn Féin's blanket opposition to all the amendments and the Bill at large. They say simply that 'A Fresh Start' was the agreement. I was not a party to 'A Fresh Start'. Although many Members' parties may have been involved, many were not themselves a party to 'A Fresh Start'. It is right that, in full transparency and in full public view, the Assembly should decide how we reform the institutions. I have often argued that, given that the institutions were created as a result of a referendum — a public vote — the public should have much more say. Saying that a behind-closed-doors deal with little public scrutiny of the negotiations or certainly little public view of them should be the template for a better way forward, rather than a free, fair, open and transparent vote on detail in the Assembly, I find bizarre. You should oppose the amendments and the legislation if you think that the detail of them is the wrong way forward. That is fine, but saying that a deal done behind closed doors is a better way forward than one done through full, transparent and fair debate in the Assembly is regrettable.

Ms Sugden: I appreciate the opportunity to speak on amendment Nos 12 and 22, tabled by Mr Agnew and me.

The Member across the Floor is right to distinguish between the ministerial code and the ministerial code of conduct. The St Andrews Agreement allowed for a statutory ministerial code. After approval by the Northern Ireland Assembly, the ministerial code took effect on 8 May 2007. It is a full document. It includes a pledge of office, a ministerial code of conduct, several principles of public life and provision on the role of the Executive Committee, North/South Ministerial Council and the British-Irish Council.

Outside of the Executive, in nearly nine years since that code came into effect, there remains limited opportunity to investigate breaches of the ministerial code, due a lot, in my opinion, to the fact that there is an absence of an independent adviser or indeed any direct mechanism to deal with complaints about Ministers in respect of the code. I do take Mr Ross's point that, yes, it is a statutory document, so it is held to account in the court system, but I think that what we are saying here, and what our amendments allude to, is that that is not good enough. We do not think that it is a realistic opportunity for the general public, for example, to take Ministers to court through judicial review for costs and all the other complications with that. We have tabled an amendment that tries to make this Assembly, this Government and these institutions more accountable by making those accountability mechanisms more accessible to the general public.

I will touch on how the current procedure for holding Ministers to account works. It begins in the Executive Committee. Ministers can begin a process of judicial review against their Executive colleagues. However, if anything, I think that this process undermines the ministerial code that was envisaged in the St Andrews Agreement, because a lot of what the St Andrews Agreement attempted to do in respect of the code was to engender some sort of collective responsibility, whereas Ministers taking each other to court kind of flies in the face of that. I know that I am not alone in my scepticism of the Executive leadership being without prejudice to bring forward the appropriate sanctions on Ministers when necessary. I do not think that impartiality can ever be agreed when you are a member of the same party as the person against whom you are bringing these complaints. I genuinely think that only an independent investigation can underpin a fair and balanced outcome.

We are coming to the end of a mandate that has been characterised by accusations of corruption, self-interest, greed and general public apathy about these institutions. We accept that this amendment is not detailed. It was deliberately designed in that way so that we could allow the opportunity to take this in the direction of an Assembly that, hopefully, is building towards more accountable institutions. If it passes today, it will provide the people of Northern Ireland with a shred of confidence that we are not in this for ourselves. I think that that is quite important as we come to the end of this mandate.

Again, I reiterate that the current procedure is not good enough. For the reasons that I stated above, I think that it is actually an affront to the ministerial code that the St Andrews Agreement fought for. It really does just pay lip service. If you cannot access the appropriate accountability mechanism in respect of a judicial review, it is not really accountable, and it is not accessible. I think that, through this amendment, this is what we are trying to improve.

Other parties have spoken out against the process. Sinn Féin's Alex Maskey, following the outcome of the Committee's inquiry into former Minister Nelson McCausland last year, spoke about the problems in holding people to account, so, while the Statutory Committee has a formal role in a legislature to scrutinise and to hold the appropriate Minister and Department to account, it cannot fulfil that role because we do not have a mechanism in place. It is quite worrying: what is the Northern Ireland Assembly's role if we cannot hold Ministers and their Departments to account? The SDLP also spoke out about it at that time, so, again, I am really just reflecting the general mood of the House.

Interestingly, as Mr Agnew said, after the Committee came out with its decision, the Minister's own party produced a minority report, which, not surprisingly, exonerated the Minister at the time. The example that I outlined in respect of Mr McCausland is a foregone conclusion because, essentially, we now have two arguably politically biased outcomes that now have to be sidestepped because there is nothing else for it. Potentially, a Minister has breached the ministerial code and got away with it, or, fair enough, he is innocent and people have doubts about it because it was his own party that acquitted him. Either way, it is not a satisfactory outcome, and it demonstrates that the ministerial code is not really worth the paper that it is written on unless it is determined by, maybe, an independent investigation or another appropriate sanction.

I reiterate that we have not gone into that sort of detail in these specific amendments, but that can be worked towards. As I say an awful lot about this place, sometimes people do not really care what you say, but they remember how you made them feel. Right now, people are not feeling good about this place. If we make this amendment tonight, maybe they will start to believe that it is not about us.

Beyond political grievances or frustrations with not having a proper mechanism in place, the Westminster Committee on Standards in Public Life criticised the accountability mechanisms in the Executive in 2009-2010. Our own Assembly Committee on Standards and Privileges stated in 2010 that we need to have a more robust process for holding Ministers to account. In this mandate alone, I understand that 10% of the 70 complaints against MLAs were about Ministers, and those were turned away because this was not the appropriate mechanism to deal with them. So we need to find something that holds us to account.

To conclude and sum up — and I am speaking only to this amendment — what we are proposing today will lead to a robust, independent mechanism. It is not about what we are tabling; it is about what we hope will eventually come out of that. We are actually having a conversation about what we need to do to get this place back to being about the people. Putting in some sort of sanction, or way of getting to a sanction, might actually deter corrupt Ministers who want to go about business in the wrong way, and that can only be a good thing. Again, I think that, if we work towards having independent analysis and investigations of these types of complaints, that will generally make everybody feel quite comfortable with it.

Our amendment is not an attack on the shortcomings of individual Ministers, if any party in the House is thinking that that is the case. It aims to underpin the purpose of the ministerial code, which actually seeks to engender a sense of collective responsibility. Governance in the previous year has not been the best. Some aspects of our Government were a farce and an affront to the people of Northern Ireland. Whilst many reasons have been given for leaving the Executive, either definitely or indefinitely, a lot of our problems came from their inability to work together. Even now, I am not quite sure that they can work together, but you have to keep up appearances for an impending election. If the ministerial code had been in place last year, with the appropriate mechanisms to hold Ministers to account, maybe we would not have wasted those six months and not now be under pressure to pass all this legislation; it is a just thought. I think that we need to start moving to put the message out that the Assembly is not about individual MLAs but about the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr McCallister: I will go through the contributions very briefly. I am grateful to Mr Sheehan who, in his role as Deputy Chair of the Committee, went through the amendments. I am grateful to him, his colleagues on the Committee and the Committee staff for all their engagement. Having served on the Assembly and Executive Review Committee, I know that it is not used to having a glut of legislation or lengthy meetings, so I am grateful for the work that it put in. I think it made a huge contribution to shaping the Bill and some of the thought processes on it.

I welcome Ms Bradley's comments in supporting many of my amendments, including amendment No 4 on the 8%, some of the ones on timing and amendment No 11, which proposes a clause to give rise to the motion. If I heard her correctly, I think she said that she supports amendment No 20, which proposes a new schedule, and amendment No 21, and I am grateful for that.

Mr Attwood has a huge interest in the welfare reform agenda and the impact that it will have on the vulnerable and those most dependent on it, not only in his constituency but across Northern Ireland. He spoke about the mechanisms for monitoring some of the mitigation measures. Are they targeted? Are they getting to where they need to go? I think that this adds value and is an important part of it.

10.30 pm

Mr Attwood and Mr Lunn mentioned the amendment on private Member's Bills. One of the issues that came out at Committee Stage was that, although it is important to create rights for an opposition, we must not forget about the rights of Back-Benchers, be they opposition Members or Government Back-Benchers. That was the motivation behind the amendment on support for all Back-Benchers involved in bringing private Member's Bills. Even those Back-Benchers who bring private Member's Bills that are not successful very often push the Government in the direction they might have been going close to, and they are given the motivation to move on and do something. I see Mr McKay in the House. He helped to move the Minister of Finance and Personnel and his Department to look at the rating of sports clubs. That was a useful intervention. How we support that work, with Bill Clerks, Assembly officials and funding, is also important. I remind Members that it is not just opposition Members, as the Committee Stage reminded us, it is Back-Benchers from across the House.

I think that the key phrase for me in Mr Kennedy's contribution was the disengagement between this House and the public. That is something that we have to recognise, and it is at the very core of what I have broadly set out in the Bill. It is about how we re-energise the Assembly. How do we get it back to being very much focused on policy, delivery and, as Mr Agnew pointed out, good governance? How do you address the historical divisions and build in good governance around these issues?

Mr Kennedy welcomed the legislative timetable. There seemed to be broad support for it, including from Mr Lunn, who was also supportive of the private Member's Bill amendment. Ms Catriona Ruane reiterated Sinn Féin's position. While others might be critical, at least it has been consistent on it, and I am grateful for its engagement in the earlier part of this process.

Mr Agnew talked about good governance and the code of conduct and how sanctions can be so easily avoided if you are outside the scope of that code or are not deemed to have been acting as an MLA. All those things are important issues that the Assembly will have to face up to at some point in the future.

At least there is broad consensus now that we need to get to the point of agreeing a Programme for Government. I would like to have seen more around collective responsibility and legal entity, but his key point was that this is the venue, this is the place, this is the Chamber that should do the reform of our Assembly and Executive. I think that is key. That is what is set out in amendment No 11 to the schedule about that maturity that other colleagues have talked about. I think it is right and proper that it is based on legislation here and is open and debated through all the stages and all the votes that have taken place.

Ms Sugden made some good points around the ministerial code. She said that there is limited opportunity to investigate breaches. It can be unfair to Ministers who may be the subject of unfair and unfounded allegations that there is not some way of independently and robustly investigating that. That does not serve anyone well. She made the point that we need and hope that this will lead to a robust and independent mechanism for investigations to be dealt with impartially, fairly and in a way that can give confidence to those under investigation, but, most of all, give confidence to the public and to the people whom we seek to serve.

I am grateful for Members' support for a range of amendments. I will continue, right up to the very last, to urge you to support as many of the amendments that stand in my name as possible and, indeed, those amendments that I have spoken in favour of that stand in the name of colleagues.

A5 Western Transport Corridor — Consultation on Draft Statutory Orders and Environmental Statement

Published at 11.15 am on Thursday 11 February 2016

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): Today I am announcing the imminent start of consultations by my Department on new draft Statutory Orders and a new Environmental Statement for the A5 Western Transport Corridor dual carriageway scheme.

This announcement will begin a consultation process which, subject to successful completion of statutory procedures, will see construction start next year on the £150million Newbuildings to north of Strabane section of this road.

The A5 dualling scheme is one of the Northern Ireland Executive's flagship projects and the start of construction of the first phase of the scheme is a commitment within 'A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan'. It is one of five key Transport Corridors in Northern Ireland. The proposed upgrade will improve links between urban centres in the west of Northern Ireland.

Members will recall that the Environmental Statement and draft Statutory Orders for the above scheme were initially published for consultation in November 2010, but after a High Court challenge the Statutory Orders were quashed by a Court Ruling in April 2013.

Since then work has been carried out to address the area of concern raised in the Court Ruling. I am pleased to say that my Department is now in a position to publish new draft Statutory Orders and a new Environmental Statement for consultation.

The proposed road is predominantly a high quality dual carriageway. There will be no direct private accesses or gaps in the central reserve and major road junctions will be kept to a minimum while providing connectivity to towns and communities along the route and to the existing road network. Many of the local roads will not be connected to the dual carriageway but will be taken over or under the new road or stopped up where appropriate.

The documents planned to be consulted on are:

- a) a new Environmental Statement;
- b) a new draft Direction Order for the length between Newbuildings and Ballygawley;

- c) three new draft Vesting Orders for the scheme between Newbuildings and Ballygawley; and
- d) a new Stopping-up of Private Accesses Order.

These documents have been prepared to reflect changes arising out of the original Public Inquiry process in 2011 and to take account of any interim changes in legislation and design standards.

Three new draft Vesting Orders have been prepared as follows:

- a) Phase 1a - from Newbuildings to north of Strabane;
- b) Phase 1b - from south of Omagh to Ballygawley; and
- c) Phase 2 - from north of Strabane to south of Omagh.

My Department accepted the Inspector's Report from the 2011 Public Inquiry, which recommended that the section south of the A4 at Ballygawley (Phase 3) should not be progressed until there was a firm commitment from the Irish Government in relation to the N2 improvement scheme; and certainty in relation to funding provision for the construction of the section of the scheme between Ballygawley and Aughnacloy. Therefore, any reference to the proposed dates for delivery of Phase 3 within the new Environmental Statement are purely indicative, as no firm commitment on delivery of Phase 3 can be given until the conditions relating to the N2 and funding are met.

The publication of the draft Orders and the Environmental Statement, which will take place during week commencing 15 February 2016, will be followed by a public consultation period during which a series of public exhibitions will be held at venues local to the scheme. The consultation period will start next week and run until 4 April.

The main objectives of the exhibitions are to present and explain the proposed scheme in detail; inform landowners and the general public of the lands included within the draft Vesting Orders; engage with a range of stakeholders; and increase public awareness of the scheme. Staff from TransportNI, their consultants Mouchel and the appointed contractors will be at these exhibitions and available to discuss any issues raised.

My Department recognises the considerable uncertainty that road schemes of this nature can cause and, working in partnership with Land & Property Services, and also with its project consultants, contractors and landowner agents, will seek to ensure that it meets the needs and expectations of all landowners affected by the proposed scheme.

The ownership of land vested for the scheme will not legally pass to the Department until the operative date of the vesting order, and for Phase 1A this will not be until autumn 2017 at the earliest. Landowners will receive the open market value of their property at that date. Given that this is still some time away, it is not possible to give future indications of value. However, it may be helpful to know that Land & Property Services in making budget estimates for the Department used current agricultural land values up to £12,000 / acre for good arable land, particularly in the northerly part of the scheme. Land & Property Services recognises that in some cases land would currently be worth in excess of that figure, and in contrast some could be worth £10,000 / acre.

Landowners' rights are protected under statute when property is vested, and will receive full compensation for their loss based on the principle of equivalence; this means that they should be no worse off in financial terms after the acquisition than before. No two properties are identical and there is a wide variation in the type and quality of the agricultural land and other property along the entire route of this scheme. Land & Property Services acting on behalf of my Department will carefully consider each individual claim for compensation and all evidence presented, and will seek to reach a settlement at the earliest possible opportunity. In default of an agreement, the Lands Tribunal for Northern Ireland will determine the fair and proper level of compensation, at no cost to the landowner.

There is clearly an anomaly in respect of compensation payments for property and landowners whose land or property is vested; for my Department, this is usually as a result of major road schemes. In England and Wales, property and landowners receive up to an additional 10% top up payment as compensation for the loss of their land or property but this does not apply in Northern Ireland.

That is why I am currently seeking accelerated passage for the Land Acquisition and Compensation Bill which would bring compensation levels for landowners in Northern Ireland affected by compulsory land purchase on a par with England and Wales.

Yesterday I received Executive agreement on the introduction of the Bill.

I have also written to the Speaker of the Northern Ireland Assembly seeking its introduction through accelerated passage with a view to it being debated in the Assembly. I would be hopeful that the Bill will complete its legislative process during this current mandate.

I welcome the progress on this important project which will not only have positive economic and construction industry benefits but will also help towards balancing regional infrastructure, while significantly improving road safety and journey times for all road users.

As well as providing much needed jobs within the construction sector, the proposed scheme should lead to an increase in demand for local suppliers of construction material as well as giving a significant boost to commercial trade in the surrounding area.

The publication of draft Orders and the Environmental Statement will commence a new formal consultation period for the project, following which, a decision will be made on the need for a new Public Inquiry on the scheme, currently tentatively programmed for autumn 2016.

I would encourage Members to attend the public exhibitions and view the documents that will be on display at a number of public offices over the next few months.

Please note the above statement is embargoed until 11.15am on 11 February 2016.

Mrs Caroline Gillan

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Our main item of business today is the Committee Stage of the Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill. We have to do the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. Obviously we have done it informally, but while there have been areas where we have agreed informally not to pursue any amendment, if members want to raise anything today, they are more than welcome to do so. There is an updated clause-by-clause table, and in the tabled papers there is a copy of the amendments. Hard copies of the Bill and the explanatory memorandum are available for members. The Committee will formally determine its position on each of the proposed amendments and each clause. If there are any Divisions, the Committee will divide as necessary. All decisions from the Committee's point of view will be final. That does not bind anybody when it comes to the debate in the Chamber.

It is anticipated that the Committee will conclude all formal deliberations at today's meeting. The Committee will then have a short meeting to agree its report on 8 February. I welcome to the meeting the following departmental officials, who are here to answer any questions that members may have: Caroline Gillan, the director of access, inclusion and well-being; and Alan Boyd, who is the head of the pupil behaviour management team. I appreciate that we have gone through these issues, but are there any brief comments that you want to make on the Bill or the proposed amendments?

Mrs Caroline Gillan (Department of Education): No, I am happy to wait until we go through each amendment and just comment on them as they arise.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. That is fine.

Clause 1 (Definition of "bullying")

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Clause 1 prescribes an inclusive definition of bullying. Previously, the Committee agreed informally to consider an amendment to clause 1(1) that would introduce some flexibility to the definition of bullying to try to cover the issue of repeated bullying. The proposed amendment states:

"bullying' includes (but is not limited to)".

Does the Department want to make any remarks on that?

Mrs Gillan: As we mentioned previously, we feel very strongly that this is not required, because "includes", in legal interpretation, means "is not limited to". We have consulted the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC), which has very strongly advised us that putting that amendment in will cast doubt where "includes" is used in other legislation; it could be implied that "includes" does not mean "is not limited to". The way to deal with this, if there is any lack of clarity, is through very clear guidance. In areas like child protection or pupil behaviour management, the schools tend to have the departmental guidance on their desks as they operate the policy, as opposed to necessarily going back to primary legislation. So we have strong concerns about putting that in, in terms of the impact on other legislation in Northern Ireland. Also, it is just not required.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. We are trying to find a way through this. A concern that was raised with us fairly consistently was that of the definition. There is obviously a specific reference to "repeated use". If that is not in any way qualified in what it can also include, I am not altogether sure that it simply includes repeated use. That wording sends out a signal that there can be a single oneoff incident.

Mrs Gillan: And that is what we would deal with in the guidance. As we discussed last week, there will be circumstances where, because of the circumstances of an event or indeed the history or significance of it, a single event may be bullying. We can take that back, in developing the guidance, that we specifically want to deal with that point. Indeed, from doing a bit of research, I see that it is mentioned in some guidance in England etc. Not every event will be a single event of bullying — that is dealt with under the discipline policy — but we absolutely want to acknowledge that it does not necessarily require a repeated event, and we will deal with that in guidance. We can give that undertaking and assurance.

Mr Craig: Caroline, I just want to be absolutely sure about this. The guidance will need to be very clear and specific around this. Unfortunately, I must admit that I have come across cases where a one-off incident, because of the nature of it and the force used, went right up to the very last issue that you would try to implement around disciplinary procedures with children. It can happen; that is what I am saying, Caroline. It happens out there in the real world, so we need to be clear about that. If you write legislation that excludes from governors the final sanction, you have tied our hands.

Mrs Gillan: Obviously, you still have all the sanctions under your discipline policy for dealing with significant events. Without wanting to draft the guidance in our heads now, we see there being a substantial section on "What is bullying?". Obviously, it will outline the main understanding, but it must also go on to say, "However, this is not the only situation" and elaborate further. That will be a key component of the guidance.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Are there any other comments in that regard? Is there any wording that could be used that talks about the repeated use of something and then maybe explicitly references the legislation to also include individual or single cases?

Mrs Gillan: From reading some of the stuff, I know that we need to be very careful how we frame it. I think that we would rather talk to schools, pupils and stakeholders to see what those examples would be. As I have said, some events will be one-offs that should just be disciplined and should not be regarded —

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I understand that.

Mrs Gillan: I worry about trying to draft something quickly, without having the benefit of discussions with schools to see what would be the most appropriate way to describe bullying and the examples that we would want to give them.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I appreciate what has been said by the draftsmen or draftspeople on that, but I am still not entirely convinced that "but is not limited to" will entirely throw up doubts in terms of inclusion, to be honest. It might be seen as a degree of reinforcement or tautology in that regard, but I do not see where it particularly undermines things.

Mrs Gillan: I can only pass on what the draftspeople say. That is how we draft legislation in Northern Ireland. When you start to clarify it in one piece of legislation, it might call into question the interpretation in other legislation where they do not feel the need to clarify it.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. I am in the hands of the Committee. What does the Committee want to do on this?

Mr Craig: I do not know, Chair. I am fearful of the message that will be sent out. Unfortunately, the interpretation of it will tie the hands of governors more than the reality of it. I think we have all seen examples of how that occurs in legislation.

Mr Lunn: Do you want us to flag up whether we intend to bring something privately?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It is entirely up to you in that regard, Trevor.

Mr Lunn: I will keep my powder dry, then.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. Reading between the lines, it may well be that you understand that side of things.

Mrs Overend: It would be helpful to know what the schools think. I appreciate what Caroline has said on the issue and what it is bringing out. Sometimes you just cannot tell whether it is bringing further implications on the school or what their consideration is. I do not know; it is a difficult decision.

Mrs Gillan: We will want to make it clear to schools that there is a risk, as we said before, that, if we go too far to say that it can be one-off events, we almost dilute the meaning of bullying and the longterm aspect of it, other than the very significant one-offs. That is why we would like to tease out with schools and stakeholders, including the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) and the Children's Law Centre (CLC), as to how exactly they want it framed and the message that we want to put to schools and parents. I hope that that is helpful.

Mr Craig: Caroline, I am just going to give you an example, which was publicised widely across the airwaves. There was a bullying incident in a school — let us face it, there was physical contact; they were basically punching each other. There was one case that says that, ultimately, one punch can kill and, unfortunately, in this incident that is exactly what occurred. That has to bypass what is a repeated offence, because even the law is not going to see it that way.

Mrs Gillan: But remember that the sanctions for discipline and bullying are essentially the same, and the school will want to decide the sanction in the context of the case. It could be detention, suspension, expulsion or, obviously, in some cases, reporting to the police, so I do not think that anybody can escape that.

Mr Craig: Yes, Caroline, but the worry is that, if you place something in legislation — I see how these things happen — all of a sudden it will be the principal who will look at the legislation and go, "It is not a repeated offence; we cannot do that". We have to get some mechanism around —

Mrs Gillan: It could be dealt with under the discipline policy.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Yes, but whatever is there in terms of guidance or, indeed, other policies, I have some concerns that people will simply look at this and go, "'Repeated use of' — well, it is not a repeated use" irrespective of what is in the guidance. There needs to be something in there. I appreciate what you have said in relation to that. Sorry, Jonathan.

Mr Craig: No, no. The Chair has got it absolutely right here. In those circumstances, the school has only one sanction, which is expulsion. The police and the law will take care of the rest of what occurred there. I can clearly see that, if there is something in there that says that it has to be a repeated offence, the principal will look at it and go, "Well, this is the first time that this individual has ever done anything, but look at the severity of what they have actually done".

Mrs Gillan: It may not be bullying; it could be a discipline issue. If there has been no history of engagement between the two pupils, it is absolutely a bullying issue that could be acted on.

Mr Craig: I agree with you: it can be or it cannot be, but ultimately I do not want someone sitting there thinking, "I cannot do this. I cannot give that sanction".

Mrs Gillan: It is not that this duty says, "I cannot do anything with this pupil": the discipline policy, the bullying policy and the pastoral care are the whole package. This is not the end of the story; this is only for these types of bullying issues in schools. The principal will not say, "It is not bullying, therefore I cannot discipline the pupil".

Mr Craig: The difficulty is, Caroline, that I have met every armchair lawyer in the country when it comes to these things. Trust me: there are a lot of educated people out there who will use legislation like this against you. I know how school governors think. In those circumstances, they will want to give the ultimate sanction, which is expulsion, but you do not want some armchair lawyer coming to you and saying, "Well, actually this legislation prohibits you from doing that".

Mr Newton: I just want to make a comment. The Committee, the Department and the Minister all know the position that we want to get to; it is just about the route that we travel to get to that position. Am I right, Chair, that we have to take our position today?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Yes, possibly. I will wait until other members have had their say. I have a wee bit of thought that something might be able to be done, but it will not be very specific.

Mr Rogers: You are very welcome. It is just what members have said earlier. Caroline, I remember that you mentioned the word "appropriate" in relation to this. Whether it is a discipline issue, bullying or maybe a case in a special school where the child has particular special educational needs, once an incident happens, people will go to the bullying legislation and see use of the word "repeated", but it might be the first time that this has happened in this special school. You talked about "appropriate": can you tease that out?

Mrs Gillan: The definition we are using here is not inclusive. The duty is on the board of governors to ensure that policies at the school are pursued and to determine measures. Once this is enacted, boards of governors will have to develop their bullying policies and the more detailed measures underneath them, so they will have thought of all these issues. They may say, "Right, in our school, we're aware of situations in the past that have caused problems", so they will be able to shape the policies and the appropriate preventative measures and sanctions that can be taken. Those will be consulted on with the pupils, teachers and parents. This legislation will not be in isolation, never mind our guidance.

I was flicking through a few anti-bullying policies last night. Some schools' policies are actually already very detailed about what they will do and how they will sanction bullying events in the school and who should be informed. It will be for the board of governors, taking into account the context of their school and pupils, to decide how they approach preventing and addressing bullying. They will have that flexibility.

Mr Rogers: I know it is the responsibility of the board of governors, but it is putting an awful onus on the board of governors to develop that. What guidance and support are they going to get from the Department or through in-service training? I do not think that this can be covered by one two-hour session by the Education Authority.

Mrs Gillan: Alan will be able to elaborate. When we say "guidance", we mean good, full guidance that is properly developed in conjunction with schools and stakeholders. We envisage using some sample anti-bullying policies and measures within those to give schools an idea. All schools already have an anti-bullying policy, and some are fulsome.

Alan, maybe you can give an idea of how we are thinking of approaching the guidance and training.

Mr Alan Boyd (Department of Education): In terms of guidance, as Caroline said, we recognise completely that we need to take in the views of governors, principals, staff and other stakeholders. In proceeding with the Bill, we have not had time to undertake that exercise, so we are aware that that is lacking. Until we get that information, we do not accurately understand what concerns governors will have and what training they believe will be appropriate. We are happy to undertake and have undertaken that we will ensure that the guidance addresses all the concerns that they have, even if that takes longer to develop. As far as we are concerned, that is an essential element of the process before we can bring the Bill into effect. What form that training might be will become apparent once we start to understand what those concerns are and not before, unfortunately. As policy officials, we cannot have a detailed understanding of what those practical, on-the-ground situations are like and what concerns they may give rise to. So we have not thought it through. We are acutely aware that that is a hole that needs to be filled as we work forward from the Bill.

Mr Rogers: Could we get into a situation where a school develops its own anti-bullying policy out of this, and, once an incident happens — it does not need to be a repeated incident — they see it as a bullying incident? Could we get into a situation where the legislation says "repeated bullying" and a school is saying the first hit, for want of a better word, is bullying?

Mrs Gillan: As we said, the legislation is uses "bullying" includes"; the legislation does not prevent one-off incidents. You would never get a situation, even in the legislation as it stands, in which schools would be precluded from developing policies that recognised that there can be other scenarios that they view as bullying. Schools are absolutely entitled to do that. What I am saying is that the guidance will assist schools in developing what those other events or situations might be or what they might want to take into account.

To assure you, the elements here are the key usual elements of bullying, but that is not to say that bullying cannot take place that does not exactly fit in with what we have put on the page. That is fine; the legislation gives the flexibility to schools to recognise other instances as they may wish to develop in their policy and measures. As Alan said, the guidance will assist them in that.

As you said before, we all want the same thing: we want to ensure that schools are able to tackle bullying and that pupils are protected from bullying, regardless of how it emanates. We are all on the same page. We just feel that we are not restricting ourselves to the definition on the page, but I appreciate that there are concerns.

Mr Hazzard: My point is about the repetition thing. Are we conflating two issues? I am not, of course, taking away from the fact that a one-off incident can be very severe, but I caution that there may be certain unintended consequences from classing one-off incidents as bullying.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The issue is that we want to make it fairly clear that it can be a one-off. My concern is that simply saying “includes ... repeated” does not make it clear enough that it can be bullying. That is the concern. I will take that as a comment.

Mr Lunn: We are in danger of taking an extreme example of a one-off incident, which could be bullying or, frankly, attempted murder, and using that as our benchmark, when most one-off incidents will be relatively minor. If they were repeated over a period, they would constitute bullying, but, in themselves, they are just one-offs. Did I hear you right, Caroline? Did you say that the legislation as it is proposed does not preclude one-off incidents from being treated as bullying incidents?

Mrs Gillan: No.

Mr Lunn: I do not know how many times I have read it, but I have not come to that conclusion.

Mrs Gillan: It is around that definition — “bullying” includes — but that is not the end of the story. It includes those elements, but, by implication, it can include other elements. That is maybe where the nub of the issue is.

Mr Lunn: I was as concerned about the use of the word “repeated” as anybody else right from the start. Frankly, the more I think about it, the more I do not know what amendment the Committee could come up with.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I am going to make a suggestion that might not entirely find favour with the Department but may, at least, try to find some way through. We have an amendment here that says “not limited to”, which I appreciate is not ideal. I suggest to the Committee that we agree that amendment, but suggest that the Department finds its own amendment. I would like to see something in the legislation. If the Department was to come up with a better formula, I would be happy, on behalf of the Committee, not to move our amendment and to accept the departmental amendment. That may be the way to do it. To entirely leave it with what is there in terms of the advice is a little weak: I want to see something in the legislation that governs the situation.

Mrs Overend: I appreciate what you are saying, Chair. Something just came to me, because there has been debate about the words:

We know already, from the explanation that has been there, that that could include others and is not an exhaustive list. If you changed it to “may include”, would that be something similar?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The only slight complication is that I am not sure that it clarifies the issue greatly, and I have problems with what is in the later bit. I think that there is a better way of dealing with it.

Mrs Overend: That is fair enough. It was just about a uniformity of language.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I suggest that, without prejudice, we put that forward very much with a plea to the Department. We need something in the Bill: if you can find a more appropriate amendment, I would be happy not to move that.

Mrs Gillan: Do you want the amendment to deal with the fact that you want to emphasise that there are situations other than this, or is it that you are purely concerned about repetition versus single act?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It is principally about repetition as opposed to a single act. There should be something around that. As you say, this is probably a situation in which we are all trying to arrive at the same destination. I am just not sure that it is satisfactory to not have anything in the legislation, but we are not doctrinaire on the wording.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: I am mindful of the research that the Committee has received. The academic practice is to recognise repetition, but, increasingly, the practice or the trend is a single act. The approach that the Twenty-six Counties is taking to this is interesting: repetition is a criterion, but there is a single offence in relation to some acts, in particular cyberbullying. I am with the Chair on this: the Department should explore something that deals with it. The obvious concern is that repetition may be an obstacle in deciding where these acts start and how we tease that out. However, it is also worth reflecting on the academic trend to view bullying as repetition but the practice is increasingly a single act.

Mrs Gillan: We will definitely do that. My concern is whether we can capture adequately in legislation a single act of that nature while not wanting to capture every event in the school. Guidance allows you to develop that in more detail and have examples, whereas legislation requires you to try to capture it in a single sentence. However, we will certainly explore that. We will bring it back to the Minister.

Mr Rogers: Caroline, I have a very small point that you may be able to clarify for me. The first single act should really be caught by the discipline policy; is that right?

Mrs Gillan: Yes.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Trevor, did you want to add to that?

Mr Lunn: I wanted to talk about a different aspect of clause 1.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. We will come back to that. Are members agreed with that as a potential way forward? Are members content with the amendments on the understanding of what we have said?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): We then move to point 1.5. Obviously, the Committee had —

Mr Lunn: We kind of skated past point 1.1, which is on the rights or wrongs of including special schools in the legislation. It is yes or no really. The departmental response appears to just say that it would be wrong to exclude them. That is the argument really, isn't it? Some of us think that they should be excluded, and the Department thinks that they should not be. The rationale for excluding them is that teachers may be able to have a much closer relationship with pupils who have behavioural problems and deal with those. What might be perceived as bullying in a normal situation is completely different in a special school or a special unit. I am not speaking for anybody else here, but there is a case for special schools not being included in this legislation at all. What is the Department's view on that? It is not good enough just to say, “We disagree”.

Mrs Gillan: I think that, the last time that I was here, I elaborated a bit more to capture the key points. Perhaps Alan wants to reiterate that.

Mr Boyd: In essence, the argument is that there are more scenarios in which special schools — it is not limited to special schools — can ensure, by virtue of the board of governors still having flexibility over the policies and the detailed measures that they put in place, that those give additional flexibility where they believe it is required, whether that is based on the specific needs of the child, where they are in the special needs code or other wider circumstances that the school feels are pertinent. They can then choose to graduate the severity of any sanction that they apply. It was touched on the last day that, in special schools, the ability to determine intent is very often lacking. That will automatically remove the incident from being classed as bullying under the current definition. For those incidences where the definition still fits, it is appropriate that schools record them so that they can monitor their own performance and see if there are any underlying issues in the school. However, they have flexibility in how they respond to that.

Mr Lunn: You are saying that you would like the legislation to apply to all schools but the board of governors of a special school will have some flexibility in how they draw up their anti-bullying policy and in how they apply the rules. Does the Department intend to offer any guidance to special schools in that regard?

Mrs Gillan: When engaging with stakeholders, it is important that we speak to all the sectors. We will undertake to speak to special schools and mainstream schools with learning support centres to see what particular aspects they want to see addressed in the guidance —

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Sorry, Caroline, I appreciate the strength of the argument that you do not want complete exclusion of schools but want to retain a reasonable level of flexibility, particularly in certain circumstances and as regards intent. If there was a debate, could Mr Lunn or any other Committee member make an intervention on the Minister so that he could give that assurance on the Floor?

Mrs Gillan: Absolutely. I am sure he would be content to do that.

Mr Lunn: I just wonder what assurance he would give and whether this means the Department will draw up guidelines specifically applicable to special schools to advise them how to interpret the law. To start with, the same law will apply to them.

Mrs Gillan: I think there will be advice on the issues they want to take into account when developing their policies and their measures. We have to acknowledge, in all of this, that it is about protecting pupils. We want to give pupils in special schools and learning support centres the same protection as pupils in other schools. That said, we understand that it needs to be done in a way that is workable. We will ensure that the Minister touches on that aspect in the debate.

Mr Lunn: So will we. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. I just want to touch on one other aspect of clause 1, and then I will open it up for members as regards any other issues with clause 1.

At 1.5 in the table, there is an amendment from the Department that was largely technical in its nature: informally, the Committee had agreed to support this. I wonder if the Department has any final comments on that.

Mr Boyd: Our position is still that this is a technical amendment with no material policy impact.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Are members content with the proposed amendment?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: By way of tactics for the Committee on the earlier amendment about “but is not limited to”, would the Committee be content to support the Department’s amendment, as members have just indicated, but then table an amendment to the amendment? I have taken advice from the Bill Office, and that is probably the best way.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. We will do that. On that basis, if there is an amendment from the Department, I think we would be content to do that. OK.

Does anybody have any other issues they want to raise on clause 1?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Duty of Board of Governors to secure measures to prevent bullying)

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Point 2.8 in your tabled papers relates to clause 2 and requires that the board of governors review anti-bullying measures at least once every 5 years. Has the Department any comments on that?

Mrs Gillan: The Minister is content to support an amendment of that nature. I just wonder if the actual wording of “no more than” could be formalised in legalese — for example, “at intervals not exceeding”. I do not know what the appropriate drafting would be.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): That came from the Bill Office, so I assume that is the wording. We can go back —

Mrs Gillan: Yes, but the Minister is supportive of that requirement.

The Committee Clerk: Can the Clerk take it that the Committee supports the amendment if the wording is slightly different but with the same effect as previously?

Mr Lunn: I am a bit behind the curve here. Which amendment are we talking about?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It is in the tabled papers. The amendment is:

Leave out line 22 and insert —

‘(i) at intervals of no more than 5 years; and’”.

Mr Craig: The only query that I have — I have wondered about this — is why the period of five years was chosen. The life of a board of governors is actually four years because they are tied in with local government, which has a four-year period.

Mrs Gillan: Yesterday, we discussed four or five years. We highlighted the four-year lifespan. Very often, boards of governors review it every two years, but we felt that, absolutely, for those who are not being proactive, we would not want it to drift on. I have a feeling that we talked about four or five years.

Mr Craig: Given the lifespan of a board of governors, it should be four.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Would the Committee be happy if the lifespan were four years?

Mr Newton: The discussion that Sandra and I had across the table yesterday was that it should be “not more than”.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Yes. It is “not exceed” or “not more than”. We can get the exact wording. I am asking whether the timescale should be four years.

Mr Newton: Yes. Four years is sensible.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): OK. With that slight change, are members content with that amendment?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The next area that we have flagged up is at 2.11. We had informally agreed to consider an amendment in respect of cyberbullying. Here, in the tabled papers, you have two versions: one that would extend the school’s responsibilities generally and the other refers only to electronic communications. You could go for only one amendment at most. You may not actually want either of them. Maybe we could tweak what is there slightly. First of all, I invite the Department to comment on both of them.

Mrs Gillan: The Minister has indicated that he would be extremely concerned about imposing an additional duty on boards of governors in that way. From our perspective and having done some brief research last night on the duties imposed on schools on cyberbullying, we feel that there is a range of varieties and indeed a lot of research papers that debate the effectiveness or otherwise of the legal liabilities of boards of governors. If the Committee were to put forward an additional duty which, let us face it, is on a group of people, not necessarily institutions, without being absolutely clear what the legal implications are, the Minister would have great concerns.

We are aware that schools are looking for clarity and guidance on cyberbullying. As we have said in previous evidence, we have commissioned the Anti-Bullying Forum to bring forward guidance in the immediate term. We are also working with the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland (SBNI) to look at the e-safety strategy. We feel that the appropriate thing to do would be to see how that additional guidance is working and whether that assists schools before we move to looking at legislation.

Even in looking at legislation, we would want to research what happens elsewhere, the implications for schools and how it is working, before drafting up and saying, “Here is the policy and the additional duties that we want to put on schools”, and saying to drafters, “Here is what we have decided we want in consultation with various stakeholders”, and then draft legal duties to respond to that, as opposed to, in this circumstance, putting legal duties down and be faced with having to do, if you like, a post hoc rationalisation of what the implications will actually be. I know that the Minister is extremely concerned that we do not legislate for duties of that nature on boards of governors in that way.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Are there any comments? Do not all shout at once.

Mr Lunn: I hear what Caroline says. I think that the first amendment that is suggested with the wording:

“is likely to have a detrimental effect” should keep it fairly simple. It is pretty much down the road of what we wanted to see.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It continues: “on a pupil’s education”. The only thing about the reference to a pupil’s education is how widely drawn that is.

Mr Lunn: That is what schools do. I do not mean to be facetious.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I know. At least, that is what the intention of the school is.

Mr Lunn: We are not trying to be psychologists here, but we are trying to ensure that pupils can enjoy their education unhindered. That indicates something that has a detrimental effect on a child’s education, which is what the rest of the Bill does too.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I wonder whether “a detrimental effect on a pupil’s education” is a bit widely drawn. I am thinking off the top of my head. There is a reference in clause 2(1)(b)(i) to:

“on the premises of the school during the school day”.

I throw this out as a suggestion: what about “or having a detrimental impact on the school day”?

Mrs Gillan: Again, how far does the Committee want schools to get into situations and events that arise entirely outside the school’s control?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): As I said, Caroline, I was speaking off the top of my head, but we appreciate that there can be a general impact from cyberbullying that occurs somewhere else. I appreciate that it is difficult for the school to deal with that. However, you will have a situation in which something will have happened overnight and it is having an impact. It may not have occurred within the school, but it is having an impact in the school during the school day. It is about getting some level of that captured.

Mrs Gillan: Yes, but I believe that the Committee is introducing a duty on boards of governors without having a clear idea of what it reasonably expects boards of governors to do in those situations. It is wide open. What would you expect a school to do? You are clarifying there that the school and board of governors have a duty to put in place measures to address bullying in any scenario where it has an impact on the school day. You will have a situation that happens in the holidays, for instance. Do you want the policy and measures to, somehow, reach into monitoring Facebook accounts?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Presumably, if that is having an impact on what is happening from 9.00 am to 3.30 pm or whatever it is, it is relevant.

Mrs Gillan: Are we saying that we will ask the schools to say, "During holiday times or during weekends"? I do not believe that we can draft off the top of our head or, indeed, say, "Surely, this might mean that". I do not think that in this situation, where you have legal liabilities on a group of governors, we can impose additional duties in this way. I would much rather have a more considered process and legal advice.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I understand that. There is also the argument on balance, which I appreciate is the two sides of the one coin. The child has to get to and from school. Obviously, you want to prevent a situation in which the bully is waiting outside the school gates. On the other hand, that could be fairly loosely defined as well.

Mrs Gillan: The pupil has to go to and from school. There is a finite element to that journey. Translink is involved; there is guidance in place around bullying on buses. It is a much more definable situation and the pupil has no choice with regard to travelling to and from the school. If you were getting into a situation involving any other bullying event or one-off event that has a detrimental effect — I think of our previous conversation — I would not know off the top of my head what that might mean, nor would I want to guess what it might mean. Obviously, it would be for a court to decide. We would have the Committee imposing an additional duty on boards of governors and, then, obviously, the Department having to take legal advice to see what that means and then, as I said, post hoc, trying to give some advice. Certainly, in this situation, I would much rather that we had a considered view and proper research and consideration.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): A number of members want to speak. I am not sure whether they are comments or questions.

Mr Hazzard: The warning from the Department is quite stark. I know that we want to get something in around cyberbullying or something like that, but I fear what the implications will be for boards of governors. At times, we have raised issues on the capacity and ability of boards of governors to tackle issues. We may be overstepping the mark here and setting down a duty that they will not be able to meet.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): There is something that I want to pick up. Two alternative versions were drafted. I appreciate what the Department has said about a duty. It is clear that the amendment at 2(1)(b)(iv), which simply talks about where they must do things, is imposing a duty. The second draft amendment, which is the addition of subsection (1A), simply says:

That would give them a power to do things but not necessarily impose a duty. Would that alternative wording be an option?

Mrs Gillan: Again, I feel, as with everything in this arena, we should look at developing the guidance, seeing how that goes and engaging on it before we move to deciding whether we need to legislate. Even in that, "measures to be taken" can be preventative, but it is also about addressing it. Preventing bullying, in one situation, also means intervening in those situations. What is:

"reasonably likely to have a detrimental effect"?

What is "a detrimental effect"? The Department honestly feels that drafting in this way, to impose additional duties, is not the right way to do it. I know that I have harped on about it.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Sorry, with respect, "may consider measures" is not actually imposing an additional duty; it is a permission, which is a different thing. It would be a stronger argument if it said, "must consider measures".

Mrs Gillan: In a situation where you have a board of governors that decides not to consider the measures, is there an issue there?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Surely, if you have given somebody a power and they do not exercise it, it is within their power not to actually do something. That is the nature of it.

Mrs Overend: We have talked about this over and over, have we not? I know that schools are calling out for guidance on cyberbullying, and they are looking to the Bill to see where the responsibilities start and finish. The Bill has to be clear. We have talked about how the impact of bullying that might start at night-time or the weekend affects the child in school. I also relate that thought back to anything else that might happen a child at night or at the weekend. For instance, if the parents split up and there is a family drama, it will impact on a child's ability to participate in school work. Surely, a school deals with that.

Mrs Gillan: Absolutely, through pastoral care. What we have said in previous evidence is that, if the school is aware of incidents that take place through whatever means, if the parents inform the school, the school will, from its pastoral care perspective, take that into account. Also, from the discipline perspective, it will take that into account in practice in monitoring situations or relationships between pupils. That already happens, and it can be clarified further.

Mrs Overend: That is what I am trying to get at. The school does not need to fix what is happening outside school, but it needs to help the children. If one or two children are involved in that bullying incident, the school must deal with the children in school to fix the environment in the school. Maybe it would help if we had sight of the legislation or guidelines with regard to pastoral care, so that we can see how it impacts on cyberbullying incidents and whether it includes that, so that we do not need to amend this because we know it includes cyberbullying and the child can contribute properly at school. Can we have that?

Mrs Gillan: That is the reality of the pastoral care scenario, and schools, in operating discipline and general school life, take into account information that is brought to them about other factors. We are reviewing the pastoral care guidance, which is much more about child protection, at the moment. There is promoting positive behaviour guidance, dating from 2003, that probably needs to be updated. As it was written in 2003, it probably does not explicitly refer to cyberbullying as such. We can certainly provide copies of that and references to the current duties in relation to the wider welfare of pupils.

Mrs Overend: If we had an oral commitment from the Minister that that guidance would be updated, that would suffice.

Mrs Gillan: I think that we can deal with it. We can deal with precisely those issues in this bullying guidance. We can make sure that we cross-reference all the duties that schools have on the welfare and safeguarding of pupils. We can elaborate that clearly around the information that may come to them about things that are not necessarily happening in school but which, as you say, affect the operation of the school and the school day.

Mr Lunn: The Bill, as it stands, subject to bits and pieces of amendment, deals adequately with what we are trying to do, except it ignores possibly the biggest and most harmful form of bullying, outside of physical violence, that there is. I would like something in place that allows principals, in particular, but also boards of governors to set standards and do what they already do anyway. I will not go on about drawers full of phones again, but that is the kind of thing that I mean. It is just as likely — in fact, far more likely — to have a detrimental effect. I know that you say that you are uncomfortable with this. It is the usual argument — you could introduce guidance and so on — but I really would like this to be in the Bill.

The second amendment is so woolly, frankly, that a board of governors could probably do that anyway, even without an anti-bullying Bill. It is framed in such a way as to be completely ineffective and harmless. The first one is far more meaningful. It may not be perfect and maybe we need to tweak it a bit more, but something like, “likely to have a detrimental effect on a child’s education due to circumstances linked with the school but outside school hours or lawful control” seems perfectly valid to me. Somebody quoted a figure of 16% for such bullying incidents, but that is widely ridiculed. It is far more serious than that, and I do not see how we can ignore it.

Mrs Gillan: You are saying that you want the first amendment to say that boards of governors “must” determine measures to be taken at the school with a view to preventing bullying involving their pupils:

That would mean that a board of governors “must” have measures in place in circumstances including those when children are not at school. Without elaborating on what the measures might be, that is extremely wide, and it is not even caveated by “reasonable”. Any court or board of governors would blanch at that very wide duty.

Mr Lunn: I did not say that it was perfect. I love the word, “reasonable” in a lot of circumstances. You could just say, “in reasonable circumstances”. The more you water it down —

Mrs Gillan: As part of the preventative education element of the curriculum, schools already do a lot to educate pupils about staying safe online, protecting themselves and respecting healthy relationships. There is a lot that schools are good at doing that impacts not only on how pupils behave at school but on how they behave in their daily life. The Minister is concerned that we are expecting boards of governors to police and ensure the safety of pupils even in situations that are outside their reach. Schools do a great job and already, in circumstances in which it is practical to do so, intervene when they are aware of issues affecting the welfare of a pupil, but inserting a duty of that nature increases their responsibilities to such an extent that the Committee cannot today be sure where they end. We will find out only when the first case reaches court: for example, when wee Jimmy has been bullied at a youth club on Saturday night, both pupils go to the same school and the school is asked what it has done about that. That seems frivolous, I know, but we have strong concerns about inserting a duty of that nature without really knowing the beginning and end of it.

Mr Lunn: Is the Department comfortable with principals already, in effect, exceeding their authority by intervening in that sort of situation? Say, for example, that a child sitting in class bursts into tears, the teacher asks what is wrong, and the child replies, “Look at my phone”. The teacher sees that half a dozen messages of a disgraceful nature were sent the night before by another pupil who happens to be sitting in the same class. We all know how a principal would deal with that, but, at the moment, they act informally — off their own bat. That is why some of us would like something in the Bill to at least strengthen their hand.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Without arguing for or against it, would the second amendment not provide a degree of cover for that situation? I appreciate what you said about it being the woollier of the two.

Mr Lunn: It is woolly. You can either strengthen the second one or tone down the first. The proper wording is in there somewhere.

Mr Craig: Not for the first time, I find myself in agreement with Trevor on this. It is probably the biggest bugbear that principals and boards of governors deal with today. I will not mention any names, but — trust me — my daughter could give you 20 names, half of which I have never heard tell of. It is a major issue for schools. If we miss addressing in some way, shape or form what is now the biggest problem for schools, we will have failed. We cannot ignore it. I am inclined to go with the second amendment. The other difficulty — I know that the police struggle with this — is how to get the definitive evidence to prosecute. Schools are no different. How do they get the information that allows them to go through the sanction process? It is a lot more difficult than you think. You can even get printouts, but the trouble is that, if something is deleted, it is gone from the system, and then you struggle.

Mrs Gillan: Therein lies the problem. You have talked about the problems that the police have, but they have much wider powers to confiscate property etc. How do you expect a school to deal with the issue when, as you said, it is very difficult to get the information?

Mr Craig: It is, but — I have to be honest — schools do not ignore the situation at present. Trevor is 100% right: we are flying by the seat of our pants, if the truth be told. There is nothing in the Bill to cover what school principals and governors are doing. That is why the second amendment is probably the one to go with. I could not care less about whether it needs to be beefed up — maybe it should be beefed up slightly — but we need to put something in the Bill to cover what schools are doing.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Irrespective of whether the wording of an amendment was not perfect, if it was agreed by the Committee and the House, there would be an opportunity, albeit not for the Committee, to tweak it at Consideration Stage.

Mr Lunn: I do not want to disturb the camaraderie — it is nice that Jonathan agrees with me — but the question is about evidence. Cyberbullying is where you are most likely to have firm evidence. When it is stored in a cloud, it is there for all time. Perhaps that has made it easier to prove cyberbullying than some other forms of bullying.

Mr Newton: I very much understand where Caroline and Alan are coming from. Caroline talked about taking a considered view and doing a lot more research. There is a coming together. There is recognition that it is a major problem. At the moment, as Trevor said, principals are taking action, but they do so in a vacuum, and we have to take decisions to address the issue in a bit of a vacuum as well. We do not know what support you will finally offer principals and boards of governors and what training and information you will support them with. The Committee's desire is to see something in the Bill, and we can work together to ensure that that is the case.

Mr Hazzard: I wonder what protection the second amendment adds to what is already there. It says that a board of governors "may consider measures", but I am sure that they have that power already. For me, the first amendment is definitely out. It would mean that, if someone was bullied on holiday and was still affected by it after going back to school, the board of governors would be liable.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Possibly. That would be more accurate for the first amendment than the second because there is a duty —

Mr Hazzard: Yes, that is what I am saying. The first one, for me, is definitely out, on the grounds that it leaves the board of governors liable for absolutely everything. It would place a duty on the board of governors that does not apply to parents or anybody else. To me, that is a crazy situation. I do not know what the second amendment would actually do. This is legislation: what is the point in putting something in if it is not going to —

Mr Lunn: It is somewhere between the two.

Mrs Gillan: The second one asks a board of governors to take measures against bullying

"where that bullying is reasonably likely to have a detrimental impact".

It does not have to have a detrimental impact. Is it only if it is "reasonably likely" to?

Mr Hazzard: As things stand, can a board of governors "consider measures" anyway?

Mrs Gillan: At the moment, it is the duty of the board of governors to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils attending the school at all times. Clause 2 refers to "on the premises" and "in the lawful control of". However, under wider safeguarding and the general duty of care, boards of governors take into account situations where, if they have concerns about the safety or welfare of a child, they must act under child protection. Some bullying incidents that take place outside are so severe that they merit child protection arrangements, and the police have to be involved in some circumstances. My understanding is that, at the moment, schools take into account the less severe incidents when providing support to the pupil who is the victim, but they are also aware of the wider discipline situation and the general operation of the school.

As I said before, we have commissioned the Anti-Bullying Forum to produce specific guidance on cyberbullying, and that is being drafted. The forum is made up of a wide range of stakeholders. I would like to see that.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): You mentioned "reasonably likely". The Department will be wary of any amendment in this area, but, if it was akin to the second amendment and included "reasonably likely", would that be a better form of words?

Mrs Gillan: My reading — I saw the amendments only on walking in here today — is that the second amendment is about measures that may help to reduce bullying by means of electronic communication:

"where that bullying is reasonably likely to have a detrimental effect".

I ask why "reasonably likely" is there.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee's thinking on this was that, when it comes to cyber communication, the board of governors has the power reasonably to protect pupils from actions that might have a detrimental impact. The idea is that a board of governors does not have to wait until there is a detrimental impact but should "consider measures". Members introduced some anecdotal evidence about what schools do currently, and the feeling was that this would give them some comfort and record the Committee's expectation.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Also, prevention is better than cure.

Mrs Gillan: If you want to introduce some sort of reasonableness —

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): This is without prejudice to your undying opposition to any amendment.

Mrs Gillan: This is without prejudice to our position. Perhaps this would be better: "The board of governors of a grant-aided school may, to such extent as is reasonable, consider measures".

Mr Lunn: That would be an improvement.

Mrs Gillan: What you are trying to capture there is that you want boards of governors only to do something that is reasonable.

Mr Lunn: Would we leave out the other "reasonably"?

Mrs Gillan: Yes, I think so.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): So we now have, "may, to such extent as is reasonable, consider measures".

Mr Lunn: Chair, I think that Caroline means to leave out the other "reasonably".

Mrs Gillan: Yes, the one after "that bullying", but you can take advice from your drafters.

Mr Lunn: Putting "reasonably" there has no effect at all.

Mrs Gillan: You could leave it in. You want to capture the reasonableness, but I do not know that putting it there does that.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I understand, and I can see both points of view. Adding "reasonably likely" might confuse things. The flip side of the coin is that it might be slightly preventative, and I can see the merit in that. OK, members, we will call it the Gillan amendment. [Laughter.]

Mrs Gillan: The Minister will not be happy. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I was going to tell you not to worry, Caroline, because there will be nine new Departments, and you will have plenty of opportunities in future. [Laughter.] The wording that you suggest is sensible, and everyone accepts it. Are members content to drop the second “reasonably”?

Members indicated assent.

Mrs Gillan: The Department does not agree with these amendments —

Mr Newton: You want that on the record.

Mrs Gillan: The second amendment states:

“consider measures to be taken by the school ... or other persons”

Boards of governors only have control over measures to be taken by the school and the staff; I do not know who those “other persons” would be. When we come to interpret all this, people will ask the same question.

Mr Rogers: That comes from clause 2(1)(b):

“whether by the Board of Governors, the staff of the school or other persons”.

Mrs Gillan: So it does — my mistake. I wonder what that means. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): We may be confusing, but at least we are consistently confusing.

Mrs Gillan: We will work that out.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Maybe, as a parting gift, Seán will get the award for being eagle-eyed.

There are two questions: whether we agree to table an amendment and, if we do, which of the two versions we choose.

Are members agreed that we table an amendment?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Chris, do you want to be recorded as dissenting?

Mr Hazzard: Yes.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): We have the slightly reworded second amendment or the first amendment, which begins, “in circumstances other”. We have agreed to table one of the two at Consideration Stage, and it may have to be tweaked. Although we have agreed, I have to put the Question on the amendment formally. May I have a show of hands so that it can be recorded? Sorry —

The Committee Clerk: If I understand it correctly, Chair, the Committee is considering the first amendment on the list, as that is the one that cuts first on the clause. The Committee is then being asked to indicate whether Aye, it wants to adopt that amendment; No, it does not; or to abstain.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The two amendments are exclusive of each another, so I will ask, first, whether members are in favour of the first amendment, which would insert sub-paragraph (iv).

Members indicated dissent.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Nobody is in favour of that. Next is the second potential amendment to clause 2.

Mr Lunn: Is that amended as suggested?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It has been amended by adding “to such extent as is reasonable” and leaving out the second “reasonably”. Any further changes will probably have to be made at Further Consideration Stage, unless there is a specific amendment that you want to make now.

Mr Lunn: No, not on the hoof like this.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I understand that.

The Committee Clerk: If members agree the amendment on a without prejudice basis now, I will have the revised wording by the time we come to agree the report on Monday.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): In principle and without prejudice, are members in favour of the second amendment?

Mr Newton: In principle and without prejudice.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I need a show of hands.

Mrs Overend: I will abstain because I would like to see the information that I referred to earlier.

Mr Rogers: Is this based on what we will see on Monday?

The Committee Clerk: It is on a without prejudice basis.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Are members in favour of the second amendment?

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 6; Noes 2; Abstentions 1.

AYES

Mr Craig, Mr Lunn, Mr McCausland, Mr Newton, Mr Rogers, Mr Weir.

NOES

Mr Hazzard, Ms Maeve McLaughlin.

ABSTENTIONS

Mrs Overend.

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): It is probably just as well that we do not have more amendments. Does anybody have any final remarks on clause 2?

Mr Rogers: It is a very small point, Caroline. The clause refers to reviewing policies within five years: why do we not have something there to ensure that it is part of the school self-evaluation process?

Mrs Gillan: The ETI would expect to see evaluation and for it to be tested.

Mr Rogers: In the school policy.

Mrs Gillan: In everything that schools should be doing for self-evaluation. It covers everything that they do and all their policies. John Anderson said that, when the ETI inspects schools, it asks them to fill in a questionnaire about all aspects of the school. Very often, those schools use the questionnaire even when they are not being inspected as a mechanism or tool for self-evaluation. That is good practice generally.

Mr Rogers: Will that be addressed in the guidance in some way or other?

Mrs Gillan: Yes.

Mr Rogers: That is fine.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): We have dealt with clause 2.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 (Duty to keep a record of incidents of bullying)

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Clause 3 has a table of motivations. Concerns were raised about the list of 10 motivations, such as what should be added and whether it is the right list. Caroline, you specifically referred to one motivation that had been omitted. There are a couple of possible amendments, but they are mutually exclusive. The first amendment would allow the Department to add to those 10 motivations by way of an order. The second amendment would put a requirement on the Department to bring forward regulations listing the motivations. Do you want to respond?

Mrs Gillan: The Minister's position is that we would not support any amendments to clause 3. The reason for the list, non-exhaustive as it is, being there is that the clause is about ensuring that schools keep a proper record, including the circumstances of the bullying and the motivation. The reason for the motivations being there is that it gives schools a flavour of whether there are any issues in the school that need to be addressed. We did not have to include a list, but we thought that it would be helpful to give schools an idea of what we mean when we talk about motivations. We have been criticised elsewhere for not putting stuff in the Bill, so we thought that we would try to be helpful about the type of issues, but, in doing so, we are conscious that a lot of stakeholders want their identity or motivation to appear. We felt that the clearest and fairest way to deal with that was to look to the section 75 groups and any other legislation that specifically has protected elements. That is why it is there.

Our fear about putting too much emphasis on the list and getting too hung up about it is that, if you want us to do particular regulations or expect the list to be updated, that could send a message out to schools that that is the list, that only motivations on the list are important and that, if you are not on the list, you are somehow of less importance or, indeed, cannot be counted. I come back yet again to the guidance. It will emphasise that those are some motivations but that there may be others to do with identity and other aspects. Our fear is that the Committee, by proposing these amendments, almost elevates the list to something that it is not designed to be.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Caroline, to play devil's advocate, the counterargument is twofold. First, I find it difficult to accept that we are elevating it. If you are saying that, although the list of 10 is boldly in the legislation but that, by making it by way of regulations, we are somehow raising it to something of greater significance, that is a little counter-intuitive, to put it mildly. Secondly, we had quite a few — I would not say controversy — submissions in which people said things like, "This is worded wrongly. This should be included in the list". As I said, while I appreciate that this is largely derived from section 75, some things on the list are moveable. I appreciate that the list of 10 is preceded by "may include", but, if you want to add to it in the future, primary legislation would be required.

Mrs Gillan: We feel that, because it is not exhaustive, schools have the freedom to identify other motivating factors, and we will assist with that in the guidance.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): My concern is that, if you are given a checklist of 10, but you may include anything else, people will automatically look to the checklist as being comprehensive, and people with different attitudes take different views. There are things that are unforeseeable now, but you may, two years down the line, really want them on the list. Regulations give a little more flexibility to deal with future developments.

Mrs Gillan: The ultimate flexibility is there at the moment. Anything unforeseeable can be listed as a motivating factor for a school. Especially with the second amendment to clause 3, if the Department is to make regulations about motivating factors, we will have to consult, look to stakeholders and ensure that we have a full list, which would not be possible. Other motivating factors will always come along, we would then come to the Committee and spend time looking at them, and you would take evidence. This list, however, is not the end of the story anyway, and flexibility is already there.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I accept that. On some of the early arguments, the Department and the Committee have flipped sides. On other issues, we have said that we intend to bring such and such forward, and we will go out to consultation and get the views of schools and people as to what should or should not be there. On this issue, however, there is a concern that, to produce a final list, or at least as good a list as possible, you must have a consultation process. To be fair, I suspect that the Committee has flipped on the other side of that as well. It seems to run contrary to the arguments used earlier on other subjects. To be fair, that is a —

Mrs Gillan: We are putting great emphasis on, arguably, using a lot of resource in the Department and in the Assembly on something for which we have ultimate freedom. The guidance can give flexibility. Schools will be able to determine the motivating factors. There will be all sorts of motivating factors that will change over time. By implying that there should be regulations with a simple list, schools will then be wedded to that list, and we will tell them —

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Again, the list —

Mrs Gillan: In terms of section 75 and other legislation, the list is minimal. It does not give the impression that we are leaving out other extra factors. We are acknowledging that there are lots of other motivating factors.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Regulations may simply say, "The motivation under this may include", followed by a list. At that stage, it does not have to be exclusive.

Mr Rogers: Caroline, there will be much emphasis on the guidance. Could this list not be in the guidance rather than in the Bill?

Mrs Gillan: Equally, when we went out to consultation, a lot of stakeholders wanted to see something in the Bill. A lot of the identities are prime identities where you will find bullying. There will always be others, but, as I said, when we recently tried to capture what was reasonable, we realised that we could not go on listing things forever and a day. We could never hope to cover it fully. That is why, in consultation with lawyers, we felt that it was best to rely on the current section 75 and a number of other legislative duties.

Mr Rogers: I agree with you, but —

Mrs Gillan: Ironically, we were responding to stakeholders in trying to facilitate that.

Mr Rogers: Unfortunately, people will see just the list and not the preceding words “may include”.

Mr Lunn: I am looking at the first suggested amendment:

“The Department may by order ... amend subsection (3).”

Why put it in there? The Department can do that anyway. On that basis, what is the Department worried about?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): No, Trevor, the Department could not do it anyway. Given that this is primary legislation, unless you put something of that nature in the Bill, amending it would require primary legislation as opposed to an order.

Mr Lunn: Fair enough.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I prefer the second amendment to the first one, but that is the technical reason for the first amendment.

Mr Hazzard: The list is not exhaustive, but it is important to have it in the Bill. For me, socio-economic background and physical appearance are the most prominent reasons for bullying in schools, yet they do not appear. Is it just a case of sticking closely to section 75?

Mrs Gillan: We stuck closely to section 75 and to other legislation. As we develop the guidance, we accept that socio-economic status, appearance and so on need to be drawn out and recognised.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Is it not sending a mixed message that some motivations are in the legislation because they mirror section 75, but the guidance will state that there are other things that we could also include? Would those not be interpreted by schools as being secondary factors that are given a lot less weight than those in the Bill?

Mrs Gillan: I do not think so. The guidance already talks about bullying and lists reasons and motivations for bullying. The guidance that is already out there draws out those issues.

Mrs Overend: I was also thinking that socio-economic factors and physical appearance are prime issues in bullying. If clause 3(3) and the whole list were removed, what effect would it have?

Mrs Gillan: We are responding to the consultation and the agreed policy of the Executive, who agreed to put the list in. The key thing is that schools record the details and motivations.

Mrs Overend: They would still be able to do that.

Mrs Gillan: They would still be able to do that, but, from a policy perspective, the Executive agreed to this policy and the drafting in this way. They could still do that.

Mrs Overend: Would it affect your guidelines if it were not there?

Mrs Gillan: No.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): There are two possible amendments, and they are mutually exclusive. If you wish, I will put the Question on each amendment to the Committee. If you do not want either amendment, you vote against both. However, if the first amendment is agreed, I will not put the Question on the second one.

The second amendment states:

“Leave out from line 37 to line 4 on page 3 and insert — ‘any one or more factors prescribed in regulations to be made by the Department, subject to the draft affirmative procedure.’”

Essentially, it gives the Department the power to make amendments rather than to amend, for want of a better word. Is that clear to everybody?

Mrs Overend: Say that again.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The second amendment to clause 3 would more or less compel the Department to make regulations. The first amendment, which refers to negative resolution, leaves the current list in the Bill and gives a power to add to it by way of amendment.

The Committee Clerk: As the Chair says, the second amendment would delete the list:

*“(a) age;
disability;
gender reassignment;

blah, blah, blah. It would then leave it to the Department to bring regulations, to be subject to draft affirmative resolution by the Assembly.

The first amendment would leave the list in but would add on:

“The Department may by order subject to negative resolution amend subsection (3)”

so that it could add to or, indeed, take away from the list.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): I do not know whether this adds to the confusion or brings clarification, but the amendment that starts “Clause 3, page 3, line 4” is listed first on the page, but we are voting on the second amendment first because it comes in the legislation first. As I said, if you are in favour of either of them, it is an either/or; if you are against both amendments, you would vote against both.

Mr Rogers: Chair, could you clarify something? I thought that you said that the second amendment would leave the list in the Bill.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): No. It is the amendment that we vote on second. The amendment that leaves the list in the Bill is the one that states:

“At end insert ‘() The Department may by order subject to negative resolution amend subsection (3).”

It leaves the list in the Bill but has the power to add to it. The second amendment — the one that we will vote on first — would more or less make it by drawing up the list in regulations.

Mrs Overend: Which one would be more complicated for the Department to deal with?

Mrs Gillan: It would be the regulation-making one for both the Department and the Committee, because we would prescribe motivations. Our starting point would be the list that we have, but another factor could arise or someone might argue for another motivation being added. We all could get ourselves tied in knots about where we end with the list.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): That is probably true if you accept either of the amendments, because you are looking at what should and what should not be added.

Mrs Gillan: I reiterate that we will be clear about the meaning in the guidance to schools, pupils and parents. With all the pressures from all the issues that we have to address in the schools sector, do we want to tie ourselves in knots over something that we do not feel is fundamental to addressing bullying?

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The amendment is:

Leave out from line 37 to line 4 on page 3 and insert — ‘any one or more factors prescribed in regulations to be made by the Department, subject to the draft affirmative procedure.’”

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 4; Noes 4; Abstentions 1.

AYES

Mr Craig, Mr McCausland, Mr Newton, Mr Weir.

NOES

Mr Hazzard, Mr Lunn, Ms Maeve McLaughlin, Mr Rogers.

ABSTENTIONS

Mrs Overend.

Question accordingly negatived.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): The other amendment is:

At end insert ‘() The Department may by order subject to negative resolution amend subsection (3).’”

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 5; Noes 2; Abstentions 2.

AYES

Mr Craig, Mr McCausland, Mr Newton, Mrs Overend, Mr Weir.

NOES

Mr Hazzard, Ms Maeve McLaughlin.

ABSTENTIONS

Mr Lunn, Mr Rogers.

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): There is a departmental amendment that adds to the list persons “with dependants”. That group had been omitted. It is probably relatively uncontroversial.

Mr Lunn: Where is it?

The Committee Clerk: It is not on the list.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): When the Committee dealt with the subject yesterday, it was indicated that the list of 10 motivations reflected section 75. However, there was a realisation that one of the section 75 categories had been left out: persons with dependants. The Department is seeking an amendment that adds those “with dependants” to the original list. Broadly speaking, people were happy enough with that yesterday.

Mr Rogers: Would that cover all carer situations?

Mrs Gillan: Yes, it would.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Are members content with the amendment from the Department?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): There are no other issues that members want to raise under clause 3.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 4 (Interpretation)

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): We agreed informally not to pursue any amendments to clause 4. There are no other issues that members want to raise under clause 4.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 5 (Short title and commencement)

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): Surprisingly, we did have proposals to amend the clause, which rarely happens. The Committee informally agreed that it would not pursue any amendments. There are no other issues that members want to raise under clause 5.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): No other amendments were suggested informally by the Committee during our discussions yesterday. Other than amendments that members want to table as individuals or as a party, am I right in saying that nobody wants the Committee to table any other amendments?

Members indicated assent.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Weir): That concludes the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill. I thank the officials and appreciate that we have probably left you with a little more work to do. The Committee will hold a short meeting on 8 February at 3.45 pm to consider the Bill report. We are looking to tweak — for want of a better word — at least one aspect.

Mrs Gillan: We want to register our thanks and appreciation for facilitating the consideration of the Bill. The Minister very much appreciates the constructive engagement.

Scrap Metal Dealers Bill [NIA 65/11-16]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Ms Anna Lo (Chairperson)
Mrs Pam Cameron (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan
Mr Paul Girvan
Mr William Irwin
Mr Alastair Patterson

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Members, you will be aware that the Committee Stage concludes on 19 February. At last Tuesday's meeting, members seemed to reach consensus that the Committee had run out of time to give proper consideration to all the issues that had been raised on the Bill, including the amendments proposed by the Department, which would impact on every clause other than clause 21, which is the short title. Members, can I double-check with you that it was agreed at last week's meeting that we had run out of time?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): We really do not have enough time to scrutinise the amendments put forward by the Department or the Bill. I seek your agreement that the remaining time left in the Committee Stage is not sufficient to resolve any outstanding issues.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content to proceed with the formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill today? It would allow the sponsor of the Bill sufficient time to schedule his amending stages.

Mr Boylan: I do not mind. We have to follow the procedure. We have to do our report, but we, as a Committee, need to discuss what way we would like to go forward. We have agreed primarily what we will put in the report. The next phase is the Consideration Stage on the Floor. We do not know whether the Department will move the amendments or what proposals will be made. We will not know until the Thursday before the debate what Mr Beggs will bring to the table.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): What he may or may not bring to Consideration Stage.

Mr Boylan: Exactly. All that we can do, as a Committee, is try to agree a position on how we would like to deal with this. After we have agreed a report, where do we go? It is up for discussion. If Mr Beggs brings something to the Chamber, for instance, we will have to get up and debate it or not.

That is the way it goes. If the Minister decides to table his amendments, we will be debating in the Chamber. How soon can we find out any of that? Uniformly, we have agreed a position.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Committee's position is that we do not have enough time to consider the Bill or the amendments, and that is what we will say in our report. We will produce a report, but we must follow the procedure, and we must go through the informal and formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. We did the informal on Tuesday, so we are now in the second stage — the final stage — of the Committee Stage, which is looking at the Bill clause by clause. I propose that, like last time, we group them into two groups, with your agreement. We can do it now. Ciara has tabled a draft report. If we have time, it would be useful to agree the draft report, so that we can submit that to the Business Office.

The Committee Clerk: If the Bill were to be scheduled at Consideration Stage, the Committee has agreed that it is not content to take a view on the Bill or the amendments, because it has run out of time.

Mr Girvan: I might take a slightly different view from that, and it is my personal opinion. Unfortunately, I have not been here from the start; I have been involved in only the latter part. The evidence that I have received brings me to a very quick conclusion that what we are dealing with is not necessary and, as a consequence, what we would be doing in the Chamber would be a window-dressing exercise. We would be wasting Assembly time and officials' time going through the whole procedure. I want to put that on record, because, having heard the evidence, I believe that that is what we are doing. I understand that we have to follow procedure, but we should have seen earlier that there were major flaws. The Department has already included that, because the red-line drafts that we saw last week —

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Every clause has been changed.

Mr Girvan: There is nothing in it. What is the point in having a four-hour debate or whatever — it can be as long as you want it to be, because it is legislation — an absolutely nothing that will have any material effect or change?

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The point is that the Bill passed its Second Stage, so the House supported the principle of the Bill. It was then passed on to us, the Committee, to go through the scrutiny stage.

Mr Boylan: We need to be more creative than that. We understand the procedures, but this is unusual. In all my time on the Committee, this has never raised its head.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Not in this Committee.

Mr Boylan: We have to follow procedure, but we also have to recognise that there is no appetite to go to Consideration Stage and Further Consideration Stage. That is the point that has been raised by most members — I cannot speak for all. The only thing that we can do is try to get, as soon as possible, an answer from the proposer of the Bill or the Department on what they propose to take forward. As soon as possible, we need to find out what they are going to do. You are right: we will get up and say that we, as a Committee, have formulated a report and did not have time to scrutinise the Bill. But there is another point: there is no appetite for the legislation from most of the Committee. You will find that if you put it to a vote today. That is the unusual part. It has not happened on this Committee.

The Committee Clerk: Is the Committee saying that it is not in a position to consider formal clause-by-clause scrutiny or the report today or that you have not had sufficient time to form a view and report in that way?

Mr Boylan: To form a view on the report, yes.

The Committee Clerk: Do you want to form a view of the report?

Mr Boylan: No, we have not had time to form a proper view.

The Committee Clerk: That was my understanding of the Committee's view from the meeting on Tuesday, and that is what we are reflecting that the Committee will consider at the formal clause-by-clause stage now. There is a draft report for members to consider today. It reflects the views. If that remains the view of the Committee and if the Committee is content to proceed today with the formal clause-by-clause consideration and the draft report, we will do that.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): OK. I will proceed, members.

I remind you that the formal clause-by-clause consideration is the last opportunity to discuss the clauses of the Bill and that any decisions will be final. Subject to your agreement, I propose to group clauses 1 to 20 of the Scrap Metal Dealers Bill for the formal Question. Are members content with that?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): As members are content, I will proceed. Do members agree that the Committee is not content to form a view of clauses 1 to 20, as the Committee is unable to give proper consideration and scrutiny to the complex issues raised at Committee Stage in the time remaining, including that it does not have a full understanding of the impact that the Bill will have on the scrap metal industry?

Members indicated assent.

Clause 21 (Short title)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): There are no proposed amendments to clause 21.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that I group schedules 1 and 2 in a single Question for the Committee's consideration of the Scrap Metal Dealers Bill?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Do members agree that the Committee is not content to form a view of schedules 1 and 2, as the Committee is unable to give proper consideration and scrutiny to the complex issues raised at Committee Stage in the time remaining, including that it does not have a full understanding of the impact that the Bill will have on the scrap metal industry?

Members indicated assent.

Long Title

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): This is the end of the clause-by-clause consideration. The Committee must now consider the long title of the Bill. No amendments have been proposed.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): That concludes our formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Scrap Metal Dealers Bill.

Are members content to consider the draft report on the Bill today? It has only just been tabled, given the Committee's consideration on Tuesday.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Members, you have the report. It is not very long. I propose to go through it, bit by bit, and allow you time to read through it. I refer to the draft report tabled. I will work through it paragraph by paragraph to allow members to indicate agreement or raise any suggestions for amendment. Members will be considering the entire report including minutes of proceedings, minutes of evidence and written evidence.

I will let you have a couple of minutes to look at the executive summary starting at page 5 and on to page 6.

Are members content that the executive summary at paragraphs 1 to 8 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the introduction of the Bill at paragraphs 9 to 12 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the Committee approach to the Bill section, paragraphs 13 to 21, stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the key issues of the Bill section, at paragraphs 22 to 25, stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the issues raised by the Department of the Environment section, at paragraphs 26 to 31, stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The next section is "Sponsor of the Bill's Evidence" at paragraphs 32 to 36. Are members content that the issues addressed by this section, in paragraphs 32 to 36, stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The next section is paragraphs 37 to 41, the proposed departmental amendments. Are members content that this section of the report, at paragraphs 37 to 41, stands part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The next section is the summary of evidence, at paragraphs 42 to 101. Ciara wants to add a sentence.

The Committee Clerk: I added a sentence to paragraph 42. This section is the other evidence that we heard outside of DOE and the sponsor. The previous paragraphs already reflected that evidence. I just want to be clear that you are content with that paragraph subject to that amendment.

Mrs Cameron: Yes, we had caught that on, Ciara.
[Laughter.]

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the summary of evidence taken from other stakeholders on the Bill at paragraphs 42 to 101 stands part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill section at paragraphs 102 to 106 stands part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): That concludes the consideration of the main body of the report.

Members, are you content to move to formal consideration of each appendix of the final Bill report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the extracts of the minutes of proceedings at appendix 1 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the minutes of evidence at appendix 2 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the written submissions at appendix 3 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the papers from the sponsor of the Bill and departmental responses at appendix 4 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the other papers at appendix 5 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content that the research papers at appendix 6 stand part of the report?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content for the Chairperson to approve an extract from today's minutes and the minutes from 9 February 2016, which reflect the read-through of the report? Those are needed for inclusion in appendix 1: minutes of proceedings.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Thank you, members. You are content with the appendices. The report, in its entirety, will be laid in the Business Office tomorrow. Are members content with that?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The next item on the agenda —

Mr Boylan: Before we move on, can I make a point?

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Yes.

Mr Boylan: It is an important point. It seems that we have done an injustice to the Member and the legislation that has been brought forward. In the future, Committees have to learn about trying to rush through legislation at the end of a mandate. It would be remiss of us not to reflect that as a Committee. To be fair to Mr Beggs, he put a lot of work into this. We, as a Committee, just did not have the time to scrutinise it properly. That is a lesson for all Committees, not just this one.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Although, to be fair, a lot of Committees are rushing legislation through.

Mr Boylan: It is a slightly different matter when you have the support of a Department: we have an individual Member with a smaller team. All I am saying is that we, as an Assembly, have to look at a possible deadline. If we had looked at this last September, it would have given us time. Something has to be put in writing to deal with that. There is no way that we should be rushing this forward. We are sitting in February, with four weeks until the end of a mandate, trying to scrutinise a private Member's Bill. We have to learn from that. The departmental stuff is irrelevant; it has a different body or team. We, as a Committee, have to reflect it. I do not know whether we need to put that in the report, but, if we reflect it outside that, that is grand.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Do members want those comments to be included in the report —

The Committee Clerk: Or reflected outside to the appropriate —

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Reflected to the Business Office?

Mrs Cameron: It is a very valid point. I have certainly experienced this in other Committees as well. Other factors are involved; I do not think that anybody wanted to simply turn down another Member's work, when you know that they have been working on it for a considerable time, without giving it an airing. There are other factors to take into consideration. It was probably unhelpful that there were two Departments — Justice and Environment — and neither, quite frankly, wanted to look at the Bill. That was probably a delay as well and would have been beyond Mr Beggs's control. There are other factors, but it is a valid point. It should be pointed out.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): One of the issues for the Environment Department not wanting it, they argue, is that it is not an environmental issue. Justice has so many Bills going through; it just does not have the time. Everything is —

Mr Boylan: The Assembly, as a whole, barring emergency legislation, needs to say that the September before the end of the mandate is the deadline —

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): It needs to be scheduled better.

Mr Boylan: — whether it is private or whatever. That should be an easy thing to do. If there is emergency legislation, that is slightly different. There should be a way of dealing with this. We are sitting here with a private Member's Bill, and we cannot scrutinise it. We have four weeks left.

Unfortunately, we do not even want to debate it at Consideration Stage and Further Consideration Stage. It is an injustice, really. We have an opportunity here to register it first and, then, let us see. Good luck to whoever comes back in the new mandate. Let us see whether they can come back with something else to deal with it. That is all that I am saying.

Mr Patterson: I concur with the comments made by the members. I am new to the Committee, as you know. I know that my colleague has put a lot of work into the Bill. It has to be disappointing for him to come to the stage that it will not go anywhere, but I agree with what you say about there having to be time limits. Something has to be brought in, because what I am witnessing at this time is a crazy situation in which everything is going through at the last minute and we do not have time to deal properly with items that people have put a lot of time and effort into. Something does need to be done going into the future.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): It is unfair to him after spending so much time, and he started the process very early on. I think that he started the consultation in 2012. It has taken a long time for it to come through.

Mr Patterson: A long time.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): We will reflect that to the Business Committee, and maybe, in future, the scheduling needs to be more realistic, particularly for a private Member's Bill.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Implementation of the first phase of the Childcare Strategy is continuing. This will include, in the coming months, a further round of awards under the School Age Childcare Grant Scheme. These awards will support new and existing childcare provision.

Work is also continuing on the full, final Executive Childcare Strategy. Consultation on a draft version closed on 13 November 2015. Officials are currently finalising the Childcare Strategy with a view to launching it later in the year.

Mr B McCrea asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many meetings have been held with the other agencies under the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Our Department has held seven meetings with other agencies in relation to the Joint Flags Protocol.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the rationale for placing the Employment Service under the remit of the Department for Communities rather than in the Department for the Economy.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The future Department for Communities will have a wide range of social policy and social welfare responsibilities. The closer integration of employment services with a unified welfare system would be in line with practice in other European countries, including Great Britain and Ireland. This approach would help the economically inactive and unemployed back into employment through comprehensive support and incentives.

Mr Dickson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they will publish a Sexual Orientation Strategy.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: We remain committed to producing a Sexual Orientation Strategy.

To achieve this commitment officials have completed a public consultation process and the responses are being used to inform the content of a draft Strategy.

Once developed, the draft Strategy will be referred to the Executive for final agreement and a further 12 week period of public consultation will then take place.

We would anticipate that the Strategy would be published after this final phase of consultation.

Mrs Overend asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the revised Child Poverty Strategy.

(AQO 9385/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Much work has been done to develop a revised Child Poverty Strategy. This has been informed by a review of the 2011-2014 Child Poverty Strategy, the development of a Child Poverty Outcomes Framework, the development of the Delivering Social Change Framework and the Signature Programmes, research and public consultation on Delivering Social Change for Children and Young People.

The strategy aims to tackle child poverty and deprivation so that no child here is disadvantaged by poverty.

The revised Child Poverty Strategy will allow us to better assess performance and focus on the outcomes that we intend to achieve. It will be published shortly following Executive Agreement.

Mr McElduff asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, following the successful arrival of the first group of Syrian refugees in December 2015 and the key role played by their Department, what lessons have been learned from the process to date.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: We are pleased to report that the initial reception and settlement of the refugees has proceeded very successfully. This has been in large part due to the excellent planning and partnership working across government and the voluntary and community sector.

Although we are still at a very early stage in the overall resettlement process a lot of operational learning is already emerging. These issues are currently being considered and digested. There will also of course be aspects that we can improve on in the future.

The focus now is on supporting the long-term integration of our refugees.

Mr McNarry asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the implementation of matters relating to their Department as outlined in A Fresh Start.

(AQO 9388/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Good progress has been made across the full range of issues in A Fresh Start. We discussed implementation with the Secretary of State and the Irish Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade at a review meeting on 14 January after which a progress report was published. A copy of the progress report is attached.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much is being provided to the community and voluntary sector in terms of (i) grants; (ii) grants-in-aid; and (iii) procurement, in this financial year, including any projected spend.

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Including projected spend, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development will have provided a total of £2,788,383 to the community and voluntary sector in terms of grants in this financial year. As all of this funding relates to grants, no funding has been provided in terms of grants in aid or procurement for the same period.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what compensation is available for business owners, including farmers, who were adversely affected by the recent floods, and to list the eligibility criteria to avail of the compensation scheme.

Mrs O'Neill: The Executive has agreed that an Emergency Financial Assistance Scheme will be established for non-domestic properties, including small businesses, affected by the recent flooding. The details of the Scheme are to be developed by the Minister of Finance and Personnel and myself.

I also intend to extend the Homeowners Flood Protection Grant Scheme to small businesses, including farms, subject to a business case being approved, later in 2016.

The eligibility criteria have not yet been developed for the Schemes.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what recent discussions she has had with financial institutions on the issue of escalating debt in the farming industry.

Mrs O'Neill: I have met on four occasions with representatives of financial institutions to discuss the issue of escalating farm debt in the farming industry. At these meetings I encouraged them to pro-actively engage with their customers, be flexible and more understanding in their approach, and demonstrate commitment to the longer term prospects for the industry. I plan to engage with them again in the coming days to discuss the current situation facing farmers and consider strategies for the future.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many dairy farmers have (i) diversified their farm business; or (ii) been put out of business, as a result of the recent dairy market crisis; and what support is available to farmers in these circumstances.

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) Information of farm diversification was collected by DARD in 2013 as part of the EU Farm Structure Survey. The survey results showed that 11 percent of dairy farmers in the north of Ireland had diversified as part of their business activities. No information is available on the number of dairy farms that might have diversified as a consequence of the current market downturn.
- (ii) The number of farm businesses that cease trading is not tracked and is not readily discernible from the mix of new start-ups, mergers, splits and transfers of farm ownership that is always occurring. A list of active farm businesses is maintained for statistical purposes and the table below contains information on total farm numbers at 1st June, with the change in number since the previous year.

CAFRE is working with dairy farmers through dedicated education and training programmes, as well as benchmarking, to help improve efficiency and embed greater resilience to market volatility within farm businesses.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she anticipates any problems with issuing Areas of Natural Constraint payments over the next two months.

Mrs O'Neill: On 25 January 2016, I announced the payment rates for the Areas of Natural Constraint scheme. Payments will begin to issue in early March and I anticipate that my Department will achieve its target to pay 95% of eligible farmers by the end of March 2016.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much funding has been awarded to South Down by her Department since 2007, including a detailed breakdown of the various schemes, measures and allocations.

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development provided a total of £169,915,000 to South Down from 2009/10 years to 2014/15. This is broken down in the table at Annex 1, over leaf.

Due to the Department's document retention policy of 7 years, financial information for the 2007/08 and 2008/09 years is limited and has therefore been excluded.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what opportunities exist for a decommissioning scheme for the local fishing industry as part of the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund Programme.

Mrs O'Neill: The EMFF Regulation may support measures for the permanent cessation of fishing activities only when that is achieved through the scrapping of fishing vessels and which is an action within an action plan to address the issue that the fleet segment is not effectively balanced with the fishing opportunities available to that segment. DARD has no evidence that indicates that our fishing fleet key segments are not in balance and hence the potential to deliver a Decommissioning Scheme is restricted. My Department has no plans, at this time, to deliver a permanent cessation scheme.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what opportunities exist for fishermen who want to diversify out of the traditional fishing industry as part of the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund Programme.

Mrs O'Neill: The European Maritime and Fisheries Fund can support diversification from fishing activities, where appropriate, through Community-led Local Development of fishing dependent areas.

My Department has made provision within its EMFF investment proposals for a Fisheries Local Action Group to develop a strategy for our sea-fishing communities and to deliver that strategy with assistance from the EMFF Programme.

If the strategy identifies a need to support diversification from traditional fishing practices, I would anticipate that such a measure would be included in the FLAG's proposals.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what opportunities exist for local crab and lobster fishermen as part of the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund Programme.

Mrs O'Neill: Crab and lobster fishermen will be able to apply for a range of measures under the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund. Assistance will be made available to the industry for vessel modernisation, including safety improvements, working conditions, hygiene, product quality, energy efficiency and selectivity. While the maximum rate of grant for investment on board fishing vessels will be 50%, small-scale coastal fishers will be able to apply for grant up to a maximum of 80% of the eligible investment costs.

In respect of fishing gear, the EMFF can only support investments in equipment that improves size selectivity or species selectivity or equipment that limits and, where possible, eliminates the physical and biological impacts of fishing on the ecosystem or the sea bed.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the recently constructed Floods Defence Wall in Annsborough, Co Down during recent instances of flooding.

Mrs O'Neill: Prolonged and heavy rainfall, throughout much of November and December caused surface water flooding in the Annsborough area, not river flooding. The recently constructed flood defence to protect properties from the Leitrim/Ballybannon River had no part to play in this event.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an assessment of her Department's role in the response to the recent flooding in Annsborough, Co Down.

Mrs O'Neill: A multi-agency site meeting was held on Wednesday 13 January to discuss the flooding at Annsborough Park. Initial investigations by NI Water (NIW) indicate the primary cause was a problem with a storm sewer.

The flooding may have been exacerbated by a blocked grille on an undesignated watercourse which provides an outlet to Castlewellan Lake. This may have caused water to flow into Mill Hill Road towards Annsborough. Rivers Agency gave a commitment to investigate the ownership of the grille on the undesignated watercourse and advise the riparian of their maintenance responsibility.

TransportNI and NIW also gave commitments to undertake further investigations in relation to the flooding.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development in which areas of North Down her Department is planning to increase the tree population.

Mrs O'Neill: Woodland cover in North Down is 9% of land area compared with an average of 8% in the north of Ireland. I remain committed to increasing the extent of woodland cover and in November last year I launched the Forestry Grant Schemes under the Rural Development Programme 2014-20 and allocated up to £17.4 million to support woodland expansion and the sustainable management of existing woodland. This is sufficient to create 1,800 hectares of new woodland and sustain approximately 4,000 hectares created under previous programmes and will help to make a small but positive contribution towards my aim of achieving 12% woodland cover by the middle of this century. The Department's web site provides an indicative map for woodland creation indicating the areas of land being potentially "suitable for afforestation" and "suitable for afforestation with possible constraints".

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the flood alleviation schemes in South Belfast.

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency has now instructed a contractor to commence the upgrading work on three urban drains in the Kinnegar Road and Locksley Park areas. The contractor is due to be on site within the next few weeks.

The works to upgrade the existing drainage infrastructure element in the Sicily Park and Greystown areas of South Belfast is being progressed by NI Water and is scheduled to commence during 2016/17.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what consideration has been given to moving away from breed specific legislation on dangerous dogs.

Mrs O'Neill: The issue of banning certain dangerous dogs was raised by stakeholders during the consultation on the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011 ('the 2011 Act'). It was also considered during the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee's scrutiny of the 2011 Act and was raised in debates during the legislation's passage through the Assembly. While certain types of dogs are prohibited because of the specific risk they pose, this does not imply that other dogs are not dangerous. The legislation provides protection to the public from dangerous dogs regardless of their breed. Ultimately no change to the ban was proposed.

The 2011 Act has strengthened the provision to deal with the issue of uncontrolled dogs and dog attacks, regardless of the breed of dog involved. It introduced a new system of control conditions that Council dog wardens may impose where there has been a breach of dog control law. These controls include: keeping the dog securely fitted with a muzzle when in a public place; keeping it under control (leashed) when in a public place; keeping the dog securely confined in a building, yard or other enclosure when not under control; keeping it away from any place; and/or having the dog neutered (if male).

Under the 1983 Order it is an offence to allow a dog to stray, regardless of its type. The 2011 Act introduced compulsory microchipping from 9 April 2012. This, along with robust control conditions, the new offence of a dog attack on another pet, more substantial penalties and stiffer fixed penalties, will help dog wardens enforce the law. It also holds careless or irresponsible owners and keepers to account where they have failed to exercise adequate control of their dogs. These provisions help protect the public, promote responsible ownership and penalise irresponsible owners.

Therefore, there are now legislative requirements on all dog owners for better dog control in public places.

You will also be aware that I initiated a joint review of the implementation of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 with the Department of Justice Minister Ford. This included direct engagement with stakeholders during discussion sessions across all sectors, with organisations, individuals and representative bodies who have an interest in animal welfare related issues. No one raised the issue of prohibition only on certain dog types during the extensive evidence gathering activities undertaken as part of the review.

All dog owners have a responsibility to ensure the welfare of dogs in their care and to ensure that their dog does not become a problem to themselves or other people in compliance with the modern dog control legislation that now exists.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps her Department has taken to protect and enhance hill farming in South Down.

Mrs O'Neill: The significant majority of hill farmers are located in the Severely Disadvantaged Area (SDA). Following the implementation of CAP Reform, eligible farmers in the SDA collectively will benefit from the value of Pillar I payments accruing to agricultural land increasing by about €4 million (£2.8 million) year-on-year from 2015.

I have also implemented a two year Areas of Natural Constraint (ANC) Scheme (2016 and 2017) in the SDA as part of the Rural Development Programme (RDP) 2014-2020. I recently announced that payments on eligible claims made in May 2015 would commence in March 2016. The budget for the 2016 Scheme is £20 million.

Work has recently commenced examining options for future support for the ANC post 2017 and my intention is that a consultation on this will be launched within a matter of weeks. Regulation EU (No) 1305/2013 also requires all Member States to designate a new ANC by 1 January 2018 at the latest. This is being developed and taken forward in parallel with the consultation on options for future support.

Further opportunities to support hill farmers are and will be made available via the RDP 2014-2020 through measures such as the Environmental Farming Scheme and the Farm Business Improvement Scheme.

The first phase of the Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) - Knowledge Transfer - opened last year with the Business Development Groups Scheme. Farmers across the north applied to join this programme, with 31% of applicants farming in the SDA. This Scheme will help farmers to come together with their peers, to learn about and enhance their knowledge of business management, new technologies and innovative ways of working. The FBIS Knowledge Transfer component will also deliver Farm Family Key Skills training schemes, including farm safety and business planning.

Support also exists via the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise with a range of courses on offer to help hill farmers.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much investment her Department has overseen in South Down since 2011.

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development invested a total of £116,887,000 to South Down from 2011/12 to 2014/15. This is broken down in the table overleaf.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the forecast shortfall in the number of vets in Northern Ireland; and how her Department are working with other stakeholders to address this situation.

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development does not have any formal system for forecasting the number of vets required for the north of Ireland. I am not aware of any evidence of an actual shortfall in the number of vets across the profession as a whole here, or across Europe, where there is free movement of qualified vets between all Member States.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of compliance with EU Council Directive 1999/74/EC within the European Union; and whether there is any evidence of eggs from non complaint countries being imported into Northern Ireland.

Mrs O'Neill: Council Directive 1999/74/EC was adopted in 1999 and lays down minimum welfare standards for the protection of laying hens. The Directive banned the keeping of hens in conventional or 'battery cages' from 1 January 2012.

All egg producers here, and in the south of Ireland and Britain, have been fully compliant with the Directive since 2013.

The European Commission confirmed in 2014 that it no longer had pending complaint cases based on non-compliance with Directive 1999/74/EC.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 9352/11-16, how many laying hen sites were visited; and how many of these were (i) fully; and (ii) partially compliant with EU Council Directive 1999/74/11-16.

Mrs O'Neill: In the 2015 year all 260 laying hen production sites in the north were inspected.

257 production sites were fully compliant and 3 were partially compliant.

Non-compliances were in relation to low level overstocking or insufficient litter provision. Follow-up inspections have been carried out to ensure full compliance with Directive 1999/74.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her Department's response to the recent flooding incidents.

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency made significant preparations in advance of the flooding by placing staff on call, clearing of culvert inlet grilles and the pre-deployment of resources to ensure a rapid response.

Rivers Agency staff dealt with flooding incidents mainly in Counties, Tyrone, Fermanagh and Armagh which included pumping out water to help protect properties.

The response to the numerous flood events necessitated a multi-agency approach with my Department taking the lead, and playing a key role in advising and working alongside other responding organisations to ensure the overall emergency response to the flooding was as good as possible.

The actions of the Rivers Agency and the multi-agency partners made a significant difference in minimising the impacts on people and property as a result of these severe events.

Water levels in Lough Erne, have fallen considerably and most of the impacts experienced in recent weeks have been abated.

Water levels in Lough Neagh, while falling slowly, remain relatively high. Levels are currently 240mm below the peak levels experienced early in January. Rivers Agency staff are monitoring the situation closely and pumping continues to ensure, as far as possible, that property does not flood.

My Department will undertake a review of this flooding emergency and I have decided that an independent chair would add value to the process. A report on the handling of the whole emergency flood emergency will be completed by early summer.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the actions taken by her Department to assist residential and business property owners affected by flooding.

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency readily assisted residential and business property owners affected by the flooding by undertaking preventative maintenance of grilles, and providing pumping equipment and sandbags as required, to mitigate the impacts of flooding.

Additional grille inspections on high risk inlet grilles were also undertaken as debris can often be carried downstream by a high river flow and cause an obstruction which may increase flood risk.

I launched the Homeowner Flood Protection Grant Scheme on 13 January 2016. The Scheme, which is an innovative approach to managing flood risk, provides assistance to property owners to install individual property protection to help reduce the impact of flooding.

The Grant Scheme is available to the owners of residential properties that meet eligibility criteria and will generally cover 90% of the installation costs with the remaining 10% contributed by the homeowner. The cost to homeowners may typically fall within the range of £350 to £750. The grant is capped at £10,000.

I intend to extend the Homeowners Flood Protection Scheme to small businesses, including farms subject to a business case being approved, later in 2016.

In addition, the Executive has agreed that an Emergency Financial Assistance Scheme will be established for non-domestic properties, including small businesses, affected by the recent flooding. The details of the Scheme are to be developed by the Minister of Finance and Personnel and I.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action has been taken to protect Downpatrick from flooding.

Mrs O'Neill: The Preliminary Flood Risk Assessment, as a requirement of the Floods Directive, determined that Downpatrick may be at potential significant flood risk of flooding from both coastal and fluvial flooding.

The areas predicted to be at risk are Market Street, Ballyduggan Road and Church Street and these are illustrated on the flood maps that are available on the website through Flood Maps NI.

The latest flood risk assessment for Downpatrick and the measures that are planned to manage these risks are contained within the recently published North Eastern Flood Risk Management Plan (FRMP).

Rivers Agency plans to carry out a feasibility study to identify if a flood alleviation scheme to reduce the risk of flooding is cost beneficial. These studies will involve the co-operation and input of Transport NI and NI Water. Should a study identify an economically viable engineering solution this will be subject to competing priorities and the availability of resources.

The considerable number of the properties at risk of flooding within the Downpatrick area are small businesses. It should be noted that I intend to extend the Homeowners Property Protection Scheme to small businesses subject to a business case being approved. This may provide the owners of these businesses, who may not benefit from an overall county level flood alleviation scheme, with financial and technical assistance to make their properties more resistant to flooding.

Mr Diver asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the current uptake of, and remaining funding for, the second phase of the Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme.

Mrs O'Neill: In its first year of operation, rural micro capital grants of up to £1,500 have been awarded to three hundred and seventy (370) community and voluntary groups to improve and develop their facilities and assets along the themes of modernisation, health and well being and ICT (Information and Communications Technology).

One hundred and forty six (146) rural groups were funded through Phase One of the Programme, and my officials are now in the process of paying these grant claims.

The second phase of the Programme closed for applications on 30 October 2015 and every group that met the Programme's eligibility criteria has been offered a grant. This represents a further two hundred and twenty four (224) groups, in addition to those from Phase One.

A total of £449,000 has been awarded in grants through Phases One and Two and this has helped a diverse range of voluntary organisations, spanning a broad spectrum of interests to improve and expand the services they deliver within their rural communities.

Judging from the level of interest in the Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme, it is apparent that this Programme has proven itself to be an extremely effective component of my department's current Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation Framework.

My officials are currently reviewing responses to the recent consultation on a revised TRPSI Framework and I am hopeful that the new Framework will continue to facilitate Programmes such as the Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme, where even a modest amount of grant aid, if targeted correctly, can make a very big difference both locally at grass-roots level and regionally at Programme level.

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many trees have been felled in the last two years to limit the spread of each tree disease.

Mrs O'Neill: In 2014 and 2015 Forest Service issued Statutory Plant Health Notices (SPHNs) at 60 sites for the control of Phytophthora ramorum in larch trees and Ash Dieback (Hymenoscyphus fraxineus) in Ash.

In these two years a total of 34 SPHNs were issued for the felling of larch trees affected by Phytophthora ramorum on both public and privately owned sites. Approximately 134,000 trees have been felled to date.

SPHNs were issued at 26 sites for the removal of ash trees affected by Ash Dieback. To date 4,088 trees have been removed from these sites.

All sites under notice are monitored by Forest Service Plant Health Inspectors.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what impact the cuts to higher education funding in the 2016-17 Budget will have on initiatives such as the postgraduate studentships for agricultural studies.

Mrs O'Neill: At this time, my Department has no plans to cut the level of funding in 2016-17 for its higher education provision, including postgraduate studentships for agricultural students. My Department remains committed to providing postgraduate studentships and higher education in areas of strategic importance to our agri-food industry and the local economy in general.

In 2013 I announced that my Department would be increasing the number of new postgraduate agricultural and food research studentships available in 2014 from 8 to 12. I am pleased to inform you that I was able to maintain this additional funding in 2015 and intend to do so again in 2016. This increased support for the scheme demonstrates our ongoing commitment to investment in the agri-food science base. It also addresses a key theme in the Agri-food Strategy Board's report Going for Growth, through the provision of postgraduate research to help improve efficiency, competitiveness and innovation.

We currently fund 29 PhD students, which is the highest number we have funded in over ten years.

Higher level courses currently offered by the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) will be maintained in 2016-17. CAFRE has excellent links with businesses in our local industry, many of whom employ our graduates. Facilities have been maintained and improved at CAFRE to make sure that they are kept up to date and can provide the essential practical experience to enrich the learning experience.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the criteria and potential opportunities for local fishermen through the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund Programme.

Mrs O'Neill: The European Maritime and Fisheries Fund provides my Department with the opportunity to invest in all sectors of the fishing industry during the period 2014-2020 in order to promote smart, sustainable and inclusive growth.

The north has secured around €23.51m or around 10% of the total UK allocation, with €13.7m European funding available to support applications from stakeholders, including fishermen, processors, aquaculture and community-led local development interests. With the required national funding contribution, this equates to around €18.3m.

Union Priority 1 focuses on the fish-catching sectors and aims to promote environmentally sustainable, resource-efficient, innovative, competitive and knowledge-based fisheries through focus on the objectives of the Common Fisheries Policy, especially the avoidance and reduction, as far as possible, of unwanted catches by addressing fishermen's obligations under the CFP's landing obligation.

This Priority provides around €10.6m public funding to support fishermen in vessel modernisation (including safety improvements, working conditions, hygiene, quality and energy efficiency) and gear selectivity. The maximum rate of grant for investment on board fishing vessels that use mobile fishing gear (such as nephrops trawls) will be 50% and up to 80% for vessels that deploy static gear (such as crab and lobster pots).

To be eligible for support, an applicant's vessel must be licenced and sea-worthy. The investment itself must be eligible against the requirements of the EMFF Programme and Common Fisheries Policy and make a positive contribution towards the aims, objectives and targets of the Programme.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what advice she can give to farmers who are awaiting their Single Farm Payment.

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has delivered on its promise to make 95% of payments to eligible applicants under the new Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) schemes by the end of December. To date, over 96% of eligible farmers have been paid £206m. This includes over 2,000 inspected cases, the largest number ever processed by this time of year. My Department has delivered a significantly better payment performance than any other region of the UK.

I can assure farmers that every effort is being made to pay all remaining farmers and to have all the inspection cases cleared by the end of March 2016. I would encourage farmers who have been asked to provide further information in support of their claims to do so as soon as possible.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what in year cuts have been made to the community and voluntary sector funding; and how this compares to cuts to other services.

(AQW 52947/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): As a result of Tory cuts to the Block Grant, earlier in the year, I was obliged to make budget cuts to the Arts and Sports Councils to cover a number of inescapable pressures which had arisen. Subsequently, I successfully bid for additional funding and was able to reverse the cuts to grant programmes.

Therefore, no in year cuts were made in voluntary and community sector funding in 2015/16.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the level of funding her Department has provided to community and voluntary organisations in Upper Bann in each of the last four years.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The information you have asked for is already available from the Government Funding Database (govfundingpublic.nics.gov.uk). This database is designed to record all public funding to the voluntary and community sector and to be easily accessible.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding will be made available to help groups commemorate the centenary of the Battle of Jutland in 2016.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is already playing a key role in developing inclusive approaches and telling the stories and different interpretations of this key period in the history of Ireland. An extensive and diverse range of activities, events and initiatives have already been delivered by organisations including the Ulster Museum, libraries, Creative Learning Centres, PRONI and the wider arts sector.

The DCAL family has also partnered with the Living Legacies 1914-18 Engagement Centre at Queens University Belfast in helping community groups tell their stories and share their stories with others.

The Battle of Jutland will feature in a new exhibition in the Ulster Museum, Remembering 1916: Your Stories, which will open to the public on the 25th March 2016 at a cost of £14,000.

PRONI will be hosting an open event featuring renowned archaeologist, explorer and historian, Dr Innes McCartney on 26 May 2016.

Libraries NI is planning a number of activities to commemorate the anniversary of the Battle of Jutland including twitter feed, a virtual exhibition on Libraries NI website, talks, and exhibitions in several including Reflections on 1916 in Belfast Central, 21 March - 30 July.

The NI Museums Council (NIMC) is not currently funding any associated projects in relation to the Battle of Jutland. However, the NIMC Accredited Museums Grant Programme is available, with an application deadline in late February, for museums seeking funding from NIMC, which could include the funding of Jutland associated events and activities.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the different phases of refurbishment on Castlewella library; and when this work will be complete.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has informed me that the planned refurbishment of Castlewella Library requires three main phases, the details of which are outlined at Annex A.

The completion of the refurbishment of the library is scheduled for April 2016 with the library fully operational and open to the public by early May 2016.

Phases of refurbishment: Castlewella library

Annex A

Phase	Details
Procurement Phase	A work specification and tender package was issued on 14 December 2015 and completed quality/cost submissions were returned on 14 January 2016. Following assessment of the submitted tenders the most economically advantageous tender has been identified and, subject to contract, Libraries NI anticipates a formal appointment by early February 2016.
Construction Phase	A preliminary programme provided within the tender submission of the successful contractor indicates commencement of works is anticipated to be 15 February 2016 with a duration period of 8 weeks. Completion is scheduled for April 2016.
Refit Phase	Following completion of the remedial construction works Libraries NI will require some time to reinstate equipment and restock the library. It is anticipated the facility will be fully operational by early May 2016.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what events will be held to commemorate the sacrifice of soldiers from the 36th Ulster and 16th Irish Divisions of the British Army that died at the Battle of the Somme.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is committed to collaboratively promoting inclusive approaches to commemorating the key anniversaries such as the Battle of the Somme and these have been taken forward by museums, libraries, PRONI, the arts and creative industries.

The DCAL family has partnered with the Living Legacies 1914-18 Engagement Centre at Queens University Belfast in helping community groups tell their stories and share their stories with others.

National Museums NI is developing a temporary exhibition which will open in March 2016 called 'Remembering 1916: Your Stories' at a cost of £14,000. The exhibition will be divided into four main sections – 'The Easter Rising'; 'The Battle of the Somme'; '1916: War and Society'; and 'Legacy'.

The Somme Heritage Centre has developed a programme of work to complement the Executive's plans to mark significant anniversaries occurring during the Decade of Centenaries 1912-1922. It has received £79,000 as part of a three year funding agreement to support this work and will receive a further £30,000 in this financial year.

The Nerve Centre continues to develop the 'Creative Centenaries' online platform and will be adding to its suite of online resources relating to the Decade of Centenaries and will be developing a 1916 exhibition.

The Arts Council has provided funding of £33,640 to organisations including: £6,000 provided to The Somme Association for Reflections to the Irish soldier on the Somme; £20,000 provided to DU Dance for Alternative Energies - First World War Project; and £7,640 which has been provided to Rathcoole Friends of the Somme for Tales of Time.

PRONI continues to work collaboratively in making available its rich resources relating to the First World War available by publishing material online and providing digital copies to other interested partners. They have also produced a First World War travelling exhibition which is currently touring Libraries NI and will host a conference in September/October on the Somme in conjunction with the Western Front Association.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50775/11-16, whether this report was released to the public on 1 December 2015; and to place a copy in the Assembly Library.

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) The report on the formal investigation and the recommendations from the investigation into the elver mortalities at the ESB facilities at Ballyshannon in April 2014 has been published on my Departments website on 15 December 2015 and can be accessed through the following link: <https://www.dcalni.gov.uk/publications/report-investigation-elver-mortality-event-cathleen%E2%80%99s-fall-station>

(ii) A copy of this report will be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many staff have been suspended from her Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure had no members of staff suspended for disciplinary reasons in 2013, 2014 and 2015.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how the restructuring of Department's will simplify the application process for angling licences and permits.

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL Inland Fisheries Group are currently finalising a more user friendly online application process which is scheduled to be operational before the new Departments are in place. Rather than being issued with a paper licence the angler will have an e record created instead. The new system will also guide the angler through the process, based on their initial choices, thus making it easier to purchase the required licence and permit.

Consideration is being given currently to the outcome of the recent public consultation process on the two fishery management plans for Lough Erne and Lough Neagh which proposed having a single licence and or permit to cover both game and coarse angling.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail her Department's underspend in the last financial year.

Ms Ní Chuilín: In 2014/15 my Department underspent its resource budget by £1.43m (1.42%) and its capital budget by £0.22m (0.59%). Overall, the underspend amounted to 1.2% of budget.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many applicants applied for the post of Chief Executive for Armagh Planetarium and Armagh Observatory; and whether the appointment process has concluded.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The recruitment process for the new Chief Executive for Armagh Planetarium and Armagh Observatory has not concluded. Until the outcome of this process is known it would be inappropriate to comment further.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) whether the IFA is required to set up a group or committee to take forward the funding for the Sub-Regional Stadia Programme; if so (ii) whether this committee will be constituted and independent of the IFA; (iii) how many people will be on the committee; and (iv) to whom they will be accountable.

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL is responsible for the development and delivery of the Sub Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer, including the allocation of funding.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the proposed new Enniskillen library.

(AQW 53751/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI is continuing work to develop a draft business case aimed at securing resources for the development of a new and improved public library in Enniskillen. The business case considers a number of options for delivery of library services in Enniskillen ranging from redevelopment on the existing site to potential relocation to an alternative location.

The business case has now reached an advanced stage and Libraries NI is awaiting receipt of key land and construction data so that it can complete the process. Libraries NI expects to receive this data shortly with a view to finalising the case by March 2016.

Department of Education

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of pupils (i) entitled to free school meals; and (ii) not entitled to free school meals that left school with less than five GCSEs at grades A*-C in each of the last four years, broken down by post-primary school.

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The School Leavers Survey collects the qualifications and destinations of all pupils leaving the grant-aided mainstream school system. Although this information is sourced from schools, it refers to the attainment across the education system as a whole. It is not appropriate to attribute the data to individual schools given that the achievements of pupils who transfer between schools are attributed to the final school. This has particular implications for data covering Junior High Schools and schools without a post-16 provision, given that pupils transfer schools at Year 10 or Year 12. Therefore school leavers' data cannot be interpreted as a reflection of individual school performance.

The following table sets out the proportion of pupils leaving the school system with fewer than five GCSEs at grades A*-C (or equivalent).

Percentage of school leavers not achieving 5 or more GCSEs at grades A*-C (or equivalent), by free school meal entitlement, 2010/11 to 2013/14

	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Non-FSME	22.0	18.6	16.9	16.6
FSME	51.2	46.6	41.5	43.4

- 1 Excludes special and independent schools.
- 2 Data include equivalent qualifications.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education for an update on his plans for the future of the Youth Council.
(AQW 52828/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: For an update on my plans regarding the future of the Youth Council, I would refer you to AQO 9421/11-16 which was answered on 22 January 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail the age at which a young person must leave a Moderate Learning Disability school; and whether this is consistent across all Education Authority regions.

Mr O'Dowd: It is recognised that once a pupil commences a special school, he/she tends to access this provision until they are 16 years; in other cases, the placement is extended to 19 years. MLD schools, in the main, provide education up to age 16.

For some MLD schools, development proposals put forward by the Education Authority have been approved by me to extend the age at which pupils can attend these schools.

The member will be aware that I recently commissioned the EA to prepare, publish and consult on a regional area plan for Special Schools, following publication of the Review of Special School Provision report on 3 November 2015. The EA recognises that enhanced consistency with regard to post-16 provision in special schools will require redress by the Authority as part of this regional area plan.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail how much funding he has provided to the community and voluntary sector (i) in actual terms; and (ii) as a proportion of his overall budget in each of the last three years, including the projected spend for the 2015-16 financial year

Mr O'Dowd: The funding provided to the community and voluntary sector (i) in actual terms; and (ii) as a proportion of the overall budget in each of the last three years, including the projected spend for the 2015-16 financial year is as follows:

Financial year	£m	As a % of the overall budget
2013-14	36.8	1.8
2014-15	38.5	1.8
2015-16*	41.5	1.9

* projected spend

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether his Department is responsible for the provision of specialist equipment in special education schools in order to meet the needs of children and young people with advanced learning disabilities.
(AQW 53049/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Specialist equipment for children with special educational needs (SEN) is provided either by the Education Authority (EA) or the local Health and Social Care Trust (H&SCT).

Through the statutory assessment process, and where there is evidence of need, the EA is responsible for the provision of specialist equipment for pupils with SEN whether in a mainstream or a special school. This includes equipment that a child needs in order to access their education, such as specialist seating; desks; hoists and toileting aids; adapted equipment and utensils to enable the development of play, independence, practical self-help skills and curriculum engagement.

The local H&SCT is responsible for providing pupils with specialist equipment to deliver therapy e.g. standing frames; sensory equipment; medical equipment to administer delegated nursing care, such as oxygen tanks and equipment to support mobility, such as walking aids, braces and wheelchairs.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number of new school builds; and (ii) the total financial investment in South Down and schools that serve South Down in each year since 2007, broken down by the (a) name of each school and the (b) individual investment they received.

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number of schools that benefited from the School Building Programme or Minor Works investment in South Down and schools that serve South Down in each year since 2007, broken down by the (a) name of each school and the (b) individual investment they received.

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) percentage; and (ii) number of children that achieved at least five GCSEs at grades A* - C in schools that serve South Down, in each year since 2001; broken down by (a) gender; (b) religious background; and (c) socio-economic background.

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the following tables.

Notes:

- 1 Excludes special and independent schools.
- 2 Includes equivalent qualifications.
- 3 The School Leavers' Survey was cancelled in 2002/03 due to difficulties with data collection as a result of technical problems with new software installed in schools which delayed the returns and provided insufficient time to undertake data validation with schools - a necessary part of the exercise.
- 4 Parliamentary constituency is based on the residential postcode of each school leaver.
- 5 'Other' religion includes 'Other Christian', 'No religion' and 'Non-Christian'.
- 6 Free school meal entitlement is used as a proxy for socio-economic background.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on his Department's plans for the old Conlig primary school site. (AQW 53124/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has responsibility for the old Conlig Primary School site. In line with its statutory responsibility to undertake area planning, the EA continues to consider options for utilising the site for future educational use.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education to detail his Department's investment in the Sure Start Programme in Upper Bann, in each of the last four years. (AQW 53144/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are now a total of 39 Sure Start projects throughout the north of Ireland, four of which have been created under the Sure Start Expansion Programme, which has extended Sure Start provision to the top most 25% most disadvantaged wards, as defined by the Multiple Deprivation Measures 2010.

Under the Expansion Programme, a further 14 Sure Start projects have expanded their catchment area into an additional 19 wards. Work is due to be completed in 2016/17 to extend services into two remaining wards, including the legacy Mourneview ward which is located within Upper Bann.

Three Sure Start projects provide services in the Upper Bann constituency: Blossom, Splash and Banbridge (Star). The catchment areas for these projects cover several electoral wards.

The table below shows a breakdown of the funding which was allocated to Sure Start in Upper Bann for the 2012/13, 2013/14, 2014/15 and 2015/16 financial years.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools that have received temporary variations in their enrolment figures in each of the last five years.

Mr O'Dowd: The first full year for which data is available in the format requested is the 2013/14 school year as, prior to this, the Department of Education did not electronically record statistics on the number of schools requesting temporary increases to their admission or enrolment numbers. This means that some of the data requested could only be extracted by a manual exercise at disproportionate cost.

The years for which the information is available in the format that you have requested are the 2013/14, 2014/15 and 2015/16 school years, and this information is provided below.

Notes:

Prior to 2014/15 statistics for sixth form temporary variation requests were not electronically recorded, therefore the figures for post-primary schools in 2013/14 relate only to increases approved to accommodate children of compulsory school age (Years 8 to 12). The figures for subsequent years cover approvals across all year groups.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of boys that have not achieved five GCSEs in grades A*-C, including English and Maths, broken down by protestant and catholic boys, in each of the last three years.

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the following table.

Number of male school leavers who have not achieved five or more GCSEs at grades A*-C (or equivalent) including GCSE English and GCSE maths, by religion of pupil, 2011/12 to 2013/14

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Protestant boys	2,105	1,995	1,894
Catholic boys	2,421	2,430	2,392

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education whether he has contacted universities in England to ensure they will continue to accept GCSEs set by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment that are graded differently to those in England.

(AQW 53209/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My officials and officials from the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA), as the regulator of general qualifications here, meet regularly with colleagues in the Universities and Colleges Admissions System (UCAS) in order to maintain ongoing dialogue about matters relating to university admissions.

While it remains the case that individual universities determine their entry requirements and admissions policies, universities have made it very clear that, as applications increase on a global scale, they are already well equipped to deal with different qualifications systems and grade scales.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of educational underachievement in West Tyrone.

Mr O'Dowd: The policies and programmes I have in place are realising improvements for our young people at Key Stage, GCSE and A-level. However, significant challenges remain in West Tyrone and elsewhere. I will continue to focus on improvement and equity.

I have provided additional resources to schools serving those most at risk of underachieving, through the weighting of school funding, and through targeted programmes such as Extended Schools. The Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy

Signature Programme delivered tailored interventions to 18,000 young people from disadvantaged backgrounds, and I am determined that the legacy of the project is not lost. Nineteen schools (11 primary and 8 post-primary) in West Tyrone received additional teaching support through the Programme.

The revised SEN and Inclusion framework aims to remove or reduce the barriers to learning faced by children with SEN and will work alongside my other policies aimed at addressing barriers to learning. It represents a more equitable framework in which all children with SEN should be able to get the support they need, in a timely manner.

However, addressing these inequalities is a multi-faceted, societal issue and one the education authorities and schools cannot tackle on their own. It requires the support of parents, businesses, communities, community leaders and community representatives. Families have a key role, and that is the message behind my 'Education Works' campaign that highlights the vital role parents can play in helping their child do well at school and improve their life chances.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) when the business case for the payment of accrued holiday pay for part time music tutors was first sent to the Education Authority; (ii) why these funds have not been released; and (iii) when the music tutors affected should expect to receive payment.

Mr O'Dowd: It is a matter for the Education Authority (EA) to prepare and submit a suitably robust business case for consideration and approval by my Department before onward submission for final approval to the Department of Finance and Personal (DFP). A final signed version of the business case has been received by my Department on 25 January 2016. Once the necessary checks have been completed my officials will ensure the business case is submitted to DFP without delay. It will be for the EA to progress relevant payments once approval has been obtained from DFP. It is not possible to confirm when the payments will be made until all the necessary approvals are in place.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the payment of accrued holiday pay for part time music tutors in the Education Authority Western Region.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in St Malachy's Primary School, Bangor.

(AQW 53223/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All places provided under the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) are fully funded by the Department of Education.

St Malachy's Primary School, Bangor, provides 52 full-time pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in St Comgalls Primary School, Bangor.

(AQW 53224/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: St Comgalls Primary School, Bangor, does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Glenraig Integrated Primary School, Holywood.

(AQW 53225/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Glenraig Integrated Primary School, Holywood, does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Clandeboye Primary School, Bangor.

Mr O'Dowd: Clandeboye Primary School, Bangor, does not provide any pre-school places.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education, following the change to a numeric GCSE grading system in England, to detail the GCSE subjects that local pupils will be able to study with the AQA and OCR exam boards.

Mr O'Dowd: Over the course of three years from September 2015 new GCSEs provided by awarding organisations, including AQA and OCR, to schools in England must be graded numerically. These 9-1 graded GCSEs will not be available to schools here.

I have yet to reach a decision as to whether I will allow any exception to the requirement that pupils follow an A*-G specification.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education, following the change to a numeric GCSE grading system in England, to detail the GCSE subjects offered by the AQA and OCR exam boards that will no longer be available to local pupils.

Mr O'Dowd: Over the course of three years from September 2015 new GCSEs provided by awarding organisations, including AQA and OCR, to schools in England must be graded numerically. These 9-1 graded GCSEs will not be available to schools here.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education whether looked after children receiving respite care attract a pupil premium for the school they attend.

Mr O'Dowd: Since April 2014 an additional factor to the Common Funding Formula has been available to support schools with pupils who are designated as looked after children. Schools receive just over a £1000 for each full-time pupil designated, on the date of the school census, as being a looked after child. This would include any children entering care for the purpose of short break provision or respite. The Health and Social Care Trust notify the relevant school when a child is deemed to have become or ceases to become a looked after child. Since October 2015 this notification indicates if children are entering care for the purpose of short break provisions only.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the membership of the Traveller Education Monitoring Group; (ii) its terms of reference; (iii) the number of meetings that have taken place; and (iv) whether the group has reported to him.

Mr O'Dowd: The Traveller Education Monitoring Group has not yet been established.

The Traveller Education Support Service (TESS) continues to work towards improving the educational outcomes of Traveller children and young people, by supporting them, their families and schools. My officials meet with TESS on a quarterly basis to monitor service delivery.

Mr Lyons asked the Minister of Education whether his Department plans to amend the Investing in the Teaching Workforce scheme to include teachers that have been qualified for more than three years.

Mr O'Dowd: The Investing in the Teaching Workforce Scheme is currently under development in collaboration with teaching unions and employer representatives.

It is intended to launch the Scheme later this Spring.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for this assessment of educational underachievement in East Belfast.

Mr O'Dowd: The policies and programmes I have in place are realising improvements for our young people at Key Stage, GCSE and A-level. However, significant challenges remain in East Belfast and elsewhere. I will continue to focus on improvement and equity.

I have provided additional resources to schools serving those most at risk of underachieving, through the weighting of school funding, and through targeted programmes such as Achieving Belfast and Extended Schools. The Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme delivered tailored interventions to 18,000 young people from disadvantaged backgrounds, and I am determined that the legacy of the project is not lost. Eleven schools (7 primary and 4 post-primary) in East Belfast received additional teaching support through the Programme.

The revised SEN and Inclusion framework aims to remove or reduce the barriers to learning faced by children with SEN and will work alongside my other policies aimed at addressing barriers to learning. It represents a more equitable framework in which all children with SEN should be able to get the support they need, in a timely manner.

It requires the support of parents, businesses, communities, community leaders and community representatives. Families have a key role, and that is the message behind my 'Education Works' campaign that highlights the vital role parents can play in helping their child do well at school and improve their life chances.

Over the two years 2013/14 and 2014/15, I provided total funding of £138,948 to the East Belfast Partnership through the Community Education Initiatives Programme, to support the development of more coherent and joined-up community-based and school-based activity. Therefore, I welcome the work being taken forward by the Eastside Learning Partnership to encourage schools and communities to work together to improve the educational outcomes for all children and young people living in the area.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 42101/11-16 and AQW 43428/11-15, to detail the results of the review of the current teacher exception under Article 71 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. (AQW 53281/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Fair Employment and Treatment Order (NI) 1998 (FETO) provides an exception, under Article 71, in relation to the recruitment of teachers. The FETO is the legislative responsibility of OFMDFM.

Removal of the exception under Article 71 of the FETO is a matter for OFMDFM to take forward. If OFMDFM were minded to do so I would support this as part of a full public consultation.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether his Department plans to expand the capacity of Knockavoe School in Strabane. (AQW 53286/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: As a controlled school, the Education Authority (EA) has responsibility for Knockavoe School. The EA has advised that works have been undertaken at the school to provide two additional classrooms for senior pupils and an indoor/outdoor area for the junior class, which were ready for occupation in September 2015. These works have resulted in an additional 300m² accommodation for the school, therefore alleviating an identified pressure and providing flexibility in respect of pupil numbers, based on class sizes and need.

The two class extension has provided a senior profound and multiple learning disabilities (PMLD) class and a purpose built Life Skills room for post-16 pupils. In addition, provision was made for a senior sensory room, toilet provision and storage area. A small extension was also provided to the junior PMLD classroom to provide pupils with improved access and vision to the playground, as well as enhancing the space and light within the classroom.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Holywood Primary School. (AQW 53288/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Holywood Primary School does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Crawfordsburn Primary School. (AQW 53289/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Crawfordsburn Primary School, Bangor, does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Ballyholme Primary School. (AQW 53290/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Ballyholme Primary School does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Kilcooley Primary School, Bangor. (AQW 53291/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All places provided under the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) are fully funded by the Department of Education.

Kilcooley Primary School, Bangor, provides 26 full-time pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Grange Primary School, Bangor. (AQW 53292/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Grange Primary School, Bangor, does not provide any pre-school places.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether his Department plans to expand provision of the Sure Start Programme in North Down in 2016. (AQW 53296/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Sure Start Programme was initially targeted towards children in the 20% most deprived areas, and I have been able to expand these services into the 25% most deprived areas, significantly increasing the annual funding to around £25million. This included expansion in North Down by the establishment of Bangor Sure Start.

Findings from the Independent Review of Sure Start, together with existing research, provide reassurance that our targeting of available resource in areas of highest deprivation is likely to have greatest impact on those children and families that can benefit most from Sure Start services.

Given this, the focus of the Sure Start Programme here will continue to be on the most disadvantaged areas, where the most positive and beneficial outcomes for children can be realised and there are therefore no plans to further expand provision of the Sure Start Programme in North Down in 2016 from the current recently expanded provision.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail why super numeracy children are not included in enrolment figures for schools.

Mr O'Dowd: I refer the member to AQW 52312/11-16, tabled by Anna Lo MLA, and published in the Official Report on 18 December 2015.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the support service in schools for children with Cortical Visual Impairment also known as Cerebral Visual Impairment.

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has advised that it employs a number of Qualified Teachers of Visual Impairment (QTVI) who provide advice and support to staff in mainstream and special school settings regarding children with a visual impairment.

Referrals to the EA's VI support services can be for a range of eye conditions, including Cortical Visual Impairment (CVI).

Support provided to schools is of an advisory nature informed by clinical information provided by the relevant medical professionals, details of observations and functional vision assessments carried out by the QTVI and information provided by the class teacher regarding the child's visual functioning within the class and school environment.

Advice specific to the visual functioning of the individual child will include strategies regarding classroom management, modification and presentation of learning materials, lighting and other environmental adaptations.

Further training and information regarding CVI is being progressed on a regional basis by QTVI staff who have sought advice from professionals with expertise in this area and attended regional CVI training events. This will help inform the advice and support provided by the QTVI to school staff to enable them to develop a greater understanding of the needs of pupils with CVI and facilitate improved access to the curriculum for the children concerned.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education on how many occasions in Ministerial Correspondence the provincial title Northern Ireland has been altered from the original draft to the phrase 'north of Ireland' prior to issue; and upon whose authority the alteration was made.

Mr O'Dowd: The content of Ministerial Correspondence is at the discretion of the Minister.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the capital build project for Strabane Academy.

Mr O'Dowd: The new school for Strabane Academy was included in my Capital Announcement of January 2013. The Education Authority (EA) is responsible for taking this project forward.

The Royal Institute of British Architects (RIBA) Stage 3 for the project received Departmental approval on 11 January 2016. This approval will permit the EA to progress Stage 4 of the process. Stage 4 involves the residual technical work to complete the core design and the elements of the procurement process to appoint the contractor to construct the new school.

It is currently anticipated that site work will commence on the new build in Spring 2017.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Education to detail any communication he has had with teachers that want to avail of retirement through the Investing in the Teaching Workforce scheme.

Mr O'Dowd: The Investing in the Teaching Workforce Scheme is currently under development in collaboration with employer and teaching union representatives. Teaching Unions represent the views and opinions of the teaching workforce.

It is intended that the Scheme will launch in early Spring.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale for the difference in the limitation on class sizes at nursery level between pre-school playgroups and reception classes in primary schools.

Mr O'Dowd: The Department determines the full-time and/or part-time enrolment number of nursery schools and nursery units in primary schools in accordance with Articles 25 and 29 of the Education (NI) Order 1998. The Department has determined that for children in receipt of pre-school education in a statutory setting, the maximum class size is 26.

A reception class is currently defined in legislation as suitable to the requirements of children aged 4. Children who have reached their fourth birthday after the cut off point for compulsory school starting age may be able to join a reception class if the school has existing reception provision; if all the compulsory age children that applied have been admitted; and if it is within its admissions number.

The Health and Social Care Trusts are responsible for registering and inspecting voluntary and private pre-school providers participating in the Pre-school Education Programme (PSEP). Each provider must be registered with the relevant Trust for a specific number of children, up to a maximum of 26 in any group.

The Pre-School Education Groups (PEAG) within the Education Authority (EA) are responsible for ensuring there is adequate pre-school provision in local areas and make decisions on the number of funded PSEP places to offer an individual voluntary/private pre-school provider based on an assessment of need for pre-school places in the local area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale for the differences between the restrictions on the establishment or expansion of a nursery school and playgroup or other pre-school settings.

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education's Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) was designed as a partnership between the statutory and voluntary/private sectors.

Significant changes to statutory education provision, including the expansion or establishment of nursery schools and nursery units, are subject to a statutory process. This is mainly set out in Article 14 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 (as amended) and requires the publication of a Development Proposal.

Voluntary and private pre-school providers are managed independently. Decisions about the establishment or expansion of these settings are a matter for the settings' management committees/owners: the Department has no role in these decisions which are not subject to the Development Proposal process.

The Pre-School Education Groups (PEAG) within the Education Authority (EA) are responsible for ensuring there is adequate pre-school provision in local areas and make decisions on the number of funded pre-school education programme (PSEP) places to offer an individual voluntary/private pre-school provider based on an assessment of need for pre-school places in the local area.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how many staff have been suspended from his Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

Mr O'Dowd: There have been no suspensions in the Department of Education in the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education (i) to detail the capital funding his Department has allocated to St Columbkilles Primary School, Carrickmore since 2011; and (ii) for an update on the school's application for a new build capital scheme.

(AQW 53402/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) Since 2011, the Department has made funding available for the following minor works schemes at St Columbkilles Primary School:

Scheme	Total Approved Cost (£)	Financial Year
Disabled toilet	1,800.00	2012/13
Vertical draining / sanding of pitch	806.40	2014/15
New fencing and gates	7,547.83	2014/15
Total	8,354.23

- (ii) St Columbkilles Primary School was considered under the protocol developed to select projects to proceed in planning in 2014 but did not achieve sufficient priority to be included in the list of schools that I announced at that time. However the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS), as managing authority for St Columbkilles Primary School, will have the opportunity to submit the project for consideration as part of any future capital announcement process.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail how (a) much funding his Department has allocated to the Dean Maguire College, Carrickmore since 2011; and (b) his Department will help fund and support the school's accommodation requirements in future capital works.

Mr O'Dowd:

- (a) The Department has invested significant capital funding in Dean Maguirc College since 2011. The table below provides detail on the minor works schemes for which funding has been made available:

Scheme	Total Approved Cost (£)	Financial Year
Perimeter fencing	75,600.00	2011/12
Security works	54,827.90	2013/14
Roofing works	192,000.00	2014/15
Upgrade lighting	19,285.70	2014/15
Vertical draining/ sanding of pitch	2,571.00	2014/15
Replacement mobiles (underway)	634,146.00	2015/16
Total	978,430.60

- (b) Dean Maguirc College has not been included in any of my major capital announcements to date due to issues around sustainability. However the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS), as managing authority for Dean Maguirc College, will have the opportunity to submit the project for consideration as part of any future major capital announcement process.

Should the school require further minor capital works, the Department will consider any application submitted through CCMS. All applications received are prioritised according to greatest need against the available budget.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) whether he is aware of the concerns expressed by Governors, staff, parents and pupils at King's Park Primary School, Lurgan, following the decision to reduce the crossing patrol at their school; (ii) why the decision was taken to reduce the crossing patrols; and (iii) whether he will respond to these concerns and reverse the decision.

Mr O'Dowd: I am aware of the Education Authority's (EA) decision to reduce the school crossing patrol (SCP) provision at King's Park Primary School and the concerns of those associated with the School.

I am informed by the EA that following the recent retirement of one of the SCP staff at the School, the Authority conducted a review at Queens Place and concluded that the light controlled crossing is a suitable crossing point which does not require the additional provision of two SCP's to operate safely.

The review was conducted in line with the criteria established by road safety organisation, Road Safety GB, and took account of the recommendation within the guidance that where lights controlled crossings are available, there is not normally a requirement to provide a SCP.

As the discretionary provision of SCPs is the operational responsibility of the EA, it would not be appropriate for me to intervene in this matter.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the timeline for (a) applications to the Pathways Fund; and (b) any processes connected with the applications for funding.

Mr O'Dowd: The Pathway Fund (the Fund) will be introduced to replace the Early Years Fund, with awards made from 1 April 2016. Following open competition, Early Years – the Organisation for Young Children (EYO) was selected to administer the Fund.

The formal launch of the Fund will take place on 10 February 2016, when applications to the Fund will be opened. The application process will close on 2 March 2016, with awards being announced by the end of March.

EYO corresponded with all potential applicants (for which contact details are available) on 27 January 2016 advising of the Fund and is liaising with the Early Years sector during January and February 2016 to provide further information regarding the Fund. Information will also be available on the EYO website.

The evaluation process is currently being developed by EYO with DE to enable fair and equitable assessment of applications following the closing date.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail why all potential applicants for the Pathways Fund were not given advance information, unlike other Early Years funded organisations.

(AQW 53417/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Pathway Fund is replacing the Early Years Fund from 1 April 2016 and will be administered by Early Years - the Organisation for Young Children (EYO) which is currently developing the application process with the Department. EYO has advised that correspondence, comprising details of the Pathway Fund, was issued to all potential applicants (for which contact details are available) on 27 January 2016. In addition EYO are liaising directly with the Early Years sector during January and February to provide further information regarding the Fund. Information will also be available on the EYO website.

EYO also administers the Early Years Fund on behalf of the Department and advises that they recently held meetings with the 153 groups currently funded under the Early Years Fund, to inform them of the closure of the DE Early Years Fund and discuss the implications for them.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how he will ensure equality of access to information in the new Pathways Fund; and that areas of social disadvantage which previously have not had a project funded are not put at a disadvantage.

Mr O'Dowd: The Pathway fund (the Fund) will be introduced to replace the Early Years Fund, with awards made from 1 April 2016. The Fund will be administered by Early Years – the Organisation for Young Children (EYO) which is currently developing application procedures with the Department.

The Fund will be open to providers or facilitators of registered Early Years (0-4) education and learning provision such as;

- Registered Sessional Daycare settings (including Out of Schools, Summer Schemes, Playgroups, Crèches);
- Registered Full Daycare settings (Day Nurseries);
- Registered Childminders.

and not just the current 153 recipient groups of the Early Years Fund.

The Fund will;

- focus on provision in areas of disadvantage; and
- be aligned to the Department's key priorities including the principles of its Early Years Framework "Learning to Learn".

A key aim of the Fund is to ensure that those with no other source of funding have priority access to Pathway Funding.

EYO advises that the organisation has corresponded with all potential applicants (for which contact details are available) advising of the Fund and is liaising directly with the Early Years sector during January and February to provide further information regarding the Fund. Information will also be available on the EYO website.

EYO also administers the Early Years Fund on behalf of the Department and has advised that recent meetings were held with the 153 groups currently funded under the Early Years Fund related to impact of the Fund closure.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the organisations that have received funding through the Early Years Fund in each of the last four years.

Mr O'Dowd: The organisations that have received funding through the Early Years Fund in each of the last four years are listed in the table provided.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail a timeframe for his Department's anti-bullying legislation being passed by the Assembly.

(AQW 53422/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill was introduced in the Assembly on 30 November 2015 and will:

- Provide a common definition of bullying;
- Require all schools to centrally record incidents of bullying, their motivation and their outcome; and
- Require Boards of Governors to play an active role in the preparation and implementation of anti-bullying policies and measures within their school.

It remains my full intention to have the Bill complete its legislative passage before the end of the current Assembly Mandate. To that end, it is intended the consideration stage will take place on 22 February; further consideration stage on 07 March; and the final stage on 15 March 2016.

Following completion of the legislative journey it is not envisaged that the commencement of the Bill will take place until the necessary IT systems, supportive guidance and training are in place.

I would hope that all the provisions of the Bill will be enacted by the start of 2017-18 academic year.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the capital investment for the development of St Anne's Primary School in Finaghy to reflect a variety of issues around capacity, safety and disability access.

Mr O'Dowd: A new build for St Anne's Primary School was considered under the protocol developed to select projects to proceed in planning in 2014 but did not achieve sufficient priority to be included in the list of schools that I announced at that time. However the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS), as managing authority for St Anne's Primary School, will have the opportunity to submit the project for consideration as part of any future major capital announcement process.

The Department funds an annual programme of minor capital works across the schools estate. Applications are prioritised according to greatest need, for example roofs over heads and meeting inescapable statutory requirements such as health and safety, fire protection and disabled facilities.

During 2014/15, three minor works schemes were completed at St Anne's Primary School at a cost of circa £63,000 providing for a disabled toilet, ramps and handrails; an upgrade of access control and remedial works to the gas supply.

Neither CCMS nor the Department are currently in receipt of an application from St Anne's Primary School for further works.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail his Department's underspend in the 2014-15 financial year.

(AQW 53466/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The financial underspend in my Department for the 2014-15 financial year as reported in the Final Outturn, detailed by area of expenditure, was as follows:

Year	2014-15
	Underspend £m	Budget £m	% of budget
Total	8.0	2,141	0.4
Area of expenditure:
Resource	6.3	1,958	0.3
Capital	1.7	182	0.9

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail the (a) waiting lists for children requiring a Special Educational Needs assessment in West Tyrone; and (b) length of time each child has been waiting.

(AQW 53485/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following receipt of a request for a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs, the Education Authority (EA) is required to complete this process within the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. Therefore waiting lists do not apply in relation to such assessments.

The EA have advised that the number of pupils in West Tyrone for whom a decision has been made to carry out a statutory assessment and who were within the ten week period, allowed by statute, to complete the assessment, as at 31 December 2015, was 13.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail what provisions or requirements there are in the curriculum or syllabus to educate pupils about the Holocaust.

Mr O'Dowd: Teaching about the Holocaust is not a statutory requirement in our curriculum. However, there are opportunities for pupils to explore the Holocaust and related topics, particularly at Key Stage 2 via the 'World Around Us' and 'Personal Development & Mutual Understanding' and at Key Stage 3 via 'Learning for Life and Work' and 'Environment and Society'.

In terms of statutory requirements, pupils must be provided with the opportunity to investigate the impact of significant events of the 20th Century on the world as part of the minimum content for History at Key Stage 3.

My Department does not hold details of the number of teachers that have received training or attended courses relating to teaching about the Holocaust. However to encourage schools to mark the Holocaust Memorial Day on 27 January 2016, my Department brought the Holocaust Memorial Day Trust's resource "Don't Stand By" to the attention of all post-primary schools via the C2k notice board, the information management system used by schools here.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers that have received training or attended courses relating to teaching about the Holocaust.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 52956/11-16, whether his Department has raised any concerns with the Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in relation to this matter, and if so, to detail the outcome.

(AQW 53491/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: It is the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment's view that the matters raised in AQW 52956/11-16 fall under Principle 1 of the Data Protection Act. It would be inappropriate, therefore, for my Department to comment further.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education to detail any feedback he has received from within the education system in regards to the decision by the AQA and OCR examination boards to stop offering GCSE courses locally.

Mr O'Dowd: A small number of post-primary schools have written to my Department about my decision on GCSE grading and seeking clarification on a number of issues.

I have also received correspondence from the Governing Bodies Association (GBA) and the Association of School and College Leaders (ASCL).

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Millisle Primary School.

(AQW 53529/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All places provided under the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) are fully funded by the Department of Education.

Millisle Primary School provides 26 full-time pre-school places.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Donaghadee Primary School.

(AQW 53530/11-16)

Towerview Primary School, Bangor provides 52 part-time pre-school places.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether the logistics for the Pathways Fund will be in place for the 2016-17 financial year.

(AQW 53546/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Early Years – the Organisation for Young Children (EYO), which is administering the Pathway Fund on behalf of the Department, has advised that Pathway Fund logistical planning is on target to open for applications on 10th February and close on 2nd March, with the aim of announcing allocations on 1st April 2016.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Ministerial visits he had made in each constituency, since May 2011, broken down by year.

Mr O'Dowd: Information is not held in the format required to respond to this request. To provide it would result in disproportionate cost.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail how much capital funding his Department has provided to St. Scire's Primary School, Trillick in the last year; and for his assessment of the future accommodation requirements his Department plans to meet.

Mr O'Dowd: In the last financial year a verti-draining scheme at a cost of £672.00 + VAT has been completed at St Scire's Primary School. In addition approval has been given for the replacement of a mobile with a double modular building (provision of 2 x classrooms and ancillary accommodation) at an expected cost of £224,662.00 + VAT. This minor works scheme will span this financial year and the 2016/17 financial year.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) fully-funded; and (ii) part-funded nursery places available in Ballymagee Primary School, Bangor.

(AQW 53632/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All places provided under the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) are fully funded by the Department of Education.

Bloomfield Primary School, Bangor provides 52 part-time pre-school places.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education for an update on the ownership of the schools moving onto the Strule shared education campus.

Mr O'Dowd: My officials are working with the relevant school managing authorities (that is, the Education Authority, the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools and the voluntary school trustee groupings) of the schools which will move to the Strule Shared Education Campus to develop and agree arrangements for its ownership, governance and management.

Work is well underway with educational stakeholders to agree future ownership arrangements and I look forward to the outcome of this engagement in due course.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education to detail what will happen to the existing sites and any proceeds of sale that may occur from those schools moving to the Strule Campus.

Mr O'Dowd: The existing sites of the schools relocating to the Strule Shared Education Campus, Omagh belong to either the Education Authority or to the individual educational Trustees grouping responsible for the administration of the voluntary schools involved. They are not in the ownership of my Department. Any decision to dispose of a school site will be a matter for the owner of that site, and will be carried out in accordance with the latest guidance in place at that time.

Disposal of Education Authority school sites is carried out in line with the guidelines in the Land & Property Services' document "Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in NI (March 2013)" and can be found at the following link:

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education to detail the budget for the Controlled Schools Support Council in the 2016-17 financial year.

Mr O'Dowd: Following the Executive's agreement of Budget 2016-17 on Thursday 17 December 2015, which was subsequently passed by the Assembly on 19 January 2016, I am currently working through the impact of the Budget 2016-17 outcome on the Education sector and have not yet come to any final decisions on 2016-17 budget allocations. In view of this, I am unable, at this stage, to advise on any specific budget allocations.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education to detail from where the budget for the new Controlled Schools Support Council will be allocated.

Mr O'Dowd: Following the Executive's agreement of Budget 2016-17 on Thursday 17 December 2015, which was subsequently passed by the Assembly on 19 January 2016, I am currently working through the impact of the Budget 2016-17 outcome on the Education sector and have not yet come to any final decisions on 2016-17 budget allocations. In view of this, I am unable, at this stage, to advise on any specific budget allocations.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education to detail how much the schools estate has spent on heating oil in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53642/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has provided the following figures for heating oil expenditure in controlled and maintained schools in each of the last five years.

Financial Year	Total Expenditure
2010/11	£7,973,430
2011/12	£8,617,897
2012/13	£9,342,346
2013/14	£8,167,897
2014/15	£6,411,977

The Department does not hold information on heating oil costs for Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated Schools as they are responsible for their own costs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for a percentage breakdown of schools by sector.

Mr O'Dowd: The proportion of schools by management type in the 2015/16 academic year can be found in the table below. This is split by sector. The total number of schools in each sector is provided for context.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the timeline for the tender of alternative education provision for the 2016-17 academic year; and whether the tender will be Northern Ireland wide or broken down by region.

Mr O'Dowd: Under Articles 86(1) and 86(2) of the Education (NI) Order 1998 responsibility for Education Otherwise Than At School (EOTAS) resides with the EA. While the Department provides an annual earmarked funding to the EA to support the delivery of EOTAS, it is an operational issue for the Authority to determine which mixture of EOTAS structures and services it requires to meet its legal duty.

The Education Authority (EA) is therefore responsible for the tendering process for any external EOTAS provision it wishes to use. I suggest that you contact the Interim Chief Executive of the EA, Gavin Boyd, and ask him to respond to you directly on the question of the timeline for the tendering process.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many working days were lost by his Department in the last financial year by staff taking sick leave.

(AQW 52537/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Statistics on departmental absence can be found in the following report "Sickness Absence In The Northern Ireland Civil Service 2014/15" which is available in the Publications and Statistics section of the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency website (www.nisra.gov.uk).

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what actions his Department is taking to address the low percentage of young people from North Belfast enrolling in university education.

Dr Farry: In 2014 there were approximately 3,880¹ young persons between the ages of 18 and 20 years old in the North Belfast parliamentary constituency. Of that number 1,040 were enrolled in university courses. In addition, there are a further 140 students aged 18 to 20 enrolled in higher education courses in Further Education colleges. At 30.5%, the higher education participation rate for young people from North Belfast is quite comparable to other parts of the city, but is below some other parts of Northern Ireland.

In 2012, I launched Access to Success, my Department's strategy for widening participation in higher education to all who have the capacity to succeed and to benefit from it. Significant progress has been made on a range of measures in the strategy aimed at increasing the recruitment, retention and progression of disadvantaged groups into and through higher education.

These include the launch of Reach Higher, an awareness and aspiration-raising campaign to better communicate the benefits of higher education to under-represented sections of the community; the introduction of the R.E.A.C.H. programme which aims to expand the range of additional educational attainment-raising programmes at school, college, and community; and the introduction of annual Widening Access and Participation Plans, in which universities are required to detail their investments to increase participation from under-represented groups.

Ulster University

In its most recent Widening Access and Participation Plan, Ulster University has identified North Belfast as a priority area for outreach and educational intervention. The University places great importance not only on developments in this area but in all its inner city catchments across Northern Ireland where educational under-achievement inhibits social mobility.

In 2014-15, Ulster University supported a total of 28,430 pupil interactions in 156 schools, and 1,600 community members in educational developments. Of these, 2,188 pupil interactions in 19 schools and 130 community learners were based in North Belfast. Ulster University's flagship outreach programmes in North Belfast are Step Up, Science Shop and Ulster Sports Outreach.

Step-Up Belfast engaged 181 participants from seven post-primary schools (North and West Belfast) in a two-year programme of science with real experiences in University and workplace laboratory settings. Science Shop is a longstanding community project involving action research with the voluntary sector in which final year students and their academic supervisors research and develop business solutions with community partners. Community Partners involved from North Belfast include: Challenge for Youth, Sailortown Regeneration, The Ashton Centre, Pips Charity, the New Lodge Arts and Culture Centre, The Rainbow Project and North Belfast Senior Citizen's Forum. Ulster Sports Outreach delivered 8,069 sport and physical activity sessions creating participation opportunities for children and young people in disadvantaged areas, 610 of which were in North Belfast.

Ulster University's Greater Belfast Development project will see a significantly expanded campus established in North Belfast from 2018. The University is keen that the redevelopment will act as the catalyst to invigorate and regenerate the area in the vicinity of the new campus. The University is working closely with local community representatives to put in place activities and programmes that will help to ensure that the refreshed campus actively promotes and supports educational outreach in North Belfast. It is intended that these measures will result in the delivery of sustained long term benefits for the local community through the shaping of positive attitudes to education, ultimately leading to improved educational indicators, including participation in higher education.

Queen's University Belfast

581 individuals from the North Belfast constituency applied to Queen's University for 2015-16 undergraduate entry; 419 (72%) of these were made offers and 164 were admitted. This admission rate is consistent with the other Belfast constituencies.

Queen's University actively engages with all feeder schools in North Belfast. In response to the Access to Success Strategy, Queen's University has range of programmes in its Widening Access and Participation Plan to address the low percentage of young people from areas of high deprivation participating in university education.

The programmes aim to encourage and support the 'most able least likely' to enrol in university education and this is achieved by working with schools (primary and post-primary) and community groups in areas of high deprivation. North Belfast is one of these areas.

Queen's Junior Academy (Years 9-12) seeks to give targeted pupils (nominated by schools) and their parents/carers insight into university life and the various opportunities available. The Senior Academy (Years 13-14) works with targeted students nominated by schools to build academic and personal confidence, widen career choices and participate in a tailored programme of activities to support individual learning needs.

The Widening Participation Unit has, over the last year, formalised its relationships with post primary schools by awarding a Queen's Plaque to Schools who are working closely with Queen's Academy Programme to increase the percentage of young people enrolling in university education. Schools in North Belfast which have been awarded a Queen's Plaque by Professor Patrick Johnson include the Girls' Model, Boys' Model, Glengormley High School, Hazelwood Integrated College, Little Flower and St Patrick's College.

In addition, Queen's works with social workers in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust to ensure that, when appropriate, young people with experience of care or in care are nominated for our programmes.

Queen's also has an active involvement in a number of primary schools in North Belfast as there is evidence that interventions at a younger age have the potential to have an impact. The Professor Fluffy Programme is aimed at primary schools. This programme introduces Year 7 school pupils to Queen's University; teaches them about university life in a fun, engaging and interactive way; and ensures that they are aware of the exciting opportunities available through higher education.

Currently, a successful Professor Fluffy Programme is delivered to the following primary schools in North Belfast; Cliftonville Primary, Currie Primary, Edenbrooke Primary, Hazelwood Primary, Holy Family Primary, St Vincent de Paul Primary, Wheatfield Primary, Our Lady's PS, and St Patrick's Primary School.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether the Ulster University and Queen's University will face further cuts under the proposed 2016-17 budget.

Dr Farry: The Executive Budget document 2016-17 provides information on the 2016-17 budget, and identifies the opening baseline for Higher Education & Student Support as £317.4m with the final 2016-17 budget reduced to £305.6m (page 60). £20 million should be made available to the Department for the Economy for skills which should be funded during the June monitoring round. As a result of the availability of some of this funding, as well as the carry forward of recurring savings from 2015-16 through the voluntary exit schemes of the Department and its Arm's Length Bodies, the impact of the budgetary reductions will be significantly reduced in real terms.

My Department will work closely with both Ulster University and Queen's University to mitigate the impact of any further reductions to minimise what is passed to front-line provision.

Specific university grants are allocated through a funding model which takes into account of a range of factors including available resources, the number and type of students, the subjects taught, the form of delivery and the quantity and quality of research undertaken. This process will not take place until the spring, and it is therefore too early to determine specific university allocations at this stage.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether Peace 4 funding will be available to support the United Youth project.

Dr Farry: The Northern Ireland Executive has committed to utilise EU PEACE IV funding (Children and Young People - Priority 2.1) to deliver a cross-border Youth Initiative programme. The PEACE IV Programme (2014 – 2020) was formally adopted by the European Commission towards the end of last year.

A total potential allocation of up to €42.5m ERDF will be available over two phases for the cross-border Youth Initiative programme that will comprise elements of the Together Building a United Community (TBUC) United Youth vision, focusing primarily on good relations, personal development and citizenship.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the community organisations in West Tyrone that receive funding from his Department.

Dr Farry: The strategic aim of the NI European Social Fund (ESF) Programme 2014-2020 is to combat poverty and enhance social inclusion by reducing economic inactivity, and to increase the skills base of those currently in work and future potential participants in the workforce.

The Programme has 5 distinct funding streams focusing on support for specific groups of beneficiaries:

- Priority 1.1 – Individuals facing barriers to employment and economic activity;
- Priority 1.2 – Young people not in education, employment or training (NEET);
- Priority 2.1 – People with a disability;
- Priority 2.2 – Community-based support for families (CFSP), aimed at preventing young people becoming NEETs; and
- Priority 3 – Apprenticeships and Youth Training

Under the Unemployed/Economically Inactive priority (1.1), the following community organisations are funded through ESF in West Tyrone:

- Derry Youth and Community Workshop;
- Enterprise NI;
- The Prince's Trust; and
- TRIAX.

It should also be noted that Derry and Strabane District Council and Fermanagh and Omagh District Council are also being funded under this ESF priority.

Under the NEETs priority (1.2), the following community organisations are being funded through ESF in West Tyrone:

- Customised Training Services;
- Derry Youth and Community Workshop;
- Include Youth; and
- The Prince's Trust.

Under the Disability priority (2.1), the following community organisations are being funded through ESF in West Tyrone:

- Action Deaf Youth;
- Action Mental Health;
- Derry Youth and Community Workshop;
- Mencap;
- NOW Group;
- RAPID;
- RNIB;
- The Cedar Foundation; and
- USEL.

Under the CFSP priority (2.2), the following community organisation is being funded through ESF in West Tyrone:

- Customised Training Services

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when the assessment of the United Youth pilot schemes will be completed and published.

(AQW 52925/11-16)

Dr Farry: Preparations for an external evaluation of the Together Building a United Community (TBUC) United Youth Pilot Phase are underway and it is anticipated that the evaluation findings will be published before the summer.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the availability of (i) supported employment opportunities; and (ii) suitable work experience placements for further education students with learning disabilities.

Dr Farry: My Department, particularly through its Disability Employment Service (DES), has an excellent and long-standing working relationship with the Northern Ireland Union of Supported Employment (NIUSE) and its many member organisations. NIUSE is a pan disability umbrella organisation which promotes vocational training and supported employment for people with a full range of disabilities.

An active member of the European Union of Supported Employment for over 20 years, NIUSE is a leading advocate of the Supported Employment Model which is widely acknowledged as a model of best practice in terms of helping people with disabilities access paid jobs and providing them with the necessary supports to retain employment.

Working with many local and specialist disability organisations, my Department has consistently provided a comprehensive package of support measures aimed at helping people with disability related barriers into employment, including those people preparing for or moving into paid supported employment.

This range of specialist disability employment provision includes pre-employment programmes such as Work Connect, the Job Introduction Scheme and the Condition Management Programme (CMP), whilst medium to long term in-work support is available through the Workable and Access to Work programmes. DES also has a dedicated Occupational Psychology Service which offers an all age advice, guidance and assessment service in areas relating to disability and employment.

In addition, my Department currently supports 25 local disability employment projects through the European Social Fund (ESF), with 16 of these projects receiving further match funding from DES. The majority of these specialist projects are delivering the Supported Employment Model, and have set themselves challenging targets for moving people into paid employment during the next three years. Indeed, one of these projects, 'Job Match' is a partnership project between DES and Disability Action, and this has resulted in nine new Supported Employment Officers being recruited by the latter, with the sole purpose of securing and retaining paid employment for disabled people throughout Northern Ireland.

This project, like all of the other ESF projects, will be a cornerstone of the new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities' which is due to launch in February 2016.

One of the key aims of the strategy is to provide a clear transitions pathway for young people with significant disability related barriers, to assist them in their pursuit of new skills, employment opportunities and career development.

Work experience placements are an integral part of certain mainstream and discrete Further Education (FE) provision. It is the responsibility of individual Colleges to arrange placements appropriate to the level and type of course undertaken by the students. Placements are undertaken in a range of occupational areas including; retail, hospitality, construction, hairdressing, business and IT.

Colleges often work in partnership with external disability organisations including MENCAP, the Cedar Foundation, and others, to help source placements and support students while on work experience.

Additionally, officials from DES have been working in partnership with the Further Education colleges in the Northern, Southern and North West regions, in order to increase the employment opportunities and outcomes for students in the Discrete Learning Units, most of whom have a learning disability or are on the autistic spectrum. This partnership approach commenced in 2012, and during this time, 62 young disabled people have secured paid employment.

DES staff have also worked with the disability sector on a number of ring-fenced recruitment exercises, with employers from various sectors over the past three years, resulting in paid jobs for people in a supported but totally inclusive working environment.

With the implementation of the new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities' it is anticipated that this work can be replicated in the other regional colleges through the collaboration between DES, the college staff, Careers Service and the Supported Employment Officers from various disability organisations.

The Department's Careers Service is an invaluable source of expertise and will contribute directly to the delivery of the new "Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities". The Careers Advisers will partner with DES colleagues and other support workers to ensure that every young person with a disability who wishes to progress into further education, training and supported employment, will be supported through the transition process.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what strategies are being pursued to increase participation in third level education among under-represented communities.

Dr Farry: In 2012, I launched Access to Success, my Department's strategy for widening participation in higher education to all who have the capacity to succeed and to benefit from it. A copy of that document can be found at: <https://www.delni.gov.uk/publications/higher-education-strategy-documents>

In May 2015, I published a statement of progress on the implementation of the strategy. A copy of that document can be found at: <https://www.delni.gov.uk/publications/widening-access-and-participation-annual-statement>

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the existing funding available to deliver Enabling Success – a strategy to tackle economic activity; and the estimated funding required to deliver the strategy over the next 10 years, broken down by year.

Dr Farry: 'Enabling Success', the Executive's new strategy, aimed at reducing the level of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, was published on 20th April 2015. The strategy seeks, by 2030, to contribute towards a stable and competitive employment rate in Northern Ireland which exceeds the United Kingdom average, through a reduction in the proportion of the working age population classified as economically inactive.

The implementation of the strategy, over its proposed fifteen year period, is based on eleven key projects, to be managed and resourced on a cross-departmental basis.

However, due to the ongoing pressure on budgets, and the subsequent absorption of these pressures through Departmental baselines, the Enabling Success strategy remains unresourced and implementation has been severely hindered.

In an effort to initiate relevant projects for the Economic Inactivity strategy in 2015/16, my Department bid for resources as part of the June Monitoring round; however, this bid was unsuccessful.

An extensive research mapping exercise of economic inactivity service provision in Northern Ireland, aimed at the strategy's key target groups, has been completed. In addition, the Department for Social Development is leading a pilot project in the new Derry City and Strabane District Council. This pilot project received funding, of £300k, via the Executive's Change Fund for 2015/16, and it is based on early and more intensive engagement with new claimants of the Employment and Support Allowance benefit. The progress of this pilot is being monitored by officials from both the Department for Social Development and my Department.

The remaining cross-departmental projects have yet to commence, due to the lack of financial and other resource allocations. At this time, there is no indication of the level of funding that will be made available from 2016/17 to enable full or part implementation of 'Enabling Success'.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the progress of the post-19 Special Schools Transition Focus Group Action Plan.

Dr Farry: In May 2015, the Bamford Inter Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability agreed a cross Departmental Action Plan which seeks to offer improved support and services to help young people with severe learning disabilities to make the transition from school to adult services.

The Action Plan sets out a range of actions across government that aim to deliver improved support for this group of young people throughout Northern Ireland. These actions represent a snapshot of Departments' existing commitments and associated scope for change. However, the Action Plan is also intended as a dynamic document that will be continuously amended and updated over time to take account of changes in Departments' commitments and priorities.

The Action Plan was published on my Department's website on 23 November 2015 (www.delni.gov.uk/publications/transitions-action-plan). Progress on the Action Plan will be monitored on an ongoing basis by the Inter Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability, with my Department monitoring progress on all the actions in the Plan from relevant Executive Departments and reporting on this through the Bamford Ministerial Group reporting mechanisms to help keep Ministers informed of progress.

This monitoring process has begun and an update on progress will become available after the next meeting of the Inter Ministerial Group.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the success of the Assured Skills programme.

(AQW 53153/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Assured Skills programme is continuing to deliver for Northern Ireland. Alongside support provided by Invest NI, I believe Assured Skills support continues to be instrumental in securing new jobs for Northern Ireland.

To date, there have been 20 company projects through Assured Skills and, when fully realised and all 5,375 jobs are created, this will benefit the local economy by £130 million each year.

Through its Capacity Building programme, Assured Skills also enhances the capability of Northern Ireland to respond to the needs of potential investors by up-skilling lectures to anticipate future needs and creating pools of talent with skills of interest to potential investors, for example by up-skilling unemployed graduates. It also is used to help consortia of indigenous companies who also have similar skills needs. We have delivered capacity building projects in a number of areas such as; Data Analytics, Software Testers, Cloud Computing, Professional Software Development, CNC Machining and Export Sales & Marketing through our 'Academy' model. Since 2010, over 400 participants have successfully gained employment through this process.

In December 2014, a joint bid of £9.5m was made by DEL and Invest NI to develop more collaborative approaches to increase the level of relevance and use of skills across all key economic sectors. The bid was successful and Assured Skills was allocated £2m to undertake a number of projects during 2015/16. Companies from across Northern Ireland have been involved in the following Change Fund projects: 2D Animation, Financial Services, Game Development, Welding, Export Sales & Marketing, Automotive and CNC Machining, which has resulted in a total of 108 participants receiving training through our academy model.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the progress of the Financial Services Academy.

Dr Farry: The most recent Financial Services Academy commenced on 7 September 2015 and was funded through the Collaborative Skills Change Fund. Departmental staff, in conjunction with three companies (Citi, CME, SR Labs) and Ulster University, agreed the training requirement. The graduates had access to the CME Foundation Financial Innovation Laboratory, with the opportunity to undertake Bloomberg Certification, enhancing their attractiveness to prospective employers.

Of the thirteen graduates who took part in the Academy, four found employment with Citi immediately after the Academy, with an additional two due to commence employment with Citi in February 2016. One graduate was employed by CME and a further five students were referred to Fintru for job opportunities. The remaining graduate did not take up the opportunity of employment with Financial Services companies. The Academy Evaluation is currently ongoing.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline his position on student maintenance grants.

Dr Farry: The Department of Business, Innovation and Skills recently announced their decision to remove maintenance grants from English students from less well off families, instead offering maintenance loans for new students from autumn 2016.

I have decided to maintain means tested maintenance grants and loans in their current format for Northern Ireland domiciled students. My Department recognises the importance widening access to higher education for all students in Northern Ireland and the maintenance grant plays an important role in our widening participation strategy.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the Skills Barometer will help businesses and job seekers establish the skills needed for employment.

Dr Farry: The Skills Barometer, which was launched on 12 November 2015, provides my Department, and indeed the wider Executive, with the most robust and up to date information on future forecast skills requirements, thereby enabling policy makers and educationalists to make informed choices regarding the allocation of funds and initiatives.

However, the Barometer is not just for policy development. It is a tool which has been developed for everyone's use. Businesses will be able to see subjects and sectors where demand is high and where they may need to invest in training to meet the emerging skill requirements in the economy.

Job seekers should be able to see where job opportunities are likely to emerge by level of education and subject area and clearly this will also be invaluable to parents, teachers, pupils and students when looking at the future career paths.

A range of products have been developed from the Skills Barometer which can be accessed at www.delni.gov.uk/publications/ni-skills-barometer. For instance, my Department has produced an infographic which sets out where the future career opportunities will be and the key skills required to access these opportunities.

Departmental officials are currently considering how we can further disseminate the information to ensure the findings from the Barometer are circulated amongst students, parents, businesses, education providers, and careers and employment advisers, in a format that can be easily understood and shared to inform them of the skills in demand for the future.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's plans to encourage employers to maximise the range of opportunities for employment available to disabled people.

Dr Farry: My Department proactively engages with employers in order to encourage the recruitment and retention of employees with disabilities. Through this approach, the Department also raises employer awareness of the strengths and attributes that people with disabilities bring to the workplace, as well as the various supports that are available to both employers and disabled people to help address any real or perceived barriers to securing and retaining paid employment.

My Department, in partnership with the local disability sector, provides a comprehensive package of specialist disability employment support, including pre-employment programmes such as Work Connect, the Job Introduction Scheme and the Condition Management Programme (CMP). It also offers medium to long term in-work support through Workable and Access to Work, both of which are designed to help the employer and the disabled employee.

These in-work programmes are currently supporting more than 1200 people with disabilities in a range of paid jobs across every sector in Northern Ireland.

The Department's Disability Employment Service also has a dedicated Occupational Psychology Service which offers an all age advice, guidance and assessment service, to employers and disabled people.

My Department has also been working with representatives of many local disability organisations on the development of a new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities' which is due to launch in February 2016. The key aim of the strategy is "To directly assist disabled people to find, sustain and progress within paid employment".

One of the key themes of the strategy, 'Working with Employers' contains a number of proposals that will build upon and improve current practices. This will include working closely with influential organisations such as the Equality Commission NI, Northern Ireland Union of Supported Employment, Employers for Disability NI, as well as those from the disability sector, to raise the profile of people with disabilities, to challenge some of the attitudes and prejudice that exists, and to encourage positive actions by employers in recruiting and retaining people with disabilities.

My Department has been very successful, working with the disability sector, on a number of recruitment competitions, during the past few years. Through this partnership approach, a model of best practice is being developed, to encourage employers to recruit employees with disabilities, including the consideration of 'ring-fenced' interview dates, pre-employment training to help disabled clients prepare for the job, technical and other support at interview, and in some instances, a guaranteed number of jobs allocated to people with disabilities.

The new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities' will enable further refinement and promotion of this best practice approach, and this can then be offered to employers who wish to offer future employment opportunities to disabled people. I am confident that those organisations and companies who have experienced this successful recruitment process will be strong advocates for the model with new employers.

The Strategy, and particularly the 'Employer' theme, will also include promotional material, activities and events, which will build upon some of the Department's recent ventures with the disability sector and other partners, such as "Making Equality Work – Recruiting Disabled People" and "Showcasing Disability Best Practice". Both of these events were designed to raise awareness of the number of disabled people, working in various employment sectors, who are making a positive contribution of the success of their business.

In summary, therefore, through the delivery of existing supports and provision, the continued partnership work with the disability sector, and the implementation of the new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities', the Department will continue to create opportunities for people with disabilities to enter employment and develop their careers within work.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he is encouraging the development of links between Ulster University in Coleraine and further education colleges in Coleraine and Limavady.

Dr Farry: I believe that Further Education Colleges make a distinctive contribution to the overall provision of higher education in Northern Ireland. They have a particular strength in the provision of intermediate-level qualifications to meet the higher skills needs of local employers and regional communities.

My policy is to encourage the provision of Foundation Degrees offered in collaboration between the local universities and the regional colleges. Foundation degrees are professional and technical qualifications and have a major role to play in meeting the higher level priority skills needs of Northern Ireland. They equip learners with the combination of technical capabilities, academic knowledge and transferable skills at the associate professional and higher technician levels that employers are increasingly demanding.

Ulster University (UU) has taken a leading role in the validation of Foundation Degrees and has worked in collaboration with both the Northern Regional College and the North West Regional College in developing a range of Foundation Degree qualifications, including courses in Electrical / Electronic Engineering, Software Development, Sustainable Construction and Applied Medical Sciences.

In 2013, and again in 2014, I made increased funding available to provide an additional 75 full time higher education places at North West Regional College, and another 66 at Northern Regional College, in Foundation Degrees in STEM subjects. It is a matter for the senior management of each college to determine the location of specific courses across their campuses to best meet local demand.

I can confirm that a foundation degree course validated by UU in Building Technology and Management is currently being delivered in Coleraine campus. Students on the Northern Regional College Foundation degree in Sport Exercise and Fitness use UU Coleraine sports facilities on a regular basis. I can also confirm that a Level 4 Certificate in Counselling Studies and a Foundation Degree in Counselling validated by UU are currently being delivered at the Limavady campus of North West Regional College.

UU also collaborates with the colleges in the development of Access Diploma courses. These are key qualifications for widening participation in higher education, particularly for adult learners. Currently an Access Diploma in Social Sciences is being delivered at the Coleraine campus, and an Access Diploma in Combined Studies (Humanities) is being delivered at the Limavady campus. In addition, a small number of Level 3 Health Science students from the Limavady campus progress to degree provision at UU Coleraine in Nutrition. Northern Regional College has a sizable number of Level 3 students who progress to degree provision at UU Coleraine.

Developing links include initial discussions between Northern Regional College Performing Arts Department at its Coleraine campus and UU Coleraine, concerning the potential to develop a Foundation Degree in Performing Arts. Northern Regional College is planning to undertake academic visits to UU to examine course delivery, modules, industrial links, etc with a view to developing a Foundation Degree to begin in September 2017. Northern Regional College, Coleraine Level 3 courses in Music, Performing Arts and Production Arts already have strong links with the Riverside Theatre, UU Coleraine.

Finally, UU is also supportive of Northern Regional College establishing a Foundation Degree in Computing at Coleraine campus in September 2016 and a Foundation Degree in Business with IT commencing in September 2017.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much funding is currently committed to the strategy to reduce economic inactivity which was launched in April 2015.

Dr Farry: 'Enabling Success', the Executive's new strategy, aimed at reducing the level of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, was published on 20th April 2015. The strategy seeks, by 2030, to contribute towards a stable and competitive employment rate in Northern Ireland which exceeds the United Kingdom average, through a reduction in the proportion of the working age population classified as economically inactive.

The implementation of the strategy, over its proposed fifteen year period, is based on eleven key projects, to be managed and resourced on a cross-departmental basis.

However, due to the ongoing pressure on budgets, and the subsequent absorption of these pressures through Departmental baselines, the Enabling Success strategy remains unresourced and implementation has been severely hindered.

In an effort to initiate relevant projects for the Economic Inactivity strategy in 2015/16, my Department bid for resources as part of the June Monitoring round; however, this bid was unsuccessful.

An extensive research mapping exercise of economic inactivity service provision in Northern Ireland, aimed at the strategy's key target groups, has been completed. In addition, the Department for Social Development is leading a pilot project in the new Derry City and Strabane District Council. This pilot project received funding, of £300k, via the Executive's Change Fund for 2015/16, and it is based on early and more intensive engagement with new claimants of the Employment and Support Allowance benefit. The progress of this pilot is being monitored by officials from both the Department for Social Development and my Department.

The remaining cross-departmental projects have yet to commence, due to the lack of financial and other resource allocations. At this time, there is no indication of the level of funding that will be made available from 2016/17 to enable full or part implementation of 'Enabling Success'.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many staff have been suspended from his Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

Dr Farry: Two members of staff were suspended from the Department for Employment and Learning in 2013/2014 for disciplinary reasons. No staff were suspended in 2014/2015 and 2015/2016.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) why; (ii) when; and (iii) by whom (a) was the statement in the Department's letter dated 29 March 2011 to the former Administrator of the Presbyterian Mutual Society that the £25 million contribution from Westminster was not to be repaid reversed; and (b) was the decision taken that this £25 million was instead to be repaid or treated as a loan.

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The £25 million is repayable out of any surplus in line with the agreed Scheme of Arrangement. Its treatment in the Presbyterian Mutual Society's accounts has been agreed by the Presbyterian Mutual Society with its auditors.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) current; and (ii) future capital projects funded by his Department for West Tyrone and their expected completion date.

Mr Bell: My Department is currently delivering the £23.7 million Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project which is due to complete by 31 March 2016 and the £17 million Superfast Roll-out Programme which is due to complete by 31 December 2017. However, it is not possible to disaggregate expenditure on a constituency basis due to the nature of these projects to further enhance the Northern Ireland telecommunications infrastructure.

Invest NI has six current/future Capital projects in West Tyrone with financial support totalling £4.4 million, all of which are scheduled to be completed by September 2017.

The Northern Ireland Executive, through my Department, is providing up to £32.5 million of grant support towards extension of the natural gas network in the West of Northern Ireland including parts of West Tyrone. Subject to planning and other consents, completion of the main pipelines between towns is anticipated by the end of 2017.

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of jobs created in (i) North; (ii) South; (iii) East; and (iv) West Belfast in the financial years (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15.

Mr Bell: The table below shows the number of jobs created through Invest NI support in (i) North; (ii) South; (iii) East; and (iv) West Belfast in the financial years (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15.

PCA	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
Belfast East	712	847	1,070
Belfast North	288	351	425
Belfast South	733	783	974
Belfast West	284	199	371

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the community organisations in West Tyrone that receive funding from his Department.
(AQW 52872/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department has provided funding to the following organisations since May 2011:

- Strabane and District Caring Services
- New Horizons Partnership Limited
- Omagh Craft Collective
- Omagh Enterprise Co Limited
- Mid Ulster Enterprises (Creggan) Limited
- Garvaghey – Levelling the Rough Field

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of benefits to the local economy in West Belfast as a result of building Casement Park stadium.

(AQW 52951/11-16)

Mr Bell: If we are successful in winning the bid to host the Rugby World Cup tournament in 2023, the tournament offers a wide range of benefits, not only by showcasing Northern Ireland to a global audience, which in turn would have a positive impact for tourism and business.

The potential in hosting a tournament is huge, not only in terms of the media coverage of the matches worldwide, but also from the large travelling support World Cups have attracted in the past.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when the Innovation Centre at the former Mackie's site on Springfield Road, Belfast will open.

(AQW 53037/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Innovation Centre located on Forthriver Business Park in West Belfast is being developed by Belfast City Council.

Funding has been provided by way of a grant consisting of £4.1 million European Regional Development Funding and £2.0 million Invest NI. The balance is being provided by the Council.

The construction phase of the project is scheduled for completion April 2016 and the Council is currently undertaking a process to identify a suitable operator to manage and promote the Centre.

The Council has informed Invest NI that it expects the Innovation Centre to be fully operational by September 2016.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown of the support in place for renewables after 2017.

Mr Bell: The NIRO provides a 20 year commitment of support so existing renewable generation will continue to be supported by NI consumers until 2037.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) for his assessment of the performance of the manufacturing sector; (ii) what help he is giving the sector; and (iii) for an update on a manufacturing strategy.

(AQW 53088/11-16)

Mr Bell: According to the latest DETI Economic Commentary in October 2015, manufacturing has continued to post strong growth, with output up 3.2% over the past four quarters. In terms of jobs, 1,870 jobs over the past year, bringing the total number of manufacturing jobs to more than 80,000, the first time this has been the case since 2008.

However, in view of a number of major redundancies announced recently, there is no room for complacency.

Invest NI offers a wide range of assistance to manufacturing businesses. Between 2012/13 and 2014/15, Invest NI has made over 6,700 offers of assistance to manufacturing companies, involving financial support of over £205 million. This has resulted in investment commitments of almost £1.5 billion and the promotion of almost 9,300 new jobs.

On 15 December, I announced the establishment of an Energy and Manufacturing Advisory Group, to review the evidence on the effect of energy costs on the competitiveness of manufacturing industry in Northern Ireland and to identify effective policies, strategies and examples of industry good practice (locally and internationally) in reducing energy costs for manufacturing industry. This Group, chaired by David Dobbin and made up of company and union representatives, will report to me in February 2016.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Gas to the West project.

Mr Bell: Work by the project developers commenced in November 2015 to install a new gas pipeline from Maydown to Strabane. Subject to planning and other consents, first customers are expected to be connected in Strabane in late 2016, and pipeline installation works are to begin in 2017 to connect other towns in the West to gas including Dungannon, Coalisland, Cookstown, Magherafelt, Omagh, Enniskillen, and Derrylin.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to onshore petroleum licence PL1/10, whether Infrastrata has asked to add Ermine Resources Limited, Tudor Hall Energy Limited, Baron Oil plc, Southwestern Resources Limited and Petro River UK Limited to the licence.

Mr Bell: DETI has not received a request to amend the existing interests in Petroleum Licence PL1/10.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to onshore petroleum licence PL1/10, whether his Department has assessed the financial viability of all the assigned interests InfraStrata plc, Brigantes Energy Limited, Terrain Energy Limited, Ermine Resources Limited, Tudor Hall Energy Limited, Baron Oil plc, Southwestern Resources Limited, Petro River UK Limited.

Mr Bell: DETI has not received a request to amend the existing interests in Petroleum Licence PL1/10.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he will establish a task force in partnership with Mid and East Antrim Council to improve the industrial and economic sector in the area.

Mr Bell: Through the Northern Ireland Economic Strategy and the work of my Department and Invest NI, I am committed to improving the economic prospects of the whole of Northern Ireland.

The Economic Strategy sets out how we will grow the competitiveness of the Northern Ireland economy through a focus on export-led economic growth and achieve the 2030 vision of 'an economy characterised by a sustainable and growing private sector, where a greater number of firms compete in global markets and there is growing employment and prosperity for all'. It is through the Economic Strategy that we set out actions to deliver economic growth across Northern Ireland.

To achieve this vision and transform our local economy, we need to work in partnership, with local Government and the private, voluntary and community sectors, for it is these groups who remain the key drivers of economic growth.

My Department and Invest NI will continue to engage with all Councils, including Mid and East Antrim Council, as we pursue our goal of rebalancing the economy. We will be actively engaging with the councils during the refocus of the Economic Strategy this coming year to set out collective priorities for promoting economic development across all council areas.

As a statutory partner, Invest NI continues to work closely with the Council through the Community Planning mechanism. Invest NI has also provided funding to Mid and East Antrim Borough Council to help develop an Integrated Economic Development Strategy for the period 2015–2020, the purpose of which is to connect the policies and actions of all relevant economic development stakeholders and maximise the impact of partnership interventions. A final draft of the strategy should be completed by April 2016.

In addition, Invest NI is participating in a Manufacturing Task Force established by the Mid and East Antrim Council. This Task Force will work with other statutory bodies to consider appropriate activity following the JTI and Michelin job losses.

Given this level of engagement, I have no plans to establish another task force with the Mid and East Antrim Council.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the recent job losses in the manufacturing sector in Camden Glass, Benburb.

Mr Bell: It is regrettable to hear the announcement of job losses in the Benburb area. However, I understand that the company has ambitious growth plans, underpinned by a strategy to maximise efficiencies and reduce operating costs to increase their competitive position. Hence their decision to relocate the glazing plant to sit within the main manufacturing site in Antrim, allowing optimisation of process flows and elimination of transport charges.

While the company has entered into a consultation period with employees, they are also offering a number of activities to support the employees either transition to their operation in Antrim or to find employment elsewhere.

Department of the Environment

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any road safety campaigns his Department has planned for 2016.
(AQW 52444/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): My Department has a statutory duty to promote road safety and, within the context of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, does this through a wide range of rolling road safety education activities, including road safety public information campaigns and education programmes.

The principal objectives of road safety advertising and associated public relations activity are to contribute to reducing the number of people killed or seriously injured on our roads and support the achievement of road safety targets by researching and targeting the main causation factors that contribute to road traffic collisions, raising public awareness of these main causes, and changing road users' attitudes and behaviours.

Through its current portfolio of awareness campaigns, my Department in 2016 will continue to focus on problem areas, such as drink driving, speeding, carelessness and inattention; and on groups which are over-represented in the casualty figures.

I have also recently commissioned two new campaigns. The first is a social media campaign specifically addressing the various issues in relation to mobile phone use while driving. The second campaign will deal with young driver distraction, particularly when carrying passengers. Both campaigns will be launched in the coming months.

Our communications strategy for the Road Traffic (Amendment Bill), which passed its Final Stage last month, will include the development of a media campaign to effectively deliver important information to the public in advance of any operational changes. This will be high profile and likely to include a combination of media options such as social media, television, press, radio, outdoor and online advertising.

I recognise the continuing challenges of preventing road deaths and serious injuries and as such my Department will continue to address the issues through various activities.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51588/11-16, why his Department engaged the services of Quarry Products Association Northern Ireland to deliver bespoke training on minerals to departmental officials at a time when Quarry Products Association Northern Ireland members had not ceased the unauthorised sand extraction from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area in contravention of current planning policy and European Union environmental directives. (AQW 52723/11-16)

Mr Durkan: As part of the capacity building programme for new councils in advance of the transfer of planning functions in April last year, the Department organised and delivered a series of training seminars to planning staff on development management and enforcement relating to minerals development. This training was primarily provided by professional planning staff accredited by the Royal Town Planning Institute.

The trade association for the quarrying industry in Northern Ireland (Quarry Products Association NI) was invited to take part in the training to provide participants with an industry perspective. This training also included presentations from the Woodland Trust and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds featuring case studies and good examples of quarry restoration and working with biodiversity.

The Department considers it was appropriate to invite these groups to the training seminars.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any costs incurred by his Department by the research study on Environmental Impacts of Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction. (AQW 52767/11-16)

Mr Durkan: To date my Department has contributed £200k to the all island joint Research programme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the basis on which taxi licence applications are referred to the Occupational Health Service in circumstances where the medical condition noted on the application is one that does not require medication. (AQW 52963/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Taxi drivers are required by law to notify the Department if they become aware that they have a medical condition. In addition to this requirement, first-time applicants, and all those aged 45 years or over, are also asked to submit a medical questionnaire which is completed by the applicant's GP.

Medical standards for taxi drivers are higher than those required for car drivers. This higher standard is applied by the Department on the recommendation of the UK Medical Commission on Accident Prevention who recommend that the Group 2 standards which apply to bus and lorry drivers should also apply to taxi drivers.

The Commission's recommendation is based on the following:

- a vocational taxi driver spends more time at the wheel than a motorist;
- the risk of an adverse incident is greater; and
- when carrying passengers there is a possibility of a greater number of injuries associated with any collision.

The "At a Glance Guide to the Current Medical Standards of Fitness to Drive", which is used UK-wide, summarises the national medical guidelines of fitness to drive for both Group 1 and Group 2 drivers and is available to doctors and health care professionals.

Taking account of the guidance, an initial assessment of all medical questionnaires received is carried out to determine if the application can be approved without the need to refer the case to the Occupational Health Service (OHS) for consideration.

Although each case is considered on its own merits, in all cases where a medical condition is declared that may impact on the applicant's ability to drive a taxi, the medical questionnaire, as completed by the applicant's GP, is forwarded to OHS for due consideration and expert advice.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the community organisations in West Tyrone that receive funding from his Department. (AQW 52979/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The table below details the community organisations in West Tyrone that currently receive funding from my Department.

Organisation
Beltrim Charitable Trust
Beragh Red Knights, GAC
Omagh Early Years Centre
Owenkillew Community Development Association
Church of Sacred Heart Omagh
Sion Mills Community Forum
River Care Ltd
Ballinderry Rivers Trust

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of the Environment how many meetings have been held with the other agencies under the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005.

(AQW 53010/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My officials are aware of two meetings in October and November 2009 of a working group set up to review the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005.

My officials are not aware of any further meetings held with other agencies under the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of infringements relating to (i) missing or defective mandatory roof signs; (ii) excessive charging; and (iii) unauthorised pick-ups for which Uber has been reported to date.

(AQW 53013/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) does not publish statistics on infringements relating to an individual licensed taxi operator as this could potentially prejudice the commercial interest of that particular individual or company.

However, enforcement statistics are published on a quarterly and annual basis detailing the number of enforcement checks carried out, including prosecutions, penalties issued, etc.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department will address the issue of dead miles within the new Taxis (Taximeters, Devices and Maximum Fares) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015 to ensure taxi operators and customers in rural areas are not negatively impacted,

Mr Durkan: This issue was considered when the proposed tariff was being developed and subsequently consulted on in 2011/12. Whilst dead miles are included in the tariff, there have been concerns raised with the Department in recent weeks indicating that the tariff does not adequately address the issue.

My Department has undertaken some further research into the issue and has accepted that there is an issue to address and we are currently examining how we do this effectively.

My Department has committed to the Environment Committee that a legislative amendment will be made in early course to ensure that no negative impact is experienced by taxi operators or customers in rural areas. I expect to be able to advise the Committee of my intended course of action before the end of February 2016.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any planning approval conditions that relate to the safety of pupils walking to and from Drumragh Integrated College, Omagh.

Mr Durkan: Application K/2006/0024/F was granted approval on 08 August 2006 for the 'Erection of a two storey 580 pupil integrated secondary school with associated parking, bus area, pitches, play area, roundabout without compliance with conditions 3 and 4 of previous approval reference No K/2004/1613/F.

Condition 5 of this approval states that;

The developer shall on occupation of the development hereby permitted implement measures, to assist student travel, to ensure that students do not need to walk or cycle along a stretch of the Crevenagh Road between the Irish Town Road junction and the proposed new roundabout at the existing Crevenagh Road/Bankmore Road junction until the Department considers it no longer necessary, and such agreement is obtained in writing.

Any issues relating to this planning approval should be directed to Fermanagh and Omagh District Council, at the address below;

Mr Brendan Hegarty, Chief Executive, Fermanagh and Omagh District Council, The Grange, Mountjoy Road, Omagh BT79 7BL

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment whether the DVA has the capacity to manage the implications of the new taxi regulations with regard to taximeters and the impending deadline; and what flexibilities will be in place.

Mr Durkan: The Taxis (Taximeters, Devices and Maximum Fares) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015 provide for the fitment and testing of taximeters from 31 May 2016. The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) has identified the necessary resources to effectively deliver the new taximeter tests, which will be conducted on predetermined measured routes on public roads, to minimise the impact on vehicle testing at Test Centres.

The new regulations incorporate certain flexibilities, including provision for the taximeters to be tested and sealed on a rolling basis, in line with the expiry date of the current public service vehicle licence. There is also no requirement to repeat this sealing test, provided the taximeter is appropriately maintained with the seals intact. Therefore, the taximeter may remain compliant for several years. These flexibilities will enable DVA to effectively plan for the smooth delivery of the service, with minimum inconvenience on the taxi fleet.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the latest taxi regulations; and (ii) what taxi operators must have in place before 31 May 2016.

(AQW 53092/11-16)

Mr Durkan: On 2 December 2015 the Department made the following sets of Regulations relating to taxis:

- The Taxi Licensing (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2015;
- The Taxis (Taximeters, Devices and Maximum Fares) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015;
- The Taxi Accessibility Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015;
- The Taxi Operators Licensing (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015;
- The Roads Vehicles Lighting (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015.
- The Taxis Act (2008 Act)(Commencement No. 5) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015); and

With the exception of the Commencement Order, which is not subject to negative resolution, these Regulations were laid before the Assembly on 3 December 2015, are subject to negative resolution, after which point they will become operative on 31 May 2016.

Drivers who are currently operating Private Hire, Belfast Public Hire or Public Hire Outside Belfast taxis will have to ensure that their vehicles are all fitted with a taximeter and printer by that date. However it will not be until their first vehicle test after the regulations come in that they will require the new style roofsign or to have the meter tested and sealed by DVA. Until then they must continue to use their existing licence plates and roof signs.

These are the main changes that operators will need to be aware of. Given the significant change that is taking place in the taxi industry over the next 4 / 5 months, the Department is finalising a comprehensive communication strategy which will begin to roll out in early February. Details of how to apply for the various tests will be widely circulated in advance.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment , pursuant to AQW 50700/11-16 to (i) provide the reference number for the permission which did not impose a planning condition requiring archaeological mitigation; and; (ii) detail where the failure to apply the appropriate archaeological mitigation planning condition occurred within his Department.

Mr Durkan:

- (i) The planning reference number is Y/2009/0454/F which included a realignment of Millmount Road with a new junction with Comber Road, amended access arrangements for 2-6 Millmount Road & Millmount Chase roundabout, toucan crossing, cycle connection to Comber Greenway, internal housing road and ancillary works.
- (ii) It has not possible to determine to what extent appropriate archaeological conditions should have been applied to planning application Y/2009/0454/F as the planning application was approved with no archaeological conditions.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment ,pursuant to AQW 50700/11-16, whether the recommendations of the Waringstown report of 2006, designed to protect sites of archaeological significance, were adhered to in the case of the Millmount Development.

Mr Durkan: Since 2007 the Department has determined a number of planning applications at the Millmount Development and all but one of these has included conditions to allow for identification, evaluation and appropriate recording of any archaeological remains.

The Department has no evidence that the recommendations of the Waringstown report were considered during processing of the relevant planning application. The planning application files and responsibility for them transferred to Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council on 1 April 2015.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 50700/11-16; to detail (i) the number of Mesolithic sites that are known to exist locally; and (ii) the knowledge and information that was gained from the excavation of local Mesolithic settlements.

(AQW 53111/11-16)

Mr Durkan:

(i) Six Mesolithic sites are known to exist within the northern part of County Down.

The only archaeological excavation of a Mesolithic site within this area was at the Millmount housing development site in Dundonald (ref DOW 005:

(ii) 058).

The evidence for Mesolithic activity here was discovered during field walking by a local enthusiast in 1984 and consisted of several hundred pieces of struck flint as well as evidence for occupation including burnt bone and charcoal. These represent human activity dating to around 9,000-7,500 years ago. As part of the recent works for the housing development, remedial archaeological mitigation was conducted by the developer's archaeologist. This consisted of spreading out of the spoil heaps which had been derived from the area and investigation of them in order to identify and record any flint material. A total of 889 pieces of flint material were identified but almost all of them (874) were naturally shaped material. Most of the remaining pieces were flake debitage but two possible scrapers were identified (a hollow scraper and a thumbnail scraper). No archaeological features (remains of huts, fires etc) were identified. It is possible that some of the Mesolithic site was preserved beneath the road works.

Five test pits were excavated in the area between the road and the Enler River to assess the area for archaeological deposits but none were identified.

Excavations also took place in the wider development in the area identified for Phase 2 housing. These identified a number of stake holes, pits and gullies containing charcoal and occasional flints and pottery sherds with the readily identifiable pottery dating to the Bronze Age.

An archaeological excavation report on the recent works at Millmount has been submitted to the Sites and Monuments Record, and is in the process of being incorporated into the record and made available to the public through the online database.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment what plans his Department has for the future release of green belt areas for development in North Down.

Mr Durkan: As part of local government reform, the majority of planning functions were devolved to local councils including powers to create new local development plans. The release of land for development in North Down is an issue that Ards and North Down Borough Council may consider in bringing forward their new local development plan in line with regional and strategic policy and guidance.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 49929/11-16, whether he (i) has received legal advice on the Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme; and (ii) is in a position to provide a response to the question.

Mr Durkan: I have received legal advice on your questions and I am now in a position to provide you with a response.

My Department's legal status has not changed as a result of its involvement in the all island UGEE Joint Research programme.

As regards the issue of procedural malpractices, etc, any decision (or lack of decision) or action (or lack of action) by a public body in Northern Ireland may, as you are aware, be challenged by anyone with sufficient standing ('locus standi') in the local courts by way of judicial review on the grounds that (in general terms) the decision or action in question was illegal, irrational or procedurally improper or unfair.

Complaints by citizens of maladministration by a public body in Northern Ireland may be investigated by the NI Ombudsman. Maladministration in this context includes bias, mistakes and avoidable delay.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 50652/11-16, whether the deficiencies in the serving of the enforcement notice regarding the deposition of illegal waste at site F were also present in the other withdrawn enforcement notices relating to Mobuoy Road.

(AQW 53176/11-16)

Mr Durkan: There was one enforcement notice withdrawn at Mobuoy Road, that being the notice affecting the site area referred to as 'F'.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the average turnaround time for referrals by Occupational Health Service in respect of applicants for taxi licences.

(AQW 53261/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Occupational Health Service (OHS) has a performance target to process Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) cases within an average of 12 working days for those cases where no further information is required from the applicant's GP, consultant or a specialist medical adviser. This target is currently being met.

The majority of applications referred to OHS are assessed by OHS without the need for further information or referral to a specialist medical advisor, however, where additional information is required or where OHS determine that further medical investigations are required turnaround times may substantially increase.

OHS has little control on the timeliness of responses from the applicant's GP, consultant or specialist medical advisor and in absence of the requested information applications cannot be processed.

I have previously written to OHS regarding the turnaround time for applications and the DVA have routine contact with OHS on outstanding applications to ensure applications are processed as soon as all relevant information is available.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost of taxi regulations to date.

Mr Durkan: The cost to my Department to date for the implementation of the Taxis Act and related Taxi Regulations is £388,861.68. This figure covers expenses such as research undertaken by consultants, costs relating to the public consultation exercises that have been undertaken as well as advertising and publicity costs.

This figure does not include the associated staffing cost as this cannot be readily separated from other unrelated day to day work.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost of the Taxis Act to date.

(AQW 53280/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The cost to my Department to date for the implementation of the Taxis Act and related Taxi Regulations is £388,861.68. This figure does not include the associated staffing cost as this cannot be readily separated from other unrelated day to day work.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for an update on Operation Willow; (ii) whether the investigation by Northern Ireland Environment Agency has concluded; (iii) to detail the findings of the investigation to date; (iv) whether legal proceedings are being pursued; and (v) what assessment has been made of the level and origins of illegal waste at the site in Skea, Arney.

Mr Durkan: The investigation by NIEA into alleged unauthorised waste activity at the site in question on the Skea Road in Arney has now concluded. NIEA's case file is currently with the Public Prosecution Service. I am not in a position to detail either the findings of NIEA's investigation or to provide an assessment of the level and origins of illegal waste at the site. Disclosing such detail before the conclusion of the legal proceedings currently being pursued would be inappropriate.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the Rates Support Grant he will award this year to alleviate a significant rates increase in the Strabane District and Derry City area.

Mr Durkan: I have protected the overall Rates Support Grant budget for 2016/17 at £18.3 million. This grant is an important financial support to less well off councils. Derry City and Strabane District Council allocation for 2016/17 is £3,884,730 which will be a welcome support to the council and ratepayers.

On 27th January 2016, I wrote to the council's Chief Executive John Kelpie to inform him of his council's Rates Support Grant allocation for 2016/17.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of the Environment when he will inform Derry City and Strabane District Council on whether he will be awarding a rates support grant.

(AQW 53538/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I have protected the overall Rates Support Grant budget for 2016/17 at £18.3 million. This grant is an important financial support to less well off councils. Derry City and Strabane District Council allocation for 2016/17 is £3,884,730 which will be a welcome support to the council and ratepayers.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what consideration he has given to the reintroduction of a rates rebate for low or zero carbon homes.

(AQW 52843/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): No consideration has been given to the reintroduction of a rates rebate for low or zero carbon homes. Local Private Sector Growth

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail for what period the latest figures on growth in annual output in the local private sector are available and what do they reflect.

(AQW 52961/11-16)

Mr Storey: Latest results from the Northern Ireland Composite Economic Index (NICEI) were published on the 21st January 2016 by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency. The NICEI indicated that annual average growth in private sector output to Quarter 3 2015 (averaged over the four quarters to Quarter 3 2015 compared to the average of the previous four quarters to Quarter 3 2014) was 2.3%, in real terms.

Growth over the period reflected contributions of 1.1 percentage points (pps) from the Construction sector, 0.7 pps from the Services sector and 0.5 pps from the Production sector.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how Northern Ireland's current economic inactivity rate compares with other regions in the UK.

Mr Storey: Official estimates of economic inactivity are sourced from the Labour Force Survey.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of posts and grades, in relation to the Voluntary Exit Scheme, affected by the Public Sector Transformation Fund allocation announced on 17 December 2015.

(AQW 52991/11-16)

Mr Storey: Public Sector Transformation Fund allocations were published in Annex C of the Budget Statement of 17 December 2015.

Each organisation is responsible for the development of its own scheme; this information is not held centrally.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given no consultation process took place in respect of the 2016-17 Budget, to detail the stakeholders that his Department engaged with; and how this engagement took place.

(AQW 52992/11-16)

Mr Storey:

Key external stakeholders contacted were:

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|------------------------|
| ■ Institute of Directors | ■ Unison |
| ■ Construction Employers Federation | ■ ICTUNI |
| ■ NICVA | ■ Women's Policy Group |
| ■ NIPSA | ■ Equality NI |
| ■ Federation of Small Businesses | |

To date officials have met with IOD, CEF and NICVA with further meetings on Budget issues planned over the coming weeks.

In addition there was ongoing engagement with departments and departments themselves will have been engaging directly with their key stakeholders.

DFP provided stakeholders with an overview presentation and they were invited to provide their views on the Budget

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much is anticipated via Barnett in respect of ring-fenced Resource Departmental Expenditure Limits; and when this is anticipated.

(AQW 53047/11-16)

Mr Storey: Changes to Northern Ireland's ring-fenced Resource DEL budget are dependent upon the application of the Barnett Formula to the outcomes in GB departments; this process is ongoing.

HM Treasury have advised that this will conclude in advance of the Westminster 2016-17 Main Estimate process.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 52398/11-16 and AQW 52399/11-16, to detail why the response to AQW 52398/11-16 does not refer to any income from the Department of the Environment or the Department for Regional Development.

Mr Storey: The response to AQW 52398/11-16 does not refer to any income from the Department of the Environment or the Department for Regional Development as my Department holds the budget on behalf of both these Departments for this accommodation.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what funding will be allocated in 2016-17 to the (a) Fiscal Council; (b) Civic Advisory Panel; and when these panels will be operational.

Mr Storey: Funding for the Fiscal Council and Civic Advisory Panel has not yet been determined and therefore is not included in the 2016-17 Budget.

It is anticipated that both bodies will become operational during the course of 2016-17. However, the costs are expected to be minimal in that year.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the revenue raising measures the Executive is considering; and what will impact on the 2016-17 budget.

(AQW 53198/11-16)

Mr Storey: The main source of additional revenue for the Executive comes from the Regional Rate and details of the impact of this on the 2016-17 Budget are set out in the published Budget document.

Going forward, the Executive will continue to consider options in relation to other sources of revenue.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any capital projects have been, or will be, delayed or impacted by the decision to allocate RRI borrowing to the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

Mr Storey: The Executive has recently agreed its 2016-17 Budget in line with the 'Fresh Start Agreement'. In the absence of the 'Fresh Start Agreement' it is not known how much of the £200 million annual RRI borrowing limit the Executive would have agreed to undertake for capital projects in 2016-17 and how this would have impacted upon capital allocations agreed in the Budget.

Of course the 'Fresh Start Agreement' provides for an additional £100 million of RRI borrowing for projects to support economic growth. In addition any borrowing not required for the Voluntary Exit Scheme can be used for capital projects. Budget 2016-17 saw £25 million of potential VES funding diverted to capital projects.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a breakdown of how the £200m of RRI borrowing mentioned in A Fresh Start will be allocated in 2016-17; and if not utilised on the Voluntary Exit Scheme, whether it will be used exclusively for capital projects.

Mr Storey: Budget 2016-17 details allocations to departments totalling £117.6 million under the Public Sector Transformation Fund. The Executive has also agreed that £25 million of the £200 million RRI borrowing available next year should be used to fund capital expenditure.

It is for the Executive to decide through the in-year monitoring process if the remainder of the £200 million RRI borrowing is to be accessed in 2016-17 and if accessed how it will be spent. This decision will be influenced for the level of demand for funding under the Public Sector Transformation Fund.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel in respect of the capital allocations for flagship projects announced on 17 December 2015, to detail to which Department's baseline each project is allocated.

Mr Storey: The following table sets out the flagship projects and the responsible departments.

Department	Flagship Projects
Department for Infrastructure	A5 Road
	A6 Road
	Belfast Rapid Transport
	Belfast Transport Hub

Department	Flagship Projects
Department of Health	Mother and Children's Hospital
Department of Justice	Desertcreat
Department for Communities	Regional & Sub Regional Stadia

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when assessing the composition of Departments and the civil service for community background representation, whether he will ensure recruitment composition is considered when deciding if any community is under-represented.

(AQW 53214/11-16)

Mr Storey: As required by Article 55 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998, the Northern Ireland Civil Service carries out regular reviews into the community background composition of its workforce. In doing so full account is taken of the Fair Employment Code of Practice and additional guidance issued by the Equality Commission for NI which specifies that the composition of applicants to and appointees from recruitment exercises should be taken into account.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he will install improved cycle storage in the Stormont Estate.

Mr Storey: Covered cycle storage is currently provided by DFP at the following locations on the Stormont Estate:

- Parliament Buildings, main visitor car park;
- Castle Buildings;
- Dundonald House (x3);
- Craigantlet Buildings; and
- Stormont Castle

Each location has the capacity to store approximately 15 bicycles, except for Dundonald House which can store 45 bicycles.

DFP has no current plans to install improved cycle storage on the Stormont Estate but keeps the position under review.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he will install improved cycle storage in the Stormont Estate.

(AQW 53232/11-16)

Mr Storey: Covered cycle storage is currently provided by DFP at the following locations on the Stormont Estate:

- Parliament Buildings, main visitor car park;
- Castle Buildings;
- Dundonald House (x3);
- Craigantlet Buildings; and
- Stormont Castle

Each location has the capacity to store approximately 15 bicycles, except for Dundonald House which can store 45 bicycles.

DFP has no current plans to install improved cycle storage on the Stormont Estate but keeps the position under review.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the wage cost for the Northern Ireland Civil Service in the last three financial years.

(AQW 53282/11-16)

Mr Storey: The NICS wage cost for the last three full financial years is as follows:

Year	Total Paybill Cost
2012/13	£927,973,359
2013/14	£951,891,439
2014/15	£943,281,365

- (i) Figures include a small number of non civil servants appearing on departmental payrolls e.g. Industrial Tribunal Members, Planning and Water Appeals Committee Members.
- (ii) The current volume recruitment freeze was introduced in November 2014.
- (iii) Figures do not include the impact of the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme which did not start until 2015/16.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail all capital projects that (a) are currently being completed; and (b) are expected to be completed in the next three years in West Tyrone.

(AQW 53284/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department is currently completing a new Government Office in Strabane on behalf of DARD and DSD, to accommodate Department of Agriculture staff and a new Jobs and Benefits Office. Work is due for completion in March 2016.

A feasibility study is being carried out to assess a possible rationalisation of NICS accommodation in Omagh. The intention would be to have any works completed by 2019.

This response is provided for the Department of Finance and Personnel only as the information for all departments is not held centrally. The Member should contact individual departments for their information.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how much has been budgeted for welfare mitigation measures in 2016-2017.

Mr Storey: Under the "Fresh Start" agreement, the Executive agreed to allocate £135 million in 2016-17 to 'top-up' the UK Welfare Arrangements, including £60 million in respect of tax credits.

In Budget 2016-17, the Department for Communities was allocated £75 million for welfare reform mitigation measures. With the tax credits funding no longer required for that purpose £30 million was reallocated to other Executive priorities in Budget 2016-17 with the remaining £30 million held centrally pending the outcome of Professor Evason's work.

Professor Evason has now indicated that £64 million will be required in 2016-17 and the Executive will consider the reallocation of surplus funding as part of the June Monitoring process.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of suicides in each Health and Social Care Trust area in 2015.

(AQW 53372/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table overleaf details the number of deaths registered due to suicide¹ in each Health and Social Care Trust. The latest available figures are for Quarter 3, 2015, therefore figures presented relate to the nine month period ending September 2015. It is expected that data for the final quarter of 2015 will be published at the end of March 2016 via the NISRA website.

Number of Deaths from Suicide Registered¹ by Quarter and Health and Social Care Trust, 2015P

Health Trust	2015
	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Quarter 3
Belfast	15	27	31
Northern	14	15	13
South Eastern	12	16	17
Southern	18	15	19
Western	13	14	7
Northern Ireland	72	87	87

1 In considering suicide events it is conventional to include cases where the cause of death is classified as either 'Suicide and self-inflicted injury' or 'Undetermined intent'. Since 2001, the ICD10 codes used for 'Suicide and self-inflicted injury' are X60-X84 and Y87.0 and the ICD10 codes used for 'Undetermined intent' are Y10-Y34 and Y87.2

P Figures remain provisional until the publication of the Registrar General Annual Report in late 2016

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many local people are using callipers.
(AQW 49996/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): At 3rd November 2015 there were 266 people in Northern Ireland using callipers including Knee Ankle Foot Orthosis (KAFO) and Hip Knee Ankle Foot Orthosis (HKAFO).

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what savings have been made by his Department within the 2015-16 budgetary allocations.

Mr Hamilton: The Department is on target to deliver savings of £164m in 2015/16.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he intends to publish a consultation on air ambulance provision.

Mr Hamilton: Following my announcement about the establishment of a Helicopter Emergency Medical Service (HEMS) for Northern Ireland, my Department launched a public consultation on 23 November 2015 which will close on 22 January 2016. I will announce my decision about the key issues related to this service after I have fully considered the responses to the consultation.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will engage with the British Medical Association in relation to proposed changes to junior doctor contracts.

Mr Hamilton: I met with the Chair of the NI BMA (JDC) Dr Conan Castles on the 1st December 2015 to discuss the issues surrounding the potential difficulties relating to the possible introduction of a new contract of employment for junior doctors in Northern Ireland.

My officials are also engaged in informal discussions with local BMA representatives to discuss and better understand the issues for junior doctors. A number of meetings have already been held and I am keen for these to continue.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of Nigel Edwards' from the Nuffield Trust comments concerning elective care waiting lists and times.

Mr Hamilton: It is regrettable that more people are waiting to be seen and are waiting longer due to the financial constraints that led to the cessation of independent sector and additional in-house activity last year. I would assure the Member that patients are assessed and seen in order of clinical priority.

It was extremely frustrating that £9.5m was being lost back to Westminster from Northern Ireland's public finances every month as a result of welfare reform being blocked. Such a sum could fund many thousands of assessments and procedures. However, the allocation of £40 million in the November Monitoring Round will allow me to begin tackling waiting lists immediately.

For the longer term, I have tasked the Health and Social Care Board with preparing a plan to cope with demand going forward and stabilise waiting times to put them on a sustainable in future years.

In the interim, the Health Service is continuing to make every effort to keep waiting times at a minimum.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether any financial termination packages have been paid, or will be paid, to any Special Advisers in consequence of ministerial resignations in his Department since September 2015.

Mr Hamilton: My Special Adviser received the severance payment due under the terms of his contract of employment.

My Special Adviser has been reappointed in line with the Code governing the appointment of Special Advisers and the provisions of the code, including the repayment of severance pay, have been applied. <https://www.dfpni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/dfp/spad-act-13-code-of-practice-governing-the-appointment-of-spads.pdf>

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) average time; and (ii) longest time taken by his Department to respond to a Freedom of Information request since 2012.

Mr Hamilton: The Department has responded to a total of 560 Freedom of Information requests since 2012 to date. The average response time from date of receipt is 16 working days .

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to expand services at Antrim Area Hospital to include a women and children's centre.

(AQW 50202/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The development of the proposed Women and Children's Unit at Antrim Area Hospital is subject to available capital funding and the approval of a business case to be considered alongside other competing health and social care priorities for my Department's capital budget. £108m capital funding has already been invested by my Department in the Northern Trust since 2011.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on how the Pharmacist Contact is progressing.

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has been mandated to engage with Community Pharmacy Northern Ireland (CPNI) to develop a community pharmacy contract for Northern Ireland.

Implementing contractual arrangements for the delivery of community pharmacy services is a priority for the Department. Any new arrangements will be informed by ongoing initiatives including: a Cost of Services Investigation (CoSI) which has been commissioned by the Department to estimate the cost of providing community pharmacy services; a margins survey which assesses the level of profit from medicines retained by community pharmacy contractors; and development of a needs assessment methodology to help inform commissioning of pharmaceutical services.

Discussions between the HSCB and CPNI have centred on the development of specifications for a number of service delivery areas to improve patient safety and concordance and to utilise the highly skilled pharmacy workforce to reduce inappropriate demand on other parts of the health and social care system. That has included the establishment of Medicines Use Reviews for patients with respiratory conditions or diabetes and evaluations will inform further commissioning decisions.

The HSCB has also been engaging with CPNI to establish a quality assurance framework with the aim of providing assurance to the commissioner and the public in respect of the quality commissioned pharmacy services. It is anticipated that the framework will be implemented this financial year.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has considered introducing a health economist to determine an accurate cost of home care provision.

Mr Hamilton: Given the pressures facing the care market and the difficult economic environment in which we are operating in I have instructed officials to undertake a review and analysis of the state of the social care market with an emphasis on the economic outlook and the longer term sustainability of the current arrangements.

This will be used to improve our understanding of the current challenges and as a platform for developing our policy and operational responses.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) whether he has any plans to implement prescription charges; and if so, (ii) whether safeguards will be included for people with long term health conditions.

Mr Hamilton: I have no plans to reintroduce prescription charges.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department will be offering redundancies to staff in the Health and Social Care Board.

(AQW 50380/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The changes to Health and Social Care structures that I announced recently are aimed at reducing bureaucracy and increasing accountability within the system.

The detail of these changes and what they will mean for staff working in the Health and Social Care (HSC) Board are still to be developed.

It is not anticipated, at this stage, that there will be any compulsory redundancies. The HSC Board, as with other HSC Employers is currently operating a Voluntary Exit Scheme. Applications from staff will be considered within the parameters of that Scheme.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) at what age children move from paediatric to adult services; and when this change in service occurs and a social worker is involved, (ii) whether the social worker moves to adult services with the child.

Mr Hamilton: Paediatric healthcare services are usually provided to children until they reach 14 years of age. On occasions paediatric healthcare services may continue to be provided beyond a child's 14th birthday depending on the child's needs and professional judgment.

A range of social work services may be provided to children who are assessed as in need or at risk until they attain 18 years by Trusts' Children Services, with the exception of Looked after Children who may continue to receive aftercare services up to the age of 21.

Transfer to Adult Social Care Services for a young person at age 18 is dependent on the assessed needs of the individual and, where relevant, their consent.

Each Trust has its own operational arrangements in place for transitions and transfers of cases from Children's Services to Adult Services.

Social workers working with children up to the age of 18 do not move to adult services with the young person.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any progress he has made in conjunction with the Minister of State at the Department of Health on the Whiteoaks Detoxification Unit in County Donegal. (AQW 50580/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Following the review of inpatient addiction services in Northern Ireland, the Addiction Treatment Unit based at the Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital in Omagh will continue to serve as the statutory addiction treatment facility within the Western Trust area, undertaking medical detoxification and rehabilitation service provision. In addition, the HSC commissions residential rehabilitation services from the Northlands Centre in Londonderry. Any potential move to commission service from new providers would inevitably have an impact on existing service provision, both in the HSC and by current independent providers, across Northern Ireland.

My Department continues to liaise with colleagues in the Republic of Ireland on alcohol and drug misuse issues. However, given the position in relation to the commissioning of addiction services in Northern Ireland, I do not see any value in specific discussions between both jurisdictions with regards to the White Oaks facility at this time.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients that cannot be discharged from hospitals in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust due to delays in implementing their care package. (AQW 50599/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Discharges from acute hospitals are categorised as either 'complex' or 'simple (non-complex)', and are based on the level of care a patient requires in order to facilitate their discharge from hospital. For each category of discharge, there is an agreed period of time within which allowance is made for arrangements to be put in place, i.e. 48 hours from being declared medically fit for complex discharges and 6 hours from being declared medically fit for simple (non-complex) discharges.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions he has taken to address the concerns highlighted in the Public Accounts Committee's Report on Primary Care Prescribing (NIA 230/11-16) published on 3 February 2015. (AQW 50608/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Department's response to the Public Accounts Committee's report on Primary Care Prescribing was set out in the Department of Finance and Personnel Memorandum that was presented to the Northern Ireland Assembly on 1 May 2015.

A number of recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee were already implemented by the Department at the time of publication of the Memorandum. That includes publication of prescribing data to benchmark prescribing by GP practices and exploring the potential for generating savings through the examination of prescribing patterns.

Good progress has been made against the outstanding recommendations including an ongoing review of the GP prescribing formula and work by the Health & Social Care Board to inform the development of a three-year medicines management strategy with a focus on efficiencies.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how he intends to respond to the Royal College of Nursing campaign for (i) respect for the independent NHS Pay Review Body and its recommendation that nurses should receive a one per cent cost of living pay increase; and (ii) an adequate number of nurses to care for patients. (AQW 50635/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The NHS Pay Review Body's 2014/15 recommendation was considered in the context of the prevailing financial constraints and viewed as unaffordable. It has not made any recommendations on the 2015/16 pay award.
- (ii) I am aware of the difficulties encountered recruiting nurses to vacant posts at present and my Department is exploring options to assist in addressing the problem in the short, medium and longer term.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 48168/11-15, to detail (i) why he could not provide the information in the format requested; and (ii) whether he will now provide an answer broken down by each employer. (AQW 50667/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The information broken down by job title or grade and listing every individual remuneration in excess of £125,000 is not readily available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.
- (ii) The information provided in AQW 48168/11-15 broken down by each employer is set out in the attached tables (TAB A).

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 21887/11-15, whether he will re-examine the stance on prisoners holding 28 days supply of dispensed drugs, in light of the criticisms of the policy in the report on the unannounced prison inspection in May 2015.

Mr Hamilton: The report on an unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison in May 2015 deemed the practice of allowing prisoners to hold their own daily in-possession medication to be unsafe primarily as a consequence of prisoners being susceptible to bullying for these medications.

Medicines Management in Prison Healthcare is based on guidelines and recommendations established in the Department of Health/Her Majesty's Prison Service document 'A Pharmacy Service for Prisoners' (2003). Recommendation 5 states that "medicines in use, should normally, as a matter of principle, be held in the possession of prisoners."

Patients are individually risk assessed on committal to determine their ability to store and manage their own medications 'in-possession'. This takes into account the patient's ability to manage their own medication, their past medical history and the type of medication being prescribed.

A 28 day supply of medication is only issued for medications which are assessed to be of low potential risk of harm in overdose and of no risk of abuse or trading.

While prisoner security/safety in prisons is a matter for the Department of Justice to comment on, I am aware that South Eastern Trust is currently reviewing the effectiveness and safety of their In Possession policy to insure it remains fit for purpose.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of ambulance response times.

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board and the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) have been working to improve ambulance response times. Additional funding of £775,000 has been allocated in-year and £1,077,000 recurrently from 2016/17 to NIAS to manage the increasing demand due to demographic growth. This funding is being applied to improve performance in the Northern, Southern and South Eastern Local Commissioning Group areas and will deliver an additional 15,000 emergency response production hours across the three areas annually. £150,000 has also been allocated to fund Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officers (HALOs) to support patient flow at four major acute hospitals. The HALOs will ensure timely patient handover to emergency departments and improved ambulance turnaround leading to earlier release of ambulances for the next emergency call.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39106/11-15, for an update on the figures for the Health and Social Care Board as of the 1 November 2015.

Mr Hamilton: Staffing figures at 1 November are not available. On 15 December 2015, I launched a public consultation on reform of Northern Ireland's Health and Social Care system, which includes my proposals to de-layer the existing system by moving away from the current commissioning model and closing down the Health and Social Care Board.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the dental services that were reduced due to his Department's overall savings plan; and (ii) the number of people affected.

Mr Hamilton: Dental services have not been reduced due to the Department's overall savings plan.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on a drugs fund.

(AQW 50946/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I would refer the Member to my Written Statement dated 8 December 2015.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail why the pledge to allow elderly residents to remain in their homes is not being adhered to in the case of Creamery House, Kesh.

Mr Hamilton: Creamery House is a registered residential home specifically for clients with a learning disability, irrespective of age. The pledge you refer to was in relation to the review of statutory residential homes for older people and therefore did not apply to this facility.

I would inform you however, that the closure proposal is now being subjected to overview by the HSC Board and the Department, and that will look at all relevant issues.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling.

Mr Hamilton: There are a number of Department owned properties outside the Stormont Estate which are currently occupied by our ALBs. One such property located at Linenhall Street/Franklin Street, Belfast is shared by 4 HSC organisations and has cycle racks and shower facilities provided for staff use.

Any buildings occupied by my Department located within the Stormont estate are leased from the Department of Finance and Personnel and therefore any cycling facilities available are as stated in their response.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) whether the Family Fund will receive financial support from his Department in 2016; (ii) whether applications that have been submitted to the Family Fund for next year will receive funding; and (iii) what plans he has to maintain this support for disabled children.

Mr Hamilton: Following the outcome of the November Monitoring Round, I announced on 18 November that my Department had received investment of an additional £47.6m in Health and Social Care this year. I am therefore delighted that my Department is now able to provide further funding of £784k (2015/2016 financial year) to the Family Fund to support the families of disabled children and young people with disabilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will provide a response to AQW 47520/11-15 which was submitted on 22 June 2015.

Mr Hamilton: I answered AQW 47520/11-15 on the 26 November 2015.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why AQW 47520/11-15 which was submitted on 22 June 2015 remains unanswered.

Mr Hamilton: I answered AQW 47520/11-15 on the 26 November 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Transforming Your Care update 2015 report and the failure to complete targets on (i) older peoples care; (ii) mental health and learning disability; (iii) long term conditions; and (iv) acute care.

Mr Hamilton: The 2015 Transforming Your Care update showed steady progress over the last 2 ½ years across all areas including services for older people, mental health and learning disability services, improving support for those with long term conditions and in the delivery of acute care services .

Of the 99 proposals in TYC to change how health and social care services are delivered, 50 were described as complete, 46 were described as work in progress and 3 as pending the outcome of other proposals. The update sets out that number of proposals relating to older people, mental health and learning disability services, support for those with long term conditions and the delivery of acute services have been completed and that progress is being made across nearly all the other proposals in these areas.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the level of sickness absence among paramedics in the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service, broken down by the last twelve months.

Mr Hamilton: The latest figures available are shown in the table below.

Month (of Year 2015)	Sickness Absence Rate (% hours lost)
January	14.16%
February	11.60%
March	10.65%
April	10.45%
May	10.79%
June	9.24%
July	10.15%
August	10.03%
September	9.64%
October	9.80%
November	11.10%
December	14.20%

Figures include Paramedics, Rapid Response Vehicle Paramedics and Station Supervisors. Sick Absence Rate also includes industrial injury.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 50250/11-16, (i) whether he is aware of any instances of vomiting and diarrhoea at non-statutory residential care homes in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust; and if so (ii) to detail what actions he has taken to contain the spread of any instances of vomiting and diarrhoea.
(AQW 51181/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Seven instances of vomiting and diarrhoea (outbreaks) were reported to the Public Health Agency (PHA) during the six month period 1 May 2015 to 31 October 2015.

- (ii) A risk assessment was jointly undertaken by staff in the affected homes and by PHA staff; the PHA provided advice and support on immediate infection control actions required within each facility, including measures required to contain the spread of the outbreak; the PHA supported staff to inform residents' GPs, the Infection Control Nurse, the Regulator, and Environmental Health; and PHA supported staff to implement appropriate alert measures e.g. outbreak signs in reception area/entrance to facility, restriction of visitors, and identified hand hygiene points for visitors.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much money each hospital has generated through their public car parks in each of the last five years.

Mr Hamilton: Information on the income generated includes charges to both patients and staff. The detail requested is as follows:

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the policy in relation to accessing electronic patient records and whether (i) passwords are per staff member or department; (ii) the grade of staff or occupation that can access records; and (iii) how the traceability of records is monitored, broken down by hospital.

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Electronic Care Record (NIECR) was first introduced in July 2013 and brings together key information from health and social care records throughout Northern Ireland in a single, secure computer system in order to provide better, safer, faster care. Access to the NIECR is granted to authorised Health and Social Care (HSC) staff and GPs in Northern Ireland for the provision of direct care.

- (i) Passwords are allocated to individual staff members who have been authorised for access by their clinical manager.
- (ii) Access to the NIECR is based on the access which staff have had to source systems and paper records and what is appropriate to their role in the care team, operating on a strictly 'need to know' basis.
- (iii) All system access and usage is audited centrally. A formal investigation process is in place to manage any inappropriate access.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all charities funded by his Department that will have their core funding cut.

(AQW 51298/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The voluntary and community organisations in receipt of funding from my Department can be found on the Government Funder's Database, which can be accessed at www.volcomgrantsni.gov.uk.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the processes followed by the Western Health and Social Care Trust when (i) communicating with his office; and (ii) assigning appointments or operations.

(AQW 51299/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The Western Trust communicates with my private office both directly and through my Department's directorates.
- (ii) The Western Trust makes appointments for elective care assessment or treatment in accordance with my Department's Integrated Elective Access Protocol. Patients are treated on the basis of their clinical urgency with urgent patients seen and treated first. Patients with the same clinical need will be treated in chronological order on grounds of fairness, and to minimise the waiting time for all patients.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of calls made to Lifeline in each month since its establishment.

(AQW 51307/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of calls made to Lifeline in each month since its establishment is detailed in the table below. This includes both answered and missed calls.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) number; and (ii) value of direct payments in Fermanagh, in each of the last five years.

Mr Hamilton: Figures in relation to direct payments are not available for Fermanagh.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how the additional £1.6m of additional funding for psychological therapies received in the November monitoring round will be spent.

(AQW 51339/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Psychological therapies funding provides specialist mental health psychological services for individuals with complex mental health problems, and Directly Enhanced Services to help general practitioners avail of talking therapies for patients with depression.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to provide or place in the Assembly Library a copy of his Department's Whistleblower Policy; and (ii) to detail whether it covers all staff within agencies and arm's-length bodies under his departmental remit.

Mr Hamilton: DHSSPS follows the NICS Code of Conduct which incorporates the NICS Whistleblower policy, as stipulated in the NICS Staff Handbook. This Code can be accessed by the following path: <https://www.dfpni.gov.uk/articles/northern-ireland-civil-service-handbook>

- (i) //www.dfpni.gov.uk/articles/northern-ireland-civil-service-handbook (Employee Relations - 6.01 Standards of conduct)
- (ii) This does not cover staff within Arm's-Length Bodies under the Department's remit. All Departmental Arm's Length Bodies are required to have a whistle blowing policy in place. Local policies should set out the arrangements for raising concerns internal and external to the organisation.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of organisations funded; (ii) the types of activity undertaken; and (iii) whether he will increase the number of child care places available for children with a learning disability, under the Improving Outcomes for Children with a Disability initiative.

Mr Hamilton: In 2015/16, £54,000 was secured from OFMDFM to allow seven childcare providers to make available additional childcare places during the summer holiday period, specifically targeted at children with a disability. The funding covered staffing costs and facilitated a range of activities, including: physical play, communication and behavioural inputs, day trips, baby yoga, massage and sensory play, speech and drama, football, cookery, orienteering, skipping, arts and crafts, horse riding, team building games and archery.

My Department is currently considering its budget for the 2016/17 financial year.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what assessment has been made of the savings of free prescriptions as a preventative spending measure.

(AQW 51359/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There has been no formal assessment locally of whether the introduction of free prescriptions has had positive benefits for patients through easier access to medicines.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an estimation of the cost of dealing with the fire at the River Ridge Recycling site at Maydown, Derry.

(AQW 51360/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service estimate the cost of dealing with the incident at the River Ridge Recycling site at Maydown, Londonderry to be £82K.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of his Department's budget is spent on addressing domestic violence or on the delivery of the Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy 2013-2020.

(AQW 51369/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department funds a wide range of programmes and services that address domestic violence both directly and indirectly. It is, therefore, not possible to calculate the overall amount spent by my Department addressing domestic violence.

The 'Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse in Northern Ireland' Strategy has yet to be published. There is currently no specific funding stream dedicated to implementation of priorities within the proposed Strategy.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) beds available in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust for psychiatric admissions; and (ii) times patients were admitted to psychiatric wards outside the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust due to insufficient capacity in the last twelve months.

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) At 30 September 2015, the Belfast HSC Trust had 85 adult acute mental health beds, of which, eight were psychiatric intensive care beds. There were also 33 child acute mental health beds in the Belfast HSC Trust, of which, two were psychiatric intensive care beds.
- (ii) The most recent information available indicates that during 2014/15 there were 72 psychiatric admissions to hospitals outside the Belfast HSC Trust, involving Belfast HSC Trust residents, as a result of a lack of available capacity.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety which hospitals outside the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust received patients from Belfast requiring psychiatric admission.

(AQW 51378/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on hospitals that received psychiatric admissions involving residents of the Belfast HSC Trust, between 1st October 2014 and 30th September 2015 is presented below:

HSC Trust	Hospital
Northern	Holywell
South Eastern	Downe
	Lagan Valley

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the contribution of the level of the tariffs payable to private care homes to the recent announcement of the closure of seven Four Seasons Health Care residential homes.

(AQW 51416/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I do not believe that the level of the regional tariff rate was a significant factor in the decision taken by Four Seasons to close seven of its nursing homes in Northern Ireland.

The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) negotiates on an annual basis a regional tariff rate with the independent sector for residential and nursing home care. The regional tariff rate is a guide to what the HSC considers to be fair and affordable, not a fixed price for a care placement.

The regional tariff rate is a matter for the HSCB; the Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will propose a review in respect of the level of the tariff payable to private care homes.

(AQW 51417/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The regional tariff rate is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB); the Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care.

The HSCB negotiates on an annual basis a regional tariff rate with the independent sector for residential and nursing home care. The regional tariff rate is a guide to what the HSC considers to be fair and affordable, not a fixed price for a care placement. It is for the HSCB, as the chief commissioner of care, to assure itself that the rates paid represent the best possible outcome within the resources available to it in terms of procuring quality care at a sustainable price which represents value for money.

Background Note

- 1 Mr Allister is a Traditional Unionist Voice MLA for North Antrim. A similar question was asked by Ms Sandra Overend MLA in October 2015 (AQW 50070/11-16).
- 2 The Departmental Circular HSC (ECCU) 1/2010 Care Management, Provision of Services and Charging Guidance, reminds the HSC of its overriding duty to procure quality services at a price which represents value for money. Beyond this however, the Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care. The regional tariff rate is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB).

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many patients treated in the Mater Hospital were assessed as needing acute surgery and subsequently transferred to the Royal Victoria Hospital so surgery could be performed in each of the last five years.

(AQW 51422/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of patients in the Mater Infirmorum Hospital assessed as needing any acute surgery (excluding cardiology procedures) who were subsequently transferred to the Royal Victoria Hospital so the surgery could be performed is as follows for the period 2010/11 to 2014/15.

Patient Type	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Inpatient	78	116	110	220	324

All transfers	87	123	115	224	367

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the (a) number of qualified staff nurses; (b) number of staff nurses on permanent and temporary contracts; (c) number of staff nurses that are bank staff; and (d) capacity of nursing staff to meet the demands of private and statutory care provision.

(AQW 51427/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: At 31st September 2015 there were 16,949 (14,724.9 WTE) qualified nurses and midwives employed by the HSC, which is an increase of 7.9% compared with March 2011. Of these, 96.7% were employed on a permanent contract and 3.3% worked on a temporary contract.

The number of nurses on a working bank contract is not centrally available. The use of bank nurses is necessary to ensure that safe and effective services are sustained for patients.

The question of capacity of nursing staff to meet the demands of private and statutory care provision is one for those employers.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the spare capacity within (i) private; and (ii) statutory care homes since January 2015.

(AQW 51429/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board monitors the residential and nursing home vacancy position on a six monthly basis. The vacancy position in the two most recent reports for independent and statutory sector beds across all programmes of care is set out in the table below:

Trust declared vacancies	Statutory sector vacancies	Independent sector vacancies	Total
30 September 2015	154	657	811

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what oversight his Department has for the provision of care by privately owned care homes; and (ii) for his assessment of the extent to which the provision of care within care homes is dependent upon private care providers.

(AQW 51430/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The Department sets and publishes minimum care standards for nursing and residential care homes, including privately owned care homes. These standards set the benchmark for the quality of care that residents can expect to receive and which no provider is expected to fall below in delivering such care. The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority is responsible for registering and inspecting nursing and residential care homes, including privately owned homes, to ensure homes comply with the regulations and standards set by the Department.
- (ii) The care home sector in Northern Ireland is based on a "mixed economy of care" model in which the private sector plays a key role alongside statutory care providers. The private sector makes an important contribution to providing high quality care to older people across Northern Ireland.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the planned closure of care homes and subsequently his action to halt and review the care boards plans for statutory care homes, whether the Northern Health and Social Care Trust will now lift its ban on admissions to Pinewood care home.

Mr Hamilton: I have asked the Health and Social Care Board to halt and review the proposed closures of statutory residential care homes. The issue of re opening homes to permanent admissions will be considered as part of that review.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what financial support his Department has provided for research into antibiotic resistance in each of the last five years.

(AQW 51462/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Research into antimicrobial resistance (AMR) is commissioned by Health and Social Care Research & Development Division of the Public Health Agency. This encompasses a broad range of topics and disciplines. For the purposes of this Assembly Question, any research related to the study, management or treatment of conditions or diseases that involve or are associated with risk of infection, and hence the prescription of antimicrobials, is included. Infrastructure or initiatives supporting AMR research are also included.

2012/13	-	£447,352

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he will take to reduce the loneliness and isolation of elderly people through increased contact during transitional care.

(AQW 51464/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: When an older person is returning to their own home following a stay in hospital or a residential/nursing home setting, the Health and Social Care Trust will assess the older person's needs prior to discharge. The focus of the assessment by the Trust will be on the rehabilitative, therapeutic or domiciliary care support required to enable the older person to remain in their own home. If, as part of the assessment process, loneliness and isolation is identified as a concern, the Trust will aim to arrange support from family members and a range of local community and voluntary support services, for example Good Morning schemes, church groups, and befriending schemes.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment he has made of the differences in provision of healthcare in areas adjoining the border.

Mr Hamilton: Health and social care services here are planned and delivered in response to the needs of populations living in each Local Commissioning Group area. To inform this process, my Department assesses relative health needs across Northern Ireland. There is no significant difference in the health needs of people living in areas adjoining the border and people living in other areas of Northern Ireland. In general, therefore, there is no difference in the provision of healthcare in areas adjoining the border compared with elsewhere in Northern Ireland.

My Department has worked with colleagues in Ireland and Scotland in securing €53m under the cross-border Interreg VA programme, with the aim of improving the health and well-being of people living in border regions by enabling them to access health and social care services in the most appropriate setting to their needs.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average (i) number of residents; and (ii) occupancy rate in (a) statutory residential care homes; (b) private residential care homes; and (c) private nursing care homes in each of the last ten years.

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not routinely collected and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

My Department has published information annually in relation to community care for adults in Northern Ireland since 1998/99. Information is available in respect of the number of care packages in effect, by care type and sector, as well as the number of care homes and places available at 30 June each year.

The latest information available relates to figures for 2014/15 and can be found at the web address below.

<https://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/publications/statistics-community-care-adults-northern-ireland-201415>

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the tariff paid for residential places in social care in each of the last ten years; and (ii) whether the increase in the tariff matched the increase in the costs of providing care.

(AQW 51503/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The regional tariff rate is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB); the Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care.

(i) The table below details the regional tariff rate set by the HSCB for the last 10 years for nursing and residential homes.

Year	Nursing Homes £	Increase over previous year %	Residential homes £	Increase over previous year %
2015/16	593	2.07	470	1.95
2014/15	581	2.5	461	2.4
2013/14	567	3.1	450	3.0

2009/10	526	3.1	418	3.2
2008/09	510	4.1	405	3.8

2006/07	470	4.4	360	2.0

- (ii) The regional uplift to the tariffs for residential and nursing care attempts to deal with inflationary pressures each year. Four Seasons Health Care

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when (a) he; (b) the Health and Social Care Board; and (c) each Health and Social Care Trust was first made aware that Four Seasons Health Care were going to close seven local care homes.

(AQW 51504/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board, the five Health and Social Care Trusts and I received formal notification of the closures of the Seven Four Seasons Health Care nursing homes on Tuesday 24 November 2015. I had been aware for some time of the challenges this provider faced across the UK and within the two weeks previously that homes in Northern Ireland could be under threat of closure.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the pressures facing residential care for adults with learning disabilities; and (ii) what action he intends to take to ensure the future provision of these services.

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board has carried out a scoping exercise, to identify pressures facing the future provision of services to those people with a learning disability, currently living with families, who are likely to need alternative care in the near future. This may be in supported living schemes, residential or nursing homes.

£1m funding (part year expenditure) to help meet this need was allocated to HSC Trusts in 2015/16 and this will rise to £2m (full year funding) from 1 April 2016.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the impact of increased wage costs on the social care sector; and (ii) what action he will take to ensure these services are protected.

Mr Hamilton: My Department recognises that the domiciliary care sector is currently facing significant challenges, including the introduction of the national living wage.

To address these challenges the Health and Social Care Board has undertaken a review of domiciliary care provision in Northern Ireland. The Health and Social Care Board recently published its report "A Managed Change: An Agenda for Creating a Sustainable Basis for Domiciliary Care in Northern Ireland". My Department in conjunction with the Health and Social Care Board is now considering the way forward following publication of the report.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients that signed the organ donation register when they registered at a GP surgery in each of the last three years.

Mr Hamilton: The number of registrations to the Organ Donation Register via a GP in Northern Ireland, for each of the last 3 financial years, are shown in Table 1.

Table 1 Number of registrations to the Organ Donation Register via a GP in Northern Ireland, 2012/13 – 2014/15

Financial Year	Registrations
2012/13	2,857
2013/14	3,092
2014/15	3,060

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total number of patient registrations completed in GP surgeries in each of the last three years.

(AQW 51545/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is assumed that this question refers to the number of new registrations with GP practices, which are shown in Table 1 for the last three financial years.

Table 1 New registrations with GP practices, 2012/13 to 2014/15

Financial year	New registrations with GP practices
April – March 2012/13	87,377
April – March 2013/14	90,581

Financial year	New registrations with GP practices
April – March 2014/15	90,554

Source: HSC Business Services Organisation

The number of new registrations in each year shown in Table 1 does not equate to the increase in the total GP registered list for each year. New registrations at GP practices will, in part, be due to patient transfers between practices. GP practice lists and the overall number of patients registered at practices in Northern Ireland will also be affected by births and deaths. The total GP registered list for Northern Ireland in the past three years, as at April of each year, is shown in Table 2.

Table 2 Total patients registered at a GP practice in Northern Ireland

Year	Total GP registered list in NI	Change in registered list (from previous year)
April 2013	1,911,002
April 2014	1,925,035	Increase of 14,033 from April 2013
April 2015	1,939,449	Increase of 14,414 from April 2014

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is being taken to address the concerns expressed by staff, patients and visitors to Craigavon Area Hospital regarding the difficulty experienced when finding a parking space on site.

(AQW 51546/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There are 1633 car parking spaces available to both patients and staff at the Craigavon Area Hospital. The Trust continues to seek innovative ways to free up parking spaces on the Hospital site, creating a new car park beside Ambulance Control which provided 60 additional spaces in 2013 and developing a cycle to work scheme. In addition, there is a regular bus route to the Hospital and the Trust is engaging with Translink to promote the uptake of the local bus service which passes the Hospital.

The Southern Trust has a Traffic Management and Car Parking Service User Forum which looks at concerns raised by service users, visitors and staff and there is close liaison with the Estates Department to identify solutions to address issues where possible. There are no plans to expand car parking capacity on the site.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has plans to downgrade regional acute hospitals.

Mr Hamilton: The Member may not have read my speech of 4 November 2015 in which I stated: "Let me be clear though in case anyone seeks to distort or misrepresent my intentions. Closing hospitals is not on my agenda. What is, is the best configuration of our hospitals estate. I want what is best done locally done locally. And what needs to be done regionally done regionally."

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on plans for a new Health and Care Centre in Bangor.

Mr Hamilton: Proposals for a new Primary and Community Care Centre for Bangor are included within the draft Strategic Implementation Plan for future investment in primary care infrastructure, and decisions on this programme of work will be taken when the pilot Lisburn and Newry projects are evaluated.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the recent Equity in the Provision of Palliative Care in the UK report which highlights that 3,000 people in Northern Ireland do not receive the palliative care they should; and (ii) how he plans to increase access to palliative and end of life care.

Mr Hamilton: I am very aware of the importance of palliative care and want to ensure that people with palliative and end of life care needs have access to and receive high quality care, irrespective of their condition. This will continue to be a focus for my Department, working in partnership with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), Public Health Agency (PHA) and other key stakeholders.

The End of Life Care Operational System (ELCOS) already supports the identification of people with an advanced progressive illness who have palliative and end of life care needs so that these needs can be appropriately assessed and managed.

Access to palliative and end of life care has increased through initiatives such as providing flexible and responsive palliative nursing care to patients in their own home delivered through the extended Rapid Response Service in the Western, Northern and Southern areas which operates in partnership with Marie Curie, HSC Trusts and GP Out-of-Hours services.

Good palliative care delivery is unpinned by training, education and development. A number of initiatives are ongoing across Northern Ireland to improve palliative and end of life care through better information and education. These include the provision of information and support services for patients, families and carers, and education and training in palliative and end of life care for staff working in health and social care.

The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority report on the implementation of the Living Matters:Dying Matters Strategy has not yet been published. My Department will consider the findings and any recommendations of the review report when this is available.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will support the recommendations of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority review of the implementation of the Living Matters: Dying Matters Strategy, regarding palliative and end of life care services.

Mr Hamilton: I am very aware of the importance of palliative care and want to ensure that people with palliative and end of life care needs have access to and receive high quality care, irrespective of their condition. This will continue to be a focus for my Department, working in partnership with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), Public Health Agency (PHA) and other key stakeholders.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has plans to improve palliative care for people that are suffering from conditions other than cancer.

Mr Hamilton: I am very aware of the importance of palliative care and want to ensure that people with palliative and end of life care needs have access to and receive high quality care, irrespective of their condition. This will continue to be a focus for my Department, working in partnership with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), Public Health Agency (PHA) and other key stakeholders.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will answer priority written questions AQW 50801/11-16 and AQW 50736/11-16.

Mr Hamilton: I answered AQW 50801/11-15 on 1 December 2015 and AQW 50736/11-16 on 30 November 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the operation of the voluntary register for clinical physiologists; and whether his Department has plans to introduce a mandatory register.
(AQW 51629/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Regulation of any healthcare profession must be proportionate to the level of risk presented to patient safety. My assessment, which I am aware is shared by the administrations across the UK, is that the current system of voluntary registers for Clinical Physiologists is the most proportionate and appropriate approach to ensuring safe and effective care.

Statutory regulation is sometimes necessary where significant risks to service users cannot be effectively addressed in other ways. However it is not always the most proportionate or effective means of assuring safe and effective care. The current approach will continue to be monitored across the UK as the role of Clinical Physiologists in providing care evolves, including locally in the HSC.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assurances he can give that his Department will continue to provide core funding to the Down's Syndrome Association.

Mr Hamilton: Core funded organisations, including Down's Syndrome Association, will receive 75% of their 2015/16 funding in 2016/17, reducing to 50% in 2017/18. In 2016/17, my Department will launch a new grant scheme that will have innovation as its central theme. The Department is currently working with key stakeholders to develop the scope of the scheme which will be open to new and existing voluntary, community and social enterprise organisations.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the rationale for the decision not to regulate clinical physiologists, given the sensitive nature of their work.

Mr Hamilton: Regulation of any healthcare profession must be proportionate to the level of risk presented to patient safety. My assessment, which I am aware is shared by the administrations across the UK, is that the current system of voluntary registers for Clinical Physiologists is the most proportionate and appropriate approach to ensuring safe and effective care.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the recent High Court ruling, when he will bring forward proposals to deal with the shortcomings in abortion legislation and guidelines.

Mr Hamilton: Abortion in Northern Ireland is governed by criminal law, which is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice.

My responsibility in this area relates to ensuring that women receive the health and social care services to which they are legally entitled and that those who provide them do so in accordance with the law.

To this end, I am on record as saying that I will issue guidance on the subject for health professionals. I have circulated revised guidelines on termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland to my Executive colleagues and I hope to issue them to health professionals shortly. Guidance from my Department can only reflect the law as it stands. The recent High Court Ruling did not change the law as it relates to abortion.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he is aware of industrial relations issues within the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service in Enniskillen as reported in the Impartial Reporter.

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has responded to issues raised by firefighters in Enniskillen. They are committed to continuing engagement with staff, if further concerns are raised.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what training is given to professionals involved in maternity care on the prevention and treatment of group B strep infections in babies.
(AQW 51698/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In pre-registration training, student midwives study Group B Streptococcus (GBS) in relation to the screening and care of both mother and baby. As part of registered midwives' continual professional development (CPD), mandatory training on antenatal screening including GBS is provided by the HSC's Clinical Education Centre (CEC).

In addition, a number of Chief Professional letters from the Chief Medical Officer (CMO) and Chief Nursing Officer (CNO) have been issued to NI health professionals since 2011 to keep them informed of clinical guidelines and updates to relevant information on the prevention and treatment of GBS.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what treatments are available through the Health Service for eating disorders such as anorexia.

Mr Hamilton: Specialist eating disorder services in Northern Ireland offer evidence based interventions, in line with the NICE clinical guidelines. The most appropriate intervention for an Eating Disorder is determined following clinical assessment, and is tailored to the individual's needs and circumstances.

The range of interventions and therapies available include: Cognitive Behavioural Therapy (adapted for Eating Disorder); Family therapy; Motivational Interviewing; Body Image work; Interpersonal therapy; Psychodynamic therapy; MARSIPAN (Management of Really Sick Patients with Anorexia Nervosa) - for medical inpatient units; and Specialist psychiatry, psychology, dietetics, occupational therapy and nursing to support treatment.

Further to my announcement on 7 October 2015, work is underway to consider the feasibility of a specialist eating disorder unit in Northern Ireland, and initial findings are expected by March 2016.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there are services that people with eating disorders can avail of in England.

(AQW 51723/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: People with eating disorders may avail of services in other parts of the UK, or the Republic of Ireland, for expert assessment, advice or ongoing specialist care management not available in Northern Ireland. This is managed via the Extra Contractual Referral process, if the treating clinician within the HSC considers it to be the most appropriate course, the receiving facility is in agreement and the relevant procedures within the transfer guidance are followed. Referral to services outside of Northern Ireland must have prior approval from the Health and Social Care Board.

If they wish, people with eating disorders can also choose to avail of services on a private basis in other jurisdictions.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the staffing levels in the Emergency Department in the Mater Hospital between September and November 2014; and (ii) what changes there have been compared to the same period in 2015.

Mr Hamilton: Information relating to 31st October 2014 and 31st October 2015 is provided in the table below.

Grade	31st October 2014		31st October 2015
	Headcount	WTE	Headcount	WTE

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what work his Department has undertaken in conjunction with the Department for Social Development to address the health risks associated with fuel poverty.

(AQW 51747/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Given the links between living in cold damp conditions and a number of illnesses (including poor mental health, respiratory disease, and premature mortality) DHSSPS is represented on the DSD led Inter-departmental Group on Fuel Poverty. In addition, in line with the strategic framework for public health, Making Life Better, the Public Health Agency works closely with DSD, the public, private, community, voluntary and academic sectors to research, evaluate and deliver a range of local and regional initiatives to alleviate fuel poverty and maximise income for those living in fuel poverty.

Collaborative programmes and initiatives include:

- joint working with local councils, Social Security Agency/DSD and National Energy Action to support the Affordable Warmth Scheme to access the most vulnerable residents;
- joint working with local councils, Bryson Energy and the Housing Executive to promote oil buying clubs and oil stamp schemes;
- benefits and services maximisation schemes, such as MARA (Maximising Access in Rural Areas) and Advice 4 Health;
- fuel poverty programmes and interventions in local communities which support referrals for insulation measures, boiler replacements, etc;

- energy awareness sessions with local communities through key partners including Bryson, National Energy Action and NIHE;
- City and Guilds Energy Advisor Training to create local energy champions; and
- the purchase and distribution of Winter Warmth Packs to those who are at particular risk from cold weather e.g. rough sleepers, young children living in disadvantaged areas, older people.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has revisited the case of a firefighter that died while on duty on the 31 October 2003 and considered the concerns expressed by his family regarding the circumstances in which he died.

(AQW 51761/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of the tragic death of firefighter Joe McCloskey in 2003 following injuries which he sustained while he was on duty and the concerns expressed by his family regarding the circumstances in which he died.

I have not revisited the case.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the process by which data relating to people living with learning disabilities is (i) compiled; (ii) stored; and (iii) disaggregated.

(AQW 51769/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Information on activity within the Learning Disability Programme of Care (POC) is collected by the Department using a series of statistical returns provided by Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts and the HSC Board. Data providers are supplied with technical guidance documents outlining the methodologies to be used in the collection, reporting and validation of each statistical return submitted to the Department.

For each statistical information return data providers are given a set period of time to submit the information. Following submission, the Department carries out a number of validation checks to verify that the information is consistent both within and across information returns. At the end of each financial year a more detailed set of validations is carried out to ensure the information is up to date and reflects changes made over time.

Additional information is also compiled on persons with learning disabilities as part of the Quality and Outcomes Framework (QOF). This data is compiled by GP practices and securely uploaded to the Payments, Calculation and Analysis System (PCAS) on 31 March each year. It is then automatically processed to establish performance against the QOF indicators and the associated points and payments that come from this. GP practices have a three month window during which they can query the results. Once all data has been signed off by GP practices, the Department downloads it from the PCAS system.

- (ii) Data received by the Department is then stored on a secure file management system, with access restricted in line with existing Departmental arrangements.
- (iii) Data released by the Department will be aggregated up to hospital, Local Commissioning Group, HSC Trust and/or Northern Ireland level, and will be treated for confidentiality to avoid personal disclosure.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much time a statemented child receives on physiotherapy in an average week.

(AQW 51785/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Therapy provision is based on each individual patient's assessed need be they adult or child.

AHP services for statemented children/young people follow regional care pathways so that services are consistent. Each child's intervention will be based on their assessed need and tailored to meet their individual requirements.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the announcement of a pulse oximetry trial in Daisy Hill Hospital, what additional resources have been provided to the Clarke Clinic to meet any additional demand arising from follow up care that is required immediately for any children presenting with signs of congenital heart disease.

Mr Hamilton: The pulse oximetry pilot in Daisy Hill Hospital is not part of the UK National Screening Committee pilot. It is a Quality Improvement Project (QIP) that has been taken forward by a multidisciplinary team within the Southern Health and Social Care Trust including Paediatric & Maternity services. Follow up care for any children presenting with signs of congenital heart disease will be met within existing resources.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety following the announcement of a pulse oximetry trial in Daisy Hill Hospital, to detail what selection criteria was used to select Daisy Hill Hospital for the pilot.

Mr Hamilton: Daisy Hill Hospital's Paediatric Team in partnership with maternity colleagues introduced this Quality Improvement Project (QIP) pilot for congenital heart disease using pulse oximetry as a service improvement initiative.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety following the announcement of a pulse oximetry trial in Daisy Hill Hospital, when he will introduce pulse oximetry testing for all new borns in local hospitals.

Mr Hamilton: My Department is advised by the UK National Screening Committee (NSC) about all aspects of screening. Using research evidence, pilot programmes and economic evaluation, the NSC assesses the evidence for programmes against a set of internationally recognised criteria covering the condition, the test, the treatment options and the effectiveness and acceptability of the screening programme.

The NSC has reviewed the evidence for adding pulse oximetry to the screening pathway to detect congenital heart disease in newborns. At their meeting in March 2014 they recommended piloting the use of pulse oximetry to evaluate the impact of implementation on NHS services and to establish feasibility for future national rollout as an addition to the existing suite of screening tests undertaken as part of the newborn programme. The pilot has commenced and is expected to report later this year. The NSC will make a policy recommendation for the UK and I will consider this advice when it is available.

The pulse oximetry pilot in Daisy Hill Hospital is not part of the UK National Screening Committee pilot.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) whether he has received proposals from the Western Health and Social Care Trust in relation to the day centres at Dromore and Gortin, Co Tyrone; (ii) whether he is aware of the concerns raised by the clients and their families; (iii) what saving will be made following the proposed closures; (iv) the additional cost of providing a service for those rural dwellers who will not avail of services in Fintona or Newtownstewart; (v) what Equality Impact Assessment and rural proofing assessments have been undertaken; and (vi) when this decision will be made public.

(AQW 51794/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The Western HSC Trust has submitted its proposals on the reform of day care services for older people which will now be considered by the Health and Social Care Board who will provide me with advice;
- (ii) I fully recognise the impact these reforms may have on service users and their families. The Trust is committed to handling any change sensitively, taking into account the needs of all service users affected by the change;
- (iii) The estimated savings from the reform of day care services for older people is £100k;
- (iv) All service users currently attending day care at Dromore and Gortin will be offered the same level of day care in alternative locations. Service users are encouraged to avail of day care services that may be offered to them in Fintona or Newtownstewart;
- (v) The Trust conducted equality and human rights screening on its proposals for the reform of day care services for older people. The screening indicated that the proposals did not require a full equality impact assessment. The equality screening also considered the impact of the proposals from a rural perspective;
- (vi) As indicated at (i) above the Health and Social Care Board will provide me with advice and I will make a decision in due course.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given a smoking ban in psychiatric hospitals is due to come into effect in March 2016, to detail how it will be effectively managed by staff given inpatients need to be accompanied to a designated smoking zone outside the precincts of the hospital.

(AQW 51796/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Trusts will not be facilitating any patient to smoke. This will include staff not escorting patients off Trust property in order to smoke and there will be no designated 'smoking zones'

Effective implementation of the smokefree campuses policy for the Trusts will require staff training and the development of clear protocols for action to ensure that all in-patients are treated in a compassionate and supportive manner. Patients will be offered assistance, including nicotine replacement therapy or behavioural support by trained smoking cessation advisors, to comply with the new smokefree policy.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department will respond to the determination by Mr Justice Horner in the Belfast High Court that abortion legislation in Northern Ireland is in breach of Human Rights law.

Mr Hamilton: Termination of pregnancy is a matter of criminal law, which is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. My particular interest is in relation to the implications for guidance on the law on termination of pregnancy for health professionals.

Given the complexity and sensitivity of the issue, guidance on termination of pregnancy requires the approval of the Executive, and my Executive colleagues are currently considering draft guidance.

I am currently considering Mr Justice Horner's concluding judgment handed down on 16th December and the options available to me for moving forward with robust guidance that reflects the law on Termination of Pregnancy.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how his Department is supporting carers that are over 60 years of age; and (ii) what information is available for older carers regarding the future care of their loved ones.

(AQW 51809/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) In recognising the need to support all carers in their caring role, a carers' strategy, Caring for Carers, was published in January 2006. The strategy is inter-departmental and inter-agency, dealing with health and personal social services, employment, training, education, availability of information and support services. Since the publication of the strategy, Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts have been working to address the arising recommendations, thereby raising the standard of services for carers. Further, as I have previously advised, HSC Trusts have a statutory duty under the Carers and Direct Payments Act (NI) 2002 to make information regarding a carer's right to an assessment widely available and to inform individuals of all ages directly of that right, where it appears to the Trust that an individual is carrying out a caring role. Following the completion of a carers assessment, HSC Trusts are required to meet all eligible need identified.
- (ii) My Department is committed to carers being acknowledged and recognised as "equal partners in care". The Carers Strategy makes it very clear that HSC Trusts must ensure that carers are fully informed and involved in the planning of future care of the cared for person so that assumptions are not made about their ability or willingness to care.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety an update on the review of Day Opportunities for people with learning disabilities.

(AQW 51810/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Since the regional consultation on the proposed Model for Day Opportunities for People with Learning Disabilities was carried out in 2013/2014, work is progressing to implement the Model across all HSC Trust areas to ensure the range and quality of post-19 opportunities for those with a learning disability across NI is more consistent. It is important to note that the Day Opportunities programme of change could take up to five years to complete and its success is highly dependent on the cooperation of relevant government departments and their agencies, the new local government Councils and voluntary and community organisations. A summary of progress is as follows:-

- a post Consultation Report was developed in 2014;
- a Regional Day Opportunities Inter-departmental (and cross-sectoral) Implementation Group was established in October 2014;
- Local Implementation Groups were established in the five Health and Social Care Trust localities in 2015 and these Groups have measured themselves against the Model Phase 1;
- a Carers' Regional Sub Group was established in September 2015;
- engagement events have been undertaken with staff, users, carers and providers;
- person-centred reviews for service users in day care continue to identify those who would benefit from access to day opportunities;
- a scoping exercise of current daycare/day opportunities and profile of current service users has been completed;
- a review is currently being carried out on building-based services to identify requirements for the future;
- the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has recently awarded a contract to fund the 'Rural Support' post for the development of Social Farming;
- a Regional Integrated Passenger Transport Group was set up and led by the Department for Regional Development to look at efficient and sustainable passenger transport arrangements.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) number of times the inter-departmental Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability has met since 2012; and (ii) attendance at those meetings.

(AQW 51812/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Inter-Departmental Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability has met 4 times since 2012 on: 21 November 2013; 1 May 2014; 20 November 2014; and 13 May 2015.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has made any representations to Four Seasons Health Care to request (a) that they reconsider the closure of local care homes; or (b) the proposed timescale for the closure.

Mr Hamilton: As a private company, Four Seasons Health Care is free to make decisions about the management of its business. It is not the role of the Minister for Health to interfere in the lawful operations of a private company. The mandatory notice periods for proposed closures are set out in Regulation 15 (2) (b) of the Regulation and Improvement Authority (Registration) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2005.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has had any discussions with the Secretary of State for Health with regards to the proposed closures of care homes by Four Seasons Health Care.

Mr Hamilton: I have not had any discussions with the Secretary State for Health regarding the proposed closure of nursing homes by Four Seasons Health Care.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the service notifications for the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence Technological Assessments TA339 - TA368 inclusive will be published; and where no service notification has yet been published when this is expected.

(AQW 51849/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The table below shows when the HSCB published its service notifications for TA339 to TA368, or the expected publication date, as appropriate. Where (NICE) has terminated its assessment of a particular technology, the table is noted accordingly.

Where my Department has not yet endorsed the Technology Appraisal, the date that the Service Notification is expected to issue has been calculated using the latest possible dates as per the timescales set out in Circular HSC (SQSD) 2/13.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much of his departmental budget is allocated to the Prison Service.

Mr Hamilton: Prison healthcare services are commissioned by the Health and Social Care Board and are delivered by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust. Approximately £8.5m was allocated by the South Eastern HSC Trust for the delivery of prison healthcare services in 2014/15.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority first became aware that the financial pressures experienced by Four Seasons Health Care were sufficient enough for them to consider closing seven homes.

Mr Hamilton: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority was aware from national media coverage of ongoing financial difficulties facing Four Seasons Health Care's parent company. It received formal notification from Four Seasons Health Care on 24 November 2015 of its intention to close seven nursing homes in Northern Ireland.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of times medical test results have been given to the wrong patient broken down by clinical discipline, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 51891/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of self-testing kits for (a) sexually transmitted diseases; (b) fertility; (c) human papilloma virus; (d) blood pressure; (e) bowel cancer; and (f) cholesterol.

(AQW 51892/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department has no role in the assessment of medical devices including self-test kits. In the UK assessment of medical devices is the responsibility of the Medical and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA). MHRA's role is to ensure that medical devices placed on the market across the UK are safe and effective for use.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of fetuses with a diagnosis of Down syndrome resulted in live births in each of the last five years.

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of fetuses with a diagnosis of Down's syndrome which resulted in a live birth.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many fetuses diagnosed with Down syndrome have been lawfully aborted in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

(AQW 51917/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of fetuses diagnosed with Down's syndrome that have been lawfully aborted in Northern Ireland. However it should be noted that within Northern Ireland abortion is only lawful in very restricted circumstances, including those where it is necessary to preserve the life of the woman, or there is a risk of real and serious adverse effect on her physical or mental health, which is either long term or permanent.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many live births in each of the last five years have been in respect of children with spina bifida.

Mr Hamilton: The latest available information on the number of registered births with a diagnosis of spina bifida is available publicly at the following link;

<http://www.publichealth.hscni.net/sites/default/files/Core%20Tables%202013.pdf>

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of fetuses with a diagnosis of spina bifida resulted in live births, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 51921/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of fetuses with a diagnosis of spina bifida which resulted in a live birth

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many fetuses diagnosed with spina bifida have been lawfully aborted in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

(AQW 51922/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of fetuses diagnosed with spina bifida that have been lawfully aborted in Northern Ireland. However it should be noted that within Northern Ireland abortion is only lawful in very restricted circumstances, including those where it is necessary to preserve the life of the woman, or there is a risk of real and serious adverse effect on her physical or mental health, which is either long term or permanent.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provisions are available for school leavers in North Down, that are over nineteen years of age with learning and behavioural difficulties.

Mr Hamilton: The South Eastern HSC Trust work with young people with a learning disability and their families from the age of 14, to develop a person-centred plan of activities for when they leave school. This could be in one of the three statutory Day Centres in the North Down and Ards area (Ravara Training and Resource Centre; Glencraig and Fold), which provide a range of facilities and activities, based on small age-appropriate groups.

Other Day Opportunities are provided (through Trust contracts), by the voluntary sector who provide further buildings-based day care and community-based day opportunities, such as supervised activities, and training and employment openings. A new cafe run by Stepping Stones has also recently opened on the Ards Hospital site.

All Health and Social Care Trusts have been asked by the Health and Social Care Board, to review Day Care/Day Opportunities in line with the Strategic Commissioning Plan. The SEHSCT holds regular workshops and meetings with the Learning Disability Day Care Opportunities Reference Group, which comprises statutory and independent day care and day opportunities providers, such as the Department for Regional Development; South Eastern Regional College and Translink.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of domestic violence related suicides; and (ii) whether this has been considered in the Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy for 2013-2020

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold statistical information on domestic violence related suicide in Northern Ireland. However, there is evidence that domestic violence can be a risk factor for suicidal behaviour.

The proposed 'Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse in Northern Ireland' Strategy recognises that domestic violence is a known risk factor and highlights the 'Protect Life' strategy which sets out the NI Executive strategic approach to suicide prevention.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of domestic violence victims that are over 60 years of age; and (ii) to detail how his Department is working to raise awareness of age trends in relation to domestic violence.

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not gather statistics on the age profile of victims of domestic violence. PSNI statistics for 2014/15 indicate that 5% of domestic abuse crime victims were over 60. It is therefore clear that domestic violence and abuse can occur into older age.

Once the proposed Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy is published, the groups within the newly adopted governance structures will consider priorities going forward, including raising awareness of domestic violence in relation to all victims.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the Family Planning service provision in each Health and Social Care Trust, including the number of (a) clinics operating; (b) medical staff provided in each clinic; and (iii) the clinic opening times.

Mr Hamilton: Table 1 below details the Family Planning service provision in each Health and Social Care Trust including the number of clinics operating, the medical staff provided in each clinic and the clinic opening times.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there has been any research undertaken to establish the reasons for missed appointments.

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) continues to work with Trusts to understand the reasons for missed appointments and actions that can be taken to reduce them. This includes monitoring Do Not Attend (DNA) rates by specialty, site, month and gender. Telephone surveys have also been undertaken to identify the reasons why patients do not attend their appointments and this information has been used to improve booking processes through the use of initiatives such as text reminders.

Both the Belfast and Southern HSC Trusts have carried out separate exercises where they contacted a number of patients who had not attended appointments to try and establish the reason for their non attendance.

The Belfast Trust has since introduced a telephone / text appointment reminder system which has helped reduce DNA rates.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQT 3262/11-16, how another hospital can start or participate in a similar pilot.

(AQW 52175/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not recommend that any other hospital participates in a similar pilot to the trial which has been introduced by Daisy Hill Hospital. All hospitals should await the findings from the UK National Screening Committee which is piloting pulse oximetry screening in a range of maternity services including midwifery led units, district general hospitals and tertiary referral maternity units.

The NSC will use the pilot to better understand the implications of introducing this screening test, including any impact on neonatal services and paediatric cardiology services. Should a national screening programme be introduced the findings from the pilot will also inform roll out and ensure that all babies are appropriately and consistently screened and managed to agreed quality standards.

The pilot is ongoing and is expected to report in March. Following the evaluation of this pilot, the NSC will make a policy recommendation for the UK. I will consider this advice when it is available.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will publish any of the guidance or advice, including oral, written or electronic, that he has given to the Public Health Agency on its Lifeline consultation.

(AQW 52362/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have not given any advice or guidance to the Public Health Agency on its Lifeline consultation.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the future of nursing homes and residential care homes in West Tyrone.

(AQW 52804/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has been leading on a regional review over the past two years on the future role and function of their statutory residential care homes, including statutory residential care homes in the West Tyrone area. Following the announcement made by Four Seasons Health Care to close a number of nursing homes in Northern Ireland, I asked the Health and Social Care Board, as a precautionary measure, to halt and review the current process examining the future role of statutory residential care homes. My officials are liaising with colleagues in the Health and Social Care Board on this matter.

Department of Justice

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the community organisations in West Tyrone that receive funding from his Department.

(AQW 52982/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): My Department, including its Agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, provided funding to Sion Mills Community Forum during the 2015-16 financial year.

My Department also provides funding to Policing and Community Safety Partnerships who work with a wide range of bodies including voluntary and community groups. A project called Securing the Vulnerable received funding through the Fermanagh/Omagh PCSP.

Other voluntary and community groups receive funding for Northern Ireland wide services. Some of these services may be available in West Tyrone.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice how he will evaluate the benefits arising from the work of the project advisory group on youth justice.

(AQW 53213/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Youth Justice Project Advisory Group (PAG) continues to make good progress and there is continuing evidence of genuine cooperation between the two jurisdictions.

The Work Programme for the Youth Justice PAG for this year contains a number of activities which will improve the experiences of young people in the justice system, namely:

- an examination of the potential for further cooperation between the PSNI and An Garda Síochána in relation to young offenders on diversion;
- developing staff exchanges and information sharing between the youth detention facilities in both jurisdictions;
- developing Information Sharing protocols between the two jurisdictions; and
- a sharing of best practice between the jurisdictions on children's experience in the justice system.

As Minister, I will continue to evaluate the benefits arising from the work of the Youth Justice PAG in conjunction with my Irish counterpart, Frances Fitzgerald TD, Minister for Justice and Equality, at our twice-yearly Ministerial meetings held under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Agreement on cooperation on criminal justice matters.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the delivery of the Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Prevention Strategy.

(AQW 53322/11-16)

Mr Ford: I hope to be able to publish the Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy jointly with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety following Executive approval.

I acknowledge that the publication has not progressed as quickly as hoped. However it has been developed in partnership with key stakeholders across the sectors and includes the views of victims and recognises their needs.

Despite the delay in publishing the Strategy, I have instructed officials within my Department to take forward the implementation of the Justice priorities within the Strategy.

My Department is currently consulting on the possibility of an offence of domestic abuse and the introduction of a disclosure scheme that would enable new partners of previously violent individuals to find out about their partner's history of violence and abuse.

Work is ongoing with relevant agencies regarding the development of suitable and robust guidance to allow for a pilot project for the commencement and introduction of Domestic Violence Protection Notices and Orders in Northern Ireland which I introduced through the Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 2015. These will protect the alleged victim from domestic violence and abuse for a period up to 28 days and prohibit the perpetrator from molesting the alleged victim.

In addition, Officials will develop an appropriate model to enable the identification of lessons learned and to improve the response to cases of domestic homicide in Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, consideration is being given to enhancing the court listing arrangements for domestic violence and abuse cases which have been operating successfully in Derry.

Through working in partnership with all relevant statutory, voluntary and community organisations, I remain focused on taking forward these priorities associated with Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse. However, we need to be realistic that the current funding constraints will impact on what new work can be developed and delivered.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the work of Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre.
(AQW 53324/11-16)

Mr Ford: Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre continues to develop to ensure it remains a safe, secure and child-centred environment for young people in custody. All children and young people are risk assessed and have care plans designed to challenge and treat behavioural problems, encourage learning and development and nurture better decision making to enable them to re-integrate more safely back into the community.

To ensure needs are met thoroughly and systematically, work is ongoing in partnership with the Department of Education to review the core curriculum and to provide a corporate governance framework that will enable Woodlands to operate more effectively as a provider of Education Other Than At School (EOTAS). This will help to ensure that children and young people have access to mainstream educational programmes and accredited training for future employment.

With the attainment of EOTAS status and with support from the Education Authority, it is intended that by May 2016, Woodlands will have established an integrated learning and development centre that will draw together high quality teaching and vocational skills in conjunction with social care and behavioural change interventions, mental health interventions to meet identified and complex needs.

Furthermore, Woodlands is currently collaborating with the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust (SEHSCT) to scope the requirements for effective healthcare provision for young people. A senior healthcare manager from the SEHSCT is being seconded to Woodlands to oversee this exercise and ensure that healthcare provision meets young people's needs and integrates with the learning and development culture of Woodlands.

The SEHSCT already operates a Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service (CAMHS) that is based within Woodlands. This service provides an in-reach service for young people comprising a Consultant Psychiatrist Clinic and a Mental Health Nurse led clinic.

The remit of the CAMHS in-reach service is to provide a comprehensive multidisciplinary and age appropriate mental health assessment and treatment service to young people admitted to Woodlands. Continuity of care is ensured through coordination with CAMHS outreach services and close collaboration with the Youth Justice Services in the community.

It is worth noting that since the removal of all under 18 year olds from Hydebank Wood in November 2012 the profile of young people in Woodlands has changed. This has led to a significant increase in the number of young people entering the Centre who are post school leaving age.

Therefore, in conjunction with providing education for those of statutory school age in relation to essential skills of literacy, numeracy and ICT, Woodlands is developing the skills for life for 17 year olds and supporting and encouraging them to prepare for the world of work with careers advice, vocational instruction and work experience opportunities.

Finally, Woodlands regularly reviews the regime in place for young people in order to motivate and recognise positive change and to challenge negative behaviours.

Opportunities are also being created within the Centre to promote independence and empower decision making particularly in those young people who are older and preparing for the world of work.

An enhanced regime will recognise those young people who are ready for increased independence and are able to be challenged to make positive decisions about their current and future circumstances.

Extracurricular activities will continue in accommodation areas during evening periods and by residential staff. Accommodation areas will be equipped with learning resources to enable (and encourage) students to take greater responsibility for their learning plan and to work at a pace suitable to them.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice how many custodial sentences have been imposed in each of the last three years following convictions for animal cruelty offences.
(AQW 53389/11-16)

Mr Ford: Animal cruelty offences span a number of statutes. However, the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 (the 2011 Act) is the main piece of legislation under which animal cruelty cases are prosecuted.

From 2012 to 2014, the latest years for which official data are available, there were 15 convictions for animal cruelty under all relevant legislation which resulted in custodial sentences. Sentences ranged from one month to twenty months.

A breakdown of the number of custodial sentences in each year can be found in the table below.

Persons receiving a custodial sentence following a conviction for animal cruelty offences, 2012 - 2014

Year	Persons given custodial disposal
2012	3
2013	2
2014	10

Notes:

- 1 Figures relate to initial court disposals only. Results of cases brought on appeal are not included.
- 2 Figures relate to persons convicted of any one of the offences in question, whether or not they were the principal offence at conviction.

Custodial sentences for the most serious cases of animal cruelty are to be welcomed; however, I believe that more can be done to strengthen our approach to animal welfare especially in light of some of the recent extreme cases witnessed. That is why I have agreed with the Minister for Agriculture, who is responsible for the 2011 Act, to increase the maximum penalties.

Under the Justice (No. 2) Bill, the maximum sentence for animal cruelty cases heard in the Crown Court will increase from two years to five years. For Magistrates' Court cases involving unnecessary suffering or causing / attending an animal fight, the maximum sentence will increase from six months to twelve months, and the maximum fine will increase from £5,000 to £20,000.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Justice whether he intends to introduce changes to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Order to reduce the length of time that convictions remain before they are spent, in line with changes that have taken place in recent years in Britain.

Mr Ford: I am aware of the changes made in England and Wales, which came into operation on 10 March 2014, to shorten the rehabilitation periods so that, in some circumstances, a conviction can be considered spent at an earlier stage.

In maintaining a regime whereby convictions can become spent, a balance must be struck between allowing a person to put their past behind them; the needs of employers in the recruitment process; and the need to be alert to public trust and public protection.

Changing the law in this area is not, therefore, a straightforward matter and it is one that would engage a wide body of interests across government and the public. In addition, any change to law would require a major public consultation and considerable Assembly time to then legislate.

At this stage of the Assembly mandate, I have no plans at present to introduce similar provisions to Northern Ireland although my Department will continue to keep a watching brief on the operation of the new regime in England and Wales.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to detail his Department's underspend in the last financial year.

(AQW 53468/11-16)

Mr Ford: My Department's underspend in the 2014-15 financial year was:

- £17,465k unringfenced Resource Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) or 1.6% of budget.
- £4,836k Capital DEL or 7.8% of budget.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of convictions for offences relating to animal cruelty in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53470/11-16)

Mr Ford: Animal cruelty offences span a number of statutes. However, the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 (the 2011 Act) is the main piece of legislation under which animal cruelty cases are prosecuted.

From 2012 to 2014, the latest years for which official data are available, there were 114 convictions for animal cruelty under all relevant legislation, of which 15 resulted in a custodial sentence. Sentences ranged from one month to twenty months.

A breakdown of the number of convictions in each year can be found in the table below.

Notes:

- 3 Figures relate to initial court disposals only. Results of cases brought on appeal are not included.
- 4 Figures relate to conviction for any one of the offences in question, whether or not they were the principal offence at conviction.

Following a recent review, I have agreed with the Minister for Agriculture, to increase the maximum penalties for animal cruelty. Under the Justice (No. 2) Bill, the maximum sentence for animal cruelty cases heard in the Crown Court will increase from two years to five years. For Magistrates' Court cases involving unnecessary suffering or causing / attending an animal fight, the maximum sentence will increase from six months to twelve months, and the maximum fine will increase from £5,000 to £20,000.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many court cases in the Ards Division are currently stymied as a result of counsel coming off record, or refusing to act as a result of the new legal aid fees.

Mr Ford: As of 31 January 2016 there were 144 cases in the Division of Ards where the court was notified that either the solicitor or counsel had come off record or the defence had been unable to engage counsel due to the Legal Aid dispute. These cases are at various stages before the Crown Court.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of legal claims made by Republican prisoners against the Prison Service, in each of the last three years.

Mr Ford: The table below contains the number of civil claims taken by republican separated prisoners in each of the last three financial years.

Financial Year	Claims Received
2013-14	4
2014-15	6
2015-16 (to 31/12/15)	5

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to list the respondents to the consultation on the future of Limavady courthouse.

(AQW 53616/11-16)

Mr Ford: In total there were 97 responses to the consultation on proposals to rationalise the court estate. The full list of respondents has been included in the response and recommendation document which was published on the 26 November 2015.

Although the consultation confirmed the previously announced closure of Limavady Courthouse a number of responses were received which specifically commented on this venue. They were:

- Mr Gregory Campbell MP, MLA,
- Mr George Robinson MLA,
- Ald. Alan Robinson, Mayor of Limavady,
- Cllr J E Scott,
- Cllr James McCorkell,
- Mr David Gilmour, and
- Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice whether he will hold discussions with the Chief Constable on the recent weapons and ammunition finds in the North West and the necessity of further information being required from local communities to uncover other similar type devices.

(AQW 53617/11-16)

Mr Ford: I have regular discussions with the PSNI on security related matters. I last met the Chief Constable on 10 December and a further meeting is arranged for 11 February.

I agree with the importance of the public assisting the police by providing such information as they can. Information can be passed to the police directly or anonymously through Crimestoppers.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Justice whether he will hold discussions with the Chief Constable on the recent spate of break-ins and thefts outside churches, including over the weekend and at churches in Dromore, Strathroy, Aughnacloy, Carrickmore and Trillick in County Tyrone.

(AQW 53692/11-16)

Mr Ford: I meet with the Chief Constable regularly to discuss a range of relevant issues, which may include current crime trends. The PSNI's response to such crimes is an operational matter for the Chief Constable. However, I understand that the PSNI has provided a single Investigating Officer within Omagh Neighbourhood Policing Team to ensure consistency of approach, and that crime prevention advice has been delivered to churches over the last number of months.

I understand the impact that this type of crime can have on individuals and of their sense of safety in their own communities. I would urge your constituents to avail of any crime prevention advice offered via the PSNI and local Policing and Community Safety Partnerships to better protect themselves and their belongings.

At a local level, PCSPs are taking forward a range of initiatives to help protect property. For example, I understand that Mid Ulster PCSP has a Text Alert Service that local clergy have availed of to ensure they receive updates on any suspicious activity in their local area.

Department for Regional Development

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development why funding to NI Water is not at the level required by the independent Utility Regulator; and what impact this has on service delivery.

(AQW 52910/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): Whilst the Utility Regulator recommends the level of funding necessary to support the Price Control process, it is for the Executive to determine the Public Expenditure Budget, taking account of all of its priorities. It is as a result of the constraints on public expenditure that NI Water's funding at the outset of the PC15 period has not been at the level set out in the Regulator's Final Determination.

The Regulator continues to monitor NI Water's performance against the PC15 targets with some adjustment to reflect the reduced level of funding and there is currently no evidence of adverse impact on service delivery.

NI Water is reporting that prolonged uncertainty on funding, and therefore on planned outputs, whilst not yet resulting in reductions in service provision, does present a risk of loss of momentum and an emergence of regression to service. In light of NI Water's performance to date with reduced funding, the Department will work closely with the Company and the Utility Regulator to ensure that any emerging impacts on customer service can be minimised. Whilst it has been possible to manage funding levels at less than the PC15 levels, this is less than ideal and cannot be sustained in the long term.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development when a medium term funding settlement for NI Water will be reached between her department, the Utility Regulator and NI Water; and what impact the absence of such funding is having on the ability of NI Water to plan infrastructural investment.

Miss M McIlveen: A medium term funding settlement for NI Water must be set in the context of the Executive's overall spending proposals. My colleague, the Minister of Finance and Personnel, set out the Budget for 2016-17 on 19 January 2016. In his Statement, he made reference to this paving the way for the new Executive to agree a multi-year Budget from 2017/18 to 2020/2021, which will reflect the priorities in the new Programme for Government. This will in turn enable the Department to confirm the funding for water and sewerage services for that period.

In the meantime, it should be acknowledged that the Final Determination published by the Utility Regulator in December 2014 to cover the period from April 2015 to March 2021 was set in the context of the wider public expenditure environment and the spending constraints going forward. The Regulator acknowledged that, in the event of reductions in public expenditure for water and sewerage services, it would work with NI Water to ensure that it delivers the best possible package of outputs within the final public expenditure allocation.

NI Water and the Utility Regulator have worked through a process to assess changes to 2015/16 outputs required due to reduced funding and to take account of lower than forecast inflation. A similar exercise will be undertaken for the 2016/17 period.

I recognise that, as an asset intensive business, long term planning is necessary to improve services for current and future customers, and uncertainty over funding adds complexity to capital investment delivery and has the potential to reduce efficiency. However, the Regulator is committed to continue to work with all stakeholders to ensure that NI Water continues to deliver in an efficient manner.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the current hybrid business model for NI water can deliver the investment needed for water and sewerage infrastructure.

(AQW 52912/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The status of NI Water as both a Government owned Company (Go Co) and a Non-Departmental Body (NDPB) for Public Expenditure purposes brings certain challenges for all stakeholders.

However, over the past eight years, NI Water has steadily improved the efficiency with which it operates, while at the same time improving the quality of drinking water, levels of environmental compliance and the services provided to customers. So in that regard, the hybrid business model has successfully delivered water and sewerage services for customers in Northern Ireland.

Since 2008/09, when NI Water was re-classified as an NDPB, my Department has provided in excess of £1.6 billion for investment in water and sewerage infrastructure.

My Department will continue to work closely with NI Water, the Utility Regulator and other stakeholders to ensure the best possible outcome for current and future customers and the wider economy.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development why her Department agreed a derogation from the Government Financial Reporting Manual for NI Water.

(AQW 52913/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: NI Water Limited was established as a limited company on 1 April 2007. As a separate legal company, NI Water is required by the Companies Act 2006 to prepare audited Statutory Accounts which fully comply with International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). In addition, the Company is also required by the Utility Regulator to prepare audited Regulatory Accounts in accordance with Regulatory Accounting Guidelines.

NI Water's accounts are not required to be consolidated into the Departmental accounts as the Company does not come within the Departmental Accounting Boundary which would require NI Water to comply with the Government Financial Reporting Manual (FReM). However NI Water does follow accounting guidelines and disclosures as issued by DFP and incorporates same into its statutory accounts as applicable.

The Management Statement/Financial Memorandum between my Department and NI Water, which is approved by the Department for Finance and Personnel (DFP), sets out the reporting requirements.

The adoption of FReM by NI Water was reviewed as part of the Department's considerations of the proposed Review of Financial Processes – Clear Line of Sight recommendations, which have not yet been approved by the Executive. In light of the potential budgetary and administrative impacts of NI Water adopting FReM, DFP and the then Finance Minister (Sammy Wilson) agreed that the designation of NI Water within the accounting boundary will be considered in light of the Executive's Budget Review Group's ongoing work on NI Water governance and public expenditure issues. The application of FReM and impact on NI Water will be reviewed carefully in those circumstances.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to place a copy of a map in the library delineating the lands recently sold by NI Water adjacent to Ballysallagh Upper Reservoir and Cairn Wood and referred to in several recent answers to Assembly Questions.

(AQW 52990/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: NI Water has advised me that it has not recently sold any land adjacent to Ballysallagh Upper Reservoir and Cairn Wood.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the progress made on funding for the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling project, including by-passes for Dungiven and Drumahoe.

(AQW 52999/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme is well advanced in terms of development. It has been through Public Inquiry and the Inspector has produced a report embracing various recommendations, some relating to complex issues.

My officials have prepared a report addressing the recommendations arising from the Public Inquiry and are currently reviewing the extent of this scheme which can be built with the funding allocations in the December 2015 Budget Statement.

Once I have received these reports and considered them in full, I will make a decision on how the scheme should proceed.

The indicative allocations for the 2017/18 – 2020/21 period will allow my Department to construct elements of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme, which will include a bypass of Dungiven.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development how many meetings have been held with the other agencies under the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005.

(AQW 53001/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has participated in at least ten meetings with other agencies in relation to the Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas 2005, since its introduction.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what support her Department will provide to improve residents' parking in the Priors Lea area of Holywood.

(AQW 53053/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My officials have advised that there have been numerous requests and site meetings with public officials and the residents of Prior's Lea over the past number of years, regarding requests for additional parking and a new access road on a grassed area adjacent to Priors Lea.

There is an agreed policy between my Department and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which covers the provision of additional car parking facilities in former Housing Executive estates such as Priors Lea. Under this policy, TransportNI does not provide additional parking or access roads for amenity reasons.

Whilst TransportNI in the past contributed towards the cost of improved parking facilities within some housing estates, such contributions have been restricted to routes, where there is a significant traffic progression difficulty to through traffic. Where this is not the case, the provision of additional parking facilities is considered to be the responsibility of the landowner.

Numerous site inspections have been carried out, and parking facilities are already available adjacent to Prior's Lea on Firmount Crescent and Palace Grove. Observations indicate that traffic progression is not a significant problem on the estate roads adjacent to Priors Lea and that the area has a good safety record.

Under these circumstances, I am sorry to advise that my Department is unable to accede to your request for provision of additional parking facilities to improve residents' parking in the Priors Lea area of Holywood.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development how many potholes her Department were aware of as of January 2016; and how many potholes have been filled in each month of the last three years.

(AQW 53068/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: TransportNI does not maintain statistics solely in relation to potholes either recorded or repaired.

That said, the number of carriageway surface defects recorded between January 2015 and January 2016 is 108,529. The number of surface defects repaired each month over the last three years is provided in the table below. These figures, while including the number of potholes, also includes a range of other surface defects such as cracking, depressions etc.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans she has authorised to replace street lights with LED lights in areas other than the Portadown pilot scheme; and to detail the extent and cost of replacing these lights.
(AQW 53074/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department recognises the opportunities offered by LED street lighting and they have been used for all new and replacement street lighting schemes across Northern Ireland designed since 2015.

The programme of replacing existing lighting with LED lighting is very much dependent on the allocation of capital funding.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) extent of the failures with LED street lighting at Portadown during the pilot scheme; (ii) costs of LED street lighting failures in the pilot scheme; and (iii) whether the failures of LED street lighting in the pilot scheme will lead to the non-introduction of LED street lighting.
(AQW 53076/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has advised me that around 8,000 street lights have been converted to LEDs, and that to date there has been four failures of the LED street lights.

Where a LED street light has failed it will be replaced at no cost to the Department. There are no plans to halt the introduction of LED street lighting across Northern Ireland.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been spent on roads maintenance in each constituency in the last three years.
(AQW 53077/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department does not maintain records of expenditure in the format requested, however, it does analyse expenditure by District Council; the table below gives you the information in this format –

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development when the work on the Dungiven bypass will start; and when it will be completed.

(AQW 53172/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme, which includes a bypass of Dungiven, is well advanced in terms of development. It has been through a Public Inquiry and the Inspector has produced a report embracing various recommendations.

My officials have prepared a report addressing the recommendations arising from the Public Inquiry and are currently reviewing the extent of this scheme which can be built with the funding allocation in the December 2015 Budget Statement.

Once I have received these reports and considered them in full, I will make a decision on how the scheme should proceed.

The indicative allocations for the 2017/18 – 2020/21 period will allow my Department to construct elements of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven scheme, which will include a bypass of Dungiven. Subject to making the statutory orders, approval of the final business case and successful procurement, it is possible that the first phase of the Londonderry – Dungiven scheme could commence in the latter part of 2018/19.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development when the upgrade of the A6 will be completed.

(AQW 53173/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: There are currently proposals to construct a dual carriageway on two sections of the A6, these being from the end of the M22 at Randalstown to Castledawson and from Londonderry to Dungiven.

I had previously announced that funding had been provided to advance the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson dual carriageway project to an advanced position, so it would be ready to commence construction at short notice, should the necessary funding become available. In May 2015 as part of this process a Graham/Farrans Joint Venture was appointed to assist TransportNI and its Consultant advisors with the development work, which is currently ongoing.

I have recently announced that the allocations for the A6 set out in the December 2015 Budget Statement will enable construction of this scheme to commence in the next financial year. I look forward to work commencing on site in late Summer/Autumn 2016.

The construction period is presently under detailed consideration as part of the ongoing design development phase of the project; it is however anticipated the scheme will be substantially complete in 2019/20.

The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven scheme is well advanced in terms of development. It has been through Public Inquiry (2012) and the Inspector has produced a report embracing various recommendations, some relating to complex issues.

My officials have prepared a report addressing the recommendations arising from the Public Inquiry and are currently reviewing the extent of this scheme which can be built with the funding allocations in the December 2015 Budget Statement.

Subject to making the statutory orders, approval of the final business case and successful procurement it is possible that the first phase of the Londonderry – Dungiven scheme could commence in the latter part of 2018/19. The period required for construction of the first phase will be determined when the extent of this phase has been determined. The completion of remaining sections of this section of the A6 will be dependent on budget allocations beyond 2020/21.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development who is the lead agency under the 2005 Flags Protocol.
(AQW 53188/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Paragraph 3.3 of the 2005 Joint Protocol on the Display of Flags in Public Areas states: "Whichever agency is placed in the most effective position to consult, negotiate or resolve situations, will take the lead and will be supported by the other partners within their remit and specialism. Where the display is one that is causing community tension or is affecting the quality of life for a community, then the police will take the lead."

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 42194/11-15, for an update on wheelchair accessibility from Adelaide Street Railway Station to Windsor Park football ground.
(AQW 53189/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has advised that the project in relation to the redevelopment of Adelaide Halt is progressing towards the end of Feasibility Stage.

Translink met with Disability Action on 6 October 2015 who advised that they were happy with the preferred option - walkways and no stairs.

Translink intend to commence construction at Adelaide Halt in 2017 and complete the project in 2018. I will continue to take a close interest in this project which is important for improving access and integration with the pedestrian path to the National Stadium, due to open in Autumn 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 52772/11-16, to outline an intended timescale for the start of work in this scheme.
(AQW 53206/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As outlined in response to AQW 52772/11-16, my officials have prepared a report addressing the recommendations arising from the Public Inquiry and are currently reviewing the extent of this scheme which can be built with the funding allocations in the December 2015 Budget Statement.

The indicative allocations for the 2017/18 – 2020/21 period will allow my Department to construct elements of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven scheme, which includes a bypass of Dungiven. Subject to making the statutory orders, approval of the final business case and successful procurement, it is possible that the first phase of the Londonderry – Dungiven scheme could commence in the latter part of 2018/19.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the extensive recent flooding on the site of the Toome to Castledawson dualling scheme has been assessed in relation to (i) development on floodplains; (ii) obligations under European and domestic legislation to accurately assess the revision of wintering Whooper Swan habitat; and (iii) climate modelling predictions.
(AQW 53247/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen:

- (i) The proposed Toome to Castledawson dualling scheme has been subject to a flood risk assessment and assessed in relation to development on floodplains. The impact has been assessed as negligible as the encroachment of the road onto the edge of the floodplain is relatively minor in comparison to the vast area of the flood plain.
- (ii) I can confirm that the extent of flooding in recent winters has been mapped and assessed in relation to available Whooper Swan grazing habitat and how it affects the count and distribution of the swans. This year's flooding has also been mapped and this mapping will continue as required. The mapping will be assessed following completion of this winter's Whooper Swan monitoring.
- (iii) My Department has not undertaken any modelling works of the floodplain within the area of the existing Toome Bypass or the eastern area of the new Toome to Castledawson road footprint. As agreed with Rivers Agency, the minimal impact on the published floodplain, and the nature of the floodplain source meant that Transport NI was able to draw on the existing Rivers Agency modelling information as the source for the works undertaken. The vertical road alignment of the proposed works makes appropriate allowances for the effects of climate change.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development when a Habitats Regulation Assessment was carried out by a competent authority on the A6 Toome to Castledawson dualling scheme under Article 6(3) of the Habitats Directive.
(AQW 53249/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: A Stage 2 Habitats Regulations Assessment (HRA) was carried out by my Department on the A6 dualling scheme, and published alongside the A6 Toome to Castledawson Environmental Statement in March 2007. Following the November 2007 Public Inquiry, the HRA was updated and subsequently re-published in July 2008 to take account of comments received from consultees.

In 2015, the July 2008 Stage 2 HRA was updated to include full analyses of the monitoring data from the previous nine winters.

A draft of the new document (a 'Statement to Inform the Appropriate Assessment' (SIAA)) was issued to consultees in 2015. My officials are currently considering the comments received from consultees and will be issuing a further updated version in due course.

I will use the content of the draft SIAA when considering making an Appropriate Assessment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development whether her Department has considered amending the Traffic Management (Northern Ireland) Order 2005, where Penalty Charge Notices are imposed on vehicle owners rather than the driver of the vehicle when the infringement took place.

(AQW 53272/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can confirm that my Department has no plans to amend the Traffic Management (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 where Penalty Charge Notices are imposed on vehicle owners rather than the driver of the vehicle when the infringement took place. My Department places the onus on the registered keeper of the vehicle to pay the fine due to difficulties associated with proving who the driver was at the time a contravention took place.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Regional Development for her assessment of the amount of funding given in the 2016-17 budget for the A5; and where the funding to complete the project will be sourced post 2016-17.

Miss M McIlveen: The £13.2 million in the Budget Statement for the A5 Western Transport Corridor was the level of funding, estimated in mid 2015, required to progress the development of the scheme through the financial year 2016/17. Since then, both the timescale for the scheme and the extent to be delivered over the four year budget period 2017/18 – 2020/21 have changed. Consequently the funding required in 2016/17 is now estimated at approximately £6 million.

Subject to the successful completion of statutory procedures, this profile would permit the Newbuildings to north of Strabane section to commence construction in 2017 with an estimated completion date of 2019.

It would also suggest that the South of Omagh to Ballygawley section of the A5 could commence in the latter part of the five-year budget period. Further work is required in conjunction with officials from DFP, to clarify this phase, which would require a commitment to a significant residual expenditure in the subsequent budget period.

In its Budget 2016/17 the Executive made allocations for a single year, however, the nature of some capital projects means it is important to provide certainty over a longer time span. The Executive therefore agreed a commitment to the seven Flagship projects, including the A5, with funding profiles agreed out to 2020-21. The Ministers responsible now have an opportunity to consider the detailed plans for these projects in the light of the Executive's decision and put forward any changes to expenditure profiles in future years so they can be considered by the Executive as part of its consideration of its Budget for 2017-18 to 2020-21.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development which streets in (i) Ballymena; and (ii) Ballycastle are being considered for new 20mph zones.

(AQW 53321/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The introduction of these new speed limit zones are part of my Department's commitment to the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy.

It is considered these schemes will improve safety for all users particularly pedestrians and cyclists without causing any undue inconvenience for car drivers.

The pilots have already been introduced in Ballycastle, in the residential areas of Leyland Farm and Whitehall and in Ballymena's The Rosses area. The 20 mph speed limits are signed clearly and in accordance with national standards.

Along with the other pilot areas these will be closely monitored to evaluate their effectiveness.

Depending on the outcome of the review, consideration will then be given to the further implementation of this traffic management measure in other appropriate areas.

I trust you will find the above helpful.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of (i) claims being assessed against her Department for damage caused to cars by potholes; and (ii) cases settled against her Department, in each of the last three years, broken down by division.

(AQW 53332/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department thoroughly investigates every claim for compensation that it receives to establish whether or not it has a defence to the allegations. Claims received by my Department in a financial year are not always concluded in the same financial year. This is because, inter alia, claims which are rejected may result in legal proceedings being issued.

- (i) Table 1 below details the number of claims received, where the alleged cause of the vehicle damage was potholes, for each of the four TransportNI divisions during the last three financial years.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the daily traffic rate through Moneymore.
(AQW 53364/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Results from TransportNI traffic counts carried out during 2015 on the three main roads leading into Moneymore indicate average traffic flows are as follows:

- A29 Cookstown Road: 15303 vehicles per day
- A29 Desertmartin Road: 4242 vehicles per day
- A31 Magherafelt Road: 11525 vehicles per day

These figures represent total traffic volumes in both directions.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place for the provision of free travel for partially sighted people and for companions of passengers who are blind and partially sighted.
(AQW 53433/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Under the existing Scheme, people with a Registered Blind SmartPass can travel for free on public transport. Additionally half-fare concessionary travel is available to individuals who are registered as partially sighted with their local Health and Social Services Trust, are aged between 16 and 59, and have been resident in Northern Ireland for a minimum of three months.

Consideration was given to the introduction of free travel for carers during a previous review of the Concessionary Fares Scheme in 2007. However, that option, along with a number of other proposals, was rejected by the Executive in favour of extending free travel to persons aged 60 to 64.

In addition to the Concessionary Fares Scheme, I am advised that direct payments can be made by local Health and Social Services Trusts to help with the costs of services that carers are assessed as needing to support them in their caring role. These could include public transport fares where a carer needs to accompany the person cared for on journeys. Information on direct payments is available on the NIdirect website or from local Health and Social Services Trusts.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development why the 12 new buses for the 212 route are not fitted with audio announcement systems; and whether the systems can be retrofitted.
(AQW 53437/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: An initial pilot of audio-visual information on Metro services was run on one route. Following the success of this pilot a phased roll-out of the system to the wider Metro network was commenced in 2015, with all corridors being completed by 31 December 2015.

The existence of the real time information system provided the necessary technical facility on which to base the audio-visual system on Metro.

There is not currently a similar real time information system on the Ulsterbus network to enable a similar audio-visual system to operate.

If funding became available and such a scheme were feasible, retro-fitting to all or part of the fleet will be considered.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development what action her Department, the Irish Government, Translink and Irish Rail are taking to address the track capacity available to the Belfast to Dublin Enterprise Train, particularly in suburban Dublin. (AQW 53504/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink are liaising closely with Irish Rail to ensure Enterprise services achieve the best possible journey times and most attractive operating times.

When Translink raised this matter with my Department I raised some concerns with the Irish Transport Minister on 7 December 2015 at an event organised to mark the completion of the Drogheda Viaduct project. We both agreed that Irish Rail and Translink should have urgent discussions with a view to reaching a satisfactory conclusion.

As reported to the Committee for Regional Development discussions are currently on-going between Translink and Irish Rail to agree a new Enterprise timetable currently to be introduced in April 2016.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the absence of planning permission for the proposed exploratory drilling at Woodburn Forest, Carrickfergus on land within the catchment area of NI Water's Woodburn Dams, (i) whether a Certificate of Lawful Use or Development has been provided by Infrastrata, subsequent to its Petroleum Licence PL1/10; if so, (ii) when the certificate was provided; and (iii) to provide a copy of the certificate. (AQW 53537/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Any request for a Certificate of Lawful Use or Development by Infrastrata is not the responsibility of my Department.

Planning functions transferred to Local Government with effect from 1 April 2015 and therefore the issue of planning permission for the proposed exploratory drilling at Woodburn Forest is the responsibility of the local council planning department which in this case is Mid and East Antrim Council.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline how community transport will be supported in the Accessible Transport Strategy. (AQO 9514/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I recognise that for many within our rural communities, community transport is an essential part of the transport chain allowing people to access essential services and remain independent. The work being undertaken by the community transport sector is important and positively impacts on the well being of some of the most vulnerable and isolated in society.

That is why I sought and secured additional funding of £600,000 in the November Monitoring Round for these services to facilitate more trips for those who use community transport services. I have also worked closely with others within Government to deliver £800,000 of grant to assist with lease buy outs for vehicles thereby reducing ongoing running costs.

There were over 200 responses to the public consultation on a new Accessible Transport Strategy. Community transport services and how they provide an affordable travel option especially within rural areas was raised by a number of individuals and organisations who responded to the public consultation. This is consistent with feedback from pre consultation engagement on a new Accessible Transport Strategy which identified community transport as important and necessary in preventing social exclusion and isolation in rural areas.

The responses to the recent public consultation on a new Accessible Transport Strategy are presently being considered and will be used to inform what areas the Strategy needs to address and how it will be delivered.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline what her Department is doing in relation to speed management in residential areas. (AQO 9515/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department's speed management policy ensures that all residential areas are subject to a default speed limit of 30 mph, which is enforceable by the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI).

Physical traffic calming measures such as road humps, central islands and additional road markings are most effective in reducing vehicle speeds in residential areas. These measures have the self enforcing effect of reducing traffic to 20 mph or less. Where appropriate, these schemes are augmented with 20 mph signs and road markings.

Almost 500 traffic calming schemes have been implemented in residential areas across Northern Ireland representing an investment of nearly £22 million over the ten year period 2003 to 2013 and since then a further 51 projects have been implemented. These schemes have greatly improved pedestrian safety. In addition, more recent residential developments have traffic calming measures incorporated into their road layouts.

My Department also takes the safety of children on their journeys to and from schools very seriously and has implemented a significant number of safety schemes, many through the Safer Routes to Schools programme which was introduced in 2005. These schemes use engineering measures to warn drivers of the presence of pupils and reduce vehicle speeds.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the progress of a Residents' Parking Scheme for the Lower Malone area of Belfast.

(AQO 9516/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The member will be aware of the latest position on the progress of this parking scheme following our recent meeting when we discussed this issue at length.

As you are aware my officials carried out a formal consultation on the implementation of a Residents' Parking Scheme in the Lower Malone area between 29 October 2014 and 19 November 2014. During this time they received a significant number of objections and representations on the two proposals.

Officials subsequently met with some of the objectors throughout March 2015, after which a number of objections were removed. However, there remain a significant number of outstanding objections, and as you are aware, my officials cannot complete the remaining part of the legislative process for this scheme before the issues raised have been fully considered and dealt with.

I recently met with you and some of your constituents from the Lower Malone Area and I am aware of your concerns. You will be aware that officials have experienced significant difficulties over the years while trying to implement residents parking schemes in this and other areas of Belfast.

I recently met with officials to discuss the progress of these and other proposed residents' parking schemes in Northern Ireland and I now wish to take some time to consider my Department's policy and the difficulties with its implementation.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development whether funding has been identified and set aside for the A1 junctions upgrade, specifically for the installation of safety junctions between Hillsborough and Loughbrickland.

(AQO 9517/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A1 Junctions Phase 2 improvement scheme involves further improvements to the A1 between Hillsborough Roundabout and Loughbrickland. Plans include: four flyover-type junctions, a northbound on-slip at Castlewellan Road, Banbridge and a new link road between the Milebush Road and the existing Dromore Underpass; closing up all openings in the central median; installing a continuous central safety barrier; and closing some minor road junctions along this stretch of the route.

A significant amount of development work has already been progressed however, much remains to be done. The next phase of this work involves the completion of the design and preparing an Environmental Statement in preparation for taking the proposal through the statutory procedures, which will likely include a Public Inquiry.

It would therefore not yet be appropriate for funding of the construction phase to be confirmed, however, funding is available to continue to progress this development work.

Progression to construction remains subject to the proposal clearing the statutory procedures, having a satisfactory economic appraisal and, given other competing priorities, is dependent on funding being made available in future budget settlements.

A strategy to implement incremental improvements that can be progressed in advance of the full proposal is also being developed.

The proposed incremental improvements will involve erecting sections of central median safety barrier along unbroken stretches of central median i.e. where there are no crossing opportunities and also, where possible, closing up existing median gaps which facilitate right turn manoeuvres where the resultant additional journey length is not considered unreasonable.

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the York Street Interchange project.

(AQO 9518/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: A public inquiry into the York Street Interchange Project was held in November 2015 and my Department has recently received the Inspector's Report. My officials are currently addressing the Inspector's recommendations and will prepare a report for my consideration, subsequent to which I will make a decision on how the scheme should proceed.

I expect to publish the Inspector's Report and the Departmental Statement in the spring 2016. Subject to a satisfactory outcome, the Notice to Proceed and the Designation Order will also be published. It is not envisaged that the Vesting Order would be made at this time. .

In order to maximise the potential benefits of any EU funding, officials have commenced the procurement process and intend to have a construction partner on board this summer to help fully develop the scheme with a view to beginning construction toward the end of 2017. This programme dovetails with the requirements for EU funding.

Development and construction of the scheme to the programme I have outlined is dependent on availability of finance; and a full economic business case will have to be approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) before the start of construction.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the steps her Department is taking to implement a fit-for-purpose flood alleviation scheme in Annsborough, Co Down.

(AQO 9519/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My officials attended a meeting at the site of flooding at Annsborough Park in Castlewellaan along with officials from Rivers Agency and NI Water, on Wednesday 13 January. At this meeting it was agreed that TransportNI would investigate providing an additional footpath gully, and connecting it to an alternative discharge points. It is the opinion of TransportNI officials that the provision of this additional footpath gully will significantly reduce the possibility of future flooding occurring.

NI Water has advised that extreme weather was the key factor in the recent flooding in this area. NI Water's systems were overwhelmed by the flood waters emanating from the adjacent lands, roads, river and lake.

NI Water's contractor responded on 13 occasions to calls from residents in Annsborough Park over the course of the heavy rainfall events between 29 December 2015 and 8 January 2016. The emergency response included jetting, cleaning-up and tankering flood water away to assist residents, Rivers Agency and the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service.

NI Water has been proactive in taking action to solve the historic flooding at Annsborough Park. A NI Water contract worth £130K to improve and upgrade the Wastewater Pumping Station capacity, is currently on the ground. Mitigation works were also carried out last year, including a sewer diversion at Nos. 6 and 7 Annsborough Park, which has been beneficial to the residents.

NI Water's Asset Performance Team is also planning to examine the exiting sewer network to ensure it is performing as designed.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development why it will take four months for water mains replacement work on North Road, Carrickfergus, to be completed.

(AQO 9520/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The proposed water mains replacement scheme at North Road, Carrickfergus is part of Northern Ireland Water's £10.9 million package of work across Belfast and Carrickfergus to upgrade the water supply infrastructure.

NI Water is replacing an aging 12" cast iron trunk water main which was installed in 1950. This existing cast iron main is reaching the end of its usable life and, if not replaced, may result in future water quality issues and unplanned interruptions to supply.

This is a substantial scheme, costing £302k, and involves the laying of 1km of new water mains from the junction of Prince Andrew Way to the Marshallstown Road. The current proposed start date is May 2016, with the scheme being completed during the summer months when traffic levels are reduced due to the local schools being closed.

Although it has been estimated that the scheme will take a maximum duration of four months, this is dependent on agreed traffic management and working restrictions to be implemented during the scheme. NI Water is currently liaising with TransportNI regarding the traffic management proposals and, when confirmed, NI Water will be able to provide a more accurate timescale for the scheme.

This major water mains investment for Carrickfergus is good news for the local area, as the upgraded water mains will improve the quality, reliability and security of the local water supply, while also reducing leakage and improving pressure in the area.

Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Regional Development when a bypass will be introduced at Dungiven.

(AQO 9521/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme, which includes a bypass of Dungiven, is well advanced in terms of development. It has been through Public Inquiry and the Inspector has produced a report embracing various recommendations.

My officials have prepared a report addressing the recommendations arising from the Public Inquiry and are currently reviewing the extent of this scheme which can be built with the funding allocation in the December 2015 Budget Statement.

Once I have received these reports and considered them in full, I will make a decision on how the scheme should proceed.

The indicative allocations for the 2017/18 – 2020/21 period will allow my Department to construct elements of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven scheme, which includes a bypass of Dungiven. Subject to making the statutory orders, approval of the final business case and successful procurement it is possible that the first phase of the Londonderry – Dungiven scheme could commence in the latter part of 2018/19.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are any plans for a major upgrade of the road between Castlewellan and Newry.

(AQO 9522/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Newry and Castlewellan are linked primarily by the A25, however much of the local traffic also uses the B8, via Hilltown.

While there are no plans for a major upgrade to either route, my officials have assessed a number of locations along both routes with a view to including viable projects in future work programmes subject to the availability of resources.

Schemes approved for inclusion in future programmes include:

- Improvements to forward visibility and widening of the existing carriageway on the A25 Newry Road, on the outskirts of Rathfriland at an estimated cost of £85k; and
- Carriageway realignment and forward visibility improvement on the B8, at the crossroads with Ballydoo Road and Edentrumley Road at an estimated cost of £425k.

Both schemes aim to improve road safety and traffic progression and are in addition to the recently completed improvement schemes, one at a location known locally as "Murphy's Corner" which involved carriageway realignment at an estimated cost of £125k and significant improvement works at a section of road known as the "Seven Sisters" which included road widening and resurfacing which cost in the region of £250k. Other smaller scale traffic management works have also been completed in recent times at both Hilltown and Mayobridge including the provision of footway, resurfacing and traffic signs to assist pedestrians and traffic flows.

My Officials will continue to identify improvement works along these routes and bring them forward as resources allow.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the arrangements and protocols in place for cutting grass when it is cut by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 52948/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive has advised that their Grounds Maintenance contract is not frequency based but performance based, and all grass must be at the formal specification as detailed below at all times.

Between the months of April and October, the height of the grass must be maintained within the range of 25 to 65mm high.

Between the months of November and March, the height of the grass must be maintained within the range of 65 and 100mm high.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development whether the Small Pockets of Deprivation programme for Rathgill Estate in Bangor will continue in 2016-17.

(AQW 53023/11-16)

Lord Morrow: As the 2016/17 Departmental budget is still being finalised, it is not possible yet to confirm those programmes that will receive funding next year. Once my Department's budget has been determined, I will write again to advise whether the Small Pockets of Deprivation programme will continue to receive funding.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development whether the Areas at Risk programme for Beechfield Estate in Donaghadee will continue in 2016-17.

(AQW 53024/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My officials have written to all organisations funded through the Areas at Risk programme to advise of the current position and the significant financial pressures facing the Executive. Given that the Executive has only recently agreed the final budget for 2016/17, I now need to consider the impact the settlement will have across the remit of my Department, which will limit the amount of funding that will be available through the programmes that my Department currently delivers.

I cannot therefore at this stage give any commitment that any programme currently funded including the Areas at Risk programme, will continue from 1 April 2016. I realise the difficulties that arise as a consequence of such uncertainty and I have therefore asked that my officials keep organisations informed over the coming weeks.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development whether he provided the Charity Commission with sufficient resources to meet the performance targets set by his Department.

(AQW 53029/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I have provided the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland with sufficient resources to meet agreed performance targets.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail why Disability Living Allowance counts towards annual household income when making an application to the Affordable Warmth Scheme, while being in receipt of rates relief does not.

(AQW 53031/11-16)

Lord Morrow: When calculating a householder's total income for the Affordable Warmth Scheme all household income is used to determine eligibility. This means that benefits such as DLA are included and treated as income.

If a householder is entitled to rates relief then a credit is made to Land and Property Services on their behalf against their rates account, there is no direct payment made to the householder. Therefore, we do not consider rates relief as part of household income for the purposes of the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

The income threshold for the Affordable Warmth Scheme is £20,000 and this was set following a public consultation exercise which took place between 17th February and 9th May 2014. As part of that consultation the income level was initially proposed as £16,190 (free school meals limit), however as a result of feedback it was raised to £20,000.

My Department will be carrying out a review of the Affordable Warmth Scheme after one full year of operation, which is due to commence over the coming months. Part of this review will be to examine the qualifying conditions for eligibility to the scheme and look at what is treated as income.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the development of a Delivering Social Change Signature Programme.

(AQW 53032/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Delivering Social Change Programme is an Executive/OFMdFM-led initiative. My Department has been jointly responsible for the implementation and evaluation of two of the Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, namely the Social Enterprise Hubs and the Nurture Units, the latter of which is now being led by the Department for Education.

Whilst the final evaluations of the Social Enterprise Hubs and Nurture Units Signature Programmes are not yet available, early outcomes from each have been very positive. Moreover, it is already evident that each programme has reached a significant number of people, including over 300 primary school children who have been supported by Nurture Units, and 101 test trader/start-up businesses benefitting from the services of the Social Enterprise Hubs.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail his Department's current legal position on charitable poker events.

(AQW 53033/11-16)

Lord Morrow: Charitable poker events are permitted provided the conditions set out in Article 126 of the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 are met.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, given the view expressed by the Comptroller and Auditor General in June 2015 that it would be difficult for the Social Security Agency to reduce fraud and error further, to detail the basis on which it is anticipated that the £25m allocated for combating fraud and error will yield positive results; and what contingencies are in place if the estimated savings are not achieved.

Lord Morrow: While the Department has been particularly successful in tackling and reducing benefit fraud and error, nonetheless just 1.5% loss at present represents over £82m of public funds. The initiative, set out in the Fresh Start document, is focused on both sustaining the current low levels of fraud and error, as well as further enhancing the department's capability to detect, correct and prevent loss to the public purse.

As the 'Fresh Start' document makes clear, the £25 million annual investment in fraud and error is based on the proposal from my department being verified by the Office of Budget Responsibility that it accords with the processes used for similar forecasting in the Department for Work and Pensions. The Department along with the Department of Finance and Personnel will be engaging with the Office of Budget Responsibility on these matters in the coming weeks.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the financial support available from his Department for community and voluntary groups that meet the needs of older people.

(AQW 53048/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department does not deliver specific programmes targeted at meeting the needs of older people. However financial support, to community and voluntary groups, which includes support that meet the needs of older people, is available through programmes such as Neighbourhood Renewal and the Volunteering Small Grants Programme. Examples of projects that have received such support include:

- Good Morning North West;
- Age Concern in Londonderry;
- Triax Neighbourhood Partnership – Older People's Programme for the Fountain Estate in Londonderry;
- Western Health & Social Care Trust - Omagh Health and Wellbeing Project;
- Western Health & Social Care Trust - Enniskillen Health and Wellbeing Project;
- Support Communities - Campsie Community Hub;
- Devenish Partnership Forum - Devenish Community Support & Further Development Phase II;
- Fermanagh & Omagh District Council - West End Temporary Venue;
- Coalisland and Dungannon NR Health and Social Wellbeing Programme;
- Milltown Super Adults Programme of Activities;
- Coalisland Training Services - Community Education Programme;

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development whether the Neighbourhood Renewal programme for Kilcooley Estate in Bangor will continue in the 2016-17 financial year.

(AQW 53055/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Officials have written to all organisations funded through the Neighbourhood Renewal programme to advise of the current position and the significant financial pressures facing the Executive. Given that the Executive has only recently agreed the final budget for 2016/17, I now need to consider the impact the settlement will have across the remit of my Department, which will limit the amount of funding that will be available through the programmes that my Department currently delivers.

I cannot therefore at this stage give any commitment that any programme currently funded including the Neighbourhood Renewal programme, will continue from 1 April 2016. I realise the difficulties that arise as a consequence of such uncertainty and I have therefore asked that my Officials keep organisations informed over the coming weeks.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of refugees and asylum seekers that have been (i) housed in Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties, and (ii) in receipt of housing benefits in each of the last three years

(AQW 53175/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive has advised that while information is recorded for monitoring purposes in areas such as religion, ethnic background and marital status, the Housing Executive currently keeps no separate records for allocations to refugees.

Measures are currently being put in place to monitor any future allocations arising from applicants located in Northern Ireland as part of the Syrian Vulnerable Persons Relocation Scheme, run by the UK Home Office. No social housing allocations have been made to refugees arriving in Northern Ireland under this scheme to date.

The Housing Executive has further advised that asylum seekers are not eligible to receive an allocation of housing accommodation. This results from Article 22 A of the Housing (N.I.) Order 1981 which stipulates that the Housing Executive shall not allocate housing accommodation to a person from abroad, if he/she is a person subject to immigration control who is ineligible for an allocation of housing accommodation by virtue of the terms of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. In effect, this means that asylum seekers are not entitled to social housing.

In relation to part (ii) of your question the information is not available because the Housing Executive has confirmed that they do not hold any separate records that would identify Housing Benefit claims from asylum seekers or refugees.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people (i) on social housing waiting lists; and (ii) in housing stress in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53220/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The table below, provided by the Housing Executive, details:-

- (i) the number of people on the social housing waiting list in each of the last five years; and
- (ii) those in housing stress over the same period.

	March 2011	March 2012	March 2013	March 2014	March 2015
Waiting List	39,891	34,533	41,356	39,967	39,338
Housing Stress	20,966	20,211	22,414	21,586	22,097

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Social Development what plans he has to involve charities with specialist knowledge of health conditions, such as Parkinson's UK and the MS Society, in the provision of extra advice on welfare reform mitigation.

(AQW 53251/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The transition to the new benefits that will be introduced as part of the welfare reforms will undoubtedly introduce new challenges for benefit claimants. I am therefore committed to supporting the provision of independent advice services to assist claimants through these changes.

My officials are currently reviewing the recommendations of the Welfare Reform Mitigations Working Group on the provision of independent advice for people affected by the welfare reforms. In developing the new services the department intends to consult with a range of charities and the independent advice sector. It is expected that this work will be taken forward once the budget for the provision of additional services from the advice sector has been finalised.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development in respect of the Tenancy Deposit scheme, whether the courts have the power to (i) order a landlord to repay a non-protected deposit; and (ii) order a landlord to protect a deposit where they have not done so; and whether he will review these aspects of the Tenancy Deposit Schemes Regulations as part of his ongoing Review of the Private Rented Sector.

Lord Morrow: There is no requirement in the Tenancy Deposit Schemes legislation for a court to order a landlord to repay a non protected deposit or to protect the deposit where they have not done so. It was the Department's intention to include such provisions when the 2011 Housing Amendment Act was being drafted but due to Court Office concerns on the impact of such provisions and the time required to resolve, the clause was dropped.

However, the Department has commenced an evaluation of the Tenancy Deposit Scheme including the legislation and these requirements will be considered again.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has plans to release funding for a social housing renovation scheme in the Springhill Park area of Strabane.

(AQW 53285/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The NIHE has advised that Springhill Park is included in a scheme for window replacement with a current programmed start date of March 2017. The scheme start date will be subject to ongoing budget review, design and approval process.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) Disability Living Allowance claimants, (ii) people that have lost their entitlement to Disability Living Allowance; and (iii) new claims that have been rejected in West Tyrone, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53287/11-16)

Lord Morrow:

(i) As at August 2015 there were 14,100 people entitled to Disability Living Allowance in West Tyrone

The information requested for parts (ii) and (iii) is not available for West Tyrone as the Department for Work and Pensions IT system used by the Social Security Agency to administer Disability Living Allowance does not disaggregate this type of data by geographic areas.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost to the Department of each medical examination and back to work interview carried out in relation to Employment and Support Allowance in the last three years.

(AQW 53298/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I am unable to provide the specific information that relates to the costs for conducting each medical examination as the charging regime within the Medical Support Services Agreement is designated as commercially sensitive information, in accordance with Schedule 30 of the Agreement. It is important that the Department can secure the best value for money in its contracts which means the Department is unable to release commercially sensitive information as it could prejudice the interests of the Department's current healthcare provider and the Department's future dealings with them or other service providers.

My Department does not hold data on 'Back to Work Interviews'. These interviews are conducted by advisers within Department for Employment & Learning (DEL). Any data gathered as part of these interviews will be held by the Minister for Employment and Learning.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (a) medical examinations; and (b) back to work interviews that have been carried out in relation to the Employment and Support Allowance in Mid Ulster in the last twelve months.

(AQW 53299/11-16)

Lord Morrow:

(a) The number of medical examinations carried out in relation to Employment and Support Allowance in Mid Ulster for the period January 2015 to December 2015 is 5,296. This consists of 2,125 face to face medical examinations and 3,171 paper based assessments. A paper based assessment is where the Health Care Professional is able to provide advice to the Department based on the information provided by the claimant and his or her GP without the need for a face to face assessment.

(b) My Department does not hold data on 'Back to Work Interviews'. These interviews are conducted by advisers within Department for Employment & Learning (DEL). Any data gathered as part of these interviews will be held by the Minister for Employment and Learning.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of full time equivalent agency staff employed by (i) his Department; and (ii) each of its arm's-length bodies in each week since June 2015, broken down by grade.

(AQW 53301/11-16)

Lord Morrow: Tables 1 – 2 below outline the number of full time equivalent agency staff in post within the Department for Social Development and the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland each week since June 2015, broken down by grade.

Table 3 below outlines the number of agency staff in post by headcount within the Northern Ireland Housing Executive each week since June 2015, broken down by grade. Full time equivalent information is not held.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the costs of the Evason proposals on welfare (i) in the first twelve months; and (ii) over four years.

(AQW 53340/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Working Group led by Professor Evason published its Welfare Reform Mitigations Working Group Report on 19 January 2016. This Report, which was approved by the Executive on 21 January 2016, includes a detailed breakdown of all mitigation costs at Appendix 8. The proposals have been costed as follows -

- (i) Costs for the first twelve months
- All Welfare Mitigations: £64 million
- Additional Advice Services: £2 million
- (ii) Total costs over the 4 year period
- All Welfare Mitigations: £501 million
- Additional Advice Services: £8 million

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on how the Discretionary Housing Payment will operate to mitigate the Social Sector Size Criteria known as the bedroom tax.

(AQW 53343/11-16)

Lord Morrow: As agreed in 'A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan' the Social Sector Size Criteria will not apply in Northern Ireland. The Agreement provided for a Working Group, led by Professor Eileen Evason to make recommendations on how best to mitigate the impact of welfare reform. Following receipt of the Evason Report, officials are developing options on how not applying the Social Sector Size Criteria would work in practice. This work is expected to be completed in the next number of weeks.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development how long the Discretionary Housing Payment to mitigate against the Social Sector Size Criteria will operate.

(AQW 53346/11-16)

Lord Morrow: 'A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan' confirmed that the Social Sector Size Criteria would not apply in Northern Ireland. The Executive agreed a four year fund to 'top-up' UK welfare arrangements in Northern Ireland with a review in 2018-19. This included funding to mitigate the costs of not implementing the Social Sector Size Criteria in Northern Ireland.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (a) social; and (b) private houses built in West Belfast since 2011.

(AQW 53362/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I am unable to provide you with the details regarding private houses built in West Belfast since 2011 but I can confirm that 952 social houses were built since 2011 in the West Belfast Parliamentary constituency.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will review the liquor licencing legislation as it applies to the Easter period.

(AQW 53375/11-16)

Lord Morrow: In November 2012 the then Minister for Social Development consulted on a number of proposed changes to current liquor licensing law, which sought to strike a balance between controlling the sale of alcoholic drinks and supporting the local hospitality sector.

The Northern Ireland Executive agreed to the drafting of a Bill which would include minor changes to opening hours on the Thursday and Saturday before Easter.

Unfortunately, due to competing priorities, I will not have time to progress a Bill in the current mandate.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration he has given to supplying food bank vouchers through social security offices.

(AQW 53450/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department has been active in working with food banks and seeking to understand how many people use food banks and the reasons for their use. Research was commissioned and the report, An Insight into Food Banks in Northern Ireland, is available on the DSD internet website.

Whilst I recognise the valuable work and commitment of the volunteers including many faith based groups who organise food banks, I do not believe that food banks have a formal role in the social welfare system in Northern Ireland. There is no strong evidence to suggest that the use of food banks in Northern Ireland is directly linked to welfare or benefit processing times and if people are in emergency need of money to buy food then the benefit systems are there to provide that financial support.

Officials in my Department continue to engage with a wide range of food bank representatives to better understand their issues and to explore how public services from my Department and those of other Departments can be delivered in a way that helps reduce the need for food banks in our society.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of healthcare professionals employed to carry out Employment and Support Allowance medicals; (ii) what qualifications and experience health care professionals are required to have to be considered for employment; and (iii) the level of training given to assess the needs of people with complicated and challenging physical and mental disabling conditions.

(AQW 53454/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The medical assessments for Employment and Support Allowance are carried out by private sector supplier healthcare professionals.

- (i) The current number of health care professionals carrying out Employment and Support Allowance medicals is 66.
- (ii) The qualifications required are set out in the Medical Support Services Agreement which defines a healthcare professional as:
 - (a) a registered medical practitioner;
 - (b) a registered nurse;
 - (c) an occupational therapist or physiotherapist registered with a regulatory body established by an Order in Council under section 60 of Health Care Act 1999; or
 - (d) a member of such other profession regulated by a body mentioned in section 25(3) of the National Health Service Reform and Health Care Professions Act 2002 as the Secretary of State may prescribe.

This includes the following required qualifications:

- (a) in the case of a Medical Practitioner:
 - current registration to practice in the UK;
 - 3 years post-registration full-time equivalent experience across a range of relevant clinical disciplines (within the last 6 years prior to an advertisement for positions being placed); and
 - full and unconditional registration with the UK General Medical Council (GMC).
- (b) in the case of a nurse:
 - fully registered, without restrictions or conditions, with the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC); and
 - have a minimum of 3 years post registration experience.
- (c) all other healthcare professionals:
 - fully registered, without restrictions or conditions, with the relevant licensing body;
 - have a minimum of 3 years post registration experience;
 - possess good communication skills;
 - have an understanding of customer care issues; and
 - have an understanding of disability issues.
- (iii) All healthcare professionals undergo the required Work Capability Assessment Training which is tailored to their specific profession. The majority of claimants who are assessed for Employment and Support Allowance have multiple diagnoses of both physical and mental health pathologies, so as a result healthcare professionals are trained as Disability Analysts who complete functional assessments, which includes mental health and physical health training in the context of disability analysis. Health care professionals also receive Continuing Medical Education, which includes training on physical and mental health conditions yearly, based on any training needs identified.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Employment and Support Allowance claimants that were assessed under (a) part one of the questionnaire; (b) part two of the questionnaire; and (c) both part one and two of the questionnaire, since May 2011.

Lord Morrow: The requested information is not available as the Department does not record which parts of the questionnaire are used to make an assessment.

An ESA50 questionnaire is issued for all claimants at the beginning of each Work Capability Assessment to gather information about how their conditions affect their functional capability.

The ESA50 is made up of questions relating to Physical Capabilities (Part 1) and Mental, Cognitive and Intellectual Capabilities (Part 2). A trained Healthcare Professional will consider all of the information in the completed ESA50, and any other medical information provided in support of the claim, and make a clinical judgement on the claimant's capability for work.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how many Employment and Support Allowance claimants assessed as being fit to work in each year since May 2011 appealed the decision; and how many appeals were upheld because of reconsideration.

(AQW 53456/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The requested information is not available. The Department does not record information on the number of Employment and Support Allowance claimants assessed as being fit to work in each year since May 2011 that appealed the decision; or the number of appeals upheld because of reconsideration.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of claimants that have had an Employment and Support Allowance medical assessment since May 2011; and per year, how many were assessed as (a) being fit to work; (b) having limited capability for work; and (c) eligible for support.

(AQW 53457/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The table below details the number of people who have had an Employment and Support Allowance medical assessment since June 2011 and were assessed as (a) being fit to work; (b) having limited capability for work; and (c) eligible for support.

	Total Claimants Assessed	Being fit to Work	Having limited capability for work	Eligible for support

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (a) social; and (b) private houses built in North Down since 2011.

(AQW 53545/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I am unable to provide you with the number of private houses built in North Down since 2011. I can confirm that 205 social houses have been built in the North Down Parliamentary Constituency since 2011.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Social Development how many Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties have been allocated to refugees since July 2015.

(AQO 9535/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive has advised that while information is recorded for monitoring purposes in areas such as religion, ethnic background and marital status, the Housing Executive currently keeps no separate records for allocations to refugees.

Measures are currently being put in place to monitor any future allocations arising from applicants located in Northern Ireland as part of the Syrian Vulnerable Persons Relocation Scheme, run by the UK Home Office. No social housing allocations have been made to refugees arriving in Northern Ireland under this scheme to date.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 53447/11-16, to detail the purpose of the disturbance payment.

(AQW 53691/11-16)

Lord Morrow: As detailed in the Transfer Documentation for the Bloomfield Bungalows the purpose of the disturbance payment "is to compensate for loss or expenditure as a result of the disruption caused by the scheme."

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development, following the final report of the Housing Repossessions Taskforce, to outline the measures he plans to introduce to assist people who are at risk of losing their homes as a result of negative equity.

(AQO 9536/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department continues to work with a number of key stakeholders to implement the recommendations arising from the Housing Repossessions Taskforce report to assist those at risk of losing their homes as a result of mortgage difficulties.

Progress to date includes:

- Increasing funding for the Mortgage Debt Advice Service by 50 per cent to £340,000;
- The Department of Justice agreeing to fund the Housing Possession Court Duty Scheme until 2018;
- Working with a number of national and local mortgage lenders to trial possible improvements to customer engagement arising from an innovative report on applying behavioural insights to the process;
- Securing an interest rate rise calculator for the Housing Advice NI website;
- Completion of a feasibility study into a mortgage rescue scheme; and
- Engaging with the Council of Mortgage Lenders on the availability and visibility of mortgage products to better support their customers.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Evason Working Group.

(AQO 9529/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Working Group led by Professor Evason published its report on Monday 18th January 2016 and the report and its recommendations were endorsed at the Executive meeting on 21st January 2016. The report recommends a comprehensive package of measures to mitigate the most harmful impacts of the forthcoming changes to the welfare system and I have been asked by the First and Deputy First Minister to take forward the implementation of the recommendations. My officials have commenced work to ensure this happens over the next number of months and I am planning to bring an implementation plan to the Executive for agreement at its 10 February meeting. I would hope that significant progress can be made on implementing a number of the measures prior to the Assembly rising in mid March.

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the delivery of public realm schemes in South Down.

(AQO 9532/11-16)

Lord Morrow: A major £2 million regeneration scheme is currently being undertaken in Warrenpoint that will significantly improve the appearance of the town centre to create an even more welcoming space for visitors and locals alike.

The contractor has been appointed and on-site construction commenced on 5th January with the works expected to be completed by December 2016. Works will include the installation of new footways in natural stone paving, new street lighting and furniture, landscaping and associated works.

The scheme will upgrade the commercial core of the town centre to encourage greater public use and to stimulate investment.

This scheme will complement other major public realm improvement schemes undertaken by the Department in the South Down area. These include

- Downpatrick Town Centre Public Realm £2.6m
- Market Lane Downpatrick £82k
- Kilkeel Town Centre Public Realm £1.3
- Newcastle Town Centres Public Realm £3.6m

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the guidance his Department has issued in relation to the implementation of the Personal Independence Payment and the withdrawal of the Disability Living Allowance.

(AQO 9533/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My department has developed a comprehensive Engagement and Communication Strategy, which will be implemented as the changes to the welfare system are introduced in Northern Ireland. A public information campaign, which covers all of the changes, will run from May 2016 and will include programmes of stakeholder engagement, online advertising, mail drops, broadcast and outdoor billboards.

My department has specific communication and engagement plans for the introduction of Personal Independence Payment (PIP) in Northern Ireland. This involves a range of activities including further engagement sessions with customer representative groups and the advice sector where 14 meetings have already taken place since 2013; meetings with health professionals in Northern Ireland; publication of online content and printed literature specific to the introduction of PIP in Northern Ireland; direct mailing to target audiences including health professionals and (as part of the Welfare Changes) a leaflet for distribution to every household in Northern Ireland.

Since 2013, similar to the rest of Great Britain, some general information on PIP has been included in the annual benefit uprating notifications sent to all Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claimants in Northern Ireland.

The 2016 benefit uprating letter, which contains the general information on PIP, will be issued over an eight-week period, beginning from the end of January 2016.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development whether he plans to raise the issue of the density of Houses in Multiple Occupation in a specific area with the Minister of the Environment.

(AQO 9534/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My new Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) Bill will introduce compulsory licensing and will require landlords who wish to operate an HMO to have planning permission. The Bill does not have the scope to reduce overprovision in existing areas, which may have an already high number of HMOs, as this is likely to be in breach of human rights legislation.

Throughout the policy making process my officials have liaised with Department of Environment colleagues who have confirmed that the Planning (Use Classes) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015 includes HMOs as a sui generis use, which will ensure that under the Bill, councils will have the discretionary power to refuse to grant an HMO licence if it considers that there is, or that the granting of a licence would result in, overprovision in a locality.

Presently, I have no plans to raise any issues relating to HMOs with the Minister of the Environment.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Agnew asked the Assembly Commission what rules, protocols or contractual arrangements are in place for the use of social media by Assembly staff; and what is the sanction for a breach.

(AQW 53506/11-16)

Ms P Bradley (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission's Social Media Policy specifies appropriate use of social media by Assembly staff. The Social Media Policy forms part of the Staff Handbook. The requirement to abide by the provisions of the Social Media Policy is also specifically referenced in the Commission's Discipline Policy and Dignity at Work Policy. Staff are also expected to conduct themselves in a way which demonstrates the Commission's Corporate Values which are outlined below:

- Public Service - demonstrated by an attitude of service to the Assembly, its Members and visitors; behaving with impartiality and integrity at all times.
- Professionalism - demonstrated by commitment to excellence; appropriate confidentiality and discretion; personal responsibility and accountability.
- One Team - demonstrated by respect for others.

If it is determined, following investigation, that a breach of the Social Media Policy has occurred, a sanction can be imposed dependent on the seriousness of the breach. The sanctions which may be considered are set out in the Discipline Policy and include First Written Warning, Final Written Warning, Dismissal and Summary Dismissal.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the impact on community relations caused by the recent display commemorating republican terrorists in St Mary's University College, Belfast.
(AQW 49590/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): During the Féile an Phobail festival, which has been running for the past 20 years, there was a series of talks and debates, as well as exhibitions, on the St Mary's University College campus. Those taking part included the Chief Constable of the PSNI, the deputy First Minister, a high-ranking representative of the Orange Order, as well as former Republican and Loyalist prisoners.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that the November monitoring round has resulted in some easements relating to Together: Building a United Community projects, whether Together: Building a United Community schemes are proceeding.
(AQO 9136/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Together: Building a United Community represents a key building block of the Programme for Government. In recognition of this, £10 million revenue funding was made available in the 2015/16 Budget to aid implementation of the Strategy, supplementing other good relations funding provided by OFMDFM. In addition, £3.19million of capital funding was secured to enable departments to progress work on the headline actions.

Work is progressing well across all seven headline actions that were announced alongside the publication of Together: Building a United Community.

The first shared neighbourhood at Ballynafoy Close on the Ravenhill Road has been completed and houses allocated. An additional 5 schemes have commenced and a further scheme is planned for 2016.

The pilot phase for the United Youth Programme commenced in August 2015 and will run until March 2016. Thirteen pilots are being delivered, providing around 360 places for young people aged 16–24 who are not in employment, education or training.

101 Summer Camps were progressed between July and October. The Programme has been successful with approximately 4,200 young people taking part.

A 12 week pilot project for the Cross Community Youth Sports Programme was launched on 5 January 2015 in the Lower Falls and the Greater Village areas. A second phase of activities is continuing in 2015/16 to maximise the impact of the initiative.

Six proposals were submitted earlier this year under the second call for applications to the Shared Education Campuses programme, covering over 20 schools and these are currently being assessed.

Mr Dickson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline their Department's response to the finding in the Good Relations Indicators that 54 per cent of people see town centres as safe and welcoming for people of all walks of life.
(AQO 9137/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The Good Relations Indicators report was published on 22 September 2015. Future reports will highlight trends and changes and will allow the Executive to identify the necessary steps to aid positive progress.

One of the key priorities identified in Together: Building a United Community Strategy is Our Safe Community which aims to create a community where everyone feels safe in moving around and where life choices are not inhibited by fears around safety.

Building a truly united community can only be possible when people feel safe and secure in all neighbourhoods and spaces within our community.

Together: Building a United Community provides the framework for government action in tackling sectarianism, racism and other forms of intolerance while seeking to address division, hate and separation.

However, this is not just the responsibility of OFMDFM. The Strategy is an Executive Strategy which places responsibilities on all government departments

Mr Craig asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the total grant aid paid to each group through the Central Good Relations Funding Programme since it was launched on 8 January 2013.

(AQO 9138/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The information has been placed in the Assembly Library. This reflects the total grant paid to each group at 13 November 2015.

Mr Humphrey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the development of Crumlin Road Gaol.

(AQO 9139/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM has invested over £14 million on capital projects to protect, preserve, remediate and restore the Crumlin Road Gaol to facilitate its regeneration. Some of the projects include site improvements; the creation of a Visitor Attraction and Conference Centre; the external restoration of the Wardens' Cottages and the Sangar.

More than 397,000 people have visited the Gaol for a tour or attended an event since the Visitor Attraction and Conference Centre opened in November 2012. The facility currently employs forty one full time equivalents and six casual staff, 20 from North Belfast.

Belfast Distillery Company Ltd. commenced the construction of a boutique distillery and whiskey visitor attraction in A Wing in January 2015. This work has paused given unforeseen works required on site.

The Department meets the Company on a regular basis to support this important project. It is anticipated that construction will recommence in early 2016.

OFMDFM plan to market the opportunity to develop the former Wardens' Cottages and D Wing in 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the community benefit aspect that forms part of the set criteria outlined for the preferred proposal for the sale of the Shackleton site at Ballykelly.

(AQW 51586/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: We are keen to ensure that the community in Ballykelly and the surrounding area benefit from the development of the Shackleton site. For this reason, proposals to purchase the Site are being assessed on the extent to which their plans to develop the Site will deliver community benefits.

It would be inappropriate to comment on the specific community benefits proposed in any of the proposals until the assessment process has concluded.

Mr Easton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what is the criteria used in deciding which groups qualify for Good Relations funding.

(AQW 51626/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM provides funding via the Central Good Relations Fund and the North Belfast Strategic Good Relations Programme.

The aim of the North Belfast Strategic Good Relations Programme is to improve relations between and within communities in North Belfast.

Criteria required for groups to qualify for the North Belfast Good Relations funding includes how their projects contribute to the delivery of T:BUC; how clear are their programme plans in the context of improving community relations and achieving measurable good relations outcomes; do they deliver value for money; how clear is their evidence of need; and how they demonstrate a high level of collaboration with other cross community groups.

Funding criteria for the Central Good Relations Fund is set out in the guidance notes provided on the OFMDFM website with the application forms.

The funding criteria is as follows:

Essential Criteria - The extent to which the project contributes towards the delivery of one or more of the Together: Building a United Community priorities and associated outcomes that are most relevant to your proposed projects.

Additional Criteria - The extent to which the project targets particularly hard to reach groups; creates capacity in areas of the community where there has been limited engagement in peace building; delivers in an area of high community tension or interface; uses play, sport and leisure to deliver outcomes. Groups are also required to meet the eligibility criteria as outlined in the guidance notes.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why responsibility for the Social Investment Fund will not be transferred to the Department of Communities.

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Responsibility for the Social Investment Fund (SIF) will remain within The Executive Office as it is a time bound programme which is currently at an advanced stage and making good progress. It is also a key lever of Delivering Social Change which is remaining within The Executive Office.

An outcomes – based accountability approach to evaluation has been adopted from the beginning of SIF and is providing valuable data which will inform and shape both the Executive's Delivering Social Change agenda and the next PfG.

Mr McCausland asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the provision of a new community centre in the Westland estate as part of the capital programme in North Belfast under the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 9387/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: We have attended a number of formal launches recently and have seen firsthand that communities are starting to benefit from the Fund.

Belfast North allocated its £9 million on community based projects, supporting employment, social enterprise and capital works. Good progress has been made and most of the Zone's £9 million is committed.

Letters of Offer still have to issue for 2 projects and that for the Capital Cluster project, which includes the Westland Community Centre refurbishment, is currently being prepared.

Mrs McKevitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Childcare Strategy.

(AQO 9389/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The first phase of the Executive's Childcare Strategy was published in 2013. It included 15 Key First Actions intended to address priority childcare needs identified through research and consultation undertaken in 2012-13.

The current School Age Childcare Grant Scheme is the most ambitious of these Actions. It is creating new, low cost, quality school age childcare places and sustaining the places we already have. To date, the Grant Scheme has held two calls for applications and has committed approximately £3 million to projects which will sustain or create an estimated 2,200 low cost, quality childcare places, mostly in disadvantaged areas.

A third call for applications was launched on 26 November and closed on the 29 January 2016.

Other Key First Actions have enhanced childcare services for children with a disability and improved the information available to parents on the childcare services available locally.

Consultation on a draft version of the full Executive Childcare Strategy took place between 28 July and 13 November 2015. Departmental officials engaged with the public and with a wide range of childcare stakeholders during the consultation period, promoting awareness and understanding of the draft Strategy and encouraging feedback on the draft proposals.

Officials are currently collating and analysing responses to the public consultation with a view to finalising the draft Childcare Strategy over the coming months. This will be undertaken in partnership with other Executive departments and with childcare stakeholders.

Mr Allen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the Social Investment Fund to date.

(AQW 53035/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The Social Investment Fund (SIF) is a growing success story. It is at the heart of the Executive's Delivering Social Change Framework making life changing differences to people and communities facing disadvantage.

While it has taken longer than anticipated, SIF is now gathering delivery momentum with over £58 million committed to projects across the nine zones; 25 projects worth £37 million commenced; and 10 projects operational with a steady pipeline of others to follow. We expect to have all £80 million committed by the end of summer 2016.

On capital, SIF is investing heavily across all zones in projects which will enhance community services and dereliction. In some cases these projects are clustered with multiple smaller elements spread across many geographical areas. It has taken time to bring these often complex projects through the approval, design and procurement processes but in the end this ensures that the projects remain true to the communities intentions and will achieve the maximum possible impact on the ground. This is what we will see start to happen both this year and next year as major projects such as Derry/Londonderry's Invest in Play and Belfast North's Capital Cluster projects commence construction.

Similarly on revenue, where there are currently 9 projects operational with over 600 participants benefitting. We expect the numbers benefitting to ramp up significantly as delivery continues. This is because these are projects such as early intervention, employment and childcare programmes which were designed by communities to be delivered over 2 or 3 year periods.

The associated expenditure profiles therefore match the delivery periods. We expect spend to rise to £7 million by the end of March 2016, with a substantial increase anticipated in 2016/17 as projects really get started.

SIF was a very ambitious programme. We remain confident it will continue to bring the anticipated benefits to communities as delivery rolls out over the next couple of years.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the basis of calculation for the £10m being held centrally to address paramilitary activity; (ii) over what period of time it will be allocated; (iii) what Department will allocate the funds; and (iv) the purpose for which funds will be allocated.
(AQW 53039/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The £10m to address paramilitary activity was a product of the political negotiations that led to the publication of the "Fresh Start Agreement". It forms part of a total of £50m that will be allocated over a period of five years (£25m from the Treasury and £25m from the Executive). Following agreement by the Executive funds will be allocated by the Department of Finance and Personnel to tackle continuing paramilitary activity.

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether money allocated to Together: Building a United Community, or any other funds, can be used to extend the United Youth pilot to June 2016.
(AQW 53930/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The T:BUC United Youth Pilot Programme is due to end on 31 March 2016. This has been funded to date via the NI Executive's 2015/16 Change Fund budget.

An external evaluation of the Pilot Programme will shortly be commissioned.

It would not be feasible to extend the Pilot Programme at this stage due both to the advanced stage of the pilots and the existing contractual arrangements.

The Minister for Employment and Learning is due to shortly met with the OFMDFM Junior Ministers to discuss potential options going forward for the United Youth Programme.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to place a copy of a map in the Assembly library delineating the lands owned by her Department adjacent to Ballysallagh Upper Reservoir and Cairn Wood and referred to in several recent answers to Assembly Questions.
(AQW 52989/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): My Department owns the area of land, comprising some 40ha, in the vicinity of Ballysallagh Reservoir Upper and Cairn Wood adjoining NIW land as delineated on the map. A copy of which has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures her Department will take to prevent shoreline damage and damage to the growth potential of shoreline lands occurring as a result of the current raised level of Lough Neagh.
(AQW 53320/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: A review of the recent flooding experienced will be undertaken by my Department. This review will include the management and operating regime of Lough Neagh to determine if anything viable can be done to prevent or mitigate the effects of flooding.

I have launched the Homeowner Flood Protection Grant Scheme which is designed to encourage homeowners within known flood risk areas to modify their property to reduce the likelihood of flood water entering their home. As a result of this recent flooding event I intend to extend this scheme to small businesses and I have asked Rivers Agency to develop such a grant scheme for non-domestic properties.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the section of Cairn Wood owned by her Department will remain accessible to the public after the sale of the section owned by NI Water.
(AQW 53338/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Public access to the section of Cairn Wood forest, which is owned by this Department, has for many years been established through part of NI Water land recently offered for sale. In a recent press release, the DRD Minister Michelle McIlveen, referred to the popularity of the site and that she was always keen to ensure that public access continued once the sale was completed.

Forest Service has confirmed its interest in the NI Water land and is currently exploring the potential to transfer ownership of it to this Department. In the meantime, NI Water is no longer pursuing the sale while the necessary processes governing asset transfers between Departments are worked through. In the event of such a transfer, this Department would assume responsibility for the transferred land including management of public access in conjunction with this Department's land at Cairn Wood.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Minister of the Environment on the removal of the requirement under PPS 21 for a farm business to demonstrate that it has been active for six years.

(AQW 53380/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I have recently written to the Minister of the Environment to highlight my concerns about the PPS 21 Planning Policy Statement, and in particular the CTY 10(a) part of this document which specifically refers to planning permission for farm dwellings. This policy could potentially impact young farmers who have set up as head of holding in recently established farm businesses. I have sought the Environment Minister's assurance that consideration of this element of planning policy would not become a deterrent to young farmers establishing new businesses. The Minister of the Environment has provided a written response to my concerns within the last few weeks. My officials have also met with officials from the Department of the Environment on this specific issue and will continue to do so to ensure a satisfactory outcome for young farmers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether there is any restraint on her Department accepting AFE2 additional information on the extent of active farming from someone that was late with an AFE1 form.

Mrs O'Neill: In July 2015 my Department wrote to a number applicants requesting additional supporting evidence of the agricultural activity undertaken by their business. The evidence was required to enable the Department to determine whether or not the business met the active farmer requirements. Applicants were required to submit their evidence and a completed AFE1 form to the Department by 03 August 2015. Rejection letters were issued in late September 2015 to applicants who failed to respond to this request.

In this letter applicants were offered the right to have this decision reviewed under the Department's Review of Decisions process.

If the applicant has further evidence to be taken into consideration, they can submit this under the Review of Decisions process provided an acceptable reason as to why it was not made available earlier is given.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many staff has been suspended from her Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

(AQW 53397/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: In the period 1 January 2013 to 31 December 2015, 3 DARD staff were suspended for disciplinary reasons.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development why the Nitrates Action Programme Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014 does not differentiate between the levels of nitrogen turkeys produce in their first six weeks of life and the levels produced post six weeks, given that turkeys eat considerably less feed in their first six weeks of life.

(AQW 53458/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Nitrates Action Programme (NAP) Regulations specify the nitrogen produced by turkeys per crop of 1000 birds. The Regulations specify different values for male and female turkeys and there is no age differentiation. The values specified are for the life cycle of fully grown turkeys which is the most common production system.

However, the Regulations contain provision to allow variation from the standard values which are specified, based on a reasoned scientific case. Therefore, the nitrogen produced by turkeys in their first 6 weeks of life can be determined on the basis of bird weight. Farmers can obtain assistance with this calculation from the appropriate CAFRE Advisers.

My Department has commissioned research with the Agri Food and Bio Sciences Institute to review and determine nutrient production from six different poultry production systems, including turkeys from 6 weeks to kill. Due to funding constraints this research does not include analysis for turkeys from 0 to 6 weeks. However, subject to funding becoming available, there may be scope for further research on other poultry production systems, such as turkeys from 0- 6 weeks, in future.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her Department's underspend in the last financial year.

(AQW 53469/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The 2014/15 underspends in Resource DEL and Capital DEL for the Department are detailed in the table below.

2014/15 Final Outturn by Budgeting Category £'000

Expenditure Category	Final Budget	Final Outturn	Variance

Capital	28,223	28,043	(180)
Capital DEL	49,076	48,960	(116)
Total DEL	256,569	256,137	(432)

This shows that my Department spent 99.85% of its Resource DEL Budget and 99.76% of its Capital DEL budget in the last financial year.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the EU grants or payments made to local farmers in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53471/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The EU grants or payments made to farmers in the north of Ireland in each of the last five years are set out in the table below:

Financial Year	Amount Paid (£)
2010 / 2011	326,193,028
2011 / 2012	328,621,779
2012 / 2013	303,501,234
2013 / 2014	321,199,237
2014 / 2015	303,626,322
Total	1,583,141,600

These figures include both EU and National monies.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 52906/11-16, for a breakdown of the (i) £2.9m relating to a revaluation exercise on her Department's Land and Buildings carried out during the year; and (ii) £0.5m reduction relating to changes in provisions.

(AQW 53499/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Pursuant to AQW 52906/11-16, the £2.9m relating to a revaluation exercise carried out on the Department's Land and Buildings during the year included an increase of £3.4m in the Rivers Agency Land and Buildings and a decrease of £0.5m in Forest Service Land and Buildings.

The £0.5m reduction relating to changes in provisions included £0.1m in respect of corporation tax liabilities in AFBI. The remaining £0.4m related to provisions for litigation claims in the Department (£0.2m) and AFBI (£0.2m).

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the forthcoming review of the management of Lough Neagh following the recent flooding, whether she will ensure that hydrologists from outside Northern Ireland will be able to play a central role to enable the review to include experiences of flood management in other regions and countries.

Mrs O'Neill: The Department intends to appoint consultants from the Rivers Agency Framework of Professional Consultants to undertake the review of the management and operating regime to control water levels in Lough Neagh. Consultants on this Framework are international companies, who have demonstrated a depth of knowledge and experience in flood risk management. These companies employ hydrologists who have experience of flood management in other regions and countries.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) when people applying to the Young Farmers Scheme were informed that they may be subject to an interview, assessment or examination process to qualify for the additional payments; (ii) whether all applicants are subject to an interview, assessment or examination to qualify for the additional money; (iii) how applicants were selected to participate in an interview, assessment or examination to qualify for the additional money; (iv) whether the interview, assessment or examination process was a requirement for applicants of all ages to the Young Farmers Scheme; (v) how many applicants have been invited or subject to an interview, assessment or examination; (vi) how many applicants have been (a) successful; and (b) unsuccessful at their interview, assessment or examination; (vii) what advice is given to applicants before their interview, assessment or examination; (viii) what guidelines are provided to those carrying out the interview, assessment or examination; (ix) what questions or topics are covered in the interview, assessment or examination process; and (x) what mechanism for appeal exists for those who participate in the interview, assessment or examination.

Mrs O'Neill: The Young Farmers' Payment (YFP) and the Regional Reserve (RR) schemes are aimed at providing assistance to young farmers and new entrants in the initial years of their business to help them get established. The schemes allow for applications from applicants forming their own separate business or, in certain circumstances taking control of an existing business. The schemes require applicants, among other things, to be "exercising effective and long term control in terms of decisions related to management, benefits and financial risks" ie, Head of Holding (HOH) requirement for young farmers or Control of Business (COB) requirement for young entrants. This can be either solely or jointly with other farmers.

During the assessment process, various controls and checks are applied to each application to ensure that applicant meets the necessary criteria of the scheme. This includes assessment by technical staff, a farm visit, consideration by an assessment panel and/or clarification being sought from the applicant before a determination is made. In cases where it is deemed that a full determination cannot be made on the basis of the available information, the applicant is required to attend for interview.

Prior to the interview the applicant is informed of the reason(s) for it i.e. to establish that they are Head of Holding, and advised to consult the relevant guidance. The questions / topics covered at interview are specific to the applicant's business.

Members of the interview panel have been trained in conducting interviews and have the technical knowledge and expertise to enable them to make a decision.

To date, 36 of the 2,086 applicants for Young Farmers' Payment have been invited to attend an interview. 33 interviews have been completed with 6 applicants having been unsuccessful.

Following interview and the issue of a decision, applicants can avail of the review of decision procedures as a mechanism for seeking recourse to any decision which they are unhappy with. Any request for review must be made by completing the relevant application form which must be received by the Department no later than 42 calendar days from the date of their decision letter.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to list the organisations in the Newry and Armagh constituency that were successful applicants to both phases of the Rural Micro Capital Grants scheme, including (i) the value of their award; and (ii) the type of capital project being funded.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how farming families have been impacted by the 42 per cent reduction on Total Income From Farming as reported in the latest provisional estimates for 2015. (AQW 53800/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Very poor market prices have significantly reduced farm incomes in 2015. The total income from farming figure for the industry as a whole is at a level not seen for 10 years and that is very concerning.

Farmers and their families will certainly be feeling the effects of the fall in incomes and I am well aware that cash-flow is a difficulty for many. That is why EU support is so important to our farmers and why it was important that we were able to hit our targets in terms of making as many of these payments as possible in December. To date, over 96% of payments to eligible claimants have been made and we are working hard to clear the remainder.

In addition, I am continuing to encourage the banks and agricultural suppliers to be flexible on the issue of cash-flow. I plan to meet with a range of dairy stakeholders again this week. CAFRE and the Department's advisers continue to work with farmers to help them deal with the different problems that the current crisis presents.

The Rural Development Programme 2014 - 2020 is worth up to £623m and contains a number of support measures for farmers and farm families. The Programme focuses on a number of priorities, which include enhancing farm viability and competitiveness, and promoting social inclusion, poverty reduction and economic development in rural areas. For example, the Programme will help farmers and their families to improve the competitiveness and sustainability of their farm businesses through the Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) which provides training through Business Development Groups and the Farm Family Key Skills Scheme. Subject to business case approval FBIS will also assist farmers seeking to invest in their business by providing capital grant support, and support for innovation and cooperation. Farmers and farm families are a key beneficiary of the Rural Development Programme and I would encourage them to look closely at the different types of support available under the Programme for which they may be eligible.

I remain optimistic about the long-term opportunities for our farming industry, but the immediate income problems are severe and we will continue to do whatever we can to assist farmers through this difficult time.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following her recent Written Statement on Academies for Ulster Scots and Irish, to detail the capital cost for the major construction work involved in each of the projects.

(AQW 53404/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Business Cases for the Ulster- Scots Academy and the Irish Language Academy have not yet been finalised and therefore details of projected construction costs are not currently available.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much money her department has allocated to (i) the Siege Museum and renovation of the Apprentice Boys Memorial Hall in Londonderry; (ii) the Free Derry Museum; and (iii) the Museum and Interpretive Centre of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland, since May 2011.

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL has allocated £500,000 to the Museum of Free Derry project in 2015/2016.

My Department has not been approached to provide funding for the Siege Museum and renovation of the Apprentice Boys Memorial Hall in Derry or the Museum and Interpretive Centre of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland since May 2011 therefore no funding has been allocated by my Department. However, I am aware that Executive support has been provided to these projects through other Departments.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the capital projects that received funding of £100,000 or more from her Department or it's arm's-length bodies in the last two years.

(AQW 53615/11-16)

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many tranches of funding will be available through the Sub Regional Stadia Programme; and how much each tranche is worth.

(AQW 53650/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In order to ensure that the Sub Regional Programme for Soccer addresses the strategic needs of football, and is aligned with Executive agreed priorities, the programme has provisionally be divided into five distinctive strands.

- Strand 1 - Safe Stadia - provisional budget of circa ten million (£10million).
- Strand 2 - Significant Sub-Regional Stadia – provisional budget of circa seventeen million (£17million).
- Strand 3 - IFA Championship Clubs - provisional budget of circa three million (£3million).
- Strand 4 - National Training Centre - provisional budget of circa three million (£3million).
- Strand 5 - Intermediate and Junior Football - provisional budget of circa three million (£3million).

The proposed programme is currently out to public consultation. The 12 week consultation was launched on 30 November 2015 and will run until 22 February 2016. The purpose of the consultation is to seek views and feedback from stakeholders on the proposals including the proposed strands and the proposed level of funding. The outputs of the consultation will help inform the final programme including the funding strands and funding limits.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department will ensure that money given to the IFA through the Sub-Regional Stadia Programme will be fairly distributed.

(AQW 53652/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL is responsible for the development and delivery of the Sub Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer, including the allocation of funding.

The process for allocation of funding will be a fair, open and transparent and will be based on an evidenced-based approach to the demonstration of need for investment.

All final investment decisions and monetary awards will be made by the Minister.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the appointments she has made to outside bodies since May 2011, broken down by community background.

(AQW 53736/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (1) Appointments made by the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outside bodies since May 2011, broken down by community background, are detailed as follows:

	Number of Appointments	Community Background
		Protestant	Roman Catholic	Neither	Not Known
Total	150	55	63	16	16

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the grants available through her Department for the restoration, preservation and promotion of historical sites, locations and buildings, particularly those relating to World War 2. (AQW 53753/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The restoration, preservation and promotion of historical sites, locations and buildings falls within the remit of DOE's Historical Environment Division.

My Department does not provide any grants for this purpose.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the (i) councils; and (ii) non-statutory bodies that her Department has funded for commemorating the centenary of the (a) Easter Rising; and (b) Battle of the Somme. (AQW 53845/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In 2013/14 my Department provided fifty thousand pounds funding to the Nerve Centre to develop the 'Creative Centenaries' online platform which provides a suite of online resources relating to the Decade of Centenaries. This was followed by a further forty five thousand pounds in 2014/15.

My Department was pleased to provide National Museums with funding of one hundred and twenty seven thousand pounds in order to open a new 'Modern History Gallery' which addresses the 'Decade of Centenaries' including the First World War. It opened to the public in November of last year.

My Department also provided National Museums with fifty thousand pounds for its programme to develop digital resources exploring the Decade of Centenaries.

For the period, 2013-16 the Arts Council provided grants of over thirty three thousand pounds to organisations including six thousand pounds to the Somme Association on Reflections to the Irish Soldier on the Somme; twenty thousand pounds to DD Dance on Alternative Energies - First World War Project; and over seven and a half thousand pounds to Rathcoole Friends of the Somme. The Arts Council are also funding a Belfast Music Society commission written by Philip Hammond entitled 'Lament for an Irish Rebel' which will premier on 21 February 2016 at the Great Hall in Queen's University.

My Department is providing thirty thousand pounds in this financial year, in the run-up to the anniversary of the Battle of the Somme, to support the Somme Centre in delivering its plans.

Departmental funding through the Community Festival Fund, which is administered and matched by local councils, can be accessed by groups to mark anniversaries.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when she expects work to commence on the redevelopment of Casement Park. (AQO 9553/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The GAA have already engaged their project team to work on a new planning submission for a regional stadium at Casement Park. Since the JR decision, the GAA and their team have carefully considered the judgement to ensure that the new planning application fully addresses the points raised in the judgement.

Initial meetings have been held with key stakeholders, including the STG, to provide the necessary assurances required to support a robust new application.

The GAA are currently preparing a detailed programme, which will fully address the tasks associated with successful delivery of the Casement Park stadium. These tasks include planning submission, traffic management arrangements and community engagement.

In addition, maintenance and security work has been carried out on site and a new site hoarding has been erected along the Andersonstown Road.

I expect that the GAA will commence the consultation process in early March 2016 and that a new planning application will be submitted in the 3rd quarter of 2016.

There remains a strong resolve within the GAA to develop a regional stadium at Casement Park. DCAL remains committed to the redevelopment of Casement Park and will continue to work with all parties to ensure successful delivery of the project.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the level of funding her Department has allocated to commemorate centenaries in 2016. (AQO 9555/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In 2013/14 my Department provided fifty thousand pounds funding to the Nerve Centre to develop the 'Creative Centenaries' online platform which provides a suite of online resources relating to the Decade of Centenaries. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department will ensure the protection of the Irish language.

(AQO 9560/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In January 2015, I published a Strategy to Enhance and Protect the Development of the Irish Language. The Strategy sets out a roadmap for the Irish language over the next twenty years in a range of areas such as education, public services, the community and the media. The Strategy aims to promote Irish and open it up to everyone who wishes to learn and use it.

I remain committed to Acht na Gaeilge, an Irish Language Act. International bodies and language experts all agree that legislation is an effective way of protecting a language and according it proper status. Indeed, this has been the experience of our neighbours in Wales, Scotland and the south.

I have asked my Executive colleagues to agree to the Irish Language Strategy and also to agree to my proposals for an Irish Language Bill.

The European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages is an international convention designed to protect and promote regional and minority languages. My Department chairs the Inter-Departmental Charter Implementation Group and co-ordinates the cross government response to the periodic reports to the Council of Europe Committee of Experts (COMEX) who report on each state's compliance with its Charter obligations.

My Department also sponsors, in conjunction with the Department of Arts, Heritage and the Gaeltacht, Foras na Gaeilge, one of the six North South Implementation Bodies. Their statutory role is the promotion of the Irish language; this involves advising both administrations, public bodies and other groups in the private and voluntary sectors; and undertaking supportive projects, and grant-aiding bodies and groups as considered necessary.

Mr Poots asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the process by which organisations are selected to participate in the Cultural Programme.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The culture programme was established in 2013. That year, three established festivals put forward a proposal that a culture programme should be held to complement the sporting activity of the World Police and Fire Games which would showcase the cultural and artistic talent of the north of Ireland to both locals and visitors. The Executive supported this proposal through the June monitoring round.

Following the success of the initial culture programme, further programmes were supported in 2014-2015 and 2015-2016 which saw the number of cultural partners increase to strengthen the cross community elements of the programme.

Funding for the Culture Programme has been open and transparent. The funding is approved, and organisations and activity selected, on the basis of business cases for the expenditure which must comply with the standards of the NI Guide to Expenditure Appraisal and Evaluation (NIGEAE).

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether SportNI has completed its assessment to identify the availability of automated external defibrillators across the sports sector.

(AQO 9562/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has established a working relationship with the NI Ambulance Service (NIAS) who have responsibility, under the terms of the DHSSPS Community Resuscitation Strategy, for the mapping of automated external defibrillators throughout the north of Ireland.

Discussions with the Head of NI Ambulance Service have lead to an agreed coordinated approach to mapping provision and ensuring that key critical messages are communicated as part of the exercise to assess provision not just in sport but across the culture, arts and leisure sector.

These messages include the importance of first responders dialling 999 to ensure the right response is initiated and to receive instructions for trained operators on commencing CPR; the need to make Automated External Defibrillators (AEDs) available to the public; and key messages on the location of and access to well maintained AEDs.

Having tasked Sport NI with assessing the level of provision across the sports sector, a protocol document has been agreed with NIAS. The document provides all the necessary information for Sports Governing Bodies, associated clubs and individuals to register the details of their AEDs via an online portal which populates the NIAS system automatically. This will ensure the efficient mapping of AEDs across the sports sector and the successful registration and provision of critical information on the NIAS system.

Sport NI and the NI Sports Forum are working in tandem to encourage Governing Bodies and Clubs to recognise the importance of making their AEDs available to the community and to ensure that they are registered on the NIAS system. As the mapping exercise continues, emerging information on any gaps in AED provision and accessibility will become clear.

The provision of AEDs to local communities will also benefit greatly from the Henderson Group initiative which has been supported by my Department, Sport NI and the NI Sports Forum. The initiative will see community fund raising efforts contribute to AEDs being located outside local Spar, Eurospar and Vivo establishments in towns and villages throughout the North.

This will add to the recent provision of 40 AEDs at public libraries which have been registered on the NIAS system as part of the ongoing mapping exercise.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what capital support is available for small amateur sports clubs to develop facilities.

(AQO 9563/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The first strand of Sport NI's Sports Facility Fund - the Single Facility Fund - opened last June and was aimed specifically at small amateur sports clubs to enable them to apply for capital support to develop and improve premises and facilities. The Single Facility Fund closed in July 2015 with one hundred and fifty three applications received. Since then, twenty-one small amateur sports clubs have been invited to progress to the next stage of the application process. The Single Facility Fund has a total Lottery budget of two million pounds with individual award levels between ten thousand pounds and one hundred thousand pounds.

In addition, my Department is taking forward a consultation process for stadia development for soccer at a sub-regional level. I would urge all soccer clubs to engage with this process to ensure their voices are heard and that they contribute to shaping how the thirty six million pounds investment in soccer is used to best meet the needs of the sport at all levels.

The second strand of the Sport NI Lottery Sports Facility Fund – the Multi Facility Strand - is expected to open for applications in April 2016. Local sports clubs and other organisations can apply to develop new multi-sport facilities, or open up access to existing multi-sport facilities where four or more sports facilities are located at one site. Award levels within this strand will be between one hundred thousand pounds and one million pounds.

I would encourage those clubs and organisations which may have a suitable proposal to contact Sport NI to discuss it further and to also ensure that these proposals are captured in the local Council Area Plan.

The future provision of sports facilities across the north of Ireland, including for small sports clubs will be based on needs identified through a club's sports development plan, the local Council Sports Facilities Area Plan and the Regional Sports Facilities Strategy. It is clear, given the financial challenges we face, that collaboration between Government Departments, Councils, Sport Governing Bodies and Clubs will be essential to ensure that sport continues to thrive at all levels.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when SportNI will open the £6.75million Multi Facility Sports Fund.
(AQO 9564/11-16)

I would urge all soccer clubs to engage with this process to ensure their voices are heard and that they contribute to shaping how the thirty six million pounds investment in soccer is used to best meet the needs of the sport at all levels.

The second strand of the Sport NI Lottery Sports Facility Fund – the Multi Facility Strand - is expected to open for applications in April 2016. Local sports clubs and other organisations can apply to develop new multi-sport facilities, or open up access to existing multi-sport facilities where four or more sports facilities are located at one site. Award levels within this strand will be between one hundred thousand pounds and one million pounds.

I would encourage those clubs and organisations which may have a suitable proposal to contact Sport NI to discuss it further and to also ensure that these proposals are captured in the local Council Area Plan.

The future provision of sports facilities across the north of Ireland, including for small sports clubs will be based on needs identified through a club's sports development plan, the local Council Sports Facilities Area Plan and the Regional Sports Facilities Strategy. It is clear, given the financial challenges we face, that collaboration between Government Departments, Councils, Sport Governing Bodies and Clubs will be essential to ensure that sport continues to thrive at all levels.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what projects her Department is progressing in West Tyrone in conjunction with local government.

(AQO 9565/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My officials continue to work very closely with stakeholders in the wider North West region, including West Tyrone, as part of our commitment to maximising the legacy from the 2013 City of Culture.

DCAL officials are also involved in ongoing discussions with local councils in the context of community planning to ensure that our projects and objectives are aligned. DCAL is represented on the Fermanagh & Omagh District Council Community Planning Themes Co-ordinating Group which has been established to develop a draft Community Plan for consultation purposes.

A range of projects have been taken forward in West Tyrone by my Department and its Arms Length Bodies in conjunction with local government including:

- Through the North West Social and Economic Development Fund, DCAL supported and is continuing to support Cultural Hubs in West Tyrone. The hubs were created by investing in equipment for already existing community centres and other facilities. As a direct result of the investment, Derry City and Strabane District Council are providing funding to deliver skills development and training for local communities. The new equipment and training opportunities will enable venues to offer new skills to the community in the creative and digital industries which will open career paths for young people.
- The Artstarts At Home project, in conjunction with Derry City and Strabane District Council, will provide art workshops for older people, particularly those in nursing homes and residential care facilities, in the Strabane Neighbourhood Renewal Area, targeting those with mental health issues.
- Sport NI has provided funding in 2015/16 to both Derry City and Strabane District Council and Fermanagh and Omagh District Council for the Active Communities Programme.
- Joint funding between National Museums NI and local councils for a number of projects at the Ulster American Folk Park including the Bluegrass Music Festival.
- Joint programming between Libraries NI and local councils in West Tyrone including the Omagh Jazz and Big Band Festival and the Ben Kiely Festival.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) waiting lists for children that require a Special Educational Needs assessment in North Down; and (ii) average length of time each child has been waiting.

(AQW 53601/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following receipt of a request for a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs, the Education Authority (EA) is required to complete this process within the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. Therefore, waiting lists do not apply in relation to such assessments.

The EA has advised that the number of pupils in North Down for whom a decision has been made to carry out a statutory assessment and who were within the ten week period, allowed by statute, to complete the assessment, as at 31 December 2015, is 19.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number of children waiting for a special education needs assessment in East Londonderry; and (ii) average waiting time for receiving an assessment in the last twelve months.

(AQW 53669/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following receipt of a request for a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs, the Education Authority (EA) is required to complete this process within the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. Therefore, waiting lists do not apply in relation to such assessments.

The EA has advised that the number of pupils in East Londonderry for whom a decision has been made to carry out a statutory assessment and who were within the ten week period, allowed by statute, to complete the assessment, as at 31 December 2015, is 30.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers registered on the Northern Ireland Substitute Teacher Register.

(AQW 53706/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of teachers registered on the Substitute Teachers' Register (NISTR) who can be regarded as actively available for work in schools varies from day-to-day, depending on an individual teacher's availability, their personal preferences and on the number of substitute teachers employed by schools each day. However, there are currently 10,237 teachers registered on the NISTR.

The number of teachers registered as actively available for work on any given day cannot be taken as an indication of the number of unemployed teachers, as some individuals may be engaged in other types of work. Substitute teachers can also include retired teachers.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to encourage working class protestant boys to follow the further educational route to gain entry to university education.

Mr O'Dowd: My Department's focus is on raising standards for all children no matter what community background they are from or where they live, providing young people with the opportunity to achieve their full potential.

Schools need additional resources to help our most deprived pupils achieve their potential and my Department has redistributed school funding to target those schools with high numbers of pupils from socially disadvantaged backgrounds. My Department has also continued to target substantial resources at disadvantaged communities, including for example, Sure Start, extended schools and full service programmes.

Parents and others in the community have a role in raising educational awareness and aspiration in socially deprived communities. The second phase of this year's Education Works advertising campaign, which is being run during January and February, focuses on encouraging parents to actively support their children in planning for their future education and career.

The Entitlement Framework (EF) ensures equality of access for all young people to a broad, balanced and economically relevant curriculum with clear progression pathways.

The broad range of course options is underpinned by a high quality careers education and guidance in schools which provides learners with information on a full range of options.

A socially balanced education system enables all pupils to perform better. While some schools persist in the use of academic selection, we will be unable to eradicate this social division.

Tackling inequalities in education is an issue that cannot be solved quickly and while we have made some progress in recent years, this is a multi-faceted, societal issue and one that education authorities and schools cannot tackle on their own.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail the value of each of the (i) successful; and (ii) unsuccessful projects for the Delivering Social Change Shared Education Programme.

(AQW 53713/11-16)

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Education for an update on the development proposals from Loretto College, Coleraine and Dominican College, Portstewart.

(AQW 53749/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am currently considering the Development Proposals and associated pertinent information. I hope to make my decision in due course of which the Trustees and Managing Authority for each school will be informed as soon as possible.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria that is followed for the closure of schools.

(AQW 53774/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Sustainable Schools Policy sets out the range of inter-dependent criteria and associated indicators used to assess the sustainability of a school and these are factored into the consideration of a proposal for a school closure. The policy includes the following six criteria:

- Quality Educational Experience
- Stable Enrolment Trends
- Sound Financial Position
- Strong Leadership and Management
- Accessibility
- Strong Links with the Community

Any significant change to a school such as closure requires the publication of a Development proposal. Before a Development Proposal is published, the process facilitates local consultation with governors, parents and staff of the affected school as well as those schools likely to be affected by the proposal. Once a proposal is published, a statutory two month objection period is triggered during which anyone can notify the Department directly about their views on a proposal. The process ends with my decision.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the primary and post-primary schools that he has supported financially with their commemorations programmes in relation to the (a) 1916 Easter Rising; (b) Battle of the Somme.

(AQW 53780/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I have not provided funding to specific schools for the Decade of Centenaries, however, the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) is working on a "1916 Mutual Understanding" programme for schools with the objective of providing curricular support and materials for teachers and learners that will allow them to explore the history and legacy of events associated with the 1916 year of centenaries. I have agreed to provide funding of £45k for this work by CCEA in 2016/17.

Additionally, since 2013/14 my Department has cooperated with the Department for Education and Skills, in the south, in running an all-island history competition for schools to commemorate the Decade of Centenaries.

As part of the 'Ireland 2016' programme to commemorate the events of 1916, which includes the Easter Rising and the Battle of the Somme, three all-island schools' competitions will be held this year in History, Drama and Art. The cross-curricular nature of these competitions provides opportunities for pupils to learn about this important period in our history..

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail how schools deliver road safety education to pupils across the curriculum.

(AQW 53789/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are opportunities throughout the curriculum for teachers to cover the issue of road safety. For example, at primary level the Personal Development and Mutual Understanding Area of Learning requires teachers to enable pupils to develop knowledge, understanding and skills in keeping themselves healthy and safe. At post-primary level the Learning for Life and Work Area of Learning requires that pupils should have opportunities to "develop preventative strategies in relation to accidents in the home, school and on the road".

The Department of the Environment has produced a number of road safety resources and these have been made available to all schools through the C2k exchange (Fronter and Equella) so that teachers have ready access to the resources needed to help in the planning and teaching of road safety education. These include multi-media presentations, lesson plans, videos and worksheets which can be tailored to suit their teaching requirements.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education a breakdown of teachers by (i) gender; and (ii) responsibility or grade in each primary and post-primary school.

(AQW 53790/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education why the proposal by St. Patrick's Primary School Magheralin for additional places was rejected.

(AQW 53806/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The former Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) published Development Proposal (DP) No 321 on 20 November 2014. This proposed to increase the approved enrolment for St Patrick's Primary School (PS) from 129 to 175 pupils, with effect from 1 September 2015 or as soon as possible thereafter.

I took the decision on 10 March 2015 to turn down the proposal and a copy of the submission on which I based my decision can be found on my Department's website at:

<https://www.deni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/de/dp-321-st-patricks-ps-magheralin.pdf>

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how his Department is promoting shared education in North Antrim.

(AQW 53811/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are a number of generic actions which my Department has undertaken to promote shared education across the north of Ireland, including in North Antrim:

- Sharing Works: a policy for Shared Education was published in September 2015 setting out the rationale, vision and objectives for Shared Education;
- a Shared Education Bill which will provide a statutory definition of Shared Education is currently the subject of the legislative process;
- a self assessment Shared Education Framework has been published which provides an effective tool for practitioners to assess current levels of sharing and to action plan to further advance sharing.

In addition, the Delivering Social Change Shared Education Signature Project, led by Education Authority is providing support and funding to eligible schools, including those in North Antrim, to advance shared education.

You may also be aware that the Shared Education campus project for Ballycastle High School and Cross & Passion College in Ballycastle is one of the first 3 projects I approved to proceed in planning under the Shared Education Campuses Programme. The Project Board has been established and development of the business case is progressing.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail any correspondence he has had with the Irish Government in relation to schools in this jurisdiction partaking in events commemorating the (a) 1916 Easter Rising; and (ii) Battle of the Somme.

(AQW 53850/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I have not provided funding to specific schools for the Decade of Centenaries, however, the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) is working on a "1916 Mutual Understanding" programme for schools with the objective of providing curricular support and materials for teachers and learners that will allow them to explore the history and legacy of events associated with the 1916 year of centenaries. I have agreed to provide funding of £45k for this work by CCEA in 2016/17.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for an outline of the area plan for primary schools in North Antrim.

(AQO 9574/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The area plan for primary schools in the former North Eastern Education and Library Board Area which includes North Antrim was published in June 2014 and is available on the Education Authority's website.

The area plans for primary and post-primary schools are currently being reviewed by the Education Authority (EA) in conjunction with CCMS, the other sector support bodies and the voluntary grammar sector. I have also asked for an area plan for Special Education provision to be drawn up. The Area Planning Local Groups will have an important role in this process.

The three draft Area Plans along with Annual Action Plans should be submitted to the Department in July 2016. It is intended that the EA will consult, subject to Departmental approval, on these plans in the autumn.

Mr Diver asked the Minister of Education what consideration has been given to the additional staff costs associated with an increase in National Insurance contributions, Teacher Pensions contributions and the adoption of the National Living Wage in determining school budgets for 2016-17.

(AQO 9575/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following the Executive's agreement of Budget 2016-17 on Thursday 17 December 2015, which was subsequently passed by the Assembly on 19 January 2016, I am currently working through the impact of the Budget 2016-17 outcome on the Education sector and have not yet come to any final decisions on 2016-17 budget allocations. In view of this, I am unable, at this stage, to advise on any impact that the additional staff costs may have on final budget decisions.

The Budget 2016-17 outcome for Education is challenging, partly as a result of the real terms reduction to the Executive's Resource DEL position imposed by the Westminster Government.

However, the position for Education is significantly better than previously anticipated.

My aim is to have reached final decisions on my Department's 2016-17 budget allocations within the next few weeks to allow for early notification.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme.

(AQO 9576/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme ended at 31 August 2015.

The Programme was delivered over two years to over 18,000 pupils.

It has made a significant contribution to the improved attainment levels in literacy and numeracy and has provided employment opportunities for recent graduate teachers.

The evaluations of the first year, carried out by the EA and ETI, have demonstrated that the aims of the programme were met.

Principals and teachers are to be commended for the way in which they embraced the programme and developed it within their schools.

In the most successful schools, the learning has been shared across the curriculum.

Undoubtedly the learning they have gained will provide a lasting legacy for those schools. To support this, I have set aside an additional £200,000 this year to provide a legacy programme to disseminate the best practice developed through the Programme to all schools.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Investing in Teaching Workforce scheme

(AQO 9577/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Investing in the teaching Workforce Scheme is currently under development, in collaboration with the teaching unions and employers, and details have yet to be finalised.

It is intended that the Scheme will be launched in early Spring 2016; all relevant criteria will be published at that stage.

Whilst there continues to be disappointment expressed by some about the proposed parameters of the Scheme, I must stress that the Scheme will have potential to provide up to 500 permanent teaching posts for recently qualified teachers and up to 500 teachers will be able to retire early. In the absence of this Scheme neither will happen.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much it costs to train a teacher; and how this compares to the rest of the UK and Ireland.

(AQW 53156/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The cost of training a teacher was one of the issues considered by Grant Thornton in stage one of the review of initial teacher education infrastructure. The report can be found at https://www.delni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/del/Study%20of%20the%20Teacher%20Education%20Infrastructure%20in%20Northern%20Ireland%20-%20Stage%201%20report_0.pdf

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities.

(AQW 53460/11-16)

Dr Farry:

Update on the Employment strategy for People with Disabilities

The consultation on the Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities closed on the 27 November 2015. 58 responses were received, 32 from individuals and 26 on behalf of organisations. In addition, information was gathered at four public consultation events, and two smaller events with specific disability groups, and these have been factored into the official response.

The consultation period has enabled all interested parties to provide feedback on each of the key themes and subsequent proposals. This has been broadly very positive, and in addition, a number of constructive suggestions have been made, which will inform the final strategy document.

The Committee for Employment and Learning has been briefed by officials and have been provided with a detailed summary and findings. The members were encouraged by the consultation feedback and remain very supportive of the strategy.

It remains the intention for the new Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities to launch before the end of February.

The Executive Disability Strategy

The Executive Strategy, launched in January 2013, entitled, 'A Strategy to improve the lives of people with disabilities', makes a clear commitment to deliver the commitments in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD).

This overarching strategy sets out a high level policy framework to give coherence and guidance to government departments, and is based around a number of key themes, with associated strategic priorities.

One of these key themes is, 'Employment and Employability', and Strategic Priority 15 is to 'work towards increasing the number of people with disabilities entering all levels of employment and safeguard the rights of those disabled people already in work'.

The key objective of the Department's new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities', is, 'To directly assist disable people to find, sustain and progress within paid employment, or to start up their own business'. Given also that the first two themes of this employment strategy are, 'Empowering and supporting people to secure paid employment', and, 'Job retention and career development', it clear to see the alignment and how the Department's strategy will contribute to the achievement of the Executive's disability strategy.

Rural areas

The Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities is aimed at people with significant disability related barriers to work, regardless of where they live or are employed.

The strategy has been developed in partnership with key representatives of the disability sector, many of whom provide services, programmes, and projects delivered through the Department's European Social Fund (ESF), throughout and across Northern Ireland.

Four public consultation events were also arranged, in Armagh, Cookstown Belfast and Derry, and these were attended by various interested parties, including people with disabilities, as well as organisations who represent the interests of this customer group.

Transport and travel has been raised as a potential obstacle to employment for some, and it will be important for this issue to be considered, and addressed insofar as this is possible, through the implementation of the strategy.

The aforementioned Executive Strategy correctly highlights the fact that, 'employment and employability are issues which require a number of government departments to work together to support people with disabilities to gain and retain employment'. Transport and access are undoubtedly issues which require a collaborative and cohesive approach, amongst statutory and non-statutory bodies alike, to provide solutions where they are required.

The Disability Employment Service, through its Access to Work programme, is providing direct transport support to approximately 350 disabled people who are in work, whilst many of the ESF programmes deliver dedicated travel training as part of their employability and pre-employment menu of provision.

Involvement of people with disabilities – developing and measuring the success of the strategy

In 2013, a Strategic Working group was established. This comprised officials from the Department for Employment and Learning's Disability Employment Service (DES), along with a number of key representatives from the local disability sector, and other interested parties.

The group have worked closely on every aspect of the strategy, including the agreed aims and objectives, the drafting of the documentation, as well as the consultation and engagement process.

Specifically on the consultation and engagement issue, a number of major pre-consultation events took place throughout Northern Ireland during 2014. There were also a number of smaller, more local workshops at that time.

These events, organised and facilitated in partnership with the disability sector, were targeted primarily at people with disabilities, support workers, and organisations from the community and voluntary sector. Those attending, and the sector representatives involved in the organisation of these events, presented it as an example of how pre-consultation should look like.

More importantly, it was the discussions and proposals arising from these events, which helped inform the draft strategy that was issued for public consultation in September 2015, and the feedback received through this latest consultation process, will be reflected in the final strategy document.

As part of the strategy, the Department has committed to develop a framework that will ensure continuous and meaningful engagement between all of the key stakeholders, including people with disabilities. Specifically, and as part of the first year Action Plan, a new Disability Employment Stakeholder Forum will be established.

It is proposed that this Forum will have a monitoring role with regard to the implementation and achievements of the new strategy, a direct input into the annual action planning process, and will also be asked to provide assurance on the alignment of the various NI Executive disability strategies.

In addition to senior officials from a number of key government departments, along with select employers or employer groups; people with disabilities, and key representatives from the local disability sector, will be adequately represented on the new Disability Employment Stakeholder Forum.

Engagement with the sector since the consultation

The Department has continued to engage with the Strategic Working group, who represent a large number of people with a full range of disabilities throughout Northern Ireland.

The group have received the summary feedback shared with the Departmental Committee. This was discussed at a meeting of the Group on the 9th February, along with plans for the launch of the strategy.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department's Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities will dovetail with the Executive Disability Strategy.

The strategy has been developed in partnership with key representatives of the disability sector, many of whom provide services, programmes, and projects delivered through the Department's European Social Fund (ESF), throughout and across Northern Ireland.

Four public consultation events were also arranged, in Armagh, Cookstown Belfast and Derry, and these were attended by various interested parties, including people with disabilities, as well as organisations who represent the interests of this customer group.

Transport and travel has been raised as a potential obstacle to employment for some, and it will be important for this issue to be considered, and addressed insofar as this is possible, through the implementation of the strategy.

The aforementioned Executive Strategy correctly highlights the fact that, 'employment and employability are issues which require a number of government departments to work together to support people with disabilities to gain and retain employment'. Transport and access are undoubtedly issues which require a collaborative and cohesive approach, amongst statutory and non-statutory bodies alike, to provide solutions where they are required.

The Disability Employment Service, through its Access to Work programme, is providing direct transport support to approximately 350 disabled people who are in work, whilst many of the ESF programmes deliver dedicated travel training as part of their employability and pre-employment menu of provision.

Involvement of people with disabilities – developing and measuring the success of the strategy

In 2013, a Strategic Working group was established. This comprised officials from the Department for Employment and Learning's Disability Employment Service (DES), along with a number of key representatives from the local disability sector, and other interested parties.

The group have worked closely on every aspect of the strategy, including the agreed aims and objectives, the drafting of the documentation, as well as the consultation and engagement process.

Specifically on the consultation and engagement issue, a number of major pre-consultation events took place throughout Northern Ireland during 2014. There were also a number of smaller, more local workshops at that time.

These events, organised and facilitated in partnership with the disability sector, were targeted primarily at people with disabilities, support workers, and organisations from the community and voluntary sector. Those attending, and the sector representatives involved in the organisation of these events, presented it as an example of how pre-consultation should look like.

More importantly, it was the discussions and proposals arising from these events, which helped inform the draft strategy that was issued for public consultation in September 2015, and the feedback received through this latest consultation process, will be reflected in the final strategy document.

As part of the strategy, the Department has committed to develop a framework that will ensure continuous and meaningful engagement between all of the key stakeholders, including people with disabilities. Specifically, and as part of the first year Action Plan, a new Disability Employment Stakeholder Forum will be established.

It is proposed that this Forum will have a monitoring role with regard to the implementation and achievements of the new strategy, a direct input into the annual action planning process, and will also be asked to provide assurance on the alignment of the various NI Executive disability strategies.

In addition to senior officials from a number of key government departments, along with select employers or employer groups; people with disabilities, and key representatives from the local disability sector, will be adequately represented on the new Disability Employment Stakeholder Forum.

Engagement with the sector since the consultation

The Department has continued to engage with the Strategic Working group, who represent a large number of people with a full range of disabilities throughout Northern Ireland.

The group have received the summary feedback shared with the Departmental Committee. This was discussed at a meeting of the Group on the 9th February, along with plans for the launch of the strategy.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether the new Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities has provisions to target rural areas.

Dr Farry:

Update on the Employment strategy for People with Disabilities

The consultation on the Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities closed on the 27 November 2015. 58 responses were received, 32 from individuals and 26 on behalf of organisations. In addition, information was gathered at four public consultation events, and two smaller events with specific disability groups, and these have been factored into the official response.

The consultation period has enabled all interested parties to provide feedback on each of the key themes and subsequent proposals. This has been broadly very positive, and in addition, a number of constructive suggestions have been made, which will inform the final strategy document.

The Committee for Employment and Learning has been briefed by officials and have been provided with a detailed summary and findings. The members were encouraged by the consultation feedback and remain very supportive of the strategy.

It remains the intention for the new Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities to launch before the end of February.

The Executive Disability Strategy

The Executive Strategy, launched in January 2013, entitled, 'A Strategy to improve the lives of people with disabilities', makes a clear commitment to deliver the commitments in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCPRD).

This overarching strategy sets out a high level policy framework to give coherence and guidance to government departments, and is based around a number of key themes, with associated strategic priorities.

One of these key themes is, 'Employment and Employability', and Strategic Priority 15 is to 'work towards increasing the number of people with disabilities entering all levels of employment and safeguard the rights of those disabled people already in work'.

The key objective of the Department's new 'Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities', is, 'To directly assist disable people to find, sustain and progress within paid employment, or to start up their own business'. Given also that the first two themes of this employment strategy are, 'Empowering and supporting people to secure paid employment', and, 'Job retention and career development', it clear to see the alignment and how the Department's strategy will contribute to the achievement of the Executive's disability strategy.

Rural areas

The Employment Strategy for People with Disabilities is aimed at people with significant disability related barriers to work, regardless of where they live or are employed.

The strategy has been developed in partnership with key representatives of the disability sector, many of whom provide services, programmes, and projects delivered through the Department's European Social Fund (ESF), throughout and across Northern Ireland.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether local students who chose to study courses in private institutions will receive loans equivalent to those given to Northern Irish students who choose to study in England.
(AQW 53523/11-16)

Dr Farry: A Northern Ireland domiciled student studying at a private institution will receive the same amount of maintenance loan as a Northern Ireland student studying at a publicly funded higher education institution, dependant on where a student studies. The maintenance loan is up to £3,750 for those Northern Ireland students living and attending a course at home, up to £6,780 if the course is in London and up to £4,840 for those living elsewhere.

Northern Ireland students can avail of a tuition fee loan up to £9,000 for courses at publicly funded higher education institutions in England. At private institutions in England where the course has been "franchised" (awarded and owned) by a separate degree awarding higher education institution, students may avail of tuition fee loans of up to £9,000. At private institutions in England where the course has been "validated" (approved) by a separate degree awarding higher education institution, students may avail of tuition fee loans of up to £3,805 in academic year 2015/16. With the limited funding available at present, it is not possible for my Department to match the tuition fee support provided in other parts of the United Kingdom for students enrolled on "validated" courses at private institutions.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when he expects to announce the start of work on a new college in Coleraine.

(AQW 53571/11-16)

Dr Farry: I have approved the capital project's Outline Business Case (OBC) submitted by the Northern Regional College which sets out the College's proposals for addressing its accommodation needs in the Coleraine, Ballymoney and Ballymena areas. This was subsequently forwarded to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) for consideration.

No announcement on the specific location of campuses can be made until DFP approval has been received. Following DFP approval and subject to the availability of capital funding, the design stage will have to be completed and a construction contract awarded before development work can commence at any location.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the skills shortage locally, including within (i) construction; (ii) science, technology and engineering; and (iii) information and computer technology.

(AQW 53724/11-16)

Dr Farry: In terms of skills gaps within the existing workforce, the 2015 Employer Skills Survey (ESS) shows that 91% of establishments in Northern Ireland felt that all of their staff were fully proficient at their job at the time of the fieldwork. This is higher than the 2015 UK average of 86% and an improvement on the level of 86% for Northern Ireland in 2013.

In other words, only 9% of establishments in Northern Ireland experienced skills gaps. These establishments reported 'ability to manage own time and prioritise tasks', 'team working' and 'specialist skills or knowledge' to be the most commonly found skills to be lacking among existing staff in Northern Ireland. Eighteen percent of these reported this having a major impact on their organisation's performance and most significantly in terms of increasing workload for other staff.

The survey also showed that three per cent of establishments in Northern Ireland had at least one skill shortage vacancy, the same level as in 2013, but significantly below the 2015 UK proportion of 6%. Of these, establishments' 'ability to manage own time and prioritise tasks', 'customer handling skills' and 'specialist skills or knowledge' were also the most commonly found skills to be lacking for skill shortage vacancies.

The 2015 UK ESS report published on 28th January 2016 presented results by sector and occupation at the overall UK level and can be found at www.gov.uk/government/publications/ukces-employer-skills-survey-2015-uk-report

Information from the 2015 survey for Northern Ireland will be published on 10th March 2016 which will include data on sector and occupation. However these will not directly map to the areas specifically requested, with the exception of construction. A copy of the NI toolkit will be forwarded to you once available on that date.

The ESS is managed by the UK Commission for Employment and Skills and the 2015 survey included 4,019 completed interviews with NI establishments.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what percentage of workplace vacancies are caused by a shortage of specific skills locally.

(AQW 53725/11-16)

Dr Farry: The 2015 Employer Skills Survey (ESS) shows that the density of skill shortage vacancies in Northern Ireland at the time of fieldwork was 15%. This shows a decrease from the level measured in 2013 and is also below the 2015 UK level of 23%.

The ESS is managed by the UK Commission for Employment and Skills and the 2015 survey included 4,019 completed interviews with Northern Ireland establishments.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he is encouraging school-leavers to choose to study at Northern Ireland universities.

(AQW 53815/11-16)

Dr Farry: 'Graduating to Success', Northern Ireland's higher education strategy, commits my Department to ensuring that prospective learners have access to relevant, high quality information in order to allow them to make informed decisions regarding their participation in higher education.

To meet this commitment my officials worked with higher education institutions to review and improve the available information regarding higher education in general and the sector in Northern Ireland in particular. This review included information on courses, financial support, the cost of living, learner satisfaction, and other relevant information. This information can be accessed through the NI Direct website as well as individual institution websites.

As well as this, my Department continues to work with the other UK higher education funding bodies to ensure that high quality information regarding higher education is available from a range of sources including the National Student Survey, Unistats and the Destination of Leavers in Higher Education Survey.

Taken together, the information published about studying at Northern Ireland universities encourages school-leavers, with the support of careers advisers and others, to make the choice that is right for them in terms of their personal and professional development goals.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the seven month timespan of the United Youth pilot will be sufficient time to test the models developed; and what possibilities have been explored to access funding to allow the pilot to continue until June.

(AQW 53871/11-16)

Dr Farry: The United Youth pilots commenced in August 2015 and are running for eight months. Funding was secured for the pilots from the Northern Ireland Executive's Change Fund which is due to end on 31 March 2016. There will be a full evaluation of the pilot phase, focusing on the achievement of the agreed outcomes.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the support given to JTI Gallaher and Michelin employees.

(AQO 9586/11-16)

Dr Farry: My officials are having regular meetings with JTI and Michelin to ensure that the best advice, guidance and practical help is available to those affected by redundancy.

Following the Training Needs Analysis carried out by JTI's outplacement provider, my Department was asked to consider support for a number of training courses.

I am pleased to say that the Essential Skills training requested has commenced and six classes, facilitated by Northern Regional College, for around 70 JTI staff have been funded.

In terms of the other requested courses, I have agreed to provide funding towards their delivery exclusively for JTI staff.

This is the first time that such support has been made available in a redundancy situation and this has been possible due to the long period of notice given by JTI in advance of the closure date. The details of this training will be communicated to the workforce in the near future.

Michelin's consultation process is due to end on the 7 March. This limits the action that my Department can take at this stage. However, discussions are ongoing about actions to be implemented following the consultation period, which will mitigate the impact on the employees and, more generally, the local and wider community.

The support for both companies includes careers advice, job opportunities, mentoring, entrepreneurship, education opportunities and access to Further Education College training courses. It may also include accreditation of prior learning and experience.

Michelin has completed their initial internal skills analysis. This has enabled officials to begin work on planning the facilitation of dedicated Essential Skills courses. My Department will continue to explore ways to support further training requirements revealed through the skills audit.

In addition, my Department is working with Michelin to identify other companies which operated within Michelin's supply chain.

Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when he will announce the results of his consultation on Part-time and Postgraduate Student Finance.

(AQO 9588/11-16)

Dr Farry: At present, the support package available for part-time undergraduate students is limited and restricted to only a minority of eligible students from relatively low household incomes.

Meanwhile the majority of postgraduate students have no access to any standard student finance package at all beyond the Disabled Students Allowance.

In June 2015 I launched a public consultation to consider a range of options to improve the finance offerings for both part-time undergraduate and taught postgraduate students, primarily through the student loan system. The consultation closed in September 2015 and a summary of responses is available on my Department's website.

Having considered the responses to the consultation, I have now, in principle, taken some decisions on the way forward in these areas.

However, introducing these new loans will require various approvals and confirmations.

Firstly, as the student loan system is financed by Her Majesty's Treasury, its approval is required for the introduction of any new loan package. My officials are currently seeking that approval.

Secondly, the Student Loans Company will be responsible for constructing and implementing these new loan products, and it has still not confirmed its capacity to do so for the 2017/18 academic year.

The Loans Company is expected to conclude a capacity assessment for the 2017/18 academic year for all its demands, across all the UK administrations, this month.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what cross departmental work is he undertaking on the issue of youth unemployment.

(AQO 9589/11-16)

Dr Farry: My major reforms of Apprenticeship and Youth Training will provide employment opportunities for young people.

Evidence demonstrates that countries with low levels of youth unemployment make Apprenticeships and other forms of vocational training a key economic priority.

I am committed, through the reform of the Northern Ireland Apprenticeship and Youth Training systems, to develop professional and technical skills which are fully aligned to the needs of our economy in order to secure a 'world-class' system capable of delivering a highly skilled workforce to support high levels of employment, particularly for young people.

My Department also leads on the implementation of 'Pathways to Success', the Northern Ireland Executive's strategy for supporting young people who are not in Education, Employment or Training. The strategy contains an Action Plan setting out key actions and is supported by a delivery infrastructure chaired by DEL that brings together key decision makers from government, the voluntary and community, education, health, social care and business sectors, to secure an effective and coordinated response to the diverse needs of young people.

A number of bespoke initiatives have also been introduced to support young people, including: a Community Family Support Programme, a diverse range of projects funded by the European Social Fund and the United Youth Programme, a key headline action flowing from the Executive's Together Building and United Community Strategy.

The Employment Service offers a range of work-focused programmes and measures. These include Steps 2 Success, the Department's main adult return to work programme, the Into Work Training Support programme, the Youth Employment Work Experience Scheme, Employer Subsidy and Enterprise Allowance Scheme. These programmes seek to improve opportunities for young people, address employability skills gaps and help them to connect with the labour market.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's response to the publication of the Higher Education Green Paper by the British Government.

(AQO 9590/11-16)

Dr Farry: Last month, I wrote to Minister of State Jo Johnson MP, setting out my views on the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills' green paper, Fulfilling our Potential. It is important to note that this paper refers to potential changes to the HE sector in England. However, due to the nature of higher education and student mobility, a number of the proposals have the potential to impact on HEIs and students here in Northern Ireland.

Prior to my writing to the Minister of State, my officials had met representatives from Northern Ireland's higher education institutions to discuss the paper in order to ensure that my letter reflected any concerns they may have, along with my Department's assessment of the issues.

In my letter, I informed Jo Johnson that in general the objectives of the green paper align with my Department's higher education strategy 'Graduating to Success' which focuses on teaching and learning, widening participation, retention and improving the learner journey. However, I explained that I have concerns regarding a number of areas including the proposed metrics used to measure excellence in relation to the Teaching Excellence Framework and the implications for the quality of teaching and the student experience for Northern Ireland-domiciled students studying in England if proposals aimed at opening up the sector to new providers are implemented.

My officials are now working with colleagues in the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills and the other devolved administrations to ensure that Northern Ireland's interests are taken into account in the development of the white paper and technical consultation, both of which are proposed for spring 2016.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the recently commissioned research into the skills needs of the tourism industry.

(AQO 9591/11-16)

Dr Farry: I recognise the positive economic and social impact that tourism has on Northern Ireland. In turn I also recognise the important impact that the skills of those employed in the tourism industry have on the quality of the visitor experience, and so I am keen to ensure that Northern Ireland has the correct skills levels and mix for the future.

In 2014 the Hunter Report on the future of tourism in Northern Ireland recommended that my Department should examine the current and future skills needs of the sector. My Department has therefore commissioned research to help identify and understand the demand for skills both now and in the future. Its overall aim is to ascertain the scale and nature of the skill shortages within the tourism sector in Northern Ireland.

Working with Tourism NI and Invest NI, my officials have established a group of stakeholders from the whole tourism sector to advise on how this skills analysis should be undertaken. I expect to take delivery of the results of this research work before the end of March.

This research will form a base of evidence which will provide the opportunity for consultation with colleagues in Tourism NI and Invest NI to plot the best way forward. While I do not yet know what those findings will be, I expect the employers in the tourism sector, the further education colleges and the universities will be fully involved in the future development and delivery of any skills training required.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to increase the provision of adult basic education in East Antrim.

(AQO 9593/11-16)

Dr Farry: Further Education Colleges have a key role in supporting adult basic education by providing those who have low or no qualifications, or who have barriers to learning, with the skills and qualifications needed to find employment and to become economically active.

The new Further Education Strategy, "Further Education Means Success" which I launched recently, reinforces the importance of the Further Education colleges as the main providers of choice for skills delivery in Northern Ireland. The Northern Regional College campus at Newtownabbey will continue to offer a broad range of courses to meet the needs of all learners within the East Antrim community.

While the Department sets the strategic direction for the Further Education sector in Northern Ireland, each college is responsible for its own curriculum offer. Learners entering FE colleges will receive advice on the course of study that is most appropriate for them.

This process ensures that each learner agrees an individual programme of study to meet his or her aspirations and addresses their level of study. Decisions on whether a specific course runs are driven by the level of demand locally.

Over the last three years, Northern Regional College's provision for adult learners in the East Antrim Area has included courses such as languages, creative crafts, and personal and social skills. In the last three academic years there have been almost 6,500 enrolments in these programmes below Level 2. In addition there have been over 5,700 enrolments on Essential Skills Courses in the same period at Level 2 and below.

My Department has undertaken work to refresh the Essential Skills qualifications to ensure that they remain fit for purpose and can match adult competencies across the best performing countries. This work is almost complete and the new curriculum materials will be available for first teaching from September 2016.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the engagement he has had with women's sector organisations in relation to community education provision.

(AQO 9594/11-16)

Dr Farry: I have been in ongoing correspondence with a number of women's organisations in this respect, and both I and my officials continue to meet regularly with representatives from organisations in the sector.

This has been especially the case regarding the European Social Fund Programme 2014-2020, with officials meeting all 67 project promoters at its Quarterly Forum in January 2016, to discuss a full range of issues associated with the Programme and its provision.

Under the 2014-2020 ESF Programme, five dedicated women's projects are currently being funded, out of a total of 67 successful projects. All other ESF projects are offered to both men and women.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he will honour the commitments given by his Department in its letter dated 29 March 2011, and by the then Minister to the media on 16 February 2011, by instructing the Joint Supervisors of the Presbyterian Mutual Society that the £25 million contribution by Westminster does not have to be repaid and accordingly should not be treated as a loan or liability in the accounts of the Society.

(AQW 52513/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The treatment of the £25 million in the Presbyterian Mutual Society's accounts has been agreed by the Presbyterian Mutual Society with its auditors.

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of financial assistance given by Invest NI to businesses in (i) North; (ii) South; (iii) East; and (iv) West Belfast in the financial years (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15.

(AQW 52831/11-16)

Mr Bell: The table below details the amount of support offered by Invest NI to businesses in (i) North; (ii) South; (iii) East; and (iv) West Belfast in the financial years (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15.

An additional £101 million of support was offered to External Delivery Organisations and Universities in the four constituencies. This is not detailed in the table as the support will be used to benefit businesses from across Northern Ireland.

Invest NI Support Offered (£m) in Belfast Constituencies (2012-13 to 2014-15)

PCA	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
Belfast East	6.86	23.61	12.66
Belfast North	4.10	10.47	7.68
Belfast South	17.27	13.32	44.59
Belfast West	3.46	5.76	2.02

Note: Invest NI revises performance data on a regular basis to ensure that it reflects implemented projects; therefore, the data above may differ to previously published information.

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the itinerary for Invest NI visits in (i) North; (ii) South; (iii) East; and (iv) West Belfast in the financial years (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15, including the number of businesses visited and the number of political representatives met during each visit.

(AQW 52833/11-16)

Mr Bell: Itineraries are tailored to meet the needs of the potential investor and may include visits to universities and other educational establishments, employment agencies, and estate agents.

Visit itineraries typically last 1-2 days and generally cover more than one constituency and region.

Site visits to business parks and other commercial property may also take place.

In addition, itineraries may include visits to existing investors in a similar business sector and other relevant government departments but this information is not centrally held. Occasionally some contacts may be made, if appropriate, at a ministerial level.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what venture capital funding will be available to companies in the technology sector during the 2016-17 financial year.

(AQW 53252/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI has put in place a suite of six funds under its Access to Finance banner. Four of these are venture capital funds and these are:

- Techstart NI, which has £20 million of funding and which provides seed and early stage funding in return for equity in both SMEs and university spin-outs
- Co-Fund NI, which has £12.5 million to invest alongside private investors in SMEs at various stages of company development
- Two £30 million Development Funds which invest primarily after the start-up phase.

All of the above funds have capital to invest during the 2016-17 financial year. Whilst these funds are not restricted to the technology sector, they support SMEs with high growth potential, many of which have a technology basis.

In addition, Invest NI also supports the management costs of Halo, the business angel network. Through Halo, technology based businesses also have access to equity funding.

NI technology based SMEs have also secured equity funding from other private sources from inside and outside NI.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for (i) an update on the establishment of a data centre in Coleraine; and (ii) his assessment of how this will benefit the regional and local economy.

(AQW 53262/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department has been working with the Causeway Coast and Glens Council to establish a pilot Enterprise Zone in Coleraine. HMT is currently considering a request for formal designation of the pilot Enterprise Zone and it is anticipated that this will be progressed in the coming weeks.

I understand that the Council has been in discussion with a company which intends to establish a data centre in the Enterprise Zone. The establishment of such a centre would provide welcome investment in the area and the Council believes will act as a catalyst for the development of further digital and ICT investment in the Enterprise Zone.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what in-year departmental cuts have been made to community and voluntary sector funding; and how this compares to departmental cuts to other services.

Mr Bell: No in-year cuts have been made in 2015-16 to community and voluntary sector funding in my Department.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what preparatory work has been done to assess the impact on local businesses of a UK exit from the European Union.

(AQW 53393/11-16)

Mr Bell: It is difficult to assess the potential implications of a UK exit from the European Union at this stage as there are a wide range of different possibilities were there to be any future changes in the UK's status within the EU.

My Department has, however, joined a UK study by Oxford Economics looking at the potential economic impact of an EU exit across the UK. This study, which looks at employment, GVA, unemployment, labour supply and consumer spending, has now been extended to provide specific results for Northern Ireland.

The findings for Northern Ireland across a range of scenarios should be available by Spring 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what preparatory work has been done to assess the impact of the removal from state aid rules which would result from a UK exit from the European Union.

(AQW 53395/11-16)

Mr Bell: As a reserved matter, the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS) takes the lead on State aid. My officials have not been made aware of any preparatory work being undertaken to assess the impact of any change to State aid rules that could result from a UK exit from the European Union. They are monitoring the situation and will brief me on any significant developments.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many staff have been suspended from his Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

(AQW 53398/11-16)

Mr Bell: No staff in my Department have been suspended over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of homes currently deemed too far from the BT Exchange to receive broadband of 2mps; and what plans he has to address the lack of broadband provision in West Tyrone.

(AQW 53399/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not gather or hold the information requested regarding the number of homes deemed too far from a telephone exchange to access a broadband speed of 2Mbps.

Data on fixed broadband network coverage is collected by Ofcom which makes the information available through its triennial infrastructure reports and subsequent annual updates. The latest report, 'Connected Nations 2015' and associated data downloads can be found at <http://stakeholders.ofcom.org.uk/market-data-research/market-data/infrastructure/connected-nations-2015/>.

The report shows that at May/June 2015, 5.7% of premises in Northern Ireland could receive a fixed-line broadband connection of less than 2Mbps. This is a 1.3% improvement on the figure at June 2014.

As the member will be aware, in February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) which will extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland, particularly in rural areas.

I can confirm that improvements have already taken place in twenty-one exchange areas serving premises in West Tyrone, impacting on almost 7,000 households and businesses with further work due to take place in the final phase which has recently commenced. Further details on the project can be found on the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

On 22 January, I announced the introduction of a satellite broadband support scheme which falls under the auspices of the NIBIP and seeks to provide residents and businesses which have speeds below 2Mbps with the option of applying for a subsidy towards the cost of installing a satellite broadband connection. Details on the scheme, including eligibility criteria, can be found at <https://www.detini.gov.uk/articles/satellite-broadband-support-scheme-northern-ireland>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department, in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme. This project will provide superfast broadband improvements for almost 39,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. Again, postcode areas in West Tyrone are included for intervention under this project. An extensive survey and design process is ongoing and until this is completed, it will not be possible to say which individual postcodes will benefit from the upgrades. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform when this becomes available.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the location and postcode of the mobile phone signal not spots in West Tyrone; and how he plans to address the poor mobile phone reception in the area.

Mr Bell: I would refer the member to my response to question AQW 53120/11-16.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assessment has been made of the potential benefits to (i) the North Coast; and (ii) Northern Ireland, of the staging of the Open Golf Championship in 2019 at Royal Portrush.
(AQW 53405/11-16)

Mr Bell: I welcome the announcement that The Open Championship is to be held at Royal Portrush Golf Club from 18 – 21 July 2019. Securing The Open Championship is a magnificent achievement. It is a key part of Tourism NI's events strategy and is crucial to consolidating our efforts to grow visitor numbers and visitor spend.

The Open Championship is expected to attract 200,000 spectators over the competition days. With the estimated spend per golf tourist at £218 per day, or £1,230 per trip, hosting major golf events plays a key role in realising our ambitious plans to grow tourism in Northern Ireland to a £1 billion industry by 2020. The potential economic return of £70 million makes The Open coming to Portrush in 2019 a success story not just for golf and golfing fans but our entire economy.

Major events are recognised as key economic development and tourism drivers, the promotional and economic benefits from hosting major golf events are demonstrable. Hosting The Open Championship will provide the opportunity to raise the profile of Northern Ireland as a golf destination and showcase it to a wider global audience.

A comprehensive Marketing & PR strategy will encourage visitors from both the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland markets to take a short break and attend the event. Tourism NI will also work with Tourism Ireland to promote the event internationally to both media and consumers.

The Open Championship will also be promoted across Tourism NI's social and digital channels and a coherent content marketing strategy will be devised with an emphasis on targeting visitors from the Republic of Ireland. In addition, Tourism NI will brief tour operators of the opportunity.

From a regional perspective, Tourism NI will be engaging with and supporting the relevant local authorities and industry on the North Coast and beyond to maximise the tourism benefits and opportunities that a world class event of this scale and significance can bring.

I commend the Royal and Ancient Golf Club for their confidence and commitment to Northern Ireland. I have no doubt the 2019 Open at Royal Portrush, which will be broadcast to half a billion people worldwide, will be a stunning sporting success.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he will make representations to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to encourage mobile phone operators who apply for 5G licenses to ensure the provision of suitable coverage in black spot areas, and in particular West Tyrone.

Mr Bell: The process for awarding spectrum licences for 5G mobile services has not yet been considered as the required spectrum is not yet available. The timeframe for the launch of 5G services remains uncertain although it is anticipated that commercial applications could emerge by 2020.

The decision on how and when the auction of appropriate spectrum will take place rests with Ofcom and it is their intention to consult on the process when it has been developed. DETI will, of course, give consideration to the need to respond to the consultation, when launched, and ensure that the interests of Northern Ireland's citizens are fully articulated.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the service quality of the broadband operators who provide services in locations that BT deem to be too far from an exchange; and how his Department will address the cost of broadband services in these locations.
(AQW 53473/11-16)

Mr Bell: The telecommunications market is fully privatised and independently regulated by Ofcom. As such, the quality of service provided by operators falls into their area of responsibility. All service providers that offer a retail service, whether it's over fixed line, satellite, or fixed wireless, are bound by Ofcom's General Conditions of Entitlement which can be found at <http://stakeholders.ofcom.org.uk/telecoms/ga-scheme/general-conditions/general-conditions-guidelines/>.

In addition, Ofcom produces quality of service league tables every quarter that highlight the best and worst providers based on complaints made to them. To date, due to their relatively small size, satellite and fixed wireless broadband providers have not yet figured in these reports.

The issue of cost for broadband services is a commercial matter and my Department has no powers to intervene. Notwithstanding that, on 22 January 2016, I announced the introduction of a satellite broadband support scheme which seeks to provide residents and businesses which have speeds below 2Mbps with the option of applying for a subsidy towards the cost of installing a satellite broadband connection. Details of the scheme, which falls under the auspices of the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP), can be found at <https://www.detini.gov.uk/articles/satellite-broadband-support-scheme-northern-ireland>.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the names of the telecom businesses that provide broadband services to households deemed to be too far from a BT exchange; to detail (i) the range of services they provide; and (ii) the cost per month and installation for their service, in West Tyrone.
(AQW 53474/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not hold or gather the information requested.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of areas in West Tyrone that receive an internet service of 1MB or less.

(AQW 53484/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not hold or gather the information requested.

Data on fixed broadband network coverage is collected by Ofcom which makes the information available through its triennial infrastructure reports and subsequent annual updates. The latest report, 'Connected Nations 2015' and associated data downloads can be found at <http://stakeholders.ofcom.org.uk/market-data-research/market-data/infrastructure/connected-nations-2015/>.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Review of Tourism Accommodation Policy 2015-2020.

(AQW 53557/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department, in conjunction with Invest NI and Tourism NI (TNI), has undertaken a review of its policy regarding the provision of support to tourist accommodation providers in Northern Ireland. In taking forward this review consideration has been given to the strategic vision for tourism to 2020 and the many policies and strategies underpinning that vision.

A stakeholder engagement exercise was undertaken and a formal consultation exercise on the key principles of a new tourist accommodation policy was undertaken in July 2015.

My officials have now developed an advanced draft policy which needs to be tested internally particularly given the recent developments in the accommodation sector in the last 6 months. In addition, as work on the development of a new Tourism Strategy for Northern Ireland progresses, it will be important to ensure alignment between the Tourist Accommodation Policy and the new strategic vision for tourism in Northern Ireland.

Departmental officials will continue to work in conjunction with Invest NI and Tourism NI in considering these issues and refining the Department's policy position regarding future Tourist Accommodation support. In the meantime Invest NI will continue to provide grant assistance to eligible projects under their current guidelines.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the impact a 12.5 per cent rate of corporation tax will have on employment levels in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 9584/11-16)

Mr Bell: There is a range of research which suggests that reducing corporation tax can have a significant impact on the economy and employment.

The latest research by Ulster University estimates that introducing a 12.5% rate from 2018 can create well in excess of 30,000 jobs over 15 years. However reducing Corporation tax is not just about creating jobs but also about rebalancing the economy and creating a larger private sector.

The research, which is expected to be published by spring 2016, also indicates that introducing a 12.5% rate from 2018 can help to grow our economy by almost 10% over 15 years.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what his Department can do to help reduce the cost of travelling by ferry from Belfast to Cairnryan, especially in light of the reduction of fuel prices.

(AQW 53625/11-16)

Mr Bell: Ferry companies operating the Belfast to Cairnryan route are private commercial entities and as such, the setting of fares is a commercial matter for these companies.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the 2016 Business Plan for Intertrade Ireland has been approved; and if not, how is continuing expenditure lawful.

(AQW 53647/11-16)

Mr Bell: InterTradeIreland's 2016 Business Plan has not yet been approved.

No payments have been made in respect of the Northern Ireland contribution of InterTradeIreland's 2016 budget.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the areas of East Londonderry where broadband speeds are 1MB or less.

(AQW 53668/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not hold or gather the information requested.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action he can take to help ensure that the 2017 Irish Open is staged at the Lough Erne Golf Resort.

(AQW 53701/11-16)

Mr Bell: The European Tour announced on 3 April 2014 that the Irish Open will return to Northern Ireland in 2015 and 2017 as part of a 4-year deal with the European Tour. Royal County Down Golf Club was announced as the venue for last year's event from 28 to 31 May 2015 and the Lough Erne Golf Resort as the venue in 2017.

The European Tour is currently undertaking a strategic review following the appointment of their new CEO Keith Pelley. The Irish Open as one of the largest tournaments in the European Tour forms a key part of this review process. Tourism NI is proactively liaising with European Tour officials to ascertain any potential impact of this review.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the areas of North Down where broadband speeds are 1MB or less.

(AQW 53752/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not hold or gather the information requested.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the grants available through his Department for the restoration, preservation and promotion of historical sites, locations and buildings, particularly those relating to World War 2.

(AQW 53754/11-16)

Mr Bell: There are currently no appropriate grant schemes open through my Department or Tourism NI for the restoration, preservation and promotion of historical sites, locations and buildings.

The recording, protecting, conserving and promoting of built heritage is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the number of jobs created by InvestNI in West Tyrone in 2015.

(AQO 9600/11-16)

Mr Bell: The latest available information relates to the financial year 2014-15.

During this period Invest NI helped to create three hundred and four new jobs through its support for customers based in the West Tyrone constituency area.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the support available to emerging social economy hotels in West Belfast, including the Shankill area.

(AQO 9601/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI support for hotel projects, regardless of location, ranges from advisory to financial assistance in areas such as Skills, Energy Efficiency, E-business, People, Strategy and Market Research, with the type and level of engagement being tailored to the needs and capability of the business seeking assistance.

In addition to this, hotels in areas designated as New Targeting Social Need can also seek to avail of support via capital grant.

Additional support may also be available via the local councils following the transfer of some economic functions, including support for social enterprises, to councils under Local Government Reform.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the status of broadband services in East Antrim.

(AQO 9602/11-16)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project. This is primarily aimed at rural areas and seeks to extend the availability of primarily basic and where possible superfast broadband to those who have limited choice, across Northern Ireland with a target of forty five thousand premises. The project was scheduled to complete by 31 December 2015. However, due to its engineering complexity, the completion date has been extended by three months to 31 March 2016.

Improvements have already been carried out for over forty thousand premises across Northern Ireland. This includes almost two thousand premises in postcode areas falling within the East Antrim constituency.

On 22 January 2016, I announced the introduction of a satellite broadband support scheme which falls under the auspices of the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project and seeks to provide residents and businesses which are still experiencing speeds below 2Megabits per second with the option of applying for a subsidy of up to three hundred and fifty pounds towards the cost of installing a satellite broadband connection. Details on the scheme, including eligibility criteria, can be found on the DETI website.

Recognising that the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT, for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme.

This project, which again has a primarily rural focus, will provide superfast broadband improvements for almost thirty nine thousand premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform, as it becomes available.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Renewable Heat Incentive.
(AQO 9603/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Renewable Heat Incentive, (RHI), introduced in November 2012 to the non-domestic sector and in December 2014 to the domestic sector has been taken up very successfully.

With over 3,500 renewable heating installations incentivised to date, uptake has been higher than GB. We've exceeded the Executive's 2015 target of 4% with around 6% of Northern Ireland's heating needs now provided through renewable heating technologies.

Over the last 18 months the number of non-domestic RHI applications has grown from around 200 to over 1,800. Over 900 of these applications were received in the run up to the scheme changes I introduced on 18 November 2015. However, this, together with reductions in available funding means we now face significant budgetary pressures.

In the circumstances I have no choice but to propose immediate closure of the scheme to prevent further overspend. The urgent need to manage the financial risk means that I must bring forward the legislation at the earliest possible juncture.

I have laid the draft regulations and tabled the motion for debate, and I will be asking the Business Committee to schedule the debate for 15 February.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project which was due for completion in December 2015.
(AQO 9604/11-16)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project. This is primarily aimed at rural areas and seeks to extend the availability of primarily basic and where possible superfast broadband to those who have limited choice, across Northern Ireland with a target of forty five thousand premises. The project was scheduled to complete by 31 December 2015. However, due to its engineering complexity, the completion date has been extended by three months to 31 March 2016.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to the recent announcement that the BBC Good Food Show will be in Belfast in October 2016 as part of the Northern Ireland Year of Food and Drink 2016, for his assessment of the impact current licensing laws will have on the viability and financing of the event.

Mr Bell: The BBC Good Food Show Northern Ireland will be held in the Belfast Waterfront from the 14th to the 16th of October 2016.

Whilst there is no direct impact regarding licencing of the show, as the Waterfront Hall has a conference centre licence which permits alcohol sales inside the premises, I am aware of issues around suppliers at the show not being able to sell alcoholic products for consumption off the premises.

The Department for Social Development is responsible for licensing in Northern Ireland. I am advised that, even if there was a political will to amend the categories of premises which are permitted to sell alcohol for consumption off the premises, there would still be insufficient time to consult on proposals and amend the legislation in time for this event.

However, I have asked Tourism NI and other stakeholders to work with the event organisers to ensure that opportunities presented by the BBC Good Food Show being hosted in Northern Ireland can still be maximised, given the current restrictions presented by this issue.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on his Department's support for activities in North Down in relation to the Northern Ireland Year of Food and Drink 2016.

(AQO 9607/11-16)

Mr Bell: Northern Ireland's Year of Food and Drink 2016 will celebrate epic landscapes, traditions and people that make our food heritage so unique. With 366 days of foodie experiences, there will be no better time for visitors to enjoy a true taste of Northern Ireland.

In direct relation to North Down, I can advise that applications for funding and support from Tourism NI have been received from organisers in the area.

Successful applicants will be listed on the Tourism NI website from April 2016.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how he will ensure that the Route Development Fund will be in place before the end of March 2016.

(AQO 9608/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department has been exploring how funding can be used to best effect to support air connectivity to key markets. The focus of this funding would be to enhance air connectivity as a driver for economic growth and develop the economy through prioritising business travel and inbound tourism connectivity for Northern Ireland.

It is important that any funding for new air routes meets the requirements of Northern Ireland but also European Union state aid rules. Funding is also dependent upon financial constraints and Executive approval.

It is my intention to announce the way forward in respect of air route development funding before the end of the financial year.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment ,pursuant to AQW 51671/11-16, (i) whether the European eel is protected by European law; (ii) for his assessment of the importance of Lough Neagh for this species; and (iii) why any reference to eels was omitted from his initial answer.

(AQW 53306/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The European Eel (Anguilla Anguilla) is not listed under Annexes II, IV or V of the Habitats Directive (92/43/EEC) and is, therefore, not protected by this European law. It was hence omitted in my answer (AQW 51671/11-16) previously.

The European Eel Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) 1100/2007) requires member states to establish measures for the recovery of the stock of European eel. This regulation was adopted in NI under the Eel Fishing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2010 and came into operation on 1st June 2010. The implementation of these regulations requires the introduction of eel management plans (EMPs) and is the responsibility of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, whom I would refer you to for further information.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment ,pursuant to AQW 51590/11-16, to detail the number of times the Environmental Liability Directive has been used by his Department to protect species listed in Annex 2 of the Habitats Directive.

(AQW 53339/11-16)

Mr Durkan: To date the Department has not undertaken any associated enforcement actions relating to species listed in Annex 2 of the Habitats Directive. The majority of current protection measures for these species have been delivered through the planning system and other environmental regulatory systems.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether the rule under PPS 21 requiring that a farm business be established for a minimum of six years before planning permission can be considered applies to agricultural buildings or only applies to applications for domestic buildings in rural settings.

(AQW 53377/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Member will be aware of the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) which I published on the 28 September last year. It consolidates, updates and improves where appropriate, the existing suite of planning policy statements, including the provisions of PPS 21: Sustainable Development in the Countryside (June 2010). However, it should be noted that under the transitional arrangements set out within the SPPS, extant planning policy statements, including PPS 21, are retained during a transitional period whilst councils bring forward their local development plans.

The SPPS (and PPS 21) allows for a dwelling on a farm business which is currently active and has been established for a minimum 6 years. Likewise, the SPPS also allows for development, such as agricultural buildings, on an active and established agricultural holding which has been established for a minimum 6 years.

Having listened carefully to the views expressed during the development of the SPPS, I have asked my officials to commence a review of strategic planning policy for 'Development in the Countryside' which will include the matters you have raised. Preparatory work is already now underway. This review will offer all stakeholders an opportunity to influence the future direction of strategic planning policy for development in the countryside.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether there are any plans to review the six year rule under PPS 21 that requires an active and established farm to provide an exemption to the minimum time requirement where it can be established that the permission for an agricultural building is required on the grounds of animal welfare.

Mr Durkan: The Member will be aware of the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) which I published on the 28 September last year. The SPPS consolidates, updates and improves where appropriate, the existing suite of planning policy statements, including the provisions of PPS21: Sustainable Development in the Countryside (June 2010). However, it should be noted that under the transitional arrangements set out within the SPPS, extant planning policy statements, such as PPS21, are retained during a transitional period whilst councils bring forward their Local Development Plans (LDPs).

The SPPS (and PPS 21) allows that provision should be made for development, such as agricultural buildings, on an active and established agricultural holding which has been established for a minimum 6 years.

Although current policy does not contain an exemption on grounds of animal welfare, when assessing applications for agricultural buildings, factors such as accommodating livestock, farming equipment or farm produce are important considerations which need to be balanced in the round, having regard to relevant policy, the particular circumstances of the case, and all other material considerations. The relevance of and weight to be attached to each material consideration, such as the six year rule, is a matter of planning judgement for the decision maker. If the material considerations are such that a planning authority departs from policy, it must give clear reasons for doing so.

Having listened carefully to the views expressed during the development of the SPPS, I have asked my officials to commence a review of strategic planning policy for 'Development in the Countryside' which will include consideration of the policy requirements for agricultural buildings. Preparatory work is already now underway. This review will offer all stakeholders an opportunity to influence the future direction of strategic planning policy for development in the countryside.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51590/11-16, whether his Department has ever implemented any of the regulations listed in Annex 2 of the Habitats Directive to specifically protect aquatic species occurring in Lough Neagh.

(AQW 53445/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My earlier reply for AQW 51590/11-16 outlined a range of instruments used by my Department to safeguard Annex II aquatic species in Lough Neagh, including a number of regulations, as detailed below.

Two of the species mentioned above are listed as species that may not be taken or killed in certain ways under the Conservation (Natural Habitats etc) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 (as amended): Atlantic salmon (Salmo salar) and River lamprey (Lampetra fluviatilis).

In relation to the protection of ASSI features, the provisions of the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 are already implemented through the consideration of related planning and consent/assent casework.

Three of the Annex II species in Lough Neagh are included in the current NI priority species listed (published in April 2010) under the Wildlife and Natural Environment (NI) Act 2011: White-clawed crayfish (Austropotamobius pallipes); River lamprey (Lampetra fluviatilis); and Atlantic salmon (Salmo salar). This places a duty on all public bodies to further the conservation of biodiversity when exercising any functions.

The Water Environment (Water Framework Directive) Regulations Northern Ireland 2003 provided the enabling powers to develop River Basin Management Plans which set out the measures required to meet good status, thus contributing to the protection of Annex 2 species. The Department has recently published the second cycle River Basin Management Plans for 2015-2021.

To date, the Department has not undertaken any enforcement actions under the Environmental Liability (Prevention and Remediation) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009, in relation to species listed in Annex 2 of the Habitats Directive (AQW 53339/11-16).

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment following the rejection of the Rose Energy Project, whether he or any of his officials have taken part in Pre-Application Discussions for a proposal for a new waste incinerator to deal with Northern Ireland's chicken litter problem, and if so, to identify the proposed location to which any discussion related.

Mr Durkan: My officials met with a developer in June 2015 for preliminary discussions on the environmental regulation requirements for an energy-from-waste facility burning chicken litter however I understand that the developer no longer considers this to be a viable proposal.

I also wish to advise the Rose Energy planning applications are subject to a conjoined hearing before the Planning Appeals Commission in respect of two Notice of Opinion issued to refuse, dated 23 January 2013. The Department is awaiting further environmental information (FEI) to be submitted from the applicant. On receipt of any FEI, the information will be subject to the necessary statutory requirements around publicity and consultation with those bodies likely to be concerned by the development, by reason of their specific environmental responsibility, prior to the PAC reconvening a hearing. Once the hearing has taken place, the Commission will prepare a report to the Department prior to a final decision being taken. The final decision rests with the Department.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment what funding is available to assist with refurbishing derelict homes in Armagh City.

(AQW 53511/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Dereliction Intervention Funding Scheme was introduced in March 2012 to provide councils with funding to enhance and improve the cosmetic and aesthetic appearance of an area, whether it is a city, town, village or neighbourhood. Since its inception some £4.25m has been allocated to councils by the Programme.

In March 2014 the department invited all councils to bid for any dereliction funding which might become available in 2014/2015. Unfortunately and disappointingly, no such funding became available to support the Dereliction Programme that year.

My Department has a grant-aid scheme to assist with the costs of eligible repairs for most listed buildings. However, due to constraints on my budget, I have not been in a position to allocate any monies to new letters of offer for listed building grant-aid in this financial year.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment whether any plans exist to sell or transfer ownership of Redburn or Crawfordsburn Country Parks in North Down.

(AQW 53515/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that my Department has no plans to sell or transfer ownership of its lands at Redburn or Crawfordsburn Country Parks.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of the Environment why Northern Ireland is the only region in these islands without climate change legislation.

(AQW 53521/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I would refer the Member to the response I gave at topical question time on 26 January 2016. (AQT 3399/11-16).

I have consistently advocated the introduction of climate change legislation in Northern Ireland, as I believe it would provide greater clarity and the long term certainty which business and industry need, and it would create the environment to drive and encourage innovation and jobs.

I would however reemphasise that climate change is a cross cutting issue and therefore requires the full support of the Executive to introduce Northern Ireland climate change legislation.

While it was evident from climate change debates in the Assembly on 24 February 2014 and 30 November 2015 that there was considerable support for progressing legislation, unfortunately I do not have the full backing from Ministerial Colleagues on this issue. Regrettably this has meant that I was not in a position to introduce climate change legislation in this Assembly term.

I do not believe it is right that we are now the only part of these islands without our own legislation on this, the most important of issues. That is why I will continue to engage widely and seek the evidence which I hope will address concerns and convince people of the benefits. I set out my proposals for taking forward Northern Ireland climate change legislation in the discussion document that I issued on 1 December and have received a good response. I also recently met with a representative from the UK Climate Change Committee to discuss their update on the appropriateness of a NI Climate Change Act.

I intend to consider the views and advice coming from these exercises, the outcome from COP21 and the work that has been undertaken on climate change during my term of office. This will assist me in producing a robust evidence base that I intend to bring to my Ministerial Colleagues on the need to take forward climate change legislation in the next assembly term.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51590/11-16, whether his Department has ever implemented any of the regulations listed in order to specifically protect Annex II aquatic species in the context of their occurrence in Lough Neagh.

(AQW 53551/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My earlier reply for AQW 51590/11-16 outlined a range of instruments used by my Department to safeguard Annex II aquatic species in Lough Neagh, including a number of regulations, as detailed below.

Two of the species mentioned above are listed as species that may not be taken or killed in certain ways under the Conservation (Natural Habitats etc) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 (as amended): Atlantic salmon (Salmo salar) and River lamprey (Lampetra fluviatilis).

In relation to the protection of ASSI features, the provisions of the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 are already implemented through the consideration of related planning and consent/assent casework.

Three of the Annex II species in Lough Neagh are included in the current NI priority species listed (published in April 2010) under the Wildlife and Natural Environment (NI) Act 2011: White-clawed crayfish (Austropotamobius pallipes); River lamprey (Lampetra fluviatilis); and Atlantic salmon (Salmo salar). This places a duty on all public bodies to further the conservation of biodiversity when exercising any functions.

The Water Environment (Water Framework Directive) Regulations Northern Ireland 2003 provided the enabling powers to develop River Basin Management Plans which set out the measures required to meet good status, thus contributing to the protection of Annex 2 species. The Department has recently published the second cycle River Basin Management Plans for 2015-2021.

To date, the Department has not undertaken any enforcement actions under the Environmental Liability (Prevention and Remediation) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009, in relation to species listed in Annex 2 of the Habitats Directive (AQW 53339/11-16).

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, given the River Faughan has experienced two severe floods in the last four weeks, for his assessment of the risks posed by flood water to the highly contaminated settlement lagoons located on the flood plain at 91 Glenshane Road, Durmahoe, Derry.

Mr Durkan: These lagoons are used to catch and hold rainwater and other run-off from a concrete and block yard, which is then re-circulated as process water within the site and is not discharged to the river. While previous sampling of the water in the lagoons has shown them to have an elevated alkalinity, this is as expected given the nature of the concrete processes on site. The processes on site do not otherwise involve the use of any known toxic materials, and analysis of samples from the lagoons has not shown the presence of any chemicals which would be considered especially toxic.

While these two lagoons are situated approximately 10 metres from the river, they are robust structures with walls a number of metres thick at the base, they are situated on elevated ground and they are a significant height above river level. These lagoons have been in their current position for approximately 15 years and, in that time, the Department is not aware of any significant breach or failure, whether due to flooding in the river or to any other cause.

Given that these lagoons have been unaffected by approximately 15 years of floods in the River Faughan, including the record high water levels in many watercourses over the past few months, and have caused no known incidents over that period, the risk of them being affected by flooding is demonstrably low.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the peak water levels recorded at the Drumahoe automatic gauge during each of the recent severe flooding incidents on the River Faughan; and to detail the level at which the highly contaminated settlement lagoons located on the flood plain at 91 Glenshane Road are considered to be at risk from flood water.

Mr Durkan: The information requested is held by the Department of Agriculture & Rural Development's Rivers Agency and the question should ideally be directed there.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration he has given to (i) paperless receipts; and (ii) the costs and environmental impact associated with paper receipts, in bringing forward the new taxi regulations.
(AQW 53620/11-16)

Mr Durkan: In the new taxi regulations relating to Taximeters, Printers & Maximum Fares, as long as the customer also has an option of receiving a printed receipt, there is nothing to stop the driver providing an emailed receipt if that is the customer preference.

I am on record as indicating that, given the period of time since the enactment of the Taxis Act (NI) 2008, it is right and proper that the Act should be subject to a full review, along with all the supporting subordinate legislation. This matter will fall to the new Minister for the Department for Infrastructure to progress. I am sure they will wish to reengage with the taxi industry and other key stakeholders to ensure the legislation is fit for purpose and to identify any areas where amendment may be considered of benefit. In my view, the area of paperless receipts should be included in the review.

In terms of the environmental impact you refer to, I have taken the decision to implement an 'offer and print' policy, where no receipt is required if the customer has been offered one and clearly declined. This is an alternative to the 'print and offer' approach that could lead to a large number of unwanted receipts being printed.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the implications of the new taxi regulations, including costs; and how he intends to address the issue of dead miles.
(AQW 53622/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The new taxi regulations will result in a more professional, modern and fit for purpose taxi industry. They make using a legal taxi safer and more convenient and transparent for consumers – all the things the Taxis Act was designed to address. Receipts printed directly from an approved taximeter, provide the passenger with the necessary information in the event of a complaint of being overcharged. The regulations also ensure that people with disabilities using a taxi will benefit from new standards including making it easier to board and alight and improved internal safety requirements.

The cost to my Department to date for the implementation of the Taxi Regulations is £388,861.68. This figure covers expenses such as research undertaken by consultants, costs relating to the public consultation exercises that have been undertaken as well as advertising and publicity costs.

This figure does not include the associated staffing cost as this cannot be readily separated from other unrelated day to day work.

As for the cost to the taxi industry the market average price for both a printer and meter is approximately £350 including fitting. The taxi operator/driver can also recover the VAT if they are registered. A fee of £35 is to be paid for the taximeter test. The taximeter test fee will be paid in Year 1, and only thereafter when a meter is replaced or the fare changed or the seal broken, rather than every year.

The issue of dead miles was considered when the proposed tariff was being developed and subsequently consulted on in 2011/12. Whilst dead miles are included in the tariff, there have been concerns raised with the Department in recent weeks indicating that the tariff does not adequately address the issue.

My Department has undertaken some further research into the issue and I have accepted that there is an issue to address. Therefore my officials are currently examining this matter in conjunction with the Departments legal advisors. I have committed to the Environment Committee that a legislative amendment will be made within this Assembly mandate to ensure that no negative impact is experienced by taxi operators or customers in rural areas. I expect to be able to advise the Committee of my intended course of action before the end of February 2016.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment, in the light of recent widespread flooding incidents, what progress his Department has made in the development of a Northern Ireland Land Use Strategy to help reduce the risks and impacts of flooding.
(AQW 53640/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department is considering the feasibility of a land use strategy following the work undertaken by the NI Land Matters Taskforce set up by the NI Environment Link and in the context of other land use initiatives. In particular, officials are examining how such a strategy would fit with the objectives of an agricultural land use strategy which includes enhancement of the environment in its overall aims. I understand that a report on a draft agricultural land use strategy is currently in preparation.

I have met with members of the Land Matters Taskforce, and I welcome in principle their proposals to achieve an integrated approach to sustainable land use. However, I recognise that developing an overarching land use strategy which addresses major issues such as flooding will be a complex task. A wide range of stakeholders and departments will have an interest in determining the outcome of such an initiative and it will require Executive approval. With this in mind, there is limited scope for taking the matter forward in the remainder of this Assembly's mandate. I have therefore asked officials to work closely with Taskforce members to develop proposals for the new DAERA Minister to initially consider early in the new mandate.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of the Environment what evidence his Department has that drilling by Infra-Strata beside the NI Water facility at Woodburn Forest, Carrickfergus, is not having an adverse affect on the water quality.
(AQW 53654/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The project has not commenced. Once the project does begin my officials in NIEA will implement a water quality monitoring program around the site.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how much his Department spent on rates support in each of the last five years.
(AQW 53661/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The detail on how much my Department has spent on Rates Support Grant in each of the last five complete years is listed in the table below.

2010/2011	2011/2012	2012/2013	2013/2014	2014/2015
19,497,000	19,497,000	18,327,000	18,327,000	18,327,000

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how much each council will receive in rates support grants in 2016-17.
(AQW 53662/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Although the budget allocated to functions currently in my Department was cut by 5.7% for next year, I am protecting the Rates Support Grant budget from this and maintaining it at £18.3 million. This grant is an important financial support to less well off councils. On 27 January 2016, I wrote to the council Chief Executives to inform them of their councils' Rates Support Grant allocations for 2016/17. The details of the Rates Support Grant allocations are provided in the table below.

Rates Support Grant Allocations 2016/17

District Council	Rates Support Grant 2016/17
Antrim and Newtownabbey	0
Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon	3,735,096
Belfast	0
Causeway Coast and Glens	2,390,519
Derry and Strabane	3,884,730
Fermanagh and Omagh	1,541,979
Lisburn and Castlereagh	0
Mid and East Antrim	1,184,472
Mid Ulster	2,966,485
Newry, Mourne and Down	2,596,719
Ards and North Down	0
Total	18,300,000

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the best practice, recommended methodologies and materials employed for the prevention of coastal erosion in areas such as Magilligan and Portrush.

(AQW 53747/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The coast forms part of a highly dynamic system. As such, it will be subject periodically to the natural process of coastal erosion. This is particularly true of sandy beaches and dune systems that exist in areas such as Magilligan and Portrush.

The management of any given area will depend on a range of factors such as the nature and value of the site at risk, the coastal processes affecting it and the area's nature conservation interests. It is these factors that will influence the most appropriate response, such as whether there should be non-intervention through to the construction of coastal defences.

Therefore, you will appreciate that it is extremely difficult to be definitive about best practice, recommended methodologies and materials, as these will differ depending on the specific circumstances.

My Department, as the marine licensing authority, receives applications for construction/development proposals that are planned up to the high water mark. As part of the pre-application and licensing process, it will consider the factors outlined above and, through consultation with statutory bodies and relevant experts, provide guidance on the environmental information or reports required to accompany an application.

You mention the Magilligan and Portrush areas, where large parts of the shore – and, indeed, other sections of the coast - are designated as Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI), Special Areas of Conservation (SAC) and Special Protection Areas (SPA).

In those areas, a private landowner or Competent Authority, who is undertaking, permitting or authorising coastal defences, must first obtain written permission from the Department, and, if the works are on or adjacent to a SAC or SPA, complete a Habitats Regulations Assessment. This assesses the implications of all plans or projects that would be capable of affecting the designated features of European sites before a decision could be taken on whether to undertake, permit or authorise such plans or projects.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how long he has been aware of a direct hydrological link between Mobouy Road illegal landfill site and the River Faughan and Tributaries Special Area of Conservation.

(AQW 53809/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Back in 2004, my Department issued two consents under the terms of the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 permitting discharge of site drainage from the Campsie Sand and Gravel site at Mobouy Road into the River Faughan. After the consent holder went into administration and the quarrying activity stopped to which the consents related, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) removed both consents from its sampling rota in 2014.

My Department however, continues to monitor these discharge points as part of its monthly survey of the Campsie Sands and Gravel site. On the majority of occasions, no discharges are observed from these points at the time of survey. However, when there is a discharge at the time of survey, samples are taken at the discharge point and analysed. There have been no reported failures to date of either discharge consent.

My Department continues to monitor water quality in the River Faughan in addition to its ongoing environmental monitoring of groundwater and surface water across the Mobyuoy waste site.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment whether within PPS 21, applicable policy is contained exclusively within the policy text boxes in each case and does not include what is specified in the justification and amplification sections.
(AQW 53960/11-16)

Mr Durkan: When exercising their development management responsibilities planning authorities should assess development proposals against all prevailing planning policies and all other material considerations. The planning policies contained within the SPPS and PPS 21 should be read together and in conjunction with other relevant policy publications, the local development plan and all other material considerations relevant to the particular case.

The individual policies set out in the text boxes in PPS 21 should be read in conjunction with the associated Justification and Amplification, the purpose of which is to elucidate the policy and assist in its interpretation. The Justification and Amplification is therefore an important material consideration also, which should be taken into account by planning authorities in the determination of individual planning applications.

It is worth noting, however, that the relevance of and weight to be attached to all aspects of planning policy and all other material considerations is a matter of planning judgement for the decision maker. It is also worth noting that the interpretation of planning policy is constantly being refined and informed by decisions of the Planning Appeals Commission and court judgements on planning matters.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail which Departments (i) pay pensions due in December up to one week early; (ii) pay pensions that are due on first of each month late when the due date falls on a Saturday, Sunday or public holiday.
(AQW 52605/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): My department has responsibly for making pension payments in respect of the Civil Service Pension Scheme only. I have therefore obtained the detail provided on other schemes from the relevant departments.

DfP, DHSSPS, DE and DoE pay pensions up to one week early in December for Civil Servants, Health and Social Care staff, Teachers and Local Government workers respectively. All these pensions are normally paid on the last banking day each month.

The Fire fighters scheme pays on the first of each month. DHSSPS has advised that when the due date falls on a Saturday, Sunday or Public Holiday, these pensions will pay on the last banking day prior to the due date.

DoJ has advised that information on the Police Scheme should be obtained from the PSNI.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a breakdown of the anticipated allocation of the £4.5m held for a number of cross cutting reform projects, including each project agreed by the Executive and the savings expected.
(AQW 53197/11-16)

Mr Storey: There are 30 projects included in the Cross Cutting Reform Programme and financial assistance was sought for 19 projects. Following an assessment process the NICS Board have endorsed the allocation of the funding to 15 projects.

The funding allocated is for 2016/17 only and is to undertake project feasibility and assessment. Anticipated levels of savings will be determined as part of this process.

A breakdown of the funding for each project is in the attached table.

Project No	Project Title	Allocation £'000
Project 1	Public Sector Share Services Programme	£596,000
Project 2	Centralise retained HR to a HR Centre of Excellence for NICS	£51,000

Project 8	Equip the citizen with the facility to contact NICS to report, book, find, pay or request services e.g. "tell us once"	£65,000
Project 9	Expand online services for the citizen	£700,000
Project 10	Greater use of nudge / behavioural insights techniques to reduce costs	£70,000
Project 12	Expansion of the Asset Management Strategy	£365,000

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether civil marriage is a good, facility or service.
(AQW 53228/11-16)

Mr Storey: Marriage, both civil and religious, is a legally recognised union between a man and a woman.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he will install a defibrillator in Stormont Estate.
(AQW 53233/11-16)

Mr Storey: Defibrillators are currently available in the following buildings on the Stormont Estate:

- Parliament Buildings;
- Castle Buildings;
- Craigantlet Buildings;
- Stormont Castle; and
- NI Civil Service Sports Association Pavilion complex.

Responsibility for the purchase, maintenance and staff training rests with the Department which has overall responsibility for each building.

There are currently no defibrillators located in the parkland areas of the Estate and I have asked my officials to explore options for providing defibrillators in these areas.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how the projected level of indebtedness in 2016-17 compares with the other devolved regions in terms of per head of population.
(AQW 53260/11-16)

Mr Storey: We do not hold 2016-17 level of indebtedness for other devolved regions.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, following the publication of a report by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy which states that locally we have greater assets than we have liabilities, whether he has had, or plans to have, any discussions with the Treasury regarding the local tax take, assets and liabilities.
(AQW 53337/11-16)

Mr Storey: I regularly engage with Her Majesty's Treasury on a broad range of public finance issues, as do my officials.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of domestic properties that have been re-valued due to a disabled persons allowance rate relief scheme being completed on their property, broken down by council.
(AQW 53374/11-16)

Mr Storey: The requested information cannot be provided as Land & Property Services (LPS) does not record this data. Where properties have been adapted to meet the needs of a disabled person, a revision of the rateable value would normally only be required where an extension, new building or major refurbishment has taken place. Most alterations for a disabled person are internal and do not require to be revalued before an award of Disabled Persons Allowance can be made.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) number; and (ii) percentage of businesses in North Down that are currently eligible for small business rate relief.
(AQW 53488/11-16)

Mr Storey: Small Business Rate Relief is automatically awarded to all eligible businesses. At 31st December 2015, there were (i) 980 non-domestic properties in North Down currently benefitting from Small Business Rate Relief, representing (ii) 35.5% of all non-domestic properties in North Down.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 52719/11-16, whether the mechanism agreed on the block grant adjustment will be made public and what transparency will attend this process.
(AQW 53490/11-16)

Mr Storey: In preparing to deliver the Executive's commitment to a 12.5% rate of Corporation Tax from April 2018, my Department continues to engage with the UK Government to progress a number of key issues, including the precise mechanism for adjusting the Northern Ireland Block Grant. While I am not yet at the point where I can present the detail on this as it has not been agreed, I will continue to seek to ensure that this work is as transparent as possible and that it delivers a fair and proportionate adjustment for Northern Ireland.

(AQW 53670/11-16)

Mr Storey: In the current rating year to date (1st April 2015 to 31st January 2016), 160 people living in the East Londonderry Parliamentary Constituency area applied for Lone Pensioner Allowance from Land & Property Services (LPS). Of those who applied, 149 received a successful outcome to their application.

(AQW 53698/11-16)

Mr Storey: Liability for non-domestic rates is based on the occupancy status of non-domestic properties and therefore has no regard to the trading status of the occupier/owner of the property. Therefore the information requested is not available.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what in-year cuts have been made to community and voluntary sector funding; and how this compares to cuts to other services.

(AQW 53728/11-16)

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the future plans for Stewart Memorial House care home, Bangor.

(AQW 50330/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Board of Trustees of the Northern Ireland Institute for the Disabled (NIID), who run Stewart Memorial House (SMH), advised the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust on 28 January 2016 of its decision to close SMH with a three month period of notice.

The South Eastern HSC Trust is working with each individual resident and their family to ensure that all are appropriately resettled into alternative placements. I also understand that NIID has commissioned independent advocacy services from Bryson House should anyone require that additional support.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the reasoning behind his decision to abolish the Health and Social Care Board while retaining the Public Health Agency.

(AQW 50629/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have decided to consult on closing the Health and Social Care Board to remove some of the many layers of administration in our system that currently delay our response to the growing challenges of rising demand, rising expectations and tightening finances and to bring greater accountability and responsiveness to Health and Social Care.

I want the PHA to renew its focus on early intervention and prevention, working more closely alongside my Department. These early interventions include regional screening and vaccination programmes. I believe the best way to maintain a strong focus on them is to maintain an expert Public Health Agency.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how he intends to spend the extra £47.6m allocated to his Department through the November monitoring round.

Mr Hamilton: £40m was allocated to Elective Care to provide additional assessments and treatments across a range of specialties including gastroenterology, orthopaedics, ophthalmology, dermatology, ENT, urology, vascular, neurology and others. A further £6m was allocated for unscheduled care and other essential frontline services and will be used to manage increased demand during the busy winter months and for providing investments in TYC, the Family Fund, Insulin Pumps and children's services. £1.6m was also allocated to psychological therapies to support cognitive behaviour therapy, counselling, family support and psycho-analytic therapies.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps have been taken to address the staffing issues in the Emergency Department of Musgrave Park Hospital.

Mr Hamilton: It is assumed this question relates to the Mater Hospital Emergency Department.

Recruitment of Emergency Department staff is a matter for the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, and the Trust is currently advertising for consultant specialty doctors, advance nurse practitioners and associate practitioners.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he (i) accepts the recommendation of the independent pay review body; and (ii) will implement the one per cent pay award.

(AQW 51251/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The NHS Pay Review Body has not made any recommendations on the 2015/16 pay award. Its 2014/15 recommendation was considered in the context of the prevailing financial constraints and viewed unaffordable.
- (ii) As announced on 8 January 2016, and subject to the necessary approvals, all eligible health and social care staff will be awarded with either incremental progression or a 1% non-consolidated payment in respect of 2015/16 but not both.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his future plans to utilise Financial Transaction Capital within his Department.

(AQW 51366/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Financial Transaction Capital can only be deployed as a loan or equity investment in a private sector entity.

I expect FTC to continue to be utilised to finance the existing GP loan infrastructure scheme. In addition, my officials are considering a number of other potential opportunities to utilise FTC to support the HSC. These include: future primary care projects; joint developments with local councils; community led social enterprise development schemes; and health related research and development.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he will support the residents of the seven Four Seasons care homes proposed for closure.

(AQW 51448/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware that negotiations have been completed between Four Seasons and two Independent Care Home providers in Northern Ireland in respect of Oakridge care home and Antrim care home, and the sale of Hamilton Court (Armagh) is almost completed. The remaining four homes are scheduled for closure.

My Department continues to work closely with colleagues in the Health and Social Care Board, Health and Social Care Trusts, the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority and Four Seasons Health Care in implementing plans to manage the transition to alternative care arrangements. The aim is to ensure that any relocation will be managed with minimal disruption to residents, and that they are able to remain as close to their original location as possible. The continued well-being of residents is the priority in dealing with the transition to alternative arrangements.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the Department for Education initiative to appoint a mental health champion in England, to detail whether he has given any consideration to appointing mental health champions in each Executive Department.

(AQW 51458/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The current Bamford Action Plan sets out the Executive's continuing commitment to improving the mental health and wellbeing of the population of Northern Ireland, and to driving service improvement for those with mental health needs. An evaluation of the plan is under way, and will be concluded in spring 2016. It will consider recommendations for the future delivery of initiatives by the Executive for those with mental health needs. The appointment of mental health champions by Executive Departments will be considered as part of this exercise.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail in percentage terms, the under performance in elective care treatments in the last three years.

Mr Hamilton: At September 2015, the Ministerial target in relation to inpatient treatment states that at least 65% of inpatients and day cases are treated within 13 weeks and no patient waits longer than 26 weeks. In order to achieve the target, less than 35% of patients should be waiting longer than 13 weeks.

At September 2014, the Ministerial target in relation to inpatient treatment stated that at least 80% of inpatients and day cases should be treated within 13 weeks and no patient should wait longer than 26 weeks. In order to achieve the target, less than 20% of patients should have been waiting longer than 13 weeks.

At September 2013, the Ministerial target in relation to inpatient treatment stated that from April 2013 at least 70% of inpatients and day cases should be treated within 13 weeks and no patient should wait longer than 30 weeks. In order to achieve the target, less than 30% of patients should have been waiting longer than 13 weeks.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why free home test HIV kits are not available locally from www.test.hiv as they are in England.

(AQW 51748/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Free HIV testing is available from GPs or sexual health services. An HIV home sampling kit service managed by Public Health England has targeted groups at increased risk of HIV over several weeks in England only. There are no plans at present to trial such a service here. In Northern Ireland community based testing services are provided by voluntary organizations.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given a number of medical workforce planning reviews commissioned by his Department in 2006, 2009 and 2012 recommended an increase in GP training places and in 2014 recommended progressive increases in GP training numbers from 65 to 111, to detail why he not prioritised this issue and agreed to the urgently needed increase in GP training places for the 2016/2017 intake.

Mr Hamilton: Following consideration of the most recent GP Workforce Plan I am pleased to confirm that I have increased the annual GP training programme in Northern Ireland in 2016/17 by making a further 20 training places available from August 2016.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the time and date he received a letter or email from Consultant Nephrologists and Transplant Surgeons in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust with regard to the Private Members Bill on changes to the arrangements for organ donation.

Mr Hamilton: The letter from the Belfast Trust Consultant Nephrologists and Transplant Surgeons, regarding the "Private Members Bill on changes to the arrangements for Organ Donation", was received by email in my Private Office on 12 November 2015.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of personnel impacted by the Pension Ombudsman ruling in May 2015 on the Fire Fighters Pension Scheme in Northern Ireland; (ii) the total amounts owed to retired Fire Fighters; and (iii) when they should expect to receive payments owed.

(AQW 52021/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The number of NIFRS personnel impacted by the Pension Ombudsman ruling in May 2015 on the Firefighters' Pension Scheme in Northern Ireland is 188.
- (ii) The total amount owed to retired Firefighters is currently estimated at £2.44M
- (iii) To date the Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service has made payments to 185 of the 188 retired officers affected.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to detail how the number of local GP training places available annually compares to (a) England; (b) Scotland; and (c) Wales; and (ii) whether he plans to bring Northern Ireland into parity with other regions of the United Kingdom.

(AQW 52067/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The number of GP training places available annually across the United Kingdom is detailed below:
 - England – 3235 places: one per 16,383 of the population
 - Wales – 136 places: one per 22,500 of the population
 - Scotland – 317 places: one per 16,719 of the population
 - Northern Ireland – 65 places: one per 27,846 of the population.
- (ii) I have increased the number of available GP training places annually in Northern Ireland to 85, to commence in August 2016. This increases the ration of training places to one per 21,294 of the population.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what analysis has been carried out by his Department to predict accurately the future requirements for the services of GPs locally.

(AQW 52068/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A Workforce Review of General Practitioners has been carried out which suggests a number of recommendations, one of which is increased training numbers of GPs over a four year period. I am pleased to confirm that I have increased the annual GP training programme in Northern Ireland in 2016/17 by making a further 20 training places available from August 2016. However, the number of GPs engaged across HSC is only one of a range of considerations in addressing the pressures on primary care services. For example, it will be important to develop new ways of working to ensure flexibility for the existing GP workforce and to consider the skills mix working in primary care to ensure that GP time is focused optimally on patient care.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what barriers exist to increasing the number of GPs working locally.

(AQW 52069/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Any increase in GP training places is subject to the necessary additional funding being available. I am pleased to confirm that I have increased the annual GP training programme in Northern Ireland in 2016/17 by making a further 20 training places available from August 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how he will address the shortage of GPs locally; and whether this will include increasing the number of GPs within the medical workforce.

Mr Hamilton: A Working Group has been established within the Department to consider how best to address the challenges facing GP-led primary care services. In addition, I have recently announced 20 additional GP training places per year from August 2016 and a new five year initiative which will see additional investment in pharmacists to work alongside GPs. Not only will this deliver a better service for patients, ensuring people obtain the best possible health outcomes from their medicines, but it will also boost capacity in primary care.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the attendance times of the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service in each of the last 24 months; and how this compares to targets.

(AQW 52164/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There was no target for ambulance response times in 2013/14. The targets for 2014/15 and 2015/16 are that by March 2015 and March 2016 respectively, 72.5% of Category A (life threatening) calls should be responded to within eight minutes, 67.5% in each Local Commissioning Group area.

The number of Category A calls received resulting in an emergency response arriving on the scene and the number and percentage responded to within eight minutes in each of the 24 months to October 2015 is detailed in the table below.

Month	Number of Category A calls received resulting in an emergency response arriving on the scene	Number of Category A calls responded to within 8 minutes	Percentage of Category A calls responded to within 8 minutes
November 2013	4,026	2,803	69.6%
December 2013	4,598	2,973	64.7%
January 2014	4,363	2,866	65.7%
February 2014	4,017	2,582	64.3%
March 2014	4,646	3,023	65.1%
April 2014	4,133	2,769	67.0%
May 2014	4,384	2,878	65.6%
June 2014	5,049	3,167	62.7%
July 2014	5,381	3,193	59.3%
August 2014	5,051	2,911	57.6%
September 2014	4,748	2,800	59.0%
October 2014	4,745	2,800	59.0%
November 2014	4,734	2,687	56.8%
December 2014	5,053	2,591	51.3%
January 2015	4,735	2,525	53.3%
February 2015	4,361	2,174	49.9%
March 2015	4,560	2,367	51.9%
April 2015	4,340	2,322	53.5%
May 2015	4,511	2,255	50.0%
June 2015	4,362	2,309	52.9%
July 2015	4,426	2,434	55.0%

Month	Number of Category A calls received resulting in an emergency response arriving on the scene	Number of Category A calls responded to within 8 minutes	Percentage of Category A calls responded to within 8 minutes
August 2015	4,405	2,338	53.1%
September 2015	4,605	2,548	55.3%
October 2015	4,911	2,849	58.0%

I find these response times unacceptable and my Department has asked the Health and Social Care Board and the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) to improve performance. There have been a number of factors contributing to this including increasing demand. Over the past five years the number of Category A calls resulting in an emergency response attending the scene of an incident has increased by 30.9%, from 43,510 in 2010/11 to 56,934 in 2014/15. Additional funding of £775,000 has been allocated in 2015/16 and £1,077,000 recurrently from 2016/17 to NIAS to manage the increasing demand for this service.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQT 3262/11-16, to detail the protocols and procedures in use by Daisy Hill Hospital in their pulse oximetry trial; and how they mirror those being used in the pilot in the rest of the UK.
(AQW 52177/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust have advised that the protocol used for pulse oximetry screening in Daisy Hill Hospital is based on protocols used in the UK, with mild modifications. These protocols were published in a UK medical journal last year.

The Southern Health and Social Care Trust were not aware of the pilot recommended by the National Screening Committees, or the protocol in place.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following his decision to close the Health and Social Care Board, to detail (i) what discussions he had with staff; (ii) the meetings he had with the Chief Executive; (iii) how staff members were informed of his decision; and (iv) his plans to redistribute staff.
(AQW 52217/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In advance of my decision to close the Health and Social Care Board my Department completed a review of commissioning of health and social care and consulted on the recommendations made by Sir Liam Donaldson in his report The Right Time, The Right Place. This included significant involvement and discussion with HSCB staff. I and my officials regularly have formal and informal meetings and discussions with the senior management team of the Health and Social Care Board. In addition to this, I met with the Chair and Chief Executive shortly after my announcement of 4 November 2015.

Staff members within the HSCB were informed by their Chief Executive face to face and by teleconference.

On 15 December 2015, I launched a public consultation on reform of Northern Ireland's Health and Social Care system, which includes my proposals to de-layer the existing system by moving away from the current commissioning model and closing down the Health and Social Care Board. Future staffing needs are yet to be assessed.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQT 3262/11-16, to detail what steps a charity or individual would have to take to introduce a pulse oximetry trial in a hospital other than Daisy Hill.
(AQW 52219/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not recommend that any other hospital participates in a similar pilot to the trial which has been introduced by Daisy Hill Hospital. All hospitals should await the findings from the UK National Screening Committee which is piloting pulse oximetry screening in a range of maternity services including midwifery led units, district general hospitals and tertiary referral maternity units.

The NSC will use the pilot to better understand the implications of introducing this screening test, including any impact on neonatal services and paediatric cardiology services. Should a national screening programme be introduced the findings from the pilot will also inform roll out and ensure that all babies are appropriately and consistently screened and managed to agreed quality standards.

The pilot is ongoing and is expected to report later this year. Following the evaluation of this pilot, the NSC will make a policy recommendation for the UK. I will consider this advice when it is available.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 49988/11-16 and AQW 51793/11-16, given the responses to these questions refer to the UK National Screening Pilot but don't include any reference to the ongoing pilot in Daily Hill Hospital, whether he will subsequently review and update his response to AQW 51793/11-16.
(AQW 52434/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Please see my responses to AQW 51790/11-16, AQW 51791/11-16, AQW 51792/11-16, and AQW 52175/11-16 which refer to the trial at Daisy Hill Hospital. This trial is not part of the UK National Screening Committee pilot.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the database for managing the register of people with Familial Hypercholesterolemia will be operational.

(AQW 52485/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust is planning to have the database operational by June 2016. In the interim, there is no detrimental effect on the quality of patient testing and treatment.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rationale behind the decision taken by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust to transfer any high risk pregnancies to Craigavon Area Hospital rather than Daisy Hill Hospital, Newry.

(AQW 52644/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: High risk pregnancies are delivered at both Daisy Hill and Craigavon Area Hospitals. Transfers may occur for clinical reasons. Women with high risk pregnancies are seen, assessed and managed in both hospitals. Women who are less than 34 weeks pregnant are transferred from Daisy Hill Hospital to Craigavon Area Hospital unless delivery is imminent. This is to ensure a Level 1 cot is available for the baby if required. If the woman is less than 30 weeks pregnant she is transferred to the Royal Jubilee Maternity Hospital Belfast again unless delivery is imminent.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the recommendations made in the Independent Cancer Taskforce's new Cancer Strategy published in July 2015 and particularly the conclusions around predicted changes in the cost of cancer care beyond treatment.

Mr Hamilton: My Department has noted the publication of 'Achieving World Class Cancer Outcomes – A Strategy for England'. Whilst the report was developed to meet the particular needs of the NHS in England, its strategic priorities - particularly the emphasis on prevention, early diagnosis, clinical effectiveness and the need for appropriate investment - are relevant to all jurisdictions. The predictions around changes in the cost of cancer beyond treatment are also informative. It is important that we continue to do all that we can to ensure that care, both during the active phase of treatment and beyond, is safe, effective and of high quality.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of (i) the level of assistance provided by local healthcare staff to hospitals located in jurisdictions outside Northern Ireland; and given the publicised pressures faced within local Health and Social Care Trusts (ii) the impact these work patterns are having on the delivery and safety of local services; and (iii) whether current working conditions for local staff are impacting on this issue.

Mr Hamilton: All Health and Social Care (HSC) staff are required to discharge their duties in accordance with their contractual obligations. We have no evidence that the circumstances alluded to by the Member are impacting on the delivery and safety of local services neither is there a known link to current working conditions in the HSC. Specifically with regard to HSC nursing staff, as recent media reports have focussed on this group in relation to this issue, a nurse must always be fit when reporting for duty and not be overtired as this may impact on their ability to provide safe and effective care. The Nursing and Midwifery Council Code of Professional Standards for Practice and Behaviour endorses this requirement.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the support provided by the Health Service for veterans.

(AQW 52729/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: 'Delivering Healthcare to the Armed Forces - A Protocol for Ensuring Equitable Access to Health and Social Care Services' was developed by my Department in 2009. This protocol establishes that health and social services in Northern Ireland must be responsive to the needs of those serving in the Armed Forces, their families and Veterans. It established a framework of assurance which ensures that serving members of the Armed Forces, their families and Veterans suffer no disadvantage in accessing health and social care services and have equality of access to these services in common with everyone living in Northern Ireland.

Throughout Northern Ireland there is a range of specialists and general health and social care services provided by voluntary organisations which members of the Armed Forces, Veterans or their families can access. The Veterans' community, working locally with the MOD, has developed a 'Northern Ireland Veterans Handbook', which acts as a quick reference guide setting out the services available to Veterans and their families across Northern Ireland. The UDR & R IRISH (HS) Aftercare Service has issued copies of this handbook to all GPs across the Province.

Rehabilitation services have been delivered since 2013 as part of the Northern Ireland Regional Disablement Service who specialise in the rehabilitation of patients of all ages, including Veterans, who have had an amputation of a limb or limbs.

The MOD continues to work with Combat Stress and my Department to ensure that Veterans receive the best possible mental healthcare. The Health & Social Care Board has agreed a care pathway for Veterans in Northern Ireland to access the residential treatment service in Scotland provided by Combat Stress.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of GP training places expected to be filled in 2015/16; and whether the number of training places will be increased in the future.
(AQW 52752/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Of the 65 GP training places available through the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency in 2015/2016, all were filled. One candidate withdrew after completion of the recruitment exercise when it was too late for this individual to be replaced.

I have increased the number of available GP training places to 85 per year, to commence in August 2016.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the British Medical Association's figure that 25 per cent of local GPs are approaching retirement age; and (ii) what discussions have taken place to increase the number of GP training places to ensure numbers remain high enough to meet demand.
(AQW 52753/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware that a significant proportion of our local General Practitioners are approaching an age at which they might begin to consider plans for retirement.

In recognition of this, I have commissioned an additional 20 places per annum for General Practice trainees at the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency commencing in August 2016.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of GPs required per head of the population.
(AQW 52867/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There is no single accepted ratio of number of GPs required per head of population given a wide range of variables that apply such as the level of health need and socio-economic conditions.

I am pleased to confirm that I have increased the annual GP training programme in Northern Ireland in 2016/17 by making a further 20 training places available from August 2016.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans his Department has in place to encourage more doctors to become GPs.
(AQW 52868/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: General Practice is already a popular choice of medical specialty within Health and Social Care in Northern Ireland. Each year the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency receives in the region of three applications for each GP training post provided.

I have increased the number of GP training places available each year to 85, to commence in August 2016.

My Department is also working closely with Queen's University Belfast to increase the exposure of medical students to General Practice within the undergraduate curriculum as such experience increases the possibility of individuals subsequently choosing primary care for their career.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of vacant GP positions.
(AQW 52870/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available. GPs are independent contractors who contract with the HSCB to provide primary medical services to their patients. As independent contractors, they are responsible for deciding on and recruiting additional GPs and other staff required to deliver services to their patients.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail each Senior Director that has (i) left; (ii) resigned; (iii) been dismissed; or (iv) been placed on suspension from duty from his Department or any of its arm's-length bodies in each of the last twelve months, including the reasons for each.

Mr Hamilton: The Table below sets out the details of each Senior Director within the Department that has (i) left; (ii) resigned; (iii) been dismissed; or (iv) been placed on suspension from duty in each of the last twelve months, including the reasons for each. For the purposes of this answer "Senior Director" has been interpreted as Grade 5 and above.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the status of the Fully Adopt CCC for ME in Northern Ireland petition tabled to his Department on 30 June 2015.

(AQW 53021/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The public petition regarding 'ME: Full Adoption of the Canadian Consensus Criteria' (CCC) was laid in the Assembly on 30 June 2014. My predecessor wrote to Dominic Bradley MLA, on 23 July 2014 advising that the petition would be considered by my Department.

Following consideration my Department has confirmed that ME services should be commissioned and delivered in accordance with the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) guidelines. Important inconsistencies between CCC and NICE guidance mean that the Canadian Consensus document will not be endorsed by my Department.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the steps the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has taken to address the issue of the imminent departure of two doctors from the Emergency Department in Downe Hospital.

(AQW 53030/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Two middle grade specialty doctors have given the South Eastern Trust notice that they are leaving Downe Hospital emergency department. The Trust is actively working with recruitment agencies to seek to obtain replacement staff. The Trust is also: making use of new additional emergency medicine consultant staff across the Trust area; investigating alternative methods of unscheduled care delivery through the Minor Injuries Unit and the GP Out Of Hours Service; and, carrying out a pilot of an assessment and admissions unit.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the future sustainability of maternity services at the South West Acute Hospital.

(AQW 53041/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Western Trust remains committed to the provision of maternity services at the South West Acute Hospital in line with my Department's Regional Maternity Strategy.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the accreditation of the South West Acute Hospital in Enniskillen with private insurance companies operating in the rest of Ireland.

(AQW 53042/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A number of insurance companies operating in the Republic of Ireland were approached by the Western Health and Social Care Trust about insurance accreditation with respect to the South West Acute Hospital but no insurance company took up the offer.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) full time; (ii) part time; and (iii) bank or zero hour contract nurses that have been recruited across each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 53043/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is provided in the tables below, however, it is not possible to provide figures for bank staff 'recruited' as the majority of staff with bank contracts are existing employees. It has not been possible to provide 10 years of data.

(AQW 53161/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A range of support services operate across the Health and Social Care Trusts for people diagnosed with Autism. This information is provided in the attached Annex.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust

The Paediatric ASD Service (0-18 yrs) offers services to children or young people and their families in assessing and diagnosing ASD and also support if a diagnosis is made with the aim to provide and deliver a high quality assessment and diagnostic service for children and young people where concerns regarding ASD have been identified, give support to children or young people with a diagnosis of ASD and their families and support professionals within the Northern Trust working with children or young people with ASD. The Paediatric ASD Service is made up of a range of health and educational professionals (multi-disciplinary) including Community Pediatricians, Speech and Language Therapists, Clinical Psychologist and Intervention Therapists.

Receiving a diagnosis of ASD can be positive for a child or young person's development in allowing others to understand the person better, appreciate their unique way of seeing the world and to signpost others to appropriate supports. There is a range of help and support available across the Northern Trust which is provided by a range of services. These may include Speech and Language Therapy, Occupational Therapy, Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service, Multi Agency Support for Schools, Community Paediatric Medical Service, Health Visiting Service and Social Services. Support is also provided by

Education Authority for children and young people with ASD across all stages of the code of practice within schools. After a diagnosis of ASD, the Paediatric ASD Service offers Post Diagnostic Support as follows:

- A Family Support Home Visit which is currently delivered in partnership between the Paediatric ASD Service and the charity Autism NI. This home visit supports parents/carers following a diagnosis through practical help, advice, a listening ear or signposting to relevant services and support groups (Ages 2-15yrs);
- ASD Bootcamp - this is a group based intervention programme which focuses on exploring and helping the young person understand their diagnosis whilst also looking at the positive aspects of having ASD. It also aims to develop communication skills and build on self-esteem. How to use technology and social media in an appropriate and safe manner are also addressed as part of the programme. (Ages 16-18yrs);
- ASD Awareness training session 'What is ASD?' which aims to develop parents/carers knowledge and skills in managing their child/young person's development.

Should parents/carers require any further support the Paediatric ASD Service offers the following intervention service:

Initial Advice Clinic - this is a telephone appointment. Parents/carers will be asked to describe the current difficulties their child/young person is experiencing in relation to their ASD and their concerns at this time. Initial ASD-specific advice will be provided to help parents/carers to manage the difficulties discussed. The therapist will identify an intervention package for the young person following this appointment (if required). Intervention packages may include one or more of the following:

Parent and Carers Education Programme - there are a range of training courses available through the Parent and Carers Education Programme. The Programme includes seminars on: Promoting Communication Skills in Children and Young People, Visual Strategies, Understanding Behavior, Managing Anger, Anxiety Management Strategies for Parents, Encouraging Social Behaviour, Teen Life, Working Together with Education and Supporting Siblings.

Parent/Carers Consultation Meeting - a meeting can be arranged with parents/carers with one or more of the professionals from the Paediatric ASD team where information regarding all aspects of their child or young person's development and how they are functioning can be discussed – with the focus being on the diagnosis of ASD. Parents/carers will also have the opportunity to talk regarding any concerns they may have in relation to their child or young person. Advice and/or strategies will be provided at the parent consultation to help manage these concerns. Following a parent consultation meeting a report with the advice and strategies discussed will be provided.

Spectrum Star Assessment - is undertaken with the young person with ASD (suitable for 12yrs +) and looks at different areas of the young person's life including areas of physical health, communication, social skills and self-esteem, with the focus of how the ASD is impacting in each area. The young person will rate how they feel they are doing in each area on a simple scale. Following the assessment, an action plan will be drawn up jointly between the young person, parents and professionals to help in areas that the young person identified as more difficult.

ASD Bootcamp - this group based intervention programme is suitable for young people aged 12-18 yrs. Games and activities are carried out within a group environment and there will be time for the young people to socialise with each other. Group sessions focus on the following topics through the activities:

- Asperger's Syndrome – exploring and understanding the diagnosis and looking at the positive aspects of having Asperger's;
- Communication – discussing what is communication, how the young person communicates and strategies to improve communication;
- Self-esteem – what self-esteem means, self-identity, how to improve self-esteem and problem-solving when self-esteem is reduced;
- Social Media – how to use technology and social media in an appropriate and safe manner.

About me - this is a one-time limited intervention package delivered in conjunction with National Autistic Society, suitable for those aged 12 yrs +. Activities and worksheets will be carried out with the young person with the focus on ASD, exploring and understanding the diagnosis, looking further at how ASD affects the young person and exploring further the positive aspects of having ASD.

Joint Planning Meeting - the Paediatric ASD Service will provide joint planning meetings with health professionals to support others working with children or young people with ASD. At these meetings the professionals involved with a child or young person with ASD will discuss the current intervention they are providing and jointly agree therapy goals, taking ASD considerations into account. The professional involved with your child will carry out the intervention using strategies and advice provided from the Paediatric ASD Service and work on the jointly agreed therapy goals.

Northern Adult Autism Advice Service (16yrs+) - is made up of a small multiagency team providing a service to adults with autism and those who support them. The key aims are to help individuals with autism access a range of appropriate main-stream services, for example, employment and further education, to offer individuals with autism one to one support for specific problems, to offer post-diagnostic support and to provide a safe place where individuals with autism can share their experiences. The service is for individuals aged 16yrs+ who have a diagnosis of autism, who reside in the Northern Trust Area. The service operates an open/self referral system and offers advice and support.

and specialist ASD Services, provided by the Children's Autism Service. Belfast Health and Social Care Trust (BHSCT)

Following a diagnosis of autism, all children, young people and families are referred to the Autism Intervention Service. Within Intervention, there is both a multidisciplinary and multi-agency approach to care, with the Trust team comprised of Autism Intervention Workers, Clinical Psychologists, Speech & Language Therapists, Social Work and Occupational Therapists. The Trust work closely with third sector partners with regards to delivery of intervention and supports for children, family and young people, and are integrated into the Trust's service delivery model. The Trust currently has contracts with Barnados, Belfast Central Mission and the Cedar Foundation, and children and families also have access to their range of generic services provided.

The Trust maximise resources by using a group model of intervention where appropriate. There are a number of 'core' workshops which are available at initial diagnosis, allowing parents and other family members to have an opportunity to gain more information regarding autism and to link with other families experiencing similar anxieties. These workshops are very positively evaluated. In response to clear need, a menu of 'Level 2' workshops have been developed which provide more problem-specific intervention advice and follow up. These include workshops on sleep, toileting, feeding, anger-management, anxiety management, managing school related problems, puberty, discussing the diagnosis with your child etc. Individual therapy is also available as required.

The Trust keep close contact with local communities and try to keep families informed of any initiatives in their area which are autism specific or autism friendly and it is also currently working on a service directory to facilitate family information. Children with autism continue to have available all paediatric services and where appropriate they also have available support via the children's disability team. Children and their families also attend CAMHS services where a mental health need has been identified and there is close liaison between CAMHS and the Autism intervention Service.

Southern Health and Social Care Trust

In the Southern Trust there is a multidisciplinary team which provides post-diagnostic support to children and young people with Autism and their families. This support consists of an early intervention programme delivered by Autism Intervention Therapists and Occupational Therapists and longer term support delivered by Clinical Psychology, Social Work, Health improvement Nurse and Occupational Therapy. These interventions aim to improve the skills of children and young people with ASD and help them understand and manage their autism as individuals and families. In addition to Autism Specific interventions, all parents are offered a Carers Assessment.

The Trust also have an ASD-CAMHS Connect service for 13-18 year olds which supports these adolescents to understand their diagnosis and the impact this has on their life and to help them to engage more fully in their local community. The Trust also provide a range of Autism Awareness training for employers, other Trust services and community and voluntary services who support children and young people with ASD. Children and young people can also avail of support outside the Autism Service and many attend Core AHP services, CAMHS, Community Paediatrics as well as a full range of other services.

CAMHS assess and diagnose all young people between 12 -18 years. All referrals are seen within a nine week period. The Multi-disciplinary Step 3/4 teams carry out a robust assessment process and deal with some quite complex dual diagnosis presentations. Post diagnosis, CAMHS provide a range of interventions and work in partnership with both statutory and third sector providers to ensure best service for Young People and their families.

Resources are also available to children with ASD from Allied Health Professionals (AHP) services and are provided across a number of settings that include community clinics/hospital outpatients/child's home environment/school. The AHP services include: Nutrition & Dietetics, Occupational Therapy, Physiotherapy, Speech & Language Therapy, Orthoptics and Podiatry.

Speech & Language Therapy provide a regular service into the majority of the ASD Units across the Trust with an advisory Occupational Therapy service provided for children on an individual basis and based on assessed need. The specialist ASD service can in addition to profession specific advice provide intervention delivered by a Therapy assistant which aims to provide short-term targeted interventions as directed by therapist into the Autism Specific Classes within the SELB. This is a provision for children in key stage 1 who have a confirmed diagnosis of Autistic Spectrum Disorder. The five special schools in the Trust area also have access to Occupational Therapy, Physiotherapy, Speech & Language Therapy and Orthoptics services.

In relation to the 51 children currently receiving targeted support from a health visitor, approximately 66% of the children being pre confirmed diagnosis and 33% of children who have been diagnosed. The focus of the health visiting intervention is support for parents to manage behaviours relating to autism. Health visitors across service are providing targeted support to 120 children who are pre and post autism diagnosis at the current time.

Children with autism can access a wide range of social care supports and services through Autism Services or Children's Disability Teams. The level and type of support is dependent on the individual needs of the child and his/her carers. An assessment of need (UNOCINI – Understanding the Needs of Children in N. Ireland, incorporating a Carer's Assessment) is carried out by a social worker from the teams, and a care plan is then developed and agreed with the child and family. This usually includes onward referrals and access to a range of support services to meet these needs. The Trust has been developing a continuum of such services, ranging from 'softer end' community based activities/opportunities for children with disabilities including autism, through to more specialist residential services. The Southern Trust also has contracts/service level agreements with various organisations/agencies to help deliver on this range of short breaks.

Western Health and Social Care Trusts (WHST)

ASD Diagnostic Services for children aged 3- 18 years are provided across the Western Trust in keeping with Regional Autism Spectrum Disorder Network (RASDN) 'Six Steps of Autism Care' guidelines. Children who are suspected of having an Autism Spectrum Disorder and who meet clinical criteria for assessment are held on a waiting list. Children aged 2-3 years who are known to Community Paediatrics and who meet clinical criteria for assessment are considered on a case by case basis as described in 'Six Steps of Autism Care'. The Western Trust Children's ASD Service multidisciplinary assessment team includes Clinical Psychology, Community Paediatrics, Speech and Language Therapy, Occupational Therapy, Social Work, Autism Practitioner, Specialist Health Visitors with sessional input from Community Nursing Learning Disability. Following diagnostic assessment and confirmation of a diagnosis of Autism post-diagnostic interventions are tailored to meet the assessed needs of each individual child and family. These may include

- information and advice;
- parent training;
- individual or group intervention with members of multidisciplinary team as listed above;

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the cost of the Voluntary Exit Scheme for Health and Social Care Staff; and (ii) how the scheme will be funded.

(AQW 53170/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (ii) The Scheme is funded through the NI Executive's Public Sector Transformation Fund.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the establishment of primary care talking therapies hubs in both the Northern and Western Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 53183/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In the Northern Trust, primary care talking therapies hubs are currently in operation in Coleraine/Ballymoney and Carrickfergus/ Newtownabbey.

In the Western Trust, primary care talking therapies hubs are in operation in Londonderry and Omagh.

Each hub is based around a group of GP practices in the relevant area in partnership with the Trust and local voluntary and community sector service providers. Both Trusts intend to make talking therapies hubs available across the whole of their respective areas, although this will be dependent on additional funding being made available.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the funding allocated to the Public Health Agency to deliver sexual health education in schools; (ii) the proportion of money allocated which remained unused; and (iii) which schools have utilised the services of the Public Health Agency to provide sexual health education, in each of the last three years.

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not allocate a specific amount of funding to the PHA to deliver sexual health education in schools. A regional training programme to support teachers and schools to meet their statutory responsibility for Relationship and Sexuality Education is provided by the Sexual Health Team in Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. This is done in partnership with the Education Authority and local Health and Social Care Trust Health Improvement Departments. The model consists of a teacher training course followed by Whole School Training. The Public Health Agency provides an annual contribution of £17,687 to cover backfill for teachers attending the training course. A list of schools trained in each of the last three years is below.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provision will be made to ensure that funding is available to reduce waiting lists on an ongoing basis after the current extra allocation of £40m is spent.

Mr Hamilton: The Department's financial planning processes for 2016/17 are currently ongoing. A key component of this process includes identifying the potential level of investment to address elective care pressures within the funding settlement for 2016/17.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of (a) people in receipt of domiciliary care services; (b) people that have been deemed to be no longer entitled to domiciliary care packages in each of the last three years; and (ii) how much of his (a) 2015-16 budget has been spent on domiciliary care services; and (b) how much of his budget in 2016-17 will be spent on domiciliary care services.

(AQW 53274/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) (a) 24,189 people were receiving domiciliary care in Northern Ireland during a survey week in 2014.
- (b) Information on the number of people who are deemed to no longer require domiciliary care is not routinely collected.
- (ii) (a) The Health and Social Care Board will not know the 2015/16 spend by HSC Trusts on domiciliary care until the Autumn of 2016. However the 2014/2015 data is available and would indicate expenditure of approximately £225m on domiciliary care.
- (b) The Health and Social Care Board has not yet been advised of its budget for 2016/17.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the dates on which he held meetings with Unions concerning nurses' pay since 11 May 2015.

(AQW 53314/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the steps he is taking to ensure that medical professionals trained locally remain in Northern Ireland to practice; and for his assessment of the extent to which doctors and medical professionals that trained locally in the last five years are now practicing in jurisdictions outside (a) Northern Ireland; and (b) the United Kingdom.

(AQW 53316/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My officials are currently considering ways in which we might enhance the recruitment and retention of medical professionals trained locally.

Medical training ranges from Foundation Training to Specialty Training including General Practice. The figures requested are only available in respect of those who undertook training in General Practice. In the last five years, out of a total of 295 doctors who trained locally as General Practitioners, 282 (96%) are registered on the Primary Medical Performers List in Northern Ireland. Destination information for the remaining 13 is not held.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the waiting list initiative.
(AQW 53330/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The allocation of an additional £40 million from the November Monitoring Round will go towards tackling waiting lists. Broadly, this investment will benefit between 60,000 and 70,000 patients who would otherwise be waiting. Since November 2015, significant efforts have been made across the HSC, within a very tight timeframe, to secure additional outpatient clinics and treatments within Trusts, and to put in place appropriate arrangements with independent sector organisations to transfer suitable patients for assessment and/or treatment.

Contracts have been awarded with Independent Sector providers for approximately 27,000 new outpatient assessments across a range of specialties, with 15,000 patient details already sent to providers. Contracts have also been awarded for approximately 8,000 patients to be treated, of which 5,500 case notes have been forwarded to providers. Work is progressing to supply the remaining patient details.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much funding (i) was provided to the Family Fund in each of the last three years; and (ii) will be provided in 2016-2017.

(AQW 53342/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

(i) Funding provided to the Family Fund in each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	Awarded by DHSSPS
2013/2014	£1,576,212
2014/2015	£1,572,106
2015/2016	£1,572,000

(ii) My Department's financial planning processes are currently ongoing therefore this information is not available at this time.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) opticians employed at the Mater Hospital, Belfast; and; (ii) hours they work per week.

(AQW 53344/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The optical staff in the table below work across all of the Belfast HSC Trust's sites, including the Mater Hospital. Headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) are shown. WTE is the proportion of hours worked out of the standard hours for each grade.

Grade	Headcount	WTE
Consultant Ophthalmologist	27	23.32
Optometrist	35	19.28
Other Ophthalmologist	31	25.31
Orthoptist	6	5.60

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department is aware of any plans to utilise the Kings Hall for Health and Social Care purposes.

(AQW 53365/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My officials are aware that a private developer is exploring options about the redevelopment of the King's Hall site.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the extent to which each Health and Social Care Trust delivers Dialectical Behaviour Therapy; and the eligibility criteria for receiving such treatment.

(AQW 53366/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Each Health and Social Care Trust delivers Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) as one of a range of therapies provided through their Mental Health and Psychological Therapy services.

NICE recommends DBT for persistent binge eating disorder, for people with personality disorders, and for those who are suicidal and self-harm.

Eligibility to access DBT is determined during clinical assessment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) waiting times; and (ii) number of people waiting in each Health and Social Care Trust for Dialectical Behaviour Therapy, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53368/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust delivers Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) as one of a range of therapies provided through their Mental Health and Psychological Therapy services. The HSC Trusts do not hold dedicated DBT waiting lists.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail a timeframe for the new suicide prevention strategy.

(AQW 53371/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Pre-consultation on the new strategy has been completed and has helped to shape the further refinement of the draft strategy. Work has now started on the development of a "costed" implementation plan. A final draft of the new strategy is to be submitted to me by mid-March for approval to proceed with public consultation which is expected to commence after the Assembly election.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority review of the Living Matters: Dying Matters Strategy will be published; and whether he will support its recommendations regarding palliative and end of life care.

(AQW 53384/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority's report of the review of the implementation of the Living Matters: Dying Matters Palliative and End of Life Care Strategy for adults was published on 28 January 2016.

I welcome the review's findings that significant progress was made during the period 2010 to 2015 towards implementing the recommendations of the Living Matters: Dying Matters Strategy.

My Department will carefully consider the report's findings and recommendations to inform the planning and delivery of quality palliative and end of life care in Northern Ireland.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of theatres available in the Downe Hospital and their rate of use.

(AQW 53390/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust confirm there are two theatres in the Downe Hospital which at full capacity would provide 20 sessions of day surgery. There are also 2 endoscopy suites which at full capacity would provide the same. The current funded capacity is 11 theatre sessions and 12 endoscopy sessions.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) number of available beds in the Downe Hospital; and (ii) location of each bed.

(AQW 53410/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: As at Wednesday 27th January 2016 the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has 21 beds located in Ward 1 and 21 beds located in Ward 2 within the Downe Hospital. In times of escalation, as staffing allows, there is provision to increase each ward by 2 non-designated beds.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) number of beds that have been removed from the Downe Hospital in the last 4 years; (ii) location of these beds; and (iii) reasons the beds were taken out of use.

Mr Hamilton: Over the last four years seven beds were removed from the Downe Hospital, reducing the number of available beds from 49 to 42. Following the amalgamation of the coronary care service with the general medical service in December 2014, there were 3 coronary care beds and 4 general medical beds closed within Ward 1 and Ward 2. The decision to close these beds was part of contingency measures taken by the Trust to deliver financial savings. The decision was taken in light of reduced admissions to the Downe Hospital in the preceding year. The Coronary Care Service is now being delivered from Ward 2 with full access to Cardiology trained Doctors and Nurses and access to a full range of cardiac equipment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions his Department is taking between the 1 January to 31 March 2016 to address waiting lists for people awaiting referrals.

(AQW 53423/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The allocation of an additional £40 million from the November Monitoring Round will go towards tackling waiting lists.

Since November significant efforts have been made across the HSC, within a very tight timeframe, to secure additional outpatient clinics and treatments within Trusts, and to put in place appropriate arrangements with independent sector organisations to transfer suitable patients for assessment and/or treatment.

The additional funding is being targeted at those who have been waiting the longest for assessment and/or treatment.

I want to see the number of patients that can be assessed and treated quickly, effectively and safely maximised.

Broadly, this investment will benefit between 60,000 and 70,000 patients who would otherwise be waiting.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all savings made by the Western Health and Social Care Trust in the (a) 2014-15; and (b) 2015-16 financial years.

(AQW 53428/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Details of the Western Health and Social Care Trust's savings plans for 2014/15 and 2015/16 are available on the Trust's website.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people that (i) received a Meals on Wheels service; (ii) were deemed to be no longer entitled to the service; and (iii) that have been turned down for the service in the Western Health and Social Care Trust, in the last five years.

(AQW 53429/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Information on the number of people that received a meals on wheels service in the Western HSC Trust at 31 March in each of the last five years is detailed in the table below.

	Number of people in receipt of a meals on wheels service
31 March 2015	1,081
31 March 2014	1,227
31 March 2013	1,160
31 March 2012	1,111
31 March 2011	1,026

- (ii) Service users in receipt of meals on wheels continue to receive this service until they or their family inform the Trust they no longer wish to receive it.
- (iii) All service users assessed as meeting the regionally agreed eligibility criteria for receipt of meals on wheels have been offered the service.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) number of children waiting for autism assessments; and (ii) waiting times for autism assessments for children in the Western Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53432/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Table 1 below details the number of children waiting for an autism assessment and the length of time waiting at 31 December in the Western Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust in each of the last three years.

Table 1

Year	Waiting Time (weeks)								Total

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people waiting to receive domiciliary care packages in the (i) Northern Health and Social Care Trust; and (ii) Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 53442/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of domiciliary care packages delivered, by time waiting from completion of assessment to commencement of package and Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust is collected by my Department and can be found in Table 1.

Table 1. Domiciliary care packages delivered by time waiting from completion of assessment to commencement of package during quarter ending December 2015.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) whether oppositional defiant disorder is a recognised diagnosis; (ii) how many healthcare professionals specialise in the diagnosis of oppositional defiant disorder; and (iii) whether children diagnosed with oppositional defiant disorder are statemented.

(AQW 53451/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Oppositional Defiant Disorder (ODD) is a recognised diagnosis in the World Health Organisation International Classification of Mental and Behavioural Disorders.
- (ii) ODD characteristically occurs in children and a range of healthcare professionals within Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services and Child Development Services are trained in the identification and treatment of childhood mental and behavioural disorders, including ODD.
- (iii) Support for pupils with special educational needs is based on the individual needs of the child, including those diagnosed with ODD. Following a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs (SEN) the Education Authority will decide whether the degree of the child's learning difficulty or disability, and the nature of the provision necessary to meet the child's SEN, require it to determine the child's special educational provision through making a statement.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) when the Ministerial Coordination Group on Suicide Prevention last met; and (ii) the outcomes of that meeting.

(AQW 53452/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The last meeting of the Ministerial Coordination Group on Suicide Prevention was held on 16 April 2015; the next meeting is scheduled for 29 February 2016. Ministers agreed that the minutes of the Ministerial Group meetings should be shared with the Suicide Strategy Implementation Body. They also agreed that the Public Health Agency would:

- (i) provide an update on the procurement of regional of self harm services – the Self-Harm Intervention Project (SHIP) at the next meeting;
- (ii) provide an update on the initiative to address suicide on the River Foyle – Using Art, Culture and Technology to Address Suicides on the River Foyle.
- (iii) identify appropriate contacts within the new super councils for further consideration on how councils engage on suicide prevention and mental health promotion.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average ambulance journey time from the Downe Hospital to the Ulster Hospital.

(AQW 53459/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: During the last six months (1st April 2014 to 30th September 2015), the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) indicated that 1,175 emergency, urgent and routine journeys were made from the Downe hospital to the Ulster hospital, of which, the average journey time was 40 minutes and 32 seconds.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety pursuant to AQW 52588/11-16 whether he will consider introducing uniform parking rates across all hospitals.

Mr Hamilton: Uniform parking rates across Northern Ireland was considered as part of the wider consultation on car parking policy in 2012. It was not considered practical to set a uniform parking rate across all hospital sites in Northern Ireland due to the different levels of local car parking charges, the variations in access to alternative forms of transport and the differing levels of investment required at each hospital facility.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department provides screening for the Zika virus for travellers returning from South and Central America.

(AQW 53479/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In accordance with current UK and international advice and practice, there are no plans to routinely screen returning travellers from affected countries for Zika virus infection. The Public Health Agency's Health Protection Service, working closely with colleagues in Public Health England, is monitoring the situation and will advise on further developments.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of welfare claimants on waiting lists for elective care.

Mr Hamilton: Information on whether a patient is claiming welfare would never be asked at the point of elective treatment, and therefore would not be captured on a health system.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions his officials have had on introducing human papillomavirus primary screening.

(AQW 53543/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The National Screening Committee in January recommended the introduction of Human Papillomavirus (HPV) testing as the primary screening test for cervical cancer.

The Public Health Agency have been asked to undertake a scoping exercise for the introduction of HPV testing as the primary screening test in the Northern Ireland Cervical Screening Programme. The Northern Ireland Screening Committee will assess the findings of the scoping exercise. I will wait until this work is completed before taking a decision for Northern Ireland.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Health and Social Care Innovation Fund will be used to fund community and voluntary sector groups to enable their participation in Integrated Care Partnerships.

(AQW 53549/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is proposed that the Health and Social Care Innovation Scheme will provide funding to the voluntary, community and social enterprise sectors to deliver innovative health and social care solutions.

It is not intended that the Scheme will support participation in Integrated Care Partnerships.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of young onset dementia in Northern Ireland; and to detail any forthcoming strategies to mitigate future pressures on the health system caused by young onset dementia.

(AQW 53550/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is estimated that there are almost 20,000 people living with dementia in Northern Ireland, and it is estimated that approximately 1,000 of those people are under the age of 65 years. Data on the actual breakdown by age of people living with dementia is not available.

The Department's regional strategy on dementia was launched in 2011 and contained 44 recommendations. A number of those recommendations relate to younger people with dementia, particularly in relation to the development of care pathways. Currently two care pathways are under development: one for people with learning disability and dementia; and the other for younger (and older people) who require access to memory services.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what funding is available for community and voluntary sector groups to participate in Integrated Care Partnerships in the (i) Northern and (ii) Western Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 53556/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There is a reimbursement process covering attendance at meetings related to Integrated Care Partnerships and travel expenses. Such payments are made to the representatives' employing organisation.

To date £782 has been paid to ICP third sector representatives in the Northern Local Commissioning Group area and £4,241 in the Western Local Commissioning Group area.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total cost of hospitality provided by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 53567/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The table below provides details of the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service hospitality expenditure over the past 5 years:

Year	Expenditure (£)
2010/11	45,301.00
2011/12	45,470.43
2012/13	23,033.60
2013/14	16,715.22
2014/15	14,216.95

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the training available to firefighters involved in emergencies that includes the rescue of victims from submerged vehicles.

(AQW 53569/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Specialist "Rescue from Vehicles in Water" training is available to Fire Service personnel who are competent to Water Rescue Technician (Level 1) standard or higher. This training is for situations where vehicles are not fully submerged and/or where rescues can be carried out from the surface of the water.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of defibrillators that are provided in each building his Department manages.
(AQW 53583/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In 2003 my Department took the lead amongst Northern Ireland Departments in providing defibrillators in the building where its staff worked. There are currently three defibrillators in Castle Buildings.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the potential impact of the removal of bursaries on nurse training numbers.
(AQW 53584/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It would not be appropriate for me to speculate on the impact of the Chancellor's announcement to replace NHS bursaries with access to student loans as these proposals apply to England only.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the projected registered nursing workforce that is required for the safe delivery of local health care; and (ii) how this projection is being strategically planned for.
(AQW 53588/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Responsibility for ensuring registered nurse staffing levels are adequate to provide safe delivery of care rests with each individual employer. £12million has recently been allocated by the Health and Social Care Board for extra nurses in acute surgical and medical wards. Future investment will focus on emergency departments, district nursing and health visiting. A Nursing and Midwifery Workforce Plan for Northern Ireland has been completed by my Department and is currently being considered by officials.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how his Department has taken account of the nursing workforce requirements of the independent sector in each of the last five years; and (ii) what mechanism is in place that requires independent sector employers to present their workforce data, including accurate figures for nurses working within the sector.
(AQW 53591/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A Nursing and Midwifery Workforce Plan has been completed by my Department and it is currently being considered by officials. The Nursing and Midwifery Workforce Plan considered the nursing workforce requirements of the independent sector and further recommended that the sector commission their own workforce review. I understand they have done so in partnership with the Royal College of Nursing. The sector is independent of the DHSSPS and is not obliged to provide workforce data to the Department.

The Health and Social Care Board and Public Health Agency are currently working closely with independent sector providers to review the current workforce within nursing homes.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the continued exodus of nurses from the independent sector to Health and Social Care Trusts; and to detail how he will encourage greater staff retention within the independent sector.
(AQW 53592/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is aware of recruitment and retention difficulties experienced by the independent sector. Nurses may choose to move from the independent sector to Health and Social Care Trusts for a variety of reasons including opportunities for career progression and enhanced terms and conditions of employment.

My Department has completed a Nursing and Midwifery Workforce Review, currently being considered by officials, which included the Independent, Voluntary and Private sectors. One of the recommendations is that all employers should review their recruitment processes and work to make their organisation an employer of choice to encourage both the recruitment and retention of nurses.

My Department recently launched a Career Pathway for Nurses and Midwives showcasing opportunities for development in a range of settings including the Independent Sector. The Career Pathway has profiled the Independent Sector as a means of encouraging staff to apply for positions there.

Each employer is responsible for their own staff and for encouraging them to stay in their employment.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will consider implementing scoliosis screening into the school screening service in order to detect more cases of scoliosis at an earlier stage.
(AQW 53594/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Screening for scoliosis has been considered by the UK National Screening Committee (NSC), an expert body that advises the four UK Health Departments on all aspects of screening. Following their most recent review of the evidence in 2012 the NSC re-affirmed its advice that screening for scoliosis should not be offered.

This recommendation is currently being reviewed as part of the UK NSC's regular review cycle of all policies. The review process began in March 2015 and is estimated to be completed by July 2016. I will consider this advice when it is available.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) current waiting times; and (ii) number of people waiting, in each Health and Social Care Trust, for Dialectical Behaviour Therapy, in each of the last three years. (AQW 53609/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust delivers Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) as one of a range of therapies provided through their Mental Health and Psychological Therapy services. The HSC Trusts do not hold dedicated DBT waiting lists.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline whether Health and Social Care Trusts differentiate between low end and high end Borderline Personality Disorder or are all patients with Borderline Personality Disorder offered the same level of treatment. (AQW 53611/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Borderline Personality Disorder (BPD) is a complex condition characterised by a range of behaviours that can impact on an individual's mental health and social care needs.

The severity of behaviour and symptoms can vary by individual and across time. The appropriate level of intervention offered to an individual diagnosed with BPD will be based on their assessed needs and circumstances.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the services that each Health and Social Care Trust offers to people with a diagnosis of Borderline Personality Disorder. (AQW 53612/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Most people presenting with Borderline Personality Disorder are treated within mainstream mental health services. In addition, each HSC Trust has a small specialist Personality Disorder service that offers:

- consultation and support to, and co-working with, primary, secondary and inpatient mental health services, addictions and social care services;
- diagnostic and clinical advice;
- psychological therapies;
- awareness and training programmes;
- peer support groups; and
- support for family members.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has considered the role of pharmacists in GP practices in order to better facilitate medicine management and prescribing. (AQW 53671/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In December 2015, I announced a five year initiative that will see the additional investment in 2016/17 of £2.55m, rising to £14million per year in 2020/21, to put close to 300 pharmacists in GP practices by 2021.

Clinical pharmacists will work as part of the general practice team to help people optimise their medicines management, support effective prescribing and allow more GP time to be freed up to spend on people with complex needs, alleviating some of the pressures that are faced in general practice.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much his Department has spent on TV advertising designed to encourage people to stop smoking in each of the last five years. (AQW 53681/11-16)

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people that have had amputations in the last five years as a result of tobacco-related illnesses.

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of people that have had amputations in the last five years as a result of tobacco-related illnesses.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of retail outlets that have been successfully prosecuted in the last five years for selling tobacco products to underage children.

(AQW 53685/11-16)

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's policy on private companies operating hospital car parks.

(AQW 53742/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department's policy allows for the consideration of private sector companies operating hospital car parks on behalf of Health and Social Care Trusts in circumstances where it provides best value for money.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the individuals or groups that are exempt from car parking charges at hospitals in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 53773/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The categories of individuals or groups who qualify for free parking is set out in the Department's policy document published in June 2012 for "Car Parking Provision and Management in the Health and Social Care Sector". The exemptions include patients receiving radiotherapy, chemotherapy treatment or renal dialysis, the next of kin or partner of a patient in either critical care or a high dependency unit. In addition, Trusts have the discretion to make local decisions and extend the exemption criteria to other categories of patients or visitors depending on the specialities carried out in specific hospitals.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of local intensive care beds available, broken down by hospital; (ii) the total number of beds available per 100,000 head of population in comparison to other (a) regions of the UK; and (b) in comparison with other EU countries; (iii) the number of local intensive care beds closed in the last five years; (iv) the number of local intensive care nurses in each hospital; and (v) the number of local intensive care nurses in post in each of the last five years, broken down by hospital.

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not collected centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there have been any suspected or confirmed cases of people infected with the Zika virus in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 53785/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Public Health Agency is not aware of any suspected or confirmed cases of Zika virus in Northern Ireland at present.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to prevent the spread of the Zika virus to the North.

(AQW 53810/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Zika virus is an infection transmitted by Aedes mosquitos, which are not native to Northern Ireland, so the risk to the population here is extremely small. Almost all cases of the virus are acquired through mosquito bites and not through human-to-human contact. A very small number of cases have occurred through sexual transmission.

The Public Health Agency's Health Protection Service, working closely with colleagues in Public Health England, is monitoring the situation and will advise on all appropriate actions required in Northern Ireland.

At the moment, the key actions for Northern Ireland are to ensure that travellers to and from affected areas, especially pregnant women, receive appropriate advice and that clinicians are aware of the symptoms in and, where appropriate, the actions to be taken for returning travellers. The Public Health Agency has issued advice to health professionals on the 15 December 2015, 4 and 5 February 2016.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of respite beds in North Down.

(AQW 53826/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The South Eastern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust has 22 beds available for respite provision in North Down. In addition, the Trust will spot purchase extra beds as and when required.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department has conceded that the business case submitted by the Western Health and Social Care Trust supporting the positioning of an acute psychiatric unit in Omagh is viable.

Mr Hamilton: A final decision on the location of the Western Trust's mental health inpatient facility will be taken following assessment of the business case which remains under consideration.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the business case for the new replacement fire station in Cushendall will be sent to the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

(AQW 53866/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department raised a number of queries regarding the business case for the replacement fire station in Cushendall and is awaiting the response to these from the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. Once all queries have been addressed, and my Department has completed its assessment, the business case will be sent to DFP for consideration.

Department of Justice

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many items have been discovered smuggled into Magiligan prison in the last two years.

(AQW 53355/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): NIPS records all illicit articles found and removed during searches within prison establishments. Some of these items will have been brought into the prison in contravention of Prison Rules; others will be items which have not been allocated to the prisoner who has them in their possession. It is not possible in all cases to verify how items have come to be in the possession of the prisoner, and it is therefore not possible to provide a figure for the number of items "smuggled into" a prison.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many items have been discovered smuggled into Maghaberry prison in the last two years.

(AQW 53356/11-16)

Mr Ford: NIPS records all illicit articles found and removed during searches within prison establishments. Some of these items will have been brought into the prison in contravention of Prison Rules; others will be items which have not been allocated to the prisoner who has them in their possession. It is not possible in all cases to verify how items have come to be in the possession of the prisoner, and it is therefore not possible to provide a figure for the number of items "smuggled into" a prison.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many items have been discovered smuggled into Hydebank prison in the last two years.

(AQW 53357/11-16)

Mr Ford: NIPS records all illicit articles found and removed during searches within prison establishments. Some of these items will have been brought into the prison in contravention of Prison Rules; others will be items which have not been allocated to the prisoner who has them in their possession. It is not possible in all cases to verify how items have come to be in the possession of the prisoner, and it is therefore not possible to provide a figure for the number of items "smuggled into" a prison.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many staff have been suspended from his Department over the last three years for disciplinary reasons.

(AQW 53465/11-16)

Mr Ford: The table below details the number of DOJ staff suspended during the last three years for disciplinary reasons, i.e. the number of suspensions that commenced in each year.

Year	Number
2013	9
2014	6
2015	6

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Justice how much his Department spent on training prison officers to help prisoners diagnosed with mental ill-health, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53534/11-16)

Mr Ford: My Department has spent the following amounts on training prison officers to help prisoners diagnosed with mental ill-health across the last 3 years as follows:

- 2012/13 £61,237
- 2013/14 £108,198
- 2014/15 £101,229

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice how much money his Department has spent on marriage support services in each of the last five calendar years; and to list the projects which have received financial support.

(AQW 53585/11-16)

Mr Ford: My Department has not funded any marriage support services in any of the last five calendar years. Currently there are no plans to allocate any funding to these services in the foreseeable future.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many people applied for legal aid over the last two financial years; and how many of these applications were refused.

(AQW 53651/11-16)

Mr Ford: The number of applications registered for legal aid and the number refused in the last two financial years is provided in the tables below:

2013/2014

Business Area	Applications Registered	Applications Refused
Legal Advice and Assistance	37,940	1,118
Assistance by Way of Representation	3,789	132
Children Order	8,285	250
Civil	8,758	2,070

2014/2015

Business Area	Applications Registered	Applications Refused
Legal Advice and Assistance	42,946	841
Assistance by Way of Representation	3,708	211
Children Order	7,704	354
Civil	10,347	2,312

As an applicant may apply on more than one occasion and may apply across the different Legal Aid Schemes, it is not possible to provide information on the number of people who have applied.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 52508/11-16, was it appropriate that the report should in the first instance have been submitted to the Director General given that she was the Gold Commander during this incident.

Mr Ford: I believe that the correct approach has been taken in respect of this independent inquiry. The investigation was independent and taken forward by experienced operational governors from outside the Northern Ireland Prison Service, identified by the National Offender Management Service without any input from NIPS. Neither of the two NOMS staff were previously known to the Director General of NIPS, and their report has been accepted in full without amendment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoners in each establishment have been released under the conditional early release scheme; and what was their risk category.

(AQW 53721/11-16)

Mr Ford: The number of prisoners released under the conditional early release (CER) scheme broken down by likelihood of re-offending category is:

	High	Medium	Low
Maghaberry Prison	0	3	1
Magilligan Prison	0	15	24
Hydebank Wood College & Women's Prison	0	1	6

The Assessment, Case Management and Evaluation (ACE) system of assessing the likelihood of re-offending places individuals in low, medium or high categories depending on their score. A score of 0 to 15 is deemed low, 16 to 29 is medium with 30 and above high.

To qualify for early release on CER an applicant is normally required to present a low likelihood of re-offending. However, in order to reflect the dynamic nature of this risk assessment process and to demonstrate that the Northern Ireland Prison Service is not fettering its discretion unduly, prisoners with ACE scores within two points of the top of the low category band can also be considered provided they meet all the other required criteria. For the purposes of accuracy these prisoners are recorded in this answer as presenting a medium likelihood of re-offending. However, each one of them had an ACE score of either 16 or 17.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 52825/11-16, how many of those considered for release have been in the (i) low; (ii) medium; and (iii) high category of risk.

(AQW 53722/11-16)

Mr Ford: Of the 109 prisoners referred to in AQW/52825/11-16 who had applied for Conditional Early Release, 53 were assessed as presenting a low likelihood of re-offending, 54 fell within the medium category and one in the high category. Two prisoners had not been assessed.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice what was the cost to the public purse of the funeral of Robert Black.
(AQW 53723/11-16)

Mr Ford: The funeral costs for Robert Black were £1,095.00.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice what steps is he taking to prioritise his budget, and bid for any additional funding that might be necessary, to ensure the early commencement of the rebuild of Magilligan Prison.
(AQW 53734/11-16)

Mr Ford: The rebuild of Magilligan Prison is being planned and managed as part of the Northern Ireland Prison Service Estate Strategy. Capital funding to progress the strategy has been allocated for 2016-17. Any additional funding required will be bid for as part of the next budget exercise.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice when the final decision on court house closures will be implemented.
(AQW 53735/11-16)

Mr Ford: Following my announcement on 8 February 2016 regarding the rationalisation of the court estate, Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service officials will now commence preparatory work for courthouse closures and the transfer of business. An implementation programme is under development and it is anticipated that closures will take place on a phased basis commencing from mid 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 52508/11-16, when the report will be published.
(AQW 53814/11-16)

Mr Ford: The report addresses issues which are highly sensitive and related to the security of the establishment and will not be published in full.

The inquiry team have been asked to prepare a synopsis of the report which I expect to publish imminently.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) prosecutions; and (ii) convictions were secured under Article 3 (1) of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 for the offence of selling tobacco products to under aged people in each of the last ten years.
(AQW 53847/11-16)

Mr Ford: Prosecutions for offences relating to the selling of tobacco products to under age persons, under Article 3 (1) of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, are generally brought at magistrates' courts. The table provided gives the number of persons prosecuted and convicted of offences relating to the selling of tobacco products to under age persons for the calendar years 2007 to 2014, the latest year for which data are available. The earliest year for which figures are available is 2007.

Prosecutions and Convictions for offences relating to the selling of tobacco products to under aged persons, 2007 - 2014

2008	37	16
2009	24	11
2010	42	26
2011	19	22
2012	6	8
2013	11	9
2014	2	3

Note:

- 1 Figures relate to initial court disposals only. Results of cases brought to appeal are not included.
- 2 Figures relate to prosecutions and conviction for any one of the offences in question, whether or not they were the primary offence at conviction.

- 3 Figures for prosecutions relate to when cases were received into court. In some instances, cases prosecuted in one year may not have been resolved until the following year, so the figure provided for convictions is not always a subset of the number of prosecutions for that year.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Justice what discussions he has had with the PSNI and Garda Síochána regarding cross-border crime in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.
(AQW 53936/11-16)

Mr Ford: The policing of specific areas is an operational matter for the police services. While I meet the police on a regular basis, and cross border crime features in these discussions and in meetings with my Irish counterpart, I have not had specific discussions about crimes in any particular area. I would note, however, that the fight against cross jurisdictional crime in general should benefit from the recent introduction of a Joint Agency Task Force involving a range of law enforcement bodies from both sides of the border. Its aim is to tackle cross-jurisdictional organised crime, including that linked to paramilitarism, and to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of those involved in it.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the impact on his Department of the decision by the Northern Ireland Office not to make any further funding available for legacy investigations.
(AQW 53970/11-16)

Mr Ford: I understand that the Northern Ireland Office will not release the funding for legacy investigations, agreed as part of the Stormont House Agreement, until the new legacy bodies are established. The justice system is not funded to undertake such work. Without additional funding, the PSNI would be reliant on diverting funding from other priorities to deal with legacy matters. Inevitably this will affect its capacity to respond to current policing challenges. Failure to provide the funds earmarked by the Treasury as long ago as December 2014 is simply punishing the Justice system for the failure of others.

The work my Department has been taking forward, in conjunction with the judiciary and the Police Service of Northern Ireland, to improve legacy inquests is not dependant on the new institutions. I therefore believe that the Northern Ireland Office should release funding to improve legacy inquests now. The issues of the past are the responsibility of the United Kingdom government and should be, funded through the Treasury, in line with the Stormont House Agreement.

Department for Regional Development

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail number of potholes that have been (i) reported; and (ii) repaired in West Tyrone, in each month of the last three years.
(AQW 52784/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): The Road Maintenance Client System which is currently used by my Department was introduced in December 2013. This system records all information relating to the inspection and repair of the public road network and details of enquiries and complaints received from members of the public and other sources. As such the information you requested is only readily available from December 2013. A table with the information is attached (Table 1).

You may also be interested in the number of potholes recorded by my TransportNI Inspectors and repaired over the last three years and a table with this information is also attached (Table 2).

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister for Regional Development how the revenue raised through fines imposed for the improper use of bus lanes in Belfast City Centre has been spent.

(AQW 53303/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: All revenue received, less the cost of operation and collection, contributes to the financing of the services my Department provides. This year it has also enabled the provision of new services such as audio visual systems and real-time passenger information systems for public transport. I want to ensure that the additional revenue raised will be used to support a number of sustainable transport projects.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been accrued through fines imposed on drivers illegally using bus lanes in Belfast City Centre.

(AQW 53304/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The issuing of Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) for Moving Traffic Offences in bus lanes in the Belfast area commenced on 22 June 2015 and the amount paid up to 26 January 2016 is some £1.2 million.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development how many street lights have been reported as out of order or damaged in each district of (i) Omagh; and (ii) Strabane.

(AQW 53333/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Following discussions with your office this question is being treated as relating to the total current number of outages as opposed to the number of outages reported to TransportNI.

It is estimated that, as at the end of January 2016, there are around 155 lights out in the old Omagh District Council area with the equivalent figure for the old Strabane District Council area being 84.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the mileage policy for employees who use their own car to access Roads Service machinery which is parked off site.

(AQW 53353/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: For the purposes of this question, the term "mileage policy" is taken to refer to the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Travel and Subsistence policy.

The NICS Staff Handbook gives comprehensive guidance to staff on matters relating to travel and subsistence policies. Both industrial and non-industrial NICS staff are entitled to claim mileage expenses in accordance with the terms of this policy, details of which are provided in the attached Annex A.

Arrangements to collect machinery or vehicles off site by TransportNI industrial employees must be pre-approved by line management beforehand, in line with the requirements of the Handbook.

Annex A

Travel and Subsistence Policy

The Travel and Subsistence policy provides the framework for reimbursement of additional expenses necessarily incurred in carrying out official duty. In making claims, staff should claim for the actual expense incurred, gain prior approval from the approving officer where practicable and ensure that claims are authorised by a more senior manager of at least Staff Officer level or equivalent. Authorising officers should certify that to the best of their knowledge the claim is correct, that an entitlement exists and that the travelling has been done and that the official duty in question has been arranged so that the minimum expense has been incurred.

Staff should ensure that claims are submitted within the given time limits ie at monthly intervals for frequent travel (one or more journey per week) or at three monthly intervals for occasional travel. Claims submitted later than the prescribed time limits without valid reason may be disallowed and ultimate responsibility for decisions on late claims will rest with the Department.

Industrial Employees

An employee who uses their private motor vehicle to make an official journey to access Departmental machinery or a vehicle which is parked off site is entitled to claim mileage allowance on their home to office route. Mileage allowance in this instance is payable for the mileage between their permanent station and the place visited or their home and the place visited, whichever is the lesser. Section 9.02 Official Travel Paragraph 3.4.7 of the HR Handbook refers.

Calculation of Mileage Entitlement

3.4.7 Mileage allowances (non-taxable), at either the public transport or standard rates, are payable for the mileage between the permanent station and the place visited by the shortest practicable route or the actual distance necessarily travelled if less (see also paragraph 2.3.11). When an official call is made by officers on their home to office route, mileage allowance is payable for the mileage between their permanent station and the place visited or their home and the place visited, whichever is the lesser.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) when work is expected to recommence and finish on Johnston's Bridge, Enniskillen; (ii) whether the work will take place on a 24 hour basis to reduce the impact on congestion in Enniskillen; and (iii) what steps will be taken to minimise traffic congestion at other parts of the town as a result of diversions.

Miss M McIlveen: Work is scheduled to begin at Johnston Bridge South on Monday 18 July 2016. A lane closure will be required for a three to four week period to facilitate the work to the bridge deck and this will be controlled through use of temporary traffic signals. Work will continue on the soffit (underside) of the bridge beyond the initial four-week period without a lane closure but this element of the works will cause only minimal traffic disruption.

The tender for these works will be advertised shortly. Limits are being imposed on the time to complete the works within the carriageway in order to reduce the impact on the surrounding road network and therefore it is likely that the successful contractor will consider extended working hours and weekend working. This will be discussed with the successful contractor after the contract is awarded.

In addition to specifying a limited duration for the works, the timings of the traffic signals at Gaol Square will also be adjusted to account for the change in movement patterns as a result of southbound traffic being diverted away from Johnston Bridge.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any consideration was given to including cycle paths on Johnston's Bridge, Enniskillen as part of recent and planned repair work.

(AQW 53367/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can confirm that the work carried out at Johnston Bridge north in 2015 included widening of one of the footways to facilitate a future shared footway / cycle path. The work planned at Johnston Bridge south for 2016 also includes for a shared footway/cycleway.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Regional Development how much funding has been ring-fenced for upgrading the A5 Western Transport Corridor.

(AQW 53401/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Northern Ireland Executive's Budget Statement of December 2015 outlined the plans to invest almost half a billion pounds on the Flagship road projects between 2016 and 2021. Of this, £229.2 million is allocated to the A5 Western Transport Corridor.

"A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan" includes the commitment by the Irish Government to contribute £75 million towards this project. This funding will be provided in three tranches of £25 million in the years 2017, 2018 and 2019 and is included in the allocation above.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will scope and cost the provision of talking sign systems in bus and train stations and halts.

(AQW 53434/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink is currently undertaking a project to provide a web-based solution for visual passenger information in bus stations and at integrated bus and rail stations. The project is due to be completed by September 2016. At rail stations, visual passenger information and automated announcements are already provided, while at rail halts there are automated audio announcements.

While the current Translink project does not include the scoping and costing of a talking sign system at bus stations, Translink has advised that it will consider this concept as a pilot within the ongoing development of the Belfast Transport Hub project.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she has investigated the possibility of a smartphone travel app for people who are blind or partially sighted.

Miss M McIlveen: As part of the project to install the audio visual system on Metro bus services, consideration is also being given to trialing an App-based solution that will provide audio visual information for passengers at bus stops. The Department is currently working with Translink and other key stakeholders, including Guide Dogs for the Blind and the Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB), to develop this proposal. It is intended to commence a short trial of the App in mid-February 2016. During the trial blind and partially sighted users will be asked to evaluate the usefulness of the App.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will encourage transport providers to sign up to the RNIB's Bus Charter.

(AQW 53436/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As the Transport Minister I am committed to ensuring that older people and people with a disability (including those who are blind or partially sighted) have the same access to transport services and opportunities to travel as other members of society.

I would encourage all bus operators to sign up to all 13 commitments on driver behaviour, working with others and improving the bus environment.

The commitments contained within the RNIB's Bus Charter will be considered as the new Accessible Transport Strategy is developed by my Department.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 49800/11-16 and in light of the Department of the Environment's confirmation that it is unable to establish the suitability of land proposed for flood compensation at Mobouy Road because of the presence of illegal waste, to explain the suitable remediation measures to which the answer refers.

(AQW 53448/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As previously advised, suitable remediation solutions, to deal with the issue of flood compensation at Mobouy Road, have been identified through examination of the existing ground investigation records relating to the contaminated lands as outlined in response to AQW 51018/11-16.

These measures, along with the management of the site at Mobouy Road, inform the discussions my officials are currently having with the Department of the Environment. Both Departments are committed to working together to reach a suitable solution. My Department will align any proposed works with any potential remediation solutions proposed by the Department of the Environment as part of their ongoing study of the site.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will encourage Translink to replace its high-floor buses with low-floor buses.

(AQW 53501/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I would encourage all transport providers to make their services as accessible as possible. Currently, all Translink vehicles do conform to accessibility regulations. Its fleet comprises of both low-floor and high-floor with wheelchair lifts. Wheelchair lifts are available for use by elderly and mobility impaired customers.

Translink has also given a commitment to my Department that all Town Services will be operated by low-floor vehicles.

Further to this, I welcome Translink's recent investment in low floor accessible vehicles and look forward to future investment in low floor accessible vehicles such as those to be used on the Belfast Rapid Transit network.

My Department will take account of all stakeholder views before finalising the Accessible Transport Strategy. This may need to be discussed at Executive level and considered in the next Comprehensive Spending Review.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost to Translink of providing a bus link to transfer train passengers due to a security alert on the line, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53503/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The relevant statistics are included in the table below for the financial years in question. This relates to the whole NI Rail network of lines.

Year	No. of Security Alerts	Cost of Bus Substitution £
2014-15	16	£90,020
2013-14	6	£4,428
2012-13	15	£50,560
2011-12	16	£18,886
2010-11	33	£46,201
5-Year Total	86	£210,095

In the current financial year to date there have been 3 security alerts requiring bus substitution. Cost of bus substitution £59,210.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will consider the inclusion of the Royal National Institute of Blind People as a strategic partner for the development and implementation of her Accessible Transport Strategy. (AQW 53510/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I appreciate that RNIB have been to the fore in facilitating direct engagement with individuals and groups across Northern Ireland so that the views of those who are blind or partially sighted and their carers could be heard and taken on board.

I also welcome their recent report which identifies the issues faced by blind and partially sighted people when accessing public transport. Work is currently ongoing between RNIB and my Department with many of the issues they have identified and I encourage the continuation of this good working relationship in the development and implementation of the Strategy.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of (i) potholes; and (ii) broken streetlights that have been (a) reported; and (b) repaired in Armagh City and district area in each month of the last three years. (AQW 53512/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen:

Over the period August 2015 to December 2015 potholes were repaired but the completion dates were not input to the database due to staff reductions resulting from the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(ii) Lights out and lights repaired

My Department does not maintain street lighting outage or repair data on a month by month basis. Data is only maintained on a financial year basis.

The relevant figures for the last 3 financial years in Armagh City and district area are:

Financial Year	Lights out	Lights repaired
2013/2014	1752	1752
2014/2015	2635	2635
2015/2016 (to 31/01/2016)	1500	1000

The figures for 2015/2016 to date are only for reported defects since my officials no longer carry out night scouting.

From 1 April 2015, the Armagh Council area became a part of the larger Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon Council area. The figures for the Armagh area for 2015/2016 within this larger Council area are therefore an estimate.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development which streets in North Down are being considered for new 20mph zones. (AQW 53532/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has no proposals to introduce 20mph zones in North Down at this time.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development how much revenue has been generated by parking fines in (i) Portadown; (ii) Lurgan; (iii) Banbridge; and (iv) Antrim, in each of the last three years. (AQW 53535/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Please see the table below which contains statistics on the number of Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) issued within each of the last three calendar years for towns listed.

My Department does not maintain revenue figures for parking fines by location; however, based on the total number of PCNs issued across Northern Ireland for the same period, I can confirm that the rates of payment of fines were as follows:

- Approximately 67% of PCNs were paid at £45
- Approximately 7% of PCNs were paid at £90
- Approximately 3% of PCNs were paid at £135
- Of the remaining 23%:
 - Approximately 18% of PCNs issued are challenged. The success rate of challenges to PCNs is approx 60%. The main reason for challenges being successful is because drivers subsequently produce supporting evidence such as a pay & display ticket that fell from the window or upon production of a valid Blue badge.
 - Approximately 5% of PCNs are, at any one time, in various stages of debt recovery action.

	Town	Number of Penalty Charge Notices

(i)	Portadown	289	292	333
(ii)	Lurgan	190	193	217

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Regional Development how many footpaths do not begin and end with dropped kerbs. (AQW 53561/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department does not maintain a register or count of dropped kerb locations so we are unable to quantify how many footpaths do not begin or end with dropped kerbs. That said my Department takes the needs of pedestrians very seriously. Dropped kerbs are one of a number of measures that can be used to create a barrier-free pedestrian environment as they allow easier access and movement for pedestrians, especially the young, elderly and those with disabilities.

In recent years we have invested considerable resources in both improving existing and, where possible, providing new facilities for pedestrians where this can be achieved within our limited resources.

In order to assist less mobile pedestrians, we provide dropped kerbs along with appropriate tactile paving, along strategic routes and in areas of high pedestrian activity.

Dropped kerbs and tactile paving are also provided at all at-grade crossing points in all new works, including footway resurfacing/reconstruction schemes.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Regional Development for an estimate of the cost to her Department of providing free public transport to people who cannot drive as a result of a disability or medical reasons. (AQW 53563/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Under the conditions of the Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme, people who have been refused a driving licence on medical grounds are entitled to half fare bus and rail travel. The cost to my Department for providing this concession in 2014/15 was £41K.

There are a number of other individuals who receive concessions at half fare. It includes those who are partially sighted; those on Disability Living Allowance higher rate; and those with learning disabilities. The cost of providing these elements of the Concessionary Fares Scheme to my Department was approximately £843K in 2014/15.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development how many streetlights in the last twelve months have not been repaired within 5 days of being reported broken. (AQW 53564/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: In normal circumstances, my Department aims to carry out the majority of street lighting repairs within five working days of a fault being reported. However, due to budgetary constraints, the use of external contractors who normally carry out 75% of all street lighting repairs was suspended in eight of the last twelve months. Consequently repairs were taking longer than normal to complete during this period.

My officials have advised that between 01 January 2015 and 31 December 2015, 57,588 street lighting defects were reported. In this 12 month period, due to the budgetary constraints, 37,075 repairs were not completed within five working days.

However, since additional funding was allocated for street lighting repairs in the November 2015 monitoring round, my Department's officials and contractors have been working hard to address the backlog of street lighting outages that had accumulated. Work is ongoing and my Department envisages that, by the end of March 2016, the vast majority of the backlog for repair of streetlights will have been removed.

My Department has also introduced a new on-line reporting facility for street lighting faults. The public can assist us by reporting faults on the NI Direct web site, under 'Street Lighting and reporting a Fault'. Callers can also report street lighting faults by telephone to 0300 200 7899.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 51619/11-16, (i) when work will commence on the Annsborough Traffic Calming scheme; (ii) how much this project will cost; and (iii) what traffic calming features will be incorporated in the design.

Miss M McIlveen: The proposed traffic calming scheme for Annsborough is currently at consultation stage. The details of the design have yet to be finalised and costs will be calculated on completion of this process.

It is my Department's intention to deliver this scheme within the 2016/17 programme of works, subject to the satisfactory completion of the consultation process and the necessary funds being made available.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 51623/11-16, how many times in the last five years a Water Order Consent has been issued to allow untreated waste water to be discharged into the Kilclief Beach waters. (AQW 53578/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The discharges for Kilclief Beach, which is not a designated bathing water, are consented under the Strangford Collection System Consent No. 5300/2007, issued by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. The current consent was issued on 16 November 2009, to take account of the decommissioning of Kilclief Wastewater Treatment Works and the pumping away of discharges from Kilclief Beach to Strangford Wastewater Treatment Works. Prior to this, the previous consent for Kilclief Wastewater Treatment Works was issued on 9 September 2008. I can, therefore, confirm that no Water Order Consents have been issued in the last five years to allow untreated wastewater to be discharged into the Kilclief Beach waters.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what action she is taking to provide a road crossing for the children of Harte Memorial School in Portadown, given that the school has received an award from her Department for encouraging pupils to walk to school.

(AQW 53624/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I am aware of the award received by Hart Memorial Primary School and would congratulate the pupils and staff for their demonstrated commitment to walking, cycling and indeed scootering to school. I would continue to encourage them to participate in the Active School Travel Programme which has many health benefits as well as promoting the use of sustainable transport modes.

I can advise that my Department's local TransportNI Traffic Section has assessed this location for the provision of a controlled crossing using the current established criteria. The outcome indicated that this site fell well below the level required to consider provision of a controlled crossing as part of our normal programming processes.

It should be noted that Hart Memorial School has benefited from the provision of new cycle shelters. I can assure you that my Department's Cycling Unit will continue to work closely with this school, and all the schools involved in the Active School Travel Programme, and where possible identify infrastructure measures which may further increase participation in walking and cycling to school.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) whether his Department carried out a consultation into the introduction of a 20 mph speed limit in Belfast City centre; (ii) to detail the number and type of consultees; and (iii) the responders who were for and against the proposals.

(AQW 53695/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The concept of piloting signed only 20 mph schemes is one of 199 action measures contained within the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy.

A pre consultation phase for the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy was carried out between March 2009 and February 2010. This involved engagement with 500+ stakeholders to identify key road safety issues and draft solutions. An extensive public consultation was then carried out in March 2010. This confirmed a general support for pilot 20 mph signed only schemes.

As a result of the commitment to the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, TransportNI selected five pilot 20 mph signed only sites, including Belfast City Centre.

TransportNI wrote to the PSNI in November 2013 and the PSNI responded in January 2014 giving their agreement to a zone consisting of the main pedestrian zone, the front and back of City Hall, Cathedral Quarter and areas of high pedestrian activity including High Street and North Street.

TransportNI subsequently wrote to Belfast City Centre Management, Belfast City Council and Translink in February 2014 detailing the proposals.

In July 2014 as part of the legislative process, a full public consultation was carried out with the proposals being advertised in the Belfast Telegraph, Newsletter and Irish Times allowing 22 days for any representations or objections.

19 responses were received including:

- nine objections – five members of the public, NI Objections, Belfast Chamber of Trade and Commerce, Federation of Small Businesses and a member of the Institute of Advance Motorists.
- six responses which supported the proposal in principle- a member of the public, Sustrans, an A&E consultant, NI Cycling Initiative, Belfast City Council, Belfast City Centre Management.
- two representations (general comments about bus lanes, disabled parking and existing slow moving traffic in Belfast City Centre) – two members of the public.
- two requests for more information on how to object – two members of the public.

Before the Traffic Regulation Order was made for the scheme, a submission was sent to the DRD Committee for comment. The scheme was noted at the DRD Committee meeting on 9 September 2015 and no comments were received at this stage.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development what her departmental spend per head of population for cycling in each of the last five years; and what her budget allocation for cycling will be in 2016/17.

(AQW 53696/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department's spend per head of population on cycling in the last five years is detailed below. This includes TransportNI expenditure mainly on on-road infrastructure and including segregated off-road provision, Transport Projects on Active Travel Demonstration in a number of councils, and the Cycling Unit's promotion of cycling and walking and the funding of the Active School Travel Programme.

	Population million	Cycling Spend £million	Spend per head of population
2010/11	1.8	0.43	£0.24
2011/12	1.8	1.25	£0.69
2012/13	1.8	0.98	£0.54
2013/14	1.8	0.98	£0.54
2014/15	1.8	7.51	£4.17

This year it is anticipated that my Department will spend around £2.4 million on measures related to cycling. The current population of Northern Ireland is estimated at 1.858 million using the 'Population Clock Northern Ireland', (which may be viewed on the NISRA website: http://www.nisra.gov.uk/population_clock/ClockText.html). This gives spend of around £1.30 per head of population this year.

The attribution of spend to cycling specifically is not a precise exercise as many projects have benefits for cycling even if not carried out specifically for that purpose. Equally, there are cycling-related projects which have benefits for walking and other active travel modes in addition to the cycling benefit. In addition to expenditure by my Department, other Departments have invested in cycling measures or projects that have cycling benefit (e.g. Department for Social Development investment in the new bridge at the Lagan Weir in Belfast).

Allocations for 2016/17 within the Departmental budget have yet to be finalised.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development whether consultation took place with traders and business owners in Belfast City Centre with regard to the decision to reduce the speed limit to 20MPH.

(AQW 53699/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The concept of piloting signed only 20 mph schemes is 1 of 199 action measures contained within the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy.

A pre-consultation phase for the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy was carried out between March 2009 and February 2010. This involved engagement with 500+ stakeholders to identify key road safety issues and draft solutions. An extensive public consultation was then carried out in March 2010. This confirmed a general support for pilot 20 mph signed only schemes.

As a result of the commitment to the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, TransportNI selected five pilot 20 mph signed only sites, including Belfast City Centre.

TransportNI wrote to the PSNI in November 2013 and the PSNI responded in January 2014 giving their agreement to a zone consisting of the main pedestrian zone, the front and back of City Hall, Cathedral Quarter and areas of high pedestrian activity including High Street and North Street.

TransportNI subsequently wrote to Belfast City Centre Management, Belfast City Council and Translink in February 2014 detailing the proposals.

In July 2014 as part of the legislative process, a full public consultation was carried out with the proposals being advertised in the Belfast Telegraph, Newsletter and Irish Times allowing 22 days for any representations or objections.

Before the Traffic Regulation Order was made for the scheme, a submission was sent to the DRD Committee for comment. The scheme was noted at the DRD Committee meeting on 9 September 2015 and no comments were received at this stage.

The Traffic Regulation Order for the 20 mph signed only speed limit scheme in Belfast came into operation on 12 October 2015. TransportNI was in a position to introduce the scheme in November 2015 but implementation was deferred to minimise any perceived impact on Christmas shopping.

TransportNI wrote to the following stakeholders in November 2015 with information on the deferred implementation:

- Belfast Chamber of Trade & Commerce (BCTC),
- Belfast City Council,
- Belfast City Centre Management,
- Federation of Small Businesses,
- Northern Ireland Independent Retail Trade Association.

TransportNI also wrote to the following organisations in January 2016 confirming that the 20 mph limit would come into operation on 31 January 2016.

- PSNI,
- Freight Transport Association,
- Road Haulage Association,
- Translink,
- Belfast City Council,
- Belfast City Centre Management,
- Northern Ireland Independent Retail Trade Association.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the proposed coastal erosion taskforce will deal with the loss of farmland at Magilligan.

(AQW 53738/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Coastal Management Forum I am establishing is not a 'taskforce' to deal with individual instances of coastal erosion. Rather its remit is to inform a more strategic approach to coastal management involving local councils and relevant government departments. Land in private ownership will not be addressed directly by the Forum unless it is deemed to have an impact on assets in public ownership

Department for Social Development

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) full time; and (ii) part time staff in (a) his Department; and (b) each of its arm's-length bodies who have availed of each tranche of the voluntary exit scheme, broken down by grade.

(AQW 53305/11-16)

Lord Morrow (The Minister for Social Development): Staff in the Department for Social Development availed of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Voluntary Exit Scheme. The numbers of staff who have availed of each of the four tranches to date is shown in Table 1 below.

Staff in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive availed of a separate Northern Ireland Housing Executive Voluntary Early Severance Scheme.

The objective of the NIHE Exit Scheme was to support the delivery of 300 staff releases over a two year period, the savings from which would allow the NIHE to achieve required efficiencies and reduce the cost of services, while also allowing the creation of some key posts necessary for achievement of delivery of excellent and affordable services to its customers.

Tranche 1 of this Scheme refers to staff whose release was approved between the 9th February 2015 and 31st March 2015 and who will leave the organisation by the end of March 2016. The numbers of staff released under Tranche 1 are shown in Table 2 below.

(AQW 53335/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Department is unable to provide the information specifically requested for West Tyrone due to the limitations of the IT systems supporting appeals. The information provided relates to the Disability Living Allowance appeal and reconsideration volumes for Northern Ireland

(i) The total appeals received for each of the years are detailed in the table below.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of claimants that have had sanctions imposed by the Social Security Agency in each year since May 2011.

(AQW 53453/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The information is not available in the format requested. Data is available for the number of sanctions imposed but cannot be broken down into the number of claimants sanctioned. Information on the number of sanctions is only available from May 2011. All sanctions imposed are as a result of an adverse decision on benefit entitlement.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration he has given to exempting charities with a turnover under £5,000 from requirements to report to the Charities Commission, as is the case in England and Wales.

(AQW 53509/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department has not considered exempting registered charities with an income under £5,000 from the requirement to file their annual accounts with the Charity Commission and there are no proposals to do so.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development when the Cavity Wall Insulation inspection report of March 2014, conducted by John Ross of the South Eastern Regional College and commissioned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive will be published in full; and to detail the reason for the delay in publication.

(AQW 53552/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I understand from the NIHE that the recommendations within the SERC/Housing Executive Report on Cavity Wall Insulation were not released as part of the original publication as a major stock condition survey (SCS) was imminent. It was considered appropriate that all of the information arising from SCS regarding insulation should also be taken into account in order to inform the overall picture.

The contents of the SERC/Housing Executive Report on Cavity Wall Insulation (CWI) dated March 2014 are a UK wide issue and not unique to NI. The NIHE has no current plans to isolate the specific properties referred to within the report from the remainder of the stock. It is the intention to bring forward programmes of work related to insulation for properties which have been identified by the recent stock condition survey as in most need and in line with its Asset Management Strategy. This work will require focusing on the significant number of properties which have, to date, not benefited from any insulation work.

The position on existing CWI throughout the stock will be established via the NIHE's future External Cyclical Maintenance (ECM) programmes by undertaking a representative sample of cavity inspections to determine: 1) if the cavity has been filled; and 2) if it has, what condition it is in.

Where dwellings which have already been insulated via cavity wall work and have specific problems associated with this work, the resulting issues will be addressed on a case by case basis.

Now that the NIHE is in possession of all the relevant information the SERC/Housing Executive Report on Cavity Wall Insulation will be published in full on the NIHE website not later than 19th February 2016.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) whether the welfare changes agreed at Westminster have been finalised; and (ii) when they will be implemented.

(AQW 53562/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Northern Ireland Assembly agreed a Legislative Consent Motion (LCM) on 18 November 2015 which allowed for Welfare Reform in Northern Ireland to be legislated for at Westminster. Subsequently the Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 was brought forward at Westminster and was made on 9 December 2015.

Regulations stemming from the Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 are currently being prepared by my officials who continue to work with Department for Work and Pensions to enable the welfare reform regulations to be taken through the Westminster process. The first set of measures are planned to commence in May 2016 with subsequent measures anticipated to commence in June, the autumn and early 2017.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Social Development how much money his Department has spent on marriage support services in each of the last five calendar years; and to list the projects which have received financial support.

(AQW 53586/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department has provided funding for marriage support services as follows:

Year	Funding (£)	Project
2011-12	Nil	N/A
2012-13	Nil	N/A
2013-14	£43,522.42	Care for the Family "Let's Stick Together" programme
2014-15	£34,830.98	Care for the Family "Let's Stick Together" programme
2015-16	Nil	N/A

Note: the funding information is not available in calendar years and has therefore been provided in financial years.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what the cost-of-living adjustments were for benefits in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 53602/11-16)

Lord Morrow: Social Security Benefits are increased or uprated each year from April. Uprating is applied to cover annual price rises and therefore maintain cost of living standards for benefit recipients. Uprating is determined by the Secretary of State in Great Britain and a corresponding order is made in Northern Ireland. Uprating can be based on Retail Price Index (RPI), Consumer Price Index (CPI), Rossi, a minimum threshold of 2.5% or average earnings. The RPI measures the average change in prices of consumer goods and services in the UK including mortgage interest payments and housing depreciation. CPI is again based on the average change in price of consumer goods and services, but excludes some elements involved in RPI, such as housing depreciation and mortgage interest payments.

Between 2005- 2010 most benefits were uplifted by the RPI. Rossi; which is equivalent to RPI less certain housing costs was used for means tested/income related benefits. Basic State Pension was uplifted by the higher of a minimum of 2.5% or by RPI, while Pension Credit rates were uplifted by the increase in average earnings.

Since April 2011, the Consumer Price Index (CPI) has been used as the default measure of inflation for most benefits.

Since 2011 Basic State Pension has been uprated by a "triple lock", which means that the increase is the highest of the increase in earnings, CPI or 2.5% with a similar amount applied to Pension Credit.

In 2013, the government announced that working age benefits would be increased by 1% for the three year period to 2015/16. CPI and the Triple Lock continue to be used for the remaining benefits and pensions.

The table below details the relevant inflationary index for each of the last ten years.

	CPI	RPI	Rossi	Ave Earnings	Triple lock
2006/07		2.7%	2.2%	4.2%
2007/08		3.6%	3.0%	4.4%
2008/09		3.9%	2.3%	3.5%
2009/10		5.0%	6.3%	3.5%
2010/11		1.5%	1.8%	1.8%
2011/12	3.1%			4.6%	4.6%
2012/13	5.2%			2.8%	5.2%
2013/14	2.2%			1.6%	2.5%
2014/15	2.7%			1.2%	2.7%
2015/16	1.2%			0.6%	2.5%

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (a) people in receipt of Employment and Support Allowance; (b) people that were awarded Employment and Support Allowance; (c) people that had their Employment and Support Allowance claim disallowed; (d) people that appealed against the decision to disallow their claim; and (e) appeals against decisions to disallow Employment and Support Allowance claims that were overturned at appeal, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53603/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The table below details the number of Employment and Support Allowance recipients at August in each of the last five years.

Year	ESA recipients at August
2011	25,500
2012	45,990
2013	77,610
2014	107,190
2015	113,870

The other requested information is not available. The Department cannot extract the information from the Departmental Computer Systems of the number of people that were awarded Employment and Support Allowance, people that had their Employment and Support Allowance claim disallowed, people that appealed against the decision to disallow their claim and appeals against decisions to disallow Employment and Support Allowance claims that were overturned at appeal.

*The information provided is an Official Statistic. The Production and dissemination of all such Statistics is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (a) people in receipt of Disability Living Allowance; (b) people that were awarded Disability Living Allowance; (c) people that had their Disability Living Allowance claim disallowed; (d) people that appealed against the decision to disallow their claim; and (e) appeals against decisions to disallow Disability Living Allowance claims that were overturned at appeal, in each of the last five years.

Lord Morrow: Table 1 below details the information held for each of the last five years with regard to (a) number of DLA recipients and (b) and (c) those people who had either a DLA new or renewal claim determined. The variations in numbers will be due to the nature and type of DLA applications received in any particular year.

Year	Number in Receipt of DLA	Number Awarded DLA	Number Refused DLA
2010/11	186,640	22,321	12,500
2011/12	190,790	24,676	11,642
2012/13	194,580	24,481	11,045
2013/14	199,880	25,567	10,759
2014/15	206,980	28,205	12,960

The information for part (d) and (e) is not available in the format requested as the IT system used to administer DLA appeals does not capture the data by specific category type and appeals are also received relating to the amount of DLA awarded. Table 2 below details the total number of DLA appeals received against all decisions made and those where the Tribunal has recorded a more advantageous decision which may increase the allowance or direct that a new award be made.

Table 2

Year	Total DLA Decisions Appealed	Total DLA Appeals with a more advantageous outcome.
2010/11	4,663	1,551
2011/12	4,628	1,511
2012/13	4,621	1,395
2013/14	4,311	1,318
2014/15	5,079	1,307

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development why his Department's administration costs have increased in recent years in circumstances where many other Departments have reduced such spending.

(AQW 53627/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The increase in Administration costs is primarily due to the fact that the Department is engaged in major reform programmes associated with Social Housing and Welfare Reform. In 14/15 £6m was reclassified for the Social Housing Reform Programme consultancy requirement. In addition there were reclassifications to fund the increase in volumes going through the Appeals Service as a result of welfare reform and the additional staff that were required to process the work.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of the anticipated capital receipts of £94m in 2016-17. (AQW 53629/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The £94m receipts are £79.5m Housing (House and Land Receipts, Housing Executive Loan Repayments, Housing Association Grant and Loan Repayments), £14.3m Social Fund Receipts SSA (Crisis Loans and Funeral Loans) and £500k Urban Land Sales.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether the commitment in A Fresh Start agreement not to apply the bedroom tax will be enacted by his Department declining to introduce subordinate legislation that would maintain parity in this regard, namely the Housing Benefit (Amendment) Regulations 2012. (AQW 53641/11-16)

Lord Morrow: As agreed in 'A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan' the Social Sector Size Criteria will not apply in Northern Ireland. Following receipt of the Welfare Reform Mitigations Working Group report led by Eileen Evason, officials are currently considering options, which will deliver the Executive's commitment that current and future claimants will not be impacted by the Social Sector Size Criteria. This work also involves considering any legislative changes that may be required.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the most recent figures for social housing waiting lists in the Newtownabbey area; and (ii) the number and location of new builds in Newtownabbey in each of the last three years. (AQW 53655/11-16)

Lord Morrow:

- (i) Information relating to social housing waiting lists for the Newtownabbey area is no longer available due to the restructuring of the local council areas. The waiting list for Antrim and Newtownabbey Local Government District as at December 2015 is 2,734 of which 1,671 are in housing stress.
- (ii) The number and location of new builds in the (former) Newtownabbey Council Area in each of the last three years was as follows.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department has considered recently a change to Sunday trading hours.

(AQW 53678/11-16)

Lord Morrow: In 2011 the Department carried out a consultation on Sunday trading conditions; this found that opinion on the issue remained divided. I am, therefore, not minded to change the law in this area at this time.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development what research his Department has undertaken to gauge the likely impact on the economy of increasing Sunday trading hours.

(AQW 53679/11-16)

Lord Morrow: In 2011 the Department carried out a consultation on Sunday trading conditions; this found that opinion on the issue remained divided. It was, therefore, decided not to bring forward legislation at that time; consequently no economic impact studies were carried out.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department plans to increase the number of local liquor licences.

(AQW 53680/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I have no plans to consider a change to current law to increase the number of liquor licences in Northern Ireland.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the reasons for delay on updating gambling legislation following his Department's consultation.

(AQW 53732/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I would refer the Member to the answer provided to question AQW 52859/11-16.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission to detail the number of staff that have (i) received written warnings; and (ii) been dismissed in each of the last three years; and to detail the reason for the action taken.

(AQW 53493/11-16)

Mrs McKeivitt (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The number of staff that have received written warnings in each of the last three years and the reason for the action taken is as follows:

	No. of Staff Receiving Written Warnings	Reason for Action Taken
01/02/2013 - 31/01/14	2 7	Conduct Issues* Managing Attendance
01/02/2014 - 31/01/15	2 5	Conduct Issues Managing Attendance
01/02/2015 - 31/01/16	5 6	Conduct Issues Managing Attendance

* Conduct issues includes action taken when, following investigation, an employee is found to have breached an agreed policy and not to have demonstrated the standards of conduct required of Assembly Secretariat staff.

 Information on written warnings issued under the Managing Attendance Policy is only available from 1 July 2013.

The number of staff dismissed in each of the last three years and the reason for the action taken is as follows:

	No. of Staff Dismissed	Reason for Action Taken
01/02/2013 - 31/01/14	1	Managing Attendance
01/02/2014 - 31/01/15	0
01/02/2015 - 31/01/16	3 2	Conduct Issues Managing Attendance

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what action was taken on foot of the BBC Spotlight documentary broadcast in November 2014 which discovered that an MLA's office had claimed more than £4,000 for heating oil expenses in one year; and how much of this money was recovered.

(AQW 53524/11-16)

Ms Ruane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Prior to the broadcast of the Spotlight programmes, a Member became aware of an irregular trend in heating oil payments and referred the matter to the PSNI for investigation. The Member also informed the Accounting Officer who initiated an Internal Audit investigation under the Commission's Bribery and Fraud Response Plan. As a result of that investigation, the Accounting Officer also referred the matter to the PSNI.

The Commission reviewed the content of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. In response to that review, further enhancements to the controls in place for MLAs' expenses were made.

I am advised that the judicial process is on-going. Once this process is complete, the Assembly Commission will consider what further action is necessary in regard to recovery of costs in line with the requirements of Managing Public Money.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission, following the BBC Spotlight documentary broadcast in November 2014 that reported Sinn Féin's payment of rent to non-existent cultural societies, to detail the investigation that was carried out and the action which followed, including the recovery of public money.

(AQW 53525/11-16)

Mr Gardiner (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Commission reviewed the content of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. That review confirmed that payments for rent, as reported in the programme, were made for admissible expenditure. As such, no recovery has been sought.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission how much of the £700,000 claimed by Sinn Féin MLAs and paid to Research Services Ireland, as reported in the BBC Spotlight documentary broadcast in November 2014, has been recovered by the Assembly.

(AQW 53526/11-16)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Commission reviewed the content of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. That review confirmed that payments for research services, as reported in the programme, were made for admissible expenditure up to and including the 2012/13 financial year. As such, no recovery has been sought. No payments to Research Services Ireland for work undertaken after 31 December 2012 have been made as a result of changes to the system of financial support for Members that were introduced by the Independent Financial Review Panel from 1 January 2013.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what was the outcome of reports by the accounting officer to the PSNI arising from the allegations relating to abuse of MLAs' expenses as detailed in the BBC Spotlight programme of 18 November 2014.

(AQW 53527/11-16)

Ms P Bradley (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly's Accounting Officer made two referrals to the PSNI under the Assembly's Fraud and Bribery Response Plan in advance of the broadcast of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. The Assembly Commission has been informed that one of the PSNI investigations has closed without referral to Public Prosecution Service while the judicial process is on-going for the other referral.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission to detail the action which has been taken to recover the almost £5,000 claimed by a former Sinn Féin MLA who alleged that a party expenses claim form for mileage was signed without his knowledge as reported in the BBC Spotlight documentary broadcast in November 2014.

(AQW 53540/11-16)

Mrs McKevitt (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Prior to the broadcasts, the Accounting Officer initiated an Internal Audit investigation into this claim under the Commission's Bribery and Fraud Response Plan. As a result of that investigation, the matter was referred to the PSNI.

The Commission also reviewed the content of the two programmes. That review identified that the reported claim for mileage expenses had not been processed and, as such, no recovery was required.

I am advised that the PSNI has concluded that this matter should not be referred to the Public Prosecution Service.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Hussey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what progress has been made in appointing a representative from the Executive to the Military Covenant Reference Group, as recommended by the NI Affairs Committee in July 2013.
(AQW 43676/11-15)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): There has been no joint agreement to nominate a representative of the Executive to attend a meeting of the Military Covenant Reference Group.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the Active Ageing Strategy will be published.
(AQW 52203/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The Active Ageing Strategy 2016-2021 was published on the OFMDFM website on 26 January 2016.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much their Department spent on the report Investigating Links in Achievement and Deprivation.
(AQW 52276/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The overall cost of the contract for this project, which aims to understand the reasons for differing educational achievement within and between deprived areas through an in-depth qualitative multifaceted case study approach, was £290,563. The study has been running since 2012 and has involved a wide range of in-depth case studies in local areas to develop a better insight into the factors contributing to educational achievement (and associated barriers).

A seven stage payment schedule was agreed aligning with the project plan, spanning 2012 – 2015/16. All stage payments were subject to detailed project deliverables including desk based research, primary research and data collection with target groups.

The research has delivered, to the satisfaction of the advisory team, 6 of the seven stages through the submission of a detailed progress report including individual case study reports on each target area. This has allowed payments of £244,049 to issue so far.

The final stage of the research is underway and will culminate in a final report which synthesises all research to date and includes conclusions and recommendations. An early draft of this final report was received by OFMDFM on 14 December 2015 and is currently for consideration by the research advisory group and departmental officials. Final payment will be dependent on agreement of the report content and presentation, by the research advisory group and the department.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) how much of the £12 million childcare budget, as allocated in 2011, has now been spent; and (ii) what plans there are to allocate the remainder of the childcare budget, including a timeframe for the spend.
(AQW 52568/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Some £4.2 million has been expended from the Executive Childcare Fund. A full break down of spending to date is shown below.

Financial Year	Spend
2011/12	£322,000
2012/13	£1,482,000
2013/14	£692,000
2014/15	£934,975
2015/16 (April-September)	£775,000

The £12 million Executive Childcare Fund was established in 2011. In the financial years 2011/12 and 2012/13, when there was no Childcare Strategy, Departments bid for a share of this funding by submitting proposals for childcare projects that were additional to the actions they were already supporting from their own baselines. With the launch the first phase of the Childcare Strategy in 2013, the Childcare Strategy Programme Board agreed that the Fund should be used strategically to resource the Key First Actions. The balance of the Fund will be used to resource the Key First Actions of the Childcare Strategy, primarily our commitments to projects funded under the existing School Age Childcare Grant Scheme. We have indicatively profiled these at £3 million up to 2018/19.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why the publication of the Active Ageing strategy has been delayed. (AQW 52849/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The Active Ageing Strategy was published on the OFMDFM website on 26 January 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on work to develop a post-2016 strategy for children and young people. (AQW 52880/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The current Executive Strategy for children and young people is due to conclude in 2016 and therefore work is underway to develop a new strategy through a co-design process with other departments, stakeholders and children and young people.

A significant amount of work has been carried out to date which has included reviewing the previous strategy; analysing recent reports to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child; assessing available data sources; and engaging with departments and stakeholders. Initial stakeholder events were held in September and November 2015 and were followed up with a series of one-to-one meetings to discuss the key issues that need to be considered within the new strategy.

From these discussions early themes have emerged which will be tested with stakeholders. A panel of children and young people from across the community will also be invited to take part in the development of the strategy.

We expect the new strategy to build upon the positive aspects of the previous strategy; consider the key issues facing our children and young people today; and outline how Government will work collaboratively to improve the well-being of our children and young people.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister in respect of the centrally held £12m allocated for A Shared Future, to detail which Department will have responsibility for identifying allocations; and how bids will be prioritised. (AQW 53036/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM will be responsible for identifying allocations from the centrally held £12m fund for a Shared Future.

Allocations will be prioritised in accordance with the key priorities identified in Together: Building a United Community.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how older people will be involved in (i) developing the Active Ageing Strategy action plan; and (ii) measuring the effectiveness of the strategy as implemented. (AQW 53439/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Annex B of the Active Ageing Strategy provides information on actions to implement the Strategy. These actions were chosen in light of the comments and priorities identified by consultees during the public consultation on the draft Strategy. Three hundred people, mostly older people, were involved in the public events as part of the consultation.

In addition we will explore with the department's Ageing Strategy Advisory Group, which includes older people and members of groups representing older people, the best way to involve older people in the monitoring and review of the delivery of the Strategy.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the budget that will be allocated to the Active Ageing Strategy to enable its full implementation. (AQW 53443/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: Significant resources are currently deployed in providing a wide range of services for older people across Government. We have also set out at Annex B to the Active Ageing Strategy some key actions to be taken forward to help address some of the issues facing older people. It is our intention to take forward further actions as a second phase of projects (also listed in Annex B), subject to resources becoming available.

Over the next Assembly mandate, we propose to undertake a more systematic review of the wide range of measures directed to improve the lives of older people in order to ensure that we achieve the maximum outcome for the significant resources deployed in this area.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how they are engaging with the community and voluntary sectors to develop a framework for a set of children's rights indicators.

(AQW 53877/11-16)

Mrs Foster and Mr M McGuinness: The aim of the Child Rights Indicator Framework is to develop a set of outcome indicators which can be used at a strategic level to measure and monitor the Executive's progress on effectiveness and achievement against the United Nations Conventions on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC).

These Child Rights indicators are not separate, but integral to the development of the new Children and Young People's Strategy and will provide a clear and practical alignment between achievement of the outcomes set out in the Strategy and the measurement of improved compliance with delivery on children's rights.

Extensive engagement with the voluntary and community sector has been ongoing since June 2015, as we move forward with a co-design approach to develop a new Children and Young People Strategy. This has included: consideration of the recommendations in the NGO, Children's Commissioners and Human Rights Commission reports to the UN Committee, which fed into the UNCRC List of Issues published in November 2015. Ongoing workshops and one to one meetings have been held with voluntary and community organisations, monthly updates on the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership (CYPSP) website (two-way interaction) and the DSC monthly updates.

As we move forward, engagement on the new Strategy will also include obtaining the views of a wide range of children and young people and their parents and carers building on what they have already shared with us. This engagement process will continue through to the publication of the new Strategy and on an ongoing basis thereafter.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (i) the location of rural broadband improvement schemes implemented in South Down since 2007; and (ii) whether any further improvements are planned.

(AQW 53255/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Responsibility for broadband provision within Northern Ireland comes under the remit of Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment (DETI). However to date my Department has provided DETI with a total of £7.5m, split £2.5m to the Next Generation Broadband project and £5m to the NI Broadband Improvement Project, both projects delivered on the ground by (DETI). Through these projects a number of areas in South Down have benefitted from improved access to broadband (see table below).

Since 2007 improvements to broadband have also been made by a number of commercial organisations, some of which have received Government support. This includes fixed line, wireless and satellite broadband technology.

Under the new Rural Broadband scheme delivered through the Local Action Groups (LAGs) there is £2m available to LAGs to implement community broadband solutions to isolated rural not spot areas. The LAGs have indicated through their Local Rural Development Strategies that they plan to invest £1.8 in community broadband through LEADER going forward.

Finally I understand from information received from DETI they have plans for further improvements and recently commenced implementation of the Superfast Roll-out Programme (SRP) which seeks to extend the reach of broadband services of at least 24 Mbps to a further 39,000 premises by the end of 2017, including in the South Down area. Details of the scheme can be found www.detini.gov.uk/articles/superfast-rollout-programme-phase-2.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department will enforce EU regulations in sea fishing, in which Article 7 reads 'according to scientific advice, sea bass (Dicentrarchus labrax) in the Celtic Sea, Channel, Irish Sea and southern North Sea (ICES divisions IVb, IVc and VIIa, VIId–VIIh) is in a perilous state and stock continues to decline. The conservation actions to prohibit fishing for sea bass in ICES divisions VIIb, VIIc, VIIj and VIIk should be maintained and should include ICES divisions VIIa and VIIg, with the exception of the waters within 12 nautical miles of the baseline under the sovereignty of the United Kingdom. Spawning aggregations of sea bass should be protected and no catches should be allowed in the entire distribution area of the stock for the first six months of the year. Due to incidental and unavoidable by-catches of sea bass by vessels using demersal trawls and seines, such by-catches should be limited to 1 per cent of the weight of the total catch of marine organisms on board. Further restrictions of catches are needed to protect sea bass outside the spawning periods, therefore monthly catch limits should apply in ICES divisions IVb and IVc, as well as VIId, VIIe, VIIf and VIIh, and in the UK territorial sea in ICES divisions VIIa and VIIg. Catches of recreational fishermen should be limited further.'

(AQW 53607/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Sea Bass conservation measures to apply in 2016 are set out in Article 10 of the new Council Regulation (EU) 2016/72 which fixes 2016 fishing opportunities.

These measures, as with all other EU sea fishing conservation measures, will be enforced by the Sea Fisheries Inspectorate of my Department's Fisheries and Environment Division.

The measures contained in Article 10 are restrictions that are directly enforceable.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of (i) full time; and (ii) part time staff in (a) her Department; and (b) each of its arm's-length bodies who have availed of each tranche of the voluntary exit scheme, broken down by grade.

(AQW 53693/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: (a) Within DARD 262 full time and 130 part time staff accepted offers of early exit over 4 tranches of the Scheme.

(b) Within AFBI, 108 full time and 27 part time staff have so far accepted offers of early exit over 2 tranches of the Scheme. A 3rd tranche has not yet completed.

A breakdown by grade as requested is set out in the table below.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development in which areas of North Down is her Department planning to increase the tree population; and when this work will start.

(AQW 53719/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department provides an indicative map for woodland creation indicating the areas of land being potentially "suitable for afforestation" and "suitable for afforestation with possible constraints" on the DARD website.

To increase woodland cover I launched the Forestry Grant Schemes under the Rural Development Programme 2014-20 in November last year and allocated up to £17.4 million to support woodland expansion and the sustainable management of existing woodland.

Since opening the schemes Forest Service has received applications for over 300 hectares of new woodland planting this winter. At present officials are assessing these applications and will issue letters of offer to successful applicants around mid February.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development ?to detail the number of full time equivalent agency staff employed by (i) her Department; and (ii) each of its arm's-length bodies in each week since June 2015, broken down by grade.

(AQW 53733/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Details of the number of agency workers whose services have been engaged by both DARD and its associated arm's-length bodies for the period requested are set out below, broken down by grade. Agency staff are engaged under the terms of the NICS Temporary/Short Term Workers Contract.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to list the departmental approved Pesticide Training Course providers.

(AQW 53739/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The awarding bodies for Pesticide Training Courses are responsible for approving assessment centres and assessors. Therefore my Department does not publish a list of approved providers.

Anyone who uses Pesticides (approved for use in Agriculture, Horticulture and Forestry) in the course of their job is legally required to have a Certificate of Competence in the Safe Use of Pesticides. The assessment for this certificate must be completed by an assessor who is approved by either City and Guilds or Lantra.

Pesticide training, assessment and certification are available from a range of providers. City and Guilds Certificates of Competence are delivered through a network of approved Centres; some of these also provide training. Details of the City and Guilds approved centres are available on www.nptc.org.uk (under Qualifications).

Lantra approve instructors/assessors to deliver and assess their training courses/qualifications. Details of Lantra approved instructors/assessors are available on www.lantra.co.uk (under Training & Qualifications).

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to list the community organisations in North Down that receive funding from her Department.

(AQW 53799/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department does not directly fund any community organisations in North Down.

Under my Rural Community Development Support Programme, County Down Rural Community Network has been awarded funding to provide support for rural community organisations in the Ards & North Down Borough Council area.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 52978/11-16, whether retrospective applications, to include small businesses and farms, will be possible to the proposed Emergency Financial Assistance Scheme and to the Homeowners Flood Protection Grant Scheme extension.

(AQW 53819/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The 'Homeowner Flood Protection Grant Scheme' was launched on 13 January 2016. The Grant Scheme is designed to assist homeowners, who meet the scheme eligibility criteria, in making their property more resilient to flooding. However, I have also announced a proposal that the Scheme be extended, subject to a viable business case, to include small businesses including farms. Retrospective applications however cannot be considered, as the scheme requires the Individual Property Protection measures to be designed in advance, to ensure the grant finances the most economically viable solution.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what support is available from her Department for improving access to, and the speed of, broadband in rural areas.

(AQW 53830/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: To date my Department has provided a total of £7.5m to date, split £2.5m to the Next Generation Broadband project and £5m to the NI Broadband Improvement Project, both being delivered on the ground by Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment (DETI). I have also just announced that my department is funding the residue of the Broadband Voucher scheme rural business applicants. This will see up to 170 rural businesses getting the opportunity to benefit from a grant of up to £3,000 to install high speed broadband.

Finally under the Rural Broadband scheme delivered through the Local Action Groups (LAGs) there is £2m available to LAGs to implement community broadband solutions to isolated rural not spot areas. The LAGs have indicated through their Local Rural Development Strategies that they plan to invest £1.8m in community broadband through LEADER going forward.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when the Ards and North Down Local Action Group will be open for applications for funding.

(AQW 53835/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: All ten LAG strategies have now been assessed and successfully scored the pass mark or above and have been invited to complete a strategy implementation plan. As implementation plans are agreed by officials the Department will issue each LAG with a contract for delivery of the LEADER schemes.

Opening a call for applications for funding is a 2 stage process. Firstly applicants must attend a funding workshop. There they will be given advice on eligibility and pre application documentation that they need before applying for funding, such as a business plan, proof of match funding etc.

LAG's can commence their funding workshops once their strategy has been approved and most have already started workshops or are providing information to potential applicants at LAG information events.

Once workshops are complete in a LAG area, the LAG will contact those applicants that have the required pre-requisites and invite them to submit an application, this should happen in the first quarter of this year.

My Department will also provide information on calls for applications through the DARD website and the LEADER facebook page.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding her Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent. (AQW 53842/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department for Agriculture and Rural Development has sourced £277m of matched and £1,618m of unmatched European Union funding in the last 6 years from April 2009 to March 2015.

A table showing where this funding was spent is broken down in the table below.

Due to the Department's document retention policy of 7 years, financial information for 2008/09 and earlier years is limited and has therefore been excluded.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Single Farm applications were received in 2015; (ii) how many were successful; and (iii) how many applicants have received payment. (AQW 53846/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: 27,714 Single Application Forms were submitted for the 2015 scheme year. To date, 23,013 farm businesses have demonstrated eligibility for the Basic Payment Scheme and 22,224 have received payment. My officials are working to finalise the remaining claims as quickly as possible.

Mr Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how much her (a) Department; and (b) its arm's-length bodies has spent on office supplies in each of the last five years. (AQW 53856/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development spent a total of £2,451,000 on office supplies from 2010/11 to 2014/15. This is broken down in the table below.

DARD Spending on Office Supplies 2010/11 to 2014/15

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact on the agriculture sector of a 41 per cent drop in total income for farming in 2015; and how her Department is working to grow and sustain farming for the future. (AQW 53879/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm incomes fell significantly in 2015 because of very poor market prices reflecting weak global markets and adverse exchange rate movements. The total income from farming figure for the industry as a whole is at a level not seen for 10 years and that is very concerning.

The Executive's strategy for support to the agri-food supply chain is outlined in its response to Going for Growth, which details actions that Executive departments would deliver in support of the Executive's commitment to the agri-food sector.

In particular, my Department has undertaken a number of initiatives to grow and sustain farming for the future. I have secured the largest ever Rural Development Programme funding, up to £623m, including up to £250m for the Farm Business Improvement Scheme which will deliver a number of programmes to assist and support farmers in securing the future of their businesses. On 8 February 2016, I announced that all eligible applications for the first tranche of Business Development Groups will be offered a place on the Programme. This is the first part of the Farm Business Improvement Scheme and will mean that over 3000 farmers will have the opportunity to work together to help develop their businesses in the aim of improving farm profitability.

Accessing new and developing markets is vital to the long term sustainability of the sector. Through dedicating significant resources to this important area, DARD has also opened up a number of significant new markets, including provisional approval to sell pork to China and work is ongoing to secure access to further markets including Australia and the Philippines. My Department has also taken forward a number of initiatives in plant and animal health, including the establishment of the TB Strategic Partnership to provide further impetus to the ongoing efforts to eradicate TB.

Developing a strong and resilient agricultural sector able to react to market volatility requires a strong and integrated supply chain. With the support of the Agri-Food Strategy Board, I have been encouraging all elements of the supply chain to work together in a more open and transparent manner. That work began at the initial Supply Chain Forum event in October 2015, and has continued via the AFSB. A further Supply Chain Forum event will take place in the near future and see more detailed discussions on potential tools available to the sector to soften the impact of volatility.

I remain optimistic about the long-term opportunities for our farming industry. Though, the current income crisis requires that we continue to work on all fronts to help farmers and I will continue to do whatever can be done.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline her commitment to the retention of her Department's local rural offices; and what are her future plans for these offices.

Mrs O'Neill: The Department's network of local offices has been a key feature of how it has engaged with and supported farmers for a number of years and I am very conscious of the importance of its role in that regard, in terms of the delivery of online, telephone and face-to-face services.

My commitment to supporting farmers has been consistent and I look forward to the opening of a new office in Strabane next month, marking the completion of the rollout of the DARD Direct network.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the relocation of the Forest Service to Enniskillen, including (i) how many staff will be relocated; and (ii) how this compares to the number of employees working in the Forest Service headquarters in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53935/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Building work on the Forest Service headquarters was completed in September 2015.

- (i) Over 50 Forest Service posts will be located in the new headquarters. 47 are already working there, 39 in posts relocated from Belfast.
- (ii) The number of employees working in the Forest Service headquarters in each of the last three years is outlined in the table below:-

YEAR	Number of Staff working in Forest Service headquarters
2013	61
2014	62
2015	59

Staff in post figures are based on 15th January 2013 to 2016. The number of staff working in Forest Service, including its headquarters, is fluid as a result of the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme and other staff reduction initiatives.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on any consideration given to legislation on the control of greyhounds.

(AQW 53972/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: As previously advised to you, in my response to Assembly Question AQW 41991/ 11-15, whilst no specific Department has responsibility for the Control of Greyhounds Act 1950, my Department has policy and legislative responsibility for animal welfare, dog control, the identification and licensing of dogs and dog breeding.

Any amendment to the Control of Greyhounds Act 1950 would need to be taken forward through the Assembly, and any decision about whether to bring forward an amendment would be preceded by an examination of the available evidence on greyhounds and engagement with stakeholders, particularly Councils given their role in enforcing dog control legislation here.

The Dogs Order 1983 sets out licensing and registration conditions for dogs; requirements in relation to control of dogs on certain roads or land; conditions in respect of dogs bred for fighting; and controls for other specially dangerous dogs. It does not make specific reference to greyhounds but applies to them in the same way it applies to all other dogs.

I have no plans to bring forward additional proposals in relation to this issue.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the funding his Department has allocated to the East Derry constituency in each of the last five years.

(AQW 54011/11-16)

(AQW 53002/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department, including its ALBs, will provide approximately £33.8m to the voluntary and community sector in the current financial year. This will be by means of grant and includes funding for the Stadiums' programme.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assurances the IFA has given on the procedures and processes it will put in place to take the Sub-Regional Stadia Programme forward in a fair and transparent manor.

(AQW 53648/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL is responsible for the development and delivery of the Sub Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer, including the allocation of funding.

Programme governance structures for the Sub Regional Programme are currently being developed by my officials and these will be established and implemented in line with best practice to oversee the delivery of the programme. It is envisaged that IFA representation will be required within the governance structures of the programme.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the funding her Department has awarded to motorsport in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53909/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Applications to recognise a Governing Body for any sport are considered under a joint policy between Sport NI and the other Sports Councils in England, Scotland and Wales. My Department has no role in this process.

No application has been received by Sport NI.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) whether a contract bond exists with the parties involved in the construction of the Mac; (ii) whether this bond allows for the repair of the current damage to the building; (iii) who is responsible for the bond; and (iv) what is the monetary value of the bond.

(AQW 54336/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A Performance Bond to the value of 10% of the construction costs was in place between the contractor and the MAC up to practical completion of the project. This equated to a value of approximately £1.33m.

Construction was completed in February 2012 at which point the Performance Bond expired, therefore it does not allow for the repair of the current damage to the building. There are no other Bonds in place.

Department of Education

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the stipulation or point of reference that makes split site school funding dependant on the financial state of the school; or permits that Education Authority to withdraw funding on that basis.

(AQW 53063/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The criteria for eligibility for consideration of schools to be designated as Dual Sites (split site), is outlined at paragraph 6.22 of the Common Funding Scheme. As detailed in paragraph 6.23 of the Scheme, in operating Dual Site arrangements, Funding Authorities will advise the school on what it sees as the most efficient manner of operation across the sites, taking account of local circumstances such as the nature and phase of schooling, timetabling and transfer difficulties for pupils/teachers, together with any associated costs.

The determination of financial support for additional costs arising from Dual Site operations rests with the individual school's relevant Funding Authority.

Any one provision in the CFS cannot be read in isolation, but must be subject to any provisions in CFS which are of general application. In this regard the Education Authority (EA) has advised that it will exercise a challenge function in relation to the funding sought and the school's financial position. Any school, with a surplus in excess of the threshold of 5%, or £75,000

(whichever is the lesser) of its delegated CFS budget, will be critically assessed by the EA, before any split site funding is provided. This is in accordance with Departmental guidance.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education on what basis split site funding has been removed from some schools in 2015-16; and the justification for this removal.

(AQW 53240/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The criteria for eligibility for consideration of schools to be designated as Dual Sites (split site), is outlined at paragraph 6.22 of the Common Funding Scheme (CFS). Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the schools recognised as operating on a split site; and (ii) those that received funding in (a) 2014-15; and (b) 2015-16.

(AQW 53241/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The eligibility for consideration of a school as a Dual Site (Split site) is outlined at paragraph 6.22 of the Common Funding Scheme. Details of schools funded in the 2014/15 and 2015/16 year (to date) are shown in the tables below.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria for funding split site schools.

(AQW 53243/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The criteria for eligibility for consideration of schools to be designated as Dual Sites (split site), is outlined at paragraph 6.22 of the Common Funding Scheme. As detailed in paragraph 6.23 of the Scheme, in operating Dual Site arrangements, Funding Authorities will advise the school on what it sees as the most efficient manner of operation across the sites, taking account of local circumstances such as the nature and phase of schooling, timetabling and transfer difficulties for pupils/teachers, together with any associated costs.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Education to detail the business case for the cut off point of three years since qualification included in the Investing in the Teaching Workforce Scheme.

(AQW 53361/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Investing in the Teaching Workforce Scheme is still under development in collaboration with teaching unions and employer representatives, and details have yet to be finalised. All relevant criteria will be published when details of the Scheme have been finalised.

It is intended to launch the Scheme in early Spring, all relevant criteria will be published at that stage.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail how much funding, through the Early Years Fund, was awarded to the private sector in 2015-16.

(AQW 53415/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Early Years - the Organisation for Young Children (EYO), which administers the Early Years Fund on behalf of the Department of Education, has confirmed that none of the funding has been awarded to the private sector in 2015/16.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the changes that have been made over the last three years to how funding is allocated to the community voluntary sector; and the reasons for the changes.

(AQW 53605/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There have been no changes made over the last three years to how funding is allocated to the community/voluntary sector by the Department of Education.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail what action his Department is taking to ensure the provision of continual professional development for teachers that are not in full time employment.

(AQW 53664/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has a statutory duty to provide in-service training for teachers in schools here. I have been advised that within EA there is no centrally organised professional development for unemployed teachers.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, given the restriction of the three years since qualification for teachers in the Investing in the Teaching Workforce scheme, to detail what continual professional development will be targeted at teachers that are unemployed and beyond the point of three years qualification.

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has a statutory duty to provide in-service training for teachers in schools here. I have been advised that within EA there is no centrally organised professional development for unemployed teachers.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) how he will respond to the disappointment expressed at his proposal to exclude experienced teachers from the opportunity to apply for permanent posts through the Investing in the Teaching Workforce scheme; and (ii) whether he has sought any legal advice on his proposals.

(AQW 53666/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Investing in the teaching Workforce Scheme is currently under development, in collaboration with the teaching unions and employers, and details have yet to be finalised.

It is intended that the Scheme will be launched in early Spring 2016; all relevant criteria will be published at that stage.

I realise that disappointment has been expressed by some about the proposed parameters of the Scheme, however I must stress that the Scheme will have potential to provide up to 500 permanent teaching posts for recently qualified teachers and up to 500 teachers will be able to retire early. In the absence of this Scheme neither will happen.

Legal advice has been received on the proposals.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the relationship between his Department and the Education Authority; and (ii) who is responsible when a statutory duty on his Department is discharged to the Education Authority for delivery but the duty is not met.

(AQW 53689/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) is an Executive NDPB of DE established by statute, the Education Act (NI) 2014. The broad framework within which the EA operates is set out in the EA's Management Statement and Financial Memorandum which was drawn up by DE in consultation with the EA and includes: the EA's overall aims and objectives in support of DE's wider strategic aims and objectives and the contribution to the Executive's Programme for Government; the rules and guidelines relevant to the activities of the EA in the discharge of its functions, duties and powers; the conditions under which any public funds are paid to the EA; and how the EA is to be held to account for its performance.

Whilst the Department does not delegate any statutory duty to the EA for delivery, it expects the EA and its other executive NDPBs to assist it (appropriate to their own roles) in discharging its own duties including, for example, in relation to the encouragement and facilitation of both integrated and Irish-medium education. The Department also has a general duty to secure the effective execution by the EA of the Department's policy in relation to the provision of the education service; and, after consultation with the EA, may give directions as to the performance of any of the EA's duties under the Education Orders.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education how many permanent teachers were paid a salary in December 2015.

(AQW 53707/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, but processes teacher payments on behalf of employers for the controlled, maintained and grant-maintained integrated sectors. The number of teachers that were paid for current employment via the Department's payroll in December 2015 was 20,311 – 16,068 permanent teachers and 4,243 temporary. These figures do not include teachers who are employed by Voluntary Grammar Schools, who process their own payrolls and pay their own teachers directly.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education how many temporary teaching positions were advertised by his Department in each of the last five years.
(AQW 53710/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not the employer of teachers; responsibility for the recruitment of teachers lies with the relevant Employing Authority or, in the case of Voluntary Grammar Schools (VGS) and Grant Maintained Integrated (GMI) Schools, the Board of Governors.

The number of temporary teaching positions advertised by the Employing Authorities in each of the last five years is detailed in the table below.

It is important to note that the Employing Authorities advertise temporary teaching positions of six months or more duration. The figures are, therefore, exclusive of temporary teaching positions secured through the Substitute Register (which are for a period of "up to six months duration").

Please note these figures do not include VGS or GMI Schools.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education whether an assessment of primary schools in East Londonderry that require major refurbishment in the 2016-17 financial year has been completed in the last twelve months.

(AQW 53741/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not maintain a list of schools in need of a new school build. When I wish to make a further Major Capital announcement the School Managing Authorities are requested to provide a list of the projects that they consider to be their top priority.

I am currently considering the merits and feasibility of making a further announcement of schools to progress to planning in the primary sector before the end of the current mandate. The criteria used for prioritising the schools submitted for consideration will be broadly based on the protocol that was utilised for my Major Capital Works announcement in June 2014. This protocol is available from the Departments website at the following hyperlink: <https://www.deni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/de/protocol-for-selection-for-the-selection-of-major-capital-works-24-june-2014.pdf>.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that received funding for breakfast clubs in the last twelve months.

(AQW 53762/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on breakfast clubs is not routinely collected from schools. The Department's Extended Schools (ES) programme provides additional funding for those schools serving the most disadvantaged areas to provide for a wide range of services and activities outside of the traditional school day and, where assessed as needed by schools, this may include breakfast clubs.

The Education Authority has confirmed that during the 2015/16 financial year just over 200 schools provided breakfast clubs through the ES programme.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools with a scheme offering pasteurised milk to pupils.

(AQW 53763/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education's Nutritional Standards for School Lunches require all schools to make milk available for pupils to purchase every day. The Department for Agriculture and Rural Development has advised that 692 schools have purchased subsidised milk through the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme which it administers.

Under the DE Milk and Meals Arrangements, free school milk is currently provided to all pupils at special schools, to pupils in nursery and primary schools who do not have access to school meals and to individual nursery and primary school pupils where it is deemed necessary in the interests of their health.

Nursery schools and primary schools with nursery classes can also apply to the DHSSPS Day Care Food Scheme for free milk for children under five. DHSSPS has advised that 335 nursery schools / units offer milk to pupils under the Day Care Food Scheme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the action he has taken light of the acknowledgement by the OECD that their report which denigrated the literacy and numeracy skills of local students contained information that was incorrect, and (ii) the consequences in terms of the probity of other OECD reports on which he has relied.

(AQW 53769/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Given that the error contained within the OECD's recent report was purely presentational in nature, caused by a formatting issue, and has since been identified and corrected by the OECD, I do not deem it necessary to take any further action. I should emphasise that the data underpinning this report are correct and, in turn, there is no reason to comment on the findings of any other OECD report.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of permanent teaching vacancies advertised by his Department in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53777/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not the employer of teachers; responsibility for the recruitment of teachers lies with the relevant Employing Authority or, in the case of Voluntary Grammar Schools (VGS) and Grant Maintained Integrated (GMI) Schools, the Board of Governors.

The number of permanent teaching positions advertised by the Employing Authorities in each of the last five years is detailed in the table below.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has established the value of an A* graded GCSE awarded by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment when converted to Ofqual's proposed new numerical grading system of one to nine.

(AQW 53778/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Here, as in Wales, an A* represents the highest level of performance in GCSE qualifications. In England the designation will be different.

I am informed by the Qualifications Regulator that, in moving to the new numeric grade scale in England, Ofqual intends to ensure year on year comparability by anchoring the current A Grade to the new 7 Grade.

This will mean a direct read across, so that the percentage achieving A/A* will align with Grade 7 and above achievement.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the (a) waiting lists for children requiring a Special Educational Needs assessment in South Down; and (b) length of time each child has been waiting.

(AQW 53779/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following receipt of a request for a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs, the Education Authority (EA) is required to complete this process within the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. Therefore, waiting lists do not apply in relation to such assessments.

The EA has advised that the number of pupils in South Down constituency for whom a decision has been made to carry out a statutory assessment and who were within the ten week period, allowed by statute, to complete the assessment, as at 31 December 2015, is 23.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of money held in reserve by (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary schools.

(AQW 53788/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: For the purposes of answering this question 'money held in reserve' is taken to mean schools' surpluses. The value of schools' surpluses as at 31 March 2015 held by (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary schools, is as follows:

Sector	Value of Schools' Surpluses* £
Primary	£33,294,944
Post Primary	£15,219,443

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) current use of the Ulidia annexe site in South Belfast; (ii) annual cost of maintaining the buildings and site; and (iii) future plans for the site.

(AQW 53795/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) is responsible for the Ulidia site. The EA has advised that the site is currently used by the EA Schools Library Service, the Education Welfare Office and the EA Cleaning Service. The first floor of the main block is currently leased by 'Studio On', creative learning centre.

The EA has advised that the annual cost of maintaining the buildings and site is £122,738.

The site has been identified as a potential new site for Scoil an Droichid and discussions are ongoing with the EA in relation to this proposal.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools that currently provide a breakfast club service.

(AQW 53828/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on breakfast clubs is not routinely collected from schools. The Department's Extended Schools (ES) programme provides additional funding for those schools serving the most disadvantaged areas to provide for a wide range of services and activities outside of the traditional school day and, where assessed as needed by schools, this may include breakfast clubs.

The Education Authority has confirmed funding used by schools, through their ES allocations, for breakfast club provision in each of the last three financial years.

I have arranged for these details to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Education (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding his Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.

(AQW 53844/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department's ability to access EU funding is directly linked to the applicability of EU funding streams to the core business of the Department.

Based on information available within my Department the table below details the funding received in the last 10 years from the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation in NI and the Border Region of Ireland (Peace II) and the NI Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (BSP) from 2000-2006.

My Department has focused on maximising the support available from the EU's Comenius and Youth in Action Programmes which ended on 31 December 2013 and the EU's Erasmus+ programme which was launched on 1 January 2014.

The British Council was the National Agency for the Comenius and Youth in Action programmes and the British Council in partnership with Ecorys, is the National Agency responsible for delivering the EU's Erasmus+ programme. The education service here has been able to benefit from the following amounts drawn down by the National Agency in each of the last 5 financial years:

Financial Year	Drawdown
2010/11	£1.4m
2011/12	£1.2m
2012/13	£1.6m
2013/14*	£2.2m
2014/15*	£1.8m

* Erasmus+ drawdown reported by DE for Year 3 (2013/14) and 4 (2014/15) is provisional until DE receive final figures from the British Council.

The Peace IV programme was launched on 22 January 2016 and covers the period up to 2020 (with eligibility until 31 Dec 2023), the total funding is €35.29m for shared education (€30m EU funding plus €5.29m match funding provided from central funds); no Peace IV funding has been spent yet as the Special EU Programmes Body has not announced calls for applications.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 51473/11-16, for an update on the strategy in relation to reports of sexual offences, alleged cases of rape and physical sexual assaults committed on school premises following the meeting of Designated Officers of Child Protection in Education group and the PSNI.

Mr O'Dowd: There are established child protection procedures in place which involve school staff and staff within the Child Protection Support Service for Schools (CPSSS), working closely with Social Services and the PSNI in the best interests of all the children or young people concerned.

Officers from the PSNI Central Referral Unit attended the Designated Officers for Child Protection in Education Group (DOCPEG) to discuss various issues relating to sexual assaults in schools, including communication and reporting of offences. For information, DOCPEG is comprised of the Chief Education and Welfare Officers from the Education Authority who manage the Child Protection Support Service for Schools (CPSSS) and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) and is chaired by the Department.

In the course of these discussions, the following clarification was provided in relation to the PSNI statistics:

- All allegations of sexual assault are recorded by the PSNI, regardless of whether these are actioned or are subsequently withdrawn.
- The statistics on assaults on school premises included incidents after hours, weekends and in school holiday periods.
- Any revelations/allegations made to a school's Designated Teacher or independent Counsellor and subsequently referred to the PSNI for further action are recorded against the school's address for statistical purposes. They may not however relate to an incident in school at all rather the school is where the disclosure was made.

In addition, a number of measures have been agreed to ensure improved cooperation and communication between the PSNI and the education sector. This includes closer working with colleagues in the PSNI, in the main through the Safeguarding Board NI to address issues whilst avoiding duplication and inconsistencies. These improvements will complement the established child protection procedures mentioned above.

Mr Murphy asked the Minister of Education to detail how much his (a) Department; and (b) its arm's-length bodies has spent on office supplies in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53858/11-16)

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether the Home to School transport review is a policy priority for his Department.

(AQW 53873/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I remain committed to ensuring the Home to School Transport policy is fit for purpose; however, I determined it was not possible to achieve a wholesale policy change given the limited time left in the Assembly mandate. As such, I decided not to proceed with the consultation.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Education to detail how much the General Teaching Council has paid to HMRC in corporation tax, interest and penalties; and any subsequent amount refunded in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53889/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not hold the information requested. The General Teaching Council has however provided the following table detailing the information sought:

	Payments	Refunds
2011	-	-
2012	-	-
2013	£193,144	-
2014	-	£193,653

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail the area plan for (i) primary and (ii) post-primary schools in East Londonderry.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education to detail the costs associated with teaching English to pupils that do not have English or Irish as their first language broken down per school, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53919/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not hold this information in the detail required.

My Department provides an additional factor of £1000 per year, via the Common Funding Formula (CFF) to schools for each pupil designated as a newcomer, that is, a pupil who does not have a language in common with the teacher in order to access the curriculum. Over the last five years the total amount provided to schools in respect of the newcomer additional factor is £47 million.

Individual schools have the delegated responsibility to plan and use their funds in accordance with their own needs and priorities including provision for newcomer pupils.

My Department also provides funding to the Inclusion and Diversity Service which supports all Newcomer children to make the transition into the classroom and provide support to schools in relation to translation and teaching methods.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) whether the costs of teaching English to pupils that do not have English or Irish as their first language is met out of schools' delegated budgets; and if so (ii) these schools and the expenditure from their delegated budgets, in each of the last five years.

Mr O'Dowd: Individual schools have the delegated responsibility to plan and use their funds in accordance with their own needs and priorities. Schools may utilise whatever element of their overall budget they deem necessary, in whatever way they consider appropriate to support newcomer pupils.

Neither my Department, nor the Education Authority can provide the costing information requested.

My Department provides an additional factor of about £1000 per year, via the Common Funding Formula (CFF) to schools, for each pupil designated as a newcomer, that is, a pupil who does not have a language in common with the teacher in order to access the curriculum.

Over the last five years the total amount provided to schools in respect of the newcomer additional factor was £47 million.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the funding given to schools for breakfast clubs in each of the last three years.

(AQW 53934/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on breakfast clubs is not routinely collected from schools. The Department's Extended Schools (ES) programme provides additional funding for those schools serving the most disadvantaged areas to provide for a wide range of services and activities outside of the traditional school day and, where assessed as needed by schools, this may include breakfast clubs.

The Education Authority has confirmed funding used by schools, through their ES allocations, for breakfast club provision in each of the last three financial years.

I have arranged for these details to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Education to list the planned capital investment for each in school in Fermanagh and South Tyrone in the 2016-17 financial year.

(AQW 53938/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I have been delighted to announce a number of capital build projects in the Fermanagh and South Tyrone constituency.

The following schools currently have Major Capital Works projects:

- The new build project for Enniskillen Model Primary School has an approved business case for £6m and it anticipated that the project will move to site in December 2016.
- St Patrick's Academy, Dungannon, with an approved business case for £28.7m, is anticipated to commence on site early in the 2016-17 financial year.

- The Devenish College project has an approved business case for £23.2m and it is anticipated that it will progress to site in the 2017-18 financial year.
- The Moy Shared Education Campus for St John's Primary School, Moy and Moy Regional Primary school is at business case stage and until this has been approved it is difficult to estimate when construction will commence.

The seven schools detailed below have School Enhancement Programme Projects that were announced in March 2014:

- The project for Willowbridge has a total project cost of £3.9m to demolish the Edwards Campus and provide new build accommodation to the Lendrum Campus to include multi-purpose rooms, Home Economic, Art and Design and General Classrooms, in the form of an extension. The project is currently on site and due to complete November 2016.
- The project for Erne Integrated College has a total project cost of £4m to provide a New Sports Hall, learning support, sixth form and refurbishment of existing school buildings. Phase 1 of the works completed August 2015, Phase 2 was given approval in February 2016 to progress to tender for the construction.
- The project for Mount Lourdes has a total project cost of £1.1m to provide an extension to the dining hall and a covered walkway. Approval was given in February 2016 to progress to tender for the construction.
- The scheme for Integrated College Dungannon has a total project cost of £3.1m to provide a new sports hall and ancillary accommodation by a new build 2 storey building. Approval was given in February 2016 to progress to tender for the construction.
- The Loreto College project involves the demolition of 8 general classrooms; the provision of 4 double modular classrooms; the demolition of 4 science rooms; the provision of 1 double modular classroom science suite; the provision of 1 double modular classroom music suite; the refurbishment of 4 science laboratories; and the replacement of underground pipes at a total project cost of £9.44m. It is anticipated that works will complete on site in March 2016.
- The project for St Michael's College is currently at the final design stage. The project will see the provision of a new floodlit 3G pitch, with athletics area and changing pavilion. Once the final Design is approved by the Department, funding to release the project to construction will be reviewed against the available capital budget at that time. The project has a total project cost of £1.07m.

Actual investment in the 2016-17 financial year will be dependent on the progress of these various projects.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Education for an update on the construction of the new build for Devenish College.
(AQW 53939/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Following the appointment, in October 2015, of Isherwood & Ellis as the Integrated Design Team for this project work has progressed to take forward the development of the design for the new school. Enabling works for the build are currently ongoing for the project but have been delayed due to the inclement weather conditions.

It is anticipated that this project will progress to site in the 17/18 financial year.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education for an update on the proposed School Enhancement Programme works for St Louis Grammar School, Ballymena.
(AQW 53951/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The SEP project at St Louis Grammar School Ballymena, with total project costs valued at £4m, is for the refurbishment and extension of the existing Convent Building to provide a Creative and Expressive Arts facility. The scheme will include facilities for Music, Drama, Art, Moving Image & Media Studies with additional space for an ICT Suite and Sixth Form Centre.

The school's Professional Design Team has undertaken extensive liaison with Planning and NIEA Historic Buildings regarding the scheme as the Convent Building has Grade B1 listed status.

The final designs for the scheme at St Louis Grammar School were approved on 25 June 2015 but due to the restricted Capital budget the project could not be approved to move to construction at that time.

I am pleased to inform you that I have now given approval for the scheme to move to tender for the construction works and it is hoped that work will commence on site early in the FY 2016/17.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education why his Department has taken the decision not to put the home to school transport review out to consultation.
(AQW 53984/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I remain committed to ensuring the Home to School Transport policy is fit for purpose; however, I determined it was not possible to achieve a wholesale policy change given the limited time left in the Assembly mandate. As such, I decided not to proceed with the consultation.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail what support his Department provides to schools that run breakfast clubs.
(AQW 53991/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on breakfast clubs is not routinely collected from schools. The Department's Extended Schools (ES) programme provides additional funding for those schools serving the most disadvantaged areas to provide for a wide range of services and activities outside of the traditional school day and, where assessed as needed by schools, this may include breakfast clubs.

The Education Authority has confirmed funding used by schools, through their ES allocations, for breakfast club provision in each of the last three financial years.

I have arranged for these details to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Home to School Transport Review.
(AQW 54023/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I remain committed to ensuring the Home to School Transport policy is fit for purpose; however, I determined it was not possible to achieve a wholesale policy change given the limited time left in the current Assembly mandate and that it is more appropriate for it to be taken forward in a future Assembly mandate.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of post-primary pupils currently suspended from school; and (ii) how long they have been suspended.

(AQW 54036/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department collects information on suspensions annually from the Education Authority. Statistics are published on the Departments website.

The figures in the following table have been provided by the EA to the most current date. Please note the figures in the table refer to the number of suspensions and not the number of pupils. The same pupil may have been suspended more than once.

School Type	Suspensions from 1 September 2015 to 31 January 2016
	Number of post-primary pupils suspended	Total number of days lost from suspension for post-primary pupils
Post-primary	2,685	7,063

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of staff that have availed of the Voluntary Exit Scheme in each tranche (a) in his Department; (b) its arm's-length bodies; including (c) their grade; and (d) whether they were part time or full time staff.

(AQW 54045/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (a) Seventy one staff on my Department's payroll have availed of the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme in tranches 1- 4, as shown in the table below. In accordance with the confidentiality principle of the Statistics Authority's Code of Practice on Official Statistics, figures have been suppressed where small numbers are involved.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number; and (ii) as a proportion, the number of (a) primary school pupils; and (b) post-primary school pupils enrolled at schools within Translink Metro zones that were eligible for free travel on existing Metro services through the Home to School Transport scheme, excluding private buses provided for students on un-serviced routes, in each of the last three years

Mr O'Dowd: The table below shows the number of school pupils in receipt of a sessional pass for use on Translink Metro public bus services over the last three completed academic years:

Year	Pupils Numbers
2012/13	3,147
2013/14	3,223
2014/15	3,225

In relation to part (ii), given the nature of Translink Metro routes, my Department is not able to provide this information.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education to detail how much his Department (i) has spent internally on administering the Home to School Transport scheme, excluding external payments; and (ii) has paid to Translink for providing travel on (a) existing Translink routes through the Home to School Transport scheme; and (b) private buses provided for students on un-serviced routes, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 54068/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd:

Year	Expenditure
2012/13	£1566k
2013/14	£1611k
2014/15	£1691k

The table below shows the expenditure involved in the Education Authority's administration of home to school transport for the last three completed academic years:

In relation to part (ii), both the Education Authority and the Department for Regional Development have confirmed that the funding that is paid to Translink for the provision of home to school bus services is not able to be disaggregated between those pupils using public stage carriage bus services and those using designated school bus services.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number; and (ii) as a proportion, the number of (a) primary school pupils; and (b) post-primary school pupils that were eligible for free travel on existing Translink routes through the Home to School Transport scheme, excluding private buses provided for students on un-serviced routes, in each of the last three years.

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority and the Department for Regional Development have confirmed that they are not able to disaggregate the number of pupils receiving home to school transport using Translink buses into those using public bus services and non-public bus services.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has allocated to providing defibrillators in schools.
(AQW 54095/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A defibrillator is an optional addition to first aid provision in schools and should be considered in the context of the school's first aid risk assessment. The decision to purchase a defibrillator and train staff in its use is therefore a matter for each school.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils that have achieved a GCSE in Physical Education in each of the last ten years.
(AQW 54096/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the table below:

	Number of GCSE Physical Education examination entries by year 12 pupils achieving grades A*-G
2004/05	3,285
2005/06	3,533
2006/07	3,865

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria followed by the Education Authority in terms of admission to the Voluntary Exit Scheme in respect of managers.
(AQW 54117/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All Education Authority non-school based employees, including all managers, have been provided access to the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the process for decision making in the Education Authority in respect of determining applications under the Voluntary Exit Scheme.
(AQW 54118/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) initiated a 2015-16 Voluntary Exit Scheme (VES) on 21 May 2015 targeting non-school based staff. Around 1065 expressions of interest were received by 3 June 2015 including 27 from staff at senior management (i.e. Assistant Senior Education Officer (ASEO) grade and above). The VES has remained open throughout 2015-16 and a further small number of expressions of interest have been received.

Applications are prioritised to achieve the cost reductions identified in the EA centre budget agreed by the Board on 03 July 2015.

All VES applications are considered on balance of savings delivery requirements and service provision, before staff can be approved for exit, and must satisfy the following predetermined criteria:

- it is a bona fide redundancy, that is, the post is being suppressed and it is not to be filled at a later date;
- there is a genuine reduction in the full time equivalent (FTE) staffing level and corresponding reduction in staffing budget, in line with the EA budget cost savings requirements, which is not to be increased at a later date;
- the proposal falls within the payback period of 3.25 years; and
- the proposal clearly sets out the impact that the permanent removal of a post will have on service delivery.

In the first instance formal offers of voluntary severance were made to staff with an exit date of either 30 September 2015 or as soon as possible thereafter; or a date to be agreed as soon as possible on or before 31 March 2016, conditional on sufficient funding being made available and approved by my Department. These offers targeted the suppression of posts mainly at senior management level and from the former CASS service, Schools Library Service and the Regional Training Unit. Additional formal offers of voluntary severance were then made to clerical and administrative support staff in a range of support functions across the organisation with an exit date as soon as possible. This included staff in posts that continue to be required in areas such as finance, HR and student finance, whose release is conditional on transferred redundancy.

The EA continues to keep VES applications under active consideration, subject to examination of service requirements and statutory responsibilities.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Education to detail any opportunities primary schools can avail off to assist with the teaching of history at Key Stage 2 in relation to the 1916 Easter Rising and other key events in Irish and European history that have approaching centenaries .

(AQW 54129/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are opportunities for teachers to address significant centenaries within the History strand of The World Around Us at Key Stage 2. For example, many schools choose to study 'Titanic' as a topic and the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) has produced teaching resources (such as the Thematic Unit 'Unsinkable') to support this.

As part of the 'Ireland 2016' programme to commemorate the events of 1916, of which the Easter Rising is one, three all-island schools' competitions will be held this year in History, Drama and Art. The cross-curricular nature of these competitions provides opportunities for pupils to learn about this important period in our history.

CCEA is currently developing support materials, in conjunction with other partners to assist teachers should they wish to explore the significant centenaries. I have agreed to provide funding of up to £45k for this work by CCEA in 2016/17.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for an update on his plans to address the shortage of pre-school places in North Down.

(AQW 54143/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Pre-School Education Advisory Groups (PEAG) of the Education Authority (EA) are responsible for ensuring that there is adequate pre-school provision in local areas. For the 2015/16 admissions process in North Down, all children whose parents stayed with the admissions process were placed in a pre-school setting for which they had expressed a preference.

By the closing date for 2016/17 pre-school admissions, 855 first preference applications had been received for settings in North Down. The PEAG will continue to assess the demand for pre-school places and make additional provision based on an assessment of need.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on the transformation plan for Crumlin College.

(AQW 54181/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority and NICIE have worked with Crumlin Integrated College to develop an updated Transformation Plan, which is now being implemented.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education ,given the recent report entitled Commission on Religion and Beliefs in British Public Life and its recommendation that RE should be renamed and broadened to include more religious and non-religious worldviews, to detail what steps his Department is taking to move this forward.

(AQW 54183/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The core RE syllabus aims to reflect the changing world and enables Key Stage 2 pupils to become aware of and have respect for differing cultures and faiths, as well as providing for Key Stage 3 pupils to study two world religions. Key Stage 4 pupils study the Christian Church from both a Protestant and Catholic tradition. This applies in all grant-aided schools and was drawn up after wide consultation by a group made up of the four main churches.

When the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) undertakes inspection of a school, it takes cognisance of, and reports on, the overall ethos and values of all schools which are inspected. It also takes account of the delivery of key aspects of the curriculum including Personal Development and Mutual Understanding, Learning for Life and Work, Citizenship and Literacy. Inspectors visit RE lessons to evaluate teaching and learning when it is requested by the Chairperson of the Board of Governors. This request is made in writing to the Chief Inspector in advance of the inspection. In most instances the request is agreed.

Parents have the right to withdraw their child from all or part of RE on the grounds of conscience and teachers also have the right to be excused from teaching all or part of RE.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education how his Department monitors Religious Education in controlled schools given that the Education and Training Inspectorate has no rights of inspection for Religious Education in Controlled schools.

(AQW 54184/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The core RE syllabus aims to reflect the changing world and enables Key Stage 2 pupils to become aware of and have respect for differing cultures and faiths, as well as providing for Key Stage 3 pupils to study two world religions. Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the projected cost of the capital build at Braidside Integrated Primary and Nursery School which is due to commence in 2017.

(AQW 54189/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The business case for Braidside Integrated Primary School was approved in August 2015 for £5.27m. The progress of this project to construction stage is dependent on the new build for Castle Tower School being completed and the site being vacated. The completion of Castle Tower is currently programmed for June 2017.

It is difficult to predict a definitive value of the investment required for the Braidside build as the project is currently at an early stage of design. It should be noted that progression of any project that is not contractually committed will be subject to funding being available at that time.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the shared educational campus for St John's Primary School and Moy Regional; and whether he has received an economical appraisal for this project.

(AQW 54198/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A Project Board for the Moy Shared Education Campus has been established and has been meeting regularly. The Education Authority is currently carrying out a detailed economic appraisal for the project, including the completion of Traffic Impact Assessments and geotechnical investigations relating to sites identified as potential options for the new shared education campus.

The economic appraisal is due with my Department by March 2016.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education how the funding for special educational needs will change under the new Special Educational Needs and Disability legislation.

(AQW 54213/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: How special educational needs (SEN) are funded will not change as a result of the Special Educational Needs and Disability (SEND) Bill.

It remains the responsibility of the Education Authority and schools to ensure they fully meet statutory obligations in the provision of education for children with special education needs.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail when his Private Office was first in possession of an initial draft reply to AQW 53741/11-16.

(AQW 54285/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Member will be aware that I provided him with an answer to AQW 53741/11-16 before its due date of 17 February 2016.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail all the appointments he has made to outside bodies since 16 May 2011, broken down by community background.

(AQW 54286/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A breakdown, by community background, of the appointments I have made to the Boards of arms' length bodies and school governing bodies between 16 May 2011 and 16 February 2016 is set out below.

Protestant Community	Roman Catholic Community	Neither Community / Not Known
194	225	45

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of teacher training places available in (i) 2010-2011; (ii) 2011-2012; (iii) 2012-2013; (iv) 2013-2014; (v) 2014-2015; (vi) 2015-2016; and (b) the number of projected places available in 2016-2017.

(AQW 54287/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of teacher training places allocated for the years in question is set out in the table below.

Year	Number of places allocated
2010-11	649
2011-12	656
2012-13	600
2013-14	600
2014-15	600
2015-16	580
2016-17	580

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education what steps are being taken to create a single model of governance for schools.
(AQW 54340/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: All grant aided schools operate the same model of governance. On a day to day basis all grant aided schools are managed by a Board of Governors constituted in accordance with the provisions of Schedules 4, 5 and 6 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 (as amended) or Schedule 5 of the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education what steps are being taken to create a single administration body for education.
(AQW 54341/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are currently no steps being taken to create a single administration body for education.

The establishment of an Education and Skills Authority (ESA), as proposed under the Review of Public Administration, would have integrated all of the different sectors of education administration. Bills to establish ESA were introduced in the Assembly in 2007 and in 2012. The 2007 Bill did not complete before the dissolution of that Assembly mandate and, in the continuing absence of political agreement, the 2012 Bill did not advance beyond its completion of Committee Stage on 8 April 2013.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the policies applied in deciding which organisations should be represented on the (i) Area Planning Steering group; (ii) Area Planning Working Group; and (iii) ELB Planning Groups; and (b) the representatives in place.

(AQW 54361/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Area Planning support structures which include the Area Planning Steering Group (APSG), the Area planning Working Group (APWG) and Area Planning Local Groups (APLGs), have been established to support the Area planning process by providing strategic direction, operational consistency and opportunity to actively engage with all the key stakeholder bodies.

The representation on these groups relates to those organisations that have specific statutory or sectoral support roles and responsibilities in the strategic planning of education provision.

The Education Authority (EA) has statutory responsibility to secure sufficient education provision for all pupils and to plan for controlled schools. The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) has statutory planning responsibilities for the Catholic maintained sector. The Council for Integrated Education (NICIE), Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta (CnaG) and the Controlled Sector Support Council (CSSC) are sectoral support bodies.

The Voluntary Grammar sector does not have a single organisation that represents all voluntary grammar schools as they are all autonomous organisations. However, the Governing Bodies Association (GBA) is involved at APLG level to ensure the views of local grammar schools can be reflected.

Representatives from the Department of Employment and Learning (DEL) and the Further Education (FE) colleges are included as observers to advise on FE policy and strategic developments within that sector.

Nominations were sought from the organisations aforementioned.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps are being taken to provide funding to bridge the gap between the completion of the pilot projects in the United Youth pilot schemes and the roll out of the full United Youth project. (AQW 52918/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The United Youth Pilot Phase will end on 31 March 2016. I am meeting with Ministers in the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister on Monday 15 February to discuss the future of the Together Building a United Community (TBUC) United Youth Programme.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to ensure working class protestant pupils are encouraged to apply for places in local universities and third level education. (AQW 53712/11-16)

Dr Farry: The key to increasing the uptake of university places from working class protestant pupils is to raise aspirations and attainment levels while young people are still in school. While that is primarily a matter for the Department of Education and the school sector, my Department also provides considerable financial support to our Universities and Further Education Colleges to further support widening participation in higher education.

This includes special project funding for programmes which allow the universities to develop partnerships with non-selective, post-primary schools in disadvantaged areas to raise awareness of the benefits of higher education and to help pupils attain the necessary qualification for entry. Pupils from controlled post-primary schools, in areas with traditionally low levels of participation in higher education, are specifically targeted for inclusion in outreach programmes such as Ulster University's Step-Up and Queen's University's Junior and Senior Academy programmes.

My Department is currently implementing Access to Success, the regional strategy to widen participation in higher education. Significant progress has been made on a range of measures in the strategy aimed at increasing the recruitment, retention and progression of disadvantaged pupils into and through higher education. In addition, my Department allocates £2.5 million each year to help local higher education providers with the additional costs associated with recruitment from groups which are currently under-represented in higher education.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department identifies skills shortage by geographical area; and how skills shortage is being targeted, and respective skills developed, to support the needs of local industries. (AQW 53726/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Department for Employment and Learning provides a range of pathways and provision to meet the skills needs in Northern Ireland, primarily through our universities and further education colleges.

The Skills Strategy for Northern Ireland, 'Success through Skills – Transforming Futures' articulates the overarching vision for the development of skills throughout Northern Ireland and provides the framework for developing further the skills base to meet this challenge and ensure that Northern Ireland has the skills base to support growth and prosperity.

We know that the economy we aspire to over the next decade and beyond will be increasingly dominated by demand for higher level skills, including those developed through higher level apprenticeships.

I commissioned a Skills Barometer for Northern Ireland and my Department has worked with the Ulster University to develop this tool for forecasting skills needs. The initial report shows that under a high growth, low corporation tax environment, skills will be undersupplied in the economy. It is essential that we address these skills needs, so that we are able to fully gain the benefits of a lower corporation tax rate.

Subjects related to science, technology, engineering, and maths - STEM subjects - will be in most demand reflecting the anticipated growth in the ICT, Professional Services and Advanced Manufacturing sectors. STEM qualifications will also be demanded by a wider range of sectors across the economy. The Department has led on the production of the STEM Strategy, 'Success through STEM' and we are making good progress in implementing this.

The UK Commission for Employment and Skills currently runs two large-scale employer surveys in alternate years: the Employer Skills Survey (ESS) and the Employer Perspectives Survey (EPS). The overall aim of the two surveys is to provide robust and reliable information and intelligence from UK employers on skills issues and workforce development activities.

The ESS is the larger of the two surveys and includes data based on over 4,000 completed interviews in Northern Ireland. It provides a detailed understanding of the level and nature of employer demand for new staff and the ability of the labour market to meet such demand, with data broken down by region.

This sets the context for then exploring imbalances and mismatches in the labour market that result from a lack of skills. UK results were available on 28th January and a NI toolkit is to be released on 10th March.

My Department is committed to working with and supporting employers to ensure local skills needs continue to be met in a growing economy, as evidenced by the Working Groups I established to engage with local industries. The six further education colleges play an important role in this in their local areas through delivery of the Employer Support Programme across Northern Ireland.

The Employer Support Programme is a skills development programme consisting of two strands; Skills Focus, which aims to increase the skills levels and employability of a business's existing workforce to qualifications at level 2 and above; and InnovateUs, which delivers the skills necessary to engage in innovation activity.

In delivering the Employer Support Programme, colleges focus on engaging directly with and providing support to employers through identifying future skills needs in collaboration with employers/skills groups, and being both proactive and reactive to employer skills needs in order to provide tailored skills provision.

My Department has also encouraged our universities to rebalance their course provision increasingly to economically relevant subject areas. The findings of the first report of the Skills Barometer underline the need for more graduates in STEM subject areas and provide further validation for my Department's support for an additional 1,419 undergraduate STEM places and 234 PhD places in economically relevant areas since 2012.

The Northern Ireland universities play a critical role in driving sustainable economic prosperity through high quality, internationally excellent research and translating that research into successful innovation through knowledge exchange – central planks of both the Department's Higher Education Strategy 'Graduating to Success' and the Executive's Innovation Strategy.

However, the structure of the Northern Ireland economy leads to a lack of absorptive capacity for R&D in the NI business base. This presents a very real set of challenges which the Department seeks to address by directly supporting the innovation agenda, most notably through the Northern Ireland Higher Education Innovation Fund (NI HEIF) which provides the core, underpinning funding for the universities' business and community engagement activities. NI HEIF is complemented by 'Connected' - a 'unique to Northern Ireland' programme which promotes collaborative working right across the higher and further education sectors enabling universities and colleges to collectively provide a "one-stop-shop" for companies wishing to access technology and knowledge capital, taking them right through the whole process from problem definition through to solution identification and implementation 'Securing Our Success', the new Northern Ireland Strategy on Apprenticeships, aims to help provide the skills needed to rebalance and rebuild our local economy. The strategy puts employers at the heart of a new Apprenticeship system, and I have established an interim Strategic Advisory Forum, comprised of employers, trade unions, providers of off-the-job training and other key stakeholders, to provide advice on key issues concerning implementation of the new strategy. In addition, we have launched Sectoral Partnerships, involving employers, employer representatives and curriculum experts from the FE and HE Sectors to design and agree apprenticeship provision to ensure the needs of employers are met.

Furthermore, working with Invest NI, the Assured Skills programme is designed to help attract new foreign direct investment (FDI) companies to Northern Ireland, by assuring them that the skills they need to be successful are available. Assured Skills support is also open to support existing companies which are considering expansion

Through its Collaborative Skills Change Fund, Assured Skills works collaboratively with companies, further education colleges and universities in all regions of Northern Ireland. The aim of the programme is to provide short term, pre-employment training solutions to skills shortages, in order to support the needs of local companies. One example of programme support to date is with SDC Trailers and MDF Engineering where the programme, in conjunction with Northern Regional College, provided a number of trained welders to fill job opportunities. Another example is training for Automotive/Electrician Panel Builders, in conjunction with Mallaghan Engineering and Contak Wiring Systems, which is currently being delivered in South West College, Cookstown Campus. These participants, following their period of training, will move into placement with the companies with the opportunity of gaining full time employment.

Following the recent 'Fresh Start' agreement, announced on 17 November 2015, which will see the devolution of Corporation Tax powers, a need now exists for speculative training to meet the anticipated demand in skills from employers. The devolution of Corporation Tax powers will change the landscape for business growth and employment and will greatly enhance Northern Ireland's ability to attract FDI and enable indigenous companies to re-invest savings back into their businesses.

Speculative Training will be used as an Assured Skills' tool to assist in the delivery of a lower rate of Corporation Tax to employers. Research that is currently under way is considering which sectors speculative training should focus on and also how the training should be delivered.

The Department's Employment Service supports all businesses across Northern Ireland by providing a comprehensive range of products and services designed to assist employers to fill vacancies with appropriately skilled staff. This includes engaging proactively with employers to promote a better understanding of skills development.

The Employer Engagement Team supports employers to grow their businesses, by ensuring that people of all skill levels are given individually tailored advice and guidance to gain the relevant qualifications and achieve the appropriate skills and experience to make them more employable and to address skill deficits within an area. The Team also assists with employers' recruitment needs; a dedicated Employer Contact Manager (ECM) will be assigned to an employer when a request for assistance is received. ECMs are experienced in working with employers to deliver a high quality service and are focused on finding candidates with the right skills and attitude to match an employer's needs.

During the last financial year the Department hosted six major Job Fair events in Belfast, Londonderry, Ballymoney, Newry, Portadown and Newcastle. 9,067 people attended, 243 companies participated and there were a total of 4,231 jobs on offer to visiting jobseekers.

I hope this gives a flavour of the important and comprehensive work which my Department is doing to identify and address skills shortages in Northern Ireland.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he is encouraging the involvement of local industries and businesses with (i) schools; (ii) further education colleges; (iii) universities; and (iv) recruitment agencies as part of a long-term strategy to identify and address skills shortage.

(AQW 53727/11-16)

Dr Farry: Employer engagement is at the heart of my Department's approach to ensuring that a workforce with the right skills for the future economic success of Northern Ireland is developed.

My Department's main source of information on emerging skills needs is the Skills Barometer, which was developed in conjunction with Ulster University. This provides detailed forecasts of the skill requirements for the Northern Ireland economy up to 2025. It includes an analysis of job growth, examination of the changing skills mix and a detailed review into the demand and the supply of skills for our economy, highlighting potential imbalances.

The forecasts within the model are based on a high growth assumption, which has identified an aspirational level of economic and employment growth, including the potential impact of a lower Corporation Tax rate in Northern Ireland. This scenario was adopted as planning will be essential if we are to achieve our economic ambitions of higher economic growth and improved prosperity.

The tool clearly highlights that there will be a strong need in our economy for people with intermediate and graduate level skills in Science, Technology, Engineering and Maths (STEM) related subjects. There will be growth opportunities for all skills levels across a range of sectors; however the focus will be predominately on higher level skills. It also identifies a strong emphasis on developing employability skills in order to secure employment.

Partnership working with industry is key to identifying and addressing our skills needs. To this end, I have established a number of industry working groups, with a focus on priority sectors. These groups bring together business, academia and government and have developed action plans, through which specific sectoral skills issues are being addressed. The ICT Action Plan, for example, includes the employer led 'Bring IT On' campaign which aims to: improve the image of the ICT sector; to encourage individuals to consider the sector as a viable career option; and to encourage the workforce to seek skills in the areas required to pursue a career in ICT. As part of this year's programme the IT Industry will directly engage with over 150 secondary schools and 15 primary schools.

While the main responsibility for linkages between schools and business lies within the remit of the Department of Education, Minister O'Dowd and I have worked together to establish the Careers Advisory Forum, which includes representatives from business, education and other key stakeholders. Part of the Forum's remit is to facilitate engagement between employers, educators and other stakeholders, and to improve employer links with schools at a local level.

My Department is also developing a work experience system which will improve access to placement opportunities for all young people, highlighting areas where we anticipate employment growth, and provide a platform for employers to promote their sectors.

In terms of encouraging the involvement of local industries and businesses with further education colleges, the six further education colleges play an important role in engaging with local industries and businesses to address skills needs through the delivery of the Employer Support Programme across Northern Ireland.

The Employer Support Programme is a skills development programme consisting of two strands; Skills Focus, which aims to increase the skills levels and employability of a business's existing workforce to qualifications at level 2 and above; and InnovateUs which delivers the skills necessary to engage in innovation activity.

In delivering the Employer Support Programme, colleges focus on engaging directly with and providing support to employers through identifying future skills needs, in collaboration with employers/skills groups, and being both proactive and reactive to employer skills needs in order to provide tailored skills provision.

From a university perspective, the Northern Ireland Higher Education Innovation Fund (NI HEIF) provides the core, underpinning funding for the universities' business and community engagement activities. NI HEIF is complemented by 'Connected' - a 'unique to Northern Ireland' programme which promotes collaborative working right across the higher and further education sectors enabling universities and colleges to collectively provide a "one-stop-shop" for companies wishing to access technology and knowledge capital, taking them right through the whole process from problem definition through to solution identification and implementation.

In addition to the study options offered by further and higher education, my Department offers a range of skills pathways developed in conjunction with industry to deliver on identified skills needs.

'Securing Our Success', the new Northern Ireland Strategy on Apprenticeships, puts employers at the heart of a new Apprenticeship system, and I have established an interim Strategic Advisory Forum, comprised of employers, trade unions, providers of off-the-job training and other key stakeholders, to provide advice on key issues concerning implementation of the new strategy. In addition Sectoral Partnerships have been established to involve employers, employer representatives and curriculum experts from the further and higher education sectors in the design and provision of apprenticeships to ensure the needs of employers are met.

The Department's Assured Skills programme is another area in which employer involvement is key. The programme is designed to help attract new foreign direct investment companies to Northern Ireland by assuring them that the skills they need to be successful are available in Northern Ireland. Assured Skills support is also available to encourage existing companies who are considering expansion.

Working with business to identify skills needs, a structured mechanism exists for collaboration between further education, higher education, InvestNI and the Department through the Assured Skills programme to design and deliver bespoke training programmes tailored to meet the needs of the individual companies. Through this collaboration, our colleges and universities are gaining direct industry experience, providing bespoke training, and thus making changes to the curriculum.

The Collaborative Skills Change Fund programme provides short term pre-employment training solutions to skills shortages. In the creative sector, for example, the Animation Academy and the Game Development Academy were developed in conjunction with employers, Northern Ireland Screen and colleges. Each Academy offered 16 participants the opportunity to uptake employment in their respective areas.

The higher education institutions also work collaboratively with employers. For example, the University of Ulster has worked with CME, Citi and SR Labs to develop and deliver a financial services academy for 13 participants. The programme will continue to work with employers and academia to meet the skills needs of local employers in Northern Ireland.

Following the recent 'Fresh Start' agreement, announced on 17 November 2015, which will see the devolution of Corporation Tax powers, a need now exists for speculative training to meet the anticipated demand in skills from employers. The devolution of Corporation Tax powers will change the landscape for business growth and employment and will greatly enhance Northern Ireland's ability to attract foreign direct investment and enable indigenous companies to re-invest savings back into their businesses.

Speculative Training will be used as an Assured Skills tool to assist in the delivery of a lower rate of Corporation Tax to employers. Research that is currently underway is considering which sectors speculative training should focus on and also how the training should be delivered.

Finally, the Department's Employment Service has an essential role in working with local industries and employers to help them find the people with the right skills for their business. The Department does not, however, deal directly with recruitment agencies.

I trust that my response demonstrates the value I place on ensuring that partnership working with business is integral to my Department's work in ensuring the appropriate skills for our economy both now and in the future.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he is working with the Minister of Education to develop partnerships between companies and schools so that young people are encouraged to develop careers in industries that are facing a present or projected skills shortage.

Dr Farry: My Department has established a number of working groups, which I chair and co chair, in sectors which have been identified as vital to rebalancing the Northern Ireland economy and providing economically relevant skills to the workforce. The Department of Education is also represented on these groups which include the advanced manufacturing, food processing and ICT sectors to identify and address the skills challenges facing each sector.

The groups bring together government, academia and local employers to identify skills needs associated with the particular sector and develop appropriate solutions through an agreed Action Plan. A number of key programmes have been put in place to promote the sectors, increase attractiveness and ensure employees and prospective employees have the required skills. Through the action plan the groups work with employers and career attractiveness campaigns feature prominently to help encourage career choices in each sector to help long term skill shortages.

My Department also works closely with the Department of Education, as well as other relevant departments and industry representatives, to deliver against the recommendations set out in the STEM Strategy for Northern Ireland: Success through STEM, to deliver a skills pipeline in science, technology, engineering and maths. Evidence continues to highlight that growing the number of economically relevant STEM qualifications will be central to Northern Ireland's economic success and it is essential that our young people are encouraged to follow study and careers in STEM.

I also recently established, with Minister O'Dowd, a Careers Advisory Forum which includes representatives from business, education and other key stakeholders. A key role of the Forum is to facilitate engagement between employers, educators and other stakeholders, and to improve employer links with schools at a local level.

My Department is also developing a work experience system which will improve access to placement opportunities for all young people, highlighting areas where we anticipate employment growth, and provide a platform for employers to promote their sectors.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of people in West Tyrone enrolled in apprenticeships; and the type of apprenticeship on which they are enrolled.

(AQW 53757/11-16)

Dr Farry: As of July 2015, total occupancy in the ApprenticeshipsNI programme across all occupational frameworks for residents of West Tyrone was 411.

Programme occupancy, broken down by framework and level, is included at Table 1.

The latest full ApprenticeshipsNI Statistical Bulletin can be found by following the link below.

In addition to ApprenticeshipsNI provision, 10 apprentices are currently participating in a level 3 apprenticeship pilot programme in Automotive Engineering at South West College.

At South West College there are a further 60 apprentices participating in higher level apprenticeship pilot programmes covering, Engineering specialisms, Accounting, Computing, Sustainable Construction and Creative Arts.

Of the apprentices participating in higher level apprenticeship pilots at South West College, 28 have an address in West Tyrone and 38 are enrolled at the Omagh Campus.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding his Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.

(AQW 53841/11-16)

Dr Farry: The European Social Fund (ESF) is the Department's primary source of funding from the European Union. The overall strategic aim of the current Northern Ireland ESF Programme 2014-2020 is to combat poverty; enhance social inclusion by reducing economic inactivity; and increase the skills base of those currently in work and future potential participants in the workforce. The Programme is delivered through a variety of employability-focussed projects across Northern Ireland.

Funding under the Voluntary and Community strand of the current ESF Programme is based on 40% European Commission contribution; 25% DEL contribution; and 35% private or public match funding contribution through a variety of different funding sources.

Funding under the Government Programmes strand of the ESF Programme is based on 40% European Commission contribution; and 60 % DEL contribution.

The Department is only required to retain financial records for the preceding seven years.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students taking literacy and numeracy courses at further education colleges in the last twelve months.

(AQW 54034/11-16)

Dr Farry: In the 2014/15 academic year, the last full year for which records are available, there were 12,060 individuals enrolled on Literacy Essential Skills courses and 13,219 individuals enrolled on Numeracy Essential skills courses.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many Regional Colleges are offering Polish as a modern language course.

Dr Farry: At present, one Regional College, Belfast Metropolitan, is offering Polish as a modern language course. They have provided the following information:

Belfast Metropolitan College offers classes in Polish as a Modern Language. Students have the option to gain a qualification accredited by Open College Network Northern Ireland (OCNNI) (Entry level 3). The following courses were offered for the last three academic years:

13/14	Polish Beginner (Step 1)
13/14	Polish Beginner Plus (Step 2)
14/15	Polish Beginner (Step 1)
14/15	Polish Beginner Plus (Step 2)
15/16	Polish Beginner (Step 1)
15/16	Polish Beginner Plus (Step 2)

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many foreign students are attending local universities in the 2015/16 academic year.

(AQW 54061/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department does not currently hold enrolment data for the 2015/16 academic year, however the table below shows the breakdown of non UK domiciled student enrolments for the 2014/15 academic year.

Country of domicile	Total enrolments
Republic of Ireland	2,345
Other European Union	385
Non European Union	2,795
Total non UK enrolments	5,525

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students leave Northern Ireland to attend universities in other parts of the United Kingdom, broken down by religion.

(AQW 54063/11-16)

Dr Farry: Information on religious background is only available for Northern Ireland-domiciled students studying at Northern Ireland higher education institutions, and is not currently available for those students studying at institutions in the rest of the UK.

The table below sets out the numbers of Northern Ireland-domiciled students enrolled at higher education institutions in other parts of the UK in 2014/15.

Location of institution	Total enrolments
England	11,170
Scotland	4,160
Wales	545
Total	15,875

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail his departmental budget for advertising and promotions for TV, radio and newspapers between 1 January 2016 and 31 March 2016.

(AQW 53823/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The departmental budget for advertising and promotions for TV, radio and newspapers between 1 January 2016 and 31 March 2016 is NIL.

Mr Murphy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how much his (a) Department; and (b) its arm's-length bodies has spent on office supplies in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53859/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and its arms length bodies has spent the following amounts on office supplies in the financial years as shown:

	2011-2012	2012-2013	2013-2014	2014-2015	2015 - 31st Jan 2016	Total
DETI Core	£70328	£59677	£51864	£37400	£26550	£245819
HSENI	£30619	£26180	£20992	£20107	£8631	£106529
Consumer Council	£12293	£9248	£6473	£4530	£2933	£35477
Tourism NI	£7969	£7962	£7830	£7873	£3672	£35306
Invest NI	£26432	£21202	£16645	£19839	£10088	£94206

We have interpreted office supplies to mean general office stationery, paper and printer cartridges and have used financial years which is more compatible with our management systems.

Tourism NI have included general office stationery and paper but have excluded printer cartridges since they were unable to separate the cost for consumables from their managed print service.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 48918/11-16, (i) to provide the planning permission or permitted development case, including reference numbers on which the granting of Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme certificates were based, for each of the six certificates granted for Lough Neagh; and (ii) whether it detailed in full the specific Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme files for audit purposes.

(AQW 49633/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The table overleaf provides the planning information, used at the time, upon which the granting of ALCS certificates was based.

The planning files do not hold information pertaining to the ALCS certificates.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of paragraph 10 of the Planning Appeals Commission ruling relating to Lough Neagh dated 13 November 2013, whether (i) the planning application being considered as part of the enforcement appeal relates solely to the retrospective regularisation of unauthorised sand extraction up to the date of the enforcement notice; and (ii) all unauthorised activities currently being permitted because he did not serve stop notices are not the subject of the enforcement appeal.

(AQW 51217/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department previously stated its position in correspondence to the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC) on 9 November 2015 and in letters to Quarry Plan on 11 November 2015 and 18 January 2016. Copies of the letters have been placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 52577/11-16, to detail the error that rendered the enforcement notice served in regard to the deposition of illegal waste at Site F, Mobuoy Road, Derry defective.

(AQW 53177/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The notice was withdrawn when it was considered that the requirements of S. 139(3) of The Planning Act (NI) 2011 (service on interested parties) were not satisfied.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment and the cost of the damage caused by storm Henry on 1 February 2016.

(AQW 53748/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department did not incur any cost due to Storm Henry as there were no flooding damage claims submitted to the Department as a result of the storm.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the grants available through his Department for the restoration, preservation and promotion of historical sites, locations and buildings, particularly those relating to World War 2.

(AQW 53755/11-16)

Mr Durkan: There are between 20-30 scheduled monuments in Northern Ireland which date to World War Two. The majority are defensive pillboxes built to repel possible invasion, but they also include light and heavy anti-aircraft battery positions. Scheduling is an ongoing process and it is intended to schedule more World War Two sites in future.

There is provision in legislation for my department to support owners of scheduled monuments in their upkeep through management agreements. These management agreements are aimed at ensuring that our heritage is maintained in a sustainable manner for the future and in recognition of the economic benefit such sites can provide for the local economy. Such agreements are considered by my Department on the basis of the risks to the monument and the benefits that it can bring to the surrounding area, within the confines of Departmental budgets.

My Department has a grant-aid scheme to assist with the costs of eligible repairs for most listed buildings; however - due to constraints on departmental budgets - I have not been in a position to allocate any monies to new letters of offer for listed building grant aid in this financial year.

In the new Department for Communities, which will also have responsibility for urban regeneration and for local government, there will be an opportunity to create new options to support works to protect and conserve the historic environment, alongside ongoing advice and guidance to owners of historic structures. Levels of funding available will be dependent on Departmental budgets; I expect to make proposals on how such support may be managed and prioritised, in the coming weeks.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51672/11-16, whether the preparation of management plans for Northern Ireland's Natura 2000 network of European sites is to be outsourced to private consultants; and if so, to detail (i) the reason for this; (ii) the total budget available; and; (iii) where the funding will come from given the cuts experienced by his Department.

(AQW 53808/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department will be employing a range of delivery and funding mechanisms for the Natura 2000 conservation management plans, including:

- Production of plans in-house;
- The INTERREG VA Programme for 2014-2020;
- The Rural Development Programme 2014-2020(measure 7);
- The DOE Environment Fund.

External bodies are eligible to apply for a number of these streams highlighted above, but as some of the mechanisms are at the assessment stage, it is not possible to define who the delivery bodies will be.

Given the varied nature, size and complexity of our Natura 2000 sites and delivery mechanisms, it would not be possible to give a definitive total budget for this work stream at this time.

It should be noted that the production of Natura 2000 conservation plans is not a legal requirement. However, they are a preferred approach to co-ordinating management activities and conservation measures across a site.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to planning permission Z/2014/1346/F and current planning application LA04/2015/0310/F for a waste incinerator at Airport Road; to detail (i) how these proposals are to be connected to the Northern Ireland Electricity network; (ii) if any detailed design of this connection exists; and (iii) whether any connection will require planning permission.

Mr Durkan: The proposed electricity connection for the development is contained within the site boundary for planning permission Z/2014/1346/F. This utilises existing duct work that connects to an existing substation.

Planning application LA04/2015/0301/F seeks to amend planning conditions relating the waste throughput of the facility approved under Z/2014/1346/F. The planning application boundary is the same for both applications.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51672/11-16, whether his Department is outsourcing the management plan preparation to private consultants in order to avoid infraction and heavy fines being imposed on the Executive.

(AQW 53818/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department will be employing a range of delivery and funding mechanisms for the Natura 2000 conservation management plans, including:

- Production of plans in-house;
- The INTERREG VA Programme for 2014-2020;
- The Rural Development Programme 2014-2020(measure 7);
- The DOE Environment Fund.

External bodies are eligible to apply for a number of these streams highlighted above, but as some of the mechanisms are at the assessment stage, it is not possible to define who the delivery bodies will be.

Given the varied nature, size and complexity of our Natura 2000 sites and delivery mechanisms, it would not be possible to give a definitive total budget for this work stream at this time.

It should be noted that the production of Natura 2000 conservation plans is not a legal requirement. However, they are a preferred approach to co-ordinating management activities and conservation measures across a site.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he is taking to improve road safety and help reduce the risk of road deaths.

(AQW 53831/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department continues to take a range of actions to reduce deaths and serious injuries on our roads. We focus on the key causes of road casualties, and on groups which are over-represented in the casualty figures.

The Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill completed its legislative passage on 12 January 2016 and currently awaits Royal Assent. The Bill makes provision for a new drink driving regime and a new Graduated Driver Licensing Scheme. We will now develop and consult on a significant package of subordinate legislation to implement the new arrangements.

My Department has a statutory duty to promote road safety and, within the context of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, does this through a wide range of rolling road safety education activities, including road safety public information campaigns and education programmes.

Through its current portfolio of awareness campaigns, my Department in 2016 will continue to focus on problem areas, such as drink driving, speeding, carelessness and inattention; and on groups which are over-represented in the casualty figures.

I have also recently commissioned two new campaigns. The first is a social media campaign specifically addressing the various issues in relation to mobile phone use while driving. The second campaign will deal with young driver distraction, particularly when carrying passengers. Both campaigns will be launched in the coming months.

My Department also continues to provide a range of resources and schemes to be used by teachers to allow them to improve road safety behaviours in children and young people.

I recognise the continuing challenges of preventing road deaths and serious injuries and as such my Department will continue to address the issues through various activities.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how (i) Public Service Vehicle; (ii) MOT; (iii) AccessNI; (iv) roof sign; (v) ranking; and (vi) printer and meter checks will be undertaken on all taxis (a) after the new regulations come into force in May 2016; and (b) once the new departmental structures are in place.

(AQW 53860/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Driver & Vehicle Agency will be responsible for the mandatory approval, testing and sealing requirements for taximeters and printers required in all Class A and Class B taxis. The taximeter test will be offered at all 15 Test Centres. In addition to the initial taximeter sealing test, taximeters and printers will also be inspected during the taxi's annual licensing test, to ensure continued compliance.

The Agency will also continue to conduct a range of checks on taxis, drivers and operators, both at the roadside and at commercial premises, to ensure compliance with the new regulations and the various rules that apply to each prescribed class of taxi.

This work will comprise of a technical inspection to ensure that vehicles are roadworthy and that they conform with taxi roof sign, taxi meter and printer requirements. Licensing checks will also be carried out to ensure that operators, drivers and their vehicles meet all of the various statutory licensing and annual vehicle test requirements and that each prescribed class of taxi operates within strict accordance with the law.

Access NI repute checks are only completed upon receipt of a taxi driver licensing application and therefore will remain unaffected by the new regulations.

It is anticipated that the new Departmental structure will have little effect on the current taxi licensing and enforcement arrangements.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) whether a taxi operator is required to offer disabled access vehicles as a condition of its operating licence and, if so, how many as a minimum requirement; and (ii) the number of disability accessible cars registered by each taxi operator.

(AQW 53861/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Taxi operators are not required to offer disabled access vehicles as a condition of their Taxi Operator's Licence. There is therefore no requirement for Taxi operators to specifically register the number of disability accessible vehicles in their fleet.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the words, numbers or information that must be displayed on taxi roof signs under the new regulations.

(AQW 53862/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Under the new taxi licensing regime a taxi requiring a roof sign must display to the front either the name or trading name of the licensed operator, or the word 'TAXI', and to the rear either a telephone number or the word 'TAXI'.

These requirements are outlined in Regulation 25 of The Taxi Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department will enforce the requirement for meters and printers in all taxis after 31 May 2016.

(AQW 53863/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Driver & Vehicle Agency will be responsible for the mandatory approval, testing and sealing requirements for taxi meters and printers required in all Class A and Class B taxis. The taximeter test will be offered at all 15 Test Centres. In addition to the initial taxi meter sealing test, taxi meters and printers will also be inspected during the taxi's annual licensing test, to ensure continued compliance.

The Agency will also conduct roadside inspections on taxis and check to ensure that taxi meters and printers have been installed properly and are operating in accordance with the requirements. Enforcement action will be taken where non-compliance is detected.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment how he will advise HMRC about taxi sales and the VAT arising.
(AQW 53864/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department has no remit regarding the VAT implications of taxi sales and therefore I have no plans to discuss the issue with HMRC.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why planning application Z/2014/1473/F for a waste incinerator at Airport Road has been removed from the planning portal.
(AQW 53870/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My officials have advised that there was a minor system issue which prevented this application being viewed by the public. This issue has been resolved and the planning application is now available to view on the planning portal.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment whether a building that is still lived in can be listed on the Built Heritage At Risk register for Northern Ireland.
(AQW 53875/11-16)

Mr Durkan: A building that is still lived in can be included on the Built Heritage at Risk Register for Northern Ireland.

Departmental officials met the UAHS's Chief Executive and buildings at risk officer on 11 January 2016 and agreed a timetable for the project. The UAHS is currently compiling relevant material. The work therefore remains on track for completion in the first half of this year. Once the work is complete my Department will determine the appropriate means by which to make it public.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the Ulster Architectural Heritage Society review of the work of the Built Heritage At Risk Register Northern Ireland, including when it will be published.
(AQW 53876/11-16)

Mr Durkan: A building that is still lived in can be included on the Built Heritage at Risk Register for Northern Ireland.

Departmental officials met the UAHS's Chief Executive and buildings at risk officer on 11 January 2016 and agreed a timetable for the project. The UAHS is currently compiling relevant material. The work therefore remains on track for completion in the first half of this year. Once the work is complete my Department will determine the appropriate means by which to make it public.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the areas of North Down that have tree preservation orders in place.
(AQW 53884/11-16)

Mr Durkan: On 1 April 2015 the majority of planning functions transferred to the 11 new local councils for Northern Ireland and responsibility for holding information about TPOs now rests with Ards and North Down Borough Council.

You may therefore wish to contact the Council Chief Executive regarding the matters raised and he can be contacted at:

Mr Stephen Reid
Chief Executive, Ards and North Down Borough Council, Council Offices, 2 Church Street, Newtonards, BT23 4AP

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment how many cars have undergone a MOT test in each of the last three years.
(AQW 53892/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The number of private car tests, broken down by full test and retest, completed in each of the last three financial years (1 April - 31 March) is set out below.

Private Car Vehicle Tests 2012-13 to 2014-15¹

	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
Full Test	678,086	696,876	703,585
Retest	141,391	139,587	132,721
All Tests	819,477	836,463	836,306

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment how much money his Department has generated through MOT tests in each of the last three years.
(AQW 53893/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The total amount of fees generated from MOT's in each of the last three financial years is set out below:

- 2014/15 £30,230,581

- 2013/14 £30,012,987
- 2012/13 £29,222,452

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment for a definition of an operating centre within the requirements of Taxi legislation; and whether planning permission is required to be demonstrated for any such operating centre.

(AQW 53953/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Taxis Act 2008 defines a Taxi Operating Centre as 'premises at or from which a taxi operator operates a taxi service'.

Taxi Operators are required to ensure that their operating centres comply with the relevant planning regulations. The class of planning permission will vary depending on the use of the building or office and whether the business provides access to the public.

Operators working from a business or commercial premises are required to ensure that any operating centre on their application (a) has existing planning approval, or (b) has a certificate of Lawful Use or Development, or (c) does not require planning approval and is outside the scope of any planning enforcement action.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the address of Uber's operating centre, as per its operating licence; and whether it has planning permission for taxi use.

(AQW 53954/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The operating centre specified on Uber's Taxi Operator Licence is:

- Forysth House, Cromac Square, Belfast BT2 8IA.

UBER fulfilled the planning requirements for Taxi Operator Licensing, appropriate to the use of their operating centre.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 50125/11-16, whether the Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme certificates issued to Lough Neagh sand traders required consideration of the issue that the sand being extracted from this Special Protection Area had neither planning permission or environmental assessments.

(AQW 53983/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department processed Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme (ALCS) applications in accordance with the procedures and in compliance with relevant legislation. The ALCS did not require consideration of off-site activities; the scheme application criteria only related to the site, registered with Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all the country parks that are under consideration for sale or disposal by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency.

(AQW 53986/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that no consideration is being given to the sale or disposal of my Departments Country Parks at present.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any plans his Department has to reform the legislation or practices on the use of snares, including any consideration given to the banning of snares.

(AQW 53993/11-16)

Mr Durkan: In taking forward the Snares Order, which is subordinate legislation designed to place further restrictions on the use of snares, I received several calls for the Order to be overturned and for a total ban on the use of snares to be introduced. The Snares Order requires the approval of the Assembly to bring it into force.

Given the complexity of the issues and the differing views held, I wish to consider the issue in more detail and am meeting several stakeholders to help inform my view.

The overarching legislation governing snares is the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985, which is primary legislation. Given the limited timescale remaining for the current Assembly it would not be possible to take forward any legislative changes to the 1985 Order before the recess.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 51160/11-16, for an update on the implementation of the new driver licensing IT system in terms of each phase of delivery; and whether providing an online application process will lower the cost of a provisional driving licence and bring it into line with the cost of a licence in other regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr Durkan: In responding to AQW 51160/11-16, I indicated that the Driver & Vehicle Agency is currently developing a new Driver Licensing IT system, the first phase of which was to be ready for implementation by April 2016.

However, due to the complexity of the driver licensing business rules and the development of a scanning solution to sit within the workflow processes, development is taking slightly longer than anticipated.

Delivery of the core system is now planned for the end of May 2016 with a range of limited online services being available from June 2016. Other phases are due to be delivered in 2017 and 2018 and include the roll out of further online services and enhancements in access to the driver record.

The introduction of the new system and roll out of online services will provide the opportunity to review the fees currently charged in NI.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment how many successful prosecutions there have been in the last 12 months for offences related to environmental crime.

(AQO 9658/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Since January 2015, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency has overseen 96 prosecutions for offences related to environmental crime.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the action his Department is taking to address the issue of illegal dumping in Carlingford Lough.

(AQO 9659/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I do not have any evidence of current illegal dumping activities in Carlingford Lough, although I am aware of poor practice by the aquaculture industry, and my officials are in discussions with both DARD and the Loughs Agency on this. Any illegal dumping within Carlingford Lough alerted to the Department would be subject to an investigation and potentially enforcement action. If Ms Ruane has any specific information, I will be happy to ensure it is investigated.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the latest statistics on municipal waste going to landfill.

(AQO 9660/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The latest available statistics regarding local authority collected municipal waste (LACMW) going to landfill were those published on 28 January 2016 which covered the period Jul-Sep 2015.

Whilst I recently commented on the latest household waste landfill figures I welcome the opportunity to comment on the LACMW ones too.

The provisional data supplied by the 11 new councils showed that LACMW fell to 97,603 tonnes a drop of 4.4% compared to same quarter last year. This gave an overall quarterly landfill rate of 38.3% compared to 40.5% last year. This was a good result since LACMW arisings (that is all the waste the collected by the councils) increased by 1.1% in the same period. The reduction in landfilling is in line with the Northern Ireland Landfill Allowance Scheme (which reduces the amount of biodegradable LACMW that can be landfilled each year).

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the work his Department is undertaking with relevant bodies to address the large volume of waste which has been deposited by flooding in key nature reserves around Lough Neagh.

(AQO 9661/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The prevailing South Westerly wind direction means that waste floating on Lough Neagh tends to be washed up on those Nature Reserves located around the North East corner of the Lough, such as Rea's Wood and Randalstown Forest which are managed by NIEA. The recent strong winds and exceptional rainfall with resulting high Lough levels have driven this waste further up the shore than usual.

Throughout the year, my officials from NIEA carry out regular patrols of the sites they manage during which they collect litter. They also arrange periodic volunteer efforts to collect and dispose of larger items which have been washed ashore. The recent flooding has, however, hampered these efforts, particularly at Rea's Wood Nature Reserve where access has been restricted.

In response to the large volume of waste and debris which has been deposited at its Lough Neagh Nature Reserves, NIEA officers have contacted a number of relevant bodies to discuss the co-ordination of 'action days' to tackle this issue. These include:

- the Forest Service
- Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council
- the Lough Neagh Partnership
- the Six Mile Water Rivers Trust
- Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful
- The Conservation Volunteers NI and
- the Association of Rivers Trusts.

My officials will monitor the water levels at these sites and will continue to engage with these bodies to arrange co-ordinated 'action days' once water conditions allow for safer access.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department is carrying out preparatory work for the possibility of a British exit from the European Union.

(AQO 9662/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department has not carried out any preparatory work for the possibility of a British exit from the European Union.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department will assist Newry, Mourne and Down District Council to achieve the Bathing Water Directive 2006/7/EC quality standards for bathing water for the beaches at Kilclief, Ballyhoran and Killough.

(AQO 9663/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department is only required to identify bathing waters where it expects a large number of people to bathe and where there is no prohibition against bathing.

My Department intends to undertake a review in 2017 of the 23 currently identified bathing waters in Northern Ireland. In addition, this review offers an opportunity to nominate sites for consideration as formally identified bathing waters, subject to certain criteria being met – that is, there must be:

- usage evidence at the site showing over 45 bathers on at least one occasion or over 100 beach users on at least two occasions across the review period;
- evidence that bathing is not prohibited or inadvisable for reasons of safety;
- information about the provision of facilities at the site - for example, signage, litter collection, site access, car parks, life guards and changing facilities; and
- confirmation from an appropriate body that it is willing to take responsibility as the bathing water operator.

In preparation for this review, my Department will be writing to councils and other interested parties in the coming weeks seeking nominations of any coastal or inland waters for initial consideration as candidate sites.

I should add that as this is part of a formal review, my Department will conduct the required usage surveys during the 2016 bathing season, which runs from 1 June to the 15 September inclusive. The results of these usage surveys will inform the review in 2017.

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the damage caused by the dumping of laundered fuel waste in South Armagh.

(AQO 9664/11-16)

Mr Durkan: It is difficult to quantify the extent of environmental harm caused by illegal fuel laundering, as it is clandestine in nature. However, we do know that substantial quantities of liquid waste residue (often acidic), are generated during the fuel laundering process. Almost invariably this fuel and the associated wastes will be handled in entirely inadequate premises where no thought or care has been given to the containment of spills, and where spills and pollution therefore could readily occur.

Solid waste residue (e.g. chicken/cat litter or fullers' earth clay) tends to be moved from the laundering plants and dumped in multiple sites in relatively small quantities (2-3 tonnes). Given the volume dumped, it can run off into and damage our water courses and seep into arable land. Acid and hydrocarbon waste in rivers will alter the quality of the water and kill its plant and animal life.

Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC) is responsible for investigating fuel fraud including fuel laundering. As part of this work HMRC clean any sites that they uncover and as such HMRC hold the information on the each fuel laundering site.

The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) introduced a Flytipping Partnership Pilot Project with councils in June 2012. Under this Project, Councils could refer cases of flytipping, including wastes under a volume of 20m³ and hazardous wastes such as fuel laundered waste abandoned outside the site of origin to NIEA for investigation and/or clean up from land in their area.

For this financial year, from 1 April 2015 to 31 December 2015, there were 11 incidents relating to fuel laundered waste in the Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council area, that were cleared by NIEA, totalling 37.2 tonnes, with clean-up cost to The Department of the Environment of £17,234.

NIEA's Water Management Unit dealt with 62 'low severity' pollution incidents (i.e. minor incidents with localised impact) in 2014, and 33 'low severity' incidents in 2015 in the Local Management Area for Carlingford & Newry.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the funding his Department has allocated to road safety for 2016-17.

(AQO 9665/11-16)

Mr Durkan: During the present year (2015-16) my Department allocated £1.5 million of funding for road safety communications. This consisted of an opening allocation of £0.8 million, which was supplemented by further in year funding of £0.7 million.

In respect of 2016-17, the functions currently performed by my Department will transfer to three new departments, namely the Department for Infrastructure (DfI), the Department for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (DAERA) and the Department for Communities (DfC). The Executive has decided to proceed with a one year budget for 2016-17 compiled and presented on a nine department basis.

The 2016-17 Budget for the current DOE functions has been included within the budgets for the DfI, the DAERA and the DfC and has been subject to a 5.7% reduction.

An amount of funding has been earmarked for road safety campaigns in 2016-17 similar to the opening allocation for 2015-16. However, it will be for the Minister of the new Department for Infrastructure to determine final allocations of budget against priorities.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment how much has been spent on maintaining and improving Carrickfergus Castle over the last three years.

(AQO 9666/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The costs of maintaining and improving Carrickfergus Castle are outlined in the table below. The three year period recorded is the last three complete financial years.

The Castle is one of the best preserved mediaeval castles on this island. It is an important asset to the town of Carrickfergus and a key part of the itinerary of many visitors. Recognising this, my officials are working with Mid and East Antrim Council to enable, through partnership working, a wider range of activities at the Castle. This will further embed the Castle as a key tourist attraction which brings significant benefits to the town and area.

	2012/13 £	2013/14 £	2014/15 £
Day to day running costs
Maintenance	142,689.40	70,596.53	24,610.67
Utilities and overheads	117,487.60	117,608.87	106,605.88
Front of house staff costs	126,928.84	131,692.12	143,713.69
Maintenance of the Fabric
Conservation	0.00	5,766.80	16,173.90
Construction	0.00	43,173.87	440,133.34
Other capital spend	9,036.30	0.00	25,511.40
Craft team costs	137,803.60	138,519.97	140,888.43
Income Generated	174,805.25	168,734.86	154,767.92

In the table, maintenance costs refer to the daily running costs of the Castle, including costs associated with staff based there. Conservation and construction costs include all works delivered by contractors to my Department. The figures have been collated from a number of records held by my Department.

In addition to front of house staff, my Department also maintains a construction crafts/trade works depot at Carrickfergus Castle. Much – but not all – of this team's work is in relation to the conservation and maintenance of historic fabric of Carrickfergus Castle; it is not possible to separate out in detail their work on the Castle and their work on other State Care Monuments in the area. Some of the figures are therefore an approximation

Work is currently underway to design a new roof for the Castle, to address the ongoing problems of water ingress. This is important work for the conservation of the Castle and to allow greater use and appreciation of the Castle.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the removal of waste originating from the Republic of Ireland that has been dumped illegally in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 9667/11-16)

Mr Durkan: To date 11 of the 17 unauthorised sites have been addressed and approximately 88,000 tonnes of waste has been repatriated. Waste removal is currently ongoing at one site and this site will be completed this financial year. That will leave 5 sites remaining to complete the repatriation programme.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 52326/11-16, whether the Properties Division within his Department is considering County Hall in Ballymena as an alternative location for a centre for a (a) new Government Department; or (b) corporate Northern Ireland Civil Service back office support function.

(AQW 52875/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): DFP's Properties Division works with departments to address their accommodation needs.

Consolidation of the office estate, including future proposals for Ballymena County Hall, is being taken forward under the Reform of Property Management. Detailed plans will be developed in due course. These will take account of locational office demand from departments including for accommodation in Ballymena.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether his Department has considered plans to introduce regulatory legislation for housing management companies.
(AQW 53483/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Northern Ireland Law Commission has considered the issues relating to property management and has recommended the regulation of managing agents, rather than additional regulation for housing management companies. Such companies are already subject to regulation under general company law and the issue of additional regulation would not be a matter for my Department.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail why almost 40 per cent of the SEUPB budget is set aside for the administration costs of SEUPB in their 2016 Business Plan.
(AQW 53489/11-16)

Mr Storey: SEUPB's Business Plan anticipates higher administration costs against relatively small programme expenditure during 2016. This is due to work on closure of 2007-13 programmes, launch of the new 2014-20 programmes and the time-lag in effecting spend for new programmes. A more representative figure is that SEUPB administration costs were 3 per cent for the whole of the 2007-13 programme period.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount of rates relief received by community halls in North Down in each year since 2007.
(AQW 53598/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table below details the estimated amount of rate relief received by community halls in the North Down Parliamentary Constituency area from 2006/07 to 2014/15.

Estimated Rates Relief Received By Community Halls in North Down Parliamentary Constituency

Financial Year	Rates Relief Received
2006/07	£19,901
2007/08	£20,625
2008/09	£21,481
2009/10	£22,088
2010/11	£22,709
2011/12	£24,942
2012/13	£25,568
2013/14	£26,816
2014/15	£27,398

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail why all of the £200m borrowing for 2016-17 in respect of the Voluntary Exit Scheme is being drawn down in circumstances where only £117m is expected to be expended on the Voluntary Exit Scheme.
(AQW 53628/11-16)

Mr Storey: The allocation of £117.6 million from the Public Sector Transformation Fund in Budget 2016-17 represents the first tranche of allocations in 2016-17. There will be a further opportunity for departments to submit bids in respect of the Fund, with a second tranche of allocations being made as part of the 2016-17 In-year Monitoring process.

Based on the estimated requirements of the Public Sector Transformation Fund in 2016-17, the Executive agreed that £25 million of the borrowing available for the Voluntary Exit Scheme would be used to fund capital projects. This is permitted under the 'Fresh Start' agreement.

The amounts presented in the Budget 2016-17 represent the planned borrowing requirement for the year. As actual loans are drawn monthly the borrowing will not be accessed until required.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the percentage of Northern Ireland exports that go to (a) Great Britain; and (b) other EU countries.
(AQW 53644/11-16)

Mr Storey: HMRC Regional Trade Statistics indicate that the value of goods exported from Northern Ireland to countries outside the UK was worth £6.0 billion in 2014, of this 61% (£3.6 billion) went to EU countries.

HMRC Regional Trade Statistics do not include trade in goods from one part of the UK to another.

Local business surveys estimate that the value of goods and services sold in 2014 by Northern Ireland manufacturing companies to Great Britain was £8.3 billion.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 48974/11-16 and AQW 48347/11-16, for his assessment of the publication by the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, as published on her Department's website on 29 January 2016, that 60 per cent of Northern Ireland's exports, that is, all goods and produce sold to outside Northern Ireland, go to other EU countries.

(AQW 53645/11-16)

Mr Storey: HMRC Regional Trade Statistics for 2014 indicate that 60.7% of Northern Ireland's exports go to other European Union countries. This is consistent with AQ 48347/11-16 and that quoted on the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's website. This figure excludes external sales from Northern Ireland to Great Britain, to which AQW 48974/11-16 referred.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the percentage of Northern Ireland imports that come from (a) Great Britain; and (b) other EU countries.

(AQW 53646/11-16)

Mr Storey: HMRC Regional Trade Statistics indicate that the value of goods imported from outside the UK to Northern Ireland was worth £6.0 billion in 2014, 56.4% (£3.4 billion) of which came from other EU countries.

HMRC Regional Trade Statistics do not include trade in goods from one part of the UK to another.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the procurement process for Departments in relation to their oil and gas requirements.

(AQW 53656/11-16)

Mr Storey: Oil is procured for Departments by way of a further competition from an existing National Framework for Liquid Fuels in line with the Public Contracts Regulations 2015.

CPD awarded a Framework for Natural Gas using the open procedure outlined in the Public Contracts Regulations 2015. This Framework is used by the 12 Departments, Non Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs), Further Education Colleges, Police Service for NI (PSNI), NI Water, Translink and NI Housing Executive.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether oil and gas is acquired centrally in one procurement process for all Departments.

(AQW 53657/11-16)

Mr Storey: No, oil and gas are not acquired centrally in one procurement process for all Departments.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the last procurement exercise for oil and gas requirements for Departments, including costs; and whether any consideration was given to hedging against future increases in fuel prices.

(AQW 53658/11-16)

Mr Storey:

(i) Oil and gas are procured separately.

Oil is procured through the Crown Commercial Service Liquid Fuels Framework contract. The last contract for Heating Oil, Automotive Fuel, Marine Oil and Aviation Fuel for the 12 Departments was established in October 2015. The price for oil is based on the Platts index plus margin. Pricing tracks the market price by reference to Platts Indices on a daily or weekly basis. The margin cannot be disclosed as this is commercially sensitive information.

The last CPD procurement exercise for Natural Gas commenced in January 2015 and contracts for 2 years were awarded in March 2015. The procurement included the 12 Departments and Non Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs), Further Education Bodies, Police Service for NI (PSNI) and NI Housing Executive. NI Water and Translink onboarded at a later date.

37% of supply of natural gas (valued at £4,992,000), is priced on a discount off the regulated Industrial and Commercial (IC) tariffs and therefore the prices vary in line with the regulated rates. The level of discount cannot be disclosed as this information is commercially sensitive.

57% of supply of natural gas (valued at £6,492,000) is on fixed prices which were set in March 2015.

6% of supply (valued at £735,000) is linked to gas commodity costs and varies each month.

The procurement for Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) for the 12 Departments, NDPBs, PSNI, NI Water, Further Education Colleges and Health and Social Care bodies commenced in December 2015.

The LPG contract will be awarded in February 2016, the contract price will track the Platts propane index on a quarterly basis.

- (ii) No consideration was given to hedging against future increases in fuel prices.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether his Department has drafted any estimates on the likely savings to departmental budgets due to the fall in global oil prices.

(AQW 53659/11-16)

Mr Storey: No. The Department has not drafted any estimates on likely savings to departmental budgets due to the fall in global oil prices.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what preparations are being made to lock-in low prices in any imminent procurement process for oil and gas for Departments.

(AQW 53660/11-16)

Mr Storey: There are no imminent procurements for oil or natural gas.

A CPD contract for Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) will be awarded in February 2016, the contract price will track the Platts propane index on a quarterly basis.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people that have died from tobacco-related diseases in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53682/11-16)

Mr Storey: NISRA's Demographic Statistics Branch provides figures on smoking related deaths. While death certificates do not record if the deceased was a smoker, estimates can however be made of the number of deaths attributable to smoking. Such estimates use information on the contribution of smoking to specific conditions such as lung cancer, which are recorded at death. The attached table 1 provides the estimated number of smoking-related deaths registered in Northern Ireland between 2010 and 2014, the latest year for which figures are currently available.

Table 1: Estimated number of smoking related deaths registered in Northern Ireland, 2010-2014

Registration Year	Estimated number of smoking related deaths
2010	2,310
2011	2,270
2012	2,270
2013	2,404
2014	2,317

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) number of businesses in Lisburn City centre that have closed or ceased to pay rates in each of the last three years; and (ii) total loss of rateable income.

(AQW 53697/11-16)

Mr Storey: Liability for non-domestic rates is based on the occupancy status of non-domestic properties and therefore has no regard to the trading status of the occupier/owner of the property. Therefore the information requested is not available.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how much each Department has paid in EU fines for non-compliance; operational mistakes and errors in administration, in each of the last eight years.

(AQW 53793/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department is responsible for the coordination of EU Structural Funds Programmes in Northern Ireland and I have restricted my answer to those programmes.

No EU fines have been paid by any department in relation to these programmes, in any of the last eight years.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding his Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.

(AQW 53801/11-16)

Mr Storey: Within the past ten years my Department has participated in two cycles of EU Structural Funding: the 2007-13 Interreg IVA and PEACE III programmes and the Interreg V and PEACE IV programmes which commenced in 2014 and will end in 2020. In both programmes my Department is accountable for provision of matched funding to a limited number of themes.

The 2007-13 PEACE III programme was worth €333m of which DFP was accountable for the Technical Assistance element of the programme which was €8,524,834 (ERDF funding provided by the EU, NI only).

The 2007-13 INTERREG IVA programme was worth €256m of which DFP was accountable for the Public Sector Collaboration, Enterprise, Tourism and Technical Assistance themes of the programme which was €30,172,408 (ERDF, NI only).

The 2014-20 PEACE IV programme is worth €270m of which DFP is accountable for the Technical Assistance theme which is €10,777,093 (ERDF, NI only)

The 2014-20 INTERREG VA programme is worth €283m and DFP is accountable for the Technical Assistance theme which is €10,094,603 (ERDF, NI only).

The attached table summarises ERDF funding provided by the EU for which DFP is accountable and the themes to which it has been allocated.

The funding for the 2007-13 programmes was allocated on basis of 75% ERDF and 25% match. The 2014-20 programmes is allocated on the basis of 85% ERDF and 15% match.

Programming period	Programme	Theme	European Union Funding allocated (€)
2007-13	PEACE III	Technical Assistance	8,524,834
	INTERREG IVA Programme	Public Sector Collaboration	11,560,271
		Enterprise	10,854,126
		Tourism	2,340,000
		Technical Assistance	5,418,011
2014-20	PEACE IV	Technical Assistance	10,777,093
	INTERREG VA Programme	Technical Assistance	10,094,603

Technical Assistance provides support for programme management, monitoring and evaluation, and information and communication. The necessary Northern Ireland match funding is provided by the NI Executive.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the current level of unemployment in the Hollywood electoral area. (AQW 53880/11-16)

Mr Storey: The official measure of unemployment is sourced to the Labour Force Survey. The Labour Force Survey is a sample survey and estimates of unemployment for local areas within Northern Ireland, are not sourced to the Labour Force Survey because of the relatively large confidence intervals around such estimates.

The following table is sourced instead to the claimant count measure of unemployment. The table shows the number of persons claiming unemployment related benefits at December 2015, in all wards in the historical Ards & North Down Local Government Districts.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 53040/11-16, to detail whether the £25million is Departmental Expenditure Limits or Annually Managed Expenditure funding; and if further fraud and error savings are not achieved will Northern Ireland have to fund the unachieved savings from its Departmental Expenditure Limits.

(AQW 53888/11-16)

Mr Storey: The £25 million provided to address welfare error and fraud is Departmental Expenditure Limits (DEL) funding. Savings have not been anticipated in Budget 2016-17, thereby avoiding any risk to the Northern Ireland DEL.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) number of small businesses benefiting from small business rate relief; and (ii) cost of small business rate relief, broken down by constituency in each of the last five years.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any extra resources are being allocated to the Department for Social Development to ensure ongoing funding of the Women's Centre Childcare Fund for 2016-17.

(AQW 53898/11-16)

Mr Storey: Having discussed the issue of continuation funding for the Woman's Centre Childcare Fund with the DSD Minister, it is anticipated that DSD will continue to fund this important project pending wider consideration as part of the Executives Childcare Strategy.

Mr Murphy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the number of local small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs); (ii) the number of people employed in these enterprises; and (iii) the economic output in each SME sector in each of the last five years.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of local businesses operating with rates payable before the application of rates and exemptions of (i) £3,000-5,000; (ii) £5,001-£7,000; (iii) £7,001-£9,000; (iv) £9,001-£10,500; (v) £10,501-£15,000; and (vi) over £15,001, in each of the last five years.

Mr Storey: Information is not available on the number of local businesses liable for rates. However, the table overleaf provides information on the number of non-domestic properties in Northern Ireland for which non-domestic rates would have been payable of (i) £3,000-£5,000 (ii) £5,001-£7,000; (iii) £7,001-£9,000; (iv) £9,001-£10,500; (v) £10,501-£15,000; and (vi) over £15,000, before any reliefs or exemptions were taken into account, in each of the last five years for which information is available.

It should be noted that after the application of reliefs and exemptions some of the properties presented in this table would not be liable for any rates at all or be liable for rates within a lower band.

Mr Murphy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how much his (a) Department; and (b) its arm's-length bodies has spent on office supplies in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53944/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department has spent the following on office supplies in the last 5 years:

£000s	2010-11	2011-12	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
Department	2,016	1,451	1,299	1,179	1,216

As a North/South Body, the Special European Union Programmes Body (SEUPB) prepares its financial information on a calendar year basis. SEUPB has spent the following on office supplies in the last 5 years:

£000s	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015
SEUPB	19	27	23	26	21

The SEUPB costs for office supplies are funded on a North/South basis. The Department of Finance and Personnel is responsible for 53% of this cost.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what changes have been made to how departmental funding is allocated to the community and voluntary sector over the last three years; and to outline the reasons for any such change.

(AQW 53987/11-16)

Mr Storey: The majority of funding my Department provided to the voluntary and community sector over the last three years was through European Union Programmes. These programmes are subject to EU regulations set by the European Commission.

There have been no changes to how my Department allocates other funding to community and voluntary groups over the last three years.

This response is provided for the Department of Finance and Personnel only as the information for all departments is not held centrally.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) number of small businesses benefiting from small business rate relief; and (ii) cost of small business rate relief in North Down, in each of the last five years

(AQW 53992/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table overleaf details (i) the number of properties benefitting from small business rate relief; and (ii) the net cost of small business rate relief in the North Down parliamentary constituency area in each of the last five financial years.

Number of Properties in the North Down Parliamentary Constituency Area Benefitting from Small Business Rate Relief and Net Cost from 2010/11 to 2014/15

Financial Year	Number of Properties	Net Cost
2010/11	641	£231,148
2011/12	623	£233,529

Financial Year	Number of Properties	Net Cost
2012/13	1,011	£504,249
2013/14	1,108	£715,642
2014/15	1,118	£734,305

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much funding is being provided to the community and voluntary sector in terms of (i) grants; (ii) grants-in-aid; and (iii) procurement in the 2015-16 financial year, including any projected spend. (AQW 54046/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department is projecting providing grants totalling £116.5k to the community and voluntary sector in 2015-16. There is no grant-in-aid or procurement projected for 2015-16.

This response is provided for the Department of Finance and Personnel only as the information for all departments is not held centrally.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the impact of EU Mortgage Credit Directive on local residents in border areas that are employed in the Republic of Ireland and paid in Euro but seeking a mortgage in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 54073/11-16)

Mr Storey: The regulation of financial services is a reserved matter and Her Majesty's Treasury and the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) are responsible for ensuring that the requirements of the EU Mortgage Credit Directive are reflected in UK legislation and regulations.

As such, my Department has not undertaken analysis of the potential impact of the Directive. That said, Her Majesty's Treasury has indicated that the Government does not believe that the Directive offers many benefits to consumers beyond that which is already provided by the high level of protection offered by the existing FCA regime for mortgages.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why he rejected the bid submitted by the Department for Employment and Learning for £2.7m for quality-related research funding that was submitted in the January Monitoring Round.

(AQW 54082/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Executive agreed, as part of November Monitoring, that January Monitoring should only allow technical adjustments and not reallocation of resources. Whilst the First Minister and Deputy First Minister subsequently did agree some limited reallocation under Urgent Procedure, this was mainly to ensure that no Financial Transactions Capital would be lost at year end. This was not the case on the Resource DEL side, where the Executive expects to carry forward funding through the Budget Exchange Scheme. Therefore, apart from two minor genuinely inescapable Resource bids submitted by The Assembly Ombudsman and Commissioner of complaints and the Public Prosecution Service, no Resource DEL bids were met in January Monitoring.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the funds allocated to the Department for Regional Development to repair the roads network.

Mr Storey: In the November 2015 Monitoring Round the Executive allocated a total of £21.5 million for road maintenance activities during the 2015-16 financial year including £5 million Capital and £16.5 million Resource.

Road Maintenance continues to be one of Executive's highest priorities and in announcing the outcome of the Executive's Budget for 2016-17, I was delighted to be able to confirm a total of £66 million for roads maintenance including £46 million of Capital for structural maintenance together with an additional £20m in Resource for other maintenance work on the road and footway network for the Department for Infrastructure.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the total receipts from EU sources spent in Northern Ireland since May 2011.

(AQO 9616/11-16)

Mr Storey: My responsibility is for European Structural Funds programmes.

Total receipts from these programmes from May 2011 to 31 December 2015 are £429,727,317.93.

This includes receipts for PEACE and INTERREG cross-border programmes, where money may be spent in Northern Ireland, Ireland or Scotland (for INTERREG).

In addition to EU Structural Funds Northern Ireland also benefits from receipts from the Rural Development Programme, the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) initiatives and has the opportunity to participate in EU Competitive Funding programmes such as Horizon 2020 and Erasmus.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the local Invest to Save schemes operating between 2010 and 2015, compared to Invest to Save schemes in other parts of the UK during the same period.

(AQO 9617/11-16)

Mr Storey: I welcome the recent Northern Ireland Audit Office report on the operation of Invest to Save schemes in Northern Ireland. I believe these schemes have been successful in delivery of their key objective of delivering savings for the Executive in a constrained budgetary environment.

Due to the differing contexts and scheme criteria direct comparison between local Invest to Save schemes and those operating in other parts of the UK would not be meaningful.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the local implications arising from the Scotland Bill.

(AQO 9618/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Scotland Bill, if passed into law, will provide Scotland with further powers in relation to tax, welfare and constitutional issues particularly.

The Bill seeks to address the specific needs of Scotland as devolution becomes further embedded there.

I will continue to take a close interest in how the Scotland Bill progresses. Nevertheless, it is for us to engage with the UK Government and to decide how we would wish to see devolution shaped here so it fits the needs of Northern Ireland.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the timetable for the consultation on rate relief regulations for Community Amateur Sports Clubs.

(AQO 9619/11-16)

Mr Storey: During the final stage debate on the Bill I outlined that I would be taking forward this consultation in the coming days and weeks.

That remains the plan and I look forward to launching the consultation later this month. My officials have already drafted the consultation paper and are now undertaking the necessary impact assessments related to the preferred policy option. Officials met the Finance Committee on Wednesday to discuss both wider non domestic rating issues and next steps for this consultation.

It would have been possible to start the consultation before the final stage of the Bill, however, unexpected amendments were tabled that changed the scope of the Bill and this needed to be bottomed out before my Department could progress matters.

Indeed, my predecessors had hoped to put all of this to bed earlier in this mandate, which would have delivered extra help to many community amateur sports clubs for the start of this forthcoming financial year but they were frustrated in doing so at virtually every stage in the process.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how he is supporting businesses in Fermanagh and South Tyrone in participating in public procurement contracts.

(AQO 9620/11-16)

Mr Storey: Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) works closely with partner organisations such as InterTradeIreland and Invest NI throughout the year to provide local enterprises with advice and direction in identifying and competing for public sector business.

Most recently, on 28 January, CPD collaborated with Fermanagh and Omagh District Council to deliver a procurement workshop in Enniskillen Business Centre.

Public sector procurement contracts are publicly advertised on the new eTendersNI portal. Prior to its launch CPD delivered supplier roadshows in Armagh, Belfast and Omagh, giving suppliers a demonstration of the system and advising how to register.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the purpose of the £16 million increase in total resources for the Strategic Investment Board from the Main Estimates 2015-16 to the Spring Supplementary Estimates 2015-16.

Mr Storey: The Strategic Investment Board was allocated additional resources through the in year monitoring process in 2015-16.

There were two Financial Transactions Capital allocations totaling £14.5 million for Queen's University and a £2 million allocation under Together Building a United Community for the Urban Villages Programme.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the economic impact of exempting derelict land from rates.

(AQO 9622/11-16)

Mr Storey: Derelict land cannot be rated, as the system is based on existing use value. The system cannot be extended to include derelict property without fundamentally changing its nature.

Even if a way could be found to do that, it would be a straightforward matter for someone to avoid paying a penalising charge through the rates by simply placing a hut on the site and asking for it to be assessed as a rough yard or car park, which would attract a relatively low rateable value.

However, my Department has recently canvassed views on the issue of a separate levy on derelict property.

That consultation closed at the start of the month and I note the Member's own party has supported such a measure.

I think there may be merit in the measure, providing it is properly targeted at a local level and it 'helps rather than hinders' the fragile recovery experienced by our construction industry.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) what was the capacity of Emergency Departments in (a) the Mater Hospital; and (b) the Royal Hospital to treat patients each month, for each of the last 24 months; and (ii) how many patients have been treated each month, for each of the past 24 months, in (a) the Mater Hospital; and (b) the Royal Hospital.

(AQW 51647/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety):

- (i) The Emergency Departments (ED) at the Royal Victoria Hospital (RVH) and the Mater Hospital service a population of 340,000 across Belfast. There is also a Children's ED at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children. The adult EDs cared for a total of 332,000 new and review attendances from October 2013 to September 2015 including 214,000 at the RVH, and 118,000 at the Mater. The new ED at the RVH, opened in August 2015, was built with an annual capacity of 77,000. The Mater Hospital's ED has sufficient capacity to deal with current attendances.
- (ii) Information on the number of new and unplanned review attendances at each emergency care department in Northern Ireland, including those at the Royal Victoria and Mater Hospitals, is published on a quarterly basis, and available to view or download from: <https://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/articles/emergency-care-waiting-times>.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what arrangements are in place in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust for the provision of hospital beds, specialised or otherwise; and (ii) whether any are rented, and if so, at what rates.

Mr Hamilton: Hospital beds are provided to the Belfast Trust under the terms of a competitive tendering process conducted on behalf of the Trust by the Business Services Organisation.

Beds are supplied on a rental basis with the daily rental price ranging from £0.44 to £9.00 depending on the type of bed. The rental price includes provision of the product and the service requirements.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support is offered to GPs working in the Out Of Hours services in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust when the service is experiencing high volumes of contact.

(AQW 52640/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of pressures facing the Out of Hours (OOH) services in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and the Trust are working together to address these challenges.

A number of actions have been taken to support the GP OOH service within the Southern Trust. These include the introduction of nurse triage, nurse practitioners and clinical pharmacists to support GPs in managing the service; on-going recruitment campaigns for GPs; the introduction of flexible working arrangements; enhanced premia for difficult to fill OOH shifts and additional funding to boost capacity at busy times. The Southern Trust has also established a link with Dalriada Urgent Care (DUC) to support call triage.

It has been agreed that a peer review of OOH services in the Southern Trust will be taken forward led by Dalriada Urgent Care. The review, which will commence shortly, will develop recommendations including actions necessary to support the OOH service.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the recruitment that has taken place for posts in the Emergency Department in Daisy Hill Hospital, Newry in the last six months; (ii) how these posts were advertised; and (iii) whether the posts have been filled on a permanent or temporary basis.

Mr Hamilton: Two Specialty Doctors have been appointed to the Emergency Department, Daisy Hill Hospital over the past six months. One commenced appointment in October 2015 and the other in November 2015. The Southern Trust has also sought to secure other staff for this Emergency Department via a number of recruitment processes over the last six months. An overview of the recruitment processes, where the posts were advertised and the outcome, to date, is set out below:

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to remove bureaucratic tasks from the workload of GPs to ensure more time can be dedicated to patient consultations.

(AQW 52724/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I want to ensure that all health and social care services are focused on the people who use them rather than excessive bureaucracy.

Over recent years the amount of GP paperwork has been decreased through a reduction in the number of Quality and Outcomes Framework (QOF) indicators to be completed, from 148 in 2012/13 to 64 in 2015/16, thereby freeing up more time for GPs to spend with their patients.

Technology has the potential to make a significant impact both on the way in which services are delivered to patients and on GP workload. The successful deployment of the Electronic Care Record has supported easier transfer and sharing of information by bringing together key information in one place for clinical staff, avoiding unnecessary duplication of tests and investigations and facilitating electronic referrals, to the benefit of patients while also reducing bureaucracy and costs.

A number of practices have implemented systems that allow patients to book GP appointments or order repeat prescriptions online. In addition, online triage systems can help ensure that people are directed to the most appropriate professional while diagnostic technology enables GPs to arrange tests and analyse results without having to refer patients to hospital.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many frontline Emergency Department staff in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust have been trained in Assist; safeTALK; and mental health first aid in each of the last three years.

Mr Hamilton: Information is not available in the format requested.

Approximately 64% of Belfast Trust emergency department staff have received mental healthcare training in the past three years. This principally comprises STORM (Skills-based Training on Risk Management for Suicide Prevention), ASIST (Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training), and bespoke induction training. All Belfast Trust social work staff, involved in frontline emergency department care, receive ASIST training.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given there are plans in the 2016-17 budget for a regional children's hospital and a new maternity hospital to be built on the site of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast, for his assessment of the opportunity for increased medical jobs and apprenticeships in West Belfast as a result.

Mr Hamilton: The project for the new children's and maternity hospitals includes the development of a workforce plan. This will assess the entire workforce requirements for all professions and grades of staff as well as the training and development needs to deliver care in the new hospitals.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what social clauses will be put in place during the procurement process to build a regional children's hospital and a new maternity hospital on the site of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast.

(AQW 52821/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In line with DFP Guidance On Social Clauses In Construction Contracts, the letting of the main contracts for the Regional Children's Hospital and new Maternity Hospital on the Royal Victoria Hospital site will include, where applicable, social clauses covering:

- Employer's Social Requirements
- New Entrant Trainee Opportunities
- Opportunities for skilled/experienced workers
- Business in Education
- Recruitment and Training Plan for the Project
- New Entrant Trainees
- Opportunities for skilled/experienced workers
- Management, Administration and Reporting
- Monitoring Information
- Insurances and Health and Safety
- Subcontractors
- Equality of Opportunity
- Respect for People
- Health & Safety – BuildSafe-NI
- Essential Skills

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions the Health and Social Care Trusts are taking to maximise the potential benefits of the TF3 Consortium telehealth services to patients with chronic conditions. (AQW 52851/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Trusts are required to develop annual implementation plans setting out the areas of practice in which they are targeting telehealth interventions. Each Trust has a dedicated Telehealth Service Manager (TSM) who works with stakeholders to implement the plan, embed use of the service and identify new areas for service intervention.

All the Trusts undertake a range of stakeholder engagement activities to promote uptake of the telemonitoring service. Much of this effort continues to be focused on increasing uptake and usage among GPs and Integrated Care Partnerships. Demonstration sessions have been held at GP practices which have also been issued with leaflets promoting the service. TSMs meet regularly with clinical teams which use the service to review progress and provide training and advice on day-to-day user issues.

While the telemonitoring service has traditionally been used by people with respiratory and heart conditions, diabetes, renal disease and post-stroke and weight management, individual Trusts have explored opportunities for expansion into new areas. For example the Northern Health and Social Care Trust has begun to use telehealth monitoring in areas such as Parkinson's disease and learning disability; and the Southern Health and Social Care Trust is exploring the potential for its use to support smoking cessation. TSMs attend monthly regional service management group meetings with representatives of the TF3 consortium. These meetings are service-orientated and encourage sharing of knowledge, experience and good practice. Some Trust staff and key stakeholders have also taken the opportunity to visit the Telemonitoring NI centre to gain a better understanding of the service and its associated benefits and to develop positive working relationships with the TF3 team.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment he has made of the availability of placements in residential care homes for people with dementia that require nursing care within the Coleraine area of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 52858/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: People with dementia who require nursing care would not be placed in residential care homes. However there are places available in nursing homes within the Coleraine area for people with dementia who require nursing care.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how his Department is supporting farmers with mental ill health in West Tyrone . (AQW 52866/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Farmers with mental ill health in West Tyrone can avail of the complete range of services provided by Western Trust Mental Health services as required, including primary care talking therapies teams, community mental health services, acute mental health services and specialist services such as alcohol/drug addiction counselling. Service users in West Tyrone and Fermanagh are also advised about additional support, listening and signposting services provided by local community and voluntary organisations such as Rural Support and Fermanagh Rural Community Network.

The refreshed Protect Life Strategy contains actions aimed at supporting integrated community-based suicide prevention initiatives which acknowledge the diversity of urban and rural communities. The Public Health Agency promotes positive mental health and helps to address suicide in rural communities, through programmes such as Farm Families Health Checks. Lifeline targets all localities and continues to promote its services in rural areas, with a view to increasing uptake.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what body is responsible for ensuring quality standards are adhered to in relation to foods advertised as being free of allergens. (AQW 52934/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: District councils are responsible for most food law enforcement. This includes investigation of complaints and carrying out checks of all food businesses in their area to ensure compliance with food law. District council controls take place at all stages of the food supply chain, including manufacturing, processing, packing, distribution and storage, to catering and retail.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the Diabetes Strategy framework and implementation plan will be published.

Mr Hamilton: Diabetes continues to be one of the most challenging long term conditions, affecting more than 85,000 people across Northern Ireland.

The Report of the Diabetes Review Steering Group, Chaired by the Chief Medical Officer was published in June 2014. The Review put forward 11 recommendations which are aimed at improving services and the patient experience for people living with diabetes. The recommendations encompass important aspects in the prevention and management of diabetes and its complications. These include an emphasis on public health measures to help prevent Type 2 diabetes, improving access to structured diabetes education, building capacity in the workforce, improving services for vulnerable groups and encouraging innovation in care for people living with diabetes. Following on from the review report, and in line with its recommendation to develop a strategic way forward for diabetes, Departmental officials have been working in partnership with the wider Health and Social Care sector and Diabetes UK to develop a draft Diabetes Strategic Framework and implementation plan. It is anticipated that subject to approval, the draft Framework would be published for consultation in early spring 2016.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of times Ballycastle Fire Station was in breach of its Gartan availability target times in each of the last twelve months.

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of General Practitioners employed, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 53018/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: General Practitioners are not employed by Health and Social Care Trusts. General Practitioners are independent contractors, who contract with the Health and Social Care Board to provide primary medical services to their patients.

Whilst accurate data does not exist on the Health and Social Care Trust area that each GP worked in, it is possible to establish the practice that each GP worked in and map that to LCG, back to 2009. Each LCG is co-terminus with their respective Health and Social Care Trust. The 5 current LCGs were created in April 2009. Prior to that, there was a combination of 7 non-statutory LCGs (from April 2007) and 13 individual trusts. For the years of 2006, 2007 and 2008, GP practice number has been used to geographically locate the GP surgeries as though the LCG had existed.

The number of GPs in Northern Ireland, in each of the last 10 years and in each LCG area, is shown in Table 1.

*LCGs were formed in 2009. For the years of 2006, 2007 and 2008, the location of the Practice was based on the LCG that it would have belonged to in 2009. GP location by LCG is based on the location of the Practice in which the GP worked in October of each year.

Figures exclude 2 GPs who worked in more than one LCG during the period.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any discussions he has had with his Executive colleagues regarding the ring-fencing of the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Budget.

(AQW 53020/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Executive, when considering Budget 2016/17, agreed specific areas that would be protected from the level of reductions that were applied to departmental budgets. The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service were not afforded any special protection.

The financial planning process within my department for 2016/17 is ongoing and no decisions have been taken on the budget allocation for the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. The safety of both the public and firefighters remains a priority.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the risk levels at Strabane Fire Station; and whether action will be taken to mitigate risks to the local community.

Mr Hamilton: Following a recent risk assessment, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has identified Strabane Station as one of four locations in Northern Ireland in which emergency capability could be enhanced to rebalance the level of risk.

NIFRS are currently consulting on a proposal to place Wholetime Firefighters in Strabane Fire Station from Monday to Friday, 0800 hours to 1800 hours to enhance emergency capability. This consultation is due to close on 7 March 2016.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of operations that have been cancelled in each hospital, in each of the last fourteen months due to hospital pressures.

Mr Hamilton: For the purposes of answering of this question, it is assumed that hospital pressures, refers to emergency department pressures.

The number of operations cancelled because of hospital pressures during the period January to December 2015, broken down by hospital, has been provided in the table below. 'Cancellations due to Emergency Department pressures' was introduced as a sub-category under non-clinical reasons for cancellation in January 2015. Prior to this date, any cancellations falling under this category would have been included in non-clinical reasons for cancellation.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the number of qualified social workers in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 53185/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The table below provides the most recent information available on the number of qualified Social Workers employed in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust:

NHSCT Social work Workforce - Dec 2015

Programme of Care	Number
Children's Services	471
Acute Services	34
Community Care	158
Mental Health & Learning Disability	162
Total	825

The Trust's Management Board is responsible for ensuring that there are sufficient staff in place to provide the safe and efficient delivery of all of the social work services for which the Trust has responsibility.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff in health and care services in the statutory sector that were paid below the living wage for all or part of the 2015-16 financial year.

(AQW 53312/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The National Living Wage has been set at £7.20, and comes into effect in April 2016. The only Health and Social Care employees who are paid less than that figure at the present date are interns on a 50-week contract. The internship programme is a public sector work experience scheme to provide recent graduates with an opportunity to gain experience working at the heart of Health and Social Care (HSC) management. Their honorarium has increased annually to ensure that it remains above the National Minimum Wage, and it is intended that this will be continued with the coming into force of the National Living Wage.

At January 2016, there were 39 such staff.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of children diagnosed with autism in West Tyrone, in each of the last five years; (ii) the number of children waiting for an assessment; and (iii) what steps he is taking to reduce the assessment times.

(AQW 53334/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) As figures are not available for West Tyrone, the table below details the number of children diagnosed with autism in each of the last five years in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

Year	Number of children diagnosed with Autism
2011	126
2012	120
2013	105
2014	161
2015	144
Total	656

- (ii) At 31 January 2016, 353 children were on the waiting list for an assessment for autism in the Western HSC Trust.
- (iii) An additional £260k non-recurrent funding has been allocated to HSC Trusts to address the waiting pressure for autism assessments in year (2015/16). The HSC Board are also working with the Department and HSC Trusts to develop a new major redesign in services aimed at improving the effectiveness of services over the next year.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of acute beds available and in use in the Downe Hospital.

Mr Hamilton: Information on hospital bed availability and occupancy in HSC Hospitals in Northern Ireland is published in the annual 'Northern Ireland Hospital Statistics: Inpatient and Day Case Activity Statistics' Publication. Data detailed in this publication are available in spreadsheet format to aid secondary analysis in 'Statistics on Inpatient and Day Case Activity by Hospital, HSC Trust and Specialty'. The latest available data can be found at the following link;

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the need to establish local walk-in centres.

Mr Hamilton: There are no plans at present to establish walk-in centres in Northern Ireland. Patients here have access to advice and treatment for minor illnesses and ailments from a range of services, including community pharmacists, GPs, GP out of hours services and minor injuries units.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of vacant nurses posts in nursing and care homes in the independent sector that have been vacant for 6 months or more.

(AQW 53590/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not monitor recruitment activity in the independent sector.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the provision of out of hours GP services in Newry.

(AQO 9629/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust provides GP out of hours services across five bases, including Newry. The Newry base is open from 6pm until 12 midnight. The overnight service (from 12 midnight until 8am) may be provided from either the Newry, Craigavon or Dungannon bases. All patients contacting GP out of hours services in the Southern Trust area will receive triage advice over the telephone, and this can be provided from any base. Patients who need to see a doctor will either be given an appointment in one of the bases or, where clinically necessary, a home visit will be made.

Ensuring sufficient GPs are available to cover out of hours sessions has been a challenge for the Southern Trust and a number of actions have been taken to support the service. These include the introduction of nurse triage, nurse practitioners and pharmacists to support GPs in delivering out of hours services; enhanced premia for difficult to fill shifts; and additional funding to boost capacity at busy times. The Southern Trust has also established a link with Dalriada Urgent Care to support call triage during busy periods. A peer review of out of hours services in the Southern Trust has recently been completed. The Health and Social Care Board is considering the recommendations of that review and the actions needed to support the service in the short, medium and longer term.

My Department is currently undertaking a review of GP out of hours services across Northern Ireland to examine current delivery of services and make recommendations to improve service provision. This review is due to complete by the end of February and I will give careful consideration to its recommendations.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of whether £1.6 million is sufficient to address nursing home and domiciliary care pressures.

Mr Hamilton: I am very aware of the significant challenges facing the nursing and residential home and domiciliary care sector, which includes the increase to the national minimum wage in April this year and also the difficulties providers are experiencing around recruitment of staff.

The action taken by the Health and Social Care Board to release an additional £1.6 million of funding into the care sector to cover the period 1st February 2016 to 31st March 2016 is to be welcomed as a crucial step in helping to address those challenges. I believe this support package will not only help to promote stability and restore confidence among providers, but also importantly will demonstrate to those clients in receipt of services that we are committed to working as hard as possible to ensure their continued well being.

However, I am conscious that there remains much work to do in this area. Following the completion of negotiations with the independent sector, the new regional nursing and residential home tariff rates for 2016/17 being prepared by the Health and Social Care Board, will take account of a range of pressures including the forthcoming increase to the national minimum wage.

In addition, my Department will continue to focus on taking forward the reform of adult care and support, which will set the future long term strategic direction for adult social care services. The reform project will look at how services are funded, with the aim of ensuring that the adult care and support system of the future is fit for purpose, efficient, and sustainable for years to come.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his proposals for the delivery of mental health services in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQO 9631/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: As with all Health Trusts, the Northern Trust will continue to develop mental health services in line with the Bamford vision and the priorities identified in Transforming Your Care.

Key proposals for reform include: a new, purpose built Mental Health Inpatient Unit at the Antrim Area Hospital site; and psychological wellbeing hubs and a network of recovery colleges across the Trust to provide early intervention and self help skills

These reforms are based upon principles of recovery and empowerment and the active involvement of service users in their own health and wellbeing.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the support package for recruitment in the care sector will affect East Antrim.

(AQO 9632/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have met with a number of providers from the independent care sector in recent weeks and have listened to their concerns about the significant challenges they are facing regarding financial viability and difficulties in recruiting staff into the sector. These challenges have an impact on providers operating across East Antrim, but also are affecting providers throughout Northern Ireland.

The action taken by the Health and Social Care Board to release an additional £1.6 million of funding into the care sector to cover the period 1st February 2016 to 31st March 2016 is to be welcomed as a crucial step in helping to address those challenges.

I believe this support package will not only help to promote stability and restore confidence among providers, but also importantly will demonstrate to those clients in receipt of services that we are committed to working as hard as possible to ensure their continued well being.

It will be for the independent providers to determine how best to utilise this additional short term funding.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the agreed volumes of funded activity are not being fully delivered across a number of specialties, by some providers.

(AQO 9633/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Full delivery of commissioned volumes of core elective activity by Trusts is reliant on a number of factors, in particular the need for a wide range of staff to be in place at the required times. In practice, this is not always the case due to operational difficulties such as long term sickness absence, maternity leave, vacancies, recruitment difficulties etc.

The Board has required Trusts to produce elective improvement plans for a number of specialties detailing the forecast improvement in delivery of core and waiting times by March 2016. The Board is continuing to monitor Trusts' performance against these plans at the regular elective performance meetings to ensure that progress is being made to deliver the agreed outcomes or, where this is not the case, to agree what remedial actions the Trust plans to take.

Regionally in the year to the end of December 2015 there has been an improvement in the delivery of commissioned volumes of core activity for new outpatient assessments.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when a replacement fire station at Ballycastle will be built.

(AQO 9634/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has a number of competing capital priorities and the replacement fire station at Ballycastle will be built when it can be prioritised within the available capital resources.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many of the urgent breast cancer referrals in the last twelve months in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, that were not seen within fourteen days, were later diagnosed with breast cancer.

(AQO 9635/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In the calendar year 2015 the Breast Service in Belfast Health and Social Care Trust managed 2,759 urgent suspect cancer breast referrals at the One-Stop Breast Clinic in the Belfast City Hospital. The vast majority of these patients 2,557 (93%) did not get a cancer diagnosis and would have been discharged with this reassurance on the day first seen at the One-Stop Breast Clinic.

Of the patients who were not seen within 14 days of initial urgent or red flag referral, 6.4% of these (121 patients) subsequently had a breast cancer diagnosis. This is reflective of some outpatient capacity issues caused by senior medical staffing shortages during the year and also a number of peaks in referrals made to the service.

It is important to highlight however that 92.5% of these patients received their first definitive treatment within 62 days and overall a very high proportion 94.5% of all breast cancers diagnosed, received treatment within 62 days.

The EUROCARE 5 project found that breast cancer survival rate in Northern Ireland was the best in the UK and Ireland.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the health centres in Carrickfergus and Larne will be upgraded.

(AQO 9636/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is not possible at this point to give an indication of the timescale for upgrading the Health and Care Centres in Carrickfergus and Larne.

Both Carrickfergus and Larne have been identified as possible hubs within the Northern Trust area. Delivery of these facilities will have to be considered alongside other capital investment priorities and will be dependent on future budget availability, confirmation of value for money, and affordability.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the effect the utilisation of the private sector has had on waiting times over recent months.

(AQO 9637/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Since November significant efforts have been made across the HSC, within a very tight timeframe, to secure additional outpatient clinics and treatments within Trusts, and to put in place appropriate arrangements with independent sector organisations to transfer suitable patients for assessment and/or treatment.

Contracts have been awarded with Independent Sector providers for some 26,000 new outpatients assessments across a range of specialties and 8,000 patients for admission for treatment.

It is expected that the impact of the additional funding will slow the rate of increase seen in the earlier months of the year however the full effect will not be known until early 2016/17.

The Board will continue to monitor progress to ensure that available capacity is fully maximised.

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he is addressing capacity and demand issues within ophthalmology.

(AQO 9638/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In the short term, from the additional £40m secured from the November monitoring round to address waiting times for patients, it is planned that 3,500 new assessments for patients and 550 inpatient and day cases will be undertaken in the independent sector. Alongside this, Trusts are continuing to undertake additional in house activity to reduce the number of outpatients waiting and as part of this, an additional 1,268 review patients are due to be seen.

In the longer term, significant reform is underway in this service in both primary and secondary care settings through Developing Eyecare Partnerships, a five year plan to improve the commissioning and delivery of eyecare services in Northern Ireland.

Department of Justice

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how long did those referred to in AQW 52584/11-15 hold the posts identified in AQW 52587/11-16.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many people were fitted with an electronic tag in each of the last five years.

(AQW 53796/11-16)

Mr Ford: The table below provides a breakdown of the number of people who have been fitted with an electronic monitoring tag in each of the last five years. The data includes some individuals who may have been fitted with monitoring equipment on more than one occasion during this period.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for an update on work to achieve the Programme for Government 11-15 target to reform and modernise the Prison Service.

(AQW 53904/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Prison Review Oversight Group held its final meeting on 3 February 2016, having signed off 36 of the 40 recommendations made in the Prison Review Team report. This achieved the Programme for Government target to implement 90% of the recommendations within the agreed timescales.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many attacks on Prison Officers have taken place in HMP Maghaberry in the past year, broken down by each house.

(AQW 53906/11-16)

Mr Ford: There have been 52 assaults recorded as having taken place against Prison Officers within Maghaberry Prison during the past year. Assaults have been carried out throughout the prison estate and are not confined to houses.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Justice what support is available to Prison Officers who have been assaulted in, or affected by an incident while on duty.

(AQW 53913/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) has a range of support mechanisms in place for prison officers who are assaulted, or affected by an incident, while on duty. These range from discussing any concerns they have with their line managers or their HR representatives based in their establishment to externally provided services. They can make direct contact with the Welfare Support Service and Carecall, an independent, confidential and professional counselling service available to all NIPS staff.

Regarding medical matters prison officers can be referred to, or self-refer to, the Northern Ireland Civil Service Occupational Health Service.

In addition in the event of an incident involving a number of prison officers the locally based management team can arrange for 'Carecall' to provide direct assistance to the staff involved.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Justice (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding his Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.

(AQW 53914/11-16)

Mr Ford: Since my Department was established in April 2010 it has received £800,240 in unmatched European funding:

- £737,000 was received by the Northern Ireland Prison Service to fund a Challenge Hate Crime project, led by NIACRO. This funding was received from the PEACE III Programme; and
- £63,240 was received by Forensic Science Northern Ireland to fund their participation in the Framework Programme 7 project ROSFEN.

No matched funding was received.

Mr Patterson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the scale of rural crime in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

(AQW 53937/11-16)

Mr Ford: My assessment of the scale of rural crime in Fermanagh and South Tyrone is based on a number of factors.

Firstly, the Police Service of Northern Ireland, Agricultural and Rural Crime in Northern Ireland, Quarterly Update to 31 December 2015, which provides a numerical assessment of the scale of rural crime. These figures show that the number of burglary, robbery and theft offences in rural areas has fallen each year since 2010/11, with 553 fewer offences when comparing the latest twelve months with the previous twelve months.

The second factor is people's perceptions of crime and how it impacts on their feelings of safety, security and livelihoods.

My Department, through the delivery of the Community Safety Strategy, has continued to support the development of initiatives at a strategic and local level to deter crime and provide reassurance to our rural communities.

At a strategic level, these initiatives have included a funding package to encourage farmers in theft hotspots to fit security devices to their machinery, supporting Freeze Branding of livestock, development of a forensic marking scheme to deter the theft of farm equipment and the funding of 'Feel Safe' workshops – one was held on 22 January 2016, in Enniskillen – which provide practical advice and guidance to help older people feel safe in their homes and communities.

At a local level, I am aware there have recently been specific concerns regarding theft from cars in Fermanagh and South Tyrone and this has led to increased concerns regarding levels of rural crime.

Fermanagh and Omagh and Mid Ulster Policing and Community Safety Partnerships are taking forward a range of initiatives to help address these concerns including, promotion of specific crime prevention advice in local papers, information events for Neighbourhood Watch Coordinators and a Text Alert Service that local clergy can avail of to ensure they receive updates on any suspicious activity in their local area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many anti-social behaviour orders have been handed down (i) in conjunction with; or (ii) as an alternative to, a custodial sentence, binding order, conditional discharge or any other disposal for public order offences in North Down, in each of the last three years.

Mr Ford: No anti-social behaviour orders have been handed down (i) in conjunction with; or (ii) as an alternative to, a custodial sentence, binding order, conditional discharge or any other disposal for public order offences in North Down in any of the last three years.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many cases per month, that would have been heard at Bangor courthouse, have been listed for (i) Ards courthouse; and (ii) another venue.

(AQW 54168/11-16)

Mr Ford: Bangor Courthouse closed in March 2013 and business transferred to Newtownards Courthouse. Consequently data relating to business that would previously have been listed in Bangor courthouse is no longer collated by NICTS.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice, following his announcement of the closure of Strabane courthouse, what steps are being taken to bring Omagh courthouse to the required standards for disability access; and to provide suitable accommodation for those attending tribunals to have private consultations with their representatives.

Mr Ford: In 2014 the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service carried out a programme of Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) upgrades to Omagh Courthouse. The work included new automated door closures with push pads, new door closures, redesign of the public counter to ensure DDA compliance, installation of an induction loop and upgraded ironmongery to a DDA approved type.

In terms of suitable accommodation for the members of the public attending tribunals there are two consultations rooms, a small waiting area and a family room. All of the consultation rooms are on the ground floor of the Courthouse.

Department for Regional Development

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what criteria are used to determine prioritisation for the painting of white lines on the edges of roads; and whether this prioritisation takes into account whether the road is an A class or a B class road.

(AQW 53502/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): Edge of carriageway markings are provided on all motorways (including slip roads) and on all other roads which have either hard shoulders or 1m wide hard strips. Edge markings are also provided on unlit, rural sections of the trunk road network which comprises approximately half of the A Class network.

Edge markings may also be provided in exceptional circumstances, for example on roads prone to fog or mist, where sudden changes in carriageway width occur or on approaches to bends indicated by warning signs. In addition they may also be provided as part of a Local Transport and Safety Measure scheme. These schemes or projects are individually prioritised at Divisional level to ensure highest priority works are done first and take account of traffic volumes, accident history, value for money, environmental factors and deliverability.

Edge markings are not normally provided if the carriageway is less than 6.1m wide.

In terms of maintaining existing road markings, the Department carries out regular inspections of all public roads and footways to ensure that essential response maintenance is identified and completed as far as resources permit. During these inspections all defects are noted, including for example defective signs and road markings. The frequency of these inspections depends on the type of road and the volume of vehicular and pedestrian traffic, Road markings are inspected during these routine inspections and where their condition falls below the required standards they should be replaced as soon as possible.

Road markings are not replaced on a routine / specific time frame but when they have faded by approximately 30 – 40% depending on their specific importance.

For example regulatory road markings such as stop markings, no entry markings etc. and markings on high traffic roads are replaced sooner.

High traffic roads are those roads with over 5000 vehicles per day. This applies to all roads regardless of classification.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of (i) full time; and (ii) part time staff in (a) his Department; and (b) each of its arm's-length bodies that have availed of each tranche of the voluntary exit scheme, broken down by grade.

(AQW 53613/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The details for my Department and Translink/NITHC are outlined in the tables attached. Northern Ireland Water is not currently running a voluntary exit scheme.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether NI Water has conducted an investigation in to the possible effects of drilling beside their water catchment facility at Woodburn Forest.
(AQW 53667/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The exploratory drilling by Infrastrata is regulated under the terms of its Consent to Drill.

The 'Consent to Drill' at Woodburn Forest has been granted by DETI and the granting of this consent demonstrates that DETI is satisfied with all of the technical, environmental and health and safety aspects of the proposed drilling plans. DETI's consent follows a separate consent issued by NIEA (Water Management Unit) under the Water (NI) Order 1999, which regulates the well in terms of surface water and groundwater impacts and includes the implementation of a monitoring plan to verify that no adverse impacts arise on neighbouring waterbodies from the exploratory activity. Infrastrata produced a detailed Project Environmental Report, addressing all aspects of biodiversity and environmental impact, which was considered and approved by NIEA.

NI Water has in place Drinking Water Safety Plans (DWSP) for all of its water treatment works and associated supply areas. Drinking Water Safety Plans identify the potential for risk to water quality from all potential raw water sources within the catchment area of a treatment works. NI Water works closely with the NIEA to minimise any potential impacts on drinking water quality and keeps under review any risks identified to inform the DWSP risk assessment process.

The exploration project at Woodburn has been designed as 'zero discharge' and NI Water is satisfied that the proposed work will have no detrimental impact upon the impounding reservoirs or the public water supply and therefore has not conducted a separate investigation.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development when the current work on the passing loop at Bellarena will be completed; and when the improved rail schedule will commence.
(AQW 53687/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The project to complete the passing loop at Bellarena is scheduled for completion at the end of December 2016.

Discussions regarding service levels, including any future service enhancements, will take place in the coming months with my Department as part of the corporate planning process.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33823/11-15, AQW 39603/11-15 and following the experimental Traffic Regulation Order to provide a tidal urban clearway on three routes in south Belfast in November 2013, whether an assessment has been made if a similar scheme will be implemented for the Antrim Road in North Belfast.
(AQW 53700/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Arterial routes, which are often located in vibrant commercial and residential areas, need to serve a number of functions, not all of which are mutually compatible. My Department must strike a balance between these conflicting needs.

Urban Clearways are a very successful way of dealing with these conflicting needs along arterial routes, providing a maximum throughput of traffic during the peak hours by banning all parking including loading / unloading but providing on street parking outside the restriction times. Vehicles are however, permitted to set down or pick up passengers when the urban clearway restrictions are in operation.

My Department is committed to encouraging sustainable ways of travelling including public transport and cycling, particularly on arterial routes and in Belfast City Centre. Urban Clearways provide traffic lanes free from parked cars and my Department is not currently considering relaxing any further Urban Clearways due to the adverse impact it has for public transport and cycling.

My Department is also considering the potential for extending Belfast Rapid Transit to serve North Belfast and one of the possible routes for this area is the Antrim Road. In order for such a service to be successful it will require bus priority measures to be introduced, in both directions, along the route. The presence of a tidal clearway would severely compromise the ability to provide this public transport priority.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development what was the total cost of the 200 road signs erected in Belfast city centre to advise motorists of the new speed limit zones.
(AQW 53737/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The total cost of purchasing the signs and poles to advise the public of the recently introduced 20mph speed limit in Belfast City centre is £9,935.64.

The signs were erected by TransportNI's internal work force.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on road repairs for Nancy's Lane in Strabane.
(AQW 53756/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Nancy's Lane is over 500m in length with around 180m at the Derry Road end adopted and maintained by TransportNI. The adopted stretch is in a satisfactory condition so there are no proposals to carry out any road repairs.

The remaining unadopted section of Nancy's Lane has been the subject of a number of adoption requests over the years and my Department has consistently taken the view that it can only be adopted after it is brought up to an appropriate standard. Responsibility for bringing the road up to an adoptable standard would lie with the residents who have been advised of the standards to be provided before adoption could take place.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department conducts regular maintenance checks to see if streetlights are working.
(AQW 53775/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has introduced a new on-line reporting facility for street lighting faults, whereby the public can report faults on the NI Direct website, under 'Street Lighting and Reporting a Fault'. Callers can also report street lighting faults by telephone to 0300 200 7899.

Following the Executive's allocation of additional funding for street lighting repairs in the November 2015 monitoring round, my Department's TransportNI staff have carried out inspections to establish whether street lights were working and to facilitate repairs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any plans for expanded or additional park and ride facilities.
(AQW 53798/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department's 'Park & Ride Strategic Delivery Programme for 2013-15' delivered over 2,000 additional Park & Ride and Park & Share spaces across Northern Ireland, bringing the total number of spaces to over 8,000. Further additional spaces are currently being progressed in this financial year, including spaces at Ballymoney Train Station, Randalstown and Ballynure.

There is a growing demand for our Park & Ride facilities, with the sites serving the Belfast Metropolitan area having an average daily occupancy level of 80%. Following the success of the Strategic Delivery Programme, a further review of my Department's Park & Ride Strategy is currently being carried out to identify potential locations for further facilities across Northern Ireland.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding her Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has sourced a total of £98.57m of European Union funding, all of which is matched, during the last ten years. This includes £58.12m of funding secured from 'Competitive' funding sources such as Trans European Network – Transport (TEN-T) and the Connecting Europe Facility (CEF) where my Department has successfully competed against applications submitted by all other Member States of the European Union.

Annex A to this letter gives a full breakdown of this funding detailing the projects it relates to, the European programme and the year it was sourced in. A copy of annex A has been placed in the library. (Please see next spread).

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are any plans to install traffic calming measures in Moira.

(AQW 53837/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can advise that traffic calming in the form of central hatching and pedestrian islands are already in place along Main Street from its junction with Meeting Street and the Old Kilmore Road roundabout.

Backwood Road, around the primary school, has been treated with formal vertical deflection measures in the form of ramps.

In recent months gateway signing has also been provided on five approach roads to the village.

There are no plans to provide further measures at this time.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans to ban heavy goods vehicles from the centre of Moira.

(AQW 53838/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has no plans to introduce a weight limit or ban heavy goods vehicles within Moira.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on plans to ban heavy goods vehicles from the centre of Hillsborough.

(AQW 53839/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department intends to introduce a 7.5 tonne weight limit for heavy goods vehicles within the conservation area of Hillsborough in a staged approach. The first phase will apply to the stretch of Lisburn Street from the Culcavey Road to the Ballynahich Road/ Main Street junction.

The legislation will be progressed in the coming weeks and subject to satisfactory completion it is hoped that the necessary signage will be erected during Summer 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to place in the library a copy of the map delineating the lands being offered for sale by NI Water adjacent to Ballysallagh Upper Reservoir and Cairn Wood, Craigtantlet.

(AQW 53886/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The open market sale of lands at Ballysallagh Upper Reservoir and Cairn Wood is no longer being pursued, while Forest Service interest in purchasing the site is explored. A map delineating the lands in question has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Regional Development what factors she considered when setting the 20mph speed limit in Belfast city centre.

(AQW 53910/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy is a joint initiative between DRD, DoE and PSNI to reduce the number and severity of road traffic collisions in Northern Ireland. The concept of piloting signed only 20 mph schemes is one of 199 action measures contained within the strategy.

A pre-consultation phase for the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy was carried out between March 2009 and February 2010. This involved engagement with 500+ stakeholders to identify key road safety issues and draft solutions. An extensive public consultation was then carried out in March 2010. This confirmed general support for pilot 20 mph signed only schemes.

As a result of the commitment to the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, TransportNI selected five pilot 20 mph signed only sites, including Belfast City Centre.

TransportNI wrote to the PSNI in November 2013 and the PSNI responded in January 2014 giving their agreement to a zone consisting of the main pedestrian zone, the front and back of City Hall, Cathedral Quarter and areas of high pedestrian activity including High Street and North Street.

The main factors taken into account include:

- Level of pedestrian and cycling activity in the area.
- Record of road traffic collisions resulting in an injury, particularly those involving pedestrians and cyclists.
- Existing conditions in the streets prior to implementation including analysis of average speed of motor vehicles and operation of bus lanes.
- Support of PSNI and Belfast City Council.
- Consideration of similar 20mph limits in Great Britain.
- Analysis of the responses to the consultation exercise.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on residents' parking scheme in the Bogside area of Derry.

(AQW 53911/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has progressed the Rossville Street Residents' Parking Scheme in the Bogside area of the City. Many of the necessary preparations have been made ahead of formal consultation on the scheme.

However, given the difficulties in securing public support for schemes in Belfast and the costs associated with implementing and managing schemes in Londonderry and Antrim, I wish to take some time to consider my Department's position on this matter before making any further decisions.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the difference between the lux level bulbs and the blown street lighting bulbs they replaced in Lurgan.

(AQW 53923/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As far as maintenance is concerned, TransportNI generally replaces defective light bulbs on a like for like basis. This principle applies equally in the Lurgan area as in any other area of Southern Division.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria for selecting the location of salt boxes.

(AQW 54178/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Salt bins may be provided for use by the public, on a self-help basis on roads which do not qualify for inclusion on the gritting schedule, providing the necessary criteria are met. There are no limits placed on the number of salt bins which may be provided, although they will not normally be provided within 100m of another bin.

Salt Bin Criteria

TransportNI will consider the provision of a salt bin when the following criteria are met:

- the location in question must be on the publically maintained road network;
- the gradient of the road in question must be over 5%;
- no reasonable alternative route shall be available; and
- the subject road attains a minimum overall score, derived using a specific formula, where points are awarded depending on road geometry, residential usage, community welfare and commercial usage.

Salt bins can also be provided to schools that are regularly affected by severe wintry weather.

Department for Social Development

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total (i) number of Disability Living Allowance and Employment Support Allowance hearings that have taken place in each of the last five years; (ii) cost of Disability Living Allowance and Employment Support Allowance appeal hearings in each of the last five years; and (iii) number of Disability Living Allowance and Employment Support Allowance appeal hearings that overturned the original decision.

(AQW 53675/11-16)

Lord Morrow (The Minister for Social Development): Tables 1 and 2 detail the number of Disability Living Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance appeals that were considered at a tribunal hearing, of those the number that received a final determination/outcome and of those how many were successful in each of the last five financial years.

Identification of the precise cost of all hearings would require a manual trawl of computer and manual records, an exercise that would incur a disproportionate cost.

A Disability Living Allowance Appeal Tribunal panel is comprised of a Legally Qualified Member, a Medically Qualified Member and a Disability Qualified Member. An Employment and Support Allowance Appeal Tribunal panel is comprised of a Legally Qualified Member and a Medically Qualified Member.

The current rate payable to each category of panel member for a hearing session is detailed in the Table 3 below. The number of appeals listed for each session is a matter for the President of the Appeals Tribunal

Table 3 — Panel Members Fee Rate

Legally Qualified member	£229.00
Medically Qualified member (up to 40 sessions)	£158.00
Medically Qualified member (over 40 sessions & consultants in certain appeal types)	£189.50

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much funding his Department has spent on the Warm Homes Scheme in the last three years.

(AQW 53764/11-16)

2012/2013	£16,696,000
2013/2014	£15,625,000
2014/2015	£12,385,000

(AQW 53784/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The total number of social housing schemes programmed as part of Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) 2016/17 to 2018/19 and Parliament Constituency is as follows.

You may however, wish to note that programmed schemes may be lost or slip to future programme years for a variety of reasons relating to e.g. site acquisition / achieving Planning Permission. Additional schemes may also be added to the SHDP through the purchase of Existing Satisfactory / Off-the-shelf properties in-year, and through the annual housing association bidding round / programme formulation (which is currently underway).

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to detail the (a) matched; and (b) unmatched European Union funding his Department has sourced in each of the last ten years; and (ii) where this money was spent.
(AQW 53803/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The information requested is not available in the format requested. The Department facilitates the sourcing of European Funding through the provision of match funding to a number of European programmes i.e. from the European Territorial Cooperation Programme; the European Social Fund and the European Regional Development Fund.

European Territorial Cooperation Programme: As Accountable Department for Peace III, the Department has responsibility for Priority 2.1 - Creating Shared Public Spaces (2007-2013). Match funding of €16m provided by the Department facilitated drawdown of €48m to support 18 capital projects across Northern Ireland and the Border Regions. The location of the projects and associated spend were:

- Belfast £32.4m,
- Londonderry £18.5m,
- Portadown £5.5m,
- Omagh £ 4.3m,
- Dungannon £ 7.4m,
- Monaghan € 7.8m,
- Cavan € 3.7m,
- Fermanagh/Donegal € 8.1m.

The Shared Spaces and Services theme of the Peace IV programme (2014-2020) will seek calls for applications later in 2016 from Northern Ireland and the Border Regions. The Department will provide €6.2m match funding to facilitate the drawdown of €35.3m.

European Social Fund: Between 2008/09 and 2015/16 the Department provided the match funding of £6.1m to a number of European Social Fund projects. Details of the each year's funding and the location of the spend is provided in the table below:

Region	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16
Belfast	404,500	558,096	471,705	480,587	663,090	698,849	677,803	0.00

Dungannon	91,113	95,865	76,368	73,368	73,368	76,368	76,368	76,368

European Regional Development Fund: The Housing Group within the Department sourced £6.0m funding from the EU Sustainable Competitiveness Programme for Northern Ireland 2007-2013 to support the Boiler Replacement Scheme. The scheme was available to eligible owner occupiers throughout Northern Ireland. Details of spend by year are provided in the table below:

Year	Purpose	Amount £'000
2013-14	Boiler Replacement	3,000
2014-15	Boiler Replacement	2,650
2015-16	Boiler Replacement	350

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of homes in (i) North Down; and (ii) Northern Ireland that have availed of the Warm Homes Scheme in each of the last five years.
(AQW 53827/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The last Warm Homes Scheme operated from 1st July 2009 and ended on 31st March 2015. The table below details the total number of homes across Northern Ireland that availed of the scheme in each of the last five years and the number of homes assisted in the Ards and North Down Council area. The Housing Executive is unable to provide information by parliamentary constituency and can only extract information by council area.

Year	Total Number of Homes	Ards & North Down
2009/2010	7,071	665
2010/2011	10,369	632
2011/2012	10,651	641
2012/2013	9,755	524
2013/2014	8,019	633
2014/2015	7,013	465

Year	Total Number of Homes	Ards & North Down
Totals	52,878	3,560

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost of the proposed restructuring of local district Housing Executives (a) for Northern Ireland; and (b) North Down.

(AQW 53832/11-16)

Lord Morrow: I have been advised by the Housing Executive that the proposed restructuring of local district Housing Executive offices for Northern Ireland is cost neutral. Indicative costings show that there are no significant variations against current operating costs for each area office, including North Down.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what consideration his Department has given to (a) ensuring that the proposed restructuring of local district Housing Executive offices will not adversely affect the local skills and knowledge of staff; and (b) what protection will be given to existing staff at Level 4 and below in regard to relocation.

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive advises that in respect of part (a) it is currently undertaking a major transformation programme entitled Journey to Excellence which aims to enhance overall organisational performance and maintain a more customer focused and efficient approach to service delivery.

A key programme objective is to ensure that leaders and staff within the Housing Executive are equipped with the skills and knowledge to meet the requirements of the new ways of working. The Housing Executive is committed to retaining and developing the wealth of skills and knowledge that staff hold, both at a local level and across the organisation insofar as possible. In addition to a comprehensive training programme to support the programme, the Housing Executive has undertaken to support its staff through this change process by committing to pre-recruitment activities for staff. The latter includes:-

- i Access to eLearning focussed on the Recruitment process
- ii Access to eLearning on Build Yes (the primary business improvement methodology in the NIHE)
- iii Pre-Recruitment staff information events

The e-learning packages covering the new ways of working and the recruitment process will give our staff as much information as possible in advance of any selection exercise.

In relation to part (b) the Housing Executive advises that Housing Executive staff including those at Level 4 and below have the protection of a Redeployment Policy, agreed with the trade unions, which would come into effect in the event that surpluses arise in any location as a result of restructuring. It is the Housing Executive's intention to redeploy staff on a voluntary basis and it is progressing work on an overall workforce plan to support this intent.

It is the Housing Executive's policy to take all reasonable measures to absorb surplus staff by redeployment in the interests of those staff and the Housing Executive's business needs generally. Under the policy all surplus staff will be given an opportunity to identify their preferences for redeployment by location and function, and every effort will be made to accommodate those preferences insofar as possible dependent on the availability of posts.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the change in the number of fraud investigators working in his Department between 2010 and 2015.

(AQW 53849/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The number of fraud investigators working in the Social Security Agency's Single Investigation Service during this period has not changed significantly. The average number of fraud investigators in post each year is as follows;

Years	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015
Total	81	77	87	92	84	77

In addition, within the wider Department, a Corporate Investigations Unit investigates suspicions of internal fraud or irregularity. On 1st January 2010 the unit had 8 fraud investigators, reducing to 4 by 31st December 2015.

The Department's Child Maintenance Service has had between 3 and 4 officers during this period, whose role is also to identify fraud.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the financing of the Women's Centre Childcare Fund for 2016-17.

Lord Morrow: I can advise that funds will be made available for the Women's Centres Childcare Fund for 2016/17.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the work his Department is carrying out to ensure that funding is in place for the Women's Centre Childcare Fund in 2016-17.

(AQW 53932/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Warm Homes Scheme ended on 31st March 2015. The table below details how much funding was provided for the scheme in the last five years, also shown are the amounts spent in the Ards and North Down council areas. The Housing Executive is unable to provide expenditure by parliamentary constituency and can only extract expenditure by council area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the restructuring of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 53940/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive is currently undertaking a major transformation programme entitled 'Journey to Excellence', which aims to enhance overall organisational performance and maintain a more customer focused and efficient approach to service delivery. It is anticipated that the programme will result in services which are more effective and efficient, with improved levels of customer and staff satisfaction.

The programme aims to transform housing services for both housing customers and tenants by developing new ways of delivering services and implementing these across the organisation. The aim of these service redesigns is to deliver a more seamless service to housing customers and tenants.

The new delivery models include the provision of a dedicated 'housing solution' service by dedicated teams of staff performing a housing advisory role and a seamless transition to dedicated 'patch managers', who perform the housing management role, and who will then assist prospective tenants once they accept an offer of accommodation from the Housing Executive. The redesigned process will improve continuity for the customer.

New structures and new job roles have been defined and are currently with the Trade Union for consultation. Substantial work is currently underway to prepare for the roll-out of 'Journey to Excellence' across the Housing Executive including new structures, systems and business processes, with implementation due to commence in mid-2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the matching service designed to bring empty homes back into use, in East Londonderry.

(AQW 53957/11-16)

Lord Morrow: A matching service scheme to bring privately owned empty homes back into use has been developed by the Housing Executive which is similar to initiatives used by local authorities in other parts of the United Kingdom. The scheme aims to match potential buyers with sellers of privately owned empty houses. To be part of scheme, prospective buyers and sellers are required to register with the Housing Executive to be part of the scheme, using the Empty Homes website (www.emptyhomesni.com).

The scheme went live in September 2015, with the Housing Executive writing to over 500 known owners of empty homes in Northern Ireland advising of the scheme. My Department has also promoted the scheme through the Private Rented Sector newsletter.

In the East Londonderry area there have been no owners of empty homes who have registered their property with the matching service scheme. However, as part of ongoing actions within my Department's Empty Homes Strategy there have been 42 empty homes reported to the Housing Executive in East Londonderry. Of these, 18 have now been returned into use or demolished, 17 have been blocked up with the owners unable to be contacted, and 7 empty homes where the Housing Executive are seeking the owners to bring them back into use.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on funding for Neighbourhood Renewal projects in East Londonderry in 2016-2017.

(AQW 53958/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My officials have previously written to all organisations funded through the Neighbourhood Renewal programme advising of the significant financial pressures facing the Executive. Following the Executive's agreement on the final budget for 2016/17, I now need to consider the impact the settlement will have across the remit of my Department.

Whilst I have still to finalise decisions around my Departmental budget, which will limit the amount of funding that will be available through the programmes that my Department currently delivers, my officials are seeking to identify those projects which demonstrate most effectively that they are meeting the objectives of these programmes; including the Neighbourhood Renewal programme. As this exercise is ongoing and I have not yet finalised my decisions therefore it is premature to speculate on the outcome, with regards to which projects will be supported.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Kilcooley Estate with either ineffective or no cavity wall insulation.

(AQW 53967/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive has advised that they do not hold records on the number of its properties with either ineffective or no cavity wall insulation.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in the Bloomfield Estate, Bangor have ineffective or no cavity wall insulation.

(AQW 53969/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The Housing Executive has advised that they do not hold records on the number of its properties with either ineffective or no cavity wall insulation.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of the (i) number; and (ii) percentage of people claiming Job Seekers Allowance in (a) North Down; (b) Northern Ireland; (c) May 2011; and (d) January 2016.

(AQW 53998/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The most recently published Jobseeker's Allowance statistics refer to August 2015. Figures for November 2015 will be published at the end of February 2016. The number of Jobseeker's Allowance claimants as well as the Percentage of Working Age Population in the North Down Assembly Area and Northern Ireland are available at May 2011 and August 2015 in the table below.

Area	May-11		Aug-15
	Number	%age	Number	%age
North Down	1,900	3.6%	1,420	2.7%
Northern Ireland	56,580	5.1%	41,170	3.7%

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development whether it is standard Northern Ireland Housing Executive policy to fit smoke alarms in its properties.

(AQW 54006/11-16)

Lord Morrow: The NIHE has confirmed that it is its standard Policy to fit smoke alarms in its properties.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the redevelopment of Portrush Harbour.

(AQW 54051/11-16)

Lord Morrow: In 2011 Coleraine Borough Council appointed consultants to carry out a feasibility study to determine if it was possible to extend and pontoon Portrush harbour. A number of development options were identified with development costs ranging from £10 M to £14 M.

A further piece of work was commissioned to determine if any other value for money options were available. It is anticipated that this additional work will be completed around the end of March 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the programme for regeneration works in Portrush prior to the Open Championship in 2019.

(AQW 54052/11-16)

Lord Morrow: My Department has established a programme board to oversee the development and implementation of a number of major infrastructure projects in Portrush. Two of the major capital projects proposed in the programme are a new train station and public realm works throughout the town centre. Subject to funding, it is planned to commence the design process in 2016/17.

A further piece of work to determine options for the development of the harbour is expected to be completed around the end of March 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of households identified as being affected by fuel poverty in East Londonderry in the last 12 months; and of those identified (ii) how many have been approved for the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 54078/11-16)

Lord Morrow: In relation to part (i), the Housing Executive do not record fuel poverty figures aligned to parliamentary constituency. East Londonderry is part of the council area of Causeway Coast and Glens and 353 households have received approval to install energy efficiency measures including new heating systems, cavity wall and loft insulation and new windows through the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people in receipt of Employment Support Allowance in each of the last three years, broken down by constituency.

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission to detail the number of visitors to Parliament Buildings in each of the last five years. (AQW 53761/11-16)

Ms Ruane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): From January 2011 to December 2015 the total number of people on record having visited Parliament Buildings is 352,826.

This number represents the total number of visitors attending a diverse range of events, functions, guided tours and schools' education programmes. Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission to outline any engagement it has had with the Committee on Procedures in relation to adopting a family friendly cut off time of 5pm each sitting day as is the practice of the Scottish Parliament. (AQW 53820/11-16)

Mr Gardiner (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Further to the response provided to AQW 46683/11-15, the Assembly Commission has had no subsequent engagement with the Committee on Procedures in relation to sitting times.

As noted in the reply to AQW 46683/11-15, the Committee on Procedures' review into the organisation of the business week in the Assembly in 2013-2014 resulted in the production of a report entitled "Review of the current organisation of the business week of the Northern Ireland Assembly".

The Committee examined sitting patterns of other legislatures including the Scottish Parliament and considered whether these could be applied or adapted to suit the Northern Ireland Assembly. While the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission did not provide a written submission to the committee inquiry on its own behalf, the views of its constituent members were reflected in the written and oral responses submitted to the Committee. The Committee recommended that "the current organisation of the business week is fit for purpose and recommended that no changes be made to the current organisation of the business week within the Northern Ireland Assembly." The report and recommendation were agreed by the Assembly on 27 May 2014.

At its January meeting, the Commission noted that, the Speaker has established a reference group following the AERC report on "Women in Politics" to advise him on gender issues which will include the sitting times of the Assembly. Therefore, this issue is likely to be returned to in the next mandate. In the interim, I understand that the Speaker has been working with the Business Committee to minimise the number of late sittings as much as possible with the heavy pressures on plenary business coming from the Executive towards the end of the Assembly mandate. The Business Committee has therefore frequently been agreeing order papers for especially heavy business days with provision for business to be carried over from a Monday to a Tuesday or for an additional sitting on a Wednesday so that decisions on a cut off time during the evening can be taken in the context of the business remaining for that week.

‘SCHEDULE 7A

Section 205.

SUPERVISION AND ASSESSMENT ORDERS

PART 1

INTRODUCTORY

Introductory

- 1.—(1) In this Part a “supervision and assessment order” is an order made in respect of a person (“the supervised person”) containing—
- (a) a supervision element (see paragraph 3), and
 - (b) an assessment element (see paragraph 4).
- (2) A supervision and assessment order may also include a residence element (see paragraph 5).
- (3) In this Schedule, references to the commission of offences by a person include the commission of offences in the circumstances described in section 204 (finding that person not guilty on the ground of insanity).

PART 2

MAKING AND CONTENTS OF ORDER

Conditions which must be satisfied before order can be made

- 2.—(1) A court may make a supervision and assessment order only if the following four conditions are met.
- (2) The first condition is that the court is satisfied, on the required medical evidence, that the supervised person has a disorder, or that there is reason to suspect that the supervised person has a disorder.
- (3) The second condition is that the court is satisfied, on the required medical evidence, that examination of the supervised person (“S”) is necessary or desirable for the assessment of one or both of the following—
- (a) whether the disorder requires treatment;
 - (b) whether consent to the giving of such treatment will be given by S, or by a person with authority to give consent on behalf of S, or whether such treatment will be capable of being given to S by virtue of Part 2 of this Act (or, if S is under 16, under the Mental Health Order).
- (4) The third condition is that the court is satisfied that supervision under the order is desirable in the interests of—
- (a) securing the rehabilitation of the supervised person, or
 - (b) protecting the public from harm from that person or preventing the commission by that person of offences.
- (5) The fourth condition is that the court is satisfied that the making of such an order is the most suitable means of dealing with the supervised person.
- (6) In this paragraph “the required medical evidence” means the written or oral evidence of at least two medical practitioners, including—
- (a) if the disorder is mental disorder, the oral evidence of an approved medical practitioner;
 - (b) otherwise, the oral evidence of a medical practitioner who appears to the court to have special experience in the diagnosis or treatment of the disorder.

Supervision element

- 3.—(1) A supervision element is a requirement that the supervised person be under the supervision of—
- (a) a social worker, or
 - (b) a probation officer,
- for a period specified in the order (“the supervision period”), which must be not less than 6 months and not more than 3 years.
- (2) The social worker or probation officer is referred to in this Schedule as “the supervising officer”.
- (3) The court must not make a supervision and assessment order unless it is satisfied that the supervising officer is willing to undertake the supervision.
- (4) If the supervising officer is a social worker—
- (a) the supervision and assessment order must specify the HSC trust for the area in which the supervised person resides or will reside, and

- (b) the social worker must be an approved social worker appointed as such by that trust.

Assessment element

- 4.—(1) An assessment element is a requirement that, during a specified period (“the assessment period”), the supervised person must—
- (a) attend at a specified place at a specified time or times, or
 - (b) make himself or herself available at a specified place at a specified time or times,
- for assessment by or under the direction of a medical practitioner.
- (2) The assessment period may be the whole or any part of the supervision period.
- (3) Assessment under sub-paragraph (1) is to be assessment of such of the following as the medical practitioner considers appropriate at the time of the assessment—
- (a) the supervised person’s condition;
 - (b) either or both of the matters mentioned in paragraph 2(3)(a) and (b).
- (4) In sub-paragraph (1) “specified” means specified in the order.

Residence element

- 5.—(1) A residence element is any requirement as to the residence of the supervised person during a period specified in the order (“the residence period”).
- (2) The residence period may be the whole or any part of the supervision period.
- (3) Before including a residence element, the court must consider the home surroundings of the supervised person.
- (4) A residence element may not require the supervised person to reside as an in-patient or resident in a hospital or care home.

Procedural requirements relating to the making of the order

- 6.—(1) Before making a supervision and assessment order, the court must explain to the supervised person in ordinary language—
- (a) the effect of each of the elements included in the order, and
 - (b) that a court of summary jurisdiction, and the court making the order, have power under paragraphs 8 to 10, 11 and 13 to review the order on the application either of the supervised person or the supervising officer.
- (2) After making an order, the court must as soon as practicable—
- (a) give at least 2 copies of the order to the supervising officer, and
 - (b) if the supervising officer is a social worker, send at least 1 copy of the order to the Probation Board.
- (3) The supervising officer must give a copy of the order to the supervised person.

PART 3

EFFECT OF ORDER

7. Where an order is made, the supervised person must (as well as complying with the assessment element and any residence element) keep in touch with the supervising officer in accordance with such instructions as that officer may from time to time give, and must notify the supervising officer of any change of address.

PART 4

AMENDMENT OR REVOCATION OF ORDER

Amendment of order: general

- 8.—(1) A court of summary jurisdiction may, on the application of the supervised person or the supervising officer, amend a supervision and assessment order—
- (a) by cancelling any of the requirements of the order; or
 - (b) by inserting in the order (either in addition to or in substitution for any such requirement) any requirement which the court could include if it were the court by which the order was made and were then making it.
- (2) The power of a court under sub-paragraph (1) does not include power to amend an order by extending any period specified in it beyond the end of 3 years from the date of the original order.

Amendment of order: change of area of residence

- 9.—(1) This paragraph applies where—
- (a) a supervision and assessment order requires the supervised person to be under the supervision of a social worker, and
 - (b) (in accordance with paragraph 3(4)) the order specifies the HSC trust for the area in which the person resides (“the current trust”).

(2) If a court of summary jurisdiction is satisfied that the supervised person proposes to change, or has changed, his residence to the area of another HSC trust, the court may amend the order by substituting, for the current trust, the other HSC trust.

(3) The court must amend the order as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) if the supervising officer applies for it to do so.

(4) Where—

- (a) the court amends a supervision and assessment order under this paragraph, and
- (b) the order contains requirements which in the opinion of the court cannot be complied with if the supervised person ceases to reside in the area of the current trust, the court must either cancel those requirements or substitute for them other requirements which can be complied with if the supervised person ceases to reside in that area.

Medical reports

10.—(1) In this paragraph “relevant medical practitioner” means a medical practitioner by whom or under whose direction the supervised person—

- (a) has been assessed in pursuance of a supervision and assessment order, or
- (b) is being treated for a disorder in pursuance of such an order.

(2) Sub-paragraph (3) applies where any of the following conditions is met—

- (a) the order requires the supervised person to attend or make himself or herself available for assessment at specified intervals, but a relevant medical practitioner considers that assessment at longer intervals is sufficient for the purposes mentioned in paragraph 2(3)(a) and (b);
- (b) a relevant medical practitioner considers that it is necessary or desirable, for the purposes mentioned in paragraph 2(3)(a) and (b), to assess the supervised person more frequently than specified in the order;
- (c) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the supervised person no longer requires treatment for his or her disorder;
- (d) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the supervised person’s disorder is not (or is no longer) susceptible to treatment;
- (e) a relevant medical practitioner considers that the assessment period should be extended (subject to sub-paragraph (5));
- (f) a relevant medical practitioner is for any reason unwilling to continue to assess or treat, or direct the assessment or treatment of, the supervised person;
- (g) a relevant medical practitioner becomes aware that the supervised person has been admitted to hospital as an in-patient.

(3) The relevant medical practitioner must make a report in writing to that effect to the supervising officer.

(4) The supervising officer must—

- (a) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(a), inform the court which made the order;
- (b) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(b) to (f), apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for the order to be amended as the court considers appropriate (including by cancelling the assessment element);
- (c) in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(g), apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for the assessment element to be suspended whilst the supervised person remains an in-patient.

(5) On an application made in the case of a report made as mentioned in sub-paragraph (2)(e)—

- (a) if the court considers it appropriate for the assessment period to end later than the end of the existing supervision period, the court may extend the supervision period;
- (b) the assessment period (as extended) must not end later than the end of the supervision period (as extended); and
- (c) neither period may be extended beyond the end of 3 years from the date of the original order.

Revocation of order

11.—(1) A court that has made a supervision and assessment order may, on the application of the supervised person or the supervising officer, revoke the order under this paragraph.

(2) The court may do so only if the court is satisfied that, having regard to circumstances which have arisen since the order was made, it would be in the interests of the health or welfare of the supervised person to revoke the order.

Procedural requirements on amendment or revocation of order

12.—(1) On the making under any of paragraphs 8 to 11 of an order amending or revoking a supervision and assessment order, the court must as soon as practicable give to the supervising officer at least 2 copies of the amending or revoking order.

(2) The supervising officer, when given copies under sub-paragraph (1), must give a copy of the amending or revoking order to—

- (a) the supervised person, and
- (b) if the supervised person is receiving in-patient treatment or is residing in a hospital, the person in charge of that hospital.

PART 5

BREACH OF ORDER

13.—(1) This paragraph applies where—

- (a) a supervision and assessment order is in force, and
- (b) the supervising officer applies to the court that made the order for the order to be revoked under this paragraph.

(2) If—

- (a) it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the supervised person (“S”) has, without reasonable excuse, failed to comply with any of the requirements of the order, and
- (b) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to do so, the court may revoke the order and deal with S, for the matter in respect of which the order was made, in any manner in which the court could deal with S if a finding mentioned in section 205(1) had just been recorded by it in respect of that matter.

(3) In doing so, the court must take into account the extent to which S has complied with the requirements of the order.

(4) In proceedings under this paragraph any question as to whether S has failed to comply with the requirements of the order is to be determined by the court and not by the verdict of a jury.

(5) Where the court proposes to exercise its powers under this paragraph, it must summon S to appear before the court and, if S does not appear in answer to the summons, may issue a warrant for the arrest of S.

SUPPLEMENTARY

Power to vary period for which supervision element may be made

14.—(1) The Department of Justice may make regulations substituting, for the period of 3 years mentioned in paragraph 3(1), such other period (exceeding 6 months) as may be specified in the regulations.

(2) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make in paragraph 8(2) any amendment which the Department thinks necessary in consequence of the substitution made by the regulations.

Transitional provision relating to the abolition of petty sessions districts

15.—(1) Until the day on which section 1 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2015 comes into operation, this Schedule is to be read with the following modifications.

(2) If the supervising officer is a probation officer—

- (a) the supervision and assessment order must specify the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside, and
- (b) the supervising officer must be a probation officer appointed for or assigned to that district.

(3) If the supervising officer is a social worker—

- (a) paragraph 6(2)(b) does not apply, but
- (b) the court must, as soon as practicable after making the order, give to the probation officer assigned to the court at least 1 copy of the order.

(4) After making an order, the court must send to the clerk of petty sessions for the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside—

- (a) a copy of the order; and
- (b) such documents and information relating to the case as it considers likely to be of assistance to a court acting for that district in the exercise of its functions in relation to the order.

(5) The functions conferred by paragraphs 8 to 10 are to be exercised by a court for the petty sessions district in which the supervised person resides or will reside.

(6) In paragraph 9—

- (a) in sub-paragraph (1)(a), the reference to supervision by a social worker includes supervision by a probation officer appointed for or assigned to a petty sessions district;
- (b) the references to an HSC trust or to the area of such a trust include a petty sessions district.

(7) If the court amends a supervision and assessment order so as to substitute one petty session district for another, the court which amends the order must send to the clerk of petty sessions for the new petty sessions district—

- (a) at least 2 copies of the amending order; and
- (b) such documents and information relating to the case as it considers likely to be of assistance to a court acting for that district in the exercise of its functions in relation to the order.

(8) The clerk of petty sessions for the new petty sessions district, when given copies under sub-paragraph (7), must give a copy of the amending order to the supervising officer.’
