

Dr Johnston Price

The Community Relations Council is saddened to hear of the death of Dr Johnston Price. Johnston was a quiet, thoughtful and committed man who in his everyday life displayed all the values that he sought to promote and develop in his work, often with a wry sense of humour. Johnston's commitment to peace building and good community relationships kept him in contact with the Community Relations Council over many decades; firstly during his years with the Ulster People's College and in more recent times as a result of his work with Forthspring in the Five Decades project, an oral history project engaging groups and individuals in community organisations across the region about the experience of living through the recent conflict. He had published two books 'A Parable of Possibilities', a history of Forthspring Intercommunity Group and 'Talking about the Troubles', a collection of stories about the conflict in and about N. Ireland. Earlier in his working life Johnston was Director of the Ulster People's College having previously also served as Head of Education, Training and Development with the College. He also taught with the WEA, Queen's University Belfast, Ulster University and Newtownabbey Further Education College.

He was someone who recognised the value of continuous, reflective evaluation of peace-building processes but he never lost sight of the need for practical action. He was fully engaged in interventions that helped people in their everyday lives. This will be a valued legacy of his work. Johnston will be sadly missed by those of us who had the opportunity to know and work with him. The Board and staff of the Community Relations Council would like to extend deepest sympathy to his family, friends and colleagues.

Conflict, Polarisation and Partition – Can we build a new future from a difficult past?

Deirdre MacBride, Community Relations Council

Can build a new future from a difficult past? That was the question posed on Tuesday 21st November, 2017 at an important event in Belfast that reflected on some of the most significant events in the history of the island of Ireland.

Organised by the Community Relations Council (CRC) and the Heritage Lottery Fund, the conference - entitled Conflict, Polarisation and Partition - Can we build a new future from a difficult past? - heard from speakers including prominent historians Dr Eamon Phoenix and Dr Marie Coleman.

Happening one hundred years since the 1917 Irish Convention, the Creative Centenaries Conference at Belfast Metropolitan College's Titanic Quarter campus explored a critical time in Ireland's history with the ensuing spread of sectarian violence and the partition of the island.

It explored and showcased best practice in dealing with controversial and sensitive issues in a series of seminars featuring case studies of projects that have successfully done so.

CRC Chairman, Peter Osborne, said: "The years 1917 -23 were part of our shared past that epitomised division and violence. We can't make our shared, conflicted past better but we can learn from it to make our shared future one that our children and grandchildren will thank us for".

Paul Mullan, Head of the Heritage Lottery Fund, Northern Ireland, said: "The next number of years will present a number of commemorative challenges. We hope that this David Holloway, Community Dialogue conference will help to navigate that space and give communities confidence to remember thoughtfully."

Dr Eamon Phoenix, an eminent historian and lecturer at Stranmillis University College, talked through the political developments as well as the increasing polarisation on the island of Ireland from 1917, including sectarian violence proliferation, and the emergence of Ireland and Northern Ireland's Parliaments, including King George's speech on the opening of the Northern Ireland Parliament given during his 1921 Belfast City Hall address.

Dr Marie Coleman, Senior Lecturer in the School of History, Anthropology, Philosophy and Politics at Queen's University Belfast, talked about the end of World War One and how political turmoil persisted in Europe and Ireland after the war.

The event comprised a further three sessions, each with opportunity for wider group discussion.

The first seminar on 'The Power of Objects' was chaired by Stella Byrne, Heritage Lottery Fund, and featured Robert Heslip, Belfast City Council Heritage Officer, as speaker.

The second session, chaired by Niall Kerr from the Nerve Centre, focused on skills development and featured Collette Brownlee of the Irish Linen Centre and Lisburn Museum as the speaker.

The third seminar, chaired by Sophie Long of Living Legacies, focused on dealing with controversial issues and the sensitivities of the decade, and included a presentation by Dr Kristian Brown, Lecturer in Politics at Ulster University.

There were also a number of publications launched at the conference. These were:

Decade of Anniversaries Toolkit Update 2017 with 25 new case studies

Review of the Marking Centenaries period and future challenges covering grassroots activity, Council and Council Museum programmes and educational and creative approaches. This report also sets out themes that may be useful for looking at the challenges ahead.

Results of the electronic survey are summarised in Highlights of a Review of the Decade of Centenaries.

20 YEARS OF DIALOGUE IN CONFLICT: DIALOGUE, POWER SHARING AND BREXIT

Community Dialogue 20th Anniversary Conference

David Holloway, Community Dialogue

Introduction

Community Dialogue hosted a conference on the efficacy of dialogue as part of the celebrations for its 20th Anniversary. Three experienced peacebuilding practitioners provided inputs followed by small group dialogues with 47 participants drawn from 28 peacebuilding and other bodies from across Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Speaker Inputs

Our speakers were peacebuilding practitioners with decades of experience: Community Dialogue's Director David Holloway, former Director and independent practitioner Anne Beattie and former Director, now Director of Dialogue for Diversity, Brian Lennon. They offered personal reflections on the efficacy of dialogue in response to conflict and intolerance in Northern Ireland and presented their views on the current state of peacebuilding and the peace process with reference to the collapse of power sharing in Northern Ireland and the implications of Brexit for our peace process.

Brian offered numerous personal anecdotes that illustrated the capacity of dialogue to shift opponents from being stuck in fixed positions to understanding each other's positions more deeply. He noted how 20 years on from the foundation of Community Dialogue we remain in a situation where dialogue between our divided peoples remains essential.

Anne offered emotionally impacting reflections on the personal cost of our conflict in the lives of so many and the remarkable ways that dialogue can be used to promote truth, reconciliation and healing in our still divided community. She called, in particular, for more engagement by women and the necessity that the voice of women be heard.

David outlined how dialogue works to build empathy and shared understanding. He detailed obstacles that peacebuilding organizations currently struggle with and the challenges to peace caused by the collapse of power sharing in Northern Ireland and the impacts of Brexit on North-South relationships and relationships between the governments of the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland. He asked participants to join the Galvanizing the Peace coalition's efforts to build a unified voice for our sector.

All three speakers noted that our peace process is under significant threat and called for reinvigorated dialogue engagement across Northern Ireland on the critical obstacles and challenges we are currently facing in our on-going struggle to achieve a lasting, prosperous and inclusive peace.

The speakers were followed by facilitated dialogue.

The event was filmed throughout by Northern Visions and includes in depth interviews with Community Dialogue Director David Holloway and long term colleagues Anne Beattie and Brian Lennon.

A full report is available for download from www.communitydialogue.org and we urge you to read it for more detail on the thinking of many experienced sector practitioners on where we are at in relation to the peace process and what we need to do about the growing crisis.

Community Dialogue acknowledges with appreciation those who attended for their insightful contributions to our dialogues on the collapse of power sharing in Northern Ireland and the impact of Brexit on our peace process.

Community Dialogue thanks NICRC, DFA, Big Lottery and CFNI for support that enabled this event to take place. We also thank Duncairn Centre for Culture and Arts for hosting the event, Café Krem for providing dinner and the pupils of St Dominic's School for beautiful musical accompaniment.

MASTERCLASS:

MEMORY, PLACE and NARRATIVE IN POST-CONFLICT SOCIETIES

6 DECEMBER 2017, 2-5 PM

TRINITY COLLEGE DUBLIN, LECTURE ROOM G16, LOYOLA INSTITUTE BUILDING

In 1882 Ernst Renan argued that the forging of a new nation required the selective forgetting of discordant aspects of the past. Renan's belief has become almost axiomatic in transitional justice; Divisive pasts risk a return to violence or societies forever trapped in cycles of hatred and atavism. To avoid further violence, narratives of post-conflict societies are transformed, managed and reshaped, and shared stories and spaces of hospitality, healing, and reconciliation are promoted. Those who are unable or unwilling to 'move on' are often presented as either 'out-of-step' with the new post-conflict political and social reality, or as relics of a violent age that no longer exists.

Increasingly, this paradigm is being challenged by activists, artists and scholars in countries as diverse as Argentina, South Africa, Northern Ireland, and the United States. When groups mark and inscribe places of past and ongoing violence, and seek justice in spite of official or de facto amnesties, these powerful political statements question state claims to equality and justice. Such transgressive and disruptive memory practices, moreover, contest convenient narratives the past is 'settled' in post-conflict spaces.

The purpose of this masterclass is to explore theories and practices of memory, place and narrative that exist at the intersections between memory studies, human geography, and transitional justice. Using specific case studies from a range of countries, as well as discussion groups and workshops, we hope to introduce participants to spatial and creative approaches that takes seriously the divergent and pluralistic ways in which people know the past, and how these varied ways of knowing in turn shape the possibilities and limitations of post-conflict futures. We seek to collaboratively explore with participants how these insights and intersections can inform their own area of study or the post-conflict spaces and places which have directly affected them.

Speakers and Workshop Leaders include:

Dr Yaser Alashqar, Irish School of Ecumenics, Trinity College Dublin

Eamon Rafter, Learning Coordinator, Glenree Centre for Peace and Reconciliation

Joe Robinson, Researcher, Glenree, Research Fellow, Irish Research Council, Ph.D. Candidate, Department of Geography, Maynooth University
